ALI IMAM MAJUMDER

When the protests for quota reform first began in 2018, the government agreed to negotiate with the students. However, there was a sudden derailment in how the matter was proceeding.

As I have stated before, I am personally against the quota system; I believe it should only exist for marginalised groups. If the percentage of those coming through the quota system is that significant, many meritorious students will be deprived of opportunities. It is not merely the BCS exams; the quota system determines the recruitment of teachers, doctors and various other jobs. It has an impact on many facets of life, and students are naturally struggling to accept this system which can harm them directly. Overall, this system will disadvantage many.

The matter was in the government's hands in 1972, after Bangladesh had gained independence. It was Bangabandhu who had introduced the quota system for freedom fighters in 1972, and primarily for the BCS exams. The system was mostly for freedom fighters who would get jobs based on a 100-mark oral examination. We are now learning from different ministers of state that the number of freedom fighters at present, compared to that during 1971-1972, has tripled. There is, of course, a responsibility we bear for the freedom fighters. However, it is debatable whether these benefits should extend to their descendants, and if so, for how many generations.

Many jobs remain inaccessible to many individuals because of the quota system; it is even said that if certain jobs designated for individuals under the quota system remained unoccupied, they would stay vacant. The intelligent students are falling into hopelessness. This is only natural.

In my own experience, I have seen that those who come through the quota system come through a kind of uneven competition, and they often fall behind those who have come through on their own merit. The number of those certified as freedom fighters is less than three lakh and there is still some uncertainty regarding the number. At the end of 1971, we knew the number to be around one lakh, and over the years, this has been gradually increasing. Even if we assume the number is currently three lakh, and then we further assume there are five people in each family, that means 15 lakh people are receiving opportunities that the rest of the 17 crore people are not. In reality, this has disparaged freedom fighters, diminishing their immense role in our liberation.

In the National Integrity Strategy 2012, the government was committed to rationalise the quota system, and meritorious students would also receive opportunities. However, no concession was reached. Our job sector in general is not ideal. The government continues to be one of the largest recruiters, and our private sector has not developed to that extent where jobs can be made available for a significant portion of the population.

We need to remember that though the blockades may inconvenience many segments of the population, it is not unique to the quota reform movement, with our roads becoming blocked even with the Gonojagoron Moncho or even Pahela Baishakh celebrations.

Quota reform should not be an issue. We don't want the respect owed to freedom fighters to diminish in any way, and this matter threatens to do so. I would hope that the Appellate Division looks into this.

Equality of opportunity in public employment is a fundamental principle of state policy in the Constitution of Bangladesh. Article 29 (3), however, allows the state to make special provisions, such as reserving quota for "backward" sections of the citizens, in public employment. But these provisions cannot be made perpetual; they may be retained only until securing "adequate representation" of those sections. The current dispute on quota in public service centres mostly around the "freedom fighters' quota" (in practice, freedom fighters' generations' quota), and it should be addressed according to constitutional provisions.

Our Liberation War was a jonojuddho (people's war)—participated, assisted, helped and supported by the overwhelming majority of the population, although the list of freedom fighters comprises only those who were trained and directly engaged in the war. Can the freedom fighters be termed "backward," compared to the rest of the supporting population, among which millions lost their lives or limbs or suffered immensely in doing this? If yes, what percentage of quota do the listed freedom fighters deserve, and when can we say that their "adequate representation" is secured?

Our first government under Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman partly addressed this question when the Interim Recruitment Rules were framed in September 1972, and accordingly a few hundred freedom fighters were appointed through the quota system in 1973. The freedom fighters did not have equal comfort, mindset, and preparation when they sat for the competitive exams right after the Liberation War and, accordingly, this interim provision should be considered justified. But the successive governments continued this provision without much dissent in society, until the Awami League government made a number of decisions to extend this quota and delimit merit-based appointment. Among those, the freedom fighter quota was extended first to the children of freedom fighters in 1997, and later to the grandchildren of the freedom fighters in 2011. In addition, it was decided that if the quota cannot be filled up by qualified freedom fighters, it would be kept vacant and would not be filled up from the merit lists.

In response to a massive movement against these provisions for the freedom fighters' descendants, the government in 2018 hastily scrapped the quota system, although the demand then was for reform, not abolition. The High Court has very recently set aside the government circular of abolishing the quota system for freedom fighters, and this order has been suspended only for one month by the Appellate Division, pending disposal of the case which may take an uncertain period of time given the backlog of cases there. The student protesters, however, have demanded that this issue be resolved by the government, and based on that they have decided to continue their movement for the quota system reform.

I believe the government has at least one thing to do now. The government still has the option to issue a new circular reforming the quota system abolished in 2018. The reformed system, for example, can keep a quota for the generations only of physically disabled or martyred freedom fighters (as a disadvantaged group of citizens), physically disabled persons and small ethnic groups, which I believe should not exceed 15 percent in total. Nothing can bar the government from amending its policy decision if it does not contradict with the constitution.

We must remember that the quota in the constitutional scheme is not a "reward." It is a special provision to secure equality among the unequal, but not for creating more inequality.

A system need not be perpetual

Just because the quota system in government service has historically been in place, does not necessarily mean it cannot be discontinued. When the quota system was initially implemented, it was necessary at that time, but I believe it should be removed now. The court should consider what is logical and best for the people. The constitution always advocates for equality of rights, a principle that is universal in most countries. Regarding the promotion of marginalised groups, we can take necessary actions in times of need, which is why the quota system was established initially.

However, just because a system was implemented once, does not mean it must be perpetual. Honouring freedom fighters should not come at the cost of merit. This will not be beneficial for the country. It will break people's spirits.

When we were working on the quota, we requested for a list of freedom fighters, but the list was not properly provided. Since then, the list has been frequently updated. That leads to the question: is the current list complete and valid?

We know that some individuals have forged freedom fighter certificates to claim benefits as descendants of freedom fighters. When hard-working and meritorious people see such individuals getting appointed and receiving benefits and priority over them, it destroys their confidence and leads to the waste of their merit. The government needs to ensure the best service to the people. If the quota system remains forever, we will not get the best people in the government service; sometimes, there may be underqualified people filling positions that are more deserved by meritorious individuals. A person who feels undervalued for their merit will harbour resentment towards the system.

AMREETA LETHE

On June 26, it was reported that the much-debated Sharifa's story would be removed from the Class 7 history and social science textbook. Earlier this year, fundamentalist and reactionary figures drummed up public sentiment against the inclusion of "The Story of Sharifa" in the NCTB curriculum and a probe committee consisting of only cisgendered men was formed, and following its recommendation, the education ministry announced the retraction of the passage in June.

This long battle over Sharifa's story, fought over the course of half a year, led to a ruling in favour of the reactionary camp who strong-armed the authorities with their vehement opposition. However, perhaps this framing of our ministries and public officials as powerless to do anything but concede to majoritarian demands lets them off the hook too easily. It fails to hold them accountable for their continued inability to anticipate and prepare for what should, by now, be foreseeable consequences of their half-baked attempts at development, diversity, and inclusion. After all, this trend of brandishing new projects and policies with the stated claim of supporting minorities, only to fail to uphold the promises—either as a result of external public pressure or internal structural shortcomings—has been repeated so often it is now a too-predictable pattern.

In the case of gender diverse rights, this performative back-and-forth far precedes Sharifa's tale. Among the most egregious and commonly cited instances date back to 2014-15, when the Ministry of Social Welfare had offered employment for members of the hijra community, only to then issue a memorandum noting that the authenticity of the applicants' gender identities would need to be determined through medical examinations. This betrayed a fundamental misunderstanding and also a woeful lack of rapport with the community, as it wrongfully endorsed the popular misconception that the hijra community only comprises intersex individuals (even this understanding is limited, as it only takes genital ambiguity into account). In actuality, the label hijra acts as both a gender and cultural marker, and the community is composed of individuals belonging to a diverse range of identities—primarily transgender women and intersex people.

Hinging on this misconception, all 12 selected applicants, who identified as hijra, were subjected to check-ups that invaded their privacy—they were strip-searched, inappropriately touched by non-professionals, and photographed when found to have "male" genitalia. Not only were they rejected from a job opportunity marked out for them, they were also severely humiliated when their information leaked to the media. Had it not been for the evident incompetence, such spectacular failure would make one think that the very premise of the project was malicious from the start.

Ten years on, we still seem to lack the community involvement and support infrastructure needed to ensure these initiatives truly help the people they are supposed to without adding to their miseries.

"The Story of Sharifa" could have been a step in the right direction. It had the potential to promote diverse perspectives among young learners, particularly at an age when many go through puberty and form a sense of their own identity. With numerous gender diverse individuals recounting that some of the earliest and harshest discrimination they faced had been at school, Sharifa's story could have taught students to be compassionate toward differences, effectively rooting out the sort of bullying that is perpetuated on the basis of non-normative gender expression.

But perhaps that is too generous and optimistic a consideration of what the story alone could have achieved if it existed in a vacuum. The truth is that it doesn't.

Throughout our own school lives, we have heard stories of how chapters teaching reproductive health (the closest thing we had to sex education) would routinely be left out of the syllabus, glued, stapled shut, or torn out altogether because teachers did not know how to broach the taboo topic. Without any supporting infrastructure in place to supplement the otherwise performative inclusion of "The Story of Sharifa" in textbooks, who's to say that, even in the absence of publicly reactionary forces, we would not have wound up in the exact same situation again—with pages glued, stapled, torn out, or otherwise excluded? The onus of completely altering the societal perception of an entire community and rooting out centuries of systemic prejudice cannot fall on a single textbook entry.

FILE VISUAL: SALMAN SAKIB SHAHRYAR

This was a measure that should have been preceded by extensive gender-sensitivity training and community engagement, not only of those involved with the creation of the textbook chapter, but also and especially of the educators who would be teaching it in classrooms nationwide. Of course, such failures only reveal the intersectional nature of these issues, as the lack of investment in teachers' training across schools in Bangladesh becomes evident long before one can even reach a part of the curriculum as miniscule as one social science textbook entry.

Another particularly appalling example of the state's lack of commitment to ensuring even the most fundamental rights for the gender diverse community is the nebulous language in state policies and projects. Over the past decade or so, in the years since the hijra community received official recognition in 2013, the terms "hijra", "transgender", and "third gender" have been used interchangeably without attempts being made to clearly, if at all, define which groups of people each of these labels refers to. Time and again, this has led to disastrous misconstruals such as the social welfare ministry's debacle, conflict over who is a "real" or "fake" hijra, and the incitement of anti-trans movements. With terms such as "third gender" also in use, including in "The Story of Sharifa", we are repeatedly forced to contend with their implicit but invariably patriarchal hierarchies—if there is a "third" gender, then by default, are men the first and women the second?

In 2022, during the recording of the national census, all gender diverse people (trans men and women, non-binary individuals, intersex people, hijra, etc.) were lumped together under "hijra". Since many did not feel comfortable identifying with the category on account of its sociocultural implications, we were left with a record of only 12,000 gender diverse people in all of Bangladesh—around 0.01 percent of the population—as opposed to community estimates ranging in the 1-2 lakhs. The situation was also exacerbated by accounts of census workers refusing to log anyone who did not "appear hijra", once again revealing the desperate need for sensitivity training. How can we begin to work for a community so relegated to the margins if we can't even render a decent estimate of the number of people in it?

Because it is so tragically commonplace for the trans and hijra communities in Bangladesh to be tokenised and used for political, corporate, and development sector clout, they are no strangers to fair-weather allies. Time and again, we are forced to see our towering institutions, with all the necessary resources at their disposal, stagger and stumble their way into half-hearted, tokenistic gestures that can be recalled and apologised for tenfold the moment a meme or hashtag goes viral. This lack of foresight continues to be far more damaging to the communities they seek to help than if they had not been attempted at all. Because these institutions are largely untouchable, the brunt of public wrath and mob violence falls upon those more accessible and vulnerable—the marginalised community itself; not to mention, reactionary forces see any and all concessions as an absolute moral win.

In a landscape replete with odd addendums and outright renunciations, what message does it send when a state and its ministries fail to stand their ground against majoritarian threats? And what message does it send our students, at whom the story and textbook are aimed—that instead of forging empathy, tolerance, and solidarity, they should approach even the slightest hints of difference or deviation from the norm as a personal affront to their own beliefs? That anyone they do not agree with can simply be bullied into submission?

In truth, there can be no progress if we keep failing to recognise the need for comprehensive development measures, and the importance of developing the political will and spine to see them through. "The Story of Sharifa" is just one instance in a dishearteningly long line of such measures, which only serve to highlight precisely why they do not work.

We must let our underserved communities discuss and dictate the terms of their own liberation, rather than speaking for (and over) them as if we know what is best for them; it has become rather evident that we do not let them do so. The very least we owe them is to not compromise on their behalf.

PROJECT SYNDICATE

The show trial of Arundhati Roy

Shashi Tharoor,
an MP of the Indian National Congress, was re-elected to the Lok Sabha for a fourth successive term, representing Thiruvananthapuram.

SHASHI THAROOR

Last month, the lieutenant governor of Delhi granted the police permission to prosecute Indian activist and prize-winning author Arundhati Roy under the Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act (UAPA). Back in 2010, Roy said that Kashmir—which was experiencing unrest at the time—is not "an integral part of India." Accusations of sedition quickly followed, but it is only now that she will face prosecution.

Advocating secession is illegal in most countries, and India is no exception. In fact, secession is a particularly fraught topic in India, because the wounds from its previous partition, carried out by the departing British in 1947, still have not healed.

Against this backdrop, Roy's statement was both provocative and unwise. It was also wrong: there is overwhelming historical evidence showing that Kashmir has long been an integral part of India. To claim otherwise suggests either ignorance or innocence, neither of which is desirable when making controversial pronouncements on sensitive topics. As much as I admire Roy as a person and a writer, I do not always rate her political views and judgements highly, and this was a case in point.

Roy defended herself against accusations of disloyalty to her country. "What I say comes from love and pride," she wrote at the time. "Pity the nation that has to silence its writers for speaking their minds." Whether or not one finds her motivations convincing, prosecuting her for comments 14 years after she made them smacks of overkill.

Even in 2010, prosecution seemed excessive—at least to the Indian National Congress, which was then the government party. While the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), then in opposition, demanded that Roy be prosecuted, the central government (of which I was a minister) was engaged in a peace-and-reconciliation dialogue aimed at restoring normalcy in Kashmir; putting Roy on trial would be a needless distraction.

The prosecution and likely conviction of a popular and respected author like Arundhati Roy, who is well-regarded in the West and Japan as well, will probably backfire on the BJP government. FILE PHOTO: AFP

The uproar over Roy's remarks died down soon enough. And while a magistrate's court took note of her statement and registered a case against her, it did not pursue the matter further. The idea was that merely registering a sedition charge would be enough to convey the state's disapproval and convince an outspoken author not to repeat such remarks.

But, today, political calculations have changed. The BJP is in power, and it has a much lower tolerance for dissent than the Congress-led government did. Following an election in which it lost its majority in the lower house of India's parliament, the BJP appears determined to demonstrate that it has no plans to ease up.

By prosecuting Roy under the UAPA, which was designed to combat terrorism—rather than India's colonial-era sedition law, which the Supreme Court put on hold in 2022—the state can bypass the statute of limitations. It seems to be going with Section 13 of the law, according to which whoever "advocates, abets, advises, or incites the commission of any unlawful activity" may face up to seven years in prison, along with a possible fine.

Applying this prohibition to Roy's comment is excessive, to say the least. A few ill-chosen words 14 years ago pose no security threat whatsoever, and seeking to punish the speaker demonstrates a level of pettiness unworthy of a democratic government. Moreover, citing national security concerns—and invoking anti-terror laws—to suppress dissent will lower the bar for free speech across India.

Perhaps we should not be surprised. This is, after all, the same government that calls disagreement "anti-national" and urges its critics to "go to Pakistan," as if there is no room for their views in India. And it was the same government that in 2019 unilaterally divided Jammu and Kashmir—India's only Muslim-majority state—and reduced its status from state to union territory, directly administered by the federal government.

The BJP regularly calls India "the mother of democracy" (without so much as a nod to the Greeks). By prosecuting Roy, however, its government has discarded the well-established principle, on which Mahatma Gandhi insisted, that Indians may say whatever they wish against the government so long as they do not advocate violence.

Roy's case risks showcasing all the most unattractive features of Prime Minister Narendra Modi's government. The BJP wants to send a tough message to dissenters within India: conform or else. But the prosecution and likely conviction of a popular, respected, charismatic author, who is well-regarded in the West and Japan as well, will probably backfire and become more fodder for those who have already downgraded India to an "electoral autocracy" and lowered its press freedom ranking.

Even if Roy is imprisoned only briefly, the images of her being led away will be seared into the world's conscience, much to India's—and Modi's—detriment. After all, as Charles de Gaulle put it, an effective ruler "does not arrest Voltaire." While Roy sits in a prison cell, Modi will be thrown in the global doghouse. It is not too late to wise up and call off the prosecution.

The Bangladesh ICT trial process in the British Supreme Court

SOME OBSERVATIONS

Bangladesh established the ICT to render transitional justice, a judicial process that adopts a special and distinctive approach to justice in unique conditions of a society undergoing transition from its violent past to embrace peaceful future. Each post-conflict society is unique warranting measures tailored to suit its own circumstances.

PROFESSOR M RAFIQUL ISLAM

The British Supreme Court (SC) in Mueen-Uddin v Secretary of State for the Home Department decided a libel case on 20 June 2024. Mueen-Uddin, a Bangladeshi, has been living in the UK as a citizen. In 1971, he was a member of Islami Chatra Sangha, the student wing of Jammat-e-Islam that politically and violently opposed the independence of Bangladesh. He was alleged to be the head of a para-militia Al-Badar, responsible for the killings of intellectuals on 14 December 1971 immediately before the liberation of Bangladesh (The New York Times, 3 January 1972). Immediately after its liberation on 16 December 1971, Bangladesh announced on 24 December 1971 that the trials of alleged 1971 war crim inals, both civilians and military, would be held (The New York Times, 27 December 1971). Mueen-Uddin left Bangladesh in December 1971 (SC para 12). The ICT tried him in absentia and convicted, which was not appealed to the Bangladesh Supreme Court. In granting the appeal of Mueen-Uddin, the SC invoked a collateral ground that the ICT trial process that convicted Mueen-Uddin was unfair and inconsistent with 'international standard' (SC para 108).

Bangladesh established the ICT to render transitional justice, a judicial process that adopts a special and distinctive approach to justice in unique conditions of a society undergoing transition from its violent past to embrace peaceful future. Each post-conflict society is unique warranting measures tailored to suit its own circumstances. There are qualitative differences in the legal definition and constituent elements of ordinary crimes like murder, and international law recognised war crimes, crimes of genocide, and crimes against humanity. That 'the accused is innocent until proven guilty' is widely followed in national criminal law dealing with ordinary crimes. Does such a common procedural standard exist in trials of international crimes? Prior to seeking an answer, addressing some pertinent narratives of the SC judgment is in order.

The International Crimes (Tribunal) Act 1973 of Bangladesh was drafted by world-renowned international criminal law experts who drew heavily from the Nuremberg Charter, judgments, and principles of 1950 to make the Act consistent with then-existing international criminal law standards. That the ICT is not an 'international' tribunal (SC para13) appears to be a misreading as the Act title clearly qualifies the crimes, not the tribunal, as 'international'. The ICT is domestic and permissible under international criminal law. For an international or hybrid tribunal, the Bangladesh Prime Minister on 27 January 2009 requested, through the UN Coordinator in Dhaka, for the UN help in holding the trial (The Daily Star, Dhaka, 28 January 2009) which did not eventuate due to the strong lobby by Pakistan backed by its allies, the US, France, China, and Muslim and African countries. The polarised UN politics and lobbying tactics of the powerful prioritised impunity over accountability, preventing the UN from supporting the Bangladesh call. What palatable option did Bangladesh have to end impunity and restore justice other than to go ahead all by itself?

The SC mentions Article 47A of the Bangladesh Constitution as barring any challenge against the ICT proceedings (para 13). Such statutory protection to the law establishing special international crimes tribunals is common. Examples include—Nuremberg Charter (Arts 3, 26-29), ICTY (Art 23), ICTR (Art 22), Special Court of Sierra Leone (SCSL) (Art 10), Regulation of the East Timor Panels (Art 17), Law of the Cambodian ECCC (Art 40new). International crimes and their perpetrators are precluded from the scope of any statutory relief, amnesty, and limitation available to the ordinary citizens, because no derogation from the jus cogens prohibition of these crimes is permissible.

The ICT trial of Mueen-Uddin happened in absentia as he opted not to appear for fear of conviction. The Bangladesh criminal law and the 1973 Act permit trials in absentia. Trials in absentia are not necessarily tantamount to a denial of procedural due process. The ICCPR Human Rights Committee (General Comment 13) and ECHR conditionally permits trial in absentia. The Nuremberg Tribunal, Special Tribunal for Lebanon (STL), Cambodian ECCC Internal Rules 80(4) provide for the continuation of trials in the absence of an accused refusing or failing to be present at his/her trial. The ICTY Rule 80B and SCSL Rule 60A allow trials in absentia when the right to be present is waived by being 'at large and refuses to appear'. The ICTR ruled that an accused might waive his/her right to be present, which does not prevent the case from proceeding in his/her absence (Jean-Bosco Barayagwiza, ICTR-97-19-T, Defence Motion to Withdraw, 2 November 2000, para 6). The ICC allows its pretrial in absentia when the accused waives his/her right to be present or has fled or cannot be found after reasonable steps (Art 61(2)). The ICT held the trial in absentia after providing repeated opportunities for Mueen-Uddin to appear in the trial. Not knowing his UK contact address, the ICT had to opt for public notification through media. By not availing the opportunity to be present in the trial, he voluntarily decided not to exercise his right to be present.

'If the [ICT] conviction [of Mueen-Uddin] was the result of an unfair process, then no weight can be attached to it' (SC para 108). This is because 'the ICT rules of procedure failed to bring the law and rules into compliance with international standards' (SC para 17(1), also 21-22). Despite the existence of some past and present ad hoc international crimes tribunals' decisions, a consistent body of standardised procedural rules and due process to be followed in all such trials is yet to be developed. This is because each extraordinary crimes trial is different, unique, and case-specific, established sporadically as a post-facto pursuit of justice on one-off basis. The statutes of these trials are tailored prospectively to apply retrospectively in their respective fact situation and one statute is not necessarily worthy of adoption in another due to their dealing with dissimilar facts. This special regime of ad hoc international crimes trial procedure has received no consideration in the SC judgment.

The Nuremberg proceedings were widely regarded as procedurally inadequate. Its due process prejudged guilt with limited procedural rules for the accused. Its Charter Article 19 mandated the tribunal to follow an expeditious and non-technical procedure, not to be bound by technical rules of evidence, and to 'admit any evidence which it deems to have the probative value'. The prosecution introduced ex parte affidavits against the accused regardless of legitimate objections. The US, UK, France, and Soviet Union drafted the Charter under the London Agreement 1945, created the tribunal, appointed tribunal judges (one from each), and controlled its operation. The tribunal jurisdiction extended only to the trials of those who were from the Axis states to the exclusion of alleged war criminals from the Allied Powers. Notwithstanding these procedural inadequacies, the UN Nuremberg principles derived from the judgment constitute the guiding principles of international crimes trials.

Lessons from contemporary international crimes trials suggest no common procedural standard to be followed as they are tailored to suit the specific circumstances of a given trial and it is an evolving process. Commencing in 1993-1994, ICTY and ICTR (closed in 2015) developed, and is still developing their trial procedural rules (Rule 73bis A, B, C, D, E). Their trial processes do not allow victims' participation in the proceeding unlike the 2007 Cambodian ECCC Internal Rules 23. There is nothing in the law that prevents the ICT to develop its own procedural rules and standard as the need arises in course of conducting the trials. If other ad hoc international crimes tribunals can develop their procedural rules to cater for varying needs of their trials, so can the ICT. The claim that there exists a uniform international procedural standard in ad hoc international crimes trials that the ICT has failed in convicting Mueen-Uddin does not appear to be borne out by the fact and experience of similar trials in contemporary history.

Due process is an important 'means' of ensuring fair trial but not an 'end' in itself. Its standard is not self-defining, nor does it possess any intrinsic value independent of the trial to which it relates. Being a 'means' of fair trial, due process, however passionately stressed, must be understood to facilitate, not to evade or hinder, the 'end' of justice, particularly in trials of international crimes. If justice to the victims is compromised, whose interest does the procedural standard plead for? Illustrative of such miscarriage of justice is the trial of Ieng Sary, who played an important leadership role as the Khmer Rouge foreign minister and standing committee member. The chronic procrastinating trial process prevented the Cambodian ECCC to complete investigation and commence trial before his death in 2013 after over seven years of preparation for his trial. Since his charges were dropped by death, he died as 'innocent'. But the complex trial process preceding his death perpetually deprived his victims of the right to justice. Indeed, the procedural due process should not be the monopoly of the accused; the victims too are entitled to it.

Pertinently, the UK SC itself did not consider (a) the ICT procedural rules, (b) the ICT proceedings followed in the Mueen-Uddin case, and (c) any available positive views on the ICT process. Instead, the SC cited some negative opinions and assertions by individuals, NGOs, and UN body, which suffer from questionable neutrality, credibility crisis, and partisanism. These entities are not judicial bodies, nor are their statements judicial precedents or judicially endorsed record of facts worthy of adoption as admissible evidence. It is difficult to fathom how these subjective statements without testing their probative value can constitute objective evidence in a court of law.

Critics of the ICT process, with their Anglo-American legal background, purport to contemplate their 'procedural standard' as an impartial due process valid worldwide. The portrayal of the ICT trial process as incapable of delivering fair trial for want of compliance with the so-called 'international standard' is grossly exaggerated by an orientalist superiority complex that hails a preconceived trial standard as universal to be followed by all national trials. These views mirror the geopolitical history of international law overwhelmingly dominated by Eurocentrism within which this 'international standard' operates, encapsulating European imperial values, ideals, narratives, vocabularies, and perspectives as its foundation, superimposed by colonial patronage.

If the alleged procedural inadequacies undermine the validity of the ICT process and conviction, then the validity of all ad hoc international and hybrid tribunals from Nuremberg to Cambodia is open to question for their respective procedural limitations and failings. The history of their diverse trial processes rebuts any assertion that procedural inadequacy justifies nullifying or circumventing the trial and conviction for falling short of the supposed 'international standard'.

Grave atrocity crimes are committed predominantly in non-western countries, which do not contemplate the Eurocentric trial process as appropriate to administer justice due to their dissimilar legal values, traditions, and expectations. It is naïve to think that non-western countries would blanketly apply the Eurocentric trial process despite its inconsistency with the local needs and uniqueness, which is precisely reflected in the ICT trial process.

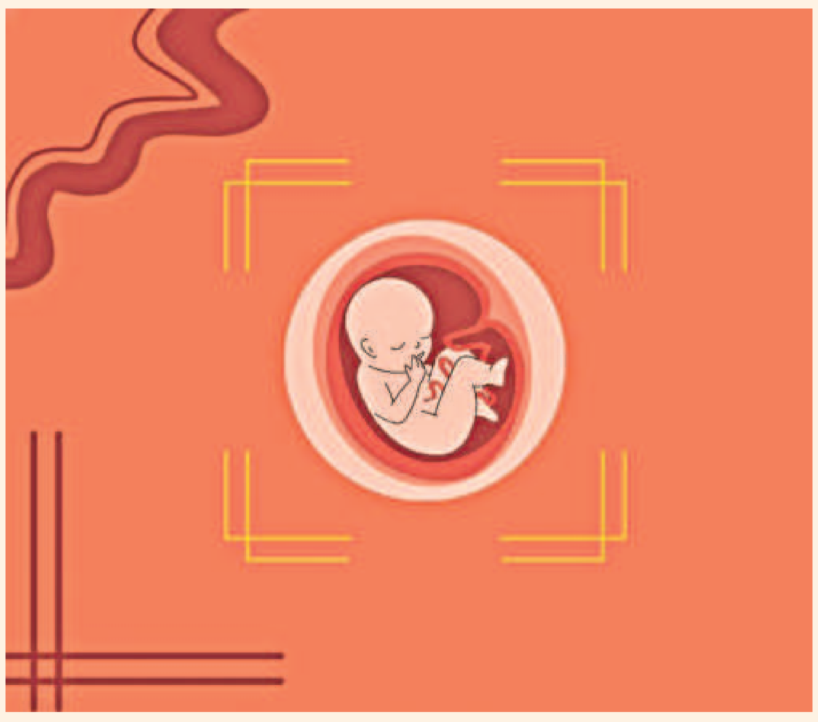
Legal implications of prenatal injuries



Prenatal injury refers to such injury that occurs before birth while the fetus develops inside the womb of a mother. Previously, there was a trend of considering an unborn child part of the mother and it was only the mother who could claim compensation for injuries caused to a fetus. Over time, many jurisdictions have crafted scopes for both tortious and criminal liabilities to be claimed by a child for prenatal injuries.

Bonbrest v Kotz (1946) is an early decision in this context in the USA. In this case, the district cour of Columbia, recognised the standing of a child to bring forth a lawsuit for injuries sustained thereby while in the womb. The Bonbrest judgement was later relied on in several other cases.

The UK provides a valuable example of providing legal protection to an unborn child through the enactment of the Congenital Disabilities (civil liability) Act 1976. This Act allows for actions not only on the grounds of injury sustained by an unborn child but also on grounds of an occurrence which potentially affected either parent of the child to have a healthy child. Tortious liabilities on the ground of prenatal injury have also evolved to some extent in our neighboring country, India.

According to section 316 of the Penal Code 1860, whoever causes death of a quick unborn child shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to 10 years and/or shall be liable to fine. The circumstances of causing such death ought to be such that would otherwise constitute the offence of culpable homicide. Thus, our country provides for criminal liability in case of the death of an unborn child. However, tortious liabilities for injuries to an unborn child still remain an underdeveloped issue here. As a result, cases related to prenatal injuries are rather non-existent in our country. Indeed, prenatal injuries are yet another under addressed area that remind us of the state of tort law within the legal system of Bangladesh and why it requires our attention.

Super-sub Watkins and positive England turn up

- England have now reached the final in two of their four major tournaments under Gareth Southgate (also Euro 2020).
- Ollie Watkins' winner at 89:59 was the latest winning goal scored in the semifinal at the UEFA European Championship/World Cup (excluding extra time). It was also England's only shot on target in the second half of this match.
- England are the first side in European Championship history to reach the final despite trailing in both the quarter-final and semi-final en route.
- Netherlands have now been eliminated from seven semifinal matches at major tournaments (World Cup/Euros), the second-most of any European nation, after Germany (8).
- Xavi Simons' seventh-minute strike was the earliest goal scored in a European Championship semifinal since Alan Shearer against Germany in 1996 (third minute). At 21 years and 80 days, Simons also became the youngest player to score for the Netherlands in the knockout stages of a major tournament (World Cup/Euros).
- Harry Kane's equaliser for England was his sixth goal in the knockout stages of the European Championship, more than any other player in the competition's history.

AGENCIES

Ollie Watkins' 90th-minute winner in England's 2-1 win over the Netherlands in the Euro 2024 semifinal in Dortmund on Thursday night was not only a perfect example of a typical striker's finish, but it also took a huge burden off coach Gareth Southgate as his team was finally able to deliver a much-craved positive performance in the tournament.

It was an incredible finish from Watkins, who came in as a substitute for Harry Kane just ten minutes before that sweet strike, to an evening that began badly for England as Xavi Simons gave the Netherlands an early lead against the run of play in the semifinal in Dortmund.

Watkins received a pass from fellow substitute Cole Palmer, who also came on with him in the 81st minute, with his back to goal in the first minute of stoppage time, turned and fired low into the far corner to leave the Netherlands bewildered.

"I'm lost for words really," said Watkins, the Aston Villa striker. "I don't think I've hit a ball that sweet before, and obviously in such a special moment."

According to Watkins, he had 'manifested' the goal beforehand.

"I said to Cole that we were both going to go on the pitch and he was going to set me up, at half-time," Watkins told reporters.

"It happened, I manifested it and as soon as he turned I knew I needed to make a move. You don't get that opportunity very often so I had to be greedy, I had to take it."

However, unlike Watkins, England coach Southgate might not have manifested taking his side to consecutive European Championship finals as it has rarely been a convincing campaign from this England side.

Thursday's game was an emphatic answer after the criticism heaped on the side for a string of languid showings earlier in the tournament, and sets up a mouth-watering final against a slick-looking Spain, who beat France 2-1 in the other semifinal on Wednesday night.

England had frustrated their followers, looking pedestrian at times in the group phase as well as their knockout games. It was as if they were suffocating at times under a heavy burden of expectation.

Even though there was a contentious VAR call by German referee Felix Zwayer that allowed England to get back in the game through a Harry Kane equaliser from the spot after a brilliant Xavi Simons strike helped the Dutch take an early lead, the individual quality of their players was on full display. They had their opponents pegged back, looking dangerous every time they entered the final third. Phil Foden was exceedingly unlucky not to have England ahead at halftime with some sublime skill but had his effort cleared off the line moments before his long-range effort brushed off the crossbar.

The second period was not as dominant as fatigue set in and the Dutch enjoyed their fair share of possession.

But even then, whenever England moved menacingly forward, a goal looked on the cards.

It was almost to script that they engineered victory just before the final whistle, as Watkins emerged an unlikely hero not long after coming on.

The confidence boost cannot be underestimated, especially as an in-form opponent awaits on Sunday at the Olympiastadion.

When they needed to stand up and be counted, the real England came to the party and, after almost a month of gritty competition, the tournament has two worthy finalists.

GM Zia's son to represent Bangladesh in Chess Olympiad

SPORTS REPORTER

FIDE Master Tahsin Tajwar Zia, son of deceased Grandmaster Ziaur Rahman, will represent Bangladesh in the upcoming 45th Chess Olympiad after winning a tie-breaker to finish sixth in the 48th National Chess Championship at the Bangladesh Chess Federation hall room yesterday.

Tahsin tied with Anata Choudhury for the sixth position with seven points each at the end of the 13-round championship.

A tie-breaker was held yesterday to decide who would finish sixth and claim the fifth and final spot in the Bangladesh team for the Chess Olympiad.

FM Tahsin defeated Ananta with black pieces in the first game and then drew the second match to secure a place in the team.

"I was not thinking about my father's demise or the opponent in the play-off, I just played the game," said the 19-year-old, who wants to represent Bangladesh in Chess Olympiads for many years just like his father.

GM Zia, who passed away after suffering a cardiac arrest during a 12th round match on July 5, finished joint fourth alongside GM Niaz Murshed with eight points each.

As per rule, GM Zia and GM Niaz would've played a tie-breaker to decide the fourth and fifth place and both would've made up the final two spots of the Bangladesh team for the Olympiad.

But after Zia's passing, the sixth place holder, his son FM Tahsin, will take his spot.

FM Tahsin and GM Zia had made headlines back in 2022 by becoming the country's first father-son duo to compete in a Chess Olympiad. After the win, Tahsin revealed how his father wanted to compete in his 18th Chess Olympiad side-by-side with his son.

"My father [Zia] wanted me to play in the Chess Olympiad alongside him just like we had done in the previous one in 2022. He is no longer with us now but I have qualified for the Chess Olympiad."

In the other tie-breaker of the day, International Master Fahad Rahman defeated GM Enamul Hossain Razib to finish as runners-up. Earlier, FM Manon Reja Neer, a 14-year-old chess prodigy, was crowned champion.

ATTACKING GAMBLE pays off for Colombia

REUTERS, Charlotte

Even though unusual, Colombia coach Nestor Lorenzo gambled to stay on the attack against Uruguay despite going down to 10 men, and it paid off as they emerged with a 1-0 win that set up a Copa America final against Argentina

Colombia took a 1-0 lead before having right back Daniel Munoz sent off in first-half stoppage time of their semifinal in Charlotte, North Carolina on Wednesday.

Down a man for the whole of the second half, Lorenzo opted to keep two forwards on the pitch to create chances instead of sitting back and 'parking the bus'.

"One of the main topics we discuss is that we never want to be one man down. It is almost impossible to maintain performance with 10 players on the pitch," Lorenzo told reporters.

"Teams that were dominating their opponents when they were one man down were eliminated from the tournament. We really analysed that situation.

"With the formation, we only had two options of 5-4, 5-3-1 or to keep it 4-3-2 and create opportunities. We chose that one and God favoured us."

Colombia could have doubled their lead at the end when Mateus Uribe missed two chances, but Lorenzo was just relieved to get the better of Uruguay coach Marcelo Bielsa.

"I think that to beat Bielsa, you need to walk many miles. He is a referent coach and I really admire him as a person. It was our turn to win, that's all," he added.

Lorenzo also refused to criticise Munoz, who picked up a second yellow card after elbowing Uruguay's Manuel Ugarte.

"Daniel is feeling a bit sad because he's a lion on the pitch and once more he got a bit emotional," he said.

Colombia's victory also set a national record of 28 matches unbeaten and Lorenzo paid tribute to former boss Francisco 'Pacho' Maturana, who went 27 games without defeat.

BKSP provides backdrop for nourishing mentality

ABDULLAH AL MEHDI

The calm and quiet surroundings of BKSP, the national sports institute in Savar, provided the backdrop for two different teams' preparations heading into two different kinds of objectives yesterday, with the weather making for interesting training conditions.

The U-19s under coach Naveed Nawaz started their proceedings under cloud cover but would wilt under the hot sun later on. On the other hand, Bangladesh women's team, who are set to play in the upcoming Asia Cup in Sri Lanka, went through their gears.

Under Naveed's watchful gaze and optimism, a new U-19 batch containing "some talented players" is taking shape. He had already produced a championship-winning side in his last stint, with cricketers like Shoriful Islam and Towhid Hridoy coming through.

Soon, the women's side came in for their practice game against a combined side of BKSP boys and women cricketers. Their challenges are knocking hard on the doors with Asia Cup to be shortly followed by T20 World Cup at home.

The tone for what the coaches want these players to aspire to was set from the beginning of the practice match. "Go out there and live your life," one of the coaches told the two openers, Dilara Akter and Ishma Tanjim, as they walked into the middle.

Batting disasters have been too frequent in recent months for the Tigresses. There are big leaps needed to recover the mentality that saw them win against South Africa on their soil. But more than just managing disasters, the coaches wanted a change of approach, geared towards modern T20s.

"We want them to just go out there and express themselves," head coach Hashan Tillakaratne, a World Cup winner with Sri Lanka, told The Daily Star yesterday.

The efforts to encourage them have proven to be difficult so far. They were bundled out for 73 in the first practice game on July 9 against a combined side of boys and women team's stars. Yesterday, the start was slow before Shorna Akter and Ritu Moni put some tempo to the innings with late runs as they reached 97 for five in 20 overs on a surface which proved to be on the slower side.

Most of the coaching staff believe that only knowledge can help their star players perform up to potential. However, what was important was the body language of the team. They have remained upbeat throughout their sessions. As rain swept the game away in the second innings, there was hope for brighter days.

Meanwhile, 11 of the U-19 stars had HSC exams, and thus 28 out of 39 players showed up. They went through drills in hot and humid conditions. Their coaches feel that extreme weather will breed a tough mentality, not unlike what the women's team management aims for. Both prepare for different causes, but the cradle of Bangladesh sports provides a stunning environment to focus on goals.

As rain clouds loom over BKSP, both teams remain focused on their respective missions. For the U-19s, it's about nurturing the next generation of cricket stars. For the women's side, it's about reclaiming their place among Asian elites and beyond.

With a blend of youth and experience, fueled by determination and the supportive environment at BKSP, it appears both teams are poised to tackle their challenges head-on.

Confiscate all properties of Matiur, family

Court orders authorities

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday ordered confiscation of all moveable and immoveable properties of former NBR official Matiur Rahman and his family members in connection with corruption allegations.

The family members are Matiur's first wife Laila Kaniz Lucky, also the chairman of Narsingdi's Raipura upazila, their son Ahmed Taufiqur Rahman, and daughter Farzana Rahman Ipshita, and Matiur's second wife Shammi Akhter Shewly.

Their immoveable properties include 2,212.35 decimals of land in Dhaka's Savar, Mymensingh's Bhaluka, Gazipur, Natore's Singra and Narsingdi's Shibpur, and four flats (total 7,248 square feet) in Dhaka's Mirpur.

They have Tk 13.44 crores in 116 bank accounts. The court also ordered freeze on the 116 bank accounts.

Judge Mohammad Ash-Shams Joglul Hossain of the Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court of Dhaka passed the orders after Anti-Corruption Commission Deputy Director Md Anowar Hossain, also the investigation officer, filed a petition with the court in this regard.

Palestinians in Gaza City remain trapped

Says Hamas-run health ministry amid intense Israeli assault; 50 more Palestinians killed

REUTERS, Cairo

Residents of Gaza City were trapped in houses and bodies lay uncollected in the streets under an intense new Israeli assault yesterday, even as Washington pushed for a peace deal at talks in Egypt and Qatar.

Hamas said a massive Israeli assault on Gaza City this week could wreck efforts to finally end the offensive just as negotiations have entered the home stretch.

- Some Gaza City residents ignore order to head south
- Israeli army continues to blow up houses in Rafah
- Gaza death toll rises to 38,345

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's office said the head of Israel's Shin Bet security agency was headed to Cairo for more ceasefire talks. US envoy Brett McGurk was in Israel, where he met Defence Minister Yoav Gallant.

Home to more than a quarter of Gaza's residents before the offensive, Gaza City was destroyed during the first weeks of fighting last year, but hundreds of thousands of Palestinians have returned to homes in the ruins. They have now once again been ordered out by the Israeli military.

The Gaza health ministry said it had reports of people trapped and others killed inside their houses in the Tel Al Hawa and Sabra districts of Gaza City, and rescuers could not reach them.

The Civil Emergency Service said it estimated that at least 30 people had been killed in the Tel Al-Hawa and Rimal areas and it could not recover bodies from the streets there.

Despite army instructions on Wednesday to residents of Gaza City that they can use two "safe routes" to head south, many residents refused to heed the order. Some posted a hashtag on social media: "We are not leaving".

"We will die but not leave to the south. We have tolerated starvation and bombs for nine months and we are ready to die as martyrs here," said Mohammad Ali, 30, reached by text message.

At least 38,345 Palestinians have been killed in Israel's military offensive in the enclave since October 7, the Palestinian enclave's health ministry said yesterday. A total of 50 Palestinians were killed in the past 24 hours, the ministry said in a statement.

The Hamas-run Gaza government media office said Israeli forces had quit the Shejaia suburb east of Gaza after over two weeks of a new military invasion, in which dozens of people were killed and residential districts were destroyed.

At the southern edge of the enclave in Rafah near the border with Egypt, where tanks have been operating in most of the city since May, residents said the army continued to blow up houses in the western and central areas, amid fighting with Hamas, Islamic Jihad, and other smaller factions.

Senators raise new doubts about Biden

AFP, Washington

A Democratic senator on Wednesday called on US President Joe Biden to ditch his re-election bid, capping a brutal day that saw mounting pressure from high-profile actor and donor George Clooney and party heavyweight Nancy Pelosi.

As the 81-year-old tried to show his leadership credentials at a Nato summit in Washington, domestic calls have been growing for Biden to quit following his disastrous debate performance against Republican challenger Donald Trump.

At least eight House Democrats have openly called on Biden to not seek re-election, but Peter Welch became the first in the Senate to explicitly do so as concerns rise over his age and fitness.

"For the good of the country, I'm calling on President Biden to withdraw from the race," the Vermont senator said in an opinion piece in the Washington Post.

News outlet Axios reported Wednesday that Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer had also privately signaled to donors that he was open to replacing Biden on the Democratic ticket.

However, in a statement shared by his office Wednesday evening, Schumer said "I support President Biden and remain committed to ensuring Donald Trump is defeated in November."

Biden has been trying to stem a growing tide of Democrats saying that he cannot win in November, but a steady drip of public revolt is squashing efforts to turn the page on the crisis.

China a 'decisive enabler' of Russia's war in Ukraine

Say Nato leaders in stern rebuke

AFP, Washington

Nato leaders on Wednesday said China's deepening ties with Russia are a cause of "deep concern" and accused Beijing of playing a key role in helping Moscow's assault on Ukraine.

China "has become a decisive enabler of Russia's war against Ukraine through its so-called 'no limits' partnership and its large-scale support for Russia's defense industrial base," Nato leaders said in a declaration from their summit in Washington.

Nato leaders urged China "to cease all material and political support to Russia's war effort."

"This includes the transfer of dual-use materials, such as weapons components, equipment, and raw materials that serve as inputs for Russia's defense sector," the declaration said.

China "cannot enable the largest war in Europe in recent history without this negatively impacting its interests and reputation," the alliance said.

The statement came before the leaders of Australia, Japan, New Zealand and South Korea were due to attend the Nato summit yesterday.

China yesterday warned Nato against "provoking confrontation" over its ties with Russia.

A spokesperson for Beijing's mission to the European Union said: "Nato should stop hyping up the so-called China threat and provoking confrontation and rivalry, and do more to contribute to world peace and stability."

Downpour drowns parts of Dhaka

Poor drainage exposed again, many neighbourhoods waterlogged all day

HELEMUL ALAM and MD ABBAS

Heavy rain flooded streets and homes across the capital yesterday morning and exposed Dhaka's poor drainage system yet again.

The downpour began in the early hours and continued till noon with brief pauses. The Met office recorded 130mm of rainfall in six hours from 6:00am. The rainwater did not recede from many places even in the evening.

People who went out of their homes on the weekend endured immense sufferings, as they had to wade through knee-to-waist-deep water to reach their destinations. Public transport was hard to come by.

Several vehicles broke down on the flooded streets, leading to traffic jams.

The rainwater went into underground parking spaces, reservoirs, and ground floors of many residential buildings. People were seen trying to pump out the water.

Water went into many shops and damaged stored goods.

"Come rain, come the same old sufferings. This has been going on for decades despite promises to solve the waterlogging problem in the city," said a frustrated Sirajul Islam of West Rajabazar area.

Rains now more intense, in shorter spells

MOHAMMAD AL-MASUM MOLLA

While Dhaka typically sees 373mm of rain throughout July, a heavy downpour yesterday morning delivered over a third of that amount in just six hours.

According to experts and meteorologists, the monsoon rainfall pattern is changing across the country, as evidenced by the shorter spells of intense downpours seen nowadays.

While there has been little change in the overall amount of rainfall, climate change is causing a decline in the number of rainy days, they added.

Md Bazlur Rashid, a meteorologist at the Bangladesh Meteorological Department, said that incidents of extreme climatic events like longer heatwaves and more rainfall in shorter spells are becoming more common in Bangladesh.

"The total amount of rainfall has decreased about 3-5% in recent years but the frequency of extreme rainfall

QUOTA SYSTEM IN GOVT JOBS

Reforms must be well thought out

Experts say 2018 quota abolishment done hurriedly

MOHIUDDIN ALAMGIR and BAHARAM KHAN

Any disproportionate quota system usually hurts a merit-based civil service, and any kind of decision to reform the system, in place since independence, should be well thought out, experts say.

The quota-based system should not dominate the public administration at the expense of merit as the nation needs the right people in the right place, they add.

But, according to them, the government decision to hurriedly abolish the quota system in Class 1 and Class 2 jobs in 2018 following a student protest was not well thought out. In the current context, the existing quota system should be thoroughly reviewed and evaluated to avoid new complications.

"You need to keep the quota system for certain groups of people. But it needs to be evaluated from time to time. This is not happening in Bangladesh,"

ANTI-QUOTA MOVEMENT

Protesters block roads, ignore warnings

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The anti-quota protesters blocked the Shahbagh intersection yesterday, demanding reforms to the quota system in government jobs and protesting Thursday's police action on students outside Dhaka.

Similar programmes were also held in Cumilla, Chattogram, Rajshahi, and elsewhere as part of the scheduled nationwide rallies on campuses.

Around 5:00pm, several hundred DU students marched from the Central Library to the Shahbagh intersection, where they were later joined by Dhaka College students.

"During our movement, our brothers and sisters were attacked at various universities. Our movement is logical and democratic, but we still faced police action. We demand that the attackers be quickly identified and brought to justice," said Abu Sayeed, one of the key organisers of the anti-quota movement.

Protesters said a press conference would be held today around 6:30pm in front of DU Central Library to announce their next programme.

Also, a meeting of the organisers at different colleges and universities across the country will be held this morning to determine the next course of movement, said Abu Baker, another organiser of the movement.

After holding the short rally, protesters left Shahbagh around 6:00pm.

AL to go tough to quell infighting

35 killed in intra-party clashes during first 6 months of this year

PARTHA PRATIM BHATTACHARJEE

Over the first six months of this year, there were on average more than two incidents of infighting every day in Awami League. These conflicts accounted for 94 percent of the total 440 incidents of political violence during the same period.

Only two of those incidents of political violence occurred when the ruling party men clashed with the activists of its archrival BNP and main opposition Jatiya Party, according to statistics of Ain o Salish Kendra (ASK), a legal aid and rights organisation.

In the six months, 35 people were killed due to AL infighting, which is 85 percent of the 41 people killed in political violence.

The ASK data included incidents of violence centring the national, upazila, and union parishad polls.

Faruq Faisal, executive director of ASK, said most of the incidents of electoral violence took place between different AL factions as the party decided to allow its ranks to run to make the elections look participatory amid boycott by major opposition political parties.

According to ASK, around 202 AL leaders, activists and supporters were killed in clashes over internal feuds in six years until May 2024.

This data clearly shows how the ruling party faced opposition from within in absence of activities of its political opponents.

"Awami League has become its own opponent as the major opposition parties are staying away from the polls and streets. The intra-party conflicts are happening mainly over establishing supremacy and gaining financial benefits," Faruq told The Daily Star.

He said conflicts within the AL's grassroots intensified following the party's decision to allow all its aspirants to run as independents in the January 7 parliamentary polls. The situation worsened following the upazila parishad elections.

On the sixth upazila parishad polls,

EVENING WALK AT CITY PARKS

Where walking is more than just exercise!

RBR

A casual walk around a park in the evening has a charm of its own. Most Dhakaites pump up their feel-good endorphins and energy levels as early as possible and try to leave the evenings for social engagements. However, the city has its share of lazy walkers; people who love light summer breezes and would prefer strolls instead of hard exercise.

There is a pleasant feel to enjoying Dhaka at dusk when the sky is like orange marmalade. Summer sky in a country like ours is in one word: poetic! This is the time when white fluffy clouds with a ring of subdued sunlight around them float against the violet, burnt orange, and golden hues of sundown. Godhuli, as twilight is romantically called in Bangla, is also the right time to take Instagramable photos.

Ramna Park, like many other parks in the city, has beautiful walking tracks as the entire park has recently gone through transformations. Arshan and Paula, a sporty mother-son duo, have chosen evening walks at Ramna as their time to bond. After work and school hours are done and dusted, they walk, stroll, and sit down on old benches and talk about their day.

Paula feels, "Arshan is a teenager and I think these are formative years, when the child needs you. Yes, they would rather be left alone but I want him to know I am there for him. I had to plan a win-win situation for us to relax and unwind after a day's work.

"We are not regulars but we try to go as frequently as possible, even if I have to bribe him with a trip to a café!"

People enjoy walking as part of their exercise and healthy routine and then there are people for whom this is a way to unwind and connect with nature. For them, Ramna Park is like an oasis in Dhaka, offering ample fresh air, lush greenery, and a beautifully curated environment.

It is wonderful to see people forming groups and engaging in various activities, creating a vibrant community. Walking here is a truly enjoyable experience that allows one to find serenity at their own pace.

Mithila, 40, loves her evening walks. "For me, it is strictly me time," she says. "I soak in the serenity of the late afternoons, I love to hear the birds rushing home, I pick wild ferns from the sides of the pond, or I just sit and listen to my '80s pop music."

Like Thích Nhất Hạnh, the famous Vietnamese Buddhist monk, said we need to experience walking as a mindful practice. "When we walk like (we are rushing), we print anxiety and sorrow on the earth. We have to walk in a way that we only print peace and serenity on the earth..."

For me and thousands of people like me, evening walks are mindful walking, walking with love and compassion, and walking for healing.

5 more 'KNF operatives' sent to jail in Bandarban

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bandarban

Five members of the Bawm community were sent to jail yesterday on suspicion of being members of the armed group Kuki Chin National Front (KNF).

They are Song Lian Bawm, 25, Lalhim Sang Bawm, 37, Lalchan Sang Bawm, 48, Lal Pian Sang Bawm, 36, and Lal Siam Thang Bawm, 38. All five are residents of Lairunpi Para in Bandarban's Ruma upazila.

They were arrested on Thursday during an ongoing joint forces operation against the KNF.

Later, they were presented in court on charges related to the bank robbery and arms theft that took place in Ruma. Subsequently, Bandarban Chief Judicial Magistrate Mohammad Nazmul Hossain sent them to jail, said Court Sub-Inspector Priyal Palit.

As part of the ongoing joint forces operation, law enforcement has arrested and jailed a total of 116 people suspected of collaborating with the KNF militants who carried out bank robberies, assaults, and looted weapons and money from police and Ansar forces in Ruma and Thanchi between April 2 and 3.

A total of 22 cases were filed over these incidents -- 14 at Ruma Police Station, four at Thanchi Police Station, one at Bandarban Sadar Police Station, and three at Rowangchari Police Station.

3 killed in road crashes

BSS, Jashore

Three people were killed and nine others injured in two separate road crashes in Jashore's Bagherpara upazila yesterday.

The deceased are Mohammad Siddique Sheikh, 50, of South Srirampur village of the upazila, Sabuj Hossain, 42, of Rajabari village of Nandail upazila in Mymensingh, and Tarek Sardar, 35, of Baga village under Keshabpur upazila of Jashore.

Mritunjoy Biswas, officer-in-charge of Tularampur Highway Police Station, said the collision occurred in Dakshin Srirampur area around 7:30am, when a Jashore-bound truck hit five people on the side of the Jashore-Narail road before plunging into a ditch.

Siddique died on the spot and four others were injured. The injured were taken to Jashore General Hospital, he said.

Meanwhile, in another accident, Sabuj Hossain died on the spot and six others were injured when two pickups collided head-on in Karimpur area of the upazila on Jashore-Narail road around 11:30am.

Of the injured, four were taken to Jashore General Hospital and two others to Narail Sadar Hospital, where Tarek Sardar died while undergoing treatment, the OC added.

Reforms must be well thought out

Firoz Mia, who retired as an additional secretary of public administration ministry, told The Daily Star.

"It is inappropriate that there will be an abnormal quota for a certain group. On the other hand, there is no scope for abolishing all kinds of quota in public service as the constitution favours the quota system," said Firoz, who also authored several books on public administration.

"The way the government abolished the quota system for government officials from Grade 1 to Grade 13 [in 2018] was not appropriate at all. Almost every country in the world has a quota system in government jobs for disadvantaged groups."

In Bangladesh, the quota system was introduced through an executive order in 1972 and was amended several times. From 1972 to 1976, 20 percent of the government officials were recruited based on merit, and the rest was quota-based. Merit-based recruitment was increased to 40 percent in 1976 which continued until 1985, when it was increased to 45 percent.

In 2012, one percent quota was introduced for persons with disability, reducing the merit-based recruitment to 44 percent.

In 2018, the government issued a circular abolishing the quota system for Class 1 and Class 2 jobs, in the wake of a massive protest by students, who wanted a reform and not an abolition.

Until then, 56 percent of government jobs had been reserved for candidates from various quotas. Of this, 30 percent were for freedom fighters' families, 10 percent for women, 10 percent for people from underdeveloped districts, 5 percent for members of indigenous communities, and 1 percent for persons with disabilities.

In 1996, as the numbers of those claiming freedom fighters' quota positions started to dwindle, the government extended the quota to children of freedom fighters. In 2009, it was further expanded to include the grandchildren of freedom fighters.

The ongoing quota reform movement began after the High Court on June 5, 2024, ruled that the 2018 government circular abolishing the quota system was illegal, effectively reinstating the quota system. The government appealed the decision, and the Appellate Division has issued a status quo on the HC order.

After the HC order, students took to the streets again, waging large-scale protests across the country, demanding a reform of the quota system.

"I cannot say why the government took such a decision [to abolish the quota system], because almost every country has a quota system. It was not a well-thought-out decision," AT Ahmedul Huq Choudhury, a former PSC chairman, told this newspaper.

India has a quota system for public service and they call it "reservations system," under which 15 percent of the government jobs are reserved for Scheduled Castes, 7.5 percent for Scheduled Tribes and 27 percent for Other Backward Classes, and 10 percent for Economically Weaker Sections.

Nepal reserves 45 percent civil service seats for women, along with indigenous community, Madhesi, Dalit, persons with disability and people from underdeveloped areas.

Pakistan and Sri Lanka also have reserved positions in government jobs for women, ethnic minorities, and individuals from different regions.

The government should decide on the percentage of the quota upon analysis of the data, but women, ethnic minority groups and persons with disability should be included in the quota system, said Ahmedul Huq.

"After so many years of independence, it is not reasonable to keep quota of freedom fighters. But if the government feels it necessary, there may be a small quota for the freedom fighters but it should be only for the freedom fighters' families that are in a bad condition," he said.

Public administration researcher and former secretary AKM Abdul Awal Mazumder is in favour of abolishing the quota system, except for persons with disability.

"However, the government can have a detailed evaluation before taking a decision in this regard so that it can place its argument to support the decision," he told The Daily Star.

Supreme Court lawyer and constitutional expert Arif Khan said the government can restore reasonable quotas for women, persons with disability, ethnic groups and freedom fighters any time if it wants.

"But now that the matter is before court, the solution will come in line with the instructions given by the court. However, there is no legal obstacles for the government to make a decision from time to time on the issue because the government has to take decisions at different times to carry out executive activities," he told this newspaper.

Talking about the students' demand for quota system reform, Public Administration Minister Farhad Hossain said, "If the matter was solely in the hands of the government, we could have considered their demand.

"As it is now a matter pending before the court, steps will have to be taken as per the instructions of the court and we are waiting for that."

Meanwhile, Law Minister Anisul Huq said he believes students, who have presented their views on the issue of quotas in government jobs, will accept the Supreme Court's directive and return home.

He also warned that the government would be forced to take action otherwise.

"It's the government's responsibility to look after the people's lives and properties. If anyone causes any serious disruption, the government will take action according to the law," the minister said while speaking to journalists at Akhaura Railway Station in Brahmanbaria yesterday.

In another development, Dhaka Metropolitan Police (DMP) Commissioner Habibur Rahman said yesterday that any attempts to disrupt law and order would not be tolerated.

"There is an obligation to obey the order of the court. If anyone tries to break the law ... it will not be tolerated," the commissioner said.

The protesting students had announced that they would press on with their demonstrations until the government forms a commission to reform the quota system and the parliament passes a law in this regard.

Rains now more intense, in shorter spells

in shorter periods has increased," he told The Daily Star yesterday.

A study titled "Changing Climate of Bangladesh: Trends and Changes Detected in Weather Observations from 1980 to 2023 in Bangladesh" found that the average rainfall during this period has not changed, but the number of rainy days decreased in Dhaka.

"In Dhaka, the average precipitation in the 1980-2020 period did not change significantly in any season. However, there is some evidence of a decrease of around 2.7 days per decade in the number of rainy days in the monsoon season," the study states.

Daily extreme precipitation events will likely intensify by about 7 percent for every 1°C increase in average global temperature, according to the latest Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) report.

"As the world is getting warmer, it is impacting the weather pattern. Now both evaporation rate and atmospheric moisture holding capacity are increasing and that's why we see more rainfall in shorter periods," Prof AKM Saiful Islam, one of the lead authors of the IPCC report.

Experts said incidents of extreme rainfall are being observed more frequently in many parts of the world, especially in the climate-vulnerable countries and Bangladesh is a prime example.

"In addition to this, there is another pattern of the monsoon being delayed, as reflected by the decline in the average amount of rainfall in June and July," said Abdul Mannan, a former BMD meteorologist.

Another study, "Spatio-temporal patterns of rainfall variability in Bangladesh" published in the peer-reviewed International Journal of Global Warming, found a substantial decline in the rainfall in Bangladesh.

It said that the rainfall during monsoon seasons lasting from June to September contributed around 80 percent of the total rainfall.

The study also found that the southeastern region received the highest amount of rainfall, especially the unusually high amount observed in the monsoon seasons of 2014 and 2020. The eastern region received the second-highest amount of rainfall. The northwestern region experiences the lowest amount of rainfall, while the central region receives below-average rainfall.

Downpour drowns

twice, and I had to walk for half an hour in knee-deep water. I spent around three hours to reach work. It usually takes around 40 minutes."

City planners say it is the inadequate drainage system, not the rain, that floods streets of the capital. Besides, encroachment of canals and a lack of cleaning of drains are among the key reasons for Dhaka streets getting waterlogged, they said.

"Even just after 55 to 60 millimetres of rainfall, Dhaka city's drainage system cannot drain out the water quickly ... ," Akter Mahmud, member of advisory council of Bangladesh Institute of Planners (BIP), told this newspaper.

The surface drains on the sides of roads are clogged by waste in many cases, he said.

Usually, the rainwater in the city flows into the rivers surrounding the capital via canals. If the rain continues for a few more days, the water level of four rivers will rise, obstructing the natural flow of water into the rivers, he said.

Rainwater also cannot reach the retention ponds in Goranchatbari, Kallyanpur, and Dholaikhal through canals due to encroachment and clogging of the canals at different points, Akter added.

There are two more water retention ponds on the eastern side of the capital beside the Balu river, the government will have to preserve those by connecting them with canals, he said.

Mohammad Fazle Reza Sumon, former BIP president, said after taking the ownership of the canals from Wasa four years ago, the city corporations are yet to recover the canals from encroachers.

For example, he said, Kalunagar canal, a vital channel to remove water from Dhanmondi and Hazaribagh areas, is still not fully functional as the 2.4km canal is blocked by two housing projects.

The condition of Shyampur, Manda, and Jirani canals is almost similar. So, the rainwater of nearby areas cannot be drained out. Some canals at Satarkul are also blocked due to construction of roads, he added.

Adil Mohammad Khan, president of BIP, pointed the finger at the unregulated development.

"We have lost canals to development in various areas of the city."

SUFFERINGS

"We are facing the consequences of unplanned development. We are paying taxes, but the government is not improving the drainage system, resulting in the untold sufferings of people like us," said Rafiq Mia, a resident of Green Road.

Almost the entire Green Road and its adjoining areas like Kathalbagan, Free School Street, Bhutergoli, and Kalabagan went under knee-to-waist-deep water.

Rafiq Miah, a microbus driver, said his vehicle broke down near New Market on a waterlogged street, and he was stranded there for over two hours.

"I don't know what the government and city corporations have been doing over the years...," he said.

Meanwhile, many took to social media to let people know about their ordeals and express anger. They shared photos and videos.

Streets near Fakirapool; Nayapaltan; Baitul Mukarram; Shantinagar; Arambagh; Pragati Sarani; New Market; Dayaganj intersection; Sayedabad Bus Terminal; Toyenbee Circular Road; Elephant Road; Matsya Bhaban; Dhanmondi; Karwan Bazar; Farmgate; Bijay Sarani; and East Rajabazar were inundated.

People in Old Dhaka had a terrible day. Areas including Nazirabazar, Kazi Alauddin Road, Nimtali, Tantibazar, Bangshal, and Nawabpur Road went under knee-deep water.

Russia hikes taxes to help fund Ukraine offensive

AFP, Moscow

Russian President Vladimir Putin yesterday signed off on a package of tax rises worth almost $30 billion, tapping workers and companies to contribute funds for his Ukraine offensive.

Moscow's spending has outrun revenue by tens of billions of dollars since it ordered troops into Ukraine in February 2022, helping the economy defy expectations of a deep recession but also pushing it into rare budget deficits.

Russia ran a budget deficit of around 3.2 trillion rubles ($36 billion) in 2023, equivalent to two percent of GDP.

Putin yesterday signed into law a set of amendments to Russia's tax code that includes increases on income taxes for high earners and corporate taxes paid by businesses in a bid to help plug the fiscal hole.

They were passed by Russia's rubber-stamp parliament earlier this week.

"The changes are aimed at building a fair and balanced tax system," Finance Minister Anton Siluanov said when the proposed changes were laid out in May.

He said the extra funds would bolster Russia's "economic well-being" and go towards a series of public investment projects.

The tax hikes -- which are being presented domestically as "systemic reforms" -- will raise around 2.6 trillion rubles ($29 billion) in 2025 when they come into force, the finance ministry estimates.

CITY DROWNS IN DOWNPOUR

Dhaka dwellers woke up to waterlogged roads yesterday morning amid heavy rainfall. Multiple areas, including many thoroughfares, were inundated while pedestrians had to wade through knee-deep water in many places. According to the Bangladesh Meteorological Department, a total of 130-millimetre rainfall occurred in the six hours from 6:00am to noon. Commuters who mostly left home for their workplace to provide emergency services and to go to kitchen markets suffered on the roads due to ankle- to knee-deep water and transport crisis. Although traffic was light on a Friday morning, those who ventured out with their cars had to manoeuvre through waterlogged streets. People were seen pulling their vehicles on the submerged roads as those broke down due to the waterlogging. Many shops and houses in different areas were submerged too. The photos were taken in Dhanmondi, Moghbazar, Malibagh, Dhaka University, Karwan Bazar, Farmgate, Mirpur and Arambagh areas.

Govt sinking Bangladesh on all fronts

Says BNP leader Amir Khosru

UNB, Dhaka

Slamming the government for waterlogging in different areas of Dhaka caused by heavy rainfall yesterday morning, BNP senior leader Amir Khosru Mahmud Chowdhury said Bangladesh is sinking in all directions due to the misrule and politics of the Awami League regime.

Speaking at a discussion, the BNP leader said Dhaka is experiencing waterlogging because capable and meritorious individuals are not allowed to participate in the planning and execution phases necessary to address this issue.

"If the administration is run by partisan people, then not just Dhaka, the entire country will sink," he said.

Ganatantra Mancha arranged the discussion at the Jatiya Press Club, marking the founding anniversary of the platform.

Port Road now a death trap

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Barishal

The Port Road under Ward 10 of Barishal City Corporation has turned into a death trap, leading to several accidents in recent times.

Even though located in the city's most important commercial area, the road has been in a dilapidated state over the last four years without any step from the authorities concerned to repair it.

"The biggest hilsa wholesale trading centre in the country's southern region is at Port Road. Its sorry state is affecting our business in numerous ways," said Habib, a hilsa trader.

Ganesh Dutta, a wholesale fruit trader, echoed him.

Visiting the road recently, this correspondent saw goods-laden trucks stuck in knee-deep mud in the Launch Ghat area along a 404-metre stretch of the road from Piyanjpatti Junction.

The situation exacerbates during the monsoon.

Traders said easybikes and rickshaws often get overturned on this road, causing injuries to passengers.

The road does not fall under the jurisdiction of the BCC as it is located within the Barishal River Port area, therefore the task of the road's repair and maintenance lies with the Bangladesh Inland Water Transport Authority, said Abul Bashar, executive engineer of BCC.

Contacted, Md Asaduzzaman, sub-assistant engineer of BIWTA, said he had sent a proposal for the road's renovation work in last May to the headquarters, but they have not received any instructions yet.

Guava, hog plum growers fear poor harvest

Locals blame unfavourable weather, cyclone Remal

KM HABIBUR RAHMAN, Pirojpur

Growers of guava and hog plum in Pirojpur and Jhalakathi districts are worried over a possible poor production due to unfavourable weather and the aftermath of cyclone Remal.

In fact, the harvest of seasonal guava in the region has been delayed by a month already.

Guava is commercially cultivated in Pirojpur's Nesarabad and Jhalakathi's Sadar upazilas, while hog plum is grown in all upazilas in the two districts. These two fruits are main cash crops for growers in Nesarabad and Jhalakathi Sadar.

"High temperature during flowering time this year hampered production of both seasonal fruits. Then Remal caused further damage to the trees and buds. The fruits did not grow well due to a lack of rain," said Sunil Biswas, a cultivator from Adamkathi village in Nesarabad.

"Guava harvesting is expected to begin in full swing within two weeks and will continue for a couple of months. This year, however, the harvest has been delayed due to the inclement weather condition," he added.

Wholesale buyers from across the country collect guava from Nesarabad and Jhalakathi Sadar and then transport the fruits by trucks, said guava growers.

Hundreds of large hog plum trees with fruits and buds were uprooted in the two districts as Remal lashed the southern coastal belt on May 26.

Birendranath, a hog plum grower, said, "It takes at least five years for a hog plum tree to become productive, and it will produce fruit continuously for over 20 years. Many trees got uprooted in the cyclone. It will not only lower the output this year but also in future, as it will take years for new trees to become productive."

Swapan Halder, another cultivator, echoed him.

According to the Department of Agricultural Extension, guava has been cultivated in 846 hectares of land in Pirojpur and 320 hectares in Jhalakathi Sadar.

Also, hog plum has been cultivated on 507 hectares of land in Pirojpur and 140 hectares in Jhalakathi Sadar.

Contacted, Chapal Krishna Nath, upazila agriculture officer in Nesarabad, confirmed a month's delay in guava harvesting. "Normally, guava harvest begins by mid-June every year. This year, it got delayed considerably and will begin mid-July," he said.

Ali Ahmad, upazila agriculture officer in Jhalakathi Sadar, said that the production of guava and hog plum in his upazila will be lower this year due to unfavourable weather and the impact of the cyclone.

'Rohingyas need more int'l support'

IFRC president says Bangladesh must take steps to adapt to climate change

MAMUNUR RASHID

There is a need for sustained international attention and support for the Rohingyas until a solution is reached to get the displaced people back to a safe country, said Kate Forbes, president of the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies (IFRC).

"Yes, we want them [Rohingyas] to continue living in a safe space in the future. But that's not going to be today, not going to be next week, it won't even be next month," she told The Daily Star in a recent interview.

"In the meantime, we, the humanitarian sector, the IFRC and other large players, have an obligation to tell the story that is still here. The needs still exist."

Kate Forbes came on a five-day visit to Bangladesh on June 2. She visited the Rohingya refugee camps in Cox's Bazar and travelled to Koyra upazila, which was affected by cyclone Remal.

The IFRC president met with key government officials, including Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina and Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud, to discuss the impacts of climate change and strategies for managing disasters and pandemics.

About her visit to the Rohingya camps, Kate said the Bangladesh government and the people deserve praise for providing a safe space for these displaced individuals.

She said she discussed with government officials as well as ambassadors about the increased conflict within the Rohingya camp and a solution to that.

Speaking about climate change, strengths and weaknesses of Bangladesh's disaster management strategies, the IFRC president said, "One of the main issues here is the lack of innovation. In the past, inadequate forecasting has led to the loss of thousands of lives because people were unaware that a cyclone was approaching. They had almost no knowledge about it."

"We understand that as climate change intensifies, the severity of disasters here is also increasing. Therefore, we need to be prepared, alert the people, and help them adapt to these changes. We must raise awareness among a larger number of people and support those who are at risk so they can develop their plans to tackle these disasters effectively."

She said that Bangladesh's present disaster management system is blunt and emphasised the need for more proactive measures.

Calling upon Bangladesh to adapt the strategies that many parts of the world have made, she said, "We need to look at how we manage rainfalls so that we don't lose our topsoil, and can still plant trees and crops."

It's also crucial to start conversations in schools about the impacts of climate change and how it affects us, she added. "At an individual level, we each have a responsibility in this effort," she said.

Speaking about future activities of the Red Crescent Society in Bangladesh, Kate said they can train more volunteers and engage more people so that they can make a difference.

Man stabbed to death in Dhaka

UNB, Dhaka

A 50-year-old man was stabbed to death by unidentified miscreants in Kadamtali area of Dhaka on Thursday night, said police.

Deceased Md Mahbub Alam was a resident of Dakshin Dhania area.

The victim's brother Rafiqul Alam said miscreants stabbed Mahbub in an alley around 10:15pm.

Hearing screams, locals took him to Dhaka Medical College Hospital where physicians declared him dead around 11:00pm, he said.

The hospital's police outpost in-charge Md Bachchu Mia said the body was kept at the morgue.

As flood worsens, food crisis

The local authorities are working to provide continuous support to the flood-affected people in the district. However, it has become apparent that the relief assistance for the people has been much less than required.

Meanwhile, the Brahmaputra was still flowing 31cm above danger level yesterday noon while water levels of the Dudhkumar and Dharla rivers went below danger level by 8cm and 5cm respectively, according to BWDB sources in Kurigram.

"Many schools are now closed due to flooding. The affected students will be enlisted once the schools reopen. New books and study materials will be provided to the students who lost those in floodwater," said Nibez Uddin Sarkar, district primary education officer in Kurigram.

Abandoned hostels, unbound sufferings

4 residential halls of Khulna Polytechnic Institute lie unused for 15yrs

DIPANKAR ROY, Khulna

An eerie silence prevails on the once bustling campus of Khulna Polytechnic Institute as its four dormitories have been lying abandoned for 15 years.

On February 8, 2009, the authorities of the institution announced its closure as well as of the dormitories after students, agitated over their demand for cancellation of exam, clashed with police.

While the institution resumed its academic activities later on, the hostels remained padlocked with electricity lines disconnected. The institute's authorities later in 2017 even sent an application to the divisional commissioner to declare the four buildings abandoned.

As such, hundreds of students of the institution have been suffering immensely over the years to manage their accommodation outside the campus.

Meanwhile, the abandoned hostels -- three for male students with 441 seats and one for female students with 60 seats -- have been gradually becoming dilapidated over the years due to a lack of maintenance.

After nightfall, the dark corridors of the dormitories become dens of addicts.

At present, around 4,000 students are studying in nine departments of Khulna Polytechnic Institute, established in 1963 on around 29 acres of land in Khalishpur area of the city.

With no residential facilities available any more, these students are compelled to rent houses or mess in neighbouring areas, spending much more than they had to. Alongside this, they are bearing numerous problems, including harassment of female students outside the campus.

"I am burdened with a monthly cost of accommodation, meal and other expenses totalling Tk 7,000-7,500, which I can barely afford. The situation is the same for most students. If the hostels were opened, it would have benefitted hundreds of students like me," said Sujan Biswas, a second-year student of electronics department from Bagerhat, who lives in a mess with 14 other students.

A female student wishing anonymity said, "Our plight is even more concerning. We often face security threats, harassment and stalking on our way to and from rented accommodations."

Aris Mahmud Nabab, a student of 2018-19 session and also general secretary of Bangladesh Technical Students Council, said they had written to the teachers on numerous occasions requesting for opening the halls, but there has been no response so far.

"Over 1,100 students get admitted to this institution every year but around 150 to 200 students leave for elsewhere being unable to bear the expenses of studying here while renting accommodation outside the campus," he said.

Some teachers and former students of the institute said the halls were earlier controlled by ruling-party-backed student leaders and hence a lot of troubles were created on the campus. As such, no one is in favour of opening the halls.

Contacted, Animesh Paul, principal of the institute, said considering the plight of female students, a hostel with 500 seats will be constructed for them, while a 10-storey academic building will be built in place of the existing four dormitories, along with an 8-foot-high boundary wall around the campus to prevent trespassing.

MIRANZILLA COLONY

Protect harijans, stop eviction

Hindu Parishad urges PM

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Demanding the protection of minorities and protesting the attack on Miranzilla Harijan colony, Bangladesh Hindu Parishad held a protest rally in Dhaka yesterday.

The programme took place in front of the capital's Jatiya Press Club around 11:00am, where speakers strongly condemned the attack carried out by a local councillor on the harijan community, situated in the city's Bangshal, on July 10.

They also sought the intervention of Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina to resolve the issue surrounding their eviction.

Sajan Kumar Mishra, spokesperson of the organisation, said, "There is a place for Rohingyas in this country. But it is a matter of regret that people of the harijan community, who have worked to keep this city clean for 400 years, are being evicted."

This is very unfortunate in the independent Bangladesh, he said.

Advocate Sumon Kumar Roy, general secretary of Hindu Parishad, said, "No one has been arrested yet for carrying out such a heinous attack on the harijan community in broad daylight. On the contrary, cases have been filed against the harijans." He alleged that the Hindu communities are deprived of justice now.

"Their value increases only when elections come. The Hindu community is now aware of politics and their rights; they can no longer be used as a vote bank in the coming days," he said, adding that they will give a befitting reply to these injustices by exercising their franchise in the future.

Woman's body found in maize field

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

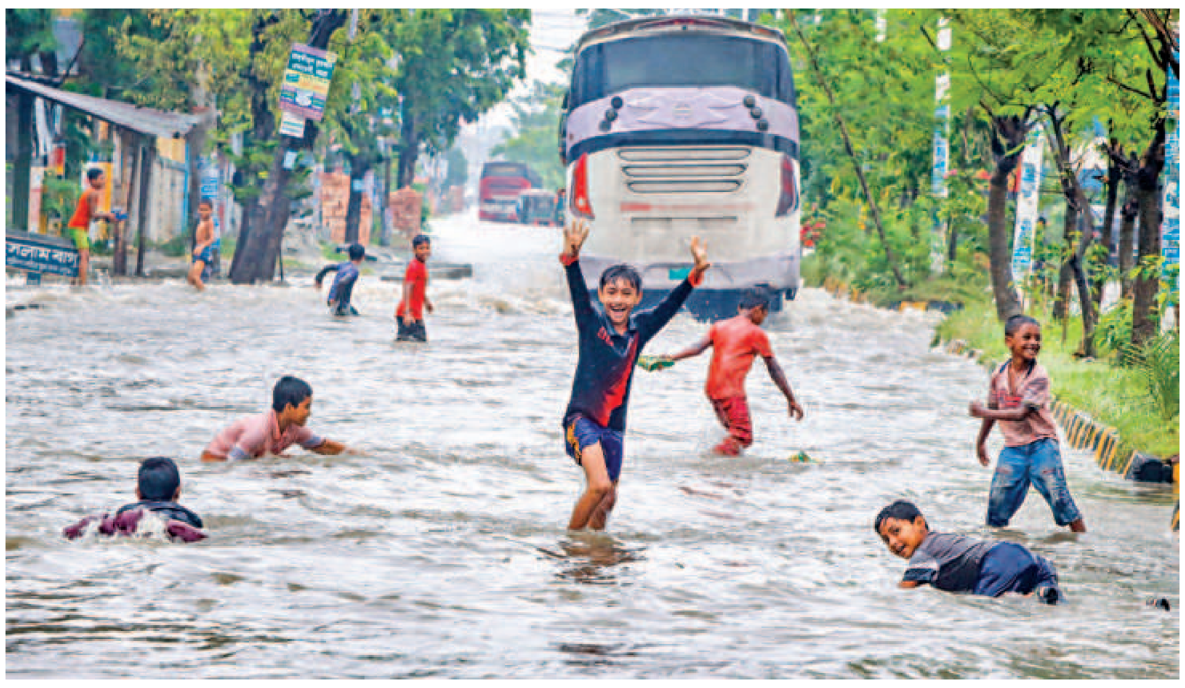
Police recovered the throat-slit body of a woman from a maize field at Haluapara in Kishoreganj's Katiadi upazila yesterday morning.

The victim was identified as Smriti Akter, 22.

Smriti -- who got married to Amin Bhuiyan, an expatriate in Qatar, five years ago -- used to live at her father's house in Haluapara area, said Mohamamd Daud, officer-in-charge of Katiadi Police Station.

He said they are investigating the incident.

Police sent the body to a local hospital morgue for an autopsy, said the official.



While rain brought misery to the lives of adults across Khulna, these children found joy as they splashed around in the knee-deep water. Over the last 24 hours till yesterday morning, Khulna experienced 89mm of rain, with 55mm taking place between 6:00am and 9:00am. The photo was taken in front of the Metro Police Line School in the city yesterday.

As flood worsens, food crisis mounts

S DILIP ROY, Lalmonirhat

Hundreds of families in Kurigram's shoal areas have been facing untold sufferings amid deteriorating flood situation.

In Uttar Ramana village within Brahmaputra's shoal under Chilmari upazila, all 240 families were compelled to leave their homes, submerged under floodwaters, with their belongings and domestic animals to shelter on an embankment of Bangladesh Water Development Board since July 2.

Inadequate relief assistance means many families are grappling with an acute crisis of food. The children and elderly among them have been suffering the most. Many school-goers have been unable to study, having lost their books and study materials in floodwater.

"Since the flood began, my father has been unable to find work, so we don't have enough food. We are mainly surviving on dry food like puffed rice, that too barely for one meal a day. I can't study either as my books and study materials were lost," said Rumana Akhter, 11.

Nirab Islam, 8, and Khushi Akhter, 11, echoed her.

"We are grappling with food shortage. I have no work now due to the flood situation. I can't afford to buy food, and kerosene oil or candles. We are spending our nights inside this polythene-wrapped shanty amid darkness, with floodwater raging around us," said Khushi's father Faridul Islam.

The scenario is same for 350 shoal villages under nine upazilas in the district.

Damaged roads disrupt connectivity

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Pabna

The ongoing flood in Sirajganj district left at least three roads badly damaged in Shahzadpur upazila in the past one week, disrupting road communication.

In Chithulia area of Kayempur union under the upazila, around 30-metre stretch of a concrete road was washed away in flood within a day on July 3, affecting around 10,000 residents of nine villages.

A portion of a similar concrete road and an earthen road in Talgachhi area were also damaged.

Contacted, Md Saiful Islam, executive engineer of LGED in Sirajganj, said, "In the present flood situation, it is not feasible to repair the roads properly. Once floodwater recedes, we will assess the extent of damage to the roads and repair those properly to restore smooth road communication."

PAK PARLIAMENT

Ex-PM Imran Khan's party wins reserved seats

REUTERS, Islamabad

Pakistan's Supreme Court yesterday ruled that jailed former prime minister Imran Khan's party was eligible for over 20 extra reserved seats in parliament, ramping up pressure on the country's weak coalition government.

Khan's Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) party candidates contested the February 8 election as independents after it was barred from the polls. They won the most seats but the election commission said independents were ineligible for the grant of 70 reserved seats, meant for political parties only.

The commission had ordered the reserved seats instead to be distributed among other parties, mostly to those in the ruling coalition.

"As a political party, the PTI is entitled to its reserved seats," said Chief Justice Qazi Faez Isa while reading out the order, which was supported by eight judges and opposed by five of the 13-member full court bench.

The granting of 23 reserved seats does not affect the parliamentary majority of Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif's coalition government, Law Minister Azam Nazeer Tarar told reporters after the decision.

The ruling coalition still has well over 200 members of the 336-member lower house of parliament. Khan's party strength stood at 84 before the decision, and is expected to rise to over 100.

Under Pakistan's election rules, parties are allocated 70 reserved seats - 60 for women, 10 for non-Muslims - in proportion to the number of seats they win. This completes the National Assembly's total strength of 336 seats.

Tax billionaires more

India's opposition Congress asks Modi in a bid to generate funds for stretched public services like education, health

REUTERS, New Delhi

India's main opposition Congress party yesterday asked Prime Minister Narendra Modi to impose an additional tax on the country's billionaires to generate funds for stretched public services like education and health.

The annual budget will be presented by Finance Minister Nirmala Sitharaman on July 23 at a time of deepening income inequality and high unemployment despite India's world-beating economic growth of nearly 8 percent and booming stock markets.

Jairam Ramesh, senior Congress party leader, said in a post on X that a 2 percent tax on the wealth of India's estimated 167 billionaires could raise as much as 1.5 trillion rupees ($18 billion) or about 0.5 percent of gross domestic product.

"This could pay for schools, hospitals, renewable energy, and many more essential investments," he said, urging the government to tax the super-rich more.

Wealth concentrated in the hands of the richest 1 percent of India's population is at its greatest level for six decades and its percentage share of national income exceeds that of countries including Brazil and the US research group the World Inequality Lab reported earlier this year.

Jairam Ramesh, senior Congress party leader, said that a 2 percent tax on wealth of estimated 167 billionaires could raise as much as 1.5 trillion rupees.

Opposition parties are pressing the government to take steps to increase spending on welfare programmes after Modi lost his majority in parliament and had to rely on coalition allies to return to office for the third time.

Government officials earlier ruled out the possibility of taxing the wealth of the ultra-rich, arguing it could encourage them to move to low-tax countries.

Congress also asked Modi to clarify what would be India's position at the G20 meeting in Brazil later this month on the issue of supporting a global tax on billionaires, a proposal pushed by Brazil, which holds the G20 presidency this year.

Brazil's proposal, crafted by French economist Gabriel Zucman from the independent EU Tax Observatory, calls for an annual 2 percent levy on fortunes exceeding $1 billion, which could raise up to $250 billion annually from about 3,000 individuals.

Government sources said yesterday India plans to overhaul more than 200 state-run firms to make them more profitable, signalling a departure from Modi's aggressive privatisation programme that has struggled to take off.

Kejriwal gets interim bail in graft case

But he stays in jail due to his arrest in another case

REUTERS, New Delhi

India's Supreme Court yesterday granted interim bail to opposition leader and Delhi Chief Minister Arvind Kejriwal in a graft case, but he will stay in jail due to his arrest in another case.

Kejriwal was arrested in March by the Enforcement Directorate (ED), India's financial crime-fighting agency, over alleged corruption in the city's alcohol sales policy.

A fierce critic of Prime Minister Narendra Modi and a former anti-corruption crusader, Kejriwal, 55, denies any wrongdoing and calls the case politically motivated. His lawyers had challenged his arrest in the top court, which referred the matter to a larger bench while giving him temporary relief. "Given that right to life and liberty is sacrosanct, and Arvind Kejriwal has suffered incarceration for over 90 days ... we direct that Arvind Kejriwal will be released on interim bail," Justice Sanjiv Khanna said.

India announces 'Murder of the Constitution Day' remembrance

AFP, New Delhi

India said yesterday it would hold an annual "Murder of the Constitution Day" from next year, commemorating a dark historical chapter tied to the family of Prime Minister Narendra Modi's chief political rival.

June 25, 2025 will mark the 50th anniversary of the Emergency, when then-premier Indira Gandhi suspended the constitution in response to a court ruling that threatened her hold on power.

The following months saw thousands of activists jailed, press freedoms suspended and an abusive compulsory sterilisation campaign that forced millions of men to receive vasectomies in an abortive population control effort.

Modi said on social media platform X that the new day of remembrance would "serve as a reminder of what happens when the Constitution of India was trampled over". "It is also a day to pay homage to each and every person who suffered due to the excesses of the Emergency."

Rohingya repatriation looking like pipe dream

Over the last several years, the Myanmar army violated airspace and bullets landed on Bangladesh territory, leaving people injured. Bangladesh repeatedly protested the incidents.

Bangladesh's physical relation with Myanmar is through Rakhine state, and that configuration is now changing with the non-state actors controlling this border, said Sakhawat, also a former election commissioner.

"Clearly, there is a huge security threat ... the options for Bangladesh are limited."

If the Myanmar junta counterattacks the AA, the situation will only worsen at the border, Sakhawat said. "What would happen if the Arakan Army crosses the border to Bangladesh while fighting? Will Bangladesh take their side?"

As the Myanmar military has conscripted Rohingyas into the force, the AA's position is against them. So, there is a risk of Rohingya-AA direct confrontation, he said.

Another side-effect of the fighting is that drug smuggling through the Bangladesh-Myanmar border may be rampant as the warring forces often make money out of drug sales, Sakhawat added.

Subsequently, Bangladesh must send security reinforcements along the 271 km-long land and maritime border, according to experts.

"We are absolutely troubled by the conflicts and their implications on Bangladesh," said an official of the foreign ministry.

The Myanmar authorities have been warned not to make Bangladesh a casualty of their fighting. "We have beefed up border security measures so that Rohingyas cannot enter our territory," he added.

Bangladesh will not be able to shoot the Rohingyas if they forcefully enter Bangladesh en masse, said Munshi Faiz Ahmad, a former ambassador.

Before that happens, Bangladesh needs to take serious diplomatic initiatives so the Rohingyas can stay in Rakhine, maybe in camps, under international supervision.

He suggested Bangladesh raise its voice at the UN and hold dialogues with the US, India and China regarding the matter.

"We cannot be burdened again and again by the Rohingya crisis created by Myanmar," said Ahmad, also a former chairman of the Bangladesh Institute of International Strategic Studies.

The UN Security should seriously consider deploying UN peacekeepers in Rakhine to maintain peace, said Shahab Enam Khan, a professor of international relations at Jahangirnagar University.

"International law is not only applicable to Bangladesh. Bangladesh has limits too. How long can the people of Bangladesh take responsibility for the Rohingya?"

Bangladesh can support developing a humanitarian corridor, allowing international aid agencies to reach food and other emergency supplies to Rakhine State for the displaced Rohingya, he added.

Sakhawat suggested that it would be best if the UN could arrange places within Rakhine where the Rohingya can take shelter.

"The UN can make a global call on this instead of pushing Bangladesh to take the responsibility," he said.

There are about one million Rohingyas in the camps in Cox's Bazar, with yearly births of 30,000.

Rohingya repatriation could not be possible, even under a tripartite initiative led by China, as Rohingya were not convinced by the guarantee of safety and citizenship in Rakhine.

The NUG, the Myanmar government in exile since 2021, had pledged citizenship and recognition of Rohingya as an ethnic group of Myanmar. However, analysts expect the AA to have stronger autonomy even if Myanmar becomes a federal democracy.

Also, the AA thinks Rohingya are outsiders, so it will be difficult to continue repatriation efforts if the AA controls the Rakhine state.

Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud said repatriation of the Rohingya under the present conditions in Rakhine is not possible in the near future. However, the government will continue to engage the international community in Rohingya repatriation.

Until then, the burden on Bangladesh is getting heavier, with funding for Rohingya on the wane.

As much as $852 million is needed for the upkeep of Rohingya in the camps in 2024. So far, less than 30 percent of the sum has come through.

"It is important for Bangladesh to establish contacts with the Arakan Army, even if informally. If they control Rakhine, there will be no alternatives to establishing relations with them," Ahmad said.

Nepal PM Dahal loses confidence vote

Dahal, 69, was forced to either resign or prove his majority in parliament after his largest ally, the liberal Communist Unified Marxist Leninist (UML) party, led by Oli, withdrew support last week.

Oli, who has been prime minister twice before, struck a deal with the centrist Nepali Congress (NC) at the end of June, securing enough seats for a majority, meaning he is poised to govern, but no date has been set for the new government to take office.

Dahal, a former Maoist rebel chief, needed at least 138 votes in his favour in the 275-member house to retain power. A total of 63 of the 258 lawmakers present in the chambers voted for him, 194 voted against, and one abstained.

"The confidence vote sought by Prime Minister Pushpa Kamal Dahal has been rejected," Parliament Speaker Dev Raj Ghimire declared after the ballots were counted.

In his third term as prime minister, which began in December 2022, Dahal changed his main coalition partner three times and had to seek a vote of confidence five times, including the one he lost yesterday.

"The new coalition was necessitated by a need for political stability," UML lawmaker Yogesh Bhattarai said.

In a speech ahead of yesterday's vote, Dahal said Oli's coalition of the two biggest political parties was against democratic practice.

UML is the largest party in parliament and NC is the second largest.

"I am concerned this might lead to regression and authoritarianism," said Dahal, whose Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist Center) is the third largest party.

Biden faces more calls to quit race

want someone else, that's the democratic process," Biden said, before shifting to the stage whisper he often uses for emphasis to add, "It's not gonna happen."

Biden perhaps did not reassure those who were spooked by his poor presidential debate performance against Trump on June 27.

At one point, he referred to his vice president, Kamala Harris, as "Vice President Trump". That came just hours after he introduced Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky as "President Putin" at the Nato summit, drawing gasps from those in the room.

Biden occasionally garbled his responses at the news conference, yet he also delivered detailed assessments of global issues, including Ukraine's war with Russia and the Israel's offensive in Gaza, that served as a reminder of his decades of experience on the world stage.

Some Democrats were not reassured.

"We must put forward the strongest candidate possible to confront the threat posed by Trump's promised MAGA authoritarianism. I no longer believe that is Joe Biden," said Representative Jim Himes of Connecticut, who called on the president to end his campaign after the news conference.

A senior campaign official who spoke on condition of anonymity called the performance the "worst of all worlds. Not good. But not bad enough to make him change his mind ... It'll give some enough cover to back him publicly, only to say he's not up for it privately."

On the other hand, Democratic fundraiser Dmitri Melhorn said other donors told him they saw a strong performance from the president. "This is the person who can beat Trump. The mistakes are baked in and the upside is strong," he told Reuters.

civil society platform Shushashoner Jonno Nagorik (Shujan) on July 4 said AL grassroots leaders have become further apart as several party men ran for chairman in almost all upazilas. It said the situation may get worse.

Asked about the reasons behind the intra-party feuds, several senior AL leaders blamed party leaders' desperation for winning polls, establishing supremacy, securing party posts, and rivalries between party lawmakers, local leaders, independent MPs and the newly elected upazila chairmen.

They said internal feuds have caused the organisation to reach a point where some leaders cannot even tolerate their party colleagues.

The senior leaders said the AL high-ups are trying to restore discipline, but it might be tough.

Infighting within the ruling party became so grave that Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina had to ask the home minister to ensure arrests of all those linked to clashes and killings within the AL.

In a meeting on July 8, AL leaders and several ministers said that intra-party conflicts have become the party's main cause for concern.

Sources said the ruling party is going to take some drastic measures. The AL organising secretaries have been asked to identify the party units that have internal feuds and those responsible, and report to the AL high-command.

Top AL leaders will tour different districts, hold talks with the leaders of the troubled units and summon leaders to Dhaka, if required, to end the disputes. If necessary, the party will take organisational actions against errant grassroots leaders, the sources added.

AL Joint General Secretary AFM Bahauddin Nasim said intra-party conflicts within a big party like AL are "quite normal".

"But we will not spare anyone if party discipline is violated. We will do everything needed to restore discipline in the party," he told The Daily Star.

Conflicts within the AL became a common occurrence as different factions clashed over establishing political dominance, rivalries, taking control of illegal sand business, controlling bus and autorickshaw stands, business establishments, land, and party offices.

Rabiul Islam, 42, chairman of Sarapur Union Parishad under Khulna's Dumuria upazila and also a local AL leader, was shot dead on July 6.

Rabiul's wife Shayla Erin filed a case with Dumuria Police Station saying her husband might have been killed over political rivalry.

Police arrested local AL leader Asgar Bishwas in the case. Asgar ran for Dumuria upazila chairman and Rabiul reportedly took a stance against Asgor.

On July 7, HM Suman Haldar, chairman of Panchgaon Union Parishad under Munshiganj's Tongibari upazila and also a local AL leader, was shot dead due to a rivalry over the election to a school managing committee.

Police arrested three people in connection with the murder. The three are involved in AL.

On June 22, at least 30 people were injured in a clash between two AL factions in Rajshahi's Bagha upazila. Of the injured, Ashraful Islam Babul, upazila AL general secretary, died of his wounds on June 26.

Police arrested Bagha municipality Mayor Akkas Ali, also a district AL leader, in connection with the murder.

A recent report by Bangla daily Prothom Alo said clashes between AL or pro-AL men left 51 people dead in Bogura over the last 15 years.

The report cited establishing dominance, rivalries over securing party posts, control over narcotics trade, control over establishments, extortion in the transport sector, and control over sand trade as the reasons behind the clashes.

A top Bogura AL leader said, "No visible steps are taken to end the longstanding intra-party feuds."

He said grassroots leaders and activists used to maintain close contact with their respective unit leaders and also follow their instructions because their recommendations were necessary for them to win party tickets for local government polls.

"But as Awami League decided not to field party candidates in the local government polls, party men who ran as independents created their own groups of supporters. This ultimately weakened the chain of command," he observed.

In Russia, Biden's verbal slip draws mockery

REUTERS, Moscow

Joe Biden has shown he is "a pro-Russian candidate being controlled by the Kremlin," Russia's Foreign Ministry spokeswoman joked yesterday, after the US president misspoke and introduced Ukraine's leader as "President Putin" before correcting himself.

Video of the gaffe at a Nato summit in Washington on Thursday featured prominently on news bulletins in Russia.

Biden mixing up the names of his Republican rival Donald Trump with that of Kamala Harris, his vice-president, was also given coverage.

Olga Skabeyeva, a pro-Kremlin TV commentator, posted a clip of Biden's Putin name fumble on her social media feed with a crying with laughter emoji.

"The show from Joe goes on!," she wrote separately beneath footage of Trump/Harris name mix-up.

Musk's X 'deceives' users with blue checks: EU

AFP, Brussels

Tech billionaire Elon Musk's X platform is misleading users with its blue checkmarks for certified accounts, and is also violating EU content rules, Brussels said yesterday, in a finding that could lead to hefty fines.

EU regulators are unhappy with the blue badge system under Musk's ownership since anyone can now obtain it with a premium subscription, whereas before it was reserved for verified accounts including leaders, companies and journalists, after approval.

The formal warning against X is the first under the Digital Services Act (DSA), a sweeping law that forces digital companies do more to police content online. It follows a probe launched in December 2023.

X becomes the third company in as many weeks to face the European Union's wrath for violating landmark new rules, after Brussels warned Apple and Meta to change their ways or risk massive fines -- for breaches of a second law known as the Digital Markets Act (DMA).

Musk has overhauled the social media platform formerly known as Twitter, including changing its name, since purchasing it in October 2022.

But his plans for X have put him at odds with Brussels since the EU wants big tech to do more to protect users online and increase competition in the digital sphere. Now the European Commission has told X of its preliminary view that it is "in breach of" the DSA, arguing that the social network "deceives" users with its new blue badge rules.

Iran demands US pay $6.8bn for sanctions impact

AFP, Tehran

An Iranian court has ordered the United States to pay almost $6.8 billion in damages for the effect of sanctions on patients with a rare skin disease.

The International Court in Tehran ordered its foe the United States to pay $6.785 billion to patients with epidermolysis bullosa, a disorder that causes the skin to blister easily, the judiciary's Mizan Online website said on Thursday.

Then-president Donald Trump in 2018 unilaterally withdrew the US from a nuclear accord between Iran and several global powers. He reimposed economic sanctions that had been lifted under the agreement.

Washington's measures "deprived these patients of medicines and ointments", leading to "the death of about 20 people", it said.

The trial began in November 2021, when 295 complainants, including patients, took 30 American officials to court for "having participated in the establishment of the sanctions," Mizan added.

They filed the case after United Nations experts in October 2021 cited the impact of the US measures on epidermolysis bullosa patients as an example of "over-compliance with sanctions".

FAMINE IN GAZA

Displaced Palestinians turn to leaves to survive

REUTERS, Gaza

Struggling through rubble and buildings shattered by Gaza's offensive, Ahmed Al-Shanbari and three of his sons risk their lives to pick mulberry leaves to eat, a scene being played out across the enclave as Palestinians face a hunger crisis.

"It is scary to walk when the bombing is still happening," said Al-Shanbari, who like many Gazans risks Israeli bombardment in the search for food.

Ahmed's wife Fatima cleans the leaves and boils them over a makeshift stove. "Nothing in it is tolerable, neither its taste nor its colour," she said. Fatima stuffs the leaves with rice and spices, hoping to get her children to tolerate the sour taste. Yet the bitterness remains.

More than 495,000 people are facing the most severe level of food insecurity, says UN-backed global monitor

The mulberry leaves are animal's food, she says. "But what can we do?"

The al-Shanbari family of eight struggles to survive, like many Palestinians in Gaza, where 2.3 million people live in one of the world's most densely populated places facing shortages of food, water, medicine and fuel.

"Ever since the offensive started, we did not taste anything, we're living on the few things we find," said Fatima.

In a July 9 statement, a group of independent human rights experts mandated by the United Nations said that famine has spread throughout the enclave. Israel's diplomatic mission in Geneva said the statement amounted to "misinformation".

"Israel has continuously scaled up its coordination and assistance in the delivery of humanitarian aid across the Gaza Strip, recently connecting its power line to the Gaza water desalination plant," it added.

According to Gaza's health authorities, at least 33 children have died of malnutrition, mostly in northern areas which had until recently faced the brunt of the Israeli military campaign.

Gaza remains at high risk of famine as the offensive continues and aid access is restricted, said a UN-backed global monitor called the Integrated Food Security Phase Classification (IPC), last month.

More than 495,000 people are facing the most severe, or "catastrophic", level of food insecurity, the IPC said.

Their statement, signed by experts including the Special Rapporteur on the right to food, Michael Fakhri, condemned "Israel's intentional and targeted starvation campaign against the Palestinian people".

Israel's diplomatic mission in Geneva said the statement amounted to "misinformation".

Nigeria school collapse kills several students

AFP, Jos

A school in central Nigeria collapsed yesterday, killing several students and trapping others who were heard crying for help under the rubble, a rescue agency and witnesses said.

Mechanical diggers tried to rescue victims while parents desperately looked for their children at the Saint Academy in Jos North district of Plateau State after the building fell in on students taking their exams, an AFP correspondent at the site said.

"I entered the class not more than five minutes, when I heard a sound, and the next thing is I found myself here," Wulliya Ibrahim, one of the injured students told AFP with his mother at his hospital bedside.

"We are many in the class, we are writing our exams."

The National Emergency Management Agency said the two-storey building housing Saint Academy collapsed killing "several students" without giving details.

"NEMA and other critical stakeholders are presently carrying out Search and Rescue operations," it said.

Ukraine downs 5 missiles, 11 drones launched by Russia

REUTERS, Kyiv

Ukrainian air force said yesterday it shot down all five Kh-101 cruise missiles and 11 out of 19 drones launched by Russia.

Russia's main target was the town of Starokostiantyniv, an important Ukrainian air base and a frequent target of Moscow's strikes, the air force said in a statement.

Ukrainian air force shot down 11 drones over six Ukrainian regions and did not have the location of the remaining eight drones launched in the attack.

"It is likely that the enemy is using imitators of attack drones to overload air defense. There was no information on casualties or damage," the air force said.

The governors of some of the targeted regions, including Sumy, Kyiv, Khmelnytskyi, and Mykolaiv, reported no damage or casualties in their morning statements.

Meanwhile, Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov told reporters yesterday that Russia does not rule out any scenarios regarding the possible resumption of the now-defunct Black Sea grain deal.

On Thursday, Turkish President Tayyip Erdogan, speaking after a meeting with his Ukrainian counterpart Volodymyr Zelensky, said they had discussed navigational security in the Black Sea, including the grain deal.

Russia allowed the Turkish- and United Nations-brokered deal, which for a year facilitated Russian and Ukrainian agricultural exports via the Black Sea, to expire in July 2023.

Pakistan's first breast milk bank opposed by clerics

AFP, Karachi

A hospital that launched the first breast milk bank for premature babies in Pakistan is negotiating for it to be reopened after clerics deemed it un-Islamic, doctors and the national Islamic council said yesterday.

The milk bank in the megacity of Karachi received religious approval in December from a provincial Islamic seminary, but that approval was withdrawn almost as soon as the facility opened in June, forcing it to shut.

"Breast milk is the only way to improve the chances of the survival of premature babies," said Jamal Raza, a doctor and the executive director of the Sindh Institute of Child Health and Neonatology hospital, where the bank was set up.

"People have no idea what this is about. Only premature babies were going to be given this milk," Raza added.

The facility was intended to help premature babies survive in a country where the neonatal mortality rate is 39 deaths per 1,000 live births, according to the UN children's agency -- one of the highest in South Asia.

A religious edict, or fatwa, approving the facility was issued in December 2023 by Jamia Darul Uloom, an Islamic advisory body in the province.

However, the government's national Council of Islamic Ideology later questioned whether it risked breaking Islamic codes on kinship, which dictate that husband and wife cannot be breastfed by the same woman.

"The child's family must know who the donors are to not complicate the issue of future marriages between such families," the head of research at the council, Inamullah, who goes by one name, told AFP.

MIGRANT CRISIS

Four drowned trying to cross Channel

Says French police

AFP, Lille

Four migrants drowned in the Channel overnight off France's northern coast while trying to cross to Britain, French maritime police said yesterday.

A navy patrol boat went to the site off of Boulogne-sur-Mer after being alerted that several migrants had fallen into the sea, maritime police told AFP.

Four bodies were pulled from the water, but people were also rescued, the police added.

The UK's new interior minister Yvette Cooper described the deaths as "truly awful".

"Criminal gangs are making vast profit from putting lives at risk," she wrote on X.

"We are accelerating action with international partners to pursue & bring down dangerous smuggler gangs," she added.

State enterprises must answer for losses

Projected fivefold rise in losses demands proper response

We are alarmed to learn of a projection that state-owned enterprises could end up counting nearly a fivefold increase in losses in FY2024-25 compared to the previous year, as their expenses are likely to far exceed their earnings. This is according to a monitoring cell of the Finance Division that conducted a budgetary analysis of 50 enterprises across seven sectors. Their total loss for FY2025 could be Tk 28,047.97 crore—up from the Tk 5,989.87 crore loss incurred in FY2024—indicating a deeply concerning trend.

The projection, made by a government body no less, is yet another indictment of the widespread corruption and mismanagement besieging government institutions, including state-owned enterprises. Not too long ago, we had a similar indictment when the Office of the Comptroller and Auditor General (OCAG) revealed massive financial irregularities in many of these institutions. Their spiralling losses, despite many enjoying monopolistic advantages as service providers, raise questions not only about how they would have fared in a competitive market environment, but also regarding the government's austerity measures, which should have stemmed the tide of rising expenses in them. Evidently, things are as bad as depicted in media reports, and they are now set to get worse.

This is not to say that all government enterprises are underperforming. In fact, according to the monitoring cell, most are making a profit. But the overall picture is marred by the staggering losses of 13 of the enterprises—projected to be Tk 36,144.93 crore in total—significantly eating away at the achievements of the rest. Some of them are well-known for their serial underperformance. Top among them is the Bangladesh Power Development Board (BPDB), contributing the largest anticipated loss with Tk 18,103.60 crore, thereby justifying the prediction of two Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD) experts, made in a column published in this daily last year, that it was turning into a "white elephant." Another familiar contributor of losses is the Bangladesh Petroleum Corporation (BPC), where the level of irregularities is so massive that it even stunned a parliamentary committee.

We, therefore, demand a thorough review of why these 13 entities are floundering. We can no longer ignore their persistent losses, or that of other state institutions regularly flagged for irregularities. Any intervention must aim to rid them not only of corruption, but also the cycle of poor planning and inefficiencies that have long gone unpunished. The present economic crisis will be harder to overcome with these albatrosses hung around our neck.

Will the 'big fish' finally be caught?

Identify those who supplied and bought the leaked PSC exam questions

For years, we have urged the authorities to investigate the issue of PSC question paper leaks seriously beyond just perfunctory arrests of a few culprits. Thirty incidents of question paper leaks and a decade later, our law enforcement agencies seem to be finally conducting a thorough investigation to find all those involved at various stages of the process. According to the Criminal Investigation Department (CID), the syndicate of Bangladesh Public Service Commission (PSC) officials and employees was involved in leaking questions of at least 30 recruitment tests. The investigators have also listed the names of at least 24 officials currently working in different government departments, including the cadre service, who were involved in the racket, based on confessions of those arrested. The CID has hinted of involvement of some "big fish."

We are glad that these names are finally coming out, but given the way the investigations into question paper leaks have played out over the last decade, we have every reason to worry that those in the highest echelons of power will eventually get away. The CID has made arrests on multiple occasions before; how is it that they failed to unearth the major ring that has apparently been in operation since 2002? How did transactions worth crores of taka in the banks of syndicate members go unnoticed for so long? A few of those arrested now have been found to be involved in similar leaks before; why were they allowed to get away with not even a slap on their wrists? It's worth asking if law enforcement members themselves were previously involved in coverups in light of the impunity enjoyed by the perpetrators so far. Law enforcement agencies must rise to the occasion to unmask the masterminds and their collaborators, no matter their identity.

It is also time we made public the names of those who got the jobs in much sought-after government positions by buying leaked question papers. How can we expect them to serve the country over their own greed if their entry into the profession is marked by such dishonesty? Corruption is now so ingrained into our system that perhaps we no longer even know or care to know the difference between right and wrong. But to stop this country from falling into a deeper abyss, we must do more than arrest a few individuals—we need to weed out the corrupt at every stage of government service.

Why are highly educated people choosing blue-collar jobs abroad?

BLOWIN' IN THE WIND

is professor of English at Dhaka University.

SHAMSAD MORTUZA

According to the records of a government-initiated overseas recruitment app, Ami Probashi, 50,000 registered applicants for blue-collar jobs such as labourers, drivers, and cleaners hold graduate and postgraduate degrees. More than three-fourths of the 2,477 PhD holders have also listed menial jobs as their options to leave the country. This trend is not just a statistical oddity, but a clear sign of deep-seated issues within our local job market and the broader socioeconomic context. The interest in low-skilled jobs in conventional migrant destinations (e.g., the Middle East, Malaysia, Europe, and North America) demands closer scrutiny.

It is common for expatriates to engage in odd jobs while they are studying or use them as a toehold for better alternatives. However, accepting (read: expecting) jobs that fall short of their academic qualifications and expertise, especially in such large quantities, is concerning. Think of the social cost. In an ideal situation, when highly educated individuals leave their home country to take up low-skilled jobs abroad, that country loses out on the potential contributions they could make to different professional fields.

These individuals, from an opportunity cost perspective, forgo the possibility of securing high-paying, high-status jobs that align with their qualifications. Instead, they are more focused on their immediate need for improved living conditions and economic stability by choosing menial jobs. The opportunity cost is not just personal; it is national. This brain drain stunts the country's growth and exacerbates the lack of qualified experts in critical industries. One might counter-argue that in a country with high unemployment, at least these individuals would become "remittance warriors" and foray into our national development.

FILE VISUAL: ZARIF FAIAZ

As the world gets flat, Thomas Friedman argues, the draw from a better economy is natural. According to him, globalisation has levelled the playing field and given everyone everywhere equal opportunities. Friedman has been proven wrong. The migration of highly educated individuals from poorer countries to take on low-skilled jobs in wealthier countries highlights the persistent inequalities and barriers that exist. It reveals that the world is far from flat. Just as the caste system once maintained social hierarchy, the rich world still relies on the poor to perform their "dirty" jobs. A software designer receives a higher royalty for their innovation compared to workers in a manufacturing plant.

Seeing our PhD holders choose menial jobs over research and innovation highlights a flaw in our educational policy. Why can't we engage our graduates with the highest achievements in a productive manner and employ them in the upper echelon? Does it mean our degrees don't matter, at least in many OECD countries?

The more scandals we stir up, the more questionable the reputation of our degrees will become. If a premier institution admits a high-profile candidate for a PhD because of his professional influence and grants him a degree based on a 90-page report, it's inevitable that questions will arise. And job placements for our local PhD holders as stereotypical taxi drivers will always remain a possibility.

I remember meeting one of my old university colleagues in London, a famed scientist who migrated to the UK in a highly skilled category, working as a nightclub bouncer. I never could understand his strange career choice. Maybe Maslow's Hierarchy of Needs can help us understand the necessities of such a drastic career shift. In their home country, these highly educated individuals may struggle to meet even their basic needs due to economic instability and a lack of job opportunities. By migrating and taking up blue-collar jobs, they aim to secure their fundamental needs, with the hope of eventually moving up the hierarchy to achieve higher-level aspirations.

However, this is not a sustainable solution. We need to address the root causes of this trend by improving job opportunities, strengthening social security nets, and ensuring the quality and relevance of higher education. And this is precisely why public university teachers are boycotting the Prottoy scheme under the universal pension system. You cannot expect a university teacher with the best possible academic credentials to start a career with a Tk 22,000 basic salary and then have Tk 5,000 taka from their salary deducted for a future pension scheme. Even a private-sector driver with a Class 8 certificate earns more than a university teacher today.

Social security has become non-existent. The lack of safety nets became obvious during the pandemic. Most of us struggle to live hand-to-mouth. We do not have any mechanism to cope with emergencies. In contrast, wealthier countries often provide robust social security systems, making them attractive destinations for migrants seeking a more secure and predictable life. The colleague I mentioned was pleased that his professional sacrifice could ensure better schooling and healthcare for his family members. At least he was making an honest living. He did not pay millions to question leakers or corrupt bosses in order to get a job. He did not become a civil servant thinking of his job as a milking machine that would churn his initial investments into "mast bhari cheese."

Other contributing factors that cause people to opt for lesser options abroad include frustrations over opportunities and appreciation, the desire to join family members abroad, or the desire to escape political and social instability at home. A country that treats a film extra or a below-par player with more importance than a scientist, innovator or researcher is likely to lose its talents for sure. Whatever the motivation, the broader implication is clear: our current system is failing to harness the potential of our educated workforce.

The trend of highly educated individuals opting for blue-collar jobs abroad is a wake-up call for policymakers and stakeholders in the country. It underscores the urgent need for comprehensive reforms in our education system, labour market policies, and social security frameworks. We must create an environment where our brightest minds can thrive and contribute to the nation's development, rather than seeking solace in menial jobs abroad.

Let's end the 'princessification' of girls and 'machofication' of boys is an international development worker.

LAILA KHONDKAR

A recent advertisement by an English medium school in Dhaka caught my attention: two boys are seen learning mathematics and robotics, while a girl is seen playing the violin. To me, it was a glaring example of gender stereotypes. After all, one might get the impression from the ad that music is for girls and mathematics and robotics are for boys only. Gender stereotypes are preconceived notions about the characteristics and roles of men and women in society. Those who subscribe to those notions believe, for instance, that men excel in engineering while teaching is better suited for women. However, the reality is that, given the right environment, both men and women can succeed in any profession.

A 2020 report on the impact of gender stereotypes during early childhood by the Fawcett Society of the UK, titled "Unlimited Potential," analyses how gender stereotypes limit children's lives, diminish girls' self-esteem, create reading skill gaps among boys, and influence their future career choices. The study observed children aged 0-7 years, a crucial period when they begin to understand their place in the world.

Due to gender stereotypes, girls as young as six years old avoid subjects that require them to be "really, really, smart." About 36 percent of girls aged 7-10 years believe that their appearance is their most important trait. This leads to body dissatisfaction and eating disorders. The pressure on boys to be breadwinners and handle any situation with stoicism contributes to higher suicide rates among men. The findings of this report are relevant to most countries, including Bangladesh.

Significant research highlights that challenging these stereotypes in early childhood can be a powerful tool in reducing violence against women and girls. Yet, we have seen a troubling rise in gender-coded products targeting boys and girls. Pink for girls and blue for boys may seem harmless, but the underlying messages are not innocent. Children's dreams are shaped by what they read, see and hear, as well as the toys they play with. Media, including newspapers, television, movies and advertisements, often portray women as weak and dependent, focused on grooming and household chores, and performing caregiving roles. Men are depicted as strong, responsible, and professionally successful. In traditional fairy tales, girl characters are weak, in most cases "rescued" by princes.

A stark division is evident in the toys available to children. Girls are seldom given opportunities to play with science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) toys. Boys' toys rarely focus on nurturing or caring attributes, which reinforces a lack of emotional expressiveness. These experiences have lasting impacts, which limit children's future career paths and personal development.

Parents and guardians often assign different tasks to boys and girls. The emphasis on raising girls as "princesses" and telling boys that "boys don't cry" is still prevalent in many families. Parents hold different expectations regarding what boys and girls can achieve. Research shows that parents' ideas about their children's abilities are formed as early as at the age of 11 months. Among other things, this affects children's play. For example, as girls get older, they participate less in sports; and as a result, their skills in it also decline.

Children are born with immense potential. Isn't it a tremendous waste of human capacity to confine them to limited roles? Parents and guardians must carefully choose books, toys, films, and other materials for children to avoid giving them anything that conveys the stereotypes.

Social norms about what girls and boys should or should not do influence parents and teachers, which in turn affects young people's decisions regarding studies and working lives. Traditional beliefs discourage girls from studying STEM subjects and pursuing related professions. Men face resistance if they want to choose professions that require caregiving. Men and women are not able to realise their potential when they feel obliged to conform with gender stereotypes, which is a loss for the entire society.

There should be government directives in Bangladesh to ensure that the media does not promote gender stereotypes, and there should be initiatives to enhance teachers' skills to make them aware of the stereotypes and help them address them through teaching methods. Manufacturers and advertisers must avoid stereotyped schemes in product design and packaging. The messages coded in advertising through gendered imagery and themes must be critically examined and restructured.

The change has already begun. Books and films featuring female characters as brave and in leading roles are being produced, and there is a trend of rewriting old fairy tales. These new narratives present women as ambitious, confident, and engaged in leadership, acting as friends and comrades to men. We need many more such stories that challenge gender stereotypes.

Children are born with immense potential. Isn't it a tremendous waste of human capacity to confine them to limited roles? Parents and guardians must carefully choose books, toys, films, and other materials for children to avoid giving them anything that conveys the stereotypes. If parents equally share household and external responsibilities, children will follow and in the process develop positive notions about the roles of men and women. Teachers should also encourage boys and girls to believe in their abilities. Our goal should be to provide the entire range of experiences and options to all children. We must end the "princessification" of girls and the "machofication" of boys.

Boys and girls should have opportunities to study any subject and choose any profession to realise their dreams. To create this environment, the government, parents, teachers, social workers, writers, artists, media workers, all have to step up and carry out their responsibilities. The foundation for a society based on equality has to be built during childhood.

The nine lives of a corrupt public servant

OF MAGIC & MADNESS

Badiuzzaman Bay
is assistant editor at The Daily Star. He can be reached at badiuzzaman.bd@gmail.com.

BADIUZZAMAN BAY

Cometh the hour, cometh Obaidul Quader. Part of the charm of the Awami League's long-running general secretary is that he always seems to deliver the most poetic lines about his opponents, even if they aren't entirely original. So recently, after a barrage of high-profile scandals rocked the administration, he set out to outline the government's strategy to curb corruption, using a reference that would seem strange to many: khela hobe. Yes, that all's-fair-in-love-and-war inspired mantra that guided Awami League's ruthless campaign against its rivals prior to the 2024 election.

"The game is on again [Abaro khela hobe]," Quader declared while addressing a party gathering. "It's on against corruption, plundering, and money laundering. Bangladesh must be rid of corruption." This is not the first time he used a sporting reference to attack corruption. The question is: how does the administration plan to play this game? Will it be like how it played last time, through force and coercion? Or does it have any special plan we are not privy to yet? Details are scarce at this point. So far, beyond rote reiterations of its "zero tolerance" commitment, occasional disciplinary spectacles that hardly qualify as punishment, and lengthy proceedings that may kick the judicial can down the road indefinitely, the administration has betrayed little awareness that it is no longer enough to go after a few rotten apples—it must go after the very system that enables corruption.

We can talk about how corruption has spread its tentacles in every sector, from banking to health to energy to transport to construction to civil aviation. We can talk about how nothing moves without bribery. But for a fuller grasp of how it all works and where it all originates from, we must examine civil service—the system governing public officials—which seems designed from start to finish to foster a partisan and corrupt bureaucracy. But since we are into references, let me use one that aptly portrays the seamless progression of public servants through this system: the cat with nine lives.

We can talk about how corruption has spread its tentacles in every sector, from banking to health to energy to transport to construction to civil aviation. We can talk about how nothing moves without bribery. But for a fuller grasp of how it all works and where it all originates from, we must examine civil service—the system governing public officials—which seems designed from start to finish to foster a partisan and corrupt bureaucracy.

The general idea behind this myth is to celebrate cats' natural suppleness and swiftness allowing them to get out of potentially fatal situations. Now, think of the nine lives granted to cats as the nine or so lifelines or stages through which state officials are supported, sometimes starting even before recruitment and continuing well into retirement. Think of how they are favoured or shielded at every turn. And ask yourself if so many of them turning out to be corrupt or compromised is a coincidence.

Let's delve into these hypothetical lifelines in a public servant's career:

Corruption at pre-recruitment stage

The whole process of corruption in the civil service starts with the cultivation of the idea that government jobs are superior to all others. Power, prestige, money, and job security—nothing beats this lucrative offering, with the private sector proving to be a poor substitute. Hence the mad race for all recruitment tests held under public authorities. Hence the demand for leaked question papers and all those supplying them, even from within the PSC. Hence the metamorphosis of public universities into BCS factories, and their libraries into BCS workshops. Hence the debate on extending the age limit for government jobs to 35 years.

I can go on and on, but you get the message: that the unhealthy competition in civil service recruitment and the lack of private sector alternatives have created an atmosphere that breeds and feeds off desperation. This is where future officials get their first lesson: that corruption can give you an edge over the teeming thousands. So you see some candidates spending lakhs for that golden goose of a job. You see others leaning on the preferential quota system, or leaked question papers, or their political connections. You see Chhatra League leaders locking up university VCs, or the government—forever wary of dissent—delving into irrelevant details like political affiliations during post-exam background checks, thus further undermining meritocracy. How likely are those coming from such a compromised background to respond to Obaidul Quader's plea to "play," and rein in corruption or refrain from corrupt practices themselves?

Post-recruitment privileges and exemptions

There are about 14 lakh government employees spread across the public sector. Once recruited, employees receive lucrative salaries, allowances, and benefits, with a side dish of opportunities for corruption. It's no wonder why certain departments and postings are so highly sought after, or why so many medical and engineering graduates are lining up for BCS general cadre, forgoing once-cherished careers in specialised fields. State officials are granted powers and privileges, sometimes even undeserved promotions, that come with little scrutiny or accountability. Further relaxations of rules governing their activities are on the cards.

For example, the public administration ministry is reportedly set to allow public servants to engage in stock market trading, reversing a prohibition in the Government Servants (Conduct) Rules, 1979. If it comes to pass, they will be able to buy or sell shares legally. Why is this problematic? Recall that Matiur Rahman, a top NBR official now under investigation for corruption, allegedly made a fortune through stock market investments, using insider information, both of which are illegal. Many government employees are similarly engaged in stock trading and have demonstrated their willingness to exploit privileged access for financial gain. So, legalising it may open a Pandora's box of unethical practices. Or, think of the proposal to relax another provision in the service rules requiring officials to submit wealth statements every five years, removing an important layer of scrutiny that already stands significantly diluted.

Relaxed penalties for corruption

Those who are honest have nothing to fear from punishment. But when penalties are reduced by relaxing anti-graft rules, it benefits only the corrupt, and this is what the administration has done on a number of occasions. For example, in 2018, an amendment to the Government Servants (Discipline and Appeal) Rules (1985) introduced "reprimand" as a penalty for proven corruption, besides other penalties. You often hear of salary reduction, or "closing," or demotion, or transfer—so often the penalties of choice—which does feel like a slap on the wrist given the gravity of some of the crimes, thus further encouraging corruption.

Over the years, we have seen how such anti-graft regulations have been relaxed. In any sector other than public, the punishment for proven corruption would be instant termination. A recent editorial by this daily recounts three incidents where the accused, despite being found guilty of corruption, continue to be in service as they have been spared harsher departmental actions and even legal consequences. What message does it send to the wider public servant community? This policy of leniency provides a safety net for dishonest officials and contrasts sharply with the government's zero tolerance stance on corruption.

Lack of accountability for failures and inefficiencies

Another lifeline extended to government officials is through a collusive arrangement in which departments, and relevant officials, responsible for certain failures are seldom held accountable. You often see people die or suffer terribly because of accidents, disasters, and crimes that can be linked to the mismanagement, negligence or inefficiencies of certain government departments. Yet rarely, if ever, is a higher-up punished or even subjected to a reprimand. There is a tendency to let them off the hook during interdepartmental inquiries.

The case of a former deputy commissioner of Cox's Bazar, who reportedly got his name removed from a list of accused for misappropriation of funds with the help of several court officials, including a former judge, shows to what extent power can be abused to both commit crimes and protect criminals—both being the same person in this case. But he wasn't acting alone, neither do corrupt or compromised or inefficient officials, as they protect each other. And more often than not, the system allows it. We may recall how the attorney general himself told the apex court a few years ago that the parliament had passed the Government Service Act, 2018 to protect public servants, considering them a "different class of people." The same act had mandated law enforcers to seek "permission" for arresting public servants in criminal cases before the court, in August 2022, scrapped the relevant provision. But this culture of impunity has reached such a state that top officials are often seen directly flouting court directives, with no consequences faced.

Endless opportunities for corruption

The extent to which government officers and even low-level operatives can exploit their positions to engage in corruption, taking advantage of the protection and lack of oversight provided by the system, has again come to light following a series of financial scandals reported by the media. Beside the power they hold, some even post-retirement, what these revelations show is how rampant corruption has been. With so many present and former officials facing court proceedings, there is still a palpable sense that we are only scratching the surface. The iceberg still lies beneath it. Such massive presence not only indicates the normalisation of corruption, but also serves as a boost to the corrupt-minded.

Undeserved rewards and honours

Another lifeline or boost granted to the corrupt is the possibility of getting state rewards and recognition, so long as they are connected to the powers that be. The case of former IGP Benazir Ahmed, who was given state honours despite his controversial record, exemplifies this trend. But we are only getting to know about it now, post-retirement, which raises the question: how many such cases have there been? What really influences the decision to recognise state officers? Their service record, or political connection? Or is it their strategic importance to the government? Whatever it is, honesty is certainly not among the criteria. The implication of handing what serves as a symbolic victory to a potentially corrupt person—and all the way in which they can further shield themselves or advance their careers using such honours—cannot be stressed enough. Over the years, we have also seen how once-revered state awards for writers have been made objects of ridicule because of overzealous bureaucrats lobbying for their own candidature, and they sometimes got their way.

Culture of no resignation

Scandal-hit top officials, politicians, MPs, vice-chancellors or anyone like them rarely, if ever, resign in Bangladesh, even amid public protests. A common refrain among those under pressure to step down from their positions is that they will only do so if directed by the prime minister, indicating a culture where political loyalty supersedes accountability. Their connection and conviction further undermine what few accountability mechanisms we have left, however fragile. But this culture of no resignation does give the corrupt a boost, heightening their sense of inviolability so long as they have the government's support. And they usually do—unless, suddenly and quite inexplicably for the public, they don't.

Retirement benefits

This is another stage where the corrupt win big. Even if it comes to all employees regardless of how ethical they have been during their tenure, it adds to the overall appeal of civil service for the corrupt-minded. Being able to reach the finish line unpunished, and bow out with a fat pension that the majority of the population cannot even think of, is indeed a motivation. A lot can be said about the ongoing debate on the new universal pension scheme—with different, discriminatory hierarchies for government officials and others in the public sector—but that's for another day.

Post-retirement support and opportunities

The last lifeline may come in several forms, including one recently shown by the Bangladesh Police Service Association (BPSA) that extended unquestioning support to Benazir Ahmed as it lambasted the media for its coverage and even seemingly made threatening overtures. The message that other professional bodies likely got from its public statement is that they have a duty to protect their members regardless of whether they are in service or not. General members of police forces, which usually are among the groups most talked about in any discussion on human rights, should be particularly happy for the active role being played by the BPSA to represent them in public forums, but corrupt police officers will take note, too.

But what adds more to the destabilising appeal of civil service in Bangladesh has to do with the enduring influence of partisan loyalty. Loyal retiring top officials may not only see their tenure extended, but also secure cushy positions in some statutory bodies. Some may even transition into active politics, perpetuating the cycle of patronage.

In the end, I must say my analysis is based on the worst-case scenarios and corrupt trends reported in the media, and is in no way a denigration of honest officials who I would like to believe are as many in number as their dishonest counterparts, if not more. But despite the latter's unchecked activities and collusion with unscrupulous entities across all sectors, the government has waxed lyrical at best, like Obaidul Quader did, or totally ignored it at worst. It only shows how entrenched corruption is. To the government, any loss of image or public resources owing to corruption seems to be an acceptable one so long as it has a pliant bureaucracy doing its bidding.

Since independence, at least 16 commissions and committees have recommended reforms to create an efficient, merit-based civil administration, but those have been largely ignored. It is not difficult to understand the reluctance of bureaucratic and political leaders. For civil servants, especially those in high-ranking positions, reforms that promote efficiency, meritocracy and accountability represent a threat to their influence, benefits and promotional prospects. Political leaders also do not want to embrace change as it is easier to maintain control over a weak bureaucracy. But without taking on the system, and the many layers through which it sustains itself, corruption can never be tackled.

Students and quota holders say REFORM IS NECESSARY

The quota system must be executed in a way that upholds fairness, inclusivity, and equity

A person who has been deprived of benefits can relate to the hardships faced by minorities. To discuss issues like land possession, evictions, and the dearth of quality teachers and educational institutions, we need representation.

AZRA HUMAYRA

The year 2018 saw a surge in student protests that resonated across the country. It began with the demand for quota reform, and, in the following months, the Road Safety Movement took place. The year was full of potential, as the wind of change appeared to sweep across the nation. Students, with their youthful zeal, flooded the streets, their voices echoing the plea for justice and reform. However, their hard work proved to be futile. Our roads, despite the safety movement, are still unsafe. And the quota system, which was abolished, not reformed, was re-established earlier this year.

On October 3, 2018, the Bangladeshi government abolished the quota system for government job recruitment in grades nine through thirteen. On January 20, 2020, the Ministry of Public Administration authorised a proposal to eliminate quotas on direct appointments to eighth grade or above positions in government employment. The Bangladesh Public Service Commission (BPSC) agreed to follow these changes in their recruitment procedures.

However, on June 5, 2024, the High Court ruled that the cancellation of the quota system, including the 30 percent quota for freedom fighters in government jobs, was illegal. This ruling was upheld by the Supreme Court's Appellate Division on July 4, 2024, reinstating the quota system for these posts.

Since the beginning of July, students at several public universities, such as Dhaka University (DU), Jahangirnagar University (JU), and Jagannath University (JnU), have staged large-scale protests calling for the overturning of the High Court's ruling to reinstate the 30 percent quota for the descendants of freedom fighters in government employment. Their protests have been anything but discreet; they have orchestrated roadblocks, held impassioned rallies, and leveraged the power of social media to broadcast their grievances to a wider audience.

The question that arises in this storm of discontent is what the students who had quota privileges think about the system. Are they silently wrestling with a sense of loss, or do they perceive the movement as a necessary stride towards a more egalitarian society?

Around 56 per cent of government employment is earmarked for candidates from various quotas. 30 percent went to the children and grandchildren of Freedom Fighters, 10 percent to women, 10 percent to district-based allotments, five percent to members of indigenous communities, and one percent to people with physical disabilities.

Waseka Rahman*, a fourth-year DU student, says, "There is no logic behind the current system. If 56 percent of seats are allocated by quotas, aren't we doing a disservice to the majority of those who do not have them? Intellect should be a top priority. Why should the grandchildren of liberation fighters enjoy quota privileges? There should be no discrimination in government job applications. The quota ratio should be justifiable."

After seeing how the freedom fighter quota affects other students, students who leveraged it during the admissions period are now speaking out against it. "I used the freedom fighter quota, but I didn't know any better at the time. I decided to seize the chance while I could. I still did not get to study the subject I wanted. If I had the chance today, I would not deprive someone of a well-deserved opportunity," Waseka adds.

Upon talking to Abrar Ahmed*, another student who utilised the freedom fighter quota and who has now graduated from the Department of Economics at DU, he states, "It is extremely important to change the quota system now because the predetermined percentage is not even filled." This demonstrates how demoralising the current quota system is for the students who cannot utilise it.

Talking to another student who chose not to use the indigenous quota during the admissions season gives a different perspective on this debate. Hritu Roy, a fourth-year student majoring in International Relations at DU, says, "Being in Dhaka since childhood, I am privileged compared to most people in my (Chakma) community. Even though there is a quota facility during university admission, I did not use it, and I think people like me who had a privileged upbringing should not use quota."

While the movement may be perceived as students advocating for the entire abolishment of the quota system, that is not the case. At its core, the protests are aimed at reforming the current system while keeping fair allocations.

Khingmokay Marma, majoring in Mass Communication and Journalism at DU, speaks about the need for indigenous quotas. She says, "We need indigenous quotas because we are lagging behind. If someone from an indigenous community gets a government job in a higher position with the help of quota, the person may represent their community, encouraging others to come forward for higher education. This also helps guide the future generation. Since the abolishment of the quota system in 2018, there has been no indigenous BCS cadre except a few, due to which many are losing interest in higher education. I have heard such things myself: What will happen after studying so far? There is no possibility of becoming a BCS cadre; it is better to get a job after HSC."

Khingmokay emphasises how the empowerment of one indigenous individual could cause a ripple effect; she says, "When someone is in a good position, they are better able to comprehend community issues and communicate them to decision-makers. A person who has been deprived of benefits can relate to the hardships faced by minorities. To discuss issues like land possession, evictions, and the dearth of quality teachers and educational institutions, we need representation. So, I believe a five percent quota for indigenous people is fair."

Hritu Roy shares the same sentiment; she states, "In higher education, it is important to have minimum quota facilities only for minorities and check whether the right people are availing of them. In the Chittagong Hill Tracts and in most government jobs, there is a huge disparity in the recruitment of indigenous people. Hence, it is necessary to ensure transparency in recruitment based on merit, along with the elimination of the quota system. Otherwise, citizens will be deprived of their fair rights."

Conversations with the interviewees reveal a unanimous call for reformation. Among the protestors is Waseka Rahman, who emphatically supports the movement, stating, "Quotas for indigenous populations, the physically impaired, and women should be maintained."

The students' demands centre around ensuring that the quota system is restructured to benefit those who genuinely need support, such as marginalised communities. They argue against a system that perpetuates injustice and discrimination, advocating for a fairer approach that aligns with the principles of equity and social justice. The underlying sentiment is clear: while reform is necessary, it must be executed in a way that upholds fairness and inclusivity.

In this crucible of student activism, we are reminded of the essence of democracy: an ever-changing debate that must be responsive to its people's needs and ambitions. The students' demands for reform are more than just calls for policy changes; they are also fundamental statements of democratic values, challenging us to envisage a system in which inclusion, equity, and merit may coexist peacefully.

On female friendships and the value of community

SILWAT QUADER

Individualism is a term often ascribed to Western culture. In such societies, individuals prioritise self-identity – ensuring that their personal needs are met before those of the group. The Western world has adapted well to these principles and has continued to instil such values for generations.

This is in direct contrast to the values that we inherit where individuals are expected to prioritise the welfare of the community. Such an altruistic approach to life fosters a sense of collective empathy and deep companionship, which has traditionally been a key aspect of our culture. One of the most prominent ways this feature has been realised is through friendship between women, evident in folktales, music, and art. Evolving from early relationships with cousins, neighbours, and friends which later solidify into stronger bonds of sisterhood, women play essential roles in each other's lives.

All throughout history, women have relied on each other – going as far to trust each other with their children. While it would be wrong to claim that mutual support to such an extent was entirely absent in Western cultures, it was nonetheless, not as common.

In recent times though, there has been a noticeable shift among women as they have started to move away from focusing solely on individualistic practices. Rather, there is a growing inclination towards collectivism, particularly evident in how women are establishing and fostering stronger connections within their female social circles. In adopting collectivism, some have sought to address the negative impacts of extreme individualism, such as the absence of emotional support during difficult times, which has resulted in recognising the values of collectivism.

Women are cultivating deeper and more meaningful relationships to find emotional nourishment and a sense of acceptance. Feminist movements and mental health campaigns are also emphasising the significance of collective empowerment as well as unity and strong emotional support systems in overcoming challenges. While the negative impacts of hyper-independence have become more prevalent, women hailing from communities whose practices revolve around collectivism, are adopting some values of individualism. After all, self-sufficiency and independence are indeed admirable, and vital survival skills for all. Every woman should possess independence and self-sufficiency to lead life on her terms.

However, being independent does differ from being an individualist. But why do we appear to prefer individualism? Why do we insist on blending our altruism with individualistic ideas to the point that key features of the former get dimmer down the line?

Instead of opting for one over the other, we can blend both these approaches. Exploring both collectivism and individualism, and not overindulging in either one, provides a healthy balance especially when this exchange of cultural practices is voluntary and not imposed. When it is imposed on us, we get pulled into this whirlwind of individualistic principles, unconsciously forcing us to isolate ourselves from our community. Therefore, cherishing the practices that are more closely intertwined with our roots while embracing the empowering aspects of individualism, helps maintain network of support system that are vital to our well-being.

England great Anderson's one final flourish

- Anderson finished his Test career with 704 wickets in 188 matches at an average of 25.45. He completed 32 five-wicket hauls and picked up 10 wickets in a match on three occasions.
- The 41-year-old is the third-highest all-time wicket-taker in Tests after Muttiah Muralitharan (800) and Shane Warne (708).
- In terms of Tests played, Anderson is only second to Sachin Tendulkar, who played 200.
- Anderson has taken 123 wickets at Lord's. Only Muralitharan, with 166 at the Singhalese Sports Club Cricket Ground in Colombo, registered more at a particular venue in Tests.
- Anderson holds the record for most caught behind by a wicketkeeper (198) and outfield catches (468) off a bowler in Test cricket.

AGENCIES

James Anderson signed off from international cricket with his 704th and final wicket on Friday, ending a glittering 21-year career during England's emphatic win over West Indies and prompting tributes from teammates and fellow greats.

The seamer, aged 41 years and 348 days, had Joshua Da Silva caught behind on his final day of Test cricket as England won the game by an innings and 114 runs inside three days. He spurned a golden opportunity to make it 705 wickets, shelling a simple catch from Gudakesh Motie, and smiled ruefully at the miss.

It was the only negative for Anderson on a day in which he demonstrated his skill one final time for an appreciative Lord's crowd, repeatedly beating the outside edge with seam and swing.

Anderson, who finished with match figures of 4-58, said he would miss competing at the highest level, adding that there was "no better feeling" than winning a Test match.

Asked what he was going to do next, Anderson -- who is joining the England coaching set-up -- added: "I've not really thought that far ahead.

"I'm going to stick around with these guys for the rest of the summer, try and help the bowling group out as much as I can and we'll see where life takes us after that."

England captain Ben Stokes described Anderson as "an incredible inspiration for so many people" while West Indies skipper Kraigg Brathwaite said he was a "legend of the game", but understandably would not miss facing him.

India great Sachin Tendulkar said on X: "It has been a joy to watch you bowl -- with that action, speed, accuracy, swing and fitness. You've inspired generations with your game."

Anderson has certainly earned a rest, having sent down his 40,000th delivery in Test cricket late on day two, more than any other seam bowler and putting him fourth on the all-time list.

Anderson bowed out with a remarkable 704 wickets from 188 Tests. Only spinners Shane Warne (708 Test wickets) and Muttiah Muralitharan (800) have enjoyed more bowling success at this level, with India batting hero Sachin Tendulkar (200 matches) the lone cricketer to have played more Tests than Anderson.

"It's been quite an amazing week," Anderson said. "I've been overwhelmed with the reaction of the crowd and everyone around the ground, and the lads as well. I'm just proud of what I've achieved.

"Obviously this morning was quite emotional with the two teams lined up, and the reaction from the crowd was pretty special. I'm still trying to hold them (tears) back now but I think I am just really proud," added Anderson after ending his Test career where it started -- with a debut against Zimbabwe at Lord's in 2003.

Olmo focused on winning trophy, not Golden Boot

AFP, Donaueschingen

Spain playmaker Dani Olmo is vying for the Euro 2024 golden boot with England's Harry Kane, but said Friday he doesn't care about winning it as long as his team lifts the trophy.

Olmo and Kane are tied on three goals with four other players and if either score in the final on Sunday in Berlin they will likely claim the prize.

However, with Spain angling for a record fourth European Championship, Olmo said the team's target was far more important than his own individual glory.

"It's an extra motivation, if there's even room for that, but look, as long as we win, I don't care if I score or if (Spain goalkeeper) Unai Simon does," Olmo told reporters. "I don't care at all, the important thing is winning the game, but I always have the objective of helping to chip in."

Olmo has also created two goals for his teammates but unlike in the past when that was used as a tie-breaker, the award will be shared by any players joint-top of the charts.

The RB Leipzig midfielder did not start the tournament as part of Spain coach Luis de la Fuente's first choice side but made a strong impact off the bench.

Olmo replaced the injured Pedri in the quarterfinal win over hosts Germany, scoring and setting up the winner for Mikel Merino.

The midfielder also struck against France in the semifinal and has scored in all three knock-out rounds Spain have played.

"In this tournament I feel very good, in a great moment of form, so I have to keep taking advantage of it," continued the 26-year-old.

"It's true (Kane and I) are tied, but there are other players too who have helped us get here, with goals and good play.

"Speaking of goals, Fabian (Ruiz) has two goals, Alvaro (Morata) has one -- if he scores a hat-trick then he will win it, and we'd be just as happy -- it doesn't matter who scores, the main thing is the team." Olmo scored a hattrick for Leipzig as they beat Bayern Munich 3-0 in the German Supercup final on Kane's debut for the Bavarian giants last August.

The England captain has still not won a trophy in his career at club or international level, finishing a runner-up with England in the Euro 2020 final.

Kane, 30, has struggled for form and peak fitness at the Euros despite managing three goals.

"Of course it would be a dream to score a hat-trick (again) and win it," added Olmo.

"But I repeat, the goal is just to win it."

Intensity of training broke me down to tears: Samiul

Samiul Islam Rafi is the ninth male swimmer from Bangladesh to receive a wild card entry to the Olympic Games and is among the five athletes who will represent the country in the forthcoming Paris Games, starting on July 26. The Bangladesh Navy athlete, who holds three national records in backstroke events, has been training in Thailand under a World Aquatics Federation scholarship ahead of the Games. The 19-year-old recently spoke to The Daily Star's Anisur Rahman about his preparation, expectations and many other related matters. Here are the excerpts:

The Daily Star (DS): How is your training going on for the Paris Olympics?

Samiul Islam Rafi (SI): I joined the training camp in Thailand in last December. It started in September but I could not join at that time due to last's year Asian Games. I have been training with some 32 swimmers from as many countries and nine of them including me have got the opportunity to take part in the Paris Olympics through a wild card. Right now, I am in recovery ahead of the Games.

DS: How did you feel when you learnt you will compete in the Olympics?

SI: Actually, I was uncertain about getting a wild card. I was working hard to improve my performance in Thailand. When I became the best swimmer at the National Swimming Championship last year, I grew in confidence because if I could earn more FINA points (points assigned to swimmers by World Aquatics), I might get the wild card. You could say that luck was on my side as I earned 686 FINA points after doing better in the 100m freestyle event in Thailand and that helped me get the wild card entry.

DS: Bangladesh swimmers have always just made up the numbers in the Olympics. Will the Paris Olympics be the same?

SI: The swimmers from China, the USA, Australia and other countries who win Olympic medals start swimming at the age of six. Swimmers, aged 20 or above in Bangladesh, can't match the timings of 12-year-old swimmers from those countries. I have been given an opportunity to compete in the Olympics and I want to use this platform to improve myself and deliver something good in the South Asian Games.

DS: Backstroke events are your favourite but you will have to compete in the 100m freestyle event in Paris...

SI: I have become what I am now through backstroke events. But I also compete in the 100m freestyle event. From last February, I have been training under a Russian coach in Thailand and have improved my timing by three seconds. I produced my best timing of 53.12 seconds in the Thailand open in April last.

DS: What are you hoping to achieve in the Olympics?

SI: I know it is quite tough for me to quality for the semifinals. Usually you need a timing of 47 seconds or better to progress but right now I am far off. I think one day I an achieve a timing of 49 seconds if I continue receiving high quality training. I am hoping to bring my timing down to 52 seconds in Paris. I have been working really hard in Thailand, sometimes I have even broken down in tears from the intensity of training. If I can clock less than 52 seconds, all the pain will be worth it.

DS: What is the difference between training in Thailand and Bangladesh?

SI: There is a gulf of difference. The training environment, facilities, schedule and diet are different. For instance, in Bangladesh our training schedule is – training, breakfast, rest period, then more training, lunch and then rest in the afternoon. But in Thailand, it's breakfast first, then stretching, warm-up in pool, training, gym, lunch, sleep, stretching and training. In Bangladesh, we swim nearly 10km per day but over there I swam nearly 20km every day.

Paolini's first or Krejcikova's second?

AFP, London

Italy's Jasmine Paolini has set her sights on capping a "crazy" run to Saturday's Wimbledon final against Barbora Krejcikova by winning a maiden Grand Slam title. Meanwhile, Krejcikova will be hoping to win a second Grand Slam final of her career after winning the French Open in 2021.

Paolini survived the longest women's singles semifinal in Wimbledon history to beat Donna Vekic 2-6, 6-4, 7-6 (10/8) after two hours and 51 minutes of Centre Court drama on Thursday.

The 28-year-old is the first Italian woman to reach the final of the grass-court Grand Slam.

She will face Czech 31st seed Krejcikova, who enjoyed a shock 3-6, 6-3, 6-4 win over 2022 champion Elena Rybakina in the other semifinal.

It is an astonishing achievement for Paolini, who had not won a Tour-level match on grass until 15 days ago in Eastbourne, and lost in the first round on her previous three visits to Wimbledon.

But 2024 has been a breakthrough campaign for Paolini, who reached her maiden Grand Slam final at the French Open before losing to world number one Iga Swiatek.

"Two Grand Slam finals in a row was crazy to believe, no?" said Paolini.

Paolini is also the first woman to reach back-to-back Roland Garros and Wimbledon finals since Serena Williams in 2016.

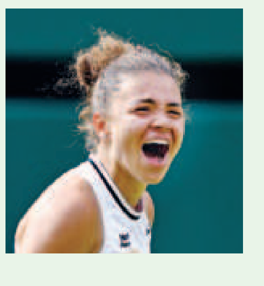
The final is just the second time Krejcikova and Paolini have met and their showdown will be a world away from their first encounter.

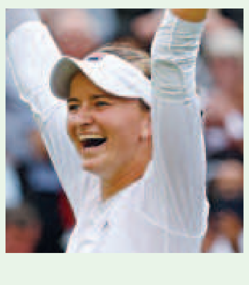
The pair squared off in the first round of qualifying for the Australian Open in 2018, with Krejcikova claiming a straight sets victory.

"It was a very long time ago, it's been a great journey for both of us to reach the Wimbledon final," said Krejcikova, who will be playing her second Grand Slam final.

Krejcikova had struggled with a back injury and illness this year, winning just three singles matches in the five months before finding her form in remarkable style at Wimbledon.

The 28-year-old shocked 11th seed Danielle Collins in the fourth round, former French Open champion Jelena Ostapenko in the quarterfinals and Rybakina in the last four.





- Jasmine Paolini is a win away from delivering Italy its first Wimbledon champion.
- Paolini is the first Italian woman in the Open Era to reach the final at two different Grand Slam events, having finished as runner-up to Iga Swiatek on the red clay at Roland Garros last month.
- Either Paolini or Krejcikova will become the sixth woman in the Open Era to win Wimbledon after turning 28, joining Ann Jones (1969), Virginia Wade (1977), Jana Novotna (1998), Marion Bartoli (2013) and Angelique Kerber 2018.
- Barbora Krejcikova will be eying to become the sixth Czech woman to win Wimbledon.
- Krejcikova will be playing in the second Grand Slam final of her career after winning the French Open in 2021.

Three killed as auto-rickshaw, truck collide

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

Three people, including two of a family, were killed as a truck and a CNG-run auto-rickshaw collided head-on in Chattogram's Patiya upazila early yesterday.

The victims were Rumi Akter, 30, her five-year-old nephew Fahim, of the upazila, and auto-rickshaw driver Anwar Hossain, 51, of Boalkhali upazila, said Jasim Uddin, officer-in-charge of Patiya Police Station.

The incident took place around 12:10am in Pachuria Military Pool area when the Patiya-bound auto-rickshaw collided head-on with the truck heading for Boalkhali, he said.

Driver and two passengers of the auto-rickshaw were critically injured, said the OC, adding that they were declared dead after being taken to Chittagong Medical College Hospital.

On information, police rushed to the spot and recovered the auto-rickshaw, but the trucker managed to flee with the truck, said the OC, adding, "We are conducting drives to nab the trucker."

Filing of a case was underway, said the police official.

Biden faces more calls to quit race

Donors to hold roughly $90m in pledges if he remains on ticket

REUTERS, Washington

President Joe Biden faced more calls from fellow Democrats to abandon his re-election bid yesterday, following a news conference in which he delivered nuanced responses but occasionally stumbled over his words.

It was unclear whether Biden's performance would convince doubters in his party that he is their best bet to defeat Republican Donald Trump in the November 5 election and serve another four-year term in the White House.

At least 17 congressional Democrats so far have called for him to drop out and allow the party to pick another standard-bearer, including some who announced their positions after the Nato news conference on Thursday night.

The New York Times reported that unnamed donors have told a pro-Biden Super PAC that roughly $90 million in pledges will remain on hold as long as he remains in the race.

But Biden made clear that he did not plan to step aside. "If I show up at the convention and everybody says they

Ambanis hire over 100 pvt planes for wedding

REUTERS, Mumbai

The wedding of the billionaire Mukesh Ambani's youngest son Anant Ambani, 29, and his long-time girlfriend Radhika Merchant, 29, is expected to require the use of more than 100 private planes, including three Falcon-2000 jets, to transport wedding guests, among whom are celebrities in the worlds of entertainment, politics, and business.

Rajan Mehra, chief executive of Club One Air, said the Ambanis have hired three of his company's Falcon-2000 jets to ferry wedding guests and expects 100 plus private planes to be used for the events.

"The guests are coming from all over and each aircraft will make multiple trips across the country," he said.

The wedding is the culmination of lavish celebrations throughout the year and according to police, has been deemed a "public event" due to the presence of international and Indian household names.

The couple tied the knot yesterday.

Rohingya repatriation looking like pipe dream

Experts say fighting in Myanmar complicating efforts for their return

PORIMOL PALMA

The issue of Rohingya repatriation is getting more complicated for Bangladesh with the rebel armed group Arakan Army (AA) controlling most of the bordering Rakhine state.

Intensified fighting between the Myanmar junta and AA has also created a serious security threat along the 271-km Bangladesh-Myanmar border, said international relations analysts.

This also puts Bangladesh in an awkward position in terms of diplomatic relations with Myanmar if the AA takes full control of Rakhine.

"Myanmar has virtually no central control over the border with Bangladesh as the Arakan Army controls the majority of it. Thus, our physical border security is already shaky," said M Sakhawat Hussain, a senior fellow at the South Asian Institute of Policy and Governance at North South University.

As of now, Bangladesh maintains a diplomatic relationship with Myanmar's military, which took control of the country through a coup in February 2021.

"The question arising now is with whom should Bangladesh communicate when it comes to border security? Is it the Myanmar military or Arakan Army?" said Sakhawat, a retired brigadier general.

Analysts say Bangladesh's relations with Myanmar have remained fraught because of repeated influx of the Rohingya since the 1980s. It deteriorated following the influx of about 7.5 lakh Rohingya in 2017.

> M SAKHAWAT HUSSAIN
> A senior fellow at NSU's South Asian Institute of Policy and Governance

Meanwhile, after the military coup in 2021, the Peoples Defence Force, the armed wing of the National Unity Government (NUG) and other ethnic rebel groups across Myanmar, have taken control of the majority of the country.

Since November last year, the AA captured 10 key towns -- nine in Rakhine and one in adjacent Chin state -- according to a report of the International Crisis Group.

On May 18, AA captured Buthidaung town and seized much of Maungdaw in the Rohingya-majority region. In so doing, the AA now has control over most of the Myanmar-Bangladesh border.

Tens of thousands of people, mostly Rohingya in Buthidaung and Maungdaw townships, were displaced following the looting and burning of Rohingya homes in Buthidaung and surrounding villages.

According to the UN, about 4,000 Rohingya took shelter near the Naf river close to the Bangladesh border about a month ago. It also called on Bangladesh and other states to provide shelter to those seeking it.

The fighting also forced nearly 800 members of Myanmar's Border Guard Police, military and their family members to take shelter in Bangladesh in recent months. They were later repatriated.

In early June, bullets were fired from Myanmar at boats on the Naf river, which caused some 10,000 Bangladeshis to be stranded on the St Martin's Island.

Israeli forces pull back from parts of Gaza City

Leave behind dozens of bodies, wrecked homes

AGENCIES

Israeli forces pulled back from parts of Gaza City overnight, after a fierce, week-long offensive that met with Hamas resistance, leaving dozens of dead and wrecked homes and roads in the Palestinian enclave's biggest urban area, rescuers said yesterday.

The offensive, 10 months into Israel's campaign to eliminate Hamas, took place as US-backed mediators sought to finalise a peace deal that would free remaining hostages.

The Gaza Civil Emergency Service said teams had collected around 60 bodies of Palestinians killed by Israeli forces over the past week from the area of Tel Al-Hawa and the edges of the Sabra neighbourhood in Gaza City.

Both residents and rescue teams cautioned that while tanks withdrew from some areas, Israeli snipers and tanks continued to control high ground at some locations, and warned residents against trying to return to their homes in those areas.

"There are bodies scattered in the streets, dismembered bodies, there are bodies of entire families, there are also bodies inside a home of an entire family that was completely burned," Gaza Strip Civil Defense spokesperson Mahmoud Basal said in comments carried by media in Hamas-run Gaza.

NEPAL LANDSLIDE

63 missing as 2 buses swept away

AFP, Kathmandu

At least 63 people were missing in Nepal after a landslide triggered by heavy monsoon rains swept two buses off a highway and into a swollen river, authorities said yesterday.

Dozens of search and rescue personnel were combing the site for survivors of the accident in the central district of Chitwan, district official Khimananda Bhusal told AFP.

Bhusal said that the buses were carrying at least 66 people between them but three passengers had been able to escape before they crashed into the Trishuli river and were now being treated in hospital.

"We are not sure of the total number because the buses could have picked up others on the road," he said. "The river has swollen and no one else has been found yet."

The accident took place along the Narayanghat-Mugling highway, around 100 kilometres (60 miles) west of the capital Kathmandu early yesterday at 3:30 am local time.

One bus was heading from the capital Kathmandu to Gaur in Rautahat district in southern Nepal and the other was en route to Kathmandu from southern Birgunj.

A driver was killed in a separate accident on the same road after a boulder hit his bus. He died as he was being treated at a hospital.

Prime Minister Pushpa Kamal Dahal expressed sadness over the accident in a post on social media platform X.

A large tree fell on the Satmasjid Road in the capital's Dhanmondi yesterday after a spell of torrential rain in the morning, disrupting traffic. The photo was taken at 3:00pm.

Nepal PM Dahal loses confidence vote

REUTERS, Kathmandu

Nepal is set for a new coalition government led by politician K P Sharma Oli after the more radical Prime Minister Pushpa Kamal Dahal lost a parliamentary vote of confidence yesterday, ending a tumultuous 20-month tenure.

Nepal has been politically unstable since it abolished a 239-year-old monarchy in 2008. Oli's new government will be the 14th since then.

Its politics are closely monitored by its two big neighbours China and India, who have invested heavily in the Himalayan country as they jostle for influence.

Dhanmondi these days is a cacophony of people, traffic, events, vendors, schools, hospitals, restaurants, and construction sites. It has transitioned more into a commercial centre than a residential area.

EVOLVING IDENTITY

The changing face of Dhanmondi

Older residents can recall the single-unit houses (some of which remain) and the wide roads that marked the area. In those glory days, this place had a certain quietness, something that is still widely missed.

> We used to sit on the banks of the lake, while my grandfather -- a seasoned angler -- would use pieces of worms as bait for the fish. We would rejoice at the sight of him making a catch! Weekends were spent with family by the lake.

The place has a chequered history. Compared to other areas of the city, Dhanmondi still retains its residential character to some extent, despite being home to commercial enterprises, educational institutes, restaurants, hospitals, diagnostic centres, and rising apartments.

Many older residents of the locality feel that the flavour of the neighbourhood is lost; the newer residents are divided -- some still consider Dhanmondi an attractive place to live, while others find it just like any other place in Dhaka, a space devoid of characteristics that make a residential area feel like home.

The beginning...

In his book, Dacca: History and Romance in Place Names, Azimusshan Haider mentions the origins of the name -- Dhanmondi.

He states, "It derives its name presumably not from the fact that paddy once used to grow at what now is a posh residential area, but more likely because there used to be a Haat (impromptu market) of paddy (and other cereals) brought from rural areas."

People are well aware of this connection that led to the naming of the place, however, it is a lesser-known fact that the place was a part of Dhaka even in the Mughal era. Dhanmondi Eidgah on road 6/A is a reminder of that glorious past.

Established in 1640 CE by Mir Abul Qasim, during the reign of Subahdar Shah Shuja, son of Mughal Emperor Shah Jahan, it is one of the oldest Mughal establishments in the city.

After the Partition of 1947, Dhaka once again became a capital and there was a need for a new, upscale neighbourhood. The government of hitherto East Pakistan took the initiative to acquire 400 acres of agricultural land, levelled them and allotted plots to notable citizens including ministers, government officials, public leaders, professionals, and businessmen.

The price at that time was a mindboggling Tk 5,000 per bigha!

Dhaka's upscale locality

"I grew up in Dhanmondi in the early 1980s and used to live in a cherished two-storied house of my maternal grandfather, built in the late 60s. Although I was young, I can still recollect the cosy porch and the front yard where he lovingly cultured roses and grew dahlias. Those were truly wonderful days. However, the house has since been torn down to make room for an apartment complex that now accommodates future generations," said Atif Adnan, a businessman in his mid-40s.

Older residents can recall the single-unit houses (some of which remain) and the wide roads that marked the area. In those glory days, this place had a certain quietness, something that is still widely missed.

What made the locality even more appealing was the presence of the lake -- remnants of what was once a flowing waterway. In the distant past, it was an abandoned channel of the Karwan Bazar Nadi that flowed to the Turag river.

The lake was a tranquil, secure, and pristine spot. The rivers have changed their course, but the waterbody remains an oasis amid the urban landscape, a silent reminder of a memorable past. It still serves as a recreational hub and a picturesque setting for morning walks and leisurely boat rides.

As Adnan fondly recalls, "We used to sit on the banks of the lake, while my grandfather -- a seasoned angler -- would use pieces of worms as bait for the fish. We would rejoice at the sight of him making a catch! Weekends were spent with family by the lake. There used to be boats which would take us on leisurely tours around the lake while my grandfather focused on his fishing."

The changing scenes

Tahmina Hossain, 63, is a homemaker and has been living in the area since the early 1990s. She is a first-hand witness to the apartment culture that many claim ruined the "residential nature" of the place.

Gone are the quaint houses with trees in the yard. Children no longer ride their bicycles or play cricket or badminton on the streets during the weekend.

"We moved to a flat from our home in Shantinagar, hoping for better living conditions, and in the last 30 years or so, have witnessed numerous changes in the area -- both good and bad!" she said.

"There has been an alarming increase in traffic congestion. On weekdays, the whole area comes to a standstill once the school hours end. Street looks like a parking lot on weekdays!"

Residents like Tahmina Hossain feel that the inner roads are congested with parked cars due to the lack of designated parking spaces for schools, banks, and offices.

"After the pandemic, renovation of the roads has made noticeable improvements. The revival of the lake has added to that. But it also brings in a lot of visitors to the place, which creates heavy commotion during holidays," said Hossain.

"The place has transitioned more into a commercial centre than a residential area. Almost every local and international brand now has showrooms here, catering to the convenience of the residents. And what should I say of the mushrooming growth of eateries? Sometimes, it feels like utter chaos!" she added.

Sharifuddin, who recently moved here, said, "Despite all the negativities, Dhanmondi remains one of the most secure areas in the city. Yes, it is chaotic, but the easy access to schools and nearby offices still makes it a good place to live, only if one could reduce the high cost of living that comes with staying here."

What the future holds

Tahmina Hossain believes that the rampant commercialisation of the place is hampering the residential nature of Dhanmondi. She points out some of the aspects that were once the highlight of this locality.

In recent times, the diminishing greenery is one of the most talked about aspects of life here. The felling of the trees in Saat Masjid Road has been a stark reminder for everyone in Dhaka, that we are losing an essential aspect of life in this city.

Tahmina Hossain also says, "Despite Dhanmondi's reputation for cricket, football clubs and their sporting activities, there is a notable absence of designated playgrounds for children to play in."

Those who were fortunate, even as non-residents, have memories of the quietness of the place and the wide roads that would serve the people living there. The single plots have now turned into multi-storied apartments and the paved streets are no longer wide enough to support the influx of current inhabitants of the locality.

What was a boon in the past has now turned into a curse for the area. Easy access to good schools, hospitals, and diagnostic centres are now the very establishments crippling the residential nature of the area.

As Dhanmondi continues to evolve, the echoes of its storied past mingle with the realities of its present. Posts on social media by former residents and random citizens of Dhaka illustrate the bygone days. The pictures give a vibe of the warmth and camaraderie of life in the area. How will one see Dhanmondi in the near future? Chances are just like many other areas of the older part of the town, Dhanmondi will soon lose its place as one of the most liveable areas in Dhaka. And that should be our alarm to wake up!

What makes Dhanmondi even more appealing is the presence of the lake -- remnants of what was once a flowing waterway. The lake is a tranquil, secure, and pristine spot. The waterbody remains an oasis amid the urban landscape, a silent reminder of a memorable past.

PeaceCity alley

We couldn't take home any of the money we saved, though. In shipment cartons, with the clothes came very unwelcome "guests" and infested the homes of the residents of Shantinagar Goli. We spent hundreds weekly on insect repellent. As no spray could fully eliminate the unceasing, cyclic shipments of cockroach, we shared our homes with the survivors amongst them.

AMRIN TASNIM RAFA

The Notorious Loverboy, Slum Boy and Millionaire's Daughter, My Bride or My Mother, My Mother's Body in a Wedding Saree, The World is but a Slave to Money: ranging from melodramatic, to very questionable, to staunch philosophical critiques of capitalism, we could never guess what new film title and its vibrant, maximalist collage-style poster would greet us as our silver Toyota Corolla would swerve into a narrow alleyway and stop in front of a wholesale clothing market. We were home from school.

The entryway to Shantinagar Goli, on which my childhood home stood, was sandwiched between two of these wholesale clothing markets. On top of Gazi Bhaban market stood a 15-floor apartment building, and on Pallwel Supermarket stood Jonaki Cinema Hall, boasting the aforementioned posters on its facade. We rented a 2450 sq feet flat on the 14th floor for 20,000 taka per month from the Gazis. The Gazis were an influential old Dhaka family. According to urban legend, their forefathers had fought off tigers with their bare hands from the land where Gazi Bhaban stood.

I spent my days after school longing for the weekend, when a parent could accompany me outside. No little girl was allowed to go out into these streets unaccompanied. Past midnight on Fridays, we heard sports cars speed out of Shantinagar Goli, the children of the Gazis going out for the night. My parents pursed their lips. Preparations for the Friday prayer started early: road swept clean, open drains closed with lids (which would be stolen by the end of the day), cinema hall posters covered with black fabric, and a long roll of white fabric covering the length of the road; the goli was transformed into a communal prayer space. The mosque was on the main road, and by the time one o'clock struck, all the alleyways in the neighbourhood were filled with panjabi and tupi-clad men arranged in uniform rows, ready for the weekly Jummah Namaz. The story of this street is the story of its coexisting duality.

A good couple of hours post prayer, when the crowds were cleared and the prayer mat rolled up, I clutched Ammu's hand as we swerved and swivelled through the swarming crowds on Shantinagar Goli. Back to back and wall to wall, we passed more apartment buildings: several "Ma groceries"; "Ma's Salon"; a small beauty parlour; a dentist's office; and a tandoori chicken shop where the nice uncle (but a wifebeater behind closed doors) rhythmically rolled out dough, aggressively stuffed it with potatoes, and directly dropped it into bubbling oil, frying endless samosas under open air. Throughout the length of the goli, bundles of electrical wires, tangled and bulging, hazardously hung roughly 12 inches above our heads. As we walked, questions regarding Baba's health and my school were yelled at Ammu from all around, everyone addressing her as bhabi, and Ammu cordially yelled back her answers. In Shantinagar Goli, people from all walks of life and socio-economic backgrounds shared its constricted space. The story of Shantinagar Goli is the story of flourishing in its unprecedented collaboration.

Finally, at the far end of the street, we approached the hawkers selling second-hand books from wicker baskets—Bangla ones for 20 to 40 taka each, but open to haggling, and the second-hand, locally pirated English books for 100 taka each, fixed price. The hawker uncles demonstrated a metaphor for our society. We valued a language that was once imposed on us in return for the riches of our motherland over the language steeped in the history of our land and our roots. Roughly three kilometres from Shantinagar Goli, students at the University of Dhaka had given their lives during the Language Movement of 1952, for Bangla to be restored as the state language of then East Pakistan. At 10, I lamented what had caused us to lose that glorious sense of pride in who we are and what is ours. The story of this street is the story of its subtle betrayals.

On very special occasions—Eid, birthdays, and the good report card days—we entered a three-storey high-end bookstore selling imported, brand-new English books, starting from 800 taka each. The aforementioned hawker uncles sat at the foot of this building. At this store, I would only buy a book I wouldn't find on the baskets outside.

We shopped for our clothes during Eid from the malls beneath our home, feeling very proud of ourselves when friends and family bought less nice clothing for over three times the price from elsewhere. Owing to the malls in our area being wholesale, we could buy directly from the supplier before they supplied to retailers all over Dhaka. The story of this street is the story of its intricate economic choices.

We couldn't take home any of the money we saved, though. In shipment cartons, with the clothes came very unwelcome "guests" and infested the homes of the residents of Shantinagar Goli. We spent hundreds weekly on insect repellent. As no spray could fully eliminate the unceasing, cyclic shipments of cockroach, we shared our homes with the survivors amongst them. One day, at six months old, as I sat on the kitchen floor while Ammu cooked, I grabbed a scuttling object from the floor with lightning speed. The story of this street is the story of how my first solid food was a cockroach.

The name Shantinagar Goli is ironic, as cockroaches were the least of the sources of o-shanti at Shantinagar Goli. The goli opened into a road on which administrative offices of the Bangladesh National Party stood. BNP was then the only surviving opposition to the Awami League, which has been the ruling party of Bangladesh since 2009. Periodically, BNP would call for strike action. By virtue of its location at the eye of the storm, for the children of Shantinagar Goli, such an announcement meant no school. Party workers would gather before the offices hoisting placards. The police would charge at them with batons and tear gas; the Party workers would return the favour and set fire to many rickshaws, a few buses, and a couple of private cars. The more an uninvolved civilian had to lose from the violence for the sake of it, the higher their chances of being affected would be.

In my naive selfishness of childhood, I would scan the rolling news updates beneath Ammu's nightly soaps, anticipating a leisurely day at home under my parents' protective watch, and rejoice at news of imminent strike days. The story of this street is a story of deriving joy from the most contradictory of sources.

One time, it rained sugar on Shantinagar Goli. But it only fell on me. Aunty on the Other Side of The Street was making a rich payesh, spiced with cardamom, cinnamon sticks, and grated coconut. Rice in the milk boiling on her stove, she realised she was out of sugar. Aunty on This Side of The Street took the only natural course of action, tying a half kg bag of sugar to the end of a pole and extending it towards Aunty on the Other Side of The Street through her kitchen window. Except that a pack of crows attacked the foreign object in the sky, and I was blessed with Divine Sugar.

Where we now live, we get missing ingredients promptly home-delivered to cook piping hot meals that lack the warmth of community spirit. The people of Shantinagar Goli kept no score of the ingredients, acts of service, and cooked dishes they shared. The story of this street is the story of its unchecked generosity.

Every year, it became increasingly unfashionable to live in South Dhaka. Businesses and schools shifted to the suburbs, like the localities of North Dhaka, and many families with young children, including mine, went with. I feel that if I were born and raised in these parts, I'd always have playgrounds, better schools, and cockroach-free homes, but never really feel the essence of being a Dhaka-ite and a Bangladeshi. Nor would I be bi-deshi, and live somewhere in between. I'd complain about the country, its traffic and its bureaucracy—as I still do now—but I never would have lived a life so aligned with my country's beating heart. In one of the most densely populated golis of the world's sixth most populous city, the story of this street is the story of my gratitude.

POETRY

Lone house around the bend

Your grief rusts the ancient pipes, and rotting awnings over cracked windows. It flows through your bowels and seeps out onto the pavement. Every day, there's a puddle forming by the time the sun hangs low on the horizon.

WASIMA AZIZ

Your grief rots the decades old paint and the lakhri no one bothered to replace. Even across the road, it reeks of death.

Perhaps you hold onto memories of the old, when wives wept as one, and men went to war for the country, to war against themselves. Perhaps the rot pervading in their slurred words and heavy breathing never quite left your walls, no matter the layers of paint or mildew.

Take care, old friend. There was a time when your rooms echoed with the laughter of children, as the smell of khichuri wafted through your halls. When, after all the children were put to bed, mothers, fathers, uncles and aunts sat around that ancient dinner table; the mirth in that room more than made up for the kids' going to bed. Those children dreamt dreams of you and are dreaming still.

POETRY

The three day wake

IFFAT NAWAZ

'You must bury
Every three days'
She said,
'Corpses are of No use
They Will
Rot you instead.'
'You can burn
Also, if you wish
Or immerse your Dead selves in water
If you so please.'
Then she walked away
And became ordinary
While I pulled out
My shoes,
To head to the river
Where wet soil
Had already dug up
Burial beds
With invisible tombstones
And a torn noose.
The trees were Speaking differently
After the rain,
I heard them exchange
Something about
Someone's futile burden
Of shame.
They said the Tug of war between Orthodox and non
Is pointless and mundane.
'Keep walking'
The leaves motioned,
'Stop eavesdropping
Be touched by everything
But remain uninfluenced.'
I don't know what that meant
Plants were too cryptic at times.
I half slid down
A muddy slope
To watch the river
And its ripples
They taught me
The day's rhythm
I stalled a bit
Then brought out
My dead selves
Tied neatly with Jute ribbons.
I leaned in close
To grieve my deaths'
Gains and losses,
With short eulogies
I closed them
Into the mouths of Earth's tiny crevasses.
In the spaces
Where the deads
Had resided,
Two centimetres
Below my skin,
Grass and moss
Rushingly filled in.
My breaths
Were now wildflowers
My toes were Dew rinsed.
For I fear fire,
I contemplated
The next dead's
Ritual,
The trees commanded
To pause a bit
Before killing
What's not old.
With a new face
I walk back
To a home
That isn't mine
A thousand deaths
Have passed
And a thousand deaths
Wait in line.
Every three days
I will look for a grave
Between olive trees
And green vines
I will be born again
And yet again
Till this voice
Becomes a Silent wind's
Dutiful chime.
While my Heart mourns
To rejoice
A deathless
Self's shine.

A jack of all trades

An exclusive with Parambrata Chattopadhyay

> In the traditional context, I haven't been in such a project that is 'larger than life' in a typical notion, but my role in 'Hercules' can be considered close to it. Also, in the last half an hour of 'Chotushkone', the role becomes as such! In fact, my character in 'Ajob Karkhana', at some point, can also be perceived to be one of such roles.

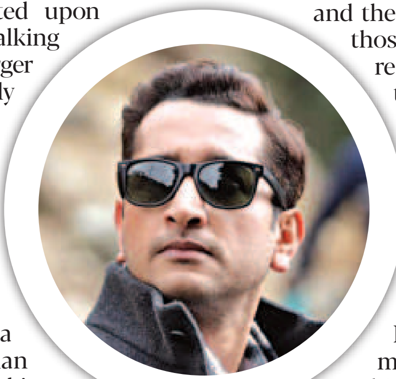
SHARMIN JOYA

"Music has been a major part of my life since childhood," shared Parambrata Chattopadhyay over the phone, as if he were going through his meteoric career in his own mind. Hailing from West Bengal, his charm worked magic in Bollywood as well. As we moved on with the conversation, he reflected upon his musical journey, whilst talking about the roles that are larger than life, and his recently released Bangladeshi film.



His fourth Bangladeshi featurette, the government funded film Ajob Karkhana, directed by Shabnam Ferdousi, hit theatres yesterday countrywide. The musical film has given Parambrata a unique experience as a musician himself. The director was looking for someone as her film's lead (Rajeeb), who is in his 40s and can fluently play an electric guitar. "My immediate response after listening to the story was, it is absolutely my story!"

The actor was quick to dive into nostalgia. "Beginning with Rabindranath Tagore, I immersed myself in music, and during my teenage years, I rebelled against other genres and indulged in Western music, particularly English songs. In my mid-20s, my musical taste took another turn, drawing me more towards my own roots -- returning to Tagore, to getting introduced to modern Bangla songs, while simultaneously delving into classical."

Parambrata as Rajeeb in 'Ajob Karkhana'.

The talented artiste feels that the experience of working in Ajob Karkhana enriched his soul. "I used to look for the research works done on folk musicians and music genres and at that time, I didn't have the real experience of witnessing them performing live, which I had during the shoot. It seemed surreal to me when listening to Jari, Ghatu or Baul songs (in front of Lalon Shah's shrine) in a rustic atmosphere with thousands of people."

Earlier, he was featured in Bhuban Majhi, directed by Fakhrul Arefeen Khan, Voyongkor Sundor by Animesh Aich, and Saturday Afternoon by Mostofa Sarwar Farooki.

Farooki's film was unfortunately halted by the censor board, but later it was released on the OTT platform Sony LIV. "Every country, society, and region have their own reality and the administration has to keep those realities in mind. We must respect that. Being a part of the film, I definitely wanted the Bangladeshi audience to watch it. However, there must be some specific reason behind not permitting the film's release and I don't have the right to make any remarks on their decision. Even in India, there were many projects which faced similar troubles. I don't want any outsider to comment on that, so I won't make any remarks either."

Parambrata added that after it began streaming in Sony LIV, he received numerous phone calls and messages, appreciating his work. "I believe the film has already reached its audience."

During his visit to Dhaka, Param celebrated his birthday and met the press many times, where a common question he had to encounter was regarding Shakib Khan and Toofan's release. Did it make him uncomfortable at any point?

"Absolutely not! I am elated and proud of the success of the film and those associated with the production are close to my heart. I am affiliated with SVF for my next two projects with them, and I believe we will have a collaboration with Chorki as well. I have also known Alpha-i for a long time. Apart from all these, I worked for Hoichoi as well for the next season of our acclaimed series Parnashavarir Shaap, which is coming soon."

To the actor, the roles that are larger than life depend on the extent of the project itself, also the perspective of how one sees it. "If you look from an American perspective, it will be different from the European perspective. In the traditional context, I haven't been in such a project that is 'larger than life' in a typical notion, but my role in Hercules can be considered close to it. Also, in the last half an hour of Chotushkone, the role becomes as such! In fact, my character in Ajob Karkhana, at some point, can also be perceived to be one of such roles, as it tells the story of a person who is on a journey of reaching towards his soul."

Since Parambrata had to catch a train in a few minutes, the conversation needed to be concluded. Being an actor, director and musician, he has gained a lot of popularity. However, when asked to his director self --what can make the collaborative productions between both Bengals more effective and more viable for both industries?--he replied, "The bureaucracy and the administrative procedures should be laxer from both sides. Also, the people who are involved in the project need to be equally invested."

Parambrata bid me farewell, sharing that he would be returning Dhaka soon by the end of this month, after completing his pending works in the USA and Mumbai.

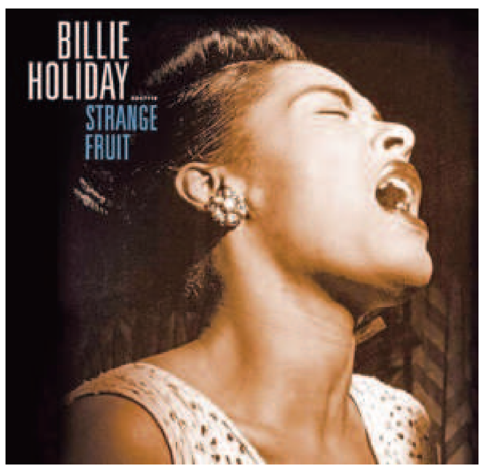
WHAT'S PLAYING

Strange Fruit



Strange Fruit, performed by Billie Holiday, stands as a groundbreaking and haunting protest song that redefined the intersection of music and social commentary.

Holiday's restrained yet powerful delivery transforms Abel Meeropol's poignant lyrics into a chilling indictment of racism and lynching in America. The song's stark imagery and Holiday's emotive vocals create an unforgettable listening experience that forces the audience to confront the brutal reality of discrimination.

The track defies easy musical categorisation and has slipped between the cracks of academic study. It is too artsy to be folk music, too explicitly political and polemical to be jazz. Surely no song in American history has ever been so guaranteed to silence an audience or to generate such discomfort.

WHAT'S ON THE GRAM

SHARVARI WAGH

Sharvari Wagh, the Munjya actress, can be termed as the latest sensation with her captivating performance and scintillating dance moves in the film and its item song Taras.

The talented actress has also landed a remarkable opportunity to star alongside Alia Bhatt in YRF Spy Universe's first female-led film, Alpha.

Recently, Sharvari shared a stunning picture of herself wearing a golden-olive satin skirt paired with an olive-green sequined top. She complemented her look with moderately natural makeup, featuring brown smoky eyes and nude lipstick to complete the ensemble.

1-MINUTE REVIEW

'SRI CAN!'

The Srikanth Bolla journey

Srikanth, directed by Tushar Hiranandani, portrays the exceptional life of Indian industrialist Srikanth Bolla, a visually challenged self-made entrepreneur. Born to parents, who considered burying him alive as a newborn, his story is a testament to resilience and success.

Stricken and wrought with hardships and obstacles strewn his way, Srikanth (Rajkummar Rao) proves his mettle time and again. As he grows, he displays remarkable intelligence, solving equations verbally, finishing exams ahead of peers, and defeating sighted opponents in chess.

When barred from studying science in Higher Secondary, he legally challenges the Indian education system and wins. He, however, abandons his dreams of additionally pursuing cricket, having earned a scholarship from MIT.

The film tries to break from the typical biopic format. In the second half, Srikanth's power-hungry behaviour and use of his disability for gain are briefly explored but quickly resolved. The story then reverts to evoking admiration for the protagonist.

Rajkummar Rao skillfully portrays a visually impaired character, supported ably by actors like Jyothika and Sharad Kelkar.

Local pharma lights up hope in cancer treatment

JAGARAN CHAKMA

> Bangladesh has achieved tremendous improvement in cancer treatment and anti-cancer drug manufacturing, said Golam Mohiuddin Faruque, president of Bangladesh Cancer Society

The pharmaceutical sector of Bangladesh has achieved many milestones over the past 14 years. Not only do local companies now meet 90 percent of the country's demand for medicines, but the products are also exported to around 150 countries, fetching hundreds of millions of dollars.

However, among the most significant strides the sector has made is its advancement in the manufacture of life-saving cancer medication.

In the last 14 years, pharmaceutical companies like Beacon, Eskayef, Renata, Incepta, Healthcare, and Techno Pharma produced more than 110 varieties of oncological drugs.

Around 17 local companies are manufacturing anti-cancer drug products. Thanks to their bold initiatives, patients in Bangladesh can now access cancer drugs at affordable prices, which have brought down the cost of treatment.

Monjural Alam, chief executive officer of Beacon Medicare, said the prices of such drugs in Europe and the US are beyond the purchasing capacity of many patients.

"There is a scarcity of life-saving drugs worldwide. When the drugs are available, they are usually beyond the reach of common people. To this end, we have established a facility within our company to serve global patients," he said.

Before 2009, there was scepticism regarding Beacon's ability to manufacture sophisticated cancer drugs. However, the plant has become successful, and patients can buy life-saving drugs at reasonable prices.

Claiming that Beacon pioneered the manufacturing of cancer drugs in Bangladesh, he said it now meets around half of the local demand for cancer drugs.

Before 2010, Bangladesh relied entirely on imports for oncology drugs. This means only patients from financially solvent families could afford cancer treatment due to the exorbitant cost of medicines. Today, it not only meets domestic consumption but also serves as an exporter in the global market.

"This achievement was made possible by the dedication of local pharmaceutical companies and the trust placed by doctors and patients in local products," Alam said.

According to manufacturers, local companies produce around 99 percent of oncology drugs, yet some patients still resort to imported drugs or unofficial imports.

Recently, pharmaceutical companies have been affected immensely due to the supply chain disruptions and the dollar crisis against the backdrop of the Russia-Ukraine war. The situation is improving following the collaborative efforts of the government and drug manufacturers.

It provides medicines worth Tk 3 crore to poor patients annually.

Beacon plans to establish a second oncology plant to meet the increasing global demand for cancer drugs. The company is also considering setting up a palliative care centre to alleviate the suffering of patients.

A relative newcomer to the scene is Eskayef Oncology, which commenced its journey in 2018. However, the company, which boasts advanced technologies, has expanded its footprint beyond Bangladesh in no time.

It is one of the few Asian companies to have secured approval from the European Union Good Manufacturing Practice (EU GMP) to produce anti-cancer medicines. This is recognised by 27 nations of the EU and is considered a passport for entry into the global market.

"This recognition facilitated the entry of our drugs into the EU market and various other countries," said Mohammad Mujahidul Islam, executive director (marketing and sales) of Eskayef.

Eskayef is currently exporting products to over 60 countries.

"Thanks to modern technologies, facilities, and unwavering dedication, Eskayef Oncology is committed to delivering affordable and globally standard anti-cancer products to patients both at home and abroad," he said.

Prof Golam Mohiuddin Faruque, president of the Bangladesh Cancer Society, said Bangladesh has achieved tremendous improvement in cancer treatment and anti-cancer drug manufacturing.

Bangladesh exported cancer drugs worth Tk 1,000 crore in 2023. The amount was around Tk 500 crore in 2019. Local sales of cancer drugs have reached Tk 800 crore to Tk 1,000 crore as demand is increasing by an average of 15 percent each year, according to the manufacturers.

Prof SM Abdur Rahman, chairman of the pharmacy department at the University of Dhaka, said Bangladesh's pharmaceutical companies have set up world-class manufacturing plants equipped with sophisticated machinery, enabling them to produce top-class drugs.

He thinks there is no doubt that Bangladesh's oncology products will dominate the world market, meeting global standards, quality, and cost-effectiveness.

There are areas of concern.

After 2026, when Bangladesh graduates from the group of least-developed countries, local pharmaceutical companies will have to follow patent guidelines while manufacturing drugs, including oncology products. If medicines are produced following the patent rights, the drugs will be costlier in the local market.

To avert the situation, Bangladesh initially tried to extend its Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS) waiver by six to nine years and then up to January 1, 2033. However, at the 12th Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organisation (WTO) in Geneva in June 2022, global leaders did not extend the TRIPS deadline for graduating LDCs.

Under the current agreement, drug-makers in LDCs can produce any generic medicine without having to follow patent guidelines until January 1, 2033. But the benefit is not applicable to graduating LDCs such as Bangladesh.

Beacon's Alam, however, said it would be applicable for only new molecules, which comprise few drugs. "So, the pharmaceuticals sector will not face significant challenges after graduation."

Full-fledged cancer treatment facilities need of the hour

JAGARAN CHAKMA

High-quality cancer drugs are produced in Bangladesh. Oncologists and physicians are also available. However, the country is lagging in putting in place an adequate number of full-fledged facilities to treat patients suffering from such diseases.

The missing link exists although cancer patients are on the rise in Bangladesh in line with global trends and hospitals and clinics have flourished.

Cancer is already a leading cause of death worldwide, accounting for nearly 10 million deaths in 2020, or nearly one in six deaths. The most common cancers are breast, lung, colon, rectum and prostate cancers, according to the World Health Organisation (WHO).

Cancer cases are expected to rise 77 percent by the middle of the century, the International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC), a specialised branch of the WHO, said in February, highlighting the growing burden of the disease.

There are predicted to be more than 35 million cancer cases during 2050, up from the estimated 20 million in 2022, the agency said.

The increase reflects both population ageing and growth, as well as changes to people's exposure to risk factors. Tobacco, alcohol and obesity are key factors, along with air pollution.

Currently, Bangladesh has 13 lakh to 15 lakh cancer patients, while around two lakh new patients are diagnosed with the diseases each year, figures from the National Center for Biotechnology Information showed.

There are around 240 oncologists in Bangladesh. Treatment is available in 19 hospitals, and 465 beds have been set aside for chemotherapy at the oncology and radiotherapy departments.

"There is no shortage of oncology surgeons or specialists in Bangladesh," said Prof Golam Mohiuddin Faruque, president of the Bangladesh Cancer Society.

Besides, locally manufactured generic versions of oncology drugs are similar to the products made by multinational companies in terms of quality.

"However, there is a lack of radiation therapy facilities at hospitals as it is very expensive," he said, adding that it costs around Tk 40 crore to set up such units.

Currently, 40 radiotherapy facilities, including those at government hospitals, are available against the need for 300, Faruque said. Private hospitals treat 67 percent of cancer patients while the rest receive services from state-run hospitals.

According to Faruque, patients could see an oncologist for only Tk 10 at a government hospital or for Tk 1,000 to Tk 1,500 at a private hospital.

Drugs have also become easily available during the last decade as pharmaceutical companies have taken initiatives to manufacture oncology products. "As a result, the cost of treatment has come down by two-thirds during the decade," Faruque said.

Since the number of cancer patients is rising, the government is building treatment facilities in eight divisional hospitals, which may be commissioned next year.

Training general physicians on cancer warning signs and setting up early detection centres at medical colleges and the district level are underway. Piloting of cervical cancer vaccination has recently been completed.

The International Centre for Diarrheal Disease Research, Bangladesh (icddr,b), BRAC, Ahsania Mission Cancer Hospital, Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical University, Bangladesh Cancer Society, ASHIC Foundation, Amader Gram, AK Khan Healthcare Trust, and Chattogram-based Cancer Support Society (Cansup) run programmes for early detection.

Bangladesh has agreed to reduce premature mortality from cancer as part of the 2030 UN Agenda for Sustainable Development.

Industry people say improving the cancer treatment scenario overnight is not an easy task. However, policymakers should show their interest in expanding the facilities and pushing the agenda forward since cancer diseases have huge health and financial impacts.

Govt may go for quota reforms

But won't act before disposal of the issue at the apex court

- Protesters to march towards Bangabhaban today
- Boycott of classes, exams to continue
- 'Unofficial talks' with protesters going on
- Law enforcers to stay alert, show tolerance
- Case filed against unnamed demonstrators

The government is considering a "logical reform" in the quota system in the public service, but it will not take any initiative to that end or give any assurances until the matter is resolved by the Supreme Court.

It may form a commission to discuss the possible reform upon completion of the legal procedure at the apex court, highly placed sources in the government told The Daily Star yesterday.

Representatives from different agencies and the ruling party are already holding "unofficial talks" with the protesting students, seeking to get their views on the "right percentages" of quota in government jobs. Agency officials and AL leaders are also urging them to be tolerant and mindful of the public sufferings stemming from their street protests.

Talking to The Daily Star yesterday, Mohammad Ali Arafat, state minister for information and broadcasting, hinted at a "logical reform" of the quota system after a final court verdict.

"Everything changes, and reforms are carried out in the course of time. This can happen on the issue of quota in government jobs too," he said.

"The government will take an initiative in this regard, but only after the conclusion of the court proceedings. There will be an acceptable solution once the legal process ends. Until then, the protesters should wait."

Waterlogging forever?

Tk 730cr, myriad steps over 4 years go down the drain

Despite many initiatives and spending over Tk 730 crore over the past four years, Dhaka city corporations have failed to make any visible progress in mitigating the waterlogging problem.

Heavy rains last Friday left at least 22 areas in the capital submerged, causing distress to residents and commuters. Even after 36 hours, several areas remained under water.

The city corporations officially took over the responsibility for canal and drainage management from Wasa on December 31, 2020.

Four years and Tk 730 crore later, a lack of effective planning and proper management has left the waterlogging problem still unresolved.

"The drainage system is impaired due to poor design, weak maintenance, and various road construction activities," Mujibur Rahman, a former Buet professor, told The Daily Star.

"A lack of necessary maintenance has left the drainage network mostly blocked."

Two city corporation officials, speaking anonymously, said the funds were used for decluttering canals, canal-drains, and box culverts, as well as for removing accumulated waste.

However, they acknowledged that after a few days of cleaning, the canals quickly became clogged again.

On Friday, the Met office recorded 130mm of rainfall in just six hours from 6:00am, leading to extensive waterlogging across the city.

Areas such as Dhaka University's Zahurul Huq Hall and Curzon Hall areas; Swamibagh; Bakshi Bazar; Khaje Dewan; Mugda; Maniknagar; Gopibagh; Lalbagh; and the Buet campus were found submerged till yesterday.

Israeli strike on 'safe zone' kills 90 Palestinians

An Israeli airstrike killed at least 90 Palestinians and injured 300 others -- the deadliest toll in weeks -- in a designated humanitarian zone in Gaza yesterday, the enclave's health ministry said.

Gaza's civil defence agency said the shelling had prevented its teams from reaching victims in the tent city of Al-Mawasi, where tens of thousands have sought refuge.

The targeted site is a designated humanitarian area to which the Israeli army has repeatedly urged Palestinians to head to after issuing evacuation orders from other areas.

Reuters footage showed displaced people, including women and children, fleeing in panic, some holding belongings in their hands.

'Govt short of taka, USD for financial distress'

The government does not have adequate taka and US dollars to implement the budget because of the financial distress, said Ahsan H Mansur, executive director of the Policy Research Institute of Bangladesh, yesterday.

"Due to the crisis of the taka and the US dollars, the government is now unable to pay the bills for various sectors, including energy sector," he said.

Bangladesh is becoming dependent on debts day by day, said Mansur, adding that borrowing capacity from internal sources is gradually decreasing as banks are facing a liquidity crisis.

leaders publicly issued warnings against blocking the roads and highways, police have been asked to show restraint and go soft on the demonstrators until they resort to vandalism, said police sources.

A top official of Dhaka Metropolitan Police said they were instructed to show maximum restraint and not to engage in any confrontation with the students.

"But police will be on high alert to avoid any unpleasant situation," the official said.

The government will continue the pressure on the protesters to keep them off the streets, as the countrywide demonstrations and transport blockades are affecting the public.

Warnings by ministers and filing of cases against unnamed demonstrators are part of that strategy, government sources said.

Meanwhile, the protesters yesterday announced fresh programmes for today. Instead of blockade, they will bring out processions, march towards the Bangabhaban and DC offices, and boycott classes and examinations across the country.

According to sources, the students have softened their position to avoid possible police action since they want to continue the protests until their demands are met.

Addressing a press conference at Dhaka University yesterday, Hasnat Abdullah, a student of the university and one of the coordinators of the anti-discrimination student movement, said they will march towards the Bangabhaban today to submit a memorandum to President Mohammed Shahabuddin.

He said their peers in districts will also hand over memorandums to respective deputy commissioners for placing them to the president. And their boycott of classes and exams will continue too.

"The government is making plans and preparations to suppress our movement. We have been protesting peacefully," said Nahid Islam, another organiser of the protests.

The government should have resolved the crisis through discussions with the students at the beginning. If anything goes wrong, it must shoulder the responsibility, he said.

Meanwhile, police yesterday filed a case with Shahbagh Police Station against unnamed protesters on charges of vandalising police vehicles and assaulting law enforcers during a demonstration in Shahbagh on Thursday.

Khalilur Rahman, a driver of the transport department of Rajarbagh Police Lines, filed the case.

DMP Additional Commissioner (detective branch) Harun Or Rashid said they are investigating if any infiltrators are trying to take advantage of the situation and divert the movement in other directions.

Students at public universities and colleges, along with jobseekers, have been demonstrating against the quota system in government jobs for the last two weeks. They occupied key city intersections, major highways, and rail lines.

The protests began after the High Court on June 5 ruled that the 2018 government circular abolishing the quota system was illegal, effectively reinstating the quota system. The government appealed against the decision, and the Supreme Court has issued a status quo on the HC order.

In 2018, the government issued a circular abolishing the quota system for Class-1 and Class-2 jobs, in the wake of massive protests by students, who wanted reform and not an abolition.

Until then, 56 percent of government jobs had been reserved for candidates from various quotas. Of them, 30 percent were for freedom fighters' families, 10 percent for women, 10 percent for people from underdeveloped districts, 5 percent for members of indigenous communities, and 1 percent for persons with disabilities.

According to sources, a good number of AL leaders also favour quota reform.

During unscheduled discussions at the party president's Dhanmondi office yesterday, some leaders said there is a groundswell of public support for the quota reform demonstrations, and any police action on students will fomentanti-government sentiment.

During the discussions, an AL leader said some people are labelling all the agitating students as "children of razakars", but this is not fair. Such sweeping generalisations might backfire, the leader pointed out.

Talking to this newspaper, several other AL leaders also said it was time to reform the quota system.

The Public Service Commission data shows that before the quota was abolished, only around 9 percent of the posts set aside for freedom fighters' families were filled and the rest 21 percent remained vacant, they say.

"If this is the reality, then why should the government take a beating for the 30 percent quota for freedom fighters' children and grandchildren. Even many Chhatra League leaders support the protesters," an AL leader told The Dily Star, wishing anonymity.

AL General Secretary Obaidul Quader at a press conference yesterday put emphasis on the necessity of the quota system in the country's current context.

Mentioning that quota system in government jobs exists in a number of South Asian countries, he said the participation of women and members of marginalised communities in Bangladesh's public services steadily declined in recent years in the absence of quota system.

Finding hope in hair!

of women in groups, processing the hair that was bought from across the country.

Hafizul Islam, the owner of Antor-Aniq Hair Fashion in Nawabganj, has been involved in the business for last eight years.

"Our workers travel all over the country to buy hair from villages, towns and cities. These are then brought to the factory and processed. After processing, the loose hair is sent to many places in the country and even other countries, including China. There, the processed hair get the final polish and are sent again to different countries, including Bangladesh, to be manufactured into wigs."

He estimates that around 200 people from 15 villages are employed in his factory in Nawabganj alone, with approximately 17,000 women benefiting from this industry in the upazila under 250 traders like him. He informed that there are many more hair processing centres in other parts of Dinajpur.

The impact of the hair processing industry extends beyond employment.

Villagers like Afzal Hossain gets to earn an extra Tk 2,500 a month for renting his space out to accommodate a hair processing centre in Nawabganj's Jagannathpur.

"To be able to rent out a space in such a rural area is a rare opportunity," he said.

In Chirirbandar's Ranibandar Bazar area, at least 10,000 men and women were seen working in hair processing. Those whose skills are far more enhanced than others can earn up to Tk 15,000 to 20,000 per month. However, the number of such workers is still low.

Rasheda Begum, who works in a centre in the area, explained the process, "We sort, clean, trim, and bundle the hair ... Then it's dyed, washed and dried in a separate factory, and graded to make Remy hair, which is highly valued in the market."

Remy hair is where the cuticles are kept intact and facing the same direction and are not stripped, making it the highest grade of real human hair extensions.

The market value of processed loose hair varies significantly, with prices ranging from Tk 5,000 per kg of 6-inch hair to Tk 8,000 per kg of 22-23 inches.

Rashidul Islam, another hair processing factory owner in Chirirbandar, attributes the sector's rapid growth to both local initiatives and foreign investments, particularly from China.

However, despite the industry's promise, workers' wages are still comparatively low.

Anwara Begum and Shahida Banu expressed concerns over the adequacy of their earnings amidst rising living costs.

"We work hard, but Tk 80-120 per day isn't enough to support our families anymore," Anwara lamented.

Laila Banu, vice chairman of Chirirbandar upazila and an entrepreneur, also emphasised the need for better wages and protection for the workers.

"The industry is profitable and is contributing to our economy, but the workers deserve a fair amount of money for their hard work. They also need better working conditions as many of the centres end up becoming unhygienic."

Motiar Rahman, who rose from being an unemployed villager to a successful entrepreneur employing 100 workers in his factory in Chirirbandar, said it was sometimes a hassle to source good quality and proper lengths of hair, and appealed for government support to import hair from other countries to further boost the industry.

As the hair processing industry in Dinajpur continues to grow, it brings with it both opportunities and challenges.

"Its transformative power is evident in the changing lives of thousands of villagers but also highlights the need for fair labour practices, adequate wages and protection for the workers to ensure its sustainable growth and equitable benefits for all those involved," Laila Banu said.

Israeli strike on 'safe zone' the nearby Nasser Hospital, which hospital officials said had been overwhelmed and was "no longer able to function" due to the intensity of the Israeli offensive and an acute shortage of medical supplies.

Separately, at least 20 Palestinians were killed in an Israeli attack on a prayer hall at a Gaza camp for displaced people in west Gaza City, Palestinian health and civil emergency officials said.

Over 38,000 Palestinians have been killed in Israel's military offensive in the enclave since October 7, according to the enclave's health ministry.

In a statement, Hamas said the Israeli claims that it had targeted Mohammed Deif, the military chief of the group, were false and aimed at justifying the attack.

Deif has survived seven Israeli assassination attempts, the most recent in 2021 and has topped Israel's most wanted list for decades over the deaths of dozens of Israelis in suicide bombings.

The Israeli military said that the strike against Deif also targeted Rafa Salama, the commander of Hamas' Khan Younis Brigade.

The Israeli army said operations were continuing in southeast Gaza City as well as "targeted, intelligence-based" missions in Rafah in the south of the Gaza Strip.

Univ teachers to carry on strike today

Teachers from over 35 public universities under the FBUTA have been abstaining from work since July 1, protesting the introduction of the "Prottoy" pension scheme. They also demanded the inclusion of professors in the "super grade" (equivalent to the pay grade of a senior secretary) and introduction of a separate pay scale for public university teachers.

The same day, the Inter-University Officers' Federation also joined the movement boycotting work.

Quader, also the AL general secretary, yesterday said there was a confusion regarding the "Prottoy" pension scheme to be effective from July this year, but in fact it would be in force from July next year.

Prof Nizamul Haque Bhuiyan, secretary general of the FBUTA, told journalists that their talks with the government representatives "went well".

He said they would decide their next course of action after consulting the leaders of the teachers' associations and all federations.

Under the Prottoy pension scheme, 10 percent of the monthly basic salary of an employee, up to Tk 5,000, will be deducted and given to their pension fund. Besides, there will be no one-time gratuity for retirees.

However, under the present pension system, no money is deducted from the employees' salary and it also allows a five percent annual increment of the pension and encashment of the earned leave.

Teachers claimed that their financial benefits will be reduced in the new system.

STALEMATE CONTINUES

The two-week movement has halted the activities of almost all public universities across the county. Students fear that this may lead to session jams.

As public universities officials and employees abstain from work, many current and former students cannot collect or submit the necessary documents.

Farid Hossain, a former Rajshahi University students, yesterday said he needed to send his original educational certificates to a university abroad to attend classes there this month, but he could not get those as the administrative building was shut down for about two weeks.

Many other public university students could not collect documents as almost all administrative and academic activities were suspended.

The RU authorities postponed their undergraduate admission process on July 1 citing "unavoidable reasons". They also deferred the start of the first-year honours classes.

Students at Comilla University have expressed frustration at the stalemate. No classes were held at the university for about two months since early May, following a conflict between the teachers and the vice-chancellor over an untoward incident at the latter's office.

Israt Jahan Bonna, a final year (honours) student of English, told The Daily Star, "The university was reopened on June 23 after about two months, but the academic activities are being hampered again due to the teachers' movement."

Moniruzzaman, an associate professor and also a former student adviser at the university, on Thursday said, "The classroom is the proper place for both teachers and students. As they are waging movements [over pension benefits and quota in government jobs], valuable time is being lost."

The undergraduate admission seekers have also been affected as the admission process and orientation of students at the Chittagong University of Engineering and Technology, Khulna University of Engineering and Technology, and Rajshahi University of Engineering and Technology have been postponed.

Former UGC chairman Prof Abdul Mannan said bringing university teachers under the universal pension scheme was not a wise decision.

"The government should have consulted the teachers before making the decision."

Terming the decision discriminatory, Qazi Khaliquzzaman Ahmad, co-chair of the Education Policy Formulation Committee, said, "The authorities should have addressed their concerns first because a country cannot move forward if the issues of the teachers and the education sector are not taken into consideration."

AKM Rifat Hasan, an associate professor of management at Jagannath University, said the students and teachers are trying to change two systems (quota in government jobs and pension facilities).

"The government must make a decision soon. Otherwise, there will be a possibility of session jams," he told The Daily Star.

Waterlogging forever?

argue that the city corporations need to adopt more effective planning and management strategies to address this issue.

Mujibur blamed the filling up of waterbodies, canals, and lakes, as well as the poor drainage network for the persistent waterlogging.

He added that climate change will bring on more intense rains for shorter periods, which will further worsen the situation.

"The city corporations need to enhance their capacities, develop skills, increase manpower, and implement institutional reforms.

"A master plan is needed to restore canals and waterbodies, and create a primary drainage system."

Dhaka currently has a network of 2,211 kilometers of drains, with 961km in the south and 1,250km in the north. Before the city corporations assumed responsibility, efforts to stop waterlogging were primarily focused on open drains.

Now, the corporations are responsible also for canals and drains, requiring substantial financial investments.

In the last four years, the DNCC spent Tk 370 crore, and the DSCC spent Tk 360 crore. Despite these efforts, areas like Shantinagar, where around Tk 100 crore was spent, still experience severe waterlogging.

Experts said many canals, once crucial for drainage, have been encroached upon and narrowed over time. After independence, Dhaka had 57 canals, but this number has decreased to 26, most of which are in poor condition.

DNCC Mayor Atiqul Islam said some areas still face waterlogging due to waste accumulation in the drains, adding that strict action will be taken against those who dispose of waste into canals and drains.

DSCC Chief Executive Officer Mizanur Rahman said that habitual dumping of polythene and plastic wastes by city dwellers is another key reason for the poor drainage.

He added that ongoing development projects by various service agencies also contribute to the problem.

A 2019 study by Bangladesh Institute of Planners (BIP) revealed that Dhaka has lost 4.38 percent of its waterbodies over the last 20 years.

Adil Mohammad Khan, president of BIP, said a lack of qualitative change in urban planning and management is a major reason behind waterlogging.

He stressed the need for public involvement in initiatives to address the issue.

Syeda Rizwana Hasan, chief executive of Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association, criticised the authorities concerned for not taking appropriate legal action against the housing companies that encroached lowlands.

She called for comprehensive plans to resolve the problem and urged the city corporations to focus more on nature-based drainage systems.

Sharif Jamil, member-secretary of Dhoritro Rokkhay Amra, another environmental organisation, said, "Spending money without identifying the proper reasons [behind waterlogging] leads to the money being wasted. No project can solve waterlogging problems without considering the importance of nature.

"If the projects don't solve the problem, then the corporations should identify the reasons for their failure."

Want country to progress in every sector

Says PM

UNB, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday reiterated the government's commitment to creating facilities across various sectors to ensure the country's comprehensive advancement in the future.

"We want the country to progress in every stratum, including sports, in the coming days," she said while giving away prizes to the winners of the Sheikh Hasina Interbank Football Tournament 2024 at the Bangladesh Army Stadium.

The prime minister highlighted the importance of sports in fostering a competitive spirit and self-improvement.

"Through sports, education and cultural activities, everyone will have the opportunity to flourish and showcase their creativity. This is why we prioritise sports," she added.

QUOTA REFORM

Govt cannot do anything until court settles issue: Arafat

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

State Minister for Information Mohammad Ali Arafat yesterday said there is no scope for the government to form a commission on quota reform or make any announcement since it is a sub judice matter (ongoing in court).

"After the Appellate Division verdict, there is no opportunity for the government to form a commission on quota. It will be unconstitutional to reform the quota system or make an announcement in this regard. The agitators are demanding a solution to the quota problem in parliament, but court matters cannot be resolved through the executive branch," Arafat said.

He made the remarks at a press briefing at the Dhaka District Awami League office in Tejgaon.

Student, Indian national die in road accidents

STAR REPORT

Two people were killed and 12 others injured in road accidents in two districts yesterday, according to reports from a news agency and our local correspondent.

In Sylhet, an eight-year-old madrasa student died after being run over by a pickup in Gowainghat upazila in the afternoon, reports UNB.

The deceased was identified as Zobayer Ahmed, son of Rahim Uddin of Abdul Mahal village in West Alirgaon union and a student at Abdul Mahal Madrasa, said Mehedi Hasan Sumon, inspector (investigation) of Gowainghat Police Station.

Locals said Zobayer was crushed under the pickup while he was crossing the Gowainghat-Sarighat road in front of his madrasa after class hours. He died on the spot.

5,619 students killed in road crashes in 5 years

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

At least 5,619 students have been killed in road crashes in the last five and a half years since 2019, the Road Safety Foundation said at a press conference yesterday.

The organisation said a total of 34,478 people were killed from 2019 to June this year, meaning 16.29 percent of all road crash victims were students.

Of the students who were victims of road crashes, 2,783 (49.52 percent) were either bikers or their pillions, they also said.

The foundation revealed the information marking the 13th anniversary of Mirsharai Tragedy Day.

At least 45 people, including 42 students, were killed on July 11, 2011 when a truck carrying 60 students skidded off the road and fell into a roadside ditch at Abu Torab in Chattogram's Mirsharai upazila.

The students were returning home following a school football match held in Mirsharai stadium.

The foundation demanded that the government observe the day nationally, to make students aware about road safety issues.

Speaking at a press conference at their Dhanmondi office, the foundation's Chairman Prof AI Mahbub Uddin Ahmed said the rate of students killed in road crashes is very alarming.

He said 2,641 (47 percent) victims were between 5-17 years old -- from different schools and madrasas -- while 2,978 (53 percent) were between 18-25 years old and were students of different colleges and universities.

Of the student victims, 1,534 (27.30 percent) were pedestrians and were killed by hit and run of vehicles, while 721 (12.83 percent) were travelling on vehicles, he said.

Around 497 (8.84 percent) were bicycle riders and 84 (1.49 percent) were killed after their clothes or scarves got stuck in auto-rickshaws, he also said.

He added that 611 students were killed in the first six months of this year, while 1,153 were killed in 2023; 1,437 in 2022; 1,006 in 2021; 719 in 2020 and 693 in 2019.

Also, 833 students were killed in the last five and half years after being hit by trains while crossing the tracks carelessly.

They found seven major reasons behind the road crashes including -- faulty roads and vehicles; lack of knowledge about safe road use and recklessness among student bikers.

The organisation also gave seven recommendations including the suggestion for a campaign at every institution about road safety, as well as halting operations of unsafe vehicles.

Saidur Rahman, executive director of the foundation, was present at the briefing, among others.

REASONS	RECOMMENDATIONS
Faulty roads and vehicles	Awareness campaign at every institution
Lack of knowledge on safe road use	Halting operations of unsafe vehicles
Recklessness among student bikers	Strict monitoring by authorities

Four die from electrocution in the capital

STAR REPORT

Four people died due to electrocution amid heavy rains in different areas of Dhaka on Friday.

The deceased were identified as Md Alauddin, 18, and Rasel Das, 27, employees of a furniture shop in Pallabi; Abdur Nur, 35, a mason in Bhasantek, and Aiyub Ali, 45, a painter in Kotwali.

In Pallabi, Alauddin and Rasel were removing furniture and materials as water entered their shop during torrential rain on Friday afternoon.

Suddenly, both of them were electrocuted and got unconscious.

Locals took them to Kurmitola General Hospital where duty doctors declared them dead, said Abdul Aziz, sub-inspector of Pallabi Police Station.

Alauddin hailed from Tarakanda upazila in Mymensingh and Rasel from Chattogram.

In Kotwali, painter Aiyub was electrocuted at Agarbati lane near CMM Court on Friday night as he was returning to his Sutrapur home after work, said his son Rafiqul Islam.

In an unconscious state, he was first taken to a nearby hospital in Old Dhaka and later shifted to Dhaka Medical College Hospital (DMCH) where

Now more names come up in probe

Says DB chief

STAR REPORT

DB chief Harun-or-Rashid yesterday said many more names have come up during investigation into the murder of Jhenaidah-4 lawmaker Anwarul Azim Anar.

He also said some of the masterminds are hiding abroad. "But the police are not summoning and harassing anyone unnecessarily. No one involved in the murder will be spared," he added. He said this during a press briefing at the DB office.

He also said two individuals believed to be directly involved in the murder of Azim remain in the custody of Indian police.

"So far, we have arrested nine people in connection with the incident, and of them two are still in India," Harun said.

DB was able to apprehend the perpetrators who happened to be in Bangladesh quickly, Harun said.

The detectives came up with multiple theories since Azim was killed around two months ago.

Initially, law enforcement officials said the MP was killed due to a gold smuggling-related feud, placing suspicion on a fellow lawmaker and a powerful businessman -- both allegedly part of the same syndicate as Azim.

MUGHAL-ERA MOSQUE IN LALMONIRHAT

Steps yet to be taken for restoration

S DILIP ROY, Lalmonirhat

The Department of Archaeology had published a gazette notification on August 1, 2022 mentioning that it would take measures to preserve the Puran Jame Masjid, a Mughal-era mosque in Saptibari Gilabari village under Lalmonirhat's Aditmari upazila.

However, even after 23 months, it has yet to take any step to this end.

In fact, not even a signboard declaring the mosque an antiquity has been placed on its premises.

According to the DoA and locals, the mosque was built in 1565 during the Mughal-era on seven decimals of land. It is 42 feet in length and 16 feet in width and has 3 minarets above the main gate in front of it. There is also an ancient well on the mosque's premises.

"The mosque is nearly 600 years old. Its historical significance, especially being a specimen of Mughal-era architecture, is immense. We were happy when the DoA issued the gazette declaring the mosque an antiquity and announced to take measures to preserve it. However, it is disappointing that nearly two years have passed but no effort has yet been made to this end," said Mahfuj Avin, a local resident.

Ershad Alam, president of the mosque's management committee, said DoA officials had visited the mosque numerous times before issuing the gazette recognising its historical significance, but they have not taken any steps to preserve it yet."

Habibur Rahman, custodian of the DoA in Rangpur division, said, "We have not received any instruction regarding preservation of the mosque so far. We will take steps if we receive any instruction from the higher authorities."

Contacted, Naheed Sultana, regional director of DoA in Rajshahi and Rangpur divisions, said the mosque is the second most ancient structure in Lalmonirhat district.

"We have got the allotment to preserve the mosque. It is unfortunate that a signboard has not been placed in front of the mosque yet. I will find out why it didn't happen. All necessary works to preserve the mosque will be done in the current fiscal year," she added.

QUESTION LEAK

Lalmonirhat AL leader expelled

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

Lalmonirhat's Aditmari upazila Awami League Vice President Mizanur Rahman has been expelled from the party for his involvement in the question leak of PSC examination.

The decision came following an emergency meeting of Aditmari upazila AL held at party office yesterday. A notice was issued in this regard, signed by upazila AL President Mohammad Ali and General Secretary Rafiqul Alam.

The notification said, "Mizanur Rahman has been expelled from the post of vice-president of the upazila AL for being involved in activities that are anti-organisational, disorderly, criminal and undermine the dignity of the organisation."

Aditmari upazila AL President Mohammad Ali said Mizan has been accused of being involved in the ongoing PSC exam question paper leak. Hence, the notice was issued expelling him from the party.

Saber seeks UN support to empower vulnerable countries

UNB, New York

Environment Minister Saber Hossain Chowdhury has called upon the United Nations to be more responsive to the needs of developing countries, especially the most vulnerable ones in addressing those challenges.

He said for Bangladesh, issues like sea level rise, salinity intrusion and glacial melt are matters of survival.

He said this during his meeting with Amina J Muhammad, deputy secretary general of the UN, at a bilateral meeting held at the UN Headquarters in New York yesterday.

During the meeting, the deputy secretary general and the environment minister deliberated on the devastating impacts of climate change, ongoing conflicts, and other global challenges that are hindering the achievement of Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and emphasised the need for strengthened international collaboration to overcome these obstacles.

They also discussed how to amplify the voices of the global south in climate negotiations, especially in Conferences of Parties to secure more funding to tackle the impacts of climate change and support their green transition.

Earlier, the minister met UNDP Administrator Achim Steiner and discussed areas of mutual cooperation.

Aside from that, the minister also met Chun Kyoo Park, head of the United Nations Office for Sustainable Development, to discuss potential cooperation in the areas of waste management.

Saber is in New York on an official visit from July 11 to 16.

ATTACK ON MIRANZILLA COLONY

Harijans stage demo in Ctg

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

People of the harijan community living in Chattogram demonstrated in the port city yesterday, protesting the attack on their fellows on Miranzilla Harijan Colony in Dhaka's Bangshal area on July 10.

During a protest rally, they warned to stop cleaning waste from roads for an indefinite period if the government does not ensure exemplary punishment of the attackers.

They also demanded the security of harijans across the country.

Bangladesh Hindu Buddhist Christian Oikya Parishad arranged the rally in front of Chattogram Press Club.

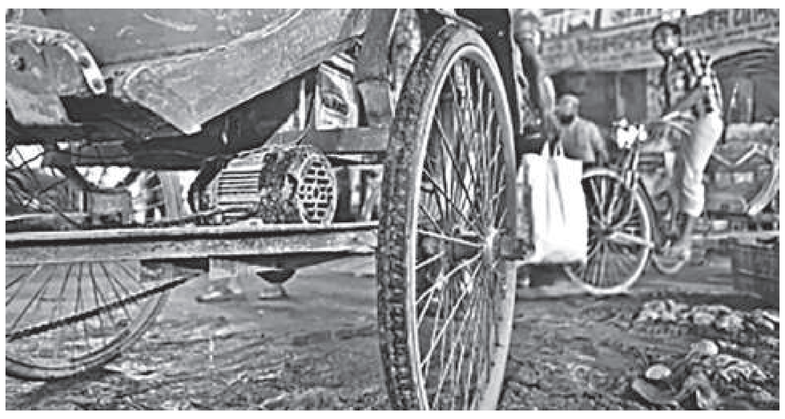
Badal Chandra Das, chief adviser of Jhautala Harijan Community, said, "If we don't clean the waste one day, there is no way to walk on the streets of the city."

He said, "Although we serve people day and night, in return, we have to suffer torture at the hands of political people. We are being treated like dirt."

"We will stop waste cleaning for an indefinite period if the authorities do not take steps to punish the attackers and to stop the attack on our brothers [harijan community]," added Badal.

No battery-run rickshaws on main roads: DMP

STAFF CORRESPONDENT



The Dhaka Metropolitan Police's Traffic Division yesterday said they would not allow battery-run rickshaws and other slow-moving vehicles on the main roads in the city.

"There is no scope to drive the auto-rickshaw on the main roads but a misconception grew among the drivers after the prime minister recently allowed them to operate in the city considering human aspect," DMP Joint Commissioner (Traffic-South) SM Mehedi Hasan said during a press briefing at DMP media centre.

He said they are making the drivers aware that they have to operate on the small and feeder roads, not on the main roads.

"We have already started the process of designating some smaller roads for these vehicles. We have already selected some roads in the Dhanmondi area. These vehicles are no longer running on the main roads in Mirpur," he said.

Replying to another query, Mehedi said they have made the footpaths free from hawkers in some parts of the city. Sometimes, the hawkers return to the footpaths even after eviction.

Footpaths are only for pedestrians, he said adding, they are trying so that hawkers cannot return to the pavement that was already freed.

In Bagerhat, an Indian national lost his life and at least 12 people were injured as a bus hit another in Fakirhat, reports our Bagerhat correspondent.

The accident took place on Dhaka-Khulna highway in Faltita area, said police.

Shridhar Ganguly, 45, son of Bhim Ganguly from Kolkata, succumbed to his injuries on the way to a hospital, said Sheikh Nuruzzaman Chanu, officer-in-charge of Mollahat Highway Police Camp.

Hasina also mentioned the government's initiative to construct mini-stadiums in every upazila, named Sheikh Russel Mini Stadium, to ensure year-round competition at the upazila level. "We are trying to make people more attentive to various kinds of sports," she said.

Army Chief General Waker-Uz-Zaman and Bangladesh Association of Banks (BAB) Chairman Nazrul Islam Mazumder also spoke at the event.

"The municipal authorities are entrusted with responsibility to protect and maintain the town's waterbodies. Instead, they are trying to fill up ponds, prioritising markets over environmental conservation. They must abandon this commercial mindset," she added.

Govt cannot do anything

Addressing the issue of discrimination in government jobs, the state minister argued that quotas do not undermine merit but are essential for ensuring representation of the underprivileged.

"Merit should be evaluated; this claim is correct. But apart from evaluating merit, the backward population cannot be underestimated or neglected," Arafat asserted.

He urged the protesters to wait for the government's response following the court proceedings on quota.

Arafat emphasised that the government remains positive about addressing the quota issue, but criticised the students protesting against the quota system for repeatedly revising their demands and misleading the people.

"I think that from time to time issues like quotas can be modernised by taking into consideration changes in conditions and circumstances, among other factors," he added.

He argued that the protesters' demands to resolve the quota issue through the executive branch reflect a misunderstanding of the legal process.

Arafat noted that the protesters seem to lack a clear understanding of the quota system and have been making inconsistent demands.

"The question now is whether they [protesters] have any other problems beyond the quota change movement," he said, adding that the government's intentions align with the protesters' demands, but some individuals are interpreting the situation differently.

Arafat also expressed concern over the involvement of what he described as an "anti-national force" in the movement, which he claimed is diverting the agenda of ordinary students.

He also stressed that the contributions of freedom fighters should not be dismissed.

The school, established in 1989 on 37 decimals of land, currently has 185 students and six teachers, said Jahangir Alam, an assistant teacher.

"A lot of smoke and burnt smell comes to the classroom, making it difficult for us to attend classes. If this continues longer, we may become ill," said Jannat Ferdous, a fifth-grader.

Md Mizanur Rahman, chairman of the school's management committee, said he has been trying to communicate with the authorities concerned on this issue.

Contacted, Shahid Biswas, contractor of the road project, said they kept the construction materials and equipment on the school ground having found no other suitable place.

Suddenly, political rivalry came into the mix as a possible reason for the murder following the arrest and confession of Kazi Kamal Ahmed Babu, relief and social welfare affairs secretary of the Jhenaidah Awami League.

Suspects appeared and were held from far-flung corners of the country, each with a purported motive for the MP's demise. Adding to the confusion is the mystery surrounding the remains found in a Kolkata apartment.

HILSA ELUSIVE

Fishers rue lack of fish in rivers; officials say situation to improve soon

SUSHANTA GHOSH, Barishal

Fishermen from Bhola, Barishal and Kuakata are returning empty handed from the rivers in the coastal region due to a lack of hilsa in the waterbodies, even though it is the harvest season of the fish.

Many of them had taken out loans to take their boats and trawlers to the rivers for catching hilsa, and are now worried about how they will pay back the loans and remain afloat with their families under the circumstances.

According to the Department of Fisheries, the hilsa season got delayed a bit due to heat and climate change, and more fish will be in the rivers a few days later.

"I could manage to catch only around 2-3 kilogrammes of hilsa in the last four days, which we had to eat while staying on the trawler in the Meghna river. As such, I returned empty handed. I wonder how I am going to return the money I had borrowed," said Russel Majhi, a fisherman from Tulatali village under Bhola Sadar upazila.

Monir Majhi, another fisher, said that it costs Tk 3,000 including oil to go to river once. "Six of us went to catch hilsa, but we returned empty handed," he added.

Fisherman Md Jasim Mia said hilsas are avoiding the rivers as ships from Chattogram are using this river route.

Some other fishermen said siltation and pollution of the rivers and presence of a huge number of fishing trawlers are reasons why hilsas are not entering the rivers from the Bay.

Nuru Majhi, president of Mahipur Fishermen's Association, said there is no hilsa at Kuakata, Alipur and Mahipur fish landing stations. He said around 50,000 people in this region, engaged in hilsa catching and trading, are now in dire straits.

According to sources at the Divisional Fisheries Office in Barishal, there are 4.21 lakh registered fishermen in the division.

Although at least 2,000-3,000 maunds of hilsa were expected to arrive daily at the 25 fish landing stations in the division, even half of it has not been received, the sources also said.

"It is not true that there is no hilsa at all; the number, however, is much less than expected. The situation may change in a few days when more hilsa will enter the rivers once the temperature of water becomes favourable for laying eggs," said Nripendra Nath Biswas, deputy director of the Barishal divisional fisheries office.

DELAY IN MEDICAL REPORTS

Probe, trial pending for 965 cases

FM MIZANUR RAHAMAN, Ctg

Investigations into at least 965 cases filed with different police stations under Chattogram Metropolitan Police are currently halted due to delay in issuance of medical reports in connection with the cases by Chattogram Medical College Hospital.

As such, the trial procedures of the cases also remain pending with different metropolitan courts in Chattogram.

According to medical, police and court staffers, these reports are crucial for any case, as they can change its whole merit.

Sometimes the medical staffers take bribes to manipulate the reports and thereby change police investigation.

The matter came to light after judicial magistrates openly spoke up about the matter at the police-magistracy conference on March 6, although investigation officers have been facing the issue for a long time.

This correspondent talked to at least 15 sub-inspectors and inspectors of 16 police stations under CMP in this regard.

The officers alleged that the IOs even have to bribe hospital officials Tk 500-5,000 based on the category and merit of the cases to get the necessary reports including post mortem, and DNA, forensic and medical certificates.

Most complaints regarding delayed issuance of medical reports and bribery are against the casualty and orthopaedic departments of CMCH.

The casualty department provides reports on physical assault, serious injuries or stabbing while the orthopedics department gives reports on broken limbs or other serious injuries.

The cases filed under the penal code with police stations and courts require medical certificates for police reports.

"I had to bribe medical staffers Tk 500-2,000 to collect medical certificates to submit my investigation report on time," said an SI of CMP's West Zone, wishing anonymity. Several other police officers of different zones of CMP echoed him.

In 2022, the CMCH authorities launched a probe into allegations of bribery against an assistant registrar of the casualty department. He allegedly used to take bribes from IOs on the basis of the case's merit.

The officers alleged that the IOs even have to bribe hospital officials Tk 500-5,000 based on the category and merit of the cases to get the necessary reports including post mortem, and DNA, forensic and medical certificates.

At the police-magistracy conference, Rabiul Alam, chief metropolitan magistrate of Chattogram, urged the authorities concerned of CMCH to issue the pending medical reports as early as possible.

"It is a critical issue. We are working together to resolve the matter," said Nishkriti Chakma, deputy commissioner (crime and operations) at CMP Headquarters.

A seven-year-long waterlogging woe

MIRZA SHAKIL, Tangail

Rasulpur area of Tangail Sadar upazila has been experiencing waterlogging over the past seven years.

The menace ensued after debris from a road construction project was dumped at the mouth of a canal flowing through the area, obstructing its flow and hindering its ability to drain away water.

As such, students of Rasulpur Bachhiron Nechha High School and Rasulpur Government Primary School, traders at Rasulpur Market, and dwellers of numerous houses in the area have been suffering immensely due to waterlogging every time it rains.

In monsoon, their sufferings know no bounds as the situation becomes exacerbated.

In 2017, when the road connecting Tangail with the Bangabandhu Bridge through Sadar upazila was turned into a four-lane one, the contractors dumped the debris at the mouth of the canal, alleged locals.

Since then, waterlogging in the area has been a persistent ordeal.

"Every time it rains, students are compelled to tread through muddy water while entering or leaving the school premises. In monsoon, their sufferings worsen as waterlogging becomes persistent throughout the season," said Md Abdul Mannan Sarkar, headteacher of Rasulpur Bachhiron Nechha High School.

Rashed Rahman, president of the school's managing committee, said, "We have written several times to the local lawmaker, Tangail's deputy commissioner, Sadar upazila parishad chairman, and Bangladesh Water Development Board executive engineer, seeking remedies to the problem."

However, no step has been taken to this end yet, he added.

Sajjad Hossain, executive engineer of BWDB in Tangail, said, "We are aware of the problem but the local administration and public representatives will have to take steps in this regard."

Contacted, Md Kaiserul Islam, deputy commissioner of Tangail, said the schools' authorities informed him about the matter. "Necessary steps will be taken in this regard after investigation," he added.

Constructing market by filling up two ponds

Habiganj mayor's move draws flak

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Moulvibazar

Habiganj Municipality Mayor Ataur Rahman has announced to construct a multi-storey market in the town by filling up two ponds.

He said this in the latest municipal budget announcement for FY 2024-25 unveiled at a press conference on July 8.

The announcement has drawn flaks from different quarters, including town dwellers and environmentalists, as it comes at a time when numerous areas in the town are facing a scarcity of freshwater alongside waterlogging problems.

Also, filling up of any waterbody is prohibited in the Water Conservation Act, 2000.

The two ponds, one being 60 decimals in size while the other one acre, are located in Tinkona area of the town in front of the Water Development Board's Habiganj district office.

Protesting the mayor's announcement, residents have organised various programmes.

Confirming the matter, SM Farhad, member secretary of Sacheton Nagorik Committee in Habiganj, said a memorandum has also been submitted to the deputy commissioner of the district for steps to prevent filling up the ponds for constructing market.

Shah Shaheda Akhter, coordinator of BELA in Sylhet, said they also sent a letter to the officials concerned on April 15.

Two die after falling sick in septic tank

UNB, Kushtia

Two people died and another was injured after falling sick inside a septic tank at Daulatpur upazila of Kushtia yesterday.

The deceased were identified as Liton Hossain, 30, a cleaner, and Rajon Hossain, 30, a neighbour who went to rescue Liton, said Mahabubur Rahman, officer-in-charge of Daulatpur Police Station.

The injured is Rajon's younger brother, Mizan Hossain, 18.

The incident occurred at the residence of Mosharraf Hossen of Bagowan village in Mathurapur union around 8:00am.

Locals and fire service members took them to Daulatpur Upazila Health Complex, where doctors declared Liton and Rajon dead.

"In the morning, Liton, who was working in the septic tank next to our house, started having difficulty breathing. My brother went to rescue him. Later, my brother also started having breathing difficulties. Then, I got injured while trying to rescue my brother. Later, we were rescued and taken to the hospital," said Mizan.

Police recovered the bodies and sent those to Kushtia Sadar Hospital for autopsy, added the OC.

A nuisance on school ground

Students suffer as construction materials remain piled up

AZIBOR RAHMAN, Jhenaidah

The premises of Kharashuni Government Primary School in Jhenaidah Sadar upazila has remained occupied since last Ramadan, storing materials of a road construction project by the district administration.

As a result, the students are unable to use the ground for assembly and sports activities, while the smoke and smell of bitumen and sound of stone crushing add nuisance during school hours.

"The contractor kept the construction materials on our school ground in last Ramadan without my permission, and has not removed those even though months have passed already. The UNO and primary education officer in the upazila have been informed, but no step has been taken in this regard yet," said Md Jomir Hossain, headteacher of the school.

"The students and teachers are having a hard time engaging in academic activities amid this nuisance. Also, they are being deprived of the scope to play on the ground during recess, as the entire land remains occupied by construction materials and equipment," he added.

Locals alleged that since the project is being initiated by the

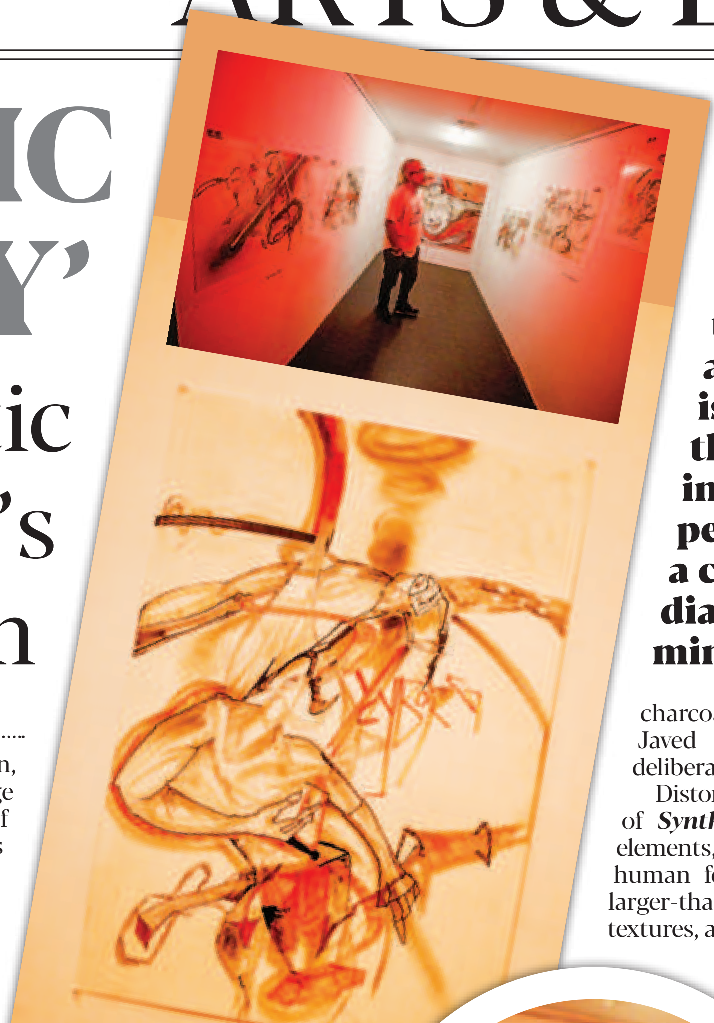
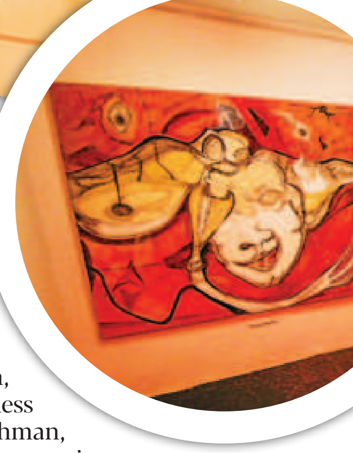
'SYNTHETIC REALITY'

Javed Jalil's artistic inquiry into mind's mechanism





Reflecting on the exhibition, Javed told The Daily Star, "The exhibition seamlessly integrates into my daily existence. It provides a stage for my artistry while I stay immersed in the next phase."

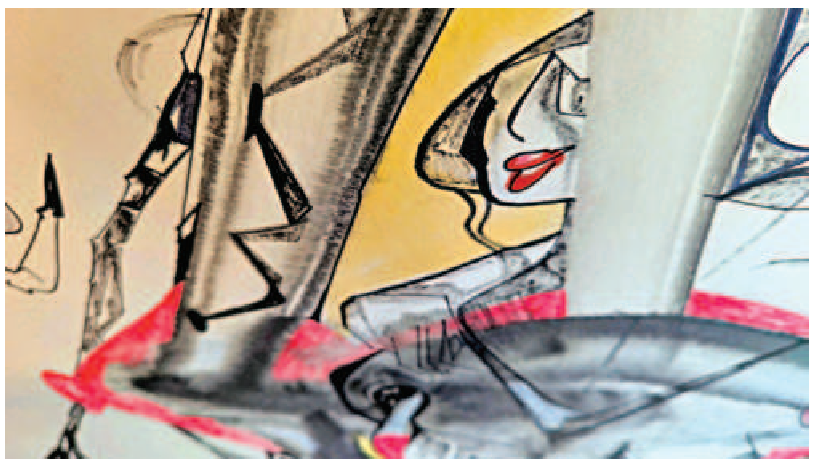
What defines a thought? Is it a solitary idea or several notions intertwined within themselves? Can a thought exist in isolation? Perhaps, thoughts are hardly innate, rather they are perceived uniquely in a continuous chaotic dialogue within the mind.

FAHIN RAHMAN AUNGKITA

Javed Jalil's second solo exhibition, Synthetic Reality provokes one to engage in an existential crisis with the reality of thoughts. With a series of 27 paintings made using oil and dry media on canvas, the exhibition is the first part of his project labeled "The RED".

Lit up in a warm and soft hue of red, a journey through the gallery hall is a stimulating experience. In the same palette of red, white, and grey with accents of yellow and black, every piece of art unravels an eventful arena accompanied by short titles to give the viewer a headway to their train of thought.

Upon entering the gallery, one would be greeted with Observer Being Observed, then Movement of Thought followed by Lonely Question, Touch of a Dragonfly, Unknown Acquaintance, and more, in the journey through paintings. The exhibition revolves around the idea that thought is not natural, it is inherently artificial- hence the tag "synthetic" in the title.



Last Friday (July 12), a warm inauguration ceremony was held at Kalakendra with tea and snacks. The special guests included Mubin S Khan, deputy editor of The Business Standard, and Sohel Rahman, an I/O psychologist and managing director of Asian Tiger Capital Holdings. Javed Jalil, a regular of Kalakendra's artistic ventures, was responsible for every detail of the exhibition, from selecting the pieces to arranging the lighting and placement. This is one exhibition where the artist took care of everything without a curator.

Mubin S Khan described the exhibition as the heart of Javed's imagination, revealing his mind clearly. Sohel Rahman was pleasantly surprised by the techniques and composition of the artworks. He said, "His technique is extraordinary, making oil paintings look like charcoal, pastels, and pencil drawings. Javed also achieves perfection in the deliberate distortion of the paintings."

Distortion is evident in the paintings of Synthetic Reality, with crosshatching elements, animal figures, and exaggerated human features. The art gives thoughts a larger-than-life presence with bold lines, timid textures, and fluid shapes.

The artist said, "If you view something under a microscope, something mundane may suddenly seem monstrous to us yet nothing in it has changed except the view. My work is a projection of how we choose to define the monstrosity."

The paintings, from Mating of a Pen to Barb Wire Driving, vary widely in focus. Complementing the paintings is a video installation reflecting the simultaneity of thought. Though conceptually diverse, the artworks explore how the human mind works. Javed compares it to driving, where multiple thoughts merge, making it hard to separate one from another.

Reflecting on the exhibition, Javed told The Daily Star, "The exhibition seamlessly integrates into my daily existence. It provides a stage for my artistry while I stay immersed in the next phase. I envision Synthetic Reality as an ongoing exploration, with 'The RED' marking just its initial chapter."

The exhibition is set to run from July 12 to 27 at Kalakendra, Lalmatia, from 4pm to 8pm daily.

Rahat Fateh Ali to grace Bangladeshi stage this July

Pakistani musician Rahat Fateh Ali Khan is all set to perform in Dhaka on July 20 at the United Convention Center. He announced the concert on Facebook on July 11. The event is organised by Buy Here Now (BHN).

Tickets for Rahat Fateh Ali Khan's concert are priced at Tk 10,000 each, with sales starting tonight at 8pm. BHN's Assistant Manager Touhidul Islam, told The Daily Prothom Alo that only one ticket category is available.

Rahat Fateh Ali Khan is renowned for his Qawwali, Ghazals, and Bollywood playback singing.

Ferdous meets Nachiketa for the first time in Dhaka

Renowned West Bengal musician Nachiketa Chakraborty enchanted the audience at the Dhaka Melancholy concert held at Hatirjheel Amphitheatre on Friday (July 12), leaving them spellbound.

In a special moment, actor and MP Ferdous Ahmed joined Nachiketa on stage for the first time at a concert. He shared photos on social media, and captioned, "Finally shared the stage with my dear Nachiketa da in Dhaka."

Ferdous concluded the post with, "This meeting feels like sudden rain! Nachiketa da is an incredible musician. Hothat Brishti was his debut film. Forever grateful to you, da."

The post was admired by fans of both stars.

Akhalia facing pollution, grabbing

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

Mindless dumping of waste into the Akhalia river in Mymensingh's Phulbaria municipality has been going on unabated for years.

Though local residents urged the authority concerned on several occasions to take proper step to stop the menace, nothing has been done so far.

Locals said the municipal authorities itself have been dumping garbage into the Akhalia river for the last 10 years as proper management of tonnes of garbage is still a far cry.

Phulbaria Municipality was established in 2001, but the municipality authorities are yet to select a designated spot for waste dumping since its establishment 23 years ago.

Moreover, as there is no dustbin in the municipality area people throw away waste materials to the river according to their will.

Several rivers including Akhalia, Khiru, Banar and Bajua flow through Phulbaria upazila and these rivers are considered as lifeline of agriculture and ecological balance of the locality.

Among the rivers, Akhalia that facing serious pollution and grabbing is flowing through Phulbaria municipality, locals lamented, adding that a section of people even cultivate Boro paddy in the river bed during the dry season, obstructing the flow of the river at different points.

During a recent visit to the municipality this correspondent saw huge garbage are being piled up along the riverbank in Bhalukjaan area.

One of the local residents, preferring not to be named, said the municipality staff themselves have been dumping household garbage in the area for the last couple of months.

On the other hand, the piles of garbage often washed away into the river even after a slight rain, polluting the river that falls into the Brahmaputra river after crossing adjacent Trishal upazila.

Shahjahan Sikder, a former councillor of the municipality, said once the river was a great source of water for irrigation and native fishes as well, but now the river has turn into a narrow canal.

AB Siddique, an incumbent councillor, said if the river is not protected from pollution and grabbing right now, local environment and ecological balance will surely deteriorate in near future.

Ibrahim Khalil, conservancy inspector at the municipality office, said the municipality authorities disposes nearly 25 tonnes of garbage every day, but the number of cleaning staff is too scanty to handle the job.

Only two trucks and five rickshaw-vans carry the garbage, he said. The municipality authorities have selected a designated waste dumping spot at Kushmail Chander Bazar and it will start functioning soon, Khalil added.

Disposal of waste materials and illegal encroachment is choking the Akhalia river in Mymensingh's Phulbaria Municipality. The photo was taken from Bhalukjaan area recently.

Krejcikova wins Wimbledon title

Paolini had to save two break points in the third game but she cracked under the strain again as the composed Czech stormed into a double-break ahead for 4-1.

Krejcikova moved to three set points in the eighth game and only needed one as Paolini dumped a backhand return into the net.

The nerve-wracked Italian managed to claim just four points on the Czech's serve in the 35-minute opener. Krejcikova hit 10 winners to the Italian's five.

Paolini dashed off Centre Court for a bathroom break and returned re-energised.

She had also dropped the first set in her marathon semi-final triumph over Donna Vekic and on Saturday she launched another second set fightback.

Breaks in the second and eighth games levelled the final after a set in which Krejcikova made 14 unforced errors to seven for her opponent and take her double-fault count to a tournament-high of 33.

The Czech managed just four winners in the set as she went spectacularly off the boil.

In Nalagarh, Congress' Hardeep Singh Bawa won against BJP's K L Thakur. The BJP won the Hamirpur seat with its candidate Ashish Sharma polling 27,041 votes against Congress's Pushpinder Verma 25,470 votes.

In Uttarakhand, the Congress's candidates for the Badrinath and Manglaur bypolls -- Lakhapat Singh Butola and Qazi Mohammad Nizamuddin -- won their seats.

In Madhya Pradesh, BJP's Kamslesh Pratap Shah won the Amarwara assembly seat, while in Bihar, Independent candidate Shankar Singh won the Rupauli seat.

Results were declared for the Assembly bypolls held in 13 constituencies across seven states on July 10. The bypolls were held in Bihar, West Bengal, Tamil Nadu, Madhya Pradesh, Uttarakhand, Punjab, and Himachal Pradesh.

Imran Khan to remain in jail against the military and other state installations that erupted following his brief arrest in May 2023.

An anti-terrorism court last week cancelled his bail in one of the May 9 cases registered against him and thousands of his supporters.

The party called it a "gimmick" aimed at prolonging his imprisonment.

Bibi is on bail in a land corruption case in which she is also co-accused with Khan, who is a free person after the latest acquittal, the party added.

All four jail sentences Khan received ahead of a February national election have now been overturned or suspended.

Jailed since last August, he was acquitted last month of charges of leaking state secrets. Two other corruption sentences have been suspended.

The PTI has warned that keeping Khan in jail despite yesterday's decision will deepen a political crisis which has crippled the country of 240 million people since he was ousted in a parliament vote of confidence in 2022.

Khan blames his ouster on the country's powerful military generals. No prime minister of Pakistan has completed a full five-year constitutional term since the country gained its independence in 1947.

Leave 10km inside border line

The full text of the HC verdict, released on July 11, said the 8km land from the border line will remain empty so that every inch of this land is clearly visible from 8km away.

The land between 8km and 10km from the border line should be kept reserved for all establishments and activities of the BGB, the HC said.

Once the area is declared as BGB property, the authorities should assess the losses of the private property owners and provide them with Khas land of equivalent value, it said.

"Jatiya Sangsad should consider this suggestions with due importance," reads the verdict.

The HC directed the Supreme Court registrar general to send a copy of the judgement and order to all MPs, lower court judges, the director general of BGB, and the home secretary through e-mails.

Euro, Copa finals promise pure thrills

Turning to Europe, not just because they are closer to our time zone but also because many star footballers from top European leagues, which have massive followings worldwide, appeared in Euro 2024.

While it was difficult witnessing holders Italy and perennial underachievers Croatia making embarrassing early exits, and the likes of Cristiano Ronaldo and Luka Modric exiting in tears, the emergence of youngsters like Lamine Yamal and Nico Williams of Spain, Arda Gueler of Turkey, Kobe Mainoo of England, Jamal Musiala and Florian Wirtz of Germany, and many more, more than made up for the disappointment from those old warhorses.

What started with a German blitz against the Scots at the Allianz Arena in Munich a month ago, with promises of the revival of the once-all-conquering Die Mannschaft, will culminate in a blockbuster final tonight when Spain square off against England. There will be many who scoff at not having their favourite teams in the final but will not begrudge the presence of two of the best teams in this tournament.

Spain, the preeminent force in global football a decade ago, seem to have reengineered their football and blasted their way through to the final with an all-win record, riding on youth and guile, while England, one of the most consistent teams in major tournaments under Gareth Southgate, have vindicated the hype with never-say-die performances in the knockout phases.

Whoever wins the final could signal a paradigm shift in football. For England, it could mark the beginning of many accolades, while Spain could usher in a new era of global dominance with this European crown.

The same, unfortunately, cannot be said about the Copa America. Fielding 16 teams with six invited from Concacaf, the event offered more diversity in terms of playing styles and personnel, but the tournament caught more attention for its physical football than the beautiful aspects usually associated with South American football.

Brazil have fallen well short of expectations in recent times, and their meek exit from the quarterfinals despite boasting mercurial talents like Vinicius Junior and Endrick, left more questions than answers regarding the future of the world's most storied footballing nation.

World champions Argentina, meanwhile, have made it to the final yet have been less than convincing at times with an aging side led by their inspirational leader Lionel Messi, who has looked like a pale shadow of his former self.

Gunning for a record 16th title, Argentina will hope that their captain rolls back the years to deny Colombia, led by a reenergized James Rodriguez, their second continental triumph.

As the curtains draw on these continental extravaganzas, football fans will reflect on the highs and lows of an exhilarating, action-packed month, leaving them eagerly awaiting the next chapter in this beautiful game.

Russian oil depot on fire after Ukraine drone attack

AFP, Moscow

An oil depot caught fire in Russia's Rostov region yesterday after a Ukrainian drone attack, its governor Vasily Golubev said on Telegram.

Both Moscow and Kyiv have used drones, including larger self-detonating craft with ranges stretching hundreds of kilometres extensively throughout the conflict, which began in February 2022.

"After a drone attack, a fire broke out in a petrol refinery in the Tsimlyansky district," Golubev wrote, adding that there were no casualties.

He later said the fire had been was extinguished.

Russia's defence ministry meanwhile announced that its forces had downed four Ukrainian drones -- two in Rostov, one in the Belgorod region adjoining Ukraine and another in Kursk which is up further north.

China blasts US Tibet-China dispute bill

Vows to 'firmly defend' its interests

REUTERS

China yesterday expressed strong opposition to a US law signed by President Joe Biden that presses Beijing to resolve a dispute over Tibet's demands for greater autonomy, vowing to "firmly defend" its interests.

Biden signed into law on Friday the Tibet dispute act, which seeks to push Beijing to hold talks with Tibetan leaders, stalled since 2010, to secure a negotiated agreement on the Himalayan region and spur China to address the Tibetan people's aspirations on their historical, cultural, religious and linguistic identity.

The law "grossly interferes in China's domestic affairs, undermines China's interests, and sends a severely wrong signal to the 'Tibet independence' forces," China's foreign ministry said.

Although Washington recognises Tibet as a part of China, the law appears to question that position, analysts say. The US has long supported the rights of the Tibetan people to practice their religion and culture, accusing China of human rights violations in the remote region bordering India.

"The US must not implement the Act," the China's ministry said. "If the US continues down the wrong path, China will take resolute measures to firmly defend its sovereignty, security and development interests."

Italian police free 33 Indian farm labourers from 'slavery'

REUTERS, Rome

Italian police said yesterday they had freed 33 Indian farm labourers from slave-like working conditions in the northern Verona province and seized almost half a million euros ($545,300) from their two alleged abusers.

Labour exploitation is in the spotlight in Italy following an accident in June in which an Indian fruit picker died after his arm was severed by machinery.

In the latest case, police said the alleged gang-masters, also from India, brought fellow nationals to Italy on seasonal work permits, asking them to pay 17,000 euros each and promising them a better future.

The migrants were given farm jobs, working seven days a week and 10-12 hours a day for just 4 euros per hour, which was entirely docked from them until they settled all their debts, police said, describing the migrants' treatment as "slavery".

Some were asked to continue working for free to pay an additional 13,000 euros for a permanent work permit "which, in reality, would have never been given to them," the police statement said.

'I came back from the dead'

Says Palestinian after being freed from Israeli jail

AFP, Bethlehem

Muazzaz Abayat's parents barely recognised their son lying in a hospital bed after being freed from nine months in Israeli detention, with his weight halved from his usual heavyset build, hollowed cheeks and shaggy hair.

"I came back from the dead," the 37-year-old Palestinian, told AFP at a hospital in Bethlehem in the occupied West Bank.

Abayat, a butcher by trade, was arrested without explanation on October 26.

About 9,700 Palestinians are currently in Israeli jails, including hundreds under administrative detention.

He was held at a prison in the Negev desert, officially under so-called administrative detention, which meant he could be held without charge or trial for an extended period.

"They arrested me at home, not surrounded by fighters but by my children and pregnant wife," said Abayat, whose sixth child was born while he was in jail.

Detentions of West Bank Palestinians have soared since the offensive began on October 7, with regular use of administrative detentions.

According to the Prisoners Club, a Palestinian watchdog, about 9,700 Palestinians are currently in Israeli jails, including hundreds under administrative detention.

The NGO estimates that arrests have doubled since October 7 compared to the same period last year.

Violence has surged in the territory since the start of the Gaza offensive, with at least 572 Palestinians killed by Israeli troops or settlers, according to the Palestinian authorities.

In a video that went viral on social media when Abayat was freed Tuesday, he is seen limping and leaning on a man to walk, while his right hand seems paralysed.

"No human being on the face of the earth can imagine how life has been" he said, calling the prison where he was held, "the 'Guantanamo of the Negev'", after the US prison in Cuba used to hold detainees after the September 11, 2001 attacks.

"We were unjustly detained, killed and severely beaten with iron clubs and subjected to all kinds of torture," Abayat added.

Israel's prison administration told AFP it was "not aware" of Abayat's claims.

"All prisoners are detained according to the law. All basic rights required are fully applied by professionally trained prison guards," an Israeli Prison Service (IPS) spokesperson told AFP.

"The prisoner was examined and treated medically by the IPS' finest doctors throughout his incarceration." The spokesperson said, Abayat could file a complaint if he wished.

Showing his bruised, bony legs, Abayat recounted beatings with clubs and chains, and said his body still hurt all over.

French PM Attal eyes rebuilding political force

AFP, Paris

France's prime minister was elected leader of his party's National Assembly by lawmakers yesterday as politicians from all sides jockeyed for position to form the next government.

Gabriel Attal was the only candidate in the vote by the Renaissance party parliamentary group, which he plans to use as the base from which to rebuild the political force that got roundly beaten in a snap election called by President Emmanuel Macron.

Of the 98 Renaissance deputies registered to vote, 84 backed Attal, who will start in his role next week.

As Attal and other ministers eye a future outside government, deep cracks have appeared between the 35-year-old premier and his former mentor Macron.

Macron did not get any mention in Attal's message to Renaissance deputies outlining his leadership bid, with observers saying that the prime minister blames the president for calling the vote.

Last Sunday's election runoff left the National Assembly without any overall majority, but a broad alliance -- called New Popular Front won the most seats, with 193 in the 577-strong lower chamber.

Musk donates to group working to elect Trump

Reports Bloomberg

REUTERS, Washington

Billionaire Elon Musk, who has been ramping up criticism of US President Joe Biden, has donated to a political group working to elect rival presidential candidate Donald Trump, Bloomberg reported on Friday, citing sources.

The report did not indicate how much Musk donated but added it was "a sizable amount" given to a group called America PAC.

Bloomberg reported that the PAC - a group that can receive unlimited contributions for political activity - is next required to disclose its list of donors on July 15.

In March, Trump, a former US President who is expected to be formally nominated next week as the Republican Party's candidate for the November 5 election, met with Musk and other wealthy donors.

In response to reports of the meeting, South Africa-born Musk posted on X: "Just to be super clear, I am not donating money to either candidate for US President."

In May, he also denied media reports that there had been talks over a potential advisory role for him in any Trump presidency.

Musk, the world's richest person who runs electric car maker Tesla, rocket maker SpaceX, social media company X and other companies, did not respond to Reuters' request for comments.

Biden campaign spokesman James Singer said that Musk knows Trump is "a sucker who will sell America out, cutting his taxes while raising taxes on the middle class by $2,500."

Stop deporting undocumented Afghans

Malala tells Pakistan

AFP, London

Nobel laureate Malala Yousafzai called for Pakistan to stop deporting undocumented Afghans, saying she was especially concerned about the "dark future" awaiting women and girls sent back.

"It is deeply concerning that Pakistan is forcing Afghan refugees based in Pakistan back into Afghanistan, and I'm deeply concerned about the women and girls", the activist, who was awarded the Nobel Peace prize in 2014, told AFP in an interview on Friday.

Despite extending leave for Afghan refugees with permits to stay in Pakistan for another year, Islamabad this week said it would remove illegal migrants.

More than 600,000 Afghans have fled Pakistan since Islamabad last year ordered undocumented migrants to leave or face arrest.

Human rights monitors have warned that some sent to Afghanistan faced persecution by the Taliban, who came into power in 2021 and have imposed an austere form of Islam, barring girls from higher education and excluding women and girls from areas of public life.

"A lot of these girls in Pakistan were studying, they were in school, these women were doing work", said Malala, 27, who grew up in Pakistan's Swat valley.

Population to peak at 10.3bn in the 2080s: UN

AFP, New York

Earth's population will peak in the mid-2080s at around 10.3 billion people, then drop slightly to a level much lower than anticipated a decade ago, the UN said.

The current population of 8.2 billion people will rise to that maximum over the next 60 years, then dip to 10.2 billion by the end of the century, says a report released Thursday entitled "World Population Prospects 2024."

It said size of population in 2100 will be six percent lower than what was anticipated in June 2013.

"The demographic landscape has evolved greatly in recent years," said Li Junhua, UN Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs.

He said unexpected population peak stems from several factors that include lower levels of fertility in some countries.

No development for the drainage system?

Dhaka residents suffer as rain and waterlogging cause disruptions

Over the last four years, the two city corporations of Dhaka have spent at least Tk 730 crore to resolve its waterlogging problem. But for all that spending, there is still no sign of improvement, as Friday's rains and resultant public sufferings have once again demonstrated. The downpour, which started in the early hours and continued until noon, flooded many streets and homes, causing disruptions across the city. Many areas, especially in DSCC, would remain under water even 12 hours after the rain had stopped. This is notable because the DSCC mayor, in February last year, had promised swift drainage of water—within just 15 minutes—even after heavy monsoon rains. Are we to forget all such promises? How is it that a government frequently reminding us of its development success cannot bring any semblance of development to this particular sector?

According to our report, people who went out on the weekend endured immense sufferings, as they had to wade through knee-to-waist-deep water to reach their destinations. Public transport was scarce, but heavy congestion still ensued in some flooded streets as a number of vehicles broke down. While talking to this daily, some commuters described how they had to switch multiple vehicles to get to their destinations. Meanwhile, rainwater infiltrated underground parking spaces, reservoirs, and ground floors of residential buildings, with many seen trying to pump it out. Many shops were also affected, with stored goods being damaged.

City planners say it is the inadequate drainage system—not the rainfall—that floods our streets. In Dhaka, the Met office recorded 130mm of rainfall in just six hours on Friday. It was a heavy downpour by every measure. But, as an expert at the Bangladesh Institute of Planners (BIP) has said, the city's drainage system cannot clear out water even after a moderate 55-60mm of rainfall, as excess water cannot flow into the rivers or retention ponds because of the clogging of surface drains and connected canals. Crores of taka have been spent to remove waste from these drains and canals and to recover the latter from encroachers. Even the transfer of ownership of canals from Dhaka WASA to the city corporations did not help the situation.

We cannot emphasise enough the urgency of addressing this waterlogging nightmare in Dhaka and elsewhere. The failure of city authorities, despite substantial investments and countless promises made over the years, demands a proper response. We urge the authorities to take comprehensive measures to fix, upgrade, and properly maintain the drainage system, and go hard against those encroaching the canals. Furthermore, unregulated development that leads to the loss of canals and low-lying areas must be halted.

Unused dorms an eyesore for students

The peculiar case of Khulna Polytechnic must be resolved

It is shocking that the four dormitories of Khulna Polytechnic Institute have been lying abandoned for 15 years even as students struggle to find affordable accommodation off campus, as revealed by a report. For women students especially, not being able to stay in dormitories poses security risks as they face harassment on their way to and from campus. It is baffling that when most public educational institutions face overcrowding in their dormitories, this polytechnic institute actually has four that are not occupied and that have been allowed to become dilapidated due to lack of maintenance.

The hostels were closed for security reasons in 2009 when students were protesting the cancellation of an exam and clashed with police. But why the authorities kept them padlocked, with the electricity disconnected, after classes resumed is certainly a mystery. Why did they not reopen them after proper maintenance? If it was a budgetary issue, why did they not send applications to the higher authorities to that effect? And why did the Education Engineering Department, responsible for monitoring such buildings, not do its job?

This is a case of sheer, collective negligence for which all relevant departments must be held accountable. It is unacceptable that an institution as old as this and having such a huge campus would allow its dormitories to rot while the students face a housing crisis. The principal has said that a female dormitory with 500 seats and a 10-storey academic building will be built in place of the four dorms. How long will this take? Moreover, it still doesn't answer why the existing buildings have remained closed for so many years.

We have many government polytechnic institutions that are supposed to be geared towards equipping students with technical skills so that they can work and thrive in relevant fields. But there seems to be a general apathy towards this vital sector, and the state of Khulna dormitories is a case in point. We urge the education ministry to immediately enquire into this matter and take effective steps to ensure proper use of these buildings. The institute's administration also should make sincere efforts to provide students with seats in dormitories and ensure that those do not fall into the grips of political elements.

How the cyberspace is being manipulated

KALLOL MUSTAFA

Evgeny Morozov, in his book The Net Delusion: How Not to Liberate The World (Penguin, 2012), defined "cyber-utopianism" as a naive idea that the internet favours the oppressed rather than the oppressor. Contrary to the beliefs of the cyber-utopians, Evgeny showed how the internet has become a useful tool for authoritarian governments for propaganda, censorship, and surveillance—the three main pillars of Orwellian authoritarian control.

In the age of internet and digital technology, these three pillars of authoritarianism have become so interconnected that efforts to undermine one pillar might ruin the efforts to do something about the other two. For example, in order to avoid the control of the traditional censorship, if the people flock to social networking sites, they may fall prey to surveillance and propaganda. The more trust users put in social networks, the easier it is to use the networks to promote carefully disguised government messages and boost the propaganda apparatus.

Bangladeshi netizens are not outside this mechanism, which has become evident from the latest Adversarial Threat Report prepared by Meta, the parent company of Facebook. In its first quarterly report of 2024 published in May, Meta has announced the removal of 50 Facebook accounts and 98 pages with 3.4 million followers which are linked to Bangladesh's ruling Awami League, citing violations of its policy against Coordinated Inauthentic Behaviour (CIB).

According to Meta, CIB refers to coordinated efforts to manipulate public debate for a strategic goal, in which fake accounts are central to the operation. In each case, people coordinate with one another and use fake accounts to mislead others about who they are and what they are doing.

In the chapter titled "Bangladesh-based Network" and appendix, Meta's report exposed the fake accounts which posed as fictitious new entities or existing news organisations in Bangladesh. Some pages used the Bangladesh Nationalist Party (BNP) in their name and posted anti-BNP content. Many of these pages had a corresponding presence across several platforms, including YouTube, X (formerly Twitter), TikTok, and Telegram, in addition to their own websites.

According to Meta, the network posted primarily in Bengali and also in English about news and current events in Bangladesh, including elections, criticism of the BNP, allegations of BNP's corruption and its role in pre-election violence, as well as supporting commentary about the incumbent government, the ruling party and its role in the technological development of Bangladesh.

VISUAL: SHAIKH SULTANA JAHAN BADHON

Meta found this activity as a result of its internal investigation into spammy inauthentic amplification activity in the region. Although the people behind it attempted to conceal their identity and coordination, Meta's investigation found links to individuals associated with the Awami League and the Centre for Research and Information, a non-profit organisation in Bangladesh associated with Awami League.

In the appendix of the report, Meta also gives a list of websites, X accounts, Telegram and YouTube channels, TikTok accounts, and names of fictitious news outlets which are used to spread misinformation with political purpose. According to Meta, the network worked to a regular shift pattern, posting between 07:00 and 21:00 GMT (1pm to 3am Bangladesh time), with a peak between 13:00 and 18:00 GMT (7pm to 12am Bangladesh time), and notably fewer posts on Fridays.

This is not the first time that government propaganda efforts have been exposed by Meta/Facebook. Earlier in December 2018, Facebook published a report titled "Taking Down Coordinated Inauthentic Behavior in Bangladesh" where it announced removal of nine Facebook pages and six Facebook accounts for engaging in coordinated inauthentic behaviour. Facebook mentioned that after getting a tip from Graphika, a threat intelligence company that it worked with, it discovered that these pages were designed to look like independent news outlets and posted pro-government and anti-opposition content. Facebook directly linked these propaganda activities to individuals associated with the government at that time.

The irony is that on the one hand, the government has enacted cyber security laws in the name of preventing rumours and propaganda, and is asking for support from global technology companies like Facebook, Google, and TikTok to prevent rumours, block user accounts and pages, remove content. On the other hand, the ruling party and its research wing themselves have engaged in organised disinformation campaign against the opposition parties using fake accounts.

According to the latest Google transparency report, the Bangladesh government made 591 content removal requests to Google in the last six months of 2023, of which 310 or 52 percent were related to government criticism and 175 or 30 percent were related to defamation. According to Meta's latest transparency report, from July to December 2023, the Bangladesh government sought information about 2,164 users or accounts. Meta has provided information in 67.81 percent of the cases. In the same period, the government made 3,459 content restriction requests to Meta, of which 2,049 were Facebook posts and 1,357 were Facebook comments.

However, government control over the flow of information is not limited to removing or blocking content. Of course, similar to banning books or newspapers, governments block websites and apps to varying degrees depending on the situation and regime of internet-based communication. But this is not the only way to control the internet. Apart from creating various barriers to the flow of information that is dangerous for the government, there are many other ways to control people's thoughts. Some examples of these mechanisms are keeping people busy with various unimportant issues, publicising government statements or positions as neutral opinions or news, and controlling the content of discussions on social media through hired individuals and organisations, etc.

This type of activities can also be undertaken using traditional media, but by exploiting the various features of the internet and digital technologies, these activities can be implemented on a wider basis much more easily, effectively, and at a lower cost than traditional media.

With new forms of authoritarian and surveillance capitalism developing around the internet and digital technologies, it is important to hold both the government and technology companies accountable to the citizens to ensure privacy and freedom of expression. Just as unaccountable authority is harmful in the real world, it is equally dangerous in the virtual world of the internet—especially when the real and the virtual become one.

A roadmap to effective dengue control

MAHADEE AL MOBIN

In the battle against dengue, Bangladesh stands at a critical juncture. As the nation grapples with the possibility of the deadliest outbreak ever witnessed, it's imperative that we mobilise every resource at our disposal to combat this relentless foe.

Dengue began to emerge as a significant public health concern at the turn of the century, but its proliferation seemed to decelerate between 2006 and 2010. This brief period of respite, however, was not to last. With the rapid pace of technological advancement, unrestrained urbanisation, and the swift onset of climate change, the dengue problem has surged with renewed vigour since 2015.

The harrowing statistics paint a grim picture: a staggering 321,179 hospitalised cases in 2023 alone, with a heart-wrenching 1,705 lives lost to this insidious disease. These numbers are not just figures on a page; they represent mothers, fathers, sons, and daughters whose lives have been cut short by a preventable tragedy. Behind each statistic lies a story of anguish and despair, of families torn apart by the merciless grip of dengue.

Children, the most vulnerable among us, bear the brunt of this crisis, with over 113 young lives lost last year alone. Their innocence should shield them from such suffering, yet they are among the hardest hit.

But the true extent of this crisis may be even greater than official figures suggest. Underreporting and inadequate healthcare infrastructure means that the actual burden of dengue is likely far higher than we dare to imagine.

What's more, dengue's relentless march knows no season, with cases now being reported year-round, defying the traditional confines of the monsoon season. From January to April this year, 2,111 people have been hospitalised, with 24 lives tragically cut short.

Amidst the shadows of despair, a glimmer of hope illuminates our path forward—a chance to reverse the tide of dengue's relentless onslaught. As we confront this crisis head-on, we must not only learn from past experiences but also adopt a holistic, year-round approach to dengue prevention and control.

This journey begins with education as we strive to raise awareness within our communities about the perils of dengue and the simple yet impactful measures we can all take. From eradicating breeding grounds to practicing personal protective measures, each individual's contribution is vital in stemming the spread of this epidemic.

We must also bolster our healthcare infrastructure, ensuring equitable access to quality care and life-saving treatments for all. From the villages of rural Bangladesh to the bustling urban hubs, comprehensive healthcare must be within reach for every citizen.

Moreover, we must address the underlying environmental factors that fuel the dengue crisis, such as stagnant water and unplanned urbanisation. By implementing targeted vector control measures and fostering collaboration between governmental bodies and local communities, we can disrupt the breeding cycle of mosquitoes and mitigate the spread of dengue at its source.

Vector control measures in Bangladesh's municipal areas predominantly depend on fogging, which offers short-term relief but lacks long-term effectiveness. A more sustainable approach involves using targeted sugar baits, which have significantly reduced malaria in Zambia.

In rural and suburban regions, introducing predatory fish like guppies (Poecilia reticulata) into stagnant water bodies can curb dengue by consuming mosquito larvae. Additionally, fostering an environment conducive to mosquito predators such as frogs and wild lizards can serve as a natural and effective vector control measure. These biological agents can integrate seamlessly into the ecosystem, providing a sustainable solution that enhances existing efforts.

Yet, amidst these efforts, a critical gap persists—a gap between the wealth of scientific knowledge amassed by researchers and its translation into actionable policies by policymakers. This disconnect leaves us vulnerable to the escalating threat of dengue, with projections indicating a worsening infection scenario this year compared to 2023.

To bridge this gap effectively, we must consider innovative solutions, such as the establishment of dedicated agencies or institutional frameworks exclusively dedicated to vector control management programmes. These entities would serve as catalysts for collaboration, fostering dialogue between researchers, policymakers, and other stakeholders to devise evidence-based strategies for combating the dengue epidemic comprehensively.

Examining global models reveals the pivotal role of dedicated agencies in combatting vector-borne diseases. Take, for instance, Europe's European Centre for Disease Prevention and Control (ECDC). Through collaboration with national health protection bodies, the ECDC's multifaceted approach, spanning surveillance to health communication, showcases the power of a unified front against vector-borne illnesses.

Across the Atlantic, the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) exemplifies specialised divisional prowess through its Division of Vector-Borne Diseases (DVBD), leading the charge in research and prevention efforts against mosquito and tick-borne ailments.

Near home, India's National Center for Vector Borne Diseases Control (NCVBDC) spearheads the National Vector Borne Diseases Control Programme (NVBDCP), employing targeted strategies like indoor residual spraying and insecticide-treated bed nets to combat malaria and dengue.

These international examples underscore the critical need for Bangladesh to establish similar dedicated agencies.

In Bangladesh, the Institute of Epidemiology, Disease Control, and Research (IEDCR) evaluates the overall dengue scenario, while city corporations manage the field-level implementation of vector control strategies. Establishing a dedicated organisation or agency focused on comprehensive surveillance and field-level execution for vector-borne diseases could significantly mitigate the impact during peak seasons. Such an entity would optimise resources and enhance the effectiveness of interventions by working in synergy with existing infrastructures, ensuring a more coordinated and robust response to this pressing public health challenge.

RAIN OF LOVE, RAIN OF SORROW

Kalidas's Meghdoot and Bangladesh's monsoon reality

Ayesha Humayra Waresa

AYESHA HUMAYRA WARESA

It is not unusual for us to experience an intense sense of nostalgia and longing for our loved ones as the monsoon clouds roll in and the first raindrops touch the ground. Much like in Kalidas's acclaimed Sanskrit poem "Meghdoot" where on the first day of the monsoon, Yaksha felt a desperate longing to reach his distant wife.

The myth follows Yaksha, who was banished by his master Kuber to the remote Ramgiri mountain for neglecting his duties, separated from his beloved wife. In yearning for her, Yaksha sees thick clouds drifting towards north on the first day of the month Ashar and appeals to a passing cloud to deliver a message to his wife in the faraway city of Alaka. Thus begins "Meghdoot", with an imaginary dialogue between the Yaksha and the cloud.

Kalidas used clouds to symbolise Yaksha's hope of sending a heartfelt message to his beloved. Aside from that, their majestic presence brings joy and relief to the people suffering from the scorching summer heat, emerging as their answered prayer and announcing long awaited rain.

But monsoon in Bangladesh contrasts this idyllic portrayal. While some indulge in weather demands like khichuri or fritters with a hot cup of tea, for others—working professionals, students, or those running errands—it's a complete curse. Waterlogged streets, muddy footpaths, traffic jams, and high transport costs turn everyday tasks into a challenge. For those living in flood-prone areas near riverbanks, monsoon brings additional hardships. It becomes a period of survival, at least the recent floods in Sylhet hint so.

Which is why, although Kalidas associated monsoon clouds with concepts of nature and love, in Bangladesh, the arrival of the monsoon is now viewed with concerns because of the hardships it could cause.

Natural occurrences or debts to pay?

Throughout history, monsoon in Bangladesh has been more than just a season of rain, it is a celebrated cultural experience influencing folk songs, festivals, and agricultural practices. Historically, successful monsoon brought abundance, while a failed or weak one could even trigger famine.

Monsoon in Bangladesh has become too complex to be simply termed a "natural disaster." In recent years, it has posed increasing challenges, with Bangladesh ranking seventh on the 2021 Global Climate Risk Index, highlighting its vulnerability to climate devastation.

This predicament extends across South Asia, where scientists attribute these changes to the climate crisis, predicting stronger monsoons with more heavy rainfall ahead. But addressing these challenges requires moving beyond viewing the damages as purely natural occurrences, because that approach helps us avoid our accountability for the damages incurred. A study titled "Fourth National Climate Assessment", published by the US Global Change Research Program provides compelling evidence that human activities, notably fossil fuel burning, are the primary factors behind warming trend across the globe that is affecting climate patterns.

Colonial mindset

When we mention human activity, it is essential to acknowledge the colonial mindset that emerged after post-British rule. During the British period, the rulers saw waterways, especially the delta's changing rivers, as obstacles to management, taxation, and governance.

For over 200 years, urban development prioritised creating dry land by regulating waterways, filling up the rivers, canals, embankments, and other structures. They created maps and laws, like the Permanent Settlement Act, to clearly distinct land from water.

They constructed other infrastructure projects, to dominate the delta and increase profitability. Local influentials and natives also participated for their benefit. These actions normalised the alteration of the natural water-soaked ecology, leading people to forget and overlook the potential consequences.

Even after the British left, city and water management remained unchanged. The government continued building embankments and dams to control rivers, aiming to modernise the country. This infrastructure-focused approach overlooked the challenges of filling waterways, causing most of the monsoon struggles people experience now.

Now, the monsoon makes us wonder how the situation escalated, whereas we acknowledge that current approaches to managing water aren't really effective.

Yet the obsession with West-defined "development" continues to promise us more unplanned infrastructure projects, often supported by international organisations. Such aims overshadow questions for what the climate needs and how cities in a monsoon-fed landscape should be designed.

Environment vs economy: Who is paying the price for these developments?

The recent floods in Sylhet serve as a relevant example of the impact of forced development. These floods are happening for many reasons. Located just below Cherrapunji, known as the wettest place on Earth, Sylhet is naturally prone to significant rain. But the last two years clearly suggest that human actions too are exacerbating the situation there.

In areas like Sylhet or Sunamganj, the lands used to be different: rivers were navigable, and there were fewer roads and structures. Now, floodwaters take more time to recede. Previously, swamps and sinkholes helped contain floodwaters, but this is no longer the case.

Because every region has a capacity limit for water absorption, when rainfall exceeds this limit, flooding occurs—which has become a regular fixture in Sylhet. The hilly terrain of Sylhet historically allowed rainwater to naturally flow down from high grounds. But unplanned development, including filling water bodies and rampant illegal hill-cutting disrupted this natural balance and exacerbated flood risks, while eroding the area's geographical identity. Roads constructed across the Haor region impede water flow, while urban development prevents water from permeating the ground.

While flooding can be natural, waterlogging primarily stems from human errors and negligence. Unplanned infrastructure that fills up the waterways, leaving no natural pathways for water, makes for inadequate drainage systems, compounded by additional plastic pollution.

We cannot, anymore, imagine monsoon without waterlogging, especially in Dhaka, despite ongoing promises from local authorities to resolve the issue. Responsibility has shifted from WASA to the city corporations, with hundreds of crores spent on drainage projects. However, the heavy rainfall continues to cause severe waterlogging due to inadequate drainage systems, blocked catch pits, plastic pollution, and outdated infrastructure.

Even in Chattogram, moderate to heavy rainfall is enough to inundate residential areas, main roads, lanes, and by-lanes across both the old and new parts of the city, notably because of defiance of a 1995 drainage master plan, hasty project implementations without feasibility studies, and the filling of 70 percent of water bodies for construction purposes and more.

Landslides in Bangladesh from 2000 to 2022 have caused 727 deaths, including 54 children, and 1,017 injuries. Historical records of landslide events indicate an average of 19 landslides annually in the country, with a four percent increase each year.

The never-ending saga of the Teesta treaty

The management of international rivers like Teesta and Ganga, particularly the opening of the Farakka and Teesta barrage gates during heavy rains and upstream water flow from India, has caused ongoing damages and hardships for the people of Bangladesh. These rivers are governed by the United Nations' International River Convention of 1997, which establishes rules for their shared use.

According to Article 7.2 of the convention, if significant harm is caused to another watercourse state, the state responsible must consult with the affected state, taking effective measures to eliminate or mitigate the harm. This includes discussing compensation where appropriate. Bangladesh retains the right to seek compensation for damages resulting from upstream projects affecting these rivers.

But each time, hopes for progress on the Teesta treaty are dashed by West Bengal's objections and India's extensive irrigation use of Teesta's water, similarly to the Ganges and the Farakka barrage.

Many believe that negotiation with India could be pivotal—a collaborative approach to managing shared rivers rather than unilateral diversions. However, decolonising the idea of development should be taken seriously as well. This involves rethinking infrastructure priorities, emphasising highly on the waterways and their natural flow, focusing on resilient and sustainable solutions, investing in robust drainage systems capable of handling monsoon deluges and providing early warning systems to mitigate disaster risks. Moreover, safeguarding vulnerable communities living in flood-prone areas and ensuring their shelter and safety must be prioritised in urban planning and development.

As we revel in the cozy comforts of a monsoon at home, we experience a modern interpretation of Kalidas's poetic vision. In "Meghdoot", clouds conveyed messages of love. But today, our clouds carry concerns about the severity of each year's monsoon. What we often term as "development" can backfire when the rains arrive, leading to flooded streets, precarious landslides, and a reminder that our monsoon has become more about survival than celebration.

Getting out of the abyss of moral depravity

Khandaker R Zaman
is an alumnus of the Australian Maritime College, University of Tasmania, and a former fellow of the Chartered Institute of Logistics and Transport.

KHANDAKER R ZAMAN

We are living in a society where corruption is rampant, pervasive, and institutionalised. The organisational structure of any institution should make it impossible for corruption of massive proportions to go undetected or continue unhindered without the knowledge of the higher echelons, unless they too are complicit in the crime and benefits from the loot. Unfortunately, that appears to be the case with the unravelling of illicit wealth amassed by some of the top echelons of the state machinery.

In Bangladesh, we are witnessing white-collar thugs who abused their power and position and allegedly committed crimes of all sorts and magnitude including intimidation, extortion, embezzlement, insider-trading, illegal occupation and possession of lands to become superrich overnight. Their reported accumulation of illicit wealth and illegal exercise of power dwarfs that of even Al Capone.

The questions that arises are—what were the public institutions or departments, where these thugs worked, doing when these crimes were being committed. Similarly, where were the agencies, responsible for monitoring monetary transactions? Also, what roles did the central banking authority and Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit (BFIU) play while billions were being laundered, which the Global Financial Integrity (GFI) terms as Illicit Financial Flow (IFF). The interesting thing is while overseas organisations keep figures of IFF from Bangladesh, our own agencies or authorities remain oblivious to it, therefore, raising suspicion of their complicity in the crimes. GFI, the Washington-based think tank on illicit financial flows, corruption, illicit trade, and money laundering had reported that a struggling economy like Bangladesh lost an astonishing sum of $61.6 billion during the period 2005-2014 in outward illicit financial flow or money laundering. The outward IFF is alleged to have spiked since then, as a result of which the economy of the country has been further crippled and the foreign reserve has depleted from over $48 billion in August 2021 to $12.8 billion in net reserve in April 2024. The country is now in a serious crisis to meet its import payments which impacts its foreign trade and balance of payment. The resultant upward surge in inflation has brought misery to the lives of the common people.

In Bangladesh, we are witnessing white-collar thugs who abused their power and position and allegedly committed crimes of all sorts and magnitude including intimidation, extortion, embezzlement, insider-trading, illegal occupation and possession of lands to become superrich overnight. Their reported accumulation of illicit wealth and illegal exercise of power dwarfs that of even Al Capone.

Meanwhile the Anti-Corruption Commission (ACC), which is too weak, too compromised, and too scared, is failing to effectively prosecute the Al Capones of Bangladesh. Even the criminal justice system is not faring any better. Thus, the Al Capones often manage to obtain a safe passage to countries where they can stash their illicit money and properties.

This perhaps explains why Benazir could leave the country and Matiur could flee despite the massive allegations of corruption. The case of Matiur is even more amusing. On June 24, the ACC went to court seeking an order to bar him and his family from leaving the country after, but according to news reports, Matiur and his family had already fled the country. ACC's actions remind us of the English grammar lessons in schools: "the doctor arrived after the patient had died." It also raises the obvious question why the ACC didn't institute the same proceedings against Benazir, rather made it possible for him to pass through the border check post manned by the very force that he had commanded once. On the other hand, many people are detained or refused clearance to embark on their outward journey on flimsy grounds.

Returning to Matiur's case, it is alleged that a very influential cartel facilitated the former revenue boss's safe passage out of the country. The drama doesn't seem to have ended yet with some reports saying that Matiur hasn't fled but is hiding in the country. Interestingly, his companion in corruption—his wife—is boasting with shameless pride that they have managed powerful media and power centres and nothing would happen to them. She is correct to an extent that law in the country never gets hold of the wealthy and powerful no matter what illegal, illicit or immoral actions they take. The fact is: an unholy nexus of unlawful cartels, regulators, politicians, and bureaucrats exercise such ruthless power and influence that the interests of the state and that of the people become secondary to theirs. Their triumph is visible but none dares to point it out because "justice" is long dead.

The nation is in hibernation and unlikely to wake up soon because the rot has gone on for so long and so deep that it has infested the entire social system, losing its strength to take measures to clear the mess it has gathered over time. The most concerning factor is not the money lost through corruption but the fact that it is leading us to a hopeless future. The prevailing perversions are damaging, and are creating an unhealthy social structure. Young people are helplessly witnessing crimes in high offices and how the criminals remain immune from prosecution. The statutory institutions are becoming weak putting democracy in jeopardy. Honesty and integrity are being replaced by insatiable greed and debauchery. Different branches of the state are failing to uphold and discharge their respective functions. Finally, meritorious youths are getting frustrated at the prevailing state of affairs and leaving the country in droves. Only the half-educated, mediocre and illiterates are left behind to run the country.

The devastatingly falling standard of our tertiary education is a major contributing factor to the abyss of moral depravity. The shameless sycophancy in academia and the failure to nurture and cherish meritocracy is creating an atmosphere where learning is becoming absent and earning money has become the main objective for students. I am not aware of any nation apart from ours which permits student politics of the kind and nature, that dominates our educational institutions. Students in other countries aspire to become responsible members of the society and contribute to its development and prosperity. They don't have the time or leisure to indulge in activities that are fraught with corruption and servility to power.

It is time we ask ourselves the most pertinent question of our time—whether we want to see ourselves as a failed state or should we bury all our ills and work towards building a nation dreamt by Bangabandhu and the millions who shed their blood and dignity to liberate the country and gifted us a free and sovereign nation. We certainly don't want to leave a failed nation for our children. It is about time and absolutely imperative that the nation mustered all its strength to rise and shake itself off the mud and filth it has accumulated thus far. It is not going to be easy to come out of the unfathomable quagmire of corruption and moral turpitude, but if we start the hard work now, a new generation will rise to pull the country out of its misery.

Sleep duration linked to blood vessel damage in Diabetes

STAR HEALTH REPORT

If you have recently been diagnosed with type 2 diabetes, paying attention to your sleep habits might be more important than you think. A recent study published in The Lancet reveals that both too little and too much sleep can increase the risk of developing serious complications related to diabetes.

Type 2 diabetes is already a challenging condition, but it becomes even more problematic when it leads to microvascular disease—damage to the small blood vessels. This can result in complications such as retinopathy (eye damage) and nephropathy (kidney damage). Now, research from Denmark has shown that your sleep duration plays a significant role in this risk.

In a study involving nearly 400 people newly diagnosed with type 2 diabetes, participants' sleep was tracked using wearable devices for 10 days. The findings were clear: those who slept less than 7 hours or more than 9 hours per night were at a higher risk of microvascular damage compared to those who had an optimal sleep duration of 7 to 9 hours.

Specifically, short sleepers had a 2.6 times higher risk of microvascular disease, while long sleepers had a 2.3 times higher risk. Age further amplified these risks. For people aged 62 and older, short sleep was associated with a 5.7 times higher risk of small blood vessel damage.

The takeaway? Maintaining a healthy sleep schedule is crucial for managing type 2 diabetes and preventing further complications. While lifestyle changes for diabetes often focus on diet and exercise, ensuring you get an optimal amount of sleep should also be a priority. This simple change can make a big difference in your overall health and well-being.

WHO releases the first-ever clinical treatment guideline for TOBACCO CESSATION IN ADULTS

STAR HEALTH DESK

The World Health Organisation (WHO) recommends a comprehensive set of tobacco cessation, including behavioural support delivered by healthcare providers, digital cessation interventions, and pharmacological treatments, in a first guideline on tobacco cessation.

The guideline focuses on helping the more than 750 million tobacco users who want to quit all forms of tobacco. The recommendations are relevant for all adults seeking to quit various tobacco products, including cigarettes, waterpipes, smokeless tobacco products, cigars, roll-your-own tobacco, and heated tobacco products (HTPs).

"This guideline marks a crucial milestone in our global battle against these dangerous products," said Dr Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus, WHO Director-General. "It empowers countries with the essential tools to effectively support individuals in quitting tobacco and alleviate the global burden of tobacco-related diseases."

Over 60% of the world's 1.25 billion tobacco users—more than 750 million people—wish to quit, yet 70% lack access to effective cessation services. This gap exists due to challenges faced by health systems, including resource limitations.

"The immense struggle that people face when trying to quit smoking cannot be overstated. We need to deeply appreciate the strength it takes and the suffering endured by individuals and their loved ones to overcome this addiction," said Dr Rüdiger Krech, Director of Health Promotion at WHO." These guidelines are designed to help communities and governments provide the best possible support and assistance for those on this challenging journey."

Effective therapies for quitting tobacco

Combining pharmacotherapy with behavioural interventions significantly increases quitting success rates. Countries are encouraged to provide these treatments at no or reduced cost to improve accessibility, particularly in low- and middle-income countries.

WHO recommends varenicline, nicotine replacement therapy (NRT), bupropion, and cytisine as effective treatments for tobacco cessation.

In 2023, WHO initiated a prequalification procedure for medicinal products against disorders caused by tobacco use to improve global access to recommended tobacco cessation medications. In April 2024, Kenvue's nicotine gum and patch became the first WHO-prequalified NRT products.

WHO recommends behavioural interventions, including brief health worker counselling (30 seconds to 3 minutes) offered routinely in healthcare settings, alongside more intensive behavioural support (individual, group, or phone counselling) for interested users. Additionally, digital interventions such as text messaging, smartphone apps, and internet programmes can be used as adjuncts or self-management tools.

WHO encourages health-care providers, policymakers, and stakeholders to adopt and implement this guideline to promote tobacco cessation and improve the health of millions of people in need worldwide.

UNRAVELLING THE MYSTERY

Dry skin vs. eczema

Ever wondered why your skin feels itchy, scaly, or irritated? It could be dry skin or eczema, two conditions that often share similar symptoms but have distinct differences. Dry skin is a common issue exacerbated by factors like weather and harsh soaps, while eczema, a type of dermatitis, involves a faulty skin barrier and immune system response.

Understanding the symptoms:
Dry skin tends to feel rough, tight, and may crack, especially in dry climates or after hot showers. On the other hand, eczema manifests as red bumpy patches with blisters that can ooze and crust over, often exacerbated by allergens and stress.

Practical tips for relief:

- Opt for shorter, lukewarm showers to prevent moisture loss.
- Immediately moisturise with gentle, fragrance-free creams or ointments.

- Use mild, unscented products to avoid further irritation.
- Consider a humidifier to add moisture to indoor air during dry seasons.

For eczema-specific care, additional treatments like over-the-counter medications and dermatologist-prescribed therapies may be necessary to manage flare-ups effectively.

By understanding the nuances between dry skin and eczema, you can take proactive steps to care for your skin and alleviate discomfort. If symptoms persist or worsen, consulting a healthcare professional is recommended for tailored treatment options.

How delaying diabetes by four years can improve your long-term health

Prediabetes is a condition where your blood sugar levels are higher than normal but not high enough to be classified as diabetes. It serves as a crucial warning sign that you might develop type 2 diabetes if you do not take action. Addressing prediabetes promptly through lifestyle changes like diet and exercise can make a significant difference in your health.

Recent findings have highlighted that delaying the onset of diabetes by just four years can drastically reduce the long-term risks of death and diabetes-related complications. These insights come from a study led by Guangwei Li of the China-Japan Friendship Hospital, published on July 9th in the open-access journal PLOS Medicine.

Type 2 diabetes is known to pose significant risks of death and disability, and it results in substantial economic costs for both individuals and societies. However, those diagnosed with prediabetes can reduce their risk of developing diabetes by adopting healthier lifestyles, such as eating a balanced diet and increasing physical activity. But how long do you need to delay diabetes to achieve long-term health benefits?

In this study, researchers analysed the health outcomes of 540 individuals with prediabetes who participated in the Da Qing Diabetes Prevention Study. This trial, which began in 1986 in Da Qing City, China, lasted six years and included a control group and three lifestyle intervention groups focused on diet, exercise, or both. The participants were followed for over 30 years to evaluate the long-term effects of delaying diabetes.

The research team discovered that participants who remained non-diabetic for at least four years after their initial prediabetes diagnosis had a significantly lower risk of dying and experiencing major cardiovascular events, such as heart attacks, strokes, or heart failure, compared to those who developed diabetes sooner. This protective effect was not observed in those who stayed non-diabetic for less than four years.

Overall, the study suggests that the longer someone with prediabetes can delay the onset of diabetes, the better their long-term health outcomes will be. Even a few years of delaying diabetes can yield lasting health benefits.

The researchers concluded that maintaining a non-diabetic status for a longer period in individuals with impaired glucose tolerance leads to improved health outcomes and lower mortality rates. They emphasised that effective interventions for people with diabetes should be included in preventive strategies to manage diabetes and its related vascular complications.

By focusing on healthy lifestyle changes, such as eating a nutritious diet and exercising regularly, individuals with prediabetes can improve their chances of living longer and healthier lives. Taking action now can help you avoid severe health issues associated with diabetes and enjoy a better quality of life.

UNLOCKING YOUR BODY'S POTENTIAL:

The power of metabolic conditioning

Heading outdoors for work or study often involves more physical activity than we realise. Whether it is brisk walking to catch a bus or climbing stairs to a meeting, our bodies constantly utilise energy. This process, called metabolism, fuels our movements by converting food into energy units known as adenosine triphosphate (ATP). How efficiently our bodies produce and use ATP during physical activity forms the basis of metabolic conditioning, also known as MetCon.

Metabolic conditioning is not just a fitness trend—it is a structured approach to improving how our bodies generate energy across different intensities of exercise. From low-intensity activities like walking to high-intensity workouts such as sprinting, each level demands energy from specific pathways in the body. These pathways, influenced by oxygen availability and nutrient sources like carbohydrates and fats, adapt to the intensity and duration of our physical efforts.

The benefits of metabolic conditioning extend beyond the gym. It enhances the body's ability to perform tasks more efficiently in less time, contributing to weight loss, increased muscle mass, and improved aerobic capacity. Crucially, this form of training continues to burn calories even after the workout ends, making it effective for those looking to shed excess weight.

Workouts designed for metabolic conditioning vary based on fitness levels and goals. Beginners might start with simple routines like Airdyne bicycle sprints, alternating bursts of maximum effort with short rests. For more advanced practitioners, exercises using equipment like TRX suspension trainers challenge muscles further by adjusting body positions or increasing resistance.

Understanding and implementing metabolic conditioning not only improves physical performance but also promotes overall health. By optimising our body's energy systems through targeted exercises, we enhance our ability to handle everyday activities with greater ease and efficiency. Whether you are aiming to boost endurance, trim down, or simply feel more energised, integrating MetCon into your fitness routine can pave the way to a healthier lifestyle.

Enjoying the outdoors safely: Summer skin protection tips

As we head outdoors for work, study, or simply to enjoy the sunny days, it is important to keep our skin protected from the summer sun's rays. While sunshine brings joy, it also brings risks to our skin's health.

Guard against UV rays:
The sun's ultraviolet (UV) rays can cause sunburns, premature ageing, and increase the risk of skin cancer. Protecting your skin from UV exposure is crucial and entirely preventable.

Apply broad-spectrum sunscreen:
Choose a broad-spectrum sunscreen with SPF 30 or higher to shield against both UVA and UVB rays. Apply about two finger lengths for your face and neck, and a shot glass amount for your body. Reapply every two hours (or every 90 minutes if sweating or in water), and don't forget your ears—even on cloudy days.

Embrace sun-protective clothing:
Not all clothing offers sun protection. Look for garments labelled with UPF (Ultraviolet Protection Factor), ideally UPF 50, to block harmful rays effectively. From stylish leisurewear to functional athletic gear, UPF clothing provides a fashionable shield.

Sun-smart practices:
UV rays peak from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., so seek shade and wear a wide-brimmed hat for added protection. This helps shield your ears, head, and neck better than a baseball cap.

Skincare tips for summer:
Hot weather can aggravate skin conditions like acne and eczema. Use gentle cleansers with salicylic acid to unclog pores, avoiding harsh scrubs that can irritate. After swimming, rinse off chlorine to prevent dryness and eczema flare-ups. Moisturise with non-comedogenic products to keep your skin hydrated and healthy.

By following these simple tips, you can enjoy the sun safely while protecting your skin from potential damage.

ENGLAND FACE SPAIN PUZZLE
in trophy homecoming quest

- Spain have scored 13 goals so far in this edition – only France in 1984 (14) have scored more in a single edition of the European Championship.
- Aged 17 years and one day, Spain's Lamine Yamal could become the youngest ever player to feature in a World Cup or Euro final, surpassing Pele's record from the 1958 World Cup (17y 249d).
- England boss Gareth Southgate will be the third manager to take charge of more than one Euro final (excluding replays), after Helmut Schön with Germany (1972, 1976) and Berti Vogts with Germany (1992, 1996), with all three doing so in consecutive editions. No manager has ever lost two finals in the competition before.

AGENCIES

Spain go into Sunday's Euro 2024 final as slight favourites over England after not only being the most attractive team to watch at the tournament but having won every match they have played.

The Spaniards have emerged as a team that can quickly adapt their strategy to their opponents without giving up their direct attacking game in favour of a results-based performance.

They outsmarted France in the semifinals despite falling a goal behind and it took them just five minutes to score twice to take the lead with their relentless pressing game and vertical passing.

With Rodri as their midfield dynamo who possesses impressive passing efficiency with a more attack-minded approach, the battle in the centre of the pitch is expected to play a key role in the outcome.

England will have to wrestle possession from Spain, who also have the outstanding Fabian Ruiz in midfield.

Spain's pressing game has been one of the keys to their success in Germany.

No side has forced more turnovers within 40 metres of the opposition goal, two of which have led to goals.

- This is the third meeting between Spain and England at the European Championships, with England winning 2-1 in the 1980 group-stage, before progressing 4-2 on penalties in the 1996 quarterfinals.
- This is Spain's fifth European Championship final. They won the trophy thrice (1964, 2008, 2012) and lost once (1984). They could become the first team to win the competition on four separate occasions.
- Spain have won all six of their games so far at Euro 2024, already the most wins any side has picked up in a single edition of the competition. Since the introduction of the group-stage in 1980, only France in 1984 (5/5) have won the competition while maintaining a 100 percent win rate.

One of England's problems early in the tournament was failing to take risks in passing forward, even against perceived weaker opposition. In Berlin they have to be brave to get through the first wave of Spanish pressure and into the spaces where they can do damage going forward.

With lightning wingers Nico Williams and Lamine Yamal ripping up defences and able to score and provide assists, England's fullbacks will have their hands full.

A second successive Euro final for England and coach Gareth Southgate is no mean feat even though they had to endure weeks of criticism, especially in the group phase, for lacklustre performances and with little punching power up front.

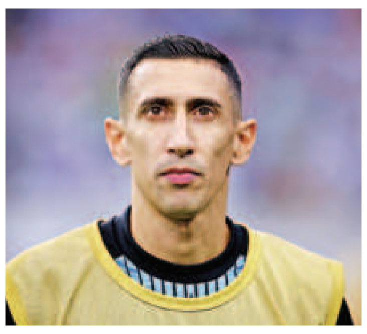
England's defence, however, has remained solid and with the pace of John Stones and Kyle Walker, when they do get exposed, they have proved adept at scrambling recoveries.

Spain's ball possession and movement will likely give England their biggest test so far and key to Southgate's side being able to stay in shape is the incredible work of defensive midfield screen Declan Rice who might also be tasked with helping left wingback Kieran Tripper to keep Yamal at bay.

After their largely misfiring group stage, with two goals in three matches, Southgate will have been reassured by what he saw against the Netherlands in the semis when his big names stepped up and started creating sustained danger from out wide and through the middle.

Blessed with arguably the deepest squad at the Euros, Southgate, who is expected to start the same eleven, must also look to use his supreme bench strength to make a difference in the final.

Argentina chase treble, Colombia ready to spoil party



- Forward Angel Di Maria aims to finish his Argentina career on a high. His nine chances created at this tournament are surpassed only by Colombia's James Rodriguez (17), Uruguay's Nicolas de la Cruz (14), and teammate Lionel Messi (13).
- This marks Colombia's third appearance in a Copa America final, having previously won in 2001 and finished as runners-up in 1975. Meanwhile, Argentina, the reigning champions, have reached their sixth final in the last eight Copa America tournaments and are eyeing a record 16th Copa title.
- Argentina are on the brink of replicating the feat of achieving three consecutive major tournament successes, having won three consecutive Copas in 1945, 1946, and 1947. Only Spain have pulled off a consecutive triple crown when they sealed Euro 2008, World Cup 2010, and Euro 2012.

AGENCIES

Argentina have the historic opportunity to match Spain and become the first South American team to achieve the 'triple crown' of three consecutive major tournament titles, which includes a World Cup triumph, if they can defeat a strong Colombia in the Copa America final in Miami on Monday morning (Bangladesh time).

Colombia, however, enter the final at Hard Rock Stadium with an impressive streak of their own. The Men in Yellow are unbeaten in 28 matches, setting a national record, and have arguably faced a tougher route to the final.

While Argentina comfortably secured a 2-0 victory against surprise package Canada in their semifinal in New Jersey, Colombia had to overcome Uruguay in Charlotte with a 1-0 win, despite playing with ten men for the entire second half.

On paper, Argentina are favorites due to their top world ranking and a squad that has been together for several years. However, expectations suggest a closely contested match rather than a one-sided affair.

"Scaloni knows them all by heart. Argentina today have a solidity that is foolproof and they have the added bonus of having the best player in the world, which is why they are the big favourites," said former Chile and Inter Milan striker Ivan Zamorano, who is covering the tournament is a television pundit.

But former Colombia star midfielder Carlos Valderrama believes a surprise could be on the cards.

"I see Colombia winning on Sunday," he told AFP, "We have a great team to dream about.

"I am optimistic about the national team, because of the process and the results they have been getting, and also because of the way they are playing.

"The team is unbeaten, is playing well in the Copa, with James (Rodriguez) as the best player in the tournament, so we can dream of being champions because we have a great team," he added.

James Rodriguez, who rose to global fame with his performances in the 2014 World Cup in Brazil, has been showcasing some of his best football at 34 years old in national colours.

For Argentina, there is an emotional aspect as the final also marks a farewell to 36-year-old winger Angel Di Maria, who has consistently delivered on the big stage.

"I'm not ready for my last game with the national team, but it's time," Di Maria said last week.

"A thousand things can happen, but I think that whatever happens I can go out on a high note. I've done everything to be able to leave through that door," he added.

While defender Nicolas Otamendi may also depart, it remains to be seen if this will be the last tournament for Messi, who will turn 39 during the 2026 World Cup.

"I'm living it like everything else in recent times: enjoying it very much and being aware, like Fideo (Di Maria) and Ota (Otamendi), that these are the last battles," the eight-times Ballon d'Or winner said after guiding his team to semifinal win.

As the football world holds its breath for an exciting climax, the final promises to be a fitting culmination to a tournament filled with drama, skill, and the enduring passion of South American football.

Driven by history
Djokovic in record pursuit facing Alcaraz

AGENCIES

Without a title for over six months, Novak Djokovic is now within touching distance of a record 25th Grand Slam trophy -- with the all-conquering Serb saying Wimbledon always brings the best out of him.

For a champion who has become accustomed to trampling over the opposition while amassing almost 100 titles in his career, this lean spell is not something he is used to.

The 37-year-old lost in his Australian Open fortress at the start of the year, with his bid to win a record-extending 11th Melbourne Park title cut short in the semifinals.

A knee injury then prematurely ended his French Open title defence last month.

- Djokovic will be playing his 10th Wimbledon final -- six on the trot -- and the 37th in overall 75 Grand Slam appearances.
- Alcaraz, 16 years younger than Djokovic, is in his fourth Grand Slam final and will be aiming to add a second Wimbledon glory to his 2022 US Open breakthrough and French Open title from last month.
- Djokovic has been victorious in their last two meetings: Cincinnati Open final in 2023, followed by the semifinal of the season-ending ATP Tour Finals.

So, when he reached the All England Club final after a 6-4, 7-6(2), 6-4 win over Lorenzo Musetti on Friday, he was finally living up to his own lofty expectations.

Standing in his way to an eighth Wimbledon crown that will see him equal Roger Federer's mark is Spaniard Carlos Alcaraz, who beat Djokovic in last year's title clash.

Djokovic believes the prospect of creating tennis history will provide the "fuel" he needs to defeat Alcaraz.

"I'm aware of what's on the line. Any Grand Slam that I play, there's always history now on the line," said Djokovic. "I will try to use that as a fuel to play my best tennis.

"(Alcaraz) is one of the greatest 21-year-olds we've ever seen in this sport and he will win many more Grand Slams, but hopefully not this one on Sunday," he added.

Tigresses' less than ideal buildup for Asia Cup

SPORTS REPORTER

Rainy weather and a lack of facilities hampered Bangladesh women's team's training camp at the BKSP which ended on Friday and left the team somewhat undercooked before they head off to Sri Lanka for the forthcoming ACC Women's T20 Asia Cup on July 16.

The camp started on July 3 and was held keeping the forthcoming regional tournament in mind, scheduled for July 19-28, where they had emerged as champions in 2018 in Malaysia.

The camp was also an opportunity for the girls to identify and hopefully rectify their problems after poor performances in recent home series' against Australia and India respectively.

However, most of their training sessions as well as practice matches got interrupted by the rain, forcing them to shift some of the scheduled practice sessions indoors.

Only two of the four scheduled practice matches could be played to completion while the other two were held partially owing to the downpour.

The previously scheduled match scenario practice session on Friday also couldn't take place due to torrential rain.

Even though the BKSP has multiple cricket grounds, the women's team's preparation was mostly limited to the BKSP-4 ground as the other grounds are occupied in other engagements.

The International Cricket Council (ICC) has already taken over the BKSP-3 ground, which alongside BKSP-4 ground will host warm-up matches ahead of the ICC Women's T20 World Cup in Bangladesh, scheduled to be held on October 3-20.

The Sher-e-Bangla National Cricket Stadium in Dhaka and the Sylhet International Cricket Stadium will host the matches in the tournament and both are now under ICC's supervision, as is the rule for all ICC events.

The men's Under-19 team are also running a residential camp at BKSP, scheduled to run till July 20, while the High Performance unit had a training camp in Rajshahi before leaving for the Australia tour yesterday while the Bangladesh Tigers are currently training in Chattogram.

Questions now naturally arise whether the Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) gave enough emphasis on providing better training facilities for the women's team ahead of a major tournament or were they too focused on the men's developmental teams.

In an attempt to make up for the lacklustre training camp, the BCB has planned two more days of practice for the team at the Academy ground in Mirpur on July 14-15.

Habibul Bashar, women's wing head, told The Daily Star yesterday that: "We had no other options. We picked BKSP in order to play five to six practice matches which we couldn't have done in other venues. Actually, there is rain all over the country. No matter where we would hold the camp, the result would be the same."

During a recent BCB interview, vice-captain Nahida Akter also expressed her dissatisfaction over not getting enough practice.

Krejcikova wins Wimbledon title

AFP, London

Barbora Krejcikova of the Czech Republic defeated Italy's Jasmine Paolini to win the Wimbledon women's title on Saturday for her second Grand Slam singles triumph.

Krejcikova, the 31st seed, won 6-2, 2-6, 6-4 to add the 2024 All England Club crown to her 2021 French Open victory.

Her win comes 26 years after her mentor Jana Novotna, who died in 2017, claimed the Wimbledon title.

The result meant seventh-seeded Paolini had lost two Grand Slam finals back-to-back after coming off second best to Iga Swiatek at the French Open last month.

Krejcikova set the tone immediately by breaking the Italian in the opening game and backing up the advantage with a hold to love.

Summit's floating LNG terminal back in Bay after repairs

MD NAZRUL ISLAM, Chattogram

Summit's floating LNG terminal returned to the Bay of Bengal near Moheshkhali after repairs from the damages done by Cyclone Remal in May.

On May 27, a floating platoon hit the FSRU, causing damage to a ballast tank. After that, the supply of LNG to the national grid through that terminal was stopped.

In the absence of the floating storage and regasification unit (FSRU), LNG supply to the national grid dropped to half, resulting in patchy gas supply in various districts including Dhaka and Chattogram.

The supply of LNG to the national grid will return to normal from July 18, said Muhammad Nasir Uddin, deputy general manager of Rupantarita Prakritik Gas Company (RPGCL).

Meanwhile, one of the two LNG supply pipelines that was shut down on Tuesday has resumed operations from Friday.

The RPGCL authorities shut down the pipeline after it started leaking. The leak was caused during soil testing for the construction of a jetty in the Chinese Economic Zone at the Anwara edge of Chattogram.

After three consecutive days of repair work, the supply of LNG through the 42-inch diameter pipeline started again.

The stakeholders hope that the ongoing gas crisis in various districts including Dhaka and Chattogram will be alleviated to some extent from now on.

Finding hope in hair!

Dinajpur's hair-processing industry transforming lives of thousands

KONGKON KARMAKER

Farsia Ara was distraught when her van-puller husband, the sole earner of her family, left her and their three daughters two years ago.

Belonging to an ultra-poor family in Dinajpur's Nawabganj, she was struggling to support her children.

Unexpectedly however, she found hope in hair!

She joined the district's burgeoning loose hair processing industry as a detangler. Initially, she earned Tk 60 a day to smoothen out hair. But two years of her perseverance paid off and now she earns Tk 100 a day, making her Tk 3,000 a month.

Farsia finally found stability and married off her two elder daughters. Her youngest now works with her in the same hair processing factory, bringing their combined monthly income to around Tk 6,000 a month.

"This job has become a lifeline for my family. As I work from 7:00am to 1:00pm, I can also give time to them while maintaining my professional responsibilities ... We also get festival bonuses!"

Farsia's story is just one of many.

Often overlooked, the hair processing and wig manufacturing industry is making significant strides in improving the lives of the poor.

Across Dinajpur, especially in Nawabganj and Chirirbandar upazilas, thousands of women from ultra-poor families have found employment in hair processing. Groups of 10 to 12 women work together in homes, sorting, cleaning, and preparing the hair.

Some of the women have been supporting their families for over a decade through this work.

Visiting the upazilas recently, this correspondent saw hundreds

'Let others compete for nomination'

Two dozen former Democratic lawmakers ask Biden after gaffes

AFP, Washington

Two dozen former congressional Democrats published an open letter on Friday urging President Joe Biden to allow other candidates to compete for the party's presidential nomination ahead of November's US election.

The move is another blow for the 81-year-old Biden as he seeks to reassure voters that he is fit for office after his tumultuous debate performance in late June against Republican rival Donald Trump.

In the letter, the 24 signatories said Biden would "best serve the nation he loves" by releasing delegates who are pledged to vote for him at the Democratic National Convention -- which is otherwise set to cement his role as the party's official nominee -- and instead allow others to compete to lead the ticket.

"We are confident that one or more capable Democratic candidates would step forward. Excitement and optimism would ensue," read the letter addressed to the "American people" and reported by Politico.

In multiple public appearances this week, Biden has emphasized that he plans to stay in the race and become the Democratic nominee.

MARRIAGE CASE

Imran Khan to remain in jail despite acquittal

REUTERS, Islamabad

Former prime minister Imran Khan and his third wife were acquitted on charges of marrying unlawfully by a Pakistan court yesterday, but he will not be freed as authorities issued fresh orders to arrest him.

The ruling came a day after his Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) party won more seats in parliament, ramping up pressure on the country's fragile ruling coalition which is grappling to stabilise a broken economy.

The couple were sentenced to seven years in February when a court found them guilty of breaking Islamic law by failing to observe the required interval between the divorce from a previous marriage of Bushra Khan, also known as Bushra Bibi, and her marriage to Khan.

They had filed an appeal against their convictions.

"Both the appellants are acquitted of the charges," said an order by the appeal court seen by Reuters. "They are directed to be released forthwith if not required to be detained in any other case."

It said the prosecution failed to prove its case against the couple.

Khan's PTI party said authorities have issued fresh arrest warrants for him in three cases linked to violence

HC suggests govt

The High Court in its full judgement in a smuggling case has made four suggestions for parliament, including declaring 10-kilometre land from the border line as the property of Border Guard Bangladesh.

The HC bench of Justice Md Ashraful Kamal gave the suggestion to ensure border security properly, bring down cross-border crimes to zero and to prevent revenue dodging.

In the verdict delivered on August 3 last year, the HC acquitted accused Zakir Hossain of smuggling charges and scrapped the three-year jail sentence handed to him by the trial court concerned.

The case was filed by BGB (formerly Bangladesh Rifles) following the recovery of Indian sharis at the Jashore border during an anti-smuggling operation in 1987.

Euro, Copa finals promise pure thrills

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

So it all comes to a close tonight, or tomorrow morning, depending on which major tournaments one is keeping their eyes on. However, if loyalties are divided by the Atlantic, fans are poised to get a double dose of the best football continental tournaments have to offer: the Euros and the Copa America.

UEFA EURO2024 GERMANY

CONMEBOL COPA AMERICA USA 2024

Juxtaposed with the T20 World Cup, the two major footballing tournaments took a little more time than usual to get the fanbases in Bangladesh buzzing. But once the cricket enthusiasm waned with the Tigers making a meek exit from the Super Eight stage of the marquee event in the USA and West Indies, there was no better retreat for the despondent Bangladesh fans than the excitement of the two major continental tournaments rolling into the knockout phases.

And it has been quite a ride for football aficionados for the past month, perhaps not always of the highest quality, but nevertheless full of excitement, intrigue, and surprises.

PM'S QUOTA REMARK

Late-night protests rock DU, other universities

DU CORRESPONDENT

Tensions flared up at Dhaka University late last night as hundreds of students came out of their dormitories to protest what they said was a "disparaging comment" by Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina regarding quotas in government jobs.

Students at Jahangirnagar University, Jagannath University, Rajshahi University, Chittagong University, and Comilla University too staged protests.

They gathered on campuses and took out processions around 11:00pm, chanting "Tui ke? Ami ke? Razakar, Razakar! [Who are you? Who am I? Razakar, Razakar!]."

Earlier, in response to a journalist's question, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina said, "Why do they have so much resentment towards the freedom

TEESTA RIVER PROJECT

India should implement it if we're to get water

Says PM, vows to continue zero tolerance for corruption

STAR REPORT

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said she wants India to implement the Teesta project and this is to ensure Bangladesh gets water from upstream.

She said, "The Teesta project is a longstanding issue. We will have to implement the Teesta project. China has made an offer and conducted a feasibility study. India also has made an offer. India will also conduct a feasibility study, and then we will accept the one that will be rational for us.

"But I will give priority to India for the project as India holds back the Teesta water. If we want to realise [share of the Teesta] water, India should implement the project. If they complete the project, they will provide everything that is required for the project. This is diplomacy. There is no hide-and-seek about this, and it's simple and clear."

Hasina said this while responding to a question from a journalist at a press conference at the Gono Bhaban on her recent visit to China.

She said Chinese President Xi Jinping mentioned assistance in four ways: grants, interest-free loans, concessional loans, and commercial loans. China agreed to provide Bangladesh money equal to $2 billion through the four ways, report UNB and BSS.

China also agreed to build the 9th Bangladesh-China Friendship Bridge for free, she said, coming down heavily on those criticising the outcome of her trip.

"Are these things nothing? They are mentally ill and these are the outcome of their illness," she said.

QUOTA SYSTEM REFORMS

Hasina said, "The executive authority has nothing to do [about quotas in public service] right now ..."

STAR REPORT

The quota protesters yesterday urged the president to convene an emergency parliamentary session within 24 hours to reform the quota system in public service.

Otherwise, they said, they will go for an all-out movement to press home their demand.

They came up with the ultimatum in a memorandum they submitted to President Mohammad Shahabuddin around 2:40pm.

Earlier, the protesters marched towards the Bangabhaban, defying police obstruction.

In the memorandum, they said they want a law to reform the quota system,

Trump survives assassination bid

Urges Americans to 'stand united'; Biden, world leaders condemn shooting at rally

AGENCIES

Donald Trump yesterday called on Americans to stand united after he was injured in an assassination attempt – a shocking incident that opened a dark new chapter in an already polarised US presidential race.

The 78-year-old former president was hit in the ear at a campaign rally in Butler, Pennsylvania, while the shooter and a bystander were killed and two spectators critically injured in the worst act of US political violence in decades.

"In this moment, it is more important than ever that we stand United," Trump said in a statement on his Truth Social network, adding that Americans should not allow "Evil to win".

The Republican added that it was "God alone who prevented the unthinkable from happening" and that he would "FEAR NOT".

The gunman has been identified as 20-year-old Thomas Matthew Crooks of Bethel Park, Pennsylvania, about an hour's drive from the rally site, according to an FBI statement early yesterday.

His motive remains unknown.

US media later reported that the gunman had explosives in his car.

The Wall Street Journal and CNN said that explosive materials were found in a car belonging to the shooter, which was reportedly parked near the campaign event venue in Butler, Pennsylvania.

Authorities identified a rally attendee who was shot and killed as Corey Comperatore, 50, of Sarver, Pennsylvania, who Pennsylvania Governor Josh Shapiro told reporters was killed when he dove on top of his family to protect them from the hail of bullets.

"Corey was an avid supporter of the former president, and was so excited to be there last night with him in the

APBn member shot in Ukhiya Rohingya camp

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Cox's Bazar

A member of the Armed Police Battalion (APBn) was shot in a gunfight with criminals at a refugee camp in Ukhiya upazila of Cox's Bazar early yesterday.

The attackers were members of the Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army (Arsa), the Myanmar-based armed group that dominates the area, said police.

Shahraj, 25, a constable at Madhurchhara Police Camp under the 14 APBn, is undergoing treatment at Cox's Bazar Sadar Hospital.

The incident took place in the F-block of the Madhurchhara 4-Extension camp, said Additional Deputy Inspector General of Police Mohammad Iqbal, also the commander of APBn-8.

The attackers were members of the Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army (Arsa), the Myanmar-based armed group that dominates the area, said police.

Additional DIG Iqbal said nine APBn members were on security duty in the F-block of Madhurchhara.

"At one point, 30 to 35 miscreants entered the camp and started firing indiscriminately at the APBn members. The APBn members also fired back in self-defence. At one stage, the criminals escaped," the police official said.

APBn member Shahraj suffered bullet wounds in his right thigh and right-hand finger, Iqbal added.

After the gunfight ended, Shahraj was rescued and brought to Ukhiya Upazila Health Complex before being shifted to Cox's Bazar District Sadar Hospital for better treatment, he said.

The police operation is ongoing to arrest the criminals involved in the incident, the police official added.

TRUMP ASSASSINATION BID

Violent US rhetoric comes 'home to roost'

AFP, Milwaukee

The attempted assassination of Donald Trump by a gunman at his Pennsylvania rally has confirmed the worst fears of public figures warning that an escalation in incendiary political rhetoric on all sides could lead to bloodshed.

US lawmakers and analysts have been voicing concern since the 2021 US Capitol riot that increasingly bellicose campaign language was becoming a worrying contusion on the US body politic ahead of November's presidential election.

The danger was vividly illustrated in 2022, when then-House speaker Nancy Pelosi's husband was attacked with a hammer by a far-right conspiracy theorist who wanted to hold the Democratic leader hostage and "break her kneecaps."

The political affiliations of Saturday's shooter, identified as 20-year-old Thomas Matthew Crooks, were not immediately clear -- but analysts and politicians immediately pointed the finger at extreme political discourse.

"For weeks Democrat leaders have been fueling ludicrous hysteria that Donald Trump winning re-election would be the end of democracy in America," House Republican Majority Leader Steve Scalise, who was seriously wounded in a mass shooting at a congressional sports event in 2017, said on X.

"Clearly we've seen far-left lunatics act on violent rhetoric in the past. This incendiary rhetoric must stop."

Senior Trump campaign aide Chris LaCivita assailed the language of "leftist activists, Democrat donors and even Joe Biden."

While Ajamu Baraka, Green Party candidate Jill Stein's running mate in 2016, suggested Democratic rhetoric might have led the gunman to see it as his "patriotic duty to eliminate an existential threat to the nation."

"The chickens have really come home to roost," he posted on X.

What none of the three acknowledged was that Trump himself has been a major architect of the coarsening in US political discourse in recent years.

Many of Trump's targets in Congress and the government -- from Republican Senator Mitt Romney to retired top government scientist Anthony Fauci -- have disclosed having to take on private security after threats from Trump's supporters.

KP Sharma Oli Nepal's new PM

AFP, Kathmandu

Nepal's president appointed Khadga Prasad Sharma Oli as prime minister for a fourth time yesterday, after his communist party forged a coalition government with the centre-left Nepali Congress.

"President Poudel has appointed KP Sharma Oli as the new prime minister of Nepal," Kiran Pokharel, press adviser to President Ram Chandra Poudel, told AFP.

Oli, 72, who heads the Communist Party of Nepal- Unified Marxist Leninist (CPN-UML), will be sworn into office today, Pokharel added.

His predecessor and former coalition government ally, Pushpa Kamal Dahal, lost a vote of confidence on Friday, barely 18 months after taking office. Dahal was forced to step down after Oli's party withdrew its support.

Former councillor found dead

UNB, Naogaon

A 47-year-old former councillor, who remained missing since Friday, was found dead in a water body at Patichara in Patnitala upazila of Naogaon district yesterday.

The deceased, Mizanur Rahman, was a former councillor of Ward 9 under Najipur municipality.

Mozaffar Hossain, officer-in-charge of Patnitala Police Station, said farmers spotted Mizanur's body floating in Saligram Buridah waterbody in the morning and informed the police.

On information, police recovered the body and sent it to Naogaon Sadar Hospital morgue for autopsy.

Mizanur remained missing since he left home Friday afternoon, said his family members.

Man arrested for rape

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

Police arrested a 40-year-old man in Netrakona early yesterday on the charge of raping a schoolgirl.

A Netrakona court subsequently sent Ujjol Mia from Paboi village in Mohanganj to jail, police said.

The girl's mother had lodged a rape case with Mohanganj Police Station on Saturday.

Quoting the case statement, Md Delwar Hossain, officer-in-charge of the police station, said the girl, a fifth-grader, returned home from school on Wednesday afternoon.

As she was home alone, Ujjol entered the house and raped her. When the girl started screaming, Ujjol fled the scene, threatening her not to disclose the matter.

The girl was taken to Netrakona General Hospital for a medical test, said the OC.

know the constitution or have any idea how a government runs.

"Yes, they are meritorious, but they will have to have ideas about these matters.

"We can't do anything [about quotas] until the issue is resolved in court. It is the reality. They'll have to accept this reality," she said.

She said, "No one says anything as long as they [protesters] continue their peaceful movement. But if they go for anything else, like attacking police and their vehicles or other things, the law will take its own course."

Hasina said the government abolished the quota system after a movement. "But what is the result of this abolishment seen today?"

Mentioning that women had joined the movement in 2018, she said only two females in the last BCS exam qualified for foreign services and four for police.

Defending district-based quotas and quotas for marginalised communities, the PM said some districts have been deprived after the abolishment of the quota system. Not a single person got a job in police service from 23 districts, she added.

"Why do they have so much anger against the freedom fighters?" she said, adding, "If the grandchildren of freedom fighters don't get quota benefits, should the grandchildren of Razakars get the benefit?"

QUESTION LEAK

Hasina asked journalists to find out those who passed the government recruitment exams with the help of leaked question papers.

Mentioning that action would be taken against those who got benefits from question paper leaks, she said, "Why would we not take action? They have no right to work. But who will find them? If they [those who leaked the questions] name any person that they have sold the questions to and if it can be proved, then we will see.

"He who pays a bribe, and he who takes a bribe are both criminals. Those who leak question papers and those who buy them are both criminals. But who will figure it out? Journalists should try to find that out ... then we will take action," she added.

CORRUPTION

Responding to a question on corruption, she said, "I will not spare the corrupt people no matter whoever they are or whatever position they have as I started the drives against corruption. I don't even consider who are close or who are not."

Hasina said she has taken action against a former peon of her home who had amassed Tk 400 crore.

"He worked in my house. He was a peon and now he has Tk 400 crore. He can't go places without a helicopter. It's true. How did he make so much money?"

She said she does not think that drives against corruption would harm the image of her government and reiterated her commitment to pursue "zero tolerance" for corruption.

Without mentioning any name, she said trials of some corruption cases have also been criticised, even though the accused committed corruption and misappropriated money of workers.

ON JOURNALISTS

Replying to a question about journalists' access of information, the PM said gathering information is one thing and stealing files is another.

"A negotiation was going on for buying vaccines. One of my officers was working round the clock. The officer left the room for a while leaving the important files. A journalist of a renowned newspaper entered the room and stole the documents, and my officer caught the journalist," she said.

"Then the journalist went into the bathroom and hide the documents in her sari ... the file was taken out. And it seems there was no crime committed."

Later the journalist was awarded for stealing the file, Hasina added.

"This was not the first. The journalist was earlier captured at the ministry of shipping and later freed after signing a bond. But later the journalist became a heroine and world-famous," she said.

TRUMP ASSASSINATION BID

Hasina condemned the assassination attempt on former US president Donald Trump and termed the attack "unfortunate".

"It is really regrettable. He is a presidential candidate. We definitely condemn it ... ."

"It is our question as to why such an incident took place in a civilised country, like the USA which is the pioneer of democracy," Hasina said.

She noted that the Republican Party did not blame the US government for the attack and President Joe Biden also condemned the attack.

"If such an incident took place in Bangladesh, the government would have been blamed," she said.

On the Rohingya issue, Hasina said she sought China's cooperation in resolving the crisis.

She noted that the Chinese president thanked Bangladesh for its humanitarian assistance to the Rohingyas and reiterated China's commitment to supporting their repatriation.

The man who shot Trump

State voter records show that Crooks was a registered Republican. The upcoming November 5 election would have been the first time Crooks had been old enough to vote in a presidential race.

Crooks lived about an hour away from where the shooting took place in Butler. The Federal Aviation Administration yesterday said that it closed the airspace over Bethel Park for "special security reasons."

When Crooks was 17 he made a $15 donation to ActBlue, a political action committee that raises money for left-leaning and Democratic politicians, according to a 2021 Federal Election Commission filing. The donation was earmarked for the Progressive Turnout Project, a national group that rallies Democrats to vote. The groups did not immediately respond to a Reuters request for comment.

Crooks' father, Matthew Crooks, 53, told CNN that he was trying to figure out what happened and would wait until he spoke to law enforcement before speaking about his son.

A video published by US outlet TMZ on Saturday showed that a gunman, suspected to be Thomas Matthew Crooks, lying on his stomach on a rooftop with a rifle in hand.

"The guy has longer brown hair, and he seems to be wearing a grey shirt/khaki pants -- and as you can see, he's carefully trying to pinpoint a target from afar before pulling the trigger," TMZ reported.

The man is not shown firing in the published footage. But a quick succession of gunshots is heard followed by screams from people off-camera.

"He's turning this way, be careful guys," a man is heard saying.

"Somebody got shot," another voice says. "He's right there, laying down."

"Dude, that's exactly why we need... Trump here," another man is heard saying.

"Secret Service don't (mess) around," another man says.

A second video published by TMZ shows shaky footage of the same rooftop and a blurred body.

"You can see the guy there," a person off-camera says. "I think they hit him ..., he looks dead."

Another video posted by a TikTok user shows Trump touching his right ear just after multiple bangs are heard.

In the same frame, a security force sniper, positioned on a roof behind the Republican presidential candidate, is seen taking aim with a rifle mounted on a stand.

AFP did not independently verify the videos, and it is unclear whether the sniper fired the weapon.

Trump then crouches down behind the lectern as Secret Service agents move in around him. Screams are heard in the crowd.

He is later escorted off stage by agents.

Thomas Crooks graduated in 2022 from Bethel Park High School, according to the Pittsburgh Tribune-Review. He received a $500 "star award" from the National Math and Science Initiative, according to the newspaper.

A 2022 graduation ceremony video cited by the New York Times shows Crooks receiving his high school diploma to some applause. Video from that ceremony posted online shows Crooks with glasses in a black graduation gown and posing with a school official. Reuters could not immediately verify the authenticity of the video.

Law enforcement officials said on Saturday that Crooks carried no identification to the site of the shooting and had to be identified using other methods.

"We're looking at photographs right now and we're trying to run his DNA and get biometric confirmation," Kevin Rojek, FBI special agent in charge, said during a press briefing.

USA Today reported that dozens of law enforcement vehicles were stationed outside a residence listed at the address on Crooks' voter registration record. Agents from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives were on the scene and a bomb squad was at the residence, USA Today reported.

Today, the perimeter of the residence was guarded by yellow police caution tape. An Allegheny County Police vehicle was parked outside.

"It's insanity that anyone would do this," Dan Maloney, a 30-year-old resident from the area was quoted as saying by USA Today.

Reuters could not immediately identify social media accounts or other online postings by Crooks. Meta, the parent company of Facebook and Instagram, did not immediately respond to questions on whether the platforms had removed any accounts related to the suspect.

Trump survives

community," Shapiro said, adding, "Political disagreements can never, ever be addressed through violence."

US President Joe Biden, a Democrat, said he had ordered a review of how the man carrying an AR-15-style rifle managed on Saturday to get close enough to shoot from a rooftop at Trump, who as a former president has lifetime protection by the US Secret Service.

Earlier, the 81-year-old Democrat had called the attack "sick" and spoke to Trump afterwards. He also cut short a weekend at his vacation home and flew back to Washington to deal with the crisis.

Biden was scheduled to deliver remarks on the incident at 1.30 pm (1730 GMT) yesterday, the White House said.

Trump's wife Melania said the gunman was a "monster," who had attempted to silence her husband's "laughter, ingenuity, love of music, and inspiration."

World leaders also condemned the attack, with the Kremlin yesterday morning saying there was no place for violence in politics.

In scenes that will haunt an America already traumatised by gun violence and political upheaval, Trump clutched his ear and fell to the ground after shots rang out at the rally on Saturday.

Secret Service agents immediately surrounded him and bundled the former president off stage, as he raised a fist in defiance, with blood streaked across his ear and face.

Trump said afterwards that he was "shot with a bullet that pierced the upper part of my right ear" and heard a "whizzing sound."

The shooter, reportedly a registered Republican, was believed to be working alone.

Meanwhile, FBI officials yesterday said the suspected gunman was acting alone and used an AR-style rifle purchased legally to shoot at the former US president, adding that they had no indications of any mental health issues with the suspect.

The FBI officials, in a call with reporters, said the investigation was at an early stage and that they had not yet identified an ideology associated with the suspect. They said finding the motive behind the shooting was one of their priorities.

A video published by US outlet TMZ shows the alleged assailant lying on his belly on a sloping rooftop and aiming a rifle. A quick succession of gunshots is heard followed by screams from off-camera Trump supporters attending the rally.

His father Matthew Crooks told CNN that he was trying to establish "what the hell is going on", and would not comment until he spoke to law enforcement.

The shocking incident inevitably raised questions about security, and how a presidential candidate could be targeted by a gunman around 150 meters away despite a huge Secret Service detail.

US Secret Service spokesman Anthony Guglielmi rejected "absolutely false" claims that it had refused additional protection for Trump ahead of the rally, saying that the agency had in fact recently added resources for him.

The FBI said in a news conference early yesterday that it was "surprising" the gunman had been able to get off so many shots before he was spotted and "neutralised" by counter-snipers.

After multiple witnesses said they saw the gunman before the shooting and alerted authorities, Butler police said they had "responded to a number of reports of suspicious activity".

A local prosecutor yesterday said it was "surprising" that a shooter was able to position himself on the nearby rooftop to take his shot.

"I do know we had some law enforcement in that building, which is even more surprising that he was able to get up there," said Butler County district attorney Richard Goldinger.

Trump's narrow escape has also sparked conspiracy theories and fingerpointing by Republicans, as an already tense run-up to the elections becomes increasingly febrile.

Possible Trump vice presidential pick J.D. Vance said Biden's "rhetoric" had "led directly" to the Trump attack.

The attack happened days before the Republican National Convention in Milwaukee where Trump will be formally anointed as presidential candidate. Trump said he looked "forward to speaking to our Great Nation this week from Wisconsin."

"I was going to delay my trip to Wisconsin, and The Republican National Convention, by two days, but have just decided that I cannot allow a 'shooter,' or potential assassin, to force change to scheduling, or anything else. Therefore, I will be leaving for Milwaukee, as scheduled," Trump wrote on his Truth Social site yesterday.

He said he would be leaving in the afternoon.

Trump was treated in hospital and could later be seen walking unaided from his plane, though his wounded ear was not facing the camera in video footage posted by his deputy communications director. The New York Times reported that he was staying the night in New Jersey.

The United States has a history of political violence. President John F. Kennedy was assassinated in 1963 while President Ronald Reagan was shot but survived an assassination attempt in 1981.

QUOTES ON QUOTA

The anti-quota protest is a nonpolitical agitation. But BNP and their collaborators are trying to turn the movement into an anti-government agitation and they are instigating the movement making statements and comments.

A playful moment suddenly takes a dangerous turn, as while trying to throw something at his friend, a student trips over and falls onto a busy road. An accident could have occurred with a bus rapidly approaching him, but the driver managed to break just in time, narrowly averting a tragedy. A moment of carelessness on the road can turn tragic if footpaths or nearby foot-bridges are not used. The photo was taken in the capital's Science Lab area recently.

Restore 5 percent indigenous quota

Demands Adivasi Quota Sangrakkhan Parishad

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Indigenous people yesterday demanded reinstating the five percent indigenous quota in first and second-class government jobs.

The protestors against quota systems are creating inequality through their movement, said Alik Mree, convener of Adivasi Quota Sangrakkhan Parishad, during a press conference held on Dhaka University premises.

"Our living standard is completely different from others. We have had to grow up fighting adversity from birth. So, we think our demand for the restoration of the five percent quota is completely logical and we want to see its implementation as soon as possible," he said.

"The constitution provides special opportunities for the backward people of the country. After the cancellation of the quota in 2018, the number of indigenous people of the hills and plains entering government jobs has fallen drastically," he also said.

"Quota is a constitutional right. Various policies and laws of the state could not play an effective role in protecting the living standard and developing the rights of indigenous people. Rather, it has increased oppression and deprivation of indigenous people," he said.

After the cancellation of the quota in 2018, the number of indigenous people of the hills and plains entering government jobs has fallen drastically.

DELAYED MONSOON

Dengue may spike in Aug or Sept

Fear experts, call for central action plan

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Dengue cases might start to increase during August or September, as this year's outbreak will get delayed due to the monsoon starting late, said experts at a programme yesterday.

However, they said, the outbreak may not be as intense this year compared to last year.

They made the remarks at a discussion, titled "Reasons for failure to control dengue and what to be done", organised by Poribesh Bachao Andolon (Poba).

At the discussion, Be-Nazir Ahmed, former director of Directorate General of Health Services, said local government and the health department must work together to control dengue.

Suggesting the launch of a national strategy to control the mosquito-borne disease, he said such a strategy was prepared a few days ago. But it needs to be updated, he added.

Kabirul Bashar, professor of Zoology at Jahangirnagar University, said, "Dengue may be prevalent in the country in August or September. This year's dengue outbreak may not be the same as last year."

Rumana Huque, teacher of economics at Dhaka University, said financial pressure also increases for a dengue patient, as both dengue tests and treatments cost quite a lot of money.

If a dengue patient takes treatment at a government hospital, it may cost them Tk 35,000 to Tk 40,000, and it may cost Tk 60,000 to Tk 65,000 on average at a private hospital.

DB arrests mastermind of certificate forgery gang

UNB, Dhaka

The Detective Branch of police arrested the mastermind of a criminal gang who used to sell forged academic certificates.

The arrestee is Abu Zafar, 31. He sold the fake certificates of two private universities.

Cyber and Special Crime Department (South) of Dhaka Metropolitan Police conducted a drive on Friday and arrested Zafar, said DMP additional commissioner Harun-or-Rashid yesterday.

Harun, also the DB chief, said IT experts, a former teacher and an office assistant of a private university may have been involved in this racket.

On May 26, a case was filed with Tejgaon Police Station in this regard.

HC questions legality of 40pc quota for children of BR employees

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday questioned the legality of a provision to keep 40 percent quota for the children of Bangladesh Railways employees in BR.

The court issued a rule asking the government to show causes why the section 3(1) and (2) of the Bangladesh Railway Non-Cadre Recruitment Rules, 2020 that contains the provision should not be declared unconstitutional.

The HC bench of Justice Mustafa Zaman Islam and Justice SM Masud Hossain Dolon issued the rule following a writ petition filed by Supreme Court lawyer Md Rokonuzzaman.

He submitted the petition as a public interest litigation on May 26 to the HC saying that the Bangladesh Railway has purposefully framed the rules by fixing the 40 percent quota for the children of its employees for their own benefits which is contradictory to the circular issued by the Ministry of Public Administration in 2018 regarding cancellation of quotas and articles 27, 29 and 31 of the constitution.

Due to preservation of 40 percent quota for jobs in 14th to 20 grades in the railways, there will be discrimination against others, the petitioner said.

Rokonuzzaman himself moved the petition while DAG Tushar Kanti Roy represented the state.

JS body to look into tender graft

RASHIDUL HASAN

A parliamentary body yesterday formed a three-member sub-committee to investigate alleged corruption in the tender process to purchase vaccines for the fisheries and livestock department.

The Parliamentary Standing Committee on Fisheries and Livestock Ministry formed the sub-committee at its meeting at the Jatiya Sangsad Bhaban.

SM Rezaul Karim, an Awami League lawmaker and chief of the parliamentary watchdog, presided over the meeting. MP BM Kabirul Haque was made convener of the sub-committee. The other members are AL MP Nur Uddin Chowdhury Noyon and independent MP Moshiur Rahman Mollah Shajal.

The investigation committee was asked to submit its report before the main committee within 15 working days, BM Kabirul Haque told The Daily Star. "Today was our first meeting. We are yet to go through all the documents related to the alleged corruption in the tender process," he said.

Kabirul said, "What we have heard is that there were some irregularities in the tender process as the due procedure was not followed during the tender floating."

The committee also recommended the ministry to suspend the Department of Livestock's ongoing recruitment process, as the decision regarding the quota system in government jobs is pending before the court.

In the meeting, the committee was briefed about the activities of the Ministry of Fisheries and Livestock and its subordinate agencies and institutions.

Expat stabbed to death in Jashore

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Benapole

A woman was stabbed to death allegedly by a group of robbers at her residence in Jashore's Jhikargachha upazila early yesterday.

The deceased is Ferdousi Begum, 42, wife of Altaf Hossain. She is an expatriate who returned from Spain about a year ago with her family for her son's wedding, said Nishat Al Nahian, additional superintendent (Navaran circle) of police in Jashore.

Altaf had returned to Spain after the wedding, while Ferdousi and her 12-year-old daughter stayed back.

According to police and relatives, some robbers had entered their house through the kitchen window around 3:00am.

Sensing their presence, Ferdousi confronted them. The robbers attacked Ferdousi, stabbing her multiple times. She died on the spot.

They also attacked Jannatul with sharp weapons, leaving her critically injured. She was taken to Jashore General Hospital.

"The robbers have taken some gold ornaments and other valuables. We are trying to identify and arrest them," the officer added.

'TORTURE OF WOMAN'

2 UP members sent to jail

OUR CORRESPONDENT, B'baria

A Brahmanbaria court yesterday sent two union parishad members to jail in a case filed for allegedly torturing a 25-year-old woman in an arbitration over a theft charge in Brahmanbaria's Bijoynagar upazila.

They are Ishaq Molla, a member of Ward 6 of Bishnupur Union, and Hossain Miah, a former member of Ward 8 of the same union.

Hasan Jamil Khan, inspector (investigation) of Bijoynagar Police Station, said the two were arrested from Bishnupur village on Saturday night after a video of beating a woman went viral on social media.

Jamil said a few days ago, a village police's wife was accused of theft and beaten up by some people, including Ishaq and Hossain.

As the video spread on social media, police detained former and present UP members, said the police official.

Two killed in road accidents

STAR REPORT

Two persons died in accidents on Dhaka-Tangail highway in Gazipur's Kaliakoir yesterday.

A man died after his motorcycle collided with a bus in the upazila's Sutrapur area around 9:00am.

The deceased is Jihan Farhad, 45, of Samantapur in Gazipur, said Shahadat Hossain, officer-in-charge of Nawjor Highway Police Station.

Meanwhile, the driver of a covered van died after he lost control over the steering and ploughed into a food cart in the upazila's Nawjor area around 2:00pm.

Two others, a woman aged around 38 and a child aged seven, were injured. The deceased and the injured could not be identified immediately, said OC Abu Siddique of Basan Police Station.

Govt canal grabbed for fish farming

S DILIP ROY, Lalmonirhat

A section of local influential people allegedly grabbed a portion of Mahendranagar Canal on government's land in Nakhenda area of Kurigram's Rajarhat upazila for a fish farming project.

The canal flows through 8-9 bighas of land owned by Railway and Bangladesh Water Development Board, adjacent to the Teesta-Kurigram rail route, and falls into the Teesta river. It is a source of water for irrigation on more than 1,000 acres of agricultural lands in Nakhenda area.

The grabbers stopped the canal's flow of water, causing inundation of the agricultural lands, leaving more than 100 farmers in trouble, alleged locals.

Farmers said they have complained in writing to all the departments concerned but no steps have yet been taken in this regard.

They alleged that Altaf Hossain of Nakhenda China Bazar area, who is the younger brother of an additional superintendent of police in Dhaka, illegally occupied the canal and stopped its water flow for his fish farm on both sides of the Kurigram-Teesta rail route.

"This in turn is causing waterlogging on our arable lands. We are unable to protest as Altaf is very influential," said Sarwar Bepari, a farmer.

Abul Kashem, another farmer, said, "We have not been able to cultivate our lands. Also, we are living amid fear after submitting a written complaint against Altaf Hossain."

Contacted, Altaf Hossain refuted the allegations against him.

"I built a fish farming project on my own 22 bighas of land. I did not occupy the canal on government land. Besides, I have never used my brother's influence," he claimed.

Manjurul Haque, surveyor of Railway's Divisional Estate Office under Lalmonirhat Divisional Railway, however, said Altaf Hossain did occupy the canal for his fish farming project.

The railway owns half of the canal's land, and red flags have been placed there demarcating the boundary, he added.

Rakibul Hasan, executive engineer of BWDB, said the canal will be recovered soon, adding that boundary pillars have been installed to demarcate it.

"The encroacher has been asked to vacate the canal. If he does not comply, the railway authorities will take legal action," said Purnendu Dev, divisional estate officer of Lalmonirhat Divisional Railway.

Khadiza Begum, UNO of Rajarhat upazila, said she will inspect the site and take necessary measures to keep the canal free.

Caught after fleeing 130km

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

After stealing a Suzuki Gixxer motorcycle in Netrakona, Rubel and Zunayed rode around 130 kilometres yesterday morning to reach Sarail in Brahmanbaria, confident that they had evaded the law enforcers.

They parked the stolen motorcycle at a roadside shop and were enjoying snacks when police zeroed in on their location following a phone call to 999 by the motorcycle owner, Mahbub Shahin.

A patrol team from Sarail Police Station, led by Sub-inspector Pankaj Das, positioned themselves on the highway near Kuttapara and minutes later spotted two individuals on a black motorcycle passing their vehicle.

And then the chase began. Sensing danger, the thieves sped up to flee. As the police van intercepted them about 100 yards away, Zunayed got off the bike and ran, while Rubel managed to momentarily evade arrest by speeding up through a gap.

"We then started chasing again. After some time, the thief drove his bike down a narrow road where the police van couldn't follow. I took a ride on an individual's bike and continued the chase," said SI Pankaj.

SI Pankaj said, "Rubel then abandoned the bike near a shop and started running. I screamed for help so that locals could stop him. Rubel then jumped into a waterbody but got arrested 11:30am."

"The thieves couldn't imagine they would be tracked down even after fleeing from Netrakona and reaching Brahmanbaria," he told The Daily Star. According to the SI, the chase and arrest ordeal lasted for 30 minutes, covering about one and a half kilometres.

Man accused of raping 9-yr-old daughter

UNB, B'baria

A father has been accused of raping his 9-year-old daughter in Bijoynagar upazila, Brahmanbaria.

Shahabuddin Shah, 40, has been on the run since the incident occurred on July 13, said police.

The girl was admitted to the Brahmanbaria 250-bed General Hospital.

Her mother said Shahabuddin took the girl to a secluded spot near Jagannathpur around 5:00am and raped her.

She demanded justice.

Md Hasan Jamil Khan, inspector (investigation) of Bijoynagar Police Station, said they are trying to arrest Shahabuddin.

Need master plan for further dev projects at JU

Demand civil society members

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Civil society representatives yesterday demanded that all construction works under "further development projects" at Jahangirnagar University be stopped until the formulation of a master plan.

A letter, signed by 10 civil society representatives, was sent in this regard to the vice chancellor, dean of Arts and Humanities faculty, dean of Mathematical and Physical Sciences faculty, chairman of Fine Arts department, the university's technical management committee, alongside the convener of JU's waterbody management committee.

A copy of the letter was also sent to the secretary of education ministry.

In the letter, they feared that the university administration may start further construction work without finalising the master plan, which may incite the students.

Activists Sultana Kamal and Khushi Kabir, Bela Chief Executive Syeda Rizwana Hasan, TIB Executive Director Iftekharuzzaman, Bapa General Secretary Alamgir Kabir, and BIP President Adil Mohammed Khan, among others, signed the letter.

Eradicating extreme poverty govt's key goal

Says PM's principal secretary during event

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh is playing a leading role in the global efforts to alleviate poverty, said Prime Minister's Principal Secretary Md Tofazzal Hossain Mia yesterday.

He came up with the remarks while speaking as chief guest at a workshop at Agargaon in the capital.

The event was organised by PPEPP-EU project of Palli Karma-Sahayak Foundation, funded by the European Union.

A primary goal of the government is to eradicate extreme poverty, he added.

Charles Whiteley, European Union Ambassador to Bangladesh, said despite Bangladesh's progress over the past five decades, the prevalence of extreme poverty remains scathingly high in certain regions, like the haor and coastal areas.

PKSF Chairman M Khairul Hossain moderated the workshop.

Dengue may spike

Presenting the keynote speech, Dr Lenin Chowdhury, executive president of Poba, said, "From 2000 to 2018, dengue was confined to only a few major cities, including Dhaka. Since 2019, dengue has spread across the country."

"Within this time, it was necessary to formulate a comprehensive central action plan to control dengue. But it was not done," he said.

This year the monsoon started a little late, delaying the dengue outbreak, he said, adding, "Forty-eight people have died of dengue so far this year. The number can increase in the coming days."

to set up a waste management plant. But they don't heed to our instructions," he claimed.

Asked why the municipality is dumping waste in open spaces and the waterbody, Biplab Muhuree, secretary of the Hathazari municipality, said they are trying to set up a waste management plant. "We are working to buy land to establish a plant. But we are facing a shortage of funds."

He also admitted they established the existing landfill without getting permission as they had no space to dump the waste.

Hathazari municipality dumping waste in canal; landfill set up next to waterbody without permission

SIFAYET ULLAH, Chattogram

The Sundari canal in Chattogram's Hathazari upazila is facing a severe environmental crisis due to indiscriminate dumping of garbage by the municipality.

As the state agency, who is the custodian of the canal, has been dumping household wastes for years, a portion of the canal has already turned into a narrow drain, obstructing the waterflow of this waterbody.

The landfill, adjacent to the canal, was established in 2013 without obtaining environmental clearance from the Department of Environment (DoE).

The canal, around 5km in length, started from Jangalchari and ended at Subedar Pukur area under the upazila.

This correspondent visited the spot on Saturday and observed that a huge amount of plastic packets of chips, biscuits and several types of single use plastic (SUP) were lying along the banks on both sides of the canal.

Sultan Ahmed, a resident of the Madhyakhil area near the landfill, said, "It is unbearable for me and my family to stay home when the bad smell spreads after the municipality dumps the garbage."

Mansur Alam, a resident of the Rangipara area, regularly cultivates crops using water from the hilly canal.

"Sometimes the canal water turns black during discharge of untreated wastewater from the landfill into the waterbody," he added.

A protected forest, around 50 acres, is located near the landfill. Due to dumping garbage next to the forestland, some trees have already died.

Anwarul Islam, forester of the Hathazari Forest Office, said he verbally urged officials of the municipality to take measures to shift the landfill.

According to the Environmental Conservation Act, filling a canal (waterbody) is a punishable offence.

Nur Hasan Sajib, an assistant director of DoE, Chattogram, who has been transferred to Noakhali recently, confirmed that the municipality is using the land as a landfill without obtaining permission from DoE.

"We asked the authorities several times

207 schools need urgent repair

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, Patuakhali

At least 207 educational institutions, including schools, colleges, and madrasas in Patuakhali, are in dire need of urgent repair after sustaining significant damages in Cyclone Remal.

Although these institutions sought financial assistance worth a total of Tk 15 crore from the government through the district education office, no allocation has yet been made.

As a result, these institutions have been struggling to carry out their academic activities, with many remaining closed since the cyclone lashed the coastal belt of the country on May 26-27.

The cyclone also damaged 6,082 houses completely and 31,364 ones partially in the district, affecting around 3.38 lakh people.

Of the damaged educational institutions, 49 are in Kalapara, 42 in Galachipa, 34 in Sadar, 29 in Dasmina, 22 in Baufal, 16 in Mirzaganj, 8 in Dumki, and 7 in Rangabali upazilas.

"The cyclone blew away the tin roof of our school. Now it is not possible to conduct classes amid monsoon without having the roof repaired. As such, 200 students are unable to continue their studies. I applied to the district education office for assistance, but no money has been allocated yet," said Subal Chandra Sheel, headteacher of Chalitabuniya Junior Secondary School in Sadar upazila.

Md Ashraf Uzzaman, headteacher of Menhajpur Haqqani Secondary School in Kalapara upazila, echoed his concerns.

"In Kalapara upazila, 4 colleges, 12 schools, and 25 madrasas sustained damages worth around Tk 1.5 crore in the cyclone. I have informed the higher authorities in this regard," said Moniruzzaman Khan, secondary education officer in the upazila.

Contacted, Md Mojibur Rahman, district education officer in Patuakhali, said a letter was sent to the higher authorities on May 30 seeking an allocation of Tk 15 crore for necessary repairs to 207 institutions in the district.

So far, no allocation has been received, he added.

KURIGRAM, SIRAJGANJ

Flood situation improves slightly

STAR REPORT

The ongoing flood situation in Kurigram and Sirajganj districts has improved to some extent as floodwater has started to recede.

In Kurigram, water levels in the Brahmaputra, Dudhkumar, and Dharla rivers have begun to decrease, leading to a reduction in flooding in many affected areas.

As of yesterday, the water levels of Dudhkumar and Dharla had fallen below the danger level, while the Brahmaputra's water level, although reduced, remained above the danger level, said Rakibul Hasan, executive engineer of the Bangladesh Water Development Board in Kurigram.

"Although most areas are still inundated, the flood situation is expected to improve further as the Brahmaputra's water continues to recede," he added.

Many flood victims who had sought refuge in shelters and embankments have started returning to their homes since Saturday.

In Sirajganj, the Jamuna river was flowing 8cm below the danger level at Kazipur Point and 19cm above the danger level at Sirajganj Hard Point as of yesterday noon, according to BWDB sources.

"Water levels have been reducing at all points over the past three days. Although the Jamuna is still flowing above the danger level at Sirajganj Hard Point, we expect it to come down below the danger level in the next two to three days," said Md Nazmul Islam, sub-divisional engineer of the Water Development Board in Sirajganj.

However, most areas remain inundated, and residents have yet to return to their homes from shelters and higher grounds.

"If the Jamuna's water continues to recede, it will take around a week for floodwater to be removed from the affected areas," the BWDB official noted.

TRUMP assassination attempt How it unfolded

1:00pm ET

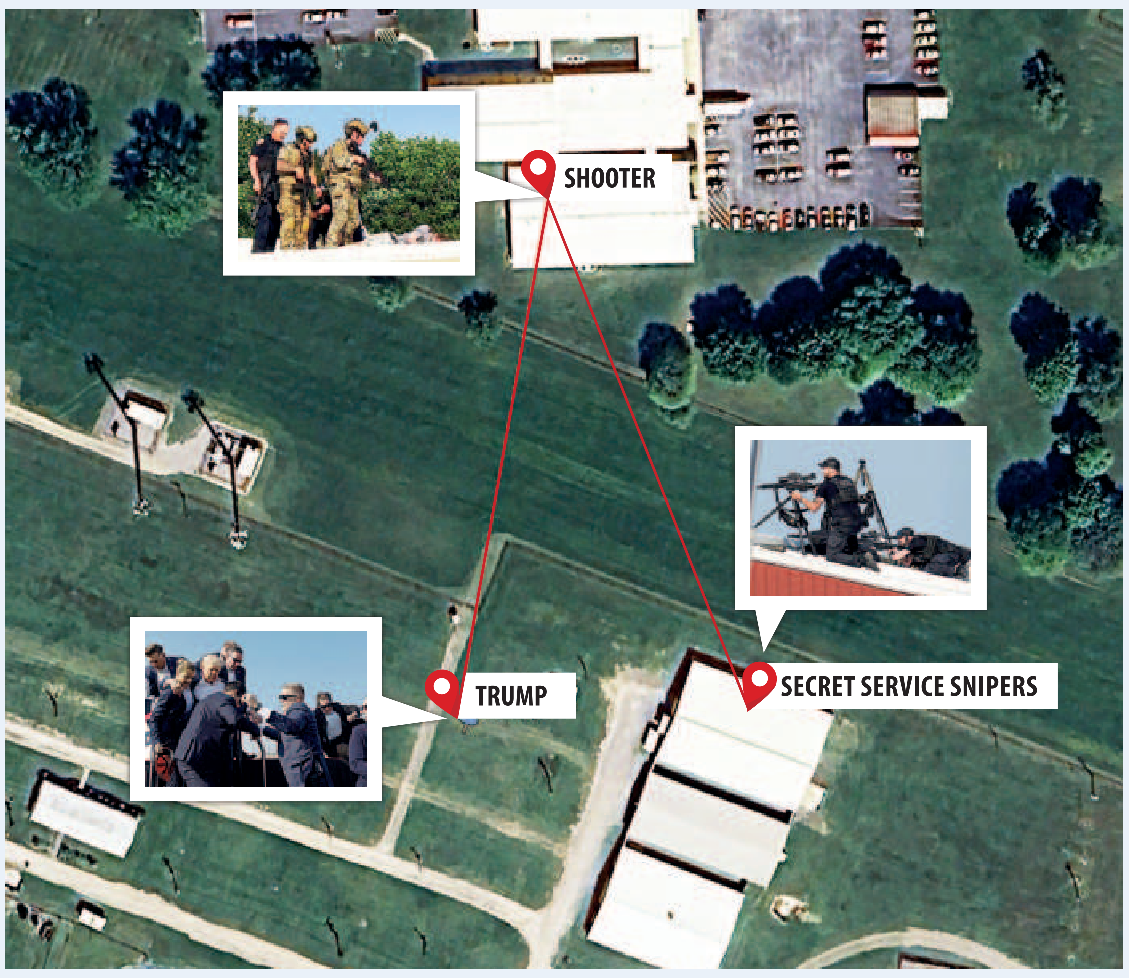
Rally grounds at Butler Farm Show grounds opens to Trump supporters, more than four hours before Trump was scheduled to speak. Fans immediately begin pouring in.

4:11pm ET

Former GOP Senate candidate Sean Parnell makes opening remarks by attacking the Biden administration, to cheers from onlookers.

6:15pm ET

Trump takes to the stage and is shot moments after he begins speaking, with gunshots ringing out as he says the words: "Take a look at what happened."



Trump rally shooting reshapes US election

AFP, Milwaukee

A bloodied candidate, his fist raised in defiance after surviving an assassination attempt.

It is still early to know what impact the attempt on Donald Trump's life will have on the 2024 White House race, but the image of the former president as he was rushed from the stage of a rally in Pennsylvania has already taken on iconic status.

The great disrupter whom many see as the clear and present threat to democracy and the rule of law has himself become a victim -- and survivor -- of the ultimate act of political violence.

Pennsylvania's Democratic junior senator, John Fetterman, yesterday cautioned that the attack should not become "an opportunity for politics or strategy, or how this might play out."

Yet the dynamics of the Republican Party's national nominating convention, starting today in the Midwestern city of Milwaukee, are sure to be transformed along with the campaign more broadly, as Trump seeks to make political capital from his ordeal.

An often divisive figure but a canny campaigner with unswerving political instincts, Trump took the high ground yesterday as he called for Americans to stand together in "not allowing evil to win."

He might have expected a ticker-tape parade anyway in Milwaukee, but his brush with death ensures near-mythic status among the 50,000 expected attendees there who already see the Republican tycoon as their warrior and champion.

Plastered on front pages around the world and spreading virally on social media, the image showing Trump's raised fist against the backdrop of an American flag flying above him will be worth more than even the most lavish ad campaign.

Election messaging is about contrasts and, seizing the moment, Trump demonstrated courage and fortitude that voters are certain to compare with weeks of disastrous headlines about President Joe Biden's frailty.

Crucially, the attack plays into Trump's grievance narrative about Democrats being out to get his support base and his insistence that he is taking the slings and arrows -- literally, now -- so that they don't have to.

Discussing the impact of the shooting on the convention, Democratic former White House strategist David Axelrod predicted on CNN that Trump would be "greeted as a kind of martyr."

Meanwhile, the Republican's adversaries are likely to find criticizing the former president a trickier proposition.

Biden has been taking the fight to Trump recently, in an aggressive effort to present his predecessor as a threat to democracy.

It is a message that could fall on deaf ears, though, against a target who barely escaped with his life in an act many will see as akin to domestic terrorism.

The Biden campaign said it was "pausing all outbound communications and working to pull down our television ads as quickly as possible," multiple media outlets reported, in response to the assassination attempt.

Biden also postponed a trip to Texas.

On the Democratic upside, the attack on Trump solves a more immediate problem for Biden.

The president has been lambasted for his lackluster debate showing against Trump last month in Atlanta, when he struggled even to finish sentences, let alone articulate a clear case for four more years.

Suddenly, days of painful splash headlines for the Democrat have been relegated to the inside pages or swept away entirely, as the parties argue over whose political rhetoric is most to blame for fomenting violence.

Biden's opponents within his own party may also find it hard to mount a serious challenge to his candidacy without appearing nakedly opportunist at a time of national crisis.

In terms of ramifications for the vote itself, it seems obvious that Trump would receive some kind of boost from Americans angered by the shooting, and the anti-Trump rhetoric that many Republicans say contributed to it.

But the longer-term benefit might be more to do with juicing turnout than converting agnostics, according to veteran pollster Frank Luntz.

"In the end, voters will settle down and return to their candidate of choice. The people who move towards Trump out of sympathy will probably move back," he posted on X.

"But what happened in (Pennsylvania) will definitely impact the final vote, guaranteeing that every Trump voter will actually vote."

Luntz believes the participation gap could be worth up to two points nationwide, with a more accentuated boost in Pennsylvania, a crucial swing state that Biden needs to defend if he is to have any hope of prevailing in November.

"This doesn't guarantee that Trump flips Pennsylvania. But the long and winding road for Joe Biden just became even longer and windier," Luntz added.

Russia blames Biden admin for attack

REUTERS, Moscow

The Kremlin yesterday said it did not believe the US administration was responsible for Saturday's assassination attempt on US presidential candidate Donald Trump, but that it had created an atmosphere that provoked the attack.

Trump was shot in the ear during a rally in Pennsylvania, in an attack now being investigated as an assassination attempt. The attacker was shot dead and law enforcement officials said they had not yet identified a motive.

"We do not believe that the attempt to eliminate and assassinate Trump was organised by the current authorities," Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov told reporters.

"But the atmosphere around candidate Trump ... provoked what America is confronting today."

His comments echoed those of some of Trump's Republican allies, who immediately pinned the blame on Biden.

"After numerous attempts to remove candidate Trump from the political arena - using first legal tools, the courts, prosecutors, attempts to politically discredit and compromise the candidate - it was obvious to all outside observers that his life was in danger," Peskov said.

He added that there were no plans for Putin to call Trump now.

PREVIOUS SHOOTINGS OF US LEADERS

AFP, Washington

RONALD REAGAN (1981)

President Reagan was shot and seriously wounded as he left an event at the Hilton hotel in Washington. The attacker was John Hinckley Jr, who was granted unconditional release in 2022.

Reagan spent twelve days in the hospital. The incident boosted Reagan's popularity, as he displayed humor and resilience during his recovery.

GERALD FORD (1975)

President Ford was left unscathed in two separate assassination attempts by women in September 1975, both in California and within a span of just 17 days.

JOHN F. KENNEDY (1963)

Riding in his motorcade with his wife Jackie, President Kennedy was assassinated in Dallas, Texas by Lee Harvey Oswald.

The Warren Commission investigating the assassination concluded in 1964 that Lee Harvey Oswald, a former marine who had lived in the Soviet Union, had acted alone.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT (1933)

As president-elect, FDR was the target of an assassination attempt in Miami, Florida. He was unharmed, but Chicago Mayor Anton Cermak was killed in the attack.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT (1912)

Like Trump, Teddy Roosevelt was running for the White House as a former president when he was shot in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY (1901)

President McKinley was shot and killed by anarchist Leon Czolgosz in Buffalo, New York.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN (1865)

keeping five percent quotas for members of underprivileged communities and those with special needs.

When the procession reached Gulistan intersection on the way back from Bangabhaban around 3:15pm, Dhaka University student Nahid Islam, an organiser of the movement, announced, "If the president doesn't convene an emergency session within 24 hours, we'll announce tougher programmes."

A 12-member delegation of the protesters submitted the memorandum to Major General Mohammad Adil Choudhury, military secretary of the president, said Joynal Abedin, press secretary of the president, reports BSS.

"Don't force us to call any programmes that cause public sufferings. Take an initiative within 24 hours," Nahid said, adding, "It's still unclear to us what the government's stance is. They've the authority to reform the quota system, which has been our consistent demand."

He said the boycott of classes and exams will continue until their demand is met.

About Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's comments that the government cannot take any initiative until the court settles the issue, Nahid said the government order that abolished the quotas for first- and second-class government jobs and its reinstatement later is a sub judice matter.

"But our demand is for a rational reform of the quotas for government jobs in all grades. Only the executive branch do that."

Students of public universities and colleges, along with jobseekers, have been demonstrating against the quota system for over two weeks, occupying key city intersections, highways and rail lines.

The protests began after the High Court on June 5 ruled that the 2018 government circular abolishing the quotas was illegal, effectively reinstating the quota system.

The government appealed against the decision, and the Supreme Court on July 10 issued a status quo on the HC order.

The government's 2018 circular abolished the quota system for first and second class jobs in the wake of massive quota reform protests.

Then too, the students asked for its reform, not abolition.

Before that, 56 percent of government jobs had been reserved for candidates from various quotas.

Of them, 30 percent were for freedom fighters' children and grandchildren; 10 percent for women; 10 for people from underdeveloped districts; five for members of indigenous communities; and one for persons with disabilities.

At 11:00am yesterday, as part of their pre-announced programmes, several thousand students started the march from Dhaka University.

They broke through barricades near the High Court and then at Zero Point in Gulistan. They carried the national flag, placards and posters, and chanted different slogans in favour of their demand.

Police kept water cannons and riot vehicles ready when the protesters held a sit-in at Gulistan.

Students from DU; Jagannath University; Sher-e-Bangla Agricultural University; seven colleges affiliated with Dhaka University; along with private universities and National University took part in the procession.

Meanwhile, students in others districts, including Chattogram, Rajshahi, Cumilla, Narayanganj and Patuakhali also handed over memorandums to respective deputy commissioners for submitting to the president.

fighters?" If the grandchildren of the freedom fighters don't get quota benefits, should the grandchildren of Razakars get the benefit?"

For over two weeks, students of different universities and colleges have been demonstrating for reforms to the quota system in government jobs.

At DU, students marched from the halls and gathered in front of the Raju Bhaskarjo.

Students from Bangladesh-Kuwait Maitree Hall, Begum Fazilatunnesa Mujib Hall, Shamsun Nahar Hall, and Rukayyah Hall were among the protesters.

They chanted "Chaite gelam odhikar, hoye gelam Razakar [Asked for rights and became a Razakar]".

Nahid Islam, one of the organisers of the quota protests, said they did not call for any gathering and that the students came out of their dorms spontaneously.

Meanwhile, Chhatra League activists, armed with sticks, gathered at several points around the campus, including Madhur Canteen, and Shahbagh and Sheraton intersections.

Some protesters were also seen carrying sticks.

Meanwhile, there was strong police presence in Shahbagh, Chankharpool, and Nilkhet areas as of filing this report at 3:15am today.

A student said activists of Chhatra League tried to stop them from joining the protests at many dorms.

Asif Mahmood, another coordinator of the anti-quota protests, alleged he was attacked in front of Bijoy Ekattor Hall when he was calling students to join in.

The agitating students started returning to their dorms around 1:45am, and most of them had left by 2:30am.

Students of Chittagong University also took to the streets on their campus, during which BCL leaders and activists reportedly attacked them and injured four to five people.

Later, BCL activists were seen gathering in the Zero Point area, chanting pro-ruling party slogans.

At Rajshahi University, several hundred students took out a procession from the campus and blocked the Dhaka-Rajshahi highway a little after midnight.

At Jagannath University, hundreds of protesters were seen chanting slogans inside the campus around 11:40pm yesterday.

'Tk 400cr peon' is Jahangir personal anecdote yesterday.

While talking about the alleged corruption of a former PSC driver, Abed Ali, who amassed crores of taka by selling question papers for government jobs, the premier informed that she has taken action against a former peon (office aide) of her residence who had amassed Tk 400 crore.

Although the PM, at a press conference at the Gono Bhaban, did not mention the name of her peon, The Daily Star learnt that the person is Jahangir Alam.

According to sources, the Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit (BFIU) recently froze the bank accounts of Jahangir and his wife, Kamrun Nahar, for 30 days due to suspicious transactions under the Money Laundering Prevention Act, 2012.

The BFIU also asked banks and financial institutions to provide it with updated bank statements of the couple and the companies owned by them.

Jahangir, hailing from Chatkhil of Noakhali, worked as a personal aide to the prime minister during her first two tenures from January 2009 to December 2018.

Prior to that, Jahangir was the Awami League president's personal aide when she stayed at the Sudha Sadan.

Jahangir was dismissed at the beginning of the PM's third term in January 2019.

Despite losing his job, Jahangir continued to misuse his former position, prompting the Prime Minister's Office to issue a circular to media, warning about his illegal activities.

The circular, issued on December 6, 2023, also said the PMO has no connections with Jahangir and urged people to take assistance from law enforcement agencies if needed.

Sources revealed that Jahangir, known for his influence in local politics and charity work, even traveled by helicopter to visit his in-laws' in Maijdee Court.

He was denied the AL nomination for the Noakhali-1 constituency in both the 2018 and 2024 national elections.

At yesterday's press briefing, the prime minister questioned how he accumulated such wealth, referring to his extravagant helicopter trips. "How did he make so much money?"

Jahangir used his influence to get his brother elected chairman three times in Khilpara union of Chatkhil and helped one of his followers, Mohammadullah, get elected as Chatkhil municipality mayor, according to local sources.

SALT ON YOUR WALLS?

Maintaining building surfaces during the rainy season is a significant challenge in Bangladesh. The monsoon's relentless rains not only test the resilience of structures but also put their aesthetic appeal at risk. Efflorescence, a common issue in this region, exacerbates these challenges, making it difficult to preserve the beauty and durability of walls.

PRIYAM PAUL

Efflorescence occurs when water-soluble salts present in building materials, such as bricks and plaster, dissolve in water and migrate to the surface. As the water evaporates, it leaves behind white, powdery deposits, giving walls a neglected and aged look. More importantly, efflorescence indicates underlying moisture issues that can compromise the structural integrity of buildings over time.

Efflorescence affects 70-80 percent of homes in Bangladesh. Salinity issues typically arise during or after the rainy season in our country.

Once the problem arises, conventional methods of addressing efflorescence involve labour-intensive and temporary fixes. Typically, homeowners resort to breaking the affected plaster and reapplying a new layer. This process is not only cumbersome but also expensive, requiring significant time and effort.

Repainting walls or covering efflorescence-affected areas with furniture or tiles are other common solutions. However, these approaches merely mask the problem without addressing the underlying moisture issues, leading to recurrent efflorescence and ongoing maintenance costs.

One unique solution provided by Asian Paints Bangladesh Limited is Hydroloc, which is designed to combat efflorescence without the need to break and replace existing plaster. This simple penetrative coating infiltrates the small pores in the plaster, neutralising the salinity inside the structure and forming a protective barrier that prevents salt build-up on the surface, ensuring long-lasting protection and aesthetic appeal.

In conclusion, homeowners invest effort and care in decorating their homes to reflect their unique style and maintain pristine living spaces. Efflorescence disrupts this by tarnishing wall paints and compromising aesthetic appeal. By choosing the right solution, homeowners can safeguard their homes' beauty and structural integrity.

A waterlogged Dhaka is a policy failure

Sincere efforts by relevant authorities vital to address this issue

Monsoon brings new images and stories of sufferings every year, as did Friday's heavy rains in Dhaka. Two particular stories that seem to have stuck with many social media users involve the deaths of four individuals in electrocution and how several areas in DSCC remained submerged even 36 hours after the rain had stopped. For many, the first was a painful reminder of a similar tragedy in Mirpur last year. It too involved four people, including three of a family who died after being electrocuted on a waterlogged street. The second story comes with a side dish of irony, as it reminded many of a lofty promise by the DSCC mayor about ensuring swift drainage of rainwater—within 15 minutes no less. Promises, as one quipped, do die fast in Bangladesh.

But these are not just stories of sufferings but also of persistent policy failure. Unfortunately, those in charge of making sure these sufferings and disruptions do not occur can apparently say or do anything and get away without facing consequences. Over the past four years, more than Tk 730 crore has been spent by the two city corporations of Dhaka—Tk 370 crore by DNCC and Tk 360 crore by DSCC—to address this waterlogging problem. But despite the spectacular lack of effects of their initiatives, there has been no accountability whatsoever for the authorities and officials concerned.

The city corporations officially took over canal and drain management from Dhaka WASA on December 31, 2020. It was meant to streamline efforts to mitigate waterlogging. It did not happen, and as a result, the situation remains as dire as before. The city's drainage system continues to be weakened by poor design, weak maintenance, and ongoing road construction activities. Much of the drainage network remains clogged by waste, making it very hard for the rainwater to flow into rivers. Two city corporation officials, speaking anonymously, also acknowledged the failure of efforts to declutter the canals, canal-drains, and box culverts.

Dhaka currently has a network of 2,211 kilometres of drains, with 961km in the south and 1,250km in the north. True, ensuring the smooth function of such a big network is a big task, but there is no alternative to improving the capacities of the city corporations to properly maintain it. But even that will not be enough. Given the unregulated growth of Dhaka, experts have stressed the importance of a master plan to restore all the canals and waterbodies, and preventing their encroachment by unscrupulous entities. Addressing improper waste disposal is also critical. But most importantly, Dhaka's persistent waterlogging problem cannot be resolved without the sincerity of the relevant authorities.

Why are students still dying on roads?

RSF data paints alarming picture of road safety

Six years after the nationwide road safety movement that was sparked by the deaths of two high schoolers, nothing seems to have changed in terms of the safety of commuters, including students. According to the Road Safety Foundation (RSF), in the last five and a half years since 2019, some 34,478 people were killed in road crashes. Of them, 5,619 were students—making up 16.29 percent of all victims. While all such avoidable deaths are tragic, student fatalities are of particular concern considering their young age, their importance for the nation's future, and their starring role in the 2018 movement and subsequent acquiescence by the government. But as statistics show, they continue to be victimised as before.

Following the movement, we heard the authorities make numerous promises about improving road safety. Committees were formed, new laws and regulations were passed, and many crores of taka were spent in various projects. All of that evidently came to naught, with thousands perishing on roads every year. As per RSF data, 2,641 (47 percent) student victims were between the ages of 5-17, while 2,978 (53 percent) were between 18-25. Moreover, 1,534 (27.3 percent) of them were pedestrians. The fact that vehicle drivers were often reluctant to aid victims even after having hit them is another worrying sign.

The reasons RSF has identified as responsible for these incidents—including faulty roads and vehicles, lack of knowledge about safe road use, and reckless driving, including by student bikers—are well-known, which makes the glaring lack of results from government initiatives that much painful. According to a Prothom Alo report, over 600,000 vehicles are still operating without fitness certificates. One of the promises made after the 2018 movement was the removal of such vehicles from roads. How are so many of them still operating, then?

Clearly, the first thing we need at this stage is accountability for the failure of those behind such promises and initiatives. When a person dies in a road crash, it is not just the driver or vehicle owner who shares responsibility for it, but the system that protects or enables them is responsible, too. Over the years, we have seen how undue benefits and exemptions have been extended to transport associations. This needs to change. The authorities must go tough on those allowing unsafe vehicles and breaching other rules. They should also run awareness campaigns in educational institutions considering the vulnerability of students.

AUTOMATIC PRICING FORMULA FOR DIESEL

BPC can no longer cry wolf about losses

Dr Ijaz Hossain
is former dean of engineering at Bangladesh University of Engineering and Technology (BUET).

IJAZ HOSSAIN

Until very recently, the prices of liquid fuels such as diesel, octane, petrol and kerosene were fixed administratively by the government. There were always misgivings among the general public that the government is arbitrarily fixing the prices. Even though there was a formula of sorts, it was never revealed to the public. What transpired was that the administratively set prices for a long period were in favour of Bangladesh Petroleum Corporation (BPC), the state-run company that imports, distributes and markets oil. During this period, the international crude oil price was very low, so the BPC made a hefty profit. Consumers felt they were being deprived of the benefits of low oil prices.

For a long, long time, the pricing principle was that diesel, being a common person's fuel, must be subsidised, while petrol/octane, being a rich person's fuel, must be taxed. As a result, for a long time, diesel was much cheaper than petrol. The BPC used this cross-subsidy to manage its books. The problem started when compressed natural gas (CNG) was introduced and thousands of vehicles moved away from petrol. Moreover, the low price of diesel prompted consumers to opt for diesel vehicles. The cross-subsidy was no longer working for BPC as demand for petrol started to fall and the consumption of diesel started to increase at a rapid pace.

The situation became untenable for the BPC when oil prices skyrocketed as a result of the Ukraine-Russia war. The financial burden became so heavy that huge subsidies had to be provided by the government to balance BPC's books. The government finally decided that it would no longer subsidise diesel, so the diesel price was increased from Tk 80 to Tk 110. This had an immediate negative impact on economic activities. Consumer prices of foodstuff shot up, leading to an inflation rate of over nine percent that hasn't come down.

Soon after the massive diesel price hike, the global oil price started to fall, but the government did not bother to reduce the domestic oil price. When consumers started clamouring for a reduction in energy prices, it responded by a nominal reduction, which angered the public further.

VISUAL: SHAIKH SULTANA JAHAN BADHON

The government understood it had to do something, and after much dilly-dallying, it introduced the so-called "automatic pricing formula" for petroleum products in March this year.

A comparison of diesel prices in six South Asian countries—Bangladesh, Bhutan, India, Nepal, Pakistan and Sri Lanka—reveals that Bangladesh has the second cheapest diesel price (Bhutan has the cheapest). However, a nearly Tk 108/litre price is a break from the old philosophy that diesel, the most important liquid fuel for developing countries, needs to be subsidised to foster the country's economic growth. India introduced the market-based pricing mechanism a long time back. Diesel price in India is high because of two taxes imposed on it: first, the federal government's excise duty, and second, the state government's VAT.

Whether diesel should be taxed or subsidised is a contentious issue. Some economists believe that since it is imported, it should not be subsidised, while another group believes it should be subsidised especially for irrigation. After the initiation of automatic pricing, diesel has become a taxed product, the impact of which has already been felt with rising inflation. The argument often furthered by the energy ministry in support of keeping the diesel price high is to prevent smuggling to India. At one time, the price differential was so high that a substantial quantity of diesel got smuggled to India. With the new automatically set price, the differential is not high enough to encourage smuggling, given the associated risks and costs involved.

BPC has a tendency to show that it is incurring losses and often claims that it needs funds for development projects. The company has undertaken several such projects, of which the second refinery is the biggest. Among the significant projects undertaken by the BPC in the recent past are: i) a second refinery; ii) Bangladesh-India friendship pipeline to carry diesel; iii) Parbatipur-Siliguri transboundary pipeline; iv) a 238km pipeline from Chattogram to Godnile, Narayanganj with an extension to Fatullah (8.29km), and Cumilla to Chandpur (59.23km) for diesel; v) a 17km pipeline for jet fuel from Pitalganj to Kurmitola; vi) 110km onshore and offshore pipeline under single-point mooring (SPM) system for imported crude and refined petroleum oils from carrying vessels to ERL storage; and vii) a smart fuel distribution monitoring system (SFDMS) to modernise and streamline the fuel distribution process.

It is customary for the government to provide funding as loans, which the BPC has to pay back. Therefore, in the annual accounting, debt servicing will show up as an expense. These projects are justified with the reason that they would help the BPC manage its operations better and thus save money, or at least the costs would be fully recovered. There are, however, situations where these projects are inordinately delayed or face bottlenecks; the second refinery is a case in point. In such cases, the investment cost becomes a burden for the BPC.

Another oft-raised issue is the subsidy provided to the BPC when diesel was sold at a price lower than the international price. It is important to note that if a subsidy has been provided, there is no justification for that expense to be shown in the BPC's books as an outstanding amount.

Following the introduction of the new pricing formula for petroleum products, there is no way that the BPC can lose money, because it is a cost-plus formula. The imported costs of petroleum products as well as the cost of delivery borne by the distribution companies as well as the BPC's financing and operation costs are all fully recovered. On top of that, there is the BPC's margin, which should cover development costs.

How our RMG industry empowered women

RMG NOTES

Mostafiz Uddin
is the managing director of Denim Expert Limited. He is also the founder and CEO of Bangladesh Denim Expo and Bangladesh Apparel Exchange (BAE).

MOSTAFIZ UDDIN

Over the past few decades, Bangladesh has emerged as a global hub for the ready-made garment (RMG) industry. The sector has played a pivotal role in transforming the socioeconomic landscape of the country. At the heart of this transformation is the empowerment of women, who make up the vast majority of the RMG workforce. A report by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) reveals that, as of 2020, our RMG sector employs around 32 lakh women. This sector's growth has created numerous job opportunities for Bangladeshi women, contributing to their economic empowerment while also playing a vital role in the growth of the economy.

The RMG industry has provided lakhs of women, particularly from rural areas, with their first formal employment opportunities. This shift from informal, often agricultural work, to formal employment in garment factories has had profound implications for their economic status and independence.

Earning a regular income has allowed women RMG workers to contribute to their household finances, often making them primary breadwinners. This financial independence has given them decision-making power within their families and communities. These women now have the means to invest in their children's education, healthcare, and better living conditions, leading to a positive cycle of development and improved quality of life.

Employment in the garment sector has also facilitated skills development. Many women enter the industry with little or no formal education. Through on-the-job training and experience, they acquire valuable skills in sewing, quality control, and production management. Some factories also offer literacy programmes and vocational training, further improving their capabilities and future employment prospects.

Beyond economic benefits, the RMG industry has been instrumental in fostering social empowerment of women in Bangladesh. By stepping into the workforce, women have challenged traditional gender roles and norms that often confined them to domestic duties. The presence of women in factories has gradually shifted societal perceptions of women's roles as well. As more women work outside home, the acceptance of women as economic contributors has increased.

Working in the garment industry has also facilitated greater social mobility for women. Employment has enabled women to move from rural areas to urban centres, exposing them to diverse cultures and ideas. This exposure has broadened their horizons, increased their awareness of rights and opportunities, and inspired many to pursue further education and career advancements.

The RMG industry has provided lakhs of women, particularly from rural areas, with their first formal employment opportunities. This shift from informal, often agricultural work, to formal employment in garment factories has had profound implications for their economic status and independence.

However, this growth is not without challenges. Workers often face issues such as stagnated wages, long working hours, and challenging working conditions. These challenges have also sparked advocacy and efforts to improve labour rights and working conditions in the industry. Indeed, the rise of the garment sector has led to the growth of labour unions and advocacy groups fighting for workers' rights. These organisations have been instrumental in negotiating better wages, improving working conditions, and ensuring compliance with the labour law. Women workers have played a crucial role in these movements, often leading protests and strikes to demand fair treatment.

The Bangladesh government, along with international bodies and NGOs, has taken steps to address these challenges. The government had to take initiatives such as the Accord on Fire and Building Safety in Bangladesh and the Alliance for Bangladesh Worker Safety to improve factory safety standards following the Rana Plaza disaster in 2013. Additionally, programmes aimed at promoting fair wages and gender equality in the workplace have been introduced, further supporting the rights of female garment workers.

Women's increased economic participation has contributed to community development. As women invest in their families and communities, there is a noticeable improvement in areas such as health, education, and infrastructure. Empowered women are more likely to participate in community decision-making processes, advocating for issues such as clean water, sanitation, and better schools.

I truly believe that Bangladesh's RMG industry is a testament to the transformative power of employment in empowering women and lifting them out of poverty. While challenges remain, the strides made in economic and social empowerment, skills development, and advocacy for rights are undeniable. As the industry continues to evolve, it holds the potential to further enhance the lives of crores of women, driving not only the economic growth, but also social progress and gender equality in Bangladesh.

NGOs can help citizens learn to use the RTI Act

Dr Shamsul Bari and Ruhi Naz
are chairman and assistant director (RTI), respectively, of Research Initiatives, Bangladesh (RIB). They can be reached at rib@citech-bd.com.

SHAMSUL BARI and RUHI NAZ

Recently, there has been a perceptible increase in government advertisements promoting the Right to Information (RTI) Act, 2009, particularly on television. This is welcome news, indicating government recognition of the citizens' role in advancing good governance. The RTI Act was adopted, as enunciated in its preamble, to empower citizens to monitor the work of public offices by seeking relevant information on how they do their jobs. However, this is a complex task, as citizens must first understand the law's myriad possibilities to use it effectively.

Regrettably, there is still a significant lack of awareness about the full potential of the RTI Act. Due to its extensive nature, promoting its use through simple awareness sessions and advertisements is proving to be a challenging, if not impossible, task. The slogans used in ads, such as "Information is power," "Know your rights, ask for information," and "Access to Information is a citizen's right," may not resonate with the people. They require assistance in understanding the reasons for seeking information in the first place. Most individuals believe that information is only necessary for specific purposes and should be sought as and when required. Few realise that the law's primary objective is not to serve citizens' personal information needs, but to promote the larger public interest. They also need help in identifying specific goals for using the law.

Despite the challenges, significant progress has been made over the last 14 years. Many citizens have learnt to use the law to check, for example, if the government's social safety net programmes for those in need are reaching them properly; if school scholarships are reaching the students in full and not being truncated by school authorities; if free medicine at public clinics for people in need is not being sold to others; if contractors are not cheating on construction materials, etc. This progress, largely due to the support of many NGOs, is a testament to the potential of citizen engagement in governance. To maintain this momentum, there is a need to expand the focus and areas of interventions. Government advertisements and efforts of the Information Commission alone cannot achieve this. Citizens need practical support to identify issues and process RTI applications, a role that only NGOs can effectively fulfil.

To help citizens identify issues of common interest likely to benefit from RTI interventions, we consulted citizen groups in different parts of the country engaged in utilising the RTI law. Based on that, we devised a list relating to key public interest sectors in governance. We cite them here as an indicative list to provide a base for further additions. Experience gained in using them will likely lead to higher engagement levels in more sensitive governance areas.

RTI interventions in the education sector

- Information on resource management of schools/colleges to ensure they are properly and justly utilised.
- Information relating to fair recruitment and promotion of teachers and staff.
- Information on the functioning of management committees and the mechanism to assure their accountability, e.g., teachers' appointments, management of school funds, etc.
- Information related to admission practices, levying examination fees, etc.

RTI interventions in the health sector

- Information relating to the management system of hospitals/clinics, e.g., availability of doctors at all levels.
- Attendance of medical staff and their maintenance of time schedules.
- Procurement of medicines and medical equipment.
- Information to check if healthcare services and resource distribution are available for all, including the disadvantaged.
- Roles and duties of hospital administration and their accountability.
- Cleanliness of hospital/clinic premises and toilets, how they are managed, and checking on the roster of duties.
- Information on the list of free services and free medicines and whether their availability is prominently displayed.

RTI interventions on local government

- Information on budgeting and expenditure on local development projects, justifications for undertaking such projects, their progress, and who is responsible for monitoring and ensuring people's participation.
- Information on how effective public service deliveries are and whether access to such public service is ensured for all citizens.
- Measures to ensure fair implementation and distribution of development projects and resources.
- Measures taken to ensure regular maintenance, repair, and reconstruction of roads, bridges, culverts and other infrastructure.
- Measures to ensure transparency and accountability in the tendering process.
- Measures to reduce corruption and mismanagement in the provision of public services, e.g., appointment of rightful candidates at public services is ensured, and unlawful transfers/promotions are avoided.

RTI intervention on public procurement

- Information on the bidding or tendering process, selection of suppliers, contract awarding processes, monitoring mechanisms for progress, and quality management.
- Information on measures undertaken to reduce corruption and prevent wastage of public funds, e.g., avoidance of repeated extension of project completion period.

RTI intervention in social welfare programmes

- Measures taken to ensure just and equitable selection processes of rightful beneficiaries of specific services, e.g., pensions for old age, widow benefits, etc.
- Information on how specific programmes, e.g., social safety net programmes, are implemented and coordinated at all levels. Measures to reduce corruption in the disbursement of funds under safety net programmes.

RTI objectives for infrastructure development

- Information on measures taken for efficient project implementations related to infrastructure development and to reduce corruption and avoid project delays.
- Information on who is specifically accountable for such infrastructure's maintenance, repair, reconstruction, and operation.

Clearly, this is a preliminary and indicative list of issues related to limited sectors. However, they provide a basis to move forward. It must be noted, however, that identifying issues and transforming them into RTI requests are two different things. Experience has shown that ordinary citizens need support in both areas, more particularly in the latter regard. A few NGOs in the country have provided them so far as a part of their mission, though finding funds for them is not easy. Hopefully, they can continue to do so until the law strikes deeper roots. In a country where the more knowledgeable and educated section of society has largely remained aloof from using the RTI law, it is not difficult to understand the fate of the RTI Act in Bangladesh without NGOs' role in keeping it moving.

A litmus test for UK's Labour Party

The 2024 UK general election was a political earthquake. The Conservative Party was almost wiped out. In the previous election in 2019, the Conservatives won a comfortable majority, with 365 seats, well above the 326 needed to form a majority. Labour, with only 203 seats, was humiliated. It was predicted that the Conservatives would be in power for the next 10 years.

Instead, Conservatives threw their majority away. After losing his seat in 2024, Sir Brandon Lewis, a former Conservative justice secretary, accused his own party of giving the nation a "clown show" of self-indulgent infighting and posturing. There were three prime ministers in 2022 and one of them, Liz Truss, wrecked Britain's international reputation for financial competence. She broke another record by becoming, at seven weeks, Britain's shortest-serving prime minister. Voters, who frequently cited Liz Truss as their reason for wishing to remove the Conservatives, took their revenge in this election by voting her out.

The 2024 election was marked by a steely determination on the part of the electorate to eradicate the Conservatives. There was no sign of great enthusiasm for the alternatives. Knowing this, Labour leader Sir Keir Starmer ran an exceptionally cautious campaign. The two main opposition parties, Labour and Lib Dem, took advantage of the national mood by concentrating their efforts on the seats they believed they could win. In the constituencies where either Labour or the Lib Dems polled second to the Conservatives in 2019, they did not actively campaign against each other. The results indicate ruthless tactical voting by the electorate, with the Lib Dem vote falling and the Labour vote rising in potential Labour gains and vice versa in potential Lib Dem gains. This confirms that many people voted for parties they did not support in order to kick out the Conservatives. This strategic campaigning won the Lib Dems 72 seats, their best result since 1923, and Labour 412 seats, their best since 1997.

The Conservatives were also fighting on the right. In 2019, the Reform UK Party entered into an election pact under which they would not stand against sitting Conservative MPs but Nigel Farage, the Reform leader, said at the beginning of the recent campaign that the Conservative Party was unfit to rule and his party should replace them. Reform's main manifesto commitment is for tougher immigration policies. The party only won five seats, but they received 15 percent of the national vote and many Labour and Lib Dem candidates won by sailing through the split in the Conservative/Reform vote. Some prominent Conservatives believe they should become closer to the Reform Party so that they can emulate the success of Marine Le Pen's National Rally Party in France. Others argue that British elections are always won from the centre and so appeasing Reform Party voters would take them to the fringes of the far right, making them unelectable.

Though they have a commanding majority in the House of Commons, Labour's electoral support is therefore wafer thin. Few people in the UK electorate have strong party loyalties today. The Labour leadership is acutely aware that, if the Conservatives can throw away a majority, so can they. At around 60 percent, turnout was the lowest for 20 years. This reflects disillusion rather than apathy. Though disgusted with the Conservatives, voters consistently say they have little faith in any politicians to make positive change. Such low expectations may work to Labour's advantage.

> The single most important foreign policy issue for Britain is the war in Ukraine, though Gaza has taken a big space in public domain. The Russian invasion of Ukraine is widely regarded as an existential threat to UK sovereignty. On his first day as prime minister, Starmer spoke to Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky.

In his first speech as prime minister, Starmer set himself the task of managing expectations, stressing that change cannot come quickly. Instead, he stressed a change in tone. His government would bring back the ethos of public service and show that "politics can be a force for good." If that message comes through, the electorate may trust them enough to give them a second chance at the next election to complete their task. As a demonstration of his commitment to action, he held his first Cabinet meeting on Saturday, July 6, less than 24 hours after becoming prime minister.

The new government will focus on domestic policies, restoring the National Health Service, which the new Health Secretary has described as "broken," improving care services and education, increasing the number of affordable homes, and sorting out local government finance. Their main area of domestic vulnerability is probably immigration. The Reform Party outflanked the Conservatives on this issue. If Labour finds itself on the defensive about immigration at the next election, Reform might do the same for them.

The single most important foreign policy issue for Britain is the war in Ukraine, though Gaza has taken a big space in public domain. The Russian invasion of Ukraine is widely regarded as an existential threat to UK sovereignty. On his first day as prime minister, Starmer spoke to Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky. A key factor in Labour's crushing defeat in 2019 was the contempt many traditional Labour voters had for Starmer's predecessor, Jeremy Corbyn. In doorstep interviews, they consistently said that they perceived him to be an unpatriotic pacifist who was not committed to NATO and could not be trusted to defend Britain.

Pacifism brings few votes and keeping Corbyn away from the military machine helped the Conservatives win many Labour seats in 2019. This line of attack failed in 2024. Starmer has restored Labour's credibility as a party of serious government by promising to increase defence spending, confirming unwavering support for NATO and taking a leading role in confronting Russia. Labour must maintain these commitments if it wishes to remain electable.

By contrast to Ukraine, Labour's position on Gaza is an electoral liability. Corbyn has been expelled from the Labour Party but he is back in Parliament as an independent MP, along with four other independents who stood with him on a platform of solidarity with Gaza. All constituencies with substantial Muslim populations saw a fall in support for Labour, in protest against Starmer's refusal to condemn Israel's aggression against Palestine. This cost Labour two of its most prominent shadow cabinet ministers who lost their seats to independents on the Gaza ticket. As a reminder that Palestine is a progressive issue not just a Muslim concern, Starmer's own majority was cut by 18 percent by a Jewish independent standing in support of Gaza. Andrew Feinstein is the South African son of a Holocaust survivor. He who was an MP for the African National Congress under Nelson Mandela. His wife is a Bangladeshi.

Given the fragility of Labour's vote, it cannot afford to alienate Muslims and progressives who have traditionally been among its strongest supporters. The Labour manifesto commits the party to recognising a Palestinian state "as a contribution to a renewed peace process," but without stating when this might happen. Given the domestic pressures, recognition of Palestine could be done quickly and at no cost if Labour is serious about rebuilding trust in politics.

We do not know what lasting changes the 2024 electoral earthquake will make to Britain's political landscape. That will depend on the performance of the Labour Party in office and the direction the Conservatives take when they select their new leader. The question remains: will the new prime minister contribute to the international politics of conflict or reconciliation?

UNCOMPROMISING VICKY ZAHED

Bangladeshi television projects were somewhat confined to genres, such as romance, comedy, and family drama. In this race, young director Vicky Zahed brought gothic, dark and parapsychological plots – unconventional themes that initially were a 'risk' for the tele-fiction industry.

PHOTOS: SHEIKH MEHEDI MORSHED

> Last year, the director announced that he would be directing the web-series 'Adom', based on a real-life incident. "We have completed shooting the series and the post-production. Since the plot is sensitive, we are taking time before bringing it to the screens.

SHARMIN JOYA

Beginning his television journey with The Life of Jalil in 2019, he went on to elevate the industry with hits like the Punorjonmo series, Chirokal Aaj, Kaykobad, and Irina, among many others. His directorial OTT projects -- Redrum, The Silence, and Ami Ki Tumi -- are some of the remarkable ventures in his career. This Eid-ul-Azha, two of his directorial small-screen projects were released—Tithidor and Hajot. Tomorrow, his short film Ekti Khola Janala will be released on Binge. The director dropped by The Daily Star to share insights on his way of direction, and spilled the beans on his future projects.

"If I am asked about my direction philosophy, I'll say that I have always remained honest with myself," shared the director. "During the initial stage of my career, many suggested that I should make popular genres such as comedy, however, I have always wanted to make gothic, dark, and psychological works, for which I had to wait. My never-compromising nature brought me where I am today."

Vicky attempts to reach the audience's mind in a way that brings some discomfort, and lingers for a long time. This Eid-ul-Azha, Tithidor, featuring Mehazabien Chowdhury and written by Jahan Sultana, left many audiences in tears, and especially the female audience could find a connection with Tithi, portrayed by Mehazabien. With no commercial elements in it, no thrill, and telling a linear story, Vicky succeeded. However, for a male director, it is difficult to justify the portrayal of female psychology. How did Vicky cope with this? -- "This project is very close to my heart for two reasons. The character of Tithi reflects one of my close acquaintances, and I have seen closely how she suffers in her life and faces many criticisms, such as being single in her mid-30s. Due to her skin tone and texture, she was even bullied. Yet, she wins all the challenges and smiles amidst all her pain. Secondly, our executive producer Masudul Mahmud Ruhan ended his life last May, which was shocking for us. Through this story, I wanted to say that suicide is not the solution and there are people who, despite numerous struggles, give life a chance; because once it is gone, there is no coming back."

Vicky's experimental project Tikit, was released on Chorki earlier this February. Unlike his other projects, this one didn't engage viewers that much, and the director shared the reason behind this. "I wanted to try black comedy for the first time, and it was more of satire, which didn't work for me; however, I have no regret since I got to experiment."

"We have not yet revealed the protagonist of Ekti Khola Janala. He shares a resemblance to a notorious criminal, who is alleged to have eaten raw human liver after digging them up from graveyards. This is a short film, and also one of my favourite types of projects."

Vicky's landmark Punorjonmo series reached such heights that to date, wherever he goes, people ask about a spin-off possibility. For the readers, he spilled the beans: Hajot is the prequel of the Punorjonmo universe. Since Rafsan Haque's character has reached the mass audience, this time we plan to make it larger than life. Hence, for that, we need time to create something special."

Last year, the director announced that he would be directing the web-series Adom, based on a real-life incident. "We have completed shooting the series and the post-production. Since the plot is sensitive, we are taking time before bringing it to the screens."

Recently there has been a rumour that Afran Nisho and Vicky Zahed are set to collaborate for a silver screen project. To that, Vicky responded, "Nothing has been finalised, as of yet. We are in the initial planning stages. I do believe that the audience deserves our collaboration on the big screens, but only time will tell."

Dhallywood stars support Shakib Khan's new business venture

Pori Moni, Mim, Dighi, Puja Chery, and Keya Payel have solidified their positions in Dhallywood. They recently united at a press conference to support Shakib Khan's latest venture, Aponjon.

Held at a five-star hotel in Gulshan on last Saturday, the actresses stood cheerfully by Khan as he unveiled the Aponjon logo, representing his business initiative aimed at supporting small traders.

Actor Eamon, the executive director of Remark, also attended. With this venture, Shakib Khan is expanding his influence beyond the film industry, making significant strides in the corporate world to benefit small traders in the country.

'Padatik' to premiere simultaneously in Bangladesh and India

The much-anticipated Srijit Mukherji directorial film, Padatik, based on the life of legendary Bengali filmmaker Mrinal Sen, is set to premier in India and Bangladesh on the same day.

Produced on the occasion of the centenary of the iconic filmmaker Mrinal Sen, the biopic features Chanchal Chowdhury in the lead role. He portrays Sen in both his youth and later years, while Korak Samanta plays the teenage Sen.

The film is set for an August 15 release in West Bengal and Bangladesh, coinciding with India's Independence Day.

Chanchal described the role as particularly challenging due to Sen's distinctive personality.

The poor priced out of fresh veggies

Shewrapara, Ibrahimpur, Kochukhet, Farmgate, and Karwan Bazar kitchen markets echoed the same.

This has left the poor and the low-income group to make do with the low-quality, stale vegetables.

Low-quality vegetables often exhibit signs of spoilage such as wilting, discolouration and a lack of flavour, making them less desirable for consumption.

Thanks to the sudden spike in demand for stale vegetables, even their prices have increased by Tk 10-15 a kg in the capital's kitchen markets.

"How will we survive if stale vegetables become dear?" said Ramij Ali, a rickshaw driver who buys low-quality vegetables from the Farmgate kitchen market.

Food inflation stood at 10.42 percent in June, the third straight month to witness double-digit figures.

If the prices rise the way they have, Ramij might have to cut out vegetables from his diet. "Vegetables were the last option we had," he said.

Bablu Miah, who sells low-quality vegetables near the Ibrahimpur kitchen market, acknowledged that the prices have surged by Tk 10-15 a kg within one week.

He sells brinjal at Tk 80-100 per kg, whereas the fresh ones are selling at Tk 100-140 per kg.

The long beans at his stall cost Tk 80-100 per kg; the fresh ones are selling for Tk 100-120 in the kitchen markets.

Bablu is selling stale spiny bitter gourd for Tk 80-90 per kg, whereas the high-quality ones cost Tk 100-120 per kg.

He is charging Tk 70-80 a kg for the low-quality sponge gourd at his stall, whereas the fresh ones can be found at Tk 120-130 a kg.

The vegetable wholesalers though maintain they have no other option but to give in to the law of demand and supply.

"We used to bring vegetables from Manikganj but due to the continuous rains, all vegetable fields are submerged," said Mohammad Yeasin, a vegetable wholesaler at Karwan Bazar.

So the prices have gone up, he added.

Nowhere was this more evident than in the case of green chilli, whose price have surged by as much as Tk 100 a kg in a week. Green chillies are now selling for Tk 240-320 per kg.

"We only received 20 kg of green chillies from Rangpur three days ago -- we are now mostly dependent on imported green chillies," said Selim Hasan, a green chilli trader at Karwan Bazar.

30pc quota a right of FFs' descendants

three months from the date of receipt of this order.

The court, however, said the government can change, reduce or increase the ratio or percentage of the quotas in public jobs, if necessary, and can fill the vacant posts from the general merit list if any quota in government recruitment is not fulfilled.

"We noticed that several writ petitions were filed to maintain the quota reserved for freedom fighters, by different freedom fighters and their children, and in all writ petitions, this hon'ble court clearly held that the 30 percent quota reserved for freedom fighters and their children should strictly be maintained.

" ... Since the Appellate Division has already settled the matter and affirmed the judgment and order of the High Court Division with the modification as quoted above, the same is binding upon us as well as all authorities of the state machinery as per articles 111 and 112 of our constitution and violation of the same is contemptuous," said the HC bench of Justice KM Kamrul Kader and Justice Khizir Hayat in the 27-page verdict.

On June 5 this year, the bench declared illegal the circular, issued by the public administration ministry on October 4, 2018, which cancelled the quota system in government jobs, as it was issued without lawful authority.

The court delivered the verdict after a writ petition was filed by Ohidul Islam Tushar and six other children of freedom fighters challenging the legality of the circular.

The circular said that in the case of direct recruitment to the posts of 9th grade (formerly class-1) and 10th to 13th grades (formerly class-2), the appointments should be made based on merit.

Protesting the HC judgment on June 5, students staged demonstrations at different educational institutions, including Dhaka University. They took to the streets on July 1, demanding the reinstatement of the 2018 circular.

Students intensified their protests across the country since July 4 as the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court did not stay the HC verdict following a government petition.

The protesters are carrying on demonstrations, demanding reforms of the quota system through the formulation of a law.

"Quotas reserved for the freedom fighters and affected women were introduced absolutely on clear recognition to the freedom fighters for their heroic contribution to the nation, which has also been extended to the children and grandchildren of the freedom fighters, a clear recognition that the freedom fighters have achieved.

"Thus, it cannot be said to be a mere policy of the government as the same is absolutely given as recognition to the freedom fighters for their heroic contribution for emancipation of Bangladesh, which cannot be and should not be taken so lightly equating with other citizens of the republic.

"The heroic contribution of the freedom fighters, and suffering and pain sustained by the freedom fighters and their offspring during the nine months of our Liberation War and after August 15, 1975, to till 1996 -- 21 years -- cannot be ignored, and the nation must have the highest regard to the freedom fighters, and anything is done derogatory or taken away the right and privilege should be treated as illegal and unconstitutional.

"Such constitutional and legal right of freedom fighters, their children, and grandchildren and others -- districts, women, physically challenged persons, tribes, minor races, and ethnic groups -- are not being inconsistent with articles 28(4) and 29(3)(a) of the constitution, and the same cannot be taken away by the stroke of a pen as policy decision of the government," the HC said.

"The freedom fighters are pride of our nation. Thus, we are of the view that during the period of August 15, 1975, to 1996, the freedom fighters, their children and grandchildren have been suffering socially, economically and politically, which makes them one of the most backward sections of the citizen of this country," the HC judges observed.

They further said the respondents (the government) may take necessary steps by making rules or guidelines to ensure participation of backward sections of the citizen in the recruitment process of the government.

Alcaraz retains Wimbledon in style

the men's and women's game.

But he had no answers in the Centre Court sunshine as the electric Alcaraz pounded him from the back of the court and treated the crowd to an array of his trademark drop shots.

Alcaraz seized the initiative in a first game of breathtaking quality lasting 14 minutes, taking advantage of his fifth break point.

The Spaniard settled quickly into his routine on serve and went up a double break when Djokovic double-faulted in the fifth game.

The shellshocked Serbian, playing in his 10th Wimbledon final, held serve to love to close the gap to 5-2 but dumped the ball into the net to hand the Spaniard the first set.

Alcaraz was immediately on the front foot in the second set, forcing a break in the first game and fending off pressure on his own serve to take a 2-0 lead.

A Djokovic backhand into the net in the seventh game handed Alcaraz another break point and a double fault put the defending champion 5-2 up and on the cusp of a two-set lead.

The Centre Court crowd, including Catherine, Princess of Wales, looked on in disbelief as their hopes for a titanic tussle evaporated.

Djokovic fended off another of clutch of break points early in the third set to stay alive and showed signs that he was finding his range.

But the Spaniard carved out three break points in the ninth game, arrowing a passing shot past his stranded opponent to move 5-4 ahead.

Alcaraz stepped up to serve for the championship but squandered three match points, missing a straightforward drive volley as Djokovic broke for the first time in the match.

But he recovered his composure quickly as the set went to a tie-break.

Djokovic went wide with a forehand to give Alcaraz a 5-3 lead and the Spaniard won the title with his fourth championship point.

The result means Djokovic has still not beaten a top-ten player this year and has yet to win a title.

The Serbian will now turn his attention to the Paris Olympics as he seeks to win gold for the first time.

Frauds, criminals get govt jobs due to question leaks

Syed Abed Ali, who was arrested on July 8, mentioned the names of many others involved in the question-leak syndicate.

The HC bench said Abed Ali is not as powerful as those like (former IGP) Benazir Ahmed. "But those who are behind the leaks and sale of question papers are powerful.

"Does the investigating agency have the power to arrest them? If there is no power of arrest, then the order shall be made accordingly."

DAG Shaifuzzaman said that around five lakh candidates participate in public examinations every year.

Of them, around 20,000 pass and then around 2,000 give the viva. Therefore, what the petitioner is saying, regarding real merit not being recognised, is incorrect, he added.

The HC bench then said it is easier for candidates to pass if they have the question papers beforehand.

It adjourned the hearing for a week and asked the DAG to place a statement before it regarding the government's position on the issue at the next hearing.

BENAZIR ISSUE

During the hearing, the HC bench said Benazir Ahmed has left the country. "He must have had some channels. It was heard that he left through the airport. Was there no police officer there who knew Benazir? How did he get out of the country?"

DAG Shaifuzzaman, however, said there was confusion regarding his whereabouts.

"The court also ordered the convicted to return the embezzled money."

According to the case statement, the convicted worked together to embezzle over Tk 2.59 crore from Rupali Bank's Mahasthangarh Branch using pay orders between April 6 and April 9, 2017.

After the discrepancy in the accounts was found, the bank conducted an internal investigation, which followed a case filed by Habibur Rahman, the bank's deputy general manager at the time.

themselves since July 1, and the introduction of a separate pay scale for public university teachers.

While holding a four-hour sit-in at the university premises, Sheikh Mashrik Hasan, general secretary of Jagannath University Teachers' Association, said, "We've decided to continue the movement until our demands are met. All teachers are in agreement. Although we held a meeting with a government representative on Saturday, we did not get any hopeful outcomes."

He said teachers will return to classrooms as soon as their demands are fulfilled.

Meanwhile, the Inter-University Officers' Federation, which had joined the work abstention over the pension scheme, also decided to continue their movement.

On Saturday, the teachers' representatives discussed their demands with AL General Secretary and Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader. After the meeting, the teachers said the meeting "went well".

Quader said there was confusion regarding the "Prottoy" pension scheme to be effective from July this year, but it would be in force from July next year.

100m is a challenge and an honour: Imranur

Imranur Rahman is set to become the first overseas-based sprinter and overall, the third overseas-based athlete to represent Bangladesh in the Olympics. The 31-year-old British-Bangladeshi, who won gold in the 60m event in the 2023 Asian Indoor Championships, spoke to The Daily Star's Anisur Rahman and shared his excitement for the July-August's Paris Games and how he is preparing for the event. Here are the excerpts:

The Daily Star (DS): Since Bangladesh's first appearance in the Olympics in 1984, track and field athletes have represented the country in every edition through wildcards. You will be continuing that tradition this year. How are you feeling after getting this opportunity?
Imranur Rahman (IR): It's an incredible honour to represent Bangladesh on the world's biggest stage. The wildcard entry is a recognition of the hard work and dedication I've put into my sport, and it's a great opportunity to showcase my abilities and make my country proud.

DS: How have you prepared to compete against the world's top sprinters?
IR: Preparation has been intense and focused. I've been working closely with my coach on refining my technique, improving my start and building my stamina. I've also been studying my competitors to understand their strengths and strategies, which will help me perform at my best.

DS: The 100m event is considered the most attractive and prestigious event in the Olympics. How do you view it?
IR: The 100m event is indeed prestigious and highly competitive. It's often the highlight of the track and field events because it showcases the fastest athletes in the world. Competing in this event is a tremendous challenge and an honour and I'm excited to see how I measure up against the best.

DS: So far, 17 track and field athletes have competed in the Olympics from Bangladesh and none of them have made it past the preliminary round. Are you hoping to become the first?
IR: It's a significant challenge, but I'm focused on giving my best performance. While breaking past records would be a tremendous achievement, my immediate goal is to perform to the best of my abilities and see where that takes me.

DS: You hold he national record in the 100m event, 10.11 seconds. Do you think it would be enough to qualify for the semifinals?
IR: My personal best of 10.11 seconds is competitive, but the Olympics feature the fastest sprinters in the world. While it's possible that my best could qualify me for the semifinals, it will depend on the competition on the day. I'll focus on executing my race plan and hope for the best.

DS: You have been steadily improving your timing in the 100m race. In 2021, you clocked 10.32 seconds, then 10.29 seconds in 2022 and 10.11 seconds in 2023. Are you hoping to surpass it in Paris?
IR: I've been working hard to continue improving my timings and I want to set a new personal best at the Olympics. However, every race is different and it's challenging to predict exactly how I will perform. I'll aim to deliver my best effort and hope it translates into a new record. But this is an if, something I cannot control.

DS: This year, you have only competed in the 60m event but you are going to compete in the 100m sprint in Paris. How difficult will it be for you to make that switch?
IR: Switching from the 60m to the 100m does present some challenges, particularly in terms of endurance and race strategy. However, I've been training specifically for the 100m, focusing on maintaining my speed over the longer distance. It will be a test, but I feel prepared.

DS: Apart from you, four other athletes from archery, shooting and swimming are going to take part from Bangladesh. What is your expectation from them in the Olympics?
IR: I have great respect for my fellow athletes and their dedication. Competing in the Olympics is a significant achievement in itself. I hope they perform to the best of their abilities and gain valuable experience. Each of us will strive to make Bangladesh proud in our respective disciplines.

Records that fell at Euro 2024

AFP, Berlin

As the Euro 2024 came to a close on Sunday night with the final between Spain and England, here is a look back at some of the records that fell over the last month at Euro 2024.

Lamine Yamal: Youngest player and scorer
Spain teenage sensation Lamine Yamal made history in his country's opening game against Croatia by becoming the youngest player ever to appear in a European Championship game at the age of 16 years and 338 days.

In doing so he beat the previous record held by beat Poland's Kacper Kozlowski, who was 17 years and 246 days old when he appeared at Euro 2020.

Yamal, of Barcelona, then claimed another piece of history by becoming the youngest player ever to score a goal at the Euros in Spain's 2-1 semi-final win against France, at the age of 16 years and 362 days.

Pepe the oldest player
At the other end of the scale, Portugal defender Pepe claimed the record for the oldest player ever at a European Championship when he took to the field in his team's opening game against the Czech Republic at the age of 41.

He was 41 years and 130 days old by the time he appeared in the quarter-final against France -- an age at which almost every footballer has long since retired.

The Porto centre-back passed the previous mark set by Hungary goalkeeper Gabor Kiraly, who was 40 years and 86 days old when he played against Belgium at Euro 2016.

Modric the oldest scorer
Luka Modric became the tournament's oldest goalscorer when he netted in Croatia's final game, a 1-1 draw against Italy.

Modric was 38 years and 289 days old, breaking the record set by Austrian Ivica Vastic in 2008 by 32 days.

Croatia were eliminated in the group stage, meaning that game is set to also go down as Modric's last ever at the tournament.

Ronaldo's sixth Euros
At 39, Cristiano Ronaldo had been hoping to claim the oldest goalscorer record for himself, but he failed to add to his all-time tournament best tally of 14 goals on Portugal's run to the quarter-finals, notably missing a penalty against Slovenia in the last 16.

Ronaldo did, however, claim other records. Having first appeared at the tournament in 2004, Ronaldo competed at an unprecedented sixth European Championship in Germany, and has now made a total of 30 appearances, at least seven more than any other player.

The fastest goal for Bajrami
Albania's Nedim Bajrami netted the fastest ever goal at a European Championship when he put his side ahead after just 23 seconds in their opening game against Italy.

Bajrami pulverised the previous Euros record for the quickest goal of 67 seconds by Dmitri Kirichenko of Russia against Greece in 2004.

However, his team went on to lose the game 2-1.

Merih Demiral of Turkey later scored the second-fastest goal by finding the net against Austria in the round of 16 after just 57 seconds.

Nadal to face Borg!

AFP, Paris

In the world of fantasy tennis, pitting Nadal against Borg may seem everyday but in the real world it has never happened before.

Sadly, although obviously given the age difference, fans at the ATP event in Bastad next week will not be watching the two kings of Roland Garros - Rafael Nadal and Bjorn Borg with 20 French Open titles between them.

Instead Nadal will be up against Leo Borg, the 21-year-old son of the long-retired former world number one, now 68.

"It was crazy because we were looking when they did the draw and my name just popped up against Rafa," said Borg, currently ranked 467 in the world. "I'm feeling very excited and it's going to be a great match."

According to his ATP biography, Borg has never watched a single point of his father's storied career which included six French Open titles and five successive Wimbledons.

Instead he credits Nadal as one of the reasons he turned to tennis as a child, making Friday's practice session together all the more special.

"It was a very good practice and of course he's been my idol since I was very young, so it's going to be a very special moment in my career," Borg said.

"But I'm looking forward to that and I'm feeling really, really excited."

Borg's only ATP Tour match win last year was in Bastad against Elias Ymer.

Bielsa far from satisfied

Uruguay needed a late equaliser and penalties to beat Canada in Saturday's Copa America third-place playoff match, with coach Marcelo Bielsa saying the South American side had performed well below their level.

Uruguay, ranked 14th in the world, were on the verge of a shock defeat to the 48th-ranked Copa America debutants before Luis Suarez scored a stoppage-time goal to force a penalty shootout, which Bielsa's side won 4-3.

"It wasn't a great performance. The draw, at best, was barely deserved. I think that the opponent head coach's decision to prioritize physical aptitude instead of usual starters was more successful," Bielsa told reporters.

"I went with the usual starters in spite of them being weary. There were ups and downs. The chances created by both teams were even, but in all truth, we didn't play well.

"Regarding this third place, I do think Uruguay is one of the three best teams of this tournament. Even if this tournament came after long seasons and the tiredness affects players, I thought that given our roster, we could have played a bit better than what we showed."

Bielsa's counterpart Jesse Marsch said he was proud of the progress the team had made in a short period, adding: "The players are disappointed in the way that we gave the match away.

'We have the best spin attack in the world'

Bangladesh's women's side are slated to play the Asia Cup in Sri Lanka, scheduled to begin on July 19, with an eye on the upcoming T20 World Cup at home in October. The Tigresses, however, have a lot to work out in the meantime as they suffered a slump in recent times, with batting being their main concern in series losses to Australia and India at home. Head coach Hashan Tillakaratne talked about how the Tigresses can recover from this slump, and use their spin advantage and their target in the Asia Cup during an interview with The Daily Star's Abdullah Al Mehdi. The excerpts of the interview are as follows:

The Daily Star (DS): How do you see the side going into the Asia Cup and how will the tournament help for the upcoming T20 World Cup at home?
Hashan Tillakaratne (HT): It's a good sign to have youth and experience on your side given that the T20 World Cup is around the corner. This [Asia Cup] is a very good tournament for assessing ourselves and if we play well, we have every chance of winning the Asia Cup.

DS: There were batting mishaps in the last few series. Did you address the issues with the batters?
HT: Quite a few players are pushing for their places in the side. Obviously, everyone wants to play in the World Cup and there is a bit of fear of failure. That's one of the reasons that often they look like they are negative and fearful of playing their shots. We have spoken about it -- about how they can free their minds. We haven't seen their true talents yet but we want them to go out there and express themselves.

DS: Do you feel the team is sufficiently equipped in the spin department, especially with three leg-spinners in the ranks?
HT: I feel we have the best spin bowling attack in the world right now. We have three to four leg-spinners and in women's cricket, batters are usually vulnerable to leg-spin. We are very fortunate to have so many. Our spin bowling coach Dinu [Dinuka Hettiarachchi] has done a lot for them. Subcontinent surfaces are slow and low and no matter how much effort you put in, they always tend to help spinners. Our spinners are genuine turners of the ball and the condition would support them.

DS: The spin dependency sort of backfired in the last two series against Australia and India. What's your take on it?
HT: I don't think the plans backfired. We had our chances in both the series. We missed chances badly because we fielded poorly against both India and Australia. The bowlers were spot on and they created opportunities.

DS: Has fielding improved?
HT: Fielding has improved and fitness levels have gone up. Right now, I will give them seven out of 10 in terms of fitness.

DS: Bangladesh failed to win a game in the last four T20 World Cups. Do you feel it's Bangladesh's best opportunity this time?
HT: Yes, right now we are in a very good shape and I have a lot of faith in them. We are in good shape to progress to the last four. In the last three to four global tournaments, the players were not ready as they were still learning the trade and developing. They have played a lot of cricket since then and we have won games outside the country (The Tigresses have won an ODI and a T20I against South Africa in December last year). Victories gave them massive experience and they have started to believe that they are capable of beating any side in the world.

DS: Does the burden of expectations sometimes weigh high on skipper Nigar Sultana Joty?
HT: Yes, lots of pressure on her since she is one of our top batters. Sometimes she has to take the side out of trouble and consolidate. So there are lots of things she has to do along with keeping wickets and managing expectations. She is very capable and understands her game well. We are fortunate to have someone like her.

Alcaraz retains Wimbledon in style

AFP, London

Carlos Alcaraz overpowered seven-time champion Novak Djokovic in straight sets to retain his Wimbledon title on Sunday in a brutal statement that the new era of men's tennis has arrived.

The Spanish third seed produced a performance combining awesome power with delicate touch to win 6-2, 6-2, 7-6 (7/4), collecting the fourth Grand Slam of his young career.

Alcaraz equals the Open Era record for most Grand Slams won at the age 21 or under, joining Boris Becker, Bjorn Borg and Mats Wilander.

And he is just the sixth man to win the French Open and Wimbledon back to back.

Djokovic, 37, who had knee surgery just weeks ago, was aiming to win a 25th Grand Slam -- which would have been a record in

30pc quota a right of FFs' descendants

Says HC in full text of its judgment

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court, in the full text of its judgment, has justified the provision for keeping 30 percent quota for freedom fighters' children in government jobs in the light of two previous verdicts -- one delivered by this court in 2012 and another by the apex court in 2015.

The court also observed that this privilege has become legal and a vested right of freedom fighters, their children, and grandchildren as sufferings over 21 years (August 15, 1975, to 1996) made them "most backward section of citizens".

The HC also directed the government to restore and maintain the quotas for "districts, women, physically challenged people, tribes, minor races, and ethnic groups and others, if any," and to publish a notification in this regard as soon as possible preferably within

HC expresses concerns at hearing

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday expressed concerns over the incidents of question paper leaks, saying frauds and criminals have managed government jobs, like in the Bangladesh Civil Service, thanks to this.

"Many have taken advantage of the question paper leaks, which cannot be accepted," the HC bench of Justice KM Kamrul Quader and Justice Khizir Hayat Lizu said during the hearing on a writ petition.

"It is very painful for us as it deprives meritorious candidates of jobs."

Murad Bhuiyan, executive director of Sarda Society, a human rights organisation, recently filed the petition with the HC, seeking its order to conduct a judicial probe into question leaks.

In the petition, he said the maximum punishment for those involved should be life imprisonment.

"A judicial committee should be formed to find those who became cadres between the 24th and 45th BCS exams with the help of leaked questions by people like Syed Abed Ali [an arrested former driver of a Public Service Commission chairman]. The committee should be asked to publish the list."

Terming the repeated BCS questions leaks concerning, the HC asked why the PSC is unable to stop it.

Saying it is a matter of concern that BCS exam questions are repeatedly leaked, the HC bench asked why those who are in the Public Service Commission are unable to stop it. "If they can't [stop it], they are incompetent."

Deputy Attorney General SK Shaifuzzaman told the HC that a case has been filed over the BCS question leak incidents, and police are investigating it.

Univ teachers to press on with work abstention

Says meeting with govt representatives ended in 'stalemate'

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Public university teachers continued their work abstention yesterday demanding the reinstatement of their previous pension scheme.

The decision was taken at a virtual meeting of the Federation of Bangladesh University Teachers' Association (FBUTA).

This meeting was called to discuss Saturday's conversations between teachers and government representatives, which they termed as "fruitless".

"As our demands have not been met, we've decided to continue with our movement," Professor Akhtarul Islam, the president of the association, told The Daily Star.

This means the suspension of classes, exams, and other academic activities, which have been in effect for around two weeks, will continue.

Yesterday, the teachers at most of the 35 public universities staged sit-in demonstrations on their campuses, demanding the cancellation of the new "Prottoy" pension scheme and the reinstatement of their previous scheme.

They have also been demanding a super grade for

ATTACK ON MILITARY CHIEF

Hamas 'pulling out' of Gaza truce talks

AFP, Palestinian Territories

A Hamas official yesterday said the group is pulling out of Gaza truce talks, following an Israeli strike that targeted the Hamas's commander Mohammed Deif.

"Commander Mohammed Deif is well and directly overseeing" the operations of the Hamas military wing, the official told AFP. Israel staged a huge bombing raid on a camp for displaced people in southern Gaza on Saturday that it said was an attempt to kill Deif.

Another senior official from the Iran-backed Islamist group, which has been fighting a nine-month-long war with Israel in the Gaza Strip, said Hamas was withdrawing from ceasefire talks because of Israeli "massacres" and the country's attitude in negotiations.

The health ministry in the Hamas-run Gaza Strip said at least 92 people had been killed, more than half of them women and children, and 300 wounded in a strike on the Al-Mawasi camp.

Ismail Haniyeh, Hamas's Qatar-based political chief, told international mediators of the "decision to halt negotiations due to the occupation's (Israel) lack of seriousness, continued policy of procrastination and obstruction, and the ongoing massacres against unarmed civilians", the official said.

Talks mediated by Qatar and Egypt, with US support, have for months tried but failed to bring a halt to the war in the Gaza Strip.

- Top Hamas official says military chief Deif 'fine' after Israeli strike
- At least 92 were killed in Saturday's strike in an Israeli-designated 'safe zone'
- Death toll in Gaza reaches 38,584

Al-Mawasi, where the health ministry said dozens had been killed, had in May been declared a safe humanitarian zone by the Israeli military and civilians ordered to evacuate to it. However, there have been multiple deadly incidents there blamed on Israeli strikes.

Three ex-bank officials jailed over Tk 2.59cr embezzlement

OUR CORRESPONDENT,
Bogura

Three former Rupali Bank officials, along with three of its clients, were sent to jail yesterday over the embezzlement of Tk 2.59 crore from the bank's Mahasthangarh Branch in Bogura seven years ago.

They are former branch manager Jobayenur Rahman, former senior officers Ishrat Jahan and Mahatab Uddin, and bank clients Azmal Hossain, Jahidul Islam, and Mosharof Hossain.

The accused were present in court when they were given different jail terms in the verdict pronounced by Judge Md Shahidullah of the Special Judge Court of Bogura in the afternoon.

The poor priced out of fresh veggies

BCL unleashes fury on quota protesters

Over 300, mostly demonstrators, hurt at DU during 5-hr-long pitched battles; female students, BCL men among the injured; agitators to hold nationwide protest rallies today

STAR REPORT

Chhatra League activists yesterday attacked quota protesters on Dhaka University campus, triggering fierce clashes that left at least 300 people injured -- mostly protesters including female students and also some BCL men.

Clad in helmet and armed with sticks and iron rods, hundreds of Chhatra League activists, many from outside DU, beat up the demonstrators across the campus.

They were also seen whacking female protesters with sticks.

Bruised and bloodied, students ran for their lives.

At one point, the demonstrators retaliated by throwing brick chunks and beating up some Chhatra League men.

For about five hours, mayhem reigned supreme. After the pitched battles, the streets there were littered with thousands of brick chunks.

A group of Chhatra League activists even swooped on demonstrators at the emergency department of Dhaka Medical College Hospital in the evening, causing panic among doctors, nurses, patients, and their attendants. Many ran for cover.

The attack disrupted medical services at the country's prime medical facility.

"We deployed additional nurses and doctors to deal with the situation. Injured from both groups are getting treatment here," said DMCH Director Brig Gen Md Asaduzzaman.

Around 297 received treatment at the DMCH and six at the Sarkari Karmachari Hospital, said inspector Md Bachchu Mia, in charge of the DMCH police outpost.

Nahid Islam, one of the organisers of the quota protests, said, "We don't know the exact figure. But our estimate is that over 200 fellow demonstrators were injured in the attacks and many are in serious condition."

Students of at least four other universities -- Jagannath University, Jahangirnagar University, Rajshahi University, Chittagong University – also came under Chhatra League attack yesterday. At least 60 students were injured there.

Patients and attendants of Dhaka Medical College Hospital were gripped by fear as alleged Chhatra League activists launched two consecutive attacks on the student protesters there last evening.

Emergency services were disrupted due to the attacks.

Over 50 alleged BCL members, armed with sticks and wearing helmets, barged into the emergency department around 6:50pm and again at 7:30pm. They brutally beat the students, who were participating in the quota reform movement.

Witnesses said the attackers forced their way in with weapons after ignoring Ansar members' requests.

The main gate and other hospital buildings were closed during the attacks, adding to the chaos.

Patients who had come for emergency treatment were in a state of panic since 4:00pm, as injured student protesters, who were assaulted by BCL activists in Dhaka University, were being brought in.

QUOTA IN GOVT JOBS

HC verdict to be inoperative till appeal is filed with SC

The apex court says in full text of its July 10 order

ASHUTOSH SARKAR

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, in the full text of its July 10 order, has said the High Court judgement, which effectively reinstated quotas in government jobs, must remain inoperative until the leave-to-appeal petitions filed with this court are disposed of.

"We have heard the learned counsels from both parties in both the cases and perused the civil miscellaneous petitions [stay petitions] as well as other materials on record. Upon hearing, the parties are directed to maintain the status quo regarding the subject matter of the case till the filing of civil petitions for leave to appeal. The impugned judgement of the High Court shall remain inoperative till that period."

A five-member bench of the Appellate Division headed by Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan made the observation in the two-page full text of the order released recently.

OPINION

Why must brute force always be the response to student protests?

AASHA MEHREEN AMIN

At first it seemed the government was going to show the restraint expected from the state towards students protesting a quota system that needs a logical reform. Sadly, it did not take long for the government to take an unnecessarily hardline in an attempt to squash the spirit of these young people. What could have been resolved through a discussion as expected from any government, ended up being yet another violent suppression of the voices of students.

In an all too familiar sequence, when students on campuses throughout the country, spontaneously started protesting comments of the prime minister regarding their movement at a press conference on Sunday, members of the Chhatra League were ready and waiting to attack.

What followed was not something too surprising. Yet one cannot fail to be shocked at the brutality with which students, even women students, were beaten with rods and sticks. The images are hard to forget – students beaten unconscious, a student looking dazed as blood poured down his face, a capture of a man raising a stick just before it would hit two young women, a female student, unconscious, being taken to the hospital, young men with sticks and rods chasing students before hitting them mercilessly – these are not scenes from a battlefield but from campuses of universities. University campuses that resemble riot scenes. Student protesters who had gone to the emergency centre of Dhaka Medical College Hospital with their wounded fellow protesters were beaten up inside the hospital. Is this why young people go to universities – to either get beaten up or to be part of groups that do the beating?

Unfortunately, that is how students are divided on our campuses.

So why the show of restraint in the beginning? It was clear that at first, the police and the Chhatra League were given

Trump picks JD Vance for running mate

Officially becomes the Republican presidential nominee

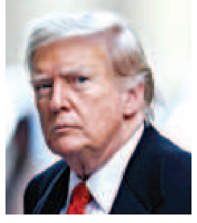
Donald Trump yesterday selected US Senator JD Vance to serve as his vice presidential running mate, as the Republican Party officially nominated the former president as its 2024 presidential nominee at the start of the party's national convention in Milwaukee.



"As Vice President, J.D. will continue to fight for our Constitution, stand with our Troops, and will do everything he can to help me MAKE AMERICA GREAT AGAIN," Trump wrote on his Truth Social platform.

The four-day convention opened in downtown Milwaukee's Fiserv Forum two days after Trump survived an assassination attempt in Pennsylvania, and hours after he secured a major legal victory when a federal judge dismissed one of Trump's criminal prosecutions.

Trump is due to formally accept the party's nomination in a primetime address on Thursday and will

Foreign national detained with 3.9kg of cocaine

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

A foreign national was detained at Chattogram's Shah Amanat International Airport yesterday morning after nearly four kg of cocaine was found in her luggage. Cocaine is an intense, euphoria-producing stimulant drug with strong addictive potential.

The detainee was identified as Statia Shantae Rolle, a citizen of the Bahamas, an island nation in the Atlantic Ocean.

A package of cocaine, weighing 3.9kg, was recovered from her luggage during a search, said Saifur Rahman, joint director of the Customs Intelligence and Investigation Department in Chattogram.

Inspector Dewan Mohammad Zillur Rahman from the Directorate of Narcotics Control said Statia arrived in Chattagram from Brazil via the United Arab Emirates on July 13. However, she did not take her luggage and went to a hotel.

Yesterday morning, she arrived at the airport to claim her luggage from the "Lost and Found" department.

Chittagong Customs officials said the market value of the seized cocaine may be approximately Tk 60 crore.

protesting what they said was a "disparaging comment" by Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina regarding quota protesters.

They chanted slogans like "Tumi ke? Ami ke? Razakar, Razakar! [Who are you? Who am I? Razakar, Razakar!]," "Cheyechhilam odikhar, hoye gelam Razakar [We wanted rights, but we have been labelled as Razakars]".

The prime minister on Sunday said, "Why do they [the protesters] have so much anger against the freedom fighters?... If the grandchildren of freedom fighters don't get quota benefits, should the grandchildren of Razakars get the benefit?"

Yesterday, the violence started about two hours after Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader said the Chhatra League would give a fitting reply to those student leaders of the quota reform movement who labelled themselves as Razakars, and were arrogant.

The demonstrators had announced a rally in front of the Raju Bhaskarjo at noon yesterday to protest the PM's remarks and attacks on them at different universities on Sunday night.

Chhatra League also announced a rally there at 3:00pm to protest "the students' derogatory comments on the country's independence".

Around noon, the quota reforms demonstrators started gathering at Raju Bhaskarjo. A group of them went to different dormitories to mobilise more students around 2:30pm.

When the group reached Bijoy Ekattor Hall around 3:00pm, some Chhatra League hall unit members threw brick chunks and flower pots at them from inside, said witnesses.

As the news of the attack spread, demonstrators from Raju Bhaskarjo rushed there and retaliated by throwing brick chunks at the Chhatra League men.

Around 3:30pm, Chhatra League men took position inside the hall while the demonstrators in front of it.

Both groups kept throwing brick chunks at each other and at one stage, BCL activists from five nearby dorms rushed out and along with their fellows inside Bijoy Ekattor Hall chased the demonstrators, sparking a running battle.

The demonstrators eventually retreated to the area in front of DU vice-chancellor's residence.

Within a few minutes, numerous Chhatra League activists, many non-DU students, attacked the demonstrators, including female students.

The Chhatra League men, many wearing helmets, were seen chasing down the students, kicking them and beating them with cricket stumps, and bamboo and hockey sticks for around 15 minutes, said witnesses.

Some female students were seen lying on the ground and in tears during that time.

"How could they dare attack the female students? It cannot be an act of an educated person," said an injured female student.

She said Chhatra League men brought in outsiders to attack them. "Where were the VC and proctors when we were being attacked? Are they not our guardians?"

Another female student said the "Chhatra League goons" attacked the front part of their procession where most of the female students were.

"They are afraid of the fact that we can also speak about our rights. They want to gag our voice at any cost," she said.

Around 5:00pm, as the demonstrators took the injured to the DMCH for treatment, a group of Chhatra League activists stormed the hospital, and another bout of chase and counter chase ensued.

A pedestrian caught in the middle was injured and was seen being led away with his shirt all bloodied.

Chhatra League activists were patrolling outside the gate of the DMCH emergency department, and they chased away students from the hospital area.

Chased by BCL men, a large group of the demonstrators went inside Shahidullah Hall while some managed to stay inside the DMCH.

As some Chhatra League men went to the DMCH with injured activists, the demonstrators beat up three of them around 6:50pm.

Half an hour later, around 70 Chhatra League activists again stormed the DMCH emergency department. Armed with sticks and clad in helmets, they beat up demonstrators inside the hospital.

Meanwhile, at Shahidullah Hall, the demonstrators and Chhatra League men hurled brick chunks at each other. The demonstrators were inside the hall and the Chhatra League activists outside.

Late last night, the demonstrators vandalised 10 motorbikes allegedly owned by BCL men in front Amar Ekushey Hall. Witnesses said the bikes had more than 20 men on them who ran away .

'THEY TARGETED FEMALES'

Around 3:00pm, almost 500 BCL activists carrying sticks targeted and charged towards the female student protesters near the Kalabhaban, said Sanjana Afifa, a DU resident student of Shamsunnahar Hall.

"Once they spotted us, they lunged towards us and threw brick chunks. We all ran and tried to hide but they hunted us down ... At one point, I hid inside a bus and I heard the attackers coming inside screaming 'you are Razakar, you are Razakar'. Many of those hiding in the bus with me were dragged out and beaten. I pleaded them to let me go, only to find so many others lying on the ground, bleeding."

Another female student of the same hall said, "I ran towards Fullar Road at one point and saw Chhatra League men carrying out a full-throttle attack there. At one point, a brick hit my head and I fell. Instantly, 3-4 people came and began beating me with sticks. I just lay there, getting beaten. A senior male student rescued me and took me to hospital. After treatment, I was able to return around 7:00pm."

She added that along with her, around 30 other female students of her hall were attacked and injured.

Sufiya Kamal Hall's resident student Umama Fatema said the attackers identified her from television.

"They screamed, 'we saw you on TV, we will kill you', and around 25 people charged towards me ... They targeted me, I had to cry and beg them to let me go. I ran and they still chased after me. When I reached Fullar Road, two women passing by hid me behind them and asked me to stop crying so that the attackers cannot hear me."

Another student of Begum Rokeya Hall Arpita Das said, "I somehow got out alive. Most of those who beat us up did not look like students. I tried to protect myself and run wherever the others ran. I saw a girl behind me fall to the ground and then people beating her up mercilessly. They beat whoever they saw in their path. At one point, I ran into the SM Hall ... There were so many people with blood all over them. We tried not to scream or cry ... At one point, the provost told us to hide in the TV room."

"WE WON'T LEAVE"

Through a video message on his Facebook page, demo organiser Nahid said that yesterday was a very sad day for Dhaka University.

"The situation at Dhaka Medical College Hospital is horrible. The injured are lying on the floor. There are no treatment facilities there. The Chhatra League goons even attacked female students at the emergency gate," he said.

"We will resist unitedly. We are promising we will be on the ground. We will not leave the ground," he said.

Nahid told reporters at Doyel Chattar around 9:30pm that they have announced fresh demonstrations and protest rallies at 3:00pm today at campuses across the country.

He urged the students to join the programmes and threatened harsher demonstrations like blockade if their demand was not met.

BCL TAKES NO BLAME

Chhatra League President Saddam Hussain said the demonstrators forced students to join their protests to create an unstable environment at DU.

"They [demonstrators] brought students from different halls by threatening them. They carried out attacks on students with locally made weapons. But they fled away when the students untidily resisted them [demonstrators]," he told reporters at DU in the afternoon.

Chhatra League General Secretary Sheikh Wali Asif Enan alleged that Chhatra Dal and Chhatra Shibir goons attacked different halls in DU.

KEEP DORMS FREE OF OUTSIDERS

Dhaka University authorities, after an emergency meeting of the provost standing committee last night, directed its respective hall authorities to keep the dormitories free of outsiders and to strengthen security on campus.

DU VC Prof ASM Maksud Kamal chaired the meeting, which was attended by the provosts of all dormitories.

Meanwhile, students of several private universities, including United International University, North South University, Independent University, Bangladesh, American International University Bangladesh, and Ahsanullah University of Science and Technology took to the streets yesterday and blocked several city streets.

instructions by their bosses to remain calm and not take any action against the students. But as soon as the high-ups in the government made dismissive comments criticising the movement, things started to take an ugly turn. The AL General Secretary Obaidul Quader at a press conference on Sunday remarked that the Chhatra League was ready to give an apt answer to the "audacious behaviour" shown on the campuses (by leaders of the anti-quota movement). Such a direct call for action gave them the green signal. True to their reputation, the members of the student body swooped on the students and "taught them a lesson" for daring to be vocal and defiant.

It is tragic that a student body that was once at the forefront of the most significant movements of our history has been turned into the bully boys (and girls) of the ruling party. These young men wielding rods and sticks are also university students. Why should students beat up other students for a cause that would ordinarily unite them? Why do the large numbers of the police force become silent bystanders when helmet-clad goons pounce upon unarmed university students?

These are naïve queries in a reality where even peaceful protests are seen as threats to power and are clamped down upon with full force. For some reason it was thought that this time the government would show tolerance and listen to the young, passionate young men and women who believed that their voices would be heard, their needs would be addressed. All they have been asking for is a fair chance in life, an equitable system of opportunities to compete for government jobs and the realisation of a dream that can be attained through merit and hard work. Are these aspirations unwarranted for young people of an independent nation?

HC verdict

"All the protesting students are asked to go back to their respective educational institutions and concentrate on their studies.

"This court hopes that the vice-chancellors and proctors of all universities and heads of other educational institutions will take their students back to their respective educational institutions and create a supportive environment for learning".

"Protesting students can, if they wish, present their arguments before the court through lawyers. The court will take into account their statement while disposing of the original petition. In the meantime, the petitioners are directed to file regular civil petitions for leave to appeal," the Appellate Division also said.

On July 10, the SC delivered the status quo order following two separate petitions filed by the government and two Dhaka University students seeking a stay on the HC judgement.

It fixed August 7 for hearing the leave to appeal petitions.

"The apex court order means that the government cannot take any initiative about the quota system in civil service until the leave to appeal petitions are disposed of," Deputy Attorney General Sk Shaifuzzaman told The Daily Star yesterday.

He also said the government may file a fresh petition with the Appellate Division seeking an extension of the July 10 status quo order within a few days.

Following a writ petition, the HC on June 5 this year declared illegal the circular, issued by the public administration ministry on October 4, 2018, which cancelled the quota system in government jobs.

The circular said that in the case of direct recruitment to the posts of 9th grade (formerly class-1) and 10th to 13th grades (formerly class-2), the appointments should be made based on merit.

Agreements for the FY 2024-25 at the Prime Minister's Office.

"Our only target is to establish the spirit of the Liberation War. Lakhs of martyrs shed blood and lakhs of our mothers and sisters were tortured. We won't forget their contribution. We must keep that in mind."

The PM said her government took legal action against the war criminals involved in mass killing, looting, and torturing of women.

"Many of them were executed following trials and thus the repressed got justice," she said.

Hasina said, "I felt sorry when I heard yesterday [Sunday] the students of Ruqayyah Hall calling themselves Razakars. Do they know what happened there on March 25, 1971? Some 300 girls were killed, and 40 others were taken to the Pakistan camps and raped."

Referring to some gruesome incidents carried out by the Pakistan forces in 1971, the premier said the female students did not see the oppression on streets in 1971. "So, they are not ashamed of calling themselves Razakars."

"What country are we in? What spirit do they believe in? What lesson did they learn? What did they learn? It is my question," she added.

Hasina said the Liberation War is a matter of our pride.

People left their homes and fought for independence risking their lives following the call of the father of the nation and achieved victory, she said.

Those who were in Razakar, Al-Badr, and Al-Shams Bahini unleashed inhuman torture on the people, she said, adding, "Don't forget it."

"We have to march forward with the spirit of the Liberation War after taking lessons from it," the PM said.

Those who were in power for 21 years after the assassination of the father of the nation on August 15, 1975, failed to give the country anything, she said.

Hasina said the pro-liberation force Awami League has changed the country with massive development work over the last 15 years after assuming power.

"Bangladesh is now a changed country ... Bangladesh has earned a dignified position on the global stage," she added.

"Let's take the country ahead. This Bangladesh will move ahead. We will move around the world keeping our heads high ..."

Other demonstrators accompanied the injured.

Meanwhile, alleged BCL members were stationed on the adjacent road when student protesters gathered near the hospital.

Witnesses further alleged that before the BCL attacks, quota protesters assaulted at least three people at the hospital, suspecting them of being Chhatra League activists.

A female DU student in the hospital, requesting anonymity, said, "We thought the hospital was safe, but unfortunately, BCL activists entered."

Hasan Abdullah, a patient, said, "Around 5:30pm, I saw people running away from the hospital, which scared me."

Another patient, Rina Begum, said, "A young man was being beaten in front of the hospital's emergency department. An Ansar member intervened to calm the situation. Attacks inside the hospital are never acceptable."

Speaking to this newspaper, patient Jafar Hossain said, "I was scared as soon as I saw boys carrying sticks. They even attacked an ambulance."

An Ansar member, speaking anonymously, said the patients were frightened and many had left the hospital prior to the attacks without receiving treatment.

A student, also wishing anonymity, said, "No one is leaving the hospital out of fear."

Brig Gen Md Asaduzzaman, director at DMCH, said their services were disrupted due to the attacks.

"To control the situation, we allocated more nurses and doctors to the emergency department," he said, adding that the injured from both groups are receiving treatment.

Journalists were barred by the attackers from taking photographs or recording videos. Some also had their phones checked.

Hospital sources said police and Ansar members were able to bring the situation under control around 9:00pm.

Trump picks JD Vance challenge Democratic President Joe Biden in the Nov 5 election.

Trump, 78, and Biden, 81, are locked in what opinion polls show to be a tight election rematch. Trump continues to falsely claim that his 2020 loss to Biden was the result of widespread fraud and has not committed to accepting the results of the election were he to lose.

In the wake of the assassination attempt, Trump said he is revising his acceptance speech to emphasise national unity, rather than highlight his differences with Biden.

"This is a chance to bring the whole country, even the whole world, together. The speech will be a lot different, a lot different than it would've been two days ago," Trump told the Washington Examiner. The would-be assassin's bullet clipped Trump's right ear but did no major harm.

Trump said that following the judge's decision dismissing the documents case, his other outstanding prosecutions should also be thrown out. He is still awaiting trial on two cases - a federal prosecution in Washington and a Georgia state prosecution - for his attempts to overturn his 2020 election defeat.

Biden has tried to bring the temperature down after months of heated political rhetoric.

"There is no place in America for this kind of violence, for any violence ever. Period. No exceptions. We can't allow this violence to be normalised," Biden said of the assassination attempt in a televised address from the White House on Sunday.

The shooting on Saturday whipsawed discussion around the presidential campaign, which had been focused on whether Biden should drop out due to concerns about his age and acuity following a halting June 27 debate performance.

Nearly two dozen of Biden's fellow Democrats in Congress have called on him to end his reelection bid and allow the party to pick another standard bearer.

The focus this week will be squarely on Trump.

Having consolidated party control, Trump could seize on the prime-time opportunity to deliver a unifying message or paint a dark portrait of a nation under siege by a corrupt leftist elite, as he has done at times on the campaign trail.

Trump has frequently turned to violent rhetoric in campaign speeches, labelling his perceived enemies as "vermin" and "fascists," and accusing Biden without evidence of a conspiracy to undermine the United States by encouraging illegal immigration.

PM tells govt officials; asks them to go tough on corruption

BSS, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday gave a set of directives to government officials that include going tough against corruption, ensuring transparency and accountability, bringing dynamism to administrative activities, and implementing the APAs to build a just, developed, and prosperous Bangladesh.

The premier said this while addressing the signing ceremony of Annual Performance Agreements (APAs) for the 2024-25 fiscal year at the PMO.

"Take proper action wherever any irregularity is found... We announced zero-tolerance (policy) against corruption," she said.

She said only a few individuals commit corruption, but many people are blamed for it.

Students bleed as violence spreads thru campuses

STAR REPORT

Not just the students of Dhaka University, students of at least four more universities across the country bled yesterday as they came under attack by Chhatra League men during their anti-quota protests.

Students of Jagannath University, Jahangirnagar University, Rajshahi University, Chittagong University, and Eden Mohila College, among others, were protesting against Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's recent comments on freedom fighter quota, alongside demanding reform in quota system, when BCL activists and leaders carried out the attacks on them.

At JU, students, under the banner of Anti-Discrimination Student Movement, started a march in front of the university central library around 6:30pm.

However, at least 50 students were injured after being attacked by BCL members around 7:00pm.

The attack lasted for over two hours.

According to victims and eyewitnesses, BCL leaders and activists carried out the attack, which started from Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman Hall.

"Around 50 students took treatment at the university medical centre. Of them, 20 were referred to a private hospital in Savar as their condition deteriorated," said Rezwanur Rahman, a doctor at the centre.

In the evening, protesters held a sit-in in front of the VC's residence.

Around midnight, BCL men started to hurl brickbats at them, said Mahfujul Islam a protesting student.

Afterwards, the demonstrators took shelter inside the VC's compound. Witnesses said some protesters had to climb up the wall and open the compound gate for others to protect themselves.

Fakhrul condemns BCL attack

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday strongly condemned and protested the brutal attack on the agitating students by Chhatra League activists on the Dhaka University campus.

In a statement, Fakhrul said the Awami League government has taken the approach of suppressing the ongoing movement of general students in the same way they run "steamroller" on the movement of pro-democracy political parties.

"Today, police and Chhatra League jointly attacked and injured so many students in different educational institutions of the country, including Dhaka University," he said.

"We condemn the cowardly and heinous attack... The attackers must be punished," he said.

61pc face financial difficulties for medical costs, says BIDS study

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Around 61 percent of people in the country face financial difficulties while seeking medical services in hospitals, according to a new study by Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies (BIDS).

On average, a family has to spend around Tk 55,134 when a family member is admitted to the hospital and about 54 percent of this cost is spent on medicines, the BIDS study found.

The study findings were shared at a seminar at the BIDS auditorium in the capital yesterday.

The study, titled "Catastrophic Health Shock and Impoverishment in Bangladesh: Insights from HIES 2022," showed that due to out-of-pocket payments, around 3.7 percent of the population, which is equivalent to 6.13 million people, were pushed below the national poverty line in 2022.

The data for the study were obtained from the Household Income and Expenditure Survey 2022. Household characteristics, out-of-pocket payments for healthcare, and detailed household consumption expenditures of 14,000 households were analysed for the survey.

Medicine costs are the major costs both for hospitalised patients and outpatients, it said.

Of the people who suffered financial difficulties while seeking treatment, 26.83 percent borrowed money, 18.77 percent took help from friends and relatives, and 15.53 percent sold their assets.

Besides, 32.58 percent of people broke their savings to get hospital services and 6.29 percent paid hospital expenses from their regular earnings, the research findings showed.

Most healthcare costs in Bangladesh come directly from people's pockets, as out-of-pocket payments accounted for 55 percent of the country's healthcare

24 eminent citizens condemn 'Razakar' slogans

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Twenty-four eminent citizens have condemned and expressed their anger over the slogans of the students who are protesting for quota reform.

"We are very surprised and angry to hear the slogans 'Who are you, who am I, Razakars' and 'We are all Razakars' from the procession of the students demanding the cancellation of the quota system in several universities on Sunday night," they said in a statement yesterday.

They were hurt and angry as slogans demanding representation of the razakars, who opposed independence, planned the killing of intellectuals, were uttered at the Dhaka University premises, the statement said.

'RAZAKAR' BACK AND FORTH

Who said what?

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Students' sentiments were inflamed by what they termed was a "disparaging comment" by Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina during her press conference on her recent China visit on Sunday afternoon. Her usage of the term razakar (collaborators of Pakistani occupying forces in 1971) has become a point of contention, with students taking issue with it and many ministers having their say.

HASINA'S COMMENT

"Are the children and grandchildren of freedom fighters not talented? Are only the children and grandchildren of the razakars [collaborators] talented?"

"Why do they have so much resentment towards freedom fighters?" If the grandchildren of the freedom fighters don't get quota benefits, should the grandchildren of Razakars get the benefit?"

STUDENTS' PROTEST SLOGANS

Following the PM's comments, university students countrywide came out of their dorms on Sunday night with slogans like:
"Tui ke? Ami ke? Razakar, razakar! [Who are you? Who am I? Razakar, razakar!]" and "Chaite gelam odhikar, hoye gelam Razakar [Asked for rights and became a razakar]".

OBAIDUL QUADER

ROAD TRANSPORT AND BRIDGES MINISTER

Chhatra League will give a fitting reply to those student leaders of the quota reform movement who on Sunday night labelled themselves razakars and showed arrogance.

DIPU MONI

MINISTER FOR SOCIAL WELFARE

"Those who introduce themselves as Razakars have no right to hold the blood-stained red and green flag of our Liberation War martyrs or to march with that flag tied to their foreheads."

ZUNAID AHMED PALAK

STATE MINISTER FOR ICT

"Isn't it shameful to chant slogans in support of razakars at Dhaka University, where razakars committed mass murder of students and teachers on March 25 [1971]?"

MOHAMMAD ALI ARAFAT

STATE MINISTER FOR INFORMATION

"We are against discrimination, we stand for merit. There is no need to be a Razakar for this... No demands will be accepted for those who want to become razakars."

MOHIBUL HASSAN CHOWDHOURY

EDUCATION MINISTER

"...These people do not respect the court or the government. Therefore, it is not possible for this state to respect these traitors! They have raised the right slogan! Let the true faces of the razakars of this era be revealed!"

Demand for clay utensils on the rise

PARTHA CHAKRABORTTY, Bagerhat

After years of oblivion amid a growing market for cheap plastic alternatives, clayware is again experiencing a rise in demand and popularity as it is utilitarian, eco-friendly, and culturally significant.

In many hotels, motels, resorts and other tourism and festival-centric scopes across the country, a trend of using clay utensils has surged in recent times, especially in Bagerhat and Pirojpur.

"Ahead of Durga Puja, Pahela Baishakh, Ratha Yatra, and other religious and cultural festivities, the demand for clay utensils has been rising in recent years," said Govinda Paul, a clayware maker from Kathipara village under Morrelganj of Bagerhat.

"Also, many local eateries have opted for using clay plates for serving their customers, buying a lot of 100 plates for Tk 2,000. Some households are now using clay rice pots with lid, a traditional utensil for cooking rice that went out of demand following surge of aluminium ones over the past few decades," he added.

Govinda Paul said clay utensils such as plates, glasses, bowls, rice and juice pots, as well as other items such as tree planters and paddy silos, made by artisans in Bagerhat and Pirojpur are now being transported to Dhaka and other districts.

Fellow artisans Anand Paul and Gouranga Paul echoed him, emphasising that the growing demand has been making a positive impact on their livelihoods.

Md Mamunur Rashid, deputy manager of Bangladesh Small and Cottage Industries Corporation in Bagerhat, said the government and different organisations are interested in fostering the cultural resurgence in use of clayware, alongside recognising its economic and environmental benefits.

"We have plans to provide support to local artisans to promote this industry," he said.

RMG SECTOR

Focus on compliance, sustainability

Say speakers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A good working environment increases productivity for ready-made garments (RMG) workers, said speakers at a programme yesterday.

The event, titled "Fabric of Change: Role of Swisscontact in Upskilling RMG Workers in Bangladesh," was organised by Swisscontact Bangladesh at a city hotel.

Mujibul Cezanne Hasan, country director of Swisscontact Bangladesh, said, ''As Bangladesh moves towards LDC graduation, we should consider business-viable and self-sustaining models that existing market players in the RMG sector can easily replicate.''

Mohammad Sohel Sadat, director of BGMEA, said, ''We need to focus on sustainability and compliance, as many challenges are emerging, particularly at the mid and upper management levels.''

Md Akhter Hossain, vice-president of BKMEA, emphasised the importance of upholding factory standards and green transition.

He said ensuring a good working environment will help increase productivity for RMG workers.

The event stressed the RMG sector's enthusiasm for deeper collaborations between private and development sectors to build sustainable RMG skill development ecosystem.

Recruiting agencies asked to refund money by July 18

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Ministry of Expatriates' Welfare and Overseas Employment yesterday submitted a probe report to the High Court, saying that the ministry has ordered the recruiting agencies concerned to settle all debts and credits of intending Bangladeshi workers, who could not be sent to Malaysia even after they paid the required money.

Around 17,700 job seekers were not able to reach Malaysia. A hundred recruiting agencies have also been issued show cause notices, asking them to give explanations about their failures by July 18.

The ministry placed the report through Deputy Attorney General Tushar Kanti Roy before the HC bench of Justice Mustafa Zaman Islam and Justice SM Masud Hossain Dolon.

On June 30, the HC wanted to learn what steps have been taken against the mismanagement that led to Bangladeshi jobseekers failing to reach Malaysia before the deadline of May 31 this year.

Take steps to stop cutting of hills in Sylhet: High Court

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday directed the government to take necessary steps to stop cutting of hills and hillocks in Sylhet and thus protect natural echo-system and lives, properties and livelihoods of people living in the district.

In response to a writ petition, the court ordered the government to take legal action against those liable for cutting hills or hillocks.

At the same time, the HC ordered the local officials concerned including the deputy commissioner and superintendent of police of Sylhet to arrange continuous monitoring in hill and hillock areas in Sylhet so that no one can cut, destroy or damage those and to submit compliance reports to the court in every six months.

The HC bench of Justice Mustafa Zaman Islam and Justice SM Masud Hossain Dolon issued the order.

taken against those who get involved in corruption. I don't care what blame will be given to the government," she said.

"No more corruption will be tolerated," she said.

Hasina said the government wants to build a corruption-free society apart from paying attention to enhancing the quality and skills of government officials.

She asked every ministry to enhance monitoring of its subordinate offices, including the field-level ones, to ensure good governance. "The top-level [of the administration] is very good. Some problems occur at the bottom," she added.

Hasina asked the government officials not to be nervous or worried after seeing anything in the newspapers.

"There is nothing for you to be nervous or embarrassed about seeing what is written in the newspapers. Rather, you should check if there is any authenticity to it [the news]. If it has no authenticity, dump it straight into the dustbin, and you don't even need to read it," she said.

Students bleed as BCL violence

Asked, Dhaka Additional Superintendent of Police (Crime and Operation) Abdullah Hil Kafi said, "We are at the spot. We are trying to normalise the situation."

In Chattogram, BCL members attacked quota reform movement activists in the Sholashahar Railway Station area, resulting in at least three students being injured.

Earlier, BCL activists seized the key to the CU shuttle train and halted it at 2:30pm. BCL members then detained Talat Mahmud, assistant convener of the quota reform movement in Chattogram, beat him, and forcibly took him to the proctor's office.

Eyewitnesses said when the protesters started for the proctor's office in a procession, they were attacked by BCL activists in front of the Shaheed Minar.

Enamul Haque, assistant proctor of CU, said, "BCL activists took Talat to the proctor's office. Upon receiving information, Talat's fellow activists also came to the office. We drove out both groups after counselling. Talat is now safely in our custody."

Later, when the quota reform movement activists started a rally at Sholashahar Railway Station, a clash ensued between BCL activists and them around 3:30pm, said eyewitnesses.

At least 20 JnU students were injured after they participated in the demo held in Dhaka University area. The injured students are currently receiving treatment at DMCH.

Junayed Islam, a JnU student, said, "We were peacefully conducting our protest when Chhatra League activists attacked us with weapons and sticks. At least 20 of my friends were injured."

Meanwhile, at least four students of Eden College were allegedly beaten up by BCL activists during the protest programme at 11:30pm.

On RU campus, at least four RU students were injured, after they came under BCL attack.

According to the victims, RU BCL leaders and activists launched a sudden attack on them at 6:20pm and ordered them to go back to their halls.

Nasim, an injured student, said, "BCL men started beating us and ordered us to return to the halls. Eventually, I ran away from the scene."

Earlier, RU BCL President Mostafizur Rahman Babu warned that no concession would be given if anyone called themselves a Razakar. "If any Jamaat-Shibir member raises any slogans by the name of Razakar, then RU BCL will not make any concessions," he said.

Out-of-pocket health expenditures rose to 73 percent in 2021, according to the Global Health Expenditure Database.

Presenting the research findings, Abdur Razzak Sarkar, research fellow at BIDS, said, "Due to the increase in medical costs, many families who live below the poverty line often become destitute. Many are deprived of health care due to lack of money."

Health Minister Samanta Lal Sen said, "We are working on government-based health insurance. We will launch it soon, though it will take time." When the health insurance is introduced, out-of-pocket expenses will also be reduced, he added.

New housing project, same old fate?

CDA takes on another scheme despite not finishing previous three

SIFAYET ULLAH, Ctg

Chattogram Development Authority has taken up yet another housing project, despite struggling to complete its previous three such projects.

The state agency sent a Development Project Proposal for "Patenga Bay Pearl Housing" to the Ministry of Housing and Public Works last month for approval.

According to project documents, CDA wants to implement the housing project on 60 acres of land in three phases. The first phase will be implemented on around 20 acres of land in North and South Patenga, with 114 residential and commercial plots.

However, CDA's history in residential project implementation has been a sorry one so far.

CDA is having a difficult time completing its three ongoing projects -- Ananya Abasik 1, Silimpur, and Karnaphuli -- due to a myriad of issues, including water crisis and layers of soft soil on project lands.

In fact, not a single house has been built under the Karnaphuli housing project taken in the 1992-93 fiscal year at a cost of Tk 12 crore, while most plots in the two other projects are also vacant.

Besides, CDA took on two more housing projects in the last 10 years but eventually cancelled both. Of those, Ananya Abasik 2 was cancelled after CDA spent Tk 316 crore for it, while it withdrew from the Bayezid Housing Project due to its high cost.

City planners raised questions over CDA's new initiative, citing its failure in previous projects.

"Taking up new housing projects is not realistic while previous projects lie incomplete," said Md Delwar Hossain

SYLHET FLOOD

Academic activities suspended at 665 schools

MINTU DESHWARA,
Moulvibazar

Academic activities of at least 665 educational institutions have been suspended for the last 12 days across Sylhet division due to flooding.

Of those, 346 are government primary schools, according to the Sylhet Divisional Primary Education office.

The rest of the educational institutions are secondary and higher secondary schools, and colleges.

Those in the haor (wetland) areas are most affected.

Many of the educational institutions are currently being used as shelters for flood victims of the respective areas in Sylhet, Sunamgaj, Moulvibazar and Habiganj districts.

In Sylhet, academic activities are suspended at 211 government primary schools, of which 84 are being used as shelters.

Also, activities are suspended in 283 secondary and higher secondary schools and colleges in the district, of which 237 are serving as shelters for flood victims, said Abu Sayeed Md Abdul Wadud, secondary education officer in Sylhet.

In Moulvibazar, 108 primary and 36 secondary schools remain closed, of which 69 are being used as shelters, said Mohammad Fazlur Rahman, secondary education officer in the district.

Moulvibazar Secondary Education Officer Mohammad Fazlur Rahman said floodwaters have persisted without receding, resulting in the closure of activities in 36 secondary educational institutions.

Visiting different schools in the flood-affected areas, this correspondent saw the school compounds submerged under knee-deep water entering the classrooms, emanating a putrid odour and damaging the furniture inside including tables, chairs and benches.

Jalal Uddin, deputy director of the Directorate of Primary Education in Sylhet, assured that once flood recedes, the schools that sustained damage will be repaired and renovated before academic activities are resumed.

People suffer for battered roads

MIRZA SHAKIL, Tangail

Residents of Tangail municipality are suffering immensely as most of the roads in the town have long been in a battered condition due to lack of repair works for years.

Some roads are so worn out that those have become unfit for vehicular movement. Town dwellers are being compelled to use the roads daily for commute amid risk of accidents.

Despite being aware of the situation, the municipality authority has neither taken any step to this end yet, nor took any accountability over the public sufferings, alleged several residents.

The Battala-Baby Stand road is one of those in utter disarray.

"It is an important thoroughfare in the town. Numerous potholes have emerged all over the road, some of those being so large that heavy vehicles get stuck while smaller ones overturn often while plying the road, leading to injuries to commuters," told Saiful Islam, a battery-run auto-rickshaw driver.

"The recent heavy rains left the road in an even worse shape. It needs urgent repairs," he added.

Sujon Miah, a resident of Bajitpur area, said, "The condition of Bajitpur-Baka Miar Bridge road may give the impression that there is no authority to oversee the town's welfare and management."

Mahmudul Hasan, a local trader, echoed him.

Delwar Hossain, traffic inspector (administration) in Tangail, said, "While the Battala-Baby Stand road is already in a sorry state, the pressure of vehicles on it, including goods-laden heavier ones, rose after the Roads and Highways Department started renovating the Baby Stand-Nirala Intersection road."

Shahin Miah, a trader on the town's Victoria Road, said there is no footpath on the road even though it is one the most important roads in the town. "As such, pedestrians are being compelled to move through the road amid risk and often face accidents," he said.

SM Sirajul Haque Khan Alamgir, mayor of Tangail municipality, said they were aware about the public sufferings due to bad shape of several roads in the town.

"We have already reconstructed the road from Nirala Intersection to Baby Stand. There is also plan to develop all other roads in the town as soon as possible," he added.

Two boys find countless hours of joy, skating through the empty streets of the village. The photo was taken in Noya Kandi of Wazirpur upazila in Barishal recently.

'MAHARAJA' is a new experience in non-linear storytelling

Nithilan Swaminathan's debut film 'Kurangu Bommai' (2017) introduced a unique storytelling style around an abandoned bag of money. Seven years later, he returns with his second film, 'Maharaja', which was released in theatres on June 14 and premiered globally on Netflix on July 12.

SAEED KHAN SHAGOR

This film marks Vijay Sethupathi's 50th venture and features Anurag Kashyap, a significant figure in independent filmmaking. The most crucial spoiler is that you must set aside all distractions, including your phone, to fully concentrate on this movie.

Maharaja's story begins with a shocking accident, which might seem like a typical opening. The narrative then takes a few more minutes to introduce the protagonist, Maharaja, a barber who is also a devoted father. His daughter, Manju, narrates their everyday life, portraying a vulnerable father, a common hook in modern Indian cinema. The Maharaja-Manju family includes a third member, Lakshmi, a dustbin that suddenly gets stolen. To recover the stolen dustbin, Maharaja files an FIR at the police station. This unusual complaint leads to a mystery that transforms the film into a crime thriller.

Nithilan expertly lays the foundation of familial bonds and emotions through the characters in the first half, showcasing his remarkable ability to evoke human emotions. The character of Maharaja is vividly brought to life by Makkal Selvan's (Vijay Sethupathi) impressive mannerisms and attitude.

The first half is well-paced, featuring unexpected twists that build up to the interval, leaving the audience eagerly anticipating the second half. Nithilan truly shines in the latter half, packed with even more twists and surprises, proving that the first half was merely a prelude. His brilliance extends to creating a heroic persona for a non-human object, a talent evident in his debut film. Transforming a simple, dirty dustbin (Lakshmi) into the core object of the show is remarkable.

PHOTOS: COLLECTED

The director's storytelling technique is exceptional, crafting a narrative that keeps everyone in suspense. The plot twists and turns are impeccably timed, causing the audience to question everything they believe. The story's depth, along with its exhilarating pace, ensures that there is never a dull moment.

We witness the political reality of the subcontinent through dialogues like "People who don't have education become the mafias" and "If someone is paying Rs 7 lacs for a dustbin, it means he has millions to hide." These lines resonate, especially with us, Bangladeshis, who can relate to recent scandals ('Goat Scandal' etc). The story brims with humour, struggle, and many familiar elements.

You'll find yourself questioning why someone would be so desperate for an old dustbin, even though Maharaja provides ample justification. In the end, you realise that the dustbin (Lakshmi) wasn't that important, but by then, you're already engrossed in the film, trying to piece together the puzzles involving Selvam's role, his demeanour, and his origins, as well as the different appearances of the dustbin in various locations. Editor Philomin have done a tremendous job as the edit is the heart of this cinema. That non-linear rough cut has made this cinema a brainstorming experience.

Maharaja is not a flawless film. The slapping sounds, awkward lip-sync in dubbing, and low-quality Hindi dubbing are quite noticeable. The numerous plot twists and non-linear storytelling might need to be clarified for some. The appearance of snakes and Maharaja's unrealistic physical power lack logic.

The film doesn't feature any lip-sync songs or background songs, but it excels with its background music. The suspense score, dominated by jazz music, leaves a lasting impact.

The cinematography in the film is mostly wide-frame inclusive; even a single person's frames are wide too. Most of the scenes involve multiple characters, so they had to use wide frames. Interestingly, Nithilan employed five cinematographers for the cinematography.

Vijay Sethupathi's portrayal of Maharaja was a tour de force. He brought complexity and intensity to his character, making it both compelling and relatable. Anurag Kashyap as Selvam took the audience on a rollercoaster ride. As the antagonist, Kashyap stole the show. Though his emotional appearance while getting arrested was not up to the mark, he somehow made up for it in the ending. With limited screen time, Sachana delivered an impressive performance as Jyothi, Maharaja's daughter.

This movie is not just a film; it's an experience. It's a testament to what cinema can achieve when storytelling, acting, and technical prowess come together.

People suffer as bridge collapses in Ishwarganj

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

Thousands of people of several villages have been facing serious trouble since the bridge on Kanchamatia river in Ishwarganj upazila collapsed on Friday.

Villagers said hundreds of people of different villages under four unions as well as motorised vehicles used to ply on the risky bridge every day.

However, no casualties were reported when the vulnerable bridge at Sahebnagar village in Sohagi union collapsed on July 12 afternoon, they said.

According to sources, Local Government and Engineering Department (LGED) constructed the concrete bridge in 1999.

Ahmed Ali, a resident of Sohagi village, said several thousand residents including students of different villages under four unions of the upazila are in great misery since the bridge collapsed on Friday afternoon.

Moreover, farmers of the area, which is famous for vegetable cultivation in large scale, are counting losses as they are unable to transport their produces to the nearby markets since collapse of the important bridge, Ali said.

Rokeya Begum, former member of Sohagi union parishad (UP), said some 40 students of her area including her two daughters could not attend their institutions in the last two days due to the broken bridge.

Although the bridge was in a vulnerable state for the last several years, local UP did not take any step to repair it in all these years, Rokeya alleged.

Now villagers are crossing the river on rafts made from banana trees, spending Tk 10 for each trip, she further added.

Sohagi UP Chairman Kadir Ahmed Bhuiyan said although the bridge was constructed nearly 25 years ago, it had been in a dilapidated condition for the last four years due to plying of heavy vehicles.

Plying of overloaded trucks could not be stopped due to lack of proper monitoring, resulting the collapse of the bridge, said the chairman.

Abot 1,000 students of eight educational institutions of the locality are the worst sufferers as they are facing untold suffering while crossing the river, he added.

Ishwarganj LGED Upazila Engineer Aysha Akter said a proposal to construct a new bridge under the '100-metre Bridge Project' has been submitted recently.

They have visited the spot and steps will be taken soon to mitigate the sufferings of locals, she added.

Argentina's glorious era carved into granite

2018 World Cup had left the team and one of their brightest ever stars, Messi, devastated.

These heartbreaks, however, had set the stage for an incredible reversal of narratives.

The turning point came with Argentina's victory in the 2021 Copa America, materialising against hosts Brazil amid an audience-less arena during the height of the Coronavirus pandemic. It was their first major tournament win since 1993, following 10 Copa America editions in which they reached the finals four times.

This pivotal breakthrough instilled belief in the squad, and under the continuous guidance of coach Lionel Scaloni, Argentina went on to end a 36-year wait for World Cup glory.

Since then, Scaloni had been preparing his side for a Messi-less reality, evident in their performances during the 2026 World Cup qualifiers, which was reiterated in the just-concluded Copa edition.

In the USA, the team showcased their depth of character with Messi being light years away from his signature best, playing to their strengths and subduing their opponents who came out all guns blazing in the initial phases of the match, as Colombia and Ecuador found out.

At the packed Hard Rock Stadium, Argentina faced a physically superior, well-drilled Colombia -- coming on the back of a 28-match undefeated run -- but emerged superior through the courage and tenacity that a battlefield demands.

In the 66th minute, Messi was left crying profusely after an ankle injury forced him off the field. However, with the game finely poised at 0-0, Messi's teammates rose to the occasion, seemingly playing as if they had put their lives on the line to see their 37-year-old maverick playmaker smile at the end of the night, in what could well be his last outing in a major event.

"Leo is the greatest player in history. He wants to continue playing because he doesn't want to leave his teammates," Scaloni remarked. This sentiment was echoed by midfielder Rodrigo De Paul, who noted, "He always wants to be there, but the fact that he's part of this team is the best thing for us."

Eventually, it took Lautaro Martinez, who started on the bench despite being the tournament's top scorer, to strike in extra time to secure a 1-0 victory. Martinez had also carved a redemption arc for himself, having been criticised right and left for massively misfiring in Qatar, leading to an overburdened Messi.

The triumph was not just about Messi, though. It marked the fitting end to two 36-year-old stalwarts: winger Angel Di Maria and defender Nicolas Otamendi. Di Maria, who announced his national retirement prior to the match, received special praise from his coach: "His story is like a movie because of how it ended."

Scaloni, reflecting on their 'triple crown' journey, said: "I don't know if it marks an era, but it's true this team never ceases to surprise. They overcame the difficulties of a very difficult match, with a very complicated opponent and without a good first half."

From the depths of despair to the heights of glory, Argentina's redemption story is a testament to perseverance and the indomitable spirit of camaraderie. Rest assured, with the rock-solid foundation in place, even the skeptical fans of the Sky Blues and Whites would bank on the team to bring forth further fond memories.

'We're being deprived of justice'

Prof Yunus made the remarks while talking to journalists on a Dhaka court premises after attending a hearing in a case filed over misappropriation of about Tk 25.22 crore of Grameen Telecom Workers' profit participation fund.

Yesterday was scheduled for recording statements of witnesses, but Judge Md Robiul Alam of the Special Judge's Court-4 set August 5 for the next hearing, following a defence petition, said Belal Hossain, bench assistant of the court.

"These things [the allegations against him] have no basis. This is a case without basis," said the Nobel laureate.

"I am a victim of something, that is clear. It is revenge, violence, hatred all together," he said.

"It was a good thing we were not put inside that cage [in the dock] today [Monday]. I will keep talking about the cage because it is a huge insult to the nation. We should not tolerate this humiliation. I appeal to the judiciary to remove these cages as soon as possible. We want to get rid of its use," he continued.

"It is an insult to humanity. Why will people be kept in cages like animals? It is not a matter of judgement ... just an insult. It is an insult to the entire nation," added Prof Yunus.

Yesterday, he, along with his lawyers, appeared before the court around 11:00am.

On February 1, investigation officer Gulshan Anwar Prodhan, a deputy director of the ACC, placed the charge sheet before the Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court of Dhaka.

The 13 other accused are Grameen Telecom Managing Director Nazmul Islam; directors Ashraful Hassan; Naznin Sultana; Parvin Mahmud; M Shahjahan; Nurjahan Begum; and SM Huzzatul Islam Latifee; Sramik-Karmachari Union President Kamruzzaman; General Secretary Firoz Mahmud Hasan and its representative Mainul Islam; Jatiya Workers Federation Office Secretary Kamrul Hasan; and lawyers Zafrul Hasan Sharif and Yusuf Ali.

All 14 accused, including Prof Yunus, are on bail.

On May 30 last year, Gulshan filed the case with the ACC's integrated district office in Dhaka.

through abuse of power in the name of being associated with her or by individuals in other high positions in the government".

He called her statement "timely and promising", especially that action was taken against the individual; that such bad elements must be removed whether far or near; that taking action against corruption does not tarnish the government's image; and that zero tolerance against corruption will continue.

Iftekharuzzaman said the PM's declaration to hold the corrupt accountable is significant for the government and the relevant institutions.

Saying the PM's statement debunked the often-heard motivated impression that taking action against high-level corruption damages government's reputation, he added, "In this context, we urge the government to adopt a specific time-bound road map for the meaningful and effective implementation of the PM's zero tolerance pledge and AL's election manifesto.

"By so doing the government can open the road to address growing public concerns about the enormous depths and breadths of corruption and impunity."

Vessel reports being attacked off Yemen

Say UKMTO, Ambrey

REUTERS

A merchant vessel reported it had been attacked early yesterday by three small craft in the Red Sea about 70 nautical miles southwest of Yemen's port city of Hodeidah, Britain's maritime agency and security firm Ambrey said.

An unmanned small craft collided with the vessel twice and two manned small craft fired at it, according to the United Kingdom Maritime Trade Operations (UKMTO).

The vessel and crew were reported safe, and it was proceeding to the next port of call, it said.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the attack. But since November, the Iran-aligned Houthi group in Yemen has launched drone and missile strikes in shipping lanes in the Red Sea and Gulf of Aden.

UK WAR MEMORIAL

Pro-Gaza activists held after protest

AFP, London

UK police yesterday arrested two pro-Palestinian demonstrators after a protest at Britain's Cenotaph war memorial in central London.

A Palestinian flag was laid in front of the Cenotaph and "180,000 killed" spray-painted on the ground in front of the monument, photos and video footage showed.

The Cenotaph is the focus every year of national events to commemorate Britain's war dead.

"Two women were quickly arrested on suspicion of criminal damage and are in custody," the Metropolitan Police said on X, adding that damage was caused to the road and not to the monument itself.

In a statement, the Youth Demand group said its supporters had taken action to "commemorate the thousands killed in Israel's genocidal assault on Gaza".

It said Youth Demand was calling for a two-way arms embargo on Israel and for the new UK government to halt all new oil and gas licences granted since 2021.

Russia downs 22 Ukrainian drones

AFP, Moscow

Russia downed 22 Ukrainian drones overnight in the west of the country and over Crimea, Moscow's defence ministry said yesterday.

"Over the past night... air defense systems on duty destroyed and intercepted 22 UAVs", the ministry said in a Telegram post.

Fifteen drones were shot down over the Russian border region of Bryansk, six over Crimea, and one over Lipetsk.

Separately, the governor of Kursk said three more Ukrainian drones had been downed there.

Ukraine has stepped up its attacks on Russian territory this year, targeting both energy sites that it says fuel Russia's military. Both sides have used drones, including larger self-detonating craft with ranges stretching hundreds of kilometres, extensively throughout the conflict, which began in February 2022.

Judge tosses Trump documents case

REUTERS, Washington

A US judge yesterday dismissed the criminal case accusing Donald Trump of illegally holding onto classified documents, dealing the former president another major legal victory as the Republican seeks a return to the White House.

Florida-based US District Aileen Cannon, who was nominated by Trump, ruled that Special Counsel Jack Smith, who is leading the prosecution, was unlawfully appointed to his role and did not have the authority to bring the case.

It marked another blockbuster legal victory for Trump, following the July 1 US Supreme Court ruling that as a former president he enjoyed immunity from prosecution for many of his actions in office.

Trump yesterday called for all court cases against him to be dropped. "This dismissal of the Lawless Indictment in Florida should be just the first step, followed quickly by the dismissal of ALL the Witch Hunts," Trump said on his Truth Social platform.

Prosecutors are likely to appeal the ruling. Courts in other cases have repeatedly upheld the ability of the US Justice Department to appoint special counsels to handle certain politically sensitive investigations.

But Cannon's ruling throws the future of the case, which once posed serious legal peril for Trump, into doubt. Smith is also prosecuting Trump in federal court in Washington over his attempts to overturn the 2020 election.

In the documents case, Trump was indicted on charges that he willfully retained sensitive national security documents at his Mar-a-Lago social club after leaving office and obstructed government efforts to retrieve the material.

LAW OVERHAUL

Lawyers go on strike in Delhi

REUTERS, New Delhi

Thousands of lawyers in India's capital yesterday protested against an overhaul in criminal legislation by staying away from work and boycotting court hearings, as opposition mounted to the changes.

Many have been angered by new laws that came in on July 1 expanding police powers to keep people in pre-trial detention and requiring judges to issue written rulings within 45 days of the end of a trial.

Indian government has defended the changes, saying they are "victim-centric", modernise the system and "end the endless wait for justice".

Oli takes oath as Nepal's fifth PM in five years

REUTERS, Kathmandu

Veteran communist politician K P Sharma Oli was sworn in as Nepal's prime minister yesterday, the fifth in five years, hoping to ensure political stability in the impoverished Himalayan nation that badly needs to woo investors and create jobs.

Nepal has been politically unstable since it abolished a 239-year-old monarchy in 2008. Oli's new government will be the 14th since, with 72-year-old Oli himself returning for his fourth term.

Oli, who heads the moderate Communist Party of Nepal (Unified Marxist Leninist), was administered the oath of office by President Ramchandra Paudel, three days after his predecessor Pushpa Kamal Dahal lost a parliamentary vote of confidence.

Oli announced a 22-member cabinet, with Bishnu Paudel picked as finance minister, and Arzu Rana Deuba of alliance partner Nepali Congress (NC) named foreign minister. Deuba is the wife of NC president and former prime minister Sher Bahadur Deuba.

Left-wing parties struggle to unite

Says Socialists' leader

REUTERS, Paris

France's left-wing parties still plan to form a joint government after they emerged as the strongest bloc in parliament in a snap election, but any pact is unlikely to come this week, the head of the Socialist Party (PS) said yesterday.

"Nothing will happen before July 18." Olivier Faure told France 2 television, referring to the date the newly elected National Assembly is due to convene for the first time.

The New Popular Front (NPF), a hastily assembled alliance ranging from socialists and Greens to the communist party and the hard-left, eurosceptic Unbowed France (LFI), won the parliamentary election earlier this month but fell well short of a majority.

"We will take our time, don't worry," Faure said. His comments, coming after a week of fruitless talks within the bloc, marked a shift in tone.

Following their surprise election win on July 7, Faure and other leaders said they were prepared to form a government and would come up with a name for the prime minister's seat within days. However, no progress has been made since then.

President Emmanuel Macron last week urged the mainstream parties in France's hung parliament to form a coalition able to muster a "solid" majority, putting pressure on the more moderate parts of the NFP to ditch LFI and join Macron's centrists.

Even if the left manages to agree on a name to put forward as government chief, it was still unclear if Macron would accept to appoint a premier from its ranks as any such government would lack roughly 100 seats in parliament to form a stable majority.

Nations gather to negotiate deep sea mining code

REUTERS, Singapore

The UN International Seabed Authority (ISA) was due to meet yesterday to consider new rules allowing firms to extract minerals from the ocean floor, despite mounting concerns about environmental risks.

Supporters say deep sea mining will help boost supplies of raw materials like cobalt and nickel, but critics say it could destroy ecosystems and disrupt migratory routes.

As many as 27 countries are calling for at least a temporary halt of activities, and Hawaii last week became the fourth Pacific US state to issue a comprehensive ban.

The thick line between 'state' and 'government'

Asinur Reza

ASINUR REZA

The distinction between 'state' and 'government' is theoretically clear, yet practically complex. If we compare the state to a four-legged chair, the government represents only one leg. Despite this clear theoretical differentiation, the government often assumes full control over the state, especially in weaker democracies. In such contexts, the distinction between state and government blurs, leading to the state often dissolving into the entity of the government.

The state comprises four main elements: population, territory, government, and sovereignty. Among these, the government is the most tangible element, consisting of a small number of people elected for a specific period, supported by the larger population. In a republic, the people are the owners of the state and elect representatives to run the state for a designated term. These representatives, forming the government, are tasked with formulating and implementing policies aimed at the welfare and aspirations of the people, assisted by state employees. Section 11 of the Constitution of Bangladesh explicitly states that "effective participation by the people through their elected representatives in administration at all levels shall be ensured," a principle that should be mirrored in all democratic countries.

Governments, composed of people, are inherently prone to errors in their primary responsibility of running the country. A key advantage of a democratic society is the presence of multiple parties and individuals aspiring to form the government. If a government fails to perform its duties adequately, the people have the power to replace them in the next elections, assigning these duties to other parties and individuals. Additionally, various institutions such as parliaments, opposition parties, legislatures, media, civil society, and other related bodies highlight deviations during a government's tenure. The overarching aim is the welfare of the people and the reflection of their aspirations.

These attributes define a democratic state. While many people are familiar with this definition and the related terminology in political science, it is worth repeating because these concepts are often forgotten. Politicians, policymakers, public servants, and the media, along with the public, frequently overlook the structure of the state and the distinction between state and government. As previously mentioned, in weak democracies, this distinction becomes especially blurred, leading to an autocratic shift in the government. To prevent this, modern state systems emphasise the "separation of powers" among the branches of government, a principle that helps maintain a balance of power and prevent autocratic governance.

In a democratic system, the government typically consists of three branches: the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. The legislative branch, responsible for making laws and in Bangladesh, is represented by the National Parliament. The executive branch, which includes the prime minister and cabinet ministers, implements and enforces these laws, holding significant power. The judicial branch, distinct from the legislative and executive branches, includes courts and judges responsible for interpreting and applying the law, ensuring justice, and maintaining consistency with the constitution. The judiciary must operate independently to provide checks and balances and protect individual rights, free from political influence. Article 22 of the Bangladesh Constitution mandates the separation of the judiciary from the executive. However, this separation was officially implemented only in 2007 and the executive still seems to exert considerable influence over the legal system, particularly in lower courts. Strict adherence to the separation of powers is crucial to prevent any state organ from gaining absolute power and becoming a "Frankenstein's monster." British politician Lord Acton famously said, "Power tends to corrupt, and absolute power corrupts absolutely." History is replete with examples where absolute power has led to the erosion of civil liberties and increased corruption.

In Bangladesh, political and official discourses often accuse critics and opposition members of "anti-state and anti-government conspiracies," even for merely criticising government policies. Such accusations exploit ambiguities in legal terminology. For example, in August 2022, a student at a public university was handed over to the police by the university authority, accused of "involvement in anti-state activities" simply for liking the Facebook page of an opposition student organisation. The police later released him after finding no evidence of sedition. According to the student, he had criticised the current government in an internal Facebook Messenger group text, which led to him being unjustly labelled "anti-state" and handed over to the police.

VISUAL: ANWAR SOHEL

The law must clearly differentiate between criticism of the government and opposition to the state. Suppressing government criticism by labelling it "anti-state" will ultimately harm both the government and the state. In September 2016, the Supreme Court of neighbouring India issued a landmark ruling on this matter. The Court stated that harsh criticism of the government does not equate to insulting it or committing treason. Sedition charges apply only when actions incite public disorder or violence. This ruling underscores that anyone can criticise the government without facing defamation or treason charges.

Moreover, it is crucial to clarify the role of "government employees." Are they employees of a particular political party, or the state of Bangladesh? The constitution refers to them as "public servants," making it clear that they are state employees, not political appointees. While political governments change every five years, public servants do not. Their primary role is to serve the state and work under the direction of the legitimate government. Political governments must not use public servants for political purposes, and these servants of state must maintain political neutrality. The Government Servants (Conduct) Rules, 1979 explicitly state that no government servant shall be associated with any political party or take part in any political activity, and although they may vote, they must not indicate their voting preferences. However, in practice, some government employees are enticed and inclined towards political parties, undermining the mandated neutrality and compromising the integrity of the democratic process.

Therefore, it is crucial to revisit and reinforce the principles that differentiate the state from the government. The government, composed of transient elected representatives, must operate within the confines of the law, serving the people rather than the other way around. This is especially important in weaker democracies, where the risk of governmental overreach is higher. Public awareness and understanding of these principles are essential to safeguarding democracy and ensuring that the government remains accountable to the people. A clear distinction between the state and the government is fundamental to the functioning of a democratic society. The state, with its permanent structures and institutions, provides the framework within which the government operates. The government, as the elected representative body, must respect this framework, adhere to the separation of powers, and maintain its accountability to the people. By upholding these principles, we can ensure that democracy thrives and that the rights and liberties of the people are protected.

From universal pension to universal social protection system

FAZLEY ELAHI MAHMUD

The implementation of the universal pension, particularly the Prottoy scheme, designed for the employees of self-governed and autonomous institutions, is facing a major challenge due to the indefinite strike by public university teachers. At this juncture, the teachers' concern that the benefits under the new scheme would be lower than existing retirement benefits need to be addressed. Additionally, it is essential to ensure equity across all schemes offered to different groups.

Introducing a contributory universal pension scheme was a key commitment of the National Social Security Strategy (NSSS) adopted in 2015. The government's sincerity in implementing NSSS commitments is commendable. Historically, only government employees in Bangladesh had access to pensions. With the country's recent remarkable economic development and progress toward achieving the status of a developing country, it is time to expand the pension system to all elderly citizens. The universal pension scheme has created such an opportunity by offering pensions to employees of the private sector, informal sector and self-employed individuals. Anyone can register for the new initiative to receive pensions after reaching 60 years of age, including individuals from low-income groups. Participants are required to make monthly contributions during their working years, along with a matching contribution from the employers. The government will make the matching contribution for participants earning less than Tk 60,000 annually.

Yet, the universal pension would be out of reach of the extremely poor, such as day labourers, due to their inability to make contributions. These groups possibly need it most as they cannot save for old age. Many are abandoned by their children due to the shift from traditional joint family systems to nuclear families, making them vulnerable to destitution. The existing non-contributory Old Age Allowance (OAA) programme is intended for this segment of the population. However, the OAA excludes many poor elderly individuals through poverty-based selection, and it is not termed a "pension". To achieve true universal pension coverage, the OAA programme must be declared universal. It should also be rebranded as a "social pension" to demonstrate that the state treats them as valued citizens. The launch of the universal pension has simplified the case for making the OAA universal, especially regarding defining the intended participants and the selection process. The OAA benefits should be available to those unable to access the universal pension, thereby closing the gap in universal coverage. Once universal, a poverty-based selection system will no longer be necessary as the only eligibility criteria would be age threshold to be verified with the National Identity (NID) card, possibly with a proof of residence from the respective local governments.

VISUAL: STAR

Implementing universal OAA can be affordable with a modest increase in current allocation and by rolling it out in phases, for example, initially implementing it only in rural areas. Currently, the age threshold for the programme is 62 years for women and 65 years for men. Based on 2022 census data, the rural population in these age groups is estimated at 7.7 million. For 2024-25, Tk 4,300 crore has been allocated for the programme to provide a transfer of Tk 600 per month to six million elderly persons. If all individuals meeting the age threshold are provided with Tk 600 per month, approximately an additional Tk 1,264 crore will be required annually. This additional cost could be spread over multiple years by implementing the programme only in a select number of upazilas each year.

In addition to a phased approach, it is also necessary to reform the social protection budget to secure more funds for transfer programmes for the poor. For 2024-25, 2.43 percent of GDP has been allocated to social protection, but a significant portion of it—Tk 3,65,000 crore—is designated for the pensions of retired government employees. Another Tk 88,000 crore is allocated for interest subsidies on savings certificates. The universal pension will eventually allow funds for retired government employees' pensions to come from contributions, although this transition may take several years. Consideration should be given to withdrawing the interest subsidy for savings certificates since bank interest rates have increased to levels similar to those of savings certificates. The released funds from these items could be used to roll out universal OAA in urban areas and making other life cycle programmes universal.

Bangladesh has already made important progress toward a universal social protection system, primarily by adopting a life cycle framework that aims to help address vulnerabilities of pregnant women and young children, school age children, unemployed/ under employed people, elderly people, widows, and persons with disabilities. Among these lifecycle groups, primary school children have been receiving stipends universally since 2016, regardless of poverty status. The disability allowance programme has achieved universal coverage, though it needs to be formally declared universal, removing the poverty-based selection system.

To achieve a universal social protection system, it is urgent to explore options for the remaining life cycle programmes in line with the above discussion on universal OAA. These programmes are the Mother and Child Benefit Programme, the Food Friendly Programme (to support seasonally unemployed agricultural day labourers) and the widow allowance/Vulnerable Women Benefit Programme. Offering these programmes universally to the defined groups is affordable, if implemented in a phased manner, as proposed above for the OAA. Only by implementing a universal approach can the historical problems around social protection including selection errors, nepotism, and corruption be eliminated. A universal approach also ensures right to social protection and improves trust and loyalty of the citizens toward the state, thus promoting social cohesion.

The first NSSS was marked by adoption of a life cycle approach to address the vulnerabilities that citizens face at different stages of life. The second NSSS, scheduled in 2026, could be marked by adopting a universal approach for life cycle programmes that would ensure social protection for every deserving citizen as committed by the Constitution of Bangladesh.

An Iconic History of Bengal

> Bangalir Itihas does, indeed, bring kings, for example, into the scheme of things, though not so much in their own right; rather, royal worthiness is assessed by what kingship might have done for society as a whole, and that obviously includes the common people. So, Ray's History soon came to be known as 'history from the bottom.'

JOHN W HOOD

In the sixties of the last century, I earned my primary degree with majors in Philosophy and Indian Studies and became a secondary school teacher. The somewhat recently established Indian Studies Department at the University of Melbourne was a very fraternal institution, one with which it was easy to maintain relations even after graduation. The Chairman of the Department was the very reserved Sibnarayan Ray; the Belgian Indologist, Dr. Joseph Jordens, oversaw the classical offerings of the curriculum; and Mr. (soon to be Dr.) Atindra Mojumder, a man of apparently boundless energy and enthusiasm, managed everything else. Atindra-babu told me about a former teacher of his named Dr. Niharranjan Ray and some of his works, including a history of the Bengali people. He suggested that my Bengali was a lot better than I believed and persuaded me to translate Bangalir Itihas or History of the Bengali People and submit it as a footnote to a thesis on its author. After a year, the undertaking was upgraded to a doctoral project, and a few years after that, Bengali Vernacular Historiography: Niharranjan Ray – A Case Study emerged successfully. Almost immediately, the translation was snapped up by Orient Longman; the thesis part took a bit longer to find a publisher (It was published by Sahitya Akademi in Calcutta in its Makers of Indian Literature series).

I first met Niharranjan Ray in, I think, 1978. I was staying at the Ramakrishna Mission Guesthouse in Golpark, and from the roundabout in front of the stately building runs Purna Das Road, off the far end of which, near Rashbehari Avenue, ran a lane where the Ray family home stood. So, one Sunday after lunch, I set off with Atindra Mojumder's letter of introduction to meet the great man. I found the house easily and rang the doorbell. I was about to leave after the third ring when the door was opened by an elderly and evidently sleepy man wearing a lungi and a slightly tattered genji. I asked the servant if I might see Dr. Ray, and with a warm smile and a soft voice, the servant replied, "I am Dr. Ray." I had yet to learn of one of the best bad habits of the Bengalis - the after-lunch snooze, especially on a Sunday.

He welcomed me into his living room and, having learned that I had translated nothing of any magnitude before, proceeded to offer me some advice, the essence of which was not to try to translate literally. Rather, I should read a paragraph, think about it, and, as though I had concocted it myself, write it in English as I might have written it in the first place. I felt that this was more than a little outrageous. After all, who was I to equate myself in any way at all with such a great man? I made a mental note to look for opportunities to compromise.

And so, once I had returned to Melbourne, I started work on this exciting project. Atindra-babu had said that if I translated only a page a day, I could get a first draft done in less than a year and a half. This was quite persuasive encouragement, but there were times when a page a day was asking too much of myself. This was my first extensive piece of translation, and Bengali is quite different from any European language I have had anything to do with. I was visiting Atindra-babu for a checking session every second weekend or so, and those sessions proved very helpful. Still, I would have to be patient. And then, after a year, the project was upgraded to Ph.D. status.

Of course, the translation would be simply an appendix to the thesis. The major part of the whole work – major in importance, though certainly not in magnitude – would take quite some time after the translation had been finished. I was prepared for this and not particularly urged by any need to hurry, having become part of Niharranjan's ancient Bengali world, as it were; quite frankly, I liked it there and felt remarkably comfortable in it. I had no urge to get out of it.

Having achieved some familiarity with Bangalir Itihas (whose title I translated literally as History of the Bengali People), I needed to start thinking of Niharranjan Ray as a historian. I remembered, as an earnest schoolboy, finding comfort in the simplicity of Thomas Carlyle's dictum declaring history to be the story of great men and their deeds. Now, having read Niharranjan Ray's history, I was troubled by two words: "great men." I was prompted to wonder if there had been no great women in the past and whether greatness was really necessary to attain historical worthiness.

Some years before Ray came to write his History, G. M. Trevelyan turned English historiography on its head with his English Social History, a monumental work that gave central historical roles to hosts of players from the non-privileged classes. Bangalir Itihas does, indeed, bring kings, for example, into the scheme of things, though not so much in their own right; rather, royal worthiness is assessed by what kingship might have done for society as a whole, and that obviously includes the common people. So, Ray's History soon came to be known as 'history from the bottom' as distinct from Carlyle's 'history from the top'.

This distinction extended from subject matter to sources. The major players in 'history from the top' wrote documents – edicts, treaties, memoirs, and the like. However, most of the stars of 'history from the bottom' could neither read nor write, so their later historians would not be able to lose themselves in documents dealing with their roles in history. Of course, documentary sources that had a pan-Hindu (and, a little later, Buddhist and Jain) pertinence and were as significant to the history of the Bengalis as to the rest of the broader Hindu community were naturally used by Ray wherever it was appropriate. However, he was quick to respect the notion that records of people's lives did not have to be documentary to make them historically significant, nor was the story told by documentary sources necessarily superior to whatever could be gleaned from less orthodox sources. Agricultural implements and rudimentary tools, for example, came to tell many stories, as did artistic items such as engravings on a variety of surfaces, relief sculptures, and icons. And folkloric 'literature' – children's rhymes, folksongs, and stories passed down in oral tradition – bore a wealth of mysteries from the past for perceptive modern scholars to unravel. Ray's History of the Bengali People and his fresh historiography helped to usher in a new era of historical scholarship.

A truly notable feature of Ray's History is its literary value. The prose is incisive, decorative without being flowery, elegant, and at times majestic in style. But its most prominent strength is its content, for in his selection, arrangement, and treatment of subject matter, Niharranjan enables the long-past adi parva of his beloved Bengal to flourish again in the pages of his classic work. He introduces us to the earliest Bengalis he can find. He describes the land that gave them sustenance and which they learned to use to make themselves and successive generations thrive. He shows us how they developed an economy, first as agriculturalists, then as craftsmen and traders. He describes how they ordered their society and provided for its accommodation in villages and towns. He helps us to share, albeit from a great temporal distance, their everyday lives, their pleasures, and their creativity. And he interprets their contemplative life and their reaching out to the spiritual beyond. In all, it is a recreation of the fabulous richness of a distant world, yet one that forms the foundation of what many revere as contemporary Bengali nationalism.

It is interesting to observe that Niharranjan Ray started his adult life as a librarian and ended it as one of India's eminent polymaths. Indeed, given the sumptuous variety of the substance of his History of the Bengali People, it should be no surprise that the man's own mind encompassed a luxuriant range of academic and artistic interests. A quick glance at his immense bibliography reveals an expert understanding of Indian sculpture, Mughal miniature painting, East Indian bronzes, art in Burma, Hinduism, Buddhism, Sikhism, the life and literature of Tagore, and much more. In a world in which so many people continue to see increasingly narrow specialization as a worthy writer's raison d'être, the contribution of Niharranjan Ray to modern India and Bangladesh's understanding and appreciation of themselves is an incandescent reminder of the existence of much further-flung boundaries in the pursuit of the humanities.

Argentina's triple crown

MOST COPA AMERICA TITLES WON

- 16 - ARGENTINA
- 15 – URUGUAY
- 9 – BRAZIL
- 2 – CHILE, PARAGUAY, PERU
- 1 – BOLIVIA, COLOMBIA

STAR SPORTS DESK

Lionel Messi has shattered yet another record in his storied career as the Argentine maestro is now the most decorated footballer in the game's history with a record of 45 title wins.

Argentina defeated Colombia 1-0 in the final to win their second successive Copa America title in Miami and with it, Messi edged past his former Barcelona teammate and Brazilian rival Dani Alves to become the most decorated footballer ever.

This was Messi's fourth straight international title, having won the Copa America in 2021, the Finalissima in 2022 and the FIFA World Cup in 2022 before defending the Copa title this year in the USA.

Messi has enjoyed a total of 39 titles in his club career, 35 of which came with Barcelona.

He has won a total of 12 league titles (10 with Barcelona, two with PSG), four UEFA Champions Leagues trophies (all with Barcelona), and 17 domestic cups (a total of 15 with Barcelona, one with PSG and one with Inter Miami).

He has also won three UEFA Super Cups and three FIFA Club World Cups with the Catalan giants.

Messi has also won the Under-20 World Cup trophy and an Olympic gold for Argentina. The 37-year-old is also holder of eight Balon d'Or trophies, most by any footballer. So far, he has netted 838 goals and 374 assists in his career.

The tournament almost ended on a sorry note for Messi who had to be replaced in the second half due to an ankle injury.

I dreamt it, that's why I said it was the last Copa America and it ended here. I dreamt that I would reach the final, I dreamt that I would win it, that I would retire like this.....I have so many beautiful feelings. I am eternally grateful to this generation, they gave me everything, they made me achieve what I wanted so much, and today I am leaving in this way, how better than this?

Start of a new SPANISH ERA?

AFP, Berlin

Spain conquered Europe for a record fourth time on Sunday as they beat England to win Euro 2024 and want this historic night to be the beginning of a new period of dominance.

Led by young stars Lamine Yamal and Nico Williams, 17 and 22 respectively, many in Luis de la Fuente's superb side will hit their prime in the years ahead.

Between 2008 and 2012 Spain dominated international football, winning the Euros in those years and the 2010 World Cup in the middle.

A fallow period followed with Spain falling badly short in most competitions until reaching the semifinals of Euro 2020.

It was a positive sign but a last 16 defeat by Morocco at the 2022 World Cup spelled the end of Luis Enrique's reign and the start of what was to come.

No longer dependent on dominating possession, Luis de la Fuente's Spain play to a wide variety of strengths.

Sometimes they do keep the ball, as in the second half of their semi-final win over pre-tournament favourites France, but are not afraid to go direct, with the speedy and skilful Williams and Yamal duo leaving full-backs for dead on the counter.

Spain's football has changed but they are hoping their domination of the international stage will be repeated.

"The European champions have been deservedly crowned, today I am even prouder and I hope this impulse will serve to be even better," said De la Fuente.

"You can always improve and that's our objective... we will do it because these players are an example for everyone, they are so good."

Three of the stars from their golden generation, Xavi Hernandez, Andres Iniesta and David Villa, watched on in the Olympiastadion as La Roja lifted a major trophy for the first time in 12 years.

Coach Luis de la Fuente came under heavy scrutiny after a shock defeat by Scotland in Euros qualifying in March 2023, but steadied the ship by winning the Nations League three months later, confirming Spain were on the right track, at least on the field.

With the team no longer dependent on stars from Real Madrid and Barcelona, but instead a real mix including a strong Basque contingent from Athletic Bilbao and Real Sociedad, Spain believed in themselves and their plan, even if others viewed them as lacking players to compete with the likes of France and England for the trophy.

They beat both, as well as hosts Germany and Euro 2020 winners Italy -- the other four of Europe's 'big five'.

"This is a dream, we are the best national team in Europe," Rodri told ITV.

"Imagine what we have next -- we are so happy. We made history but it doesn't stop here, we have talent and we'll keep going."

They won Euro 2024 without Barcelona midfielder Gavi, who suffered a bad knee injury in November, and the Catalan club's young centre-back Pau Cubarsi, whom De la Fuente left behind this time, but will likely be a key component in the future.

Spain were also without Pedri for the semis and final after he was hurt early in the quarterfinal win over Germany.

It is clear why De la Fuente believes Spain's present is bright but their future can be even brighter.

Alcaraz plotting golden path to greatness

REUTERS, London

There was a moment of euphoria after Carlos Alcaraz finished off Novak Djokovic to retain his Wimbledon title on Sunday, the usual pumped fists and group hugs with his entourage in the players' box.

But an hour or so later the Spaniard was already back down on planet earth, insisting his journey is only just beginning.

"I've seen and I've heard all the statistics that I am the youngest to win at Roland Garros and Wimbledon the same year," the 21-year-old told reporters after his 6-2, 6-2, 7-6(4) demolition of 24-time Grand Slam champion Djokovic.

"I honestly try not to think about it too much. Obviously it's a really great start of my career but I have to keep going. I have to keep building my path.

"At the end of my career, I want to sit at the same table as the big guys. That's my main goal. That's my dream. It doesn't matter if I already won four Grand Slams at the age of 21."

Alcaraz is indeed the youngest player to complete the French Open-Wimbledon double in the same year during the professional era and emulated Roger Federer in winning his first four Grand Slam finals, although the Swiss triumphed in his first seven.

Alcaraz's four Grand Slam titles, the 2022 U.S Open, last year's Wimbledon when he also beat Djokovic, and this year's French Open-Wimbledon double, required just 69 matches at the slams.

Federer needed 79 matches, Nadal 81 and Djokovic 134 before notching their fourth Grand Slam titles.

With Italy's world number one Jannik Sinner, winner of this year's Australian Open, vying with Alcaraz for top-dog status, the figureheads of a new generation are now established.

Whether or not either can go on to challenge the numbers of the "Big Three" is another question entirely.

"I think being there with Jannik, in the top of the ranking, winning the Grand Slams, I think it is good for tennis to have new faces winning the big things and fighting for the big tournaments," Alcaraz said.

Bangladesh women's cricket team are set to depart for Sri Lanka today to play the eight-nation 2024 Women's T20 Asia Cup, slated to be played from July 19 to 28. The Tigresses yesterday had a photo session in Mirpur before embarking on their Asia Cup mission.

‘We’re being deprived of justice’

Says Prof Yunus after court hearing

COURT CORRESPONDENT

Nobel Laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus yesterday said it appears that there is an attempt to hurriedly conclude the trial of the case he and 13 others are accused in and that they were being deprived of justice.

“We are not getting justice; the people of the country understand what is in the background. Anyone present in the court will feel that there is an attempt to finish the trial process hurriedly,” he said.

Go for a time-bound roadmap to fight graft

TIB urges govt

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Transparency International Bangladesh yesterday urged the government to adopt and enforce a time-bound roadmap consistent with Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina’s declaration of “zero tolerance against corruption”.

In a statement, it said, “TIB would like to consider the prime minister’s disclosure of action taken against a former employee at her residence, who accumulated huge amount of income and wealth; her declaration that [corrupt people must be removed from society whether] ‘far or near, no matter’; and that ‘zero tolerance against corruption’ will continue as a testimony to her firm commitment against corruption.”

TIB Executive Director Dr Iftekharuzzaman in the statement said, “Recently, many instances of high-level corruption have come to light, where individuals have allegedly amassed huge income and wealth through corruption, abusing their entrusted power or leveraging their relationships with those in powerful positions.”

At a press conference on July 14, in response to questions about the government’s initiative, Hasina disclosed that she took action against a former employee of her household who had amassed Tk 400 crore.

Terming the PM’s disclosure as an indicator of political will, Iftekharuzzaman said, “The prime minister has in reality expressed her dismay and discomfort towards the culture of normalisation of amassing illegal wealth

Pak govt to ban Imran’s party

To file treason case against the former prime minister

REUTERS, Islamabad

Pakistan government is planning to ban former prime minister Imran Khan’s political party and move the country’s top court to press treason charges against him, the information minister said yesterday.

The move to ban Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) was based on the proven charge of the party receiving foreign funds from sources that are illegal in Pakistan, as well as rioting by the supporters last year that targeted military installations, Information Minister Attaullah Tarar said.

“The federal government will move a case to ban the Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaaf,” he said, adding that the plan will be taken up before the cabinet, which was empowered to take a decision.

The government will also file a legal reference against Khan and former President Arif Alvi for treason charges under the country’s constitution before the Supreme Court, Tarar said.

Khan’s aide Zulfikar Bukhari said the decision was a move towards “soft martial law”. “This is a sign of panic as they have realised the courts can’t be threatened and put under pressure,” he said.

PTI candidates contested the February 8 election as independents after it was barred from the polls.

The Supreme Court had last week ruled that the party was eligible for more than 20 extra reserved seats in parliament, ramping up pressure on the country’s weak coalition government.

Israel hits Gaza from land, sea, air

80 more Palestinians killed; truce prospects dwindle

AFP, Palestinian Territories

Israel hammered the Gaza Strip from the air, sea and land yesterday as the offensive in the Palestinian territory showed no sign of abating, with Hamas saying it was pulling out of truce talks.

Shells rained down on the neighbourhoods of Tal Al-Hawa, Sheikh Ajlin and Al-Sabra in Gaza City, AFP correspondents reported, while eyewitnesses said the Israeli army had shelled the Al-Mughraqa area and the northern outskirts of the Nuseirat refugee camp in central Gaza.

Paramedics from the Palestinian Red Crescent said they had retrieved the bodies of five people, including three children, after Israeli air strikes in the Al-Maghazi camp, also in the central Gaza Strip.

Meanwhile, eyewitnesses reported Israeli gunship fire east of Khan Yunis, in southern Gaza, and shelling and Apache helicopter attacks several homes in western areas of the southernmost city of Rafah.

The Israeli military said in a statement that it was continuing its activity throughout the coastal territory, and said it had conducted raids in Rafah and central Gaza that killed “a number of militants”, as well as air strikes throughout the strip over the past day.

It also said its naval forces had been firing at targets in Gaza.

- Israel bombs UN-run school in Nuseirat camp
- Rafah residents say strikes blew up several homes
- Gaza death toll rises to 38,664

More than 38,664 Palestinians have been killed and 89,097 have been injured in the Israeli military offensive in Gaza since October 7, the Gaza health ministry said in a statement yesterday. Some 80 Palestinians were killed and 216 injured in the past 24 hours, the ministry added.

On Sunday evening, Israeli forces struck a UN-run school in Nuseirat camp that was being used as a shelter for displaced people but which the military said “served as a hideout” for Hamas fighters.

The civil defence agency in Gaza said 15 people were killed in the strike, the fifth attack in just over a week to hit a school used as shelter by displaced Palestinians.

The relentless bombardments came as prospects dwindled for a truce and hostage release deal being secured any time soon.

Hamas, the Iran-backed group, said on Sunday it was withdrawing from ceasefire talks.

The decision followed an Israeli strike targeting the head of Hamas’s military wing, Mohammed Deif, which the health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said killed 92 people.

Last week, US President Joe Biden had suggested a deal might be close, saying at a Nato summit that both sides had agreed to a framework he had set out in late May.

Hamas yesterday lashed out at the US, accusing it of supporting “genocide” by supplying Israel with “internationally banned” weapons.

Temple older than Machu Picchu found in Peru

CNN ONLINE

Archaeologists in Peru have unearthed the remains of what they believe are a 4,000-year-old temple and theater, shining a new light on the origins of complex religions in the region.

The team began studying the new archaeological site of La Otra Banda, Cerro Las Animas, in June. Last year, the local government alerted them to looting that had been taking place near the northern Peruvian town of Zaña, according to a press release from the Field Museum in Chicago, Illinois.

They excavated a plot roughly 33 feet long and 33 feet wide, finding signs of ancient walls made of mud and clay at just six feet deep.

“It was so surprising that these very ancient structures were so close to the modern surface,” Luis Muro Ynoñán, a research scientist at the Field Museum who led the team, said in the release.

The finds predate the country’s best-known archaeological site, the ancient citadel of Machu Picchu, which is believed to have been built by the Inca Empire in the 15th century, by about 3,500 years. They also predate the pre-Inca cultures of Moche and Nazca, researchers said.

Argentina’s glorious era carved into granite

KHALID HOSSAIN

As Argentina edged past Colombia in a high-intensity Copa America final in Miami yesterday (Bangladesh time), the defending champions added a laminated layer to their fascinating journey of serial success.

Also, quite refreshingly and crucial to their long-term output, the Albiceleste’s transformation from heavy reliance on Lionel Messi spreading stardust to becoming a well-rounded team capable of winning without him epitomises their coming of age.

Furthermore, their latest feat became particularly sweet as it mirrored Spain’s historic achievement of winning a World Cup sandwiched between two continental titles (Euro 2008 and 2012).

The narrative of Argentina’s redemption began in the long shadow of painful defeats: the 2014 World Cup final loss to Germany -- who had also eliminated them in preceding edition’s quarterfinals -- and consecutive Copa America final defeats in 2015 and 2016 before a meek, last-16 exit from the

2 Bangladeshis shot dead near Sylhet border

Fingers pointed at ‘Khasi’ people in India’s Meghalaya

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Sylhet

Two Bangladeshis were shot dead allegedly by Khasi People of India’s Meghalaya along Kalairag border in Sylhet’s Companiganj upazila on Sunday afternoon.

The victims were Ali Hossain, 32, and Kawsar Ahmed, 30, of Kalairag village.

Foyzur Rahman, chairman of Uttar Ranikhai union, said, “So far, we learnt that two people were killed and several others were shot by the Khasi people of India inside Indian territory. But we could not confirm the identities of the injured.”

Quoting locals, Foyzur said the deceased along with others went to a hill to collect firewood.

Golam Dastagir Ahmed, officer-in-charge of Companiganj Police Station, said members of Border Guard Bangladesh and India’s Border Security Force recovered the bodies from the no-man’s land around 7:00pm yesterday and handed those over to police after a meeting between the two border security forces.

Abu Sayed, the youngest of nine siblings, was studying in the English department at Begum Rokeya University, Rangpur.

Poverty forced his elder brothers and sisters to quit education, but they all chipped in to make sure Sayed continued his.

Sayed dreamt of joining the civil service, a job he believed would change his family's fate. So he joined the quota reform protest.

6 killed as violence spreads

Fierce clashes break out in Dhaka, Chattogram, Rangpur between BCL, police and quota protesters; govt deploys BGB in 6 districts; all universities, colleges, secondary schools closed; univ students asked to vacate halls; Thursday's HSC exams suspended

STAR REPORT

In a major escalation of violence, at least six people, including three students, were killed and several hundred injured in clashes between quota protesters and Chhatra League activists and police across the country yesterday.

Three, including two students, were killed in clashes between the protesters and BCL men in Chattogram.

In the capital, two people died after being attacked in Dhaka College and Science Lab areas where protesters and Chhatra League activists fought pitched battles for over seven hours.

In Rangpur, a student of Begum Rokeya University was killed in police firing during a protest.

Incensed by Monday's BCL attacks on Dhaka University campus, the quota protests swelled yesterday with students from private universities and colleges joining.

Soon the violence spread nationwide. Clashes between BCL men and police and students demanding reforms to the quota system were reported in Rajshahi, Bogura, Jhenidah, Cox's Bazar, Narsingdi, Sirajganj, Barishal, Kishoreganj, and Faridpur as well.

The government deployed BGB in Dhaka, Chattogram, Bogura, Rangpur, Rajshahi, and Gazipur.

It closed secondary schools and colleges indefinitely and suspended the HSC exams scheduled for Thursday.

Late last night, the University Grants Commission citing an education ministry decision said all public and private universities and their affiliated colleges would be closed until further notice. It asked the students to vacate their dorms as well.

Hasnat Abdullah, one of the coordinators of the quota-reforms protests, said state-sponsored attacks were carried out against the protesters across the country.

Another coordinator, Asif Mahmud, announced that there would be a coffin procession and a gayebana janaza (funeral without the body) at Raju Bhashkarjo at 2:00pm today to pray for the salvation of those killed during the violence.

He urged all students to join.

Yesterday, they blocked key intersections in the capital, including Jatrabari, Science Lab, Pragati Sarani, Shantinagar, Badda, Motijheel Shapla Chattar, Tantibazar, Uttara,

GDP, per capita income to stay unchanged

Says finance ministry on adjustment of export data

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh's GDP and per capita income will stay the same after the reconciliation of export data as the two data points are calculated based on the actual export receipts registered by the central bank, says the finance ministry.

The Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics, the government agency responsible for collecting statistics on demographics and the economy, uses the Bangladesh Bank's figures as export earnings, the ministry said in a statement yesterday.

"As a result, the apprehension the GDP and per capita income will also come down is not right," the statement said.

The statement comes after Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali held a meeting on Monday on the mismatch in export data. Ahasanul Islam Titu, the state minister for commerce, BB Governor Abdur Rouf Talukder

Police raid BNP's Nayapaltan office

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Detective Branch (DB) of police raided the BNP's Nayapaltan headquarters in the capital over the suspected involvement of party members in subversive activities.

A team led by DB chief Harun-or-Rashid launched the raid around midnight.

"We conducted the raid after two buses were set on fire in front of Jatiya Press Club," Harun told journalists at the spot.

and Beribandh, bringing traffic to a halt.

They also blocked rail lines in Mohakhali for more than six hours, snapping communications between Dhaka and most parts of the country.

The students also obstructed Dhaka-Chattogram, Dhaka-Sylhet, Dhaka-Tangail, Dhaka-Mymensingh, and Chattogram-Cox's Bazar highways for most of the day.

Tension was high on public university campuses yesterday following the incidents of attacks on Dhaka University and Jahangirnagar University students on Monday and early yesterday.

Yesterday, Chhatra League and quota protesters held separate rallies on DU campus. Both the groups ended their programmes without any major incident. Chhatra League held a rally near TSC while the demonstrators held their rally at the Central Shaheed Minar in the evening.

But there was mayhem in Dhaka College and Science Lab areas and violence in Chankharpul, Rayshahebbazar of Old Dhaka, Bhatara on Pragati Sarani, Mirpur-10, and Farmgate.

Two youths were killed during clashes in Dhaka College and Science Lab areas between the BCL men and protesters.

One of the two was identified as Md Shajahan, 24, a hawker who had a makeshift shop in front of Balaka Cinema Hall.

He was found in a pool of blood near City College and was declared dead at Dhaka Medical College Hospital around 7:00pm.

"My son had nothing to do with the protest. He was a hawker. Who killed him?" lamented Ayesha Begum, the mother of the youth, at the DMCH.

In the afternoon, another youth with critical head injuries was found near Dhaka College. Sabuj Ali, 25, son of Badsha Ali and Surja Banu, of Nilphamari Sadar was taken to DMCH where he was declared dead. Police had to scan his fingerprint to ID him.

Science Lab area turned into a battle zone as clashes continued between quota protesters, mostly college students, and Chhatra League activists for over seven hours.

Both stick-wielding groups threw brick chunks at each other and chased each other.

The clash ensued around 1:45pm and finally ended after 8:45pm.

At least 127 people, including protesters and BCL activists, were injured.

Ten crude bombs exploded during the clashes.

Chase and counter-chase continued for hours with brief pauses. At least two police personnel were assaulted at the time. And the protesters vandalised a police box.

Around 7:00pm, the protesters chased away Awami League leader and former member of parliament Haji Salim at Science Lab intersection near LabAid Hospital.

Md Babu, who accompanied Haji Selim, told The Daily Star that the AL leader had seen a doctor and was leaving in his vehicle when 300 to 400 protesters stopped his and an accompanying vehicle.

Haji Salim and four of his aides were chased into the LabAid Hospital.

Four students of Jagannath University and a student of Kobi Nazrul Government College were shot at Rayshahebbazar intersection in Old Dhaka.

Protesters claimed that when several hundred students took out a procession around 3:30pm, AL and Jubo League activists attacked them.

The five were undergoing treatment at the DMCH.

Two buses were torched in front of the Jatiya Press Club in the evening.

Around noon, a brief clash broke out between students of Dhaka International University, United International University and American International University, Bangladesh, and activists of Chhatra League in Bhatara area.

Rajon Kumar Saha, assistant commissioner of Badda zone, said, "We removed the Chhatra League activists from the area and the students were demonstrating on the road."

Students of BRAC University blocked a road in Merul Badda area around 10:00am.

Habibur Rahman, commissioner of Dhaka Metropolitan Police, said, "We are working strategically to keep the law-and-order situation under control."

"A police sergeant and a constable were hurt ..."

CHATTOGRAM

Three people were killed during clashes between the quota protesters and BCL men in Chattogram.

The victims were Wasim Akram, 24, a student of Chittagong College, Faisal Ahmed, 24, student of management at the Omargani MES College, and Md Faruk, 32, an employee of a furniture shop, said Chittagong Medical College Hospital doctors and police.

Nuzhat Inu, on duty doctor at the CMCH, said the body of Faruk had bullet injury marks while Akram was stabbed.

Some 30 injured people were admitted to the hospital.

CMCH Director Brig Gen Taslim Uddin said the condition of two were critical.

The protesters were supposed to hold a rally in Sholashahar Railway Station area around 3:00pm, but BCL activists occupied the venue since 1:00pm.

When the demonstrators were heading towards the venue in droves, Chhatra League men attacked them at Muradpur, Sholashahar Railway Station and Sholashahar Gate No 2, triggering chases and counter chases, witnesses said.

In Muradpur, Chhatra League activists hurling brick chunks at students, prompting the students to retaliate in kind. There were running battles too.

During the clash, several gunshots were heard.

Chhatra League activists retreated and went inside Meer Manzil, a residential building near Muradpur intersection.

They started throwing brick chunks and flower pots at protesters from the roof of the building, The Daily Star correspondents saw and took footage of it.

The demonstrators then stormed the building and beat up the BCL men.

In the face of the fierce attack by the demonstrators, many Chhatra League men tried climbing down from the building using the external plumbing, shows a video clip making the rounds in social media.

A handful of protesters were seen pelting the Chhatra League activists with stones, causing at least two activists to fall from the five-storey building.

"At least 10 Chhatra League activists were stabbed," said Nurul Azim Roni, former general secretary of Chattogram city unit Chhatra League, who led the Chhatra League activists there.

He claimed that Jamaat-Shibir activists in disguise were behind the attack on BCL men.

Saiful Islam, commissioner of Chattogram Metropolitan Police, told this newspaper that they recovered two bodies from Sholashahar Railway Station area around 4:30pm.

RANGPUR

Abu Sayed, 25, a student of English department at Begum Rokeya University in Rangpur, was killed during a clash between police and the protesters on campus yesterday.

He was the son of Mokbul Hossain from Babanpur village of Rangpur's Pirganj upazila.

Demonstrators said a procession of students from Lalbagh area reached the university Gate-1 around 2:30pm and a clash ensued with the police.

A video clip making the rounds in social media shows a shot being fired at Sayed when he is standing with his arms spread out in front of a group of police across the street. Moments later, he is seen falling to the ground.

A student who took Sayed to the hospital, said, "Police were firing rubber bullets and tear gas at us. Sayed was hit in the chest and fell unconscious on the street. We took him to the hospital in a battery-run rickshaw. I tried to talk to him, but he did not respond."

Eunus Ali, director of Rangpur Medical College Hospital, said, "One injured student was brought dead to the hospital at 3:05pm."

"The emergency unit informed me that he suffered injuries from rubber bullets," he said.

Around 30 students, including several female students, were also injured in the incident.

Md Moniruzzaman, commissioner of Rangpur Metropolitan Police, told The Daily Star that a group of students were demonstrating on the campus around 2:30pm.

He said students from nearby education institutions also joined the protest.

He claimed that the protesters attacked a police station nearby, injuring several police personnel, and damaged vehicles. The clash ensued as police retaliated, he said.

Tension ran high when student attempted to take Sayed's body to the campus as the police intercepted and took the body to the hospital for an autopsy.

The protesters set fire to the residence of Begum Rokeya University vice-chancellor following the death of its student Abu Sayed in police firing. The students also ransacked the ground floor of the residence.

VC Prof Abdur Rashid along with 15 to 20 officials, teachers, and staffers were confined to the building when the students attacked the residence in the evening, reports our Dinajpur correspondent.

The protesters also torched five university vehicles, said Asaduzzaman Mondal, general secretary of BRUR's teachers' association, adding that the students left the area after 7:00pm.

Law enforcers later rescued them, the teacher said.

The students also set fire to a BCL leader's room at Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman Hall of the university.

and higher-ups from different ministries and government agencies were present.

The same methods will be used by all the government agencies for data collection, the statement said.

"So, it is expected from now on that there will be no major difference in export data collected by the BB, Export Promotion Bureau and the National Board of Revenue. It is worth mentioning that there will also not be any major change in the balance of payment (BoP) although little revision in the current account and fiscal account was done."

The revised BoP has already been published on the BB website, the statement said.

The amount of cash incentive given to the exporters is disbursed after a third party audits the export receipts, it said.

"As a result, the amount of cash incentive that was given to the exporters is also correct," the statement added.

However, economists are predicting the size of GDP will drop once the export data is corrected.

"The most pressing implication of the correction of the shipment value of exports is for the GDP growth estimate," Zahid Hussain, a former lead economist at the World Bank's Dhaka office, told The Daily Star recently.

BBS has projected GDP growth of 5.8 percent in fiscal 2023-24.

In making this calculation, they projected a 5.63 percent growth in the real exports of goods and services.

Recently, the BB data showed that actual exports in the first 10 months of fiscal 2023-24 were nearly $14 billion less than the shipment value of goods published by the EPB earlier.

Following the correction, economic growth may be about one percentage point lower than the government's preliminary estimate, Hussain said.

"Thus the 5.8 percent GDP growth could be 4.8 percent due to the shortfall in actual export growth relative to the export growth projected, other things equal."

She mentioned that the country's victory was achieved through their sacrifices. "Therefore, they should always be given the highest respect."

Hasina said she knows that many of the freedom fighters may not support her party. "Wherever they go, it doesn't matter to me. It is important to me that they sacrificed everything -- their lives, their blood -- and many were maimed to make this country free and victorious."

She also mentioned that freedom fighters defeated the enemies and brought victory.

Hasina said many freedom fighters might not agree with her opinion, they might not agree with her party, still they are freedom fighters. "I respect everyone. And we want that the people will uphold that honour for ages."

She said the freedom fighters were once neglected. "Since I assumed power, I have given them every kind of support and they can proudly say that I'm a freedom fighter."

She said the country has minorities, differently abled people and autistic people. The government is sympathetic to all of them.

"We are paying special attention to ensure that they get all the facilities of the society, so that they do not fall behind."

The PM asked the fellows of the Prime Minister Fellowship to take responsibilities of the country prior to leaving for higher studies abroad.

"You have many things to give. You have to develop the country further in future."

She asked them to remember that they are going abroad for higher education with the fellowship paid for by the people. "You have to pay special attention to serve the people."

The prime minister asked them to work for the country and its people after returning home upon completion of their studies.

This year, as many as 11 individuals have got PhD and 39 got masters fellowships.

So far, 308 masters fellows and 116 PhD fellows have been awarded the scholarship at the expense of around Tk 336 crore to study at world-class universities. Of them, 215 masters fellows and 26 PhD fellows have already completed their studies.

The fellowship was introduced in 2018 by the prime minister to facilitate the capacity development of resources across all sectors.

But bullets ended all that."

The mood in Sayed's village home in Babanpur of Rangpur is one of grief and disbelief. The loss is too heavy for his mother Monowara Begum. The news of Sayed's death has plunged her into a cycle of breakdowns and fainting spells. She was in no condition to talk to The Daily Star.

Anwar Hossain, a neighbour, said, "Sayed was the brightest among his siblings. Humble and gentle, he was the only one among his siblings receiving higher education. His death has deeply saddened us all."

Just a day before his death, Sayeed shared on Facebook how he was ready to sacrifice his life for the cause if needed.

At 12:37pm on Monday, he shared a photo card of Rajshahi University teacher and martyr Prof Dr Shamsuzzoha, who was killed in police firing in 1969 during a student protest.

The accompanying caption read: "Sir! We desperately need you right now, sir! Everyone of your generation has passed away, but you live on even after death. Your legacy is our inspiration. We are enlightened by your ideals.

"And to those of our generation, you too will die one day as per the laws of nature. But as long as you live, live with integrity. Support the just cause, take to the streets, stand as a shield for the students. You will receive genuine respect and honour. You won't be lost in the sands of time after your death. You will live forever like Shamsuzzoha."

petrol were recovered from the spot, he said, adding that seven Jatiyatabadi Chhatra Dal activists were also arrested at the time.

The DB chief said a group was trying to derail the ongoing quota movement by offering financial support and weapons to create confusion.

He assured that the authorities have identified those responsible and will arrest them soon.

Speaking on the issue, BNP Senior Joint Secretary General Ruhul Kabir Rizvi claimed the raid on the Nayapaltan party office was conducted to divert attention away from the quota reform protests.

"They staged a drama inside the party office. This drama is part of an ongoing attack against Chhatra Dal and affiliated activists," Rizvi told a virtual press briefing following the raid.

"Why didn't they [police] conduct the raid when party leaders and journalists were present at the office? As part of the master plan, the raid was conducted in the middle of the night."

GM Quader terms protesters 'Bir Muktisena'

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Jatiyo Party chairman and opposition leader of the House GM Quader yesterday expressed his solidarity with the ongoing quota reform movement.

Terming the agitators seeking reform in the quota system "Bir Muktisena" (valiant freedom fighters), Quader condemned the attack on the agitators.

"I congratulate the youth who are leading the quota reform movement," he said in a statement.

"Divisions have been created in the country in many ways under the incumbent government. A beneficiary group has been created following the division. Quota policy is a part of that process," said Quader.

The opposition leader urged [the government] to accept the demand of the protesters. Otherwise, the JP leader said, the country and the future generation will march towards an uncertain and conflicting future.

Many BCL leaders resign over attack on demonstrators

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A number of Chhatra League leaders have announced their resignation in the last two days over the "attack" on agitating students.

While many BCL leaders expressed their solidarity with the ongoing protests, some came up with their resignation announcement on social media.

So far, 18 BCL leaders of Dhaka University and its different hall units had resigned, according to sources.

The same situation was created during the quota reform movement in 2018. At that time, several hundred BCL leaders resigned from the organisation, protesting the attack on students.

A leader of Jahangirnagar University unit of BCL yesterday announced his resignation through a Facebook post, protesting Monday night's attack on agitating students.

In his account, the leader wrote, "I was involved in Chhatra League politics with an ideology in my heart

Protests, clashes break out across the country as students, BCL lock horns

STAR REPORT

Violence centring quota reforms in government jobs was not only limited to the capital yesterday, it also spread like wildfire across the country.

Students and BCL members clashed on campuses and major throughfares in Savar, Rajshahi, Barishal, Cumilla, Sirajganj, Faridpur, Narsingdi, Tangail, Jhenaidah, Pabna, Gazipur and Mymensingh, among other places.

At Jahangirnagar University, at least 70 individuals, including students, teachers, journalists, and police, were injured in clashes that started when armed individuals, allegedly Chhatra League members, attacked protesters near the vice-chancellor's residence late at night.

The injured were taken to Enam Medical College for treatment, while university authorities convened an emergency meeting to form a committee to investigate the incident and ensure medical support for the victims.

Manosh Chowdhury, a professor at JU, criticised the administration for failing to prevent unauthorised entry onto campus, which he believes exacerbated the violence.

In Rajshahi, students of Rajshahi University yesterday brought out a massive procession on campus, breaking the locks of the hall gates around 3:00pm.

They took position at the Dhaka-Rajshahi highway and blocked vehicular movement.

Around 5:00pm, a section of students stormed various dorms, including SM Hall, Ziaur Rahman Hall, and Bangabandhu Hall, and searched for BCL men in the rooms.

Rooms of RU BCL President Mostafizur Rahman Galib and General Secretary Asadullah-Hil-Galib were vandalised.

Earlier, around 2:30pm, BCL members chased away students and forced them into the halls. They also locked the hall gates. However, around 3:00pm, students broke the locks and brought out protests, carrying bamboo and sticks in hand.

In Barishal, Government BM College, nine protesters were injured as BCL members attacked students.

In response, protestors blocked Barishal-Kuakata highway and attacked a police box.

At least seven police personnel were reportedly injured at the time.

The Daily Star's photojournalist, Titu Das, was injured by a tear gas shell fired by police in Barishal.

The unrest spread to other districts as well.

In Sirajganj, clashes between students and police left at least 20 injured. Two were left with bullet wounds at the time.

In Faridpur, six students were injured as BCL members attacked protesters.

Meanwhile, students of Pabna University of Science and Technology brought out protest rallies and blocked the Dhaka-Pabna highway.

In Tangail, at least three students were injured after a procession of quota protesters came under attack by BCL men in the town's Shaheed Minar area at around 11:00am.

Later, students of Mawlana Bhashani Science and Technology University and different colleges blocked the Dhaka-Tangail highway for around an hour from 1:15pm.

In Mymensingh, Bangladesh Agricultural University students staged a demonstration at Mukta Mancha around 3:00pm. Students of Mymensingh Medical College and Community Based Medical College also organised protest rallies and blocked Dhaka-Mymensingh highway.

Protesters blocked the Dhaka-Sylhet highway at Bhelanagar area under Narsingdi Sadar upazila for hours.

Chase and counter-chase took place between them and BCL activists in the area for around two BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday called upon the country's people and all political parties to stand beside general students who are demonstrating across the country against the reinstatement of the quota system in government jobs.

Speaking at a discussion, he also described the Bangladesh Chhatra League's attacks on anti-quota protesters as the most heinous incident in the country's political history.

"Lying on hospital beds, bloodied students are calling upon us to protect them, stand by them and stay with their movement. This is the appeal of Bangladesh... I think the entire nation should respond to this call. All political parties should come forward and stand by them," Fakhrul said.

BNP and Jamaat instigating quota protests: Quader

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday alleged that BNP acting chairperson Tarique Rahman took over the leadership of the ongoing quota reform movement and his party is openly supporting the movement.

They are conspiring to turn a non-political movement into a political one and unleashing an evil force behind it, said Quader during a press briefing at the AL president's Dhanmondi office.

He said BNP-Jamaat is instigating the ongoing quota movement, but they will never be successful as people's support is not with them.

He once again said the quota reform issue is "sub judice", and thus there is no scope to take any decision in this matter through force or any other means outside the court.

Responding to a question, Quader said allowing quota

Commuters suffer amid blockades, clashes

STAR REPORT

Major thoroughfares in Dhaka and other parts of the country ground to a halt yesterday as protesters demanding quota reforms blocked roads and clashed with BCL members in numerous areas.

The capital's key intersections and entry points were paralysed for hours, stranding commuters on highways and disrupting both public and private transportation services.

Road blockades were reported at Mirpur-10, Badda, Notun Bazar, Jatrabari, Gabtoli, Uttara, Motijheel, Shantinagar, and Progoti Sarani, while clashes occurred at Science Lab, Mohakhali, and Chankharpool.

"As a private job holder commuting between Mirpur 12 and Bailey Road, I couldn't find any transportation to return home today [yesterday]," said Akhter Sultana, waiting at Shahbagh around 5:00 pm.

Mohammad Kibria, from Kerinaganj, faced similar challenges. "There's chaos everywhere. Very few buses are operating, and rickshaw fares are exorbitant. I might have to walk home to Sadarghat," he said.

Bishwajit Das, who came from Chattogram for a bank recruitment exam, found himself stranded at Sayedabad due to road blockades at Jatrabari.

Kamrul Islam, a journalist, experienced delays on the Kalni Express from Dhaka to Sylhet.

"The train was supposed to depart at 2:00pm but left at 8:00pm due to blockades in Dhaka, Gazipur, and Narsingdi," he said.

Anusua Roy, a student at Kumudini Women's Medical College, faced a harrowing journey from Mohakhali to Farmgate after getting caught in between the violence.

Progga Paromita, recovering from a leg fracture, encountered difficulties travelling from Dhanmondi to Green Road by rickshaw.

"I had to disembark near Science Lab due to the chaos and was later picked up by family," she said.

Protesters drive out female BCL leaders

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Agitating students of Begum Ruqayyah Hall at Dhaka University yesterday night allegedly beat up female leaders of Chhatra League and drove them out of the hall. The incident took place around 11:00pm.

On the condition of anonymity, a student of Ruqayyah Hall told The Daily Star that 11 BCL leaders were chased, beaten, and driven out of the hall.

They ran and took refuge in the provost's bungalow.

Around midnight, an ambulance ferried them from the premises.Dhaka University Professor Dr M Maksudur Rahman said, "Eleven students were evacuated from Ruqqayah Hall by ambulance."

However, Dhaka Medical College Hospital sources said none of the students were brought to the DMCH.

Ruqayyah Hall Provost Nilufar Parvin said, "I won't comment at the moment." In a video sent by a student from Ruqayyah Hall, it was seen that the general students drove hall BCL President Pritha and Secretary Atika out of the halls.

Petition seeks HC order to take action against Aziz

STAR REPORT

A writ petition has been filed with the High Court seeking its directive on the Anti- Corruption Commission (ACC) to take steps regarding reported corruption allegations against former army chief General (retd) Aziz Ahmed.

A journalist named Md Sohail Rana, son of Yousuf Ali from Kaprangapara village under Panchagar Sadar Police Station in Panchagar, submitted the petition to the HC on Monday through Supreme Court lawyer AM Jamiul Hoque Faisal.

In the petition, he prayed to the HC to pass an order on the ACC to submit a report before this court regarding the steps taken against General (retd) Aziz Ahmed.

Petitioner Sohail Rana, who introduced himself as "currently employed as message editor in a daily newspaper" in the petition, cited reports published about Aziz Ahmed in the daily Jugantor on May 31, the daily Kalerkantha on May 31, and in the daily Manabzamin on June 5 this year.

Lawyer Jamil Hoque Faisal told The Daily Star yesterday that the High Court may hold hearing on the petition next week.

Growers in Faridpur happy with model storages

SUZIT DAS, Faridpur

Onion growers in Faridpur are optimistic about the newly constructed model storages for onion and garlic, which promise to reduce spoilage and enhance profitability.

According to the Department of Agricultural Marketing, onions, being perishable, are challenging to preserve without proper storage.

Approximately 30 percent of the 3.5 million tonnes of onions produced annually in Bangladesh are wasted due to inadequate storage, leading to a shortfall of 6,00,000 to 7,00,000 tonnes.

This forces farmers to sell their produce quickly and at low prices, said Shahadat Hossain, a senior agricultural marketing officer in Faridpur.

To address this, DAM is building 65 model storages across villages in Saltha (30 storages) and Nagarkanda upazilas (35 storages). Of them, 62 have already been completed.

Each storages are shared by groups of five farmers.

Faridpur ranks second in onion production in Bangladesh, with cultivation expanding from 35,305 hectares to 40,433 hectares between 2018-19 and 2022-23.

Output increased from 4,45,982 tonnes to 5,52,736 tonnes during this period.

A recent visit to villages in Saltha and Nagarkanda revealed that the storages, costing Tk 4.5 lakh each, are constructed from tin-bamboo, iron, and concrete. Each storage, occupying one decimal of land, can store 300 maunds of onion for 6-9 months.

The structures are 25 feet long and 15 feet wide, with a concrete base, 15 concrete pillars, and three lofts.

Six fans ensure air circulation, while a tarpaulin protects them from rain.

Md Amjad Matubbar, 52, from Jonakhali village, received his storage in 2022-23.

"Last year I stored 140 maunds of onion, all of which remained good. This year, two of my neighbours stored 110 maunds," he said.

Mustafizur Rahman from Aduakandi village shared similar success.

"I produce 400-600 maunds of onion yearly and used to store them in tin-shed houses, where they would rot within a month due to heat. The new storage keeps the interior cool, preserving the onions for several months," he added.

Daughter gets death threat

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Muntarin Ferdous Dorin, daughter of the slain Jhenaidah-4 MP Anwarul Azim Anar, received a death threat yesterday from unknown miscreants.

The threat was issued via the social media platform IMO to her cousin, Md Ashraful, the mayor of Kaliganj Municipality.

Confirming the development, Dorin said she plans to file a general diary at the Kaliganj Police Station regarding the threat.

Recently, Dorin told reporters that her father Anwarul Azim Anar was killed for political reasons.

Two top leaders of the Jhenaidah Awami League, General Secretary Saidul Karim Mintu and Welfare Affairs Secretary Kamal Ahmed Babu, are currently in jail in connection with Anar's murder.

Babu initially gave a confession statement but has recently applied to recant it, alleging coercion.

Two electrocuted in Narsingdi

UNB, Narsingdi

Two workers were electrocuted and five more injured while installing new poles for Palli Bidyut in Raipura upazila of Narsingdi yesterday.

The deceased were identified as Abdus Salam, 29, from Dangapara of Dinajpur; and Jamal Hossain, 50, from Mithapukur of Rangpur.

It was learned that a group of seven electricians working for Sujan Mia was replacing wooden poles with cement ones in Ashrabpur area.

After installing the new poles, the power line was reconnected. However, the workers were electrocuted through a line at the base of the poles, resulting in two deaths and five injuries.

Rezaul Karim, deputy general manager of Raipura Palli Bidyut, said the incident occurred due to negligence of the contractor. OC Safayet Hossain Palash of Raipura Police Station, said the bodies were sent to Narsingdi Sadar Hospital morgue.

UK announces £30,000 for flood victims

The BNP leader also remarked that the ruling party's current atrocities are no less than those of the Pakistani Army and said the government has unleashed its armed cadres to suppress a justified movement of the common students.

Meanwhile, Jatiyatabadi Chhatra Dal, a pro-BNP student organisation, also announced to stand by the students yesterday.

Speaking at a press conference at the BNP's Nayapaltan central office, JCD president Rakibul Islam Rakib strongly denounced the reported attacks on anti-quota protesters by the Chhatra League on different university campuses.

He said July 15 will remain as a black day in Bangladesh's history.

Jatir Janak Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman Hall unit BCL leader Hasibul Hasan Hasib wrote, "I am cutting off my relations with the Chhatra League. Many of my younger brothers and friends were beaten up. I feel appalled as I have worked as an activist of the Chhatra League. Goodbye, Chhatra League!"

Besides, several leaders of Jagannath University (JnU) unit of BCL, Comilla University unit and other units have made similar announcements.

Borhan Uddin, joint secretary, Law Faculty of Comilla University unit BCL, wrote on Facebook that student politics was his passion but from today (yesterday) he will no longer keep any ties with BCL.

hours, starting at 2:00pm.

The Daily Star's Narsingdi correspondent, Jahidul Islam, was injured as a group of BCL men attacked him.

In Cox's Bazar, a few protesters were injured after they got into a clash with BCL activists and police around 11:00am.

They engaged in the clash after BCL activists started beating protesters with sticks. Two motorcycles were vandalised during the clash. In the evening, students blocked Cox's Bazar-Chattogram highway.

In Jhenaidah town, at least five students were injured after BCL men attacked protesters at Wazir Ali School and College ground around 11:30am.

In Gazipur, protesters blocked Dhaka-Mymensingh and Joydevpur-Tangail highways. Students of Dhaka University of Engineering and Technology blocked the Dhaka-Mymensingh highway for around three hours from 3:00pm.

14KM BAJUA-PODDERGANJ ROAD

Unpaved for 50 years

DIPANKAR ROY, Khulna

The 14-kilometre-long Bajua-Podderganj road of Bangladesh Water Development Board in Khulna's Dacope upazila has been connecting around 8,000 people across several villages in the upazila for around half a century.

Surprisingly, throughout this long time, the road has remained unpaved, with no step to improve it from its earthen condition.

As such, every monsoon, the entire 14-km stretch of the road turns into a muddy ordeal, leaving the people with a harrowing time using the road for commute.

This monsoon, the scenario is no different than it has been in the past 50 years.

The local residents could hardly find answer to the question why the road has not received any attention from public representatives or government agencies over this time.

"There is no alternative to this earthen road for going to my college. When it rains, the road becomes covered by deep mud. No vehicles can ply the road in that condition, and we have to walk through the mud for our commute. It needs urgent renovation," said Imran Sheikh, a student of Bajua Surendranath College and a local resident.

Sakhina Begum of Bhangapara village said elderly people seldom use the road in the monsoon as it becomes very risky.

"To make the matter worse, the social forestry department planted thousands of trees with sharp thorns along this road. As a result, if one is careless while walking on this muddy road, he might slip and hit a tree, eventually getting injured," Saidul Sheikh of Pashorder Chunkuri village.

"Taking patients to hospital using the road becomes an arduous task," he added.

Mizanur Mirza, local union parishad member of Ward-4, said around 8,000 residents of at least eight villages have been suffering for the road over the years.

"Students of three primary schools, two high schools and two colleges use this road. Often, the younger ones have to skip school as they cannot use the road after it rains. Also, after evening, hardly anyone uses the road to avoid mishaps in darkness," he said.

"Locals complain to me about the road almost every day. However, our budget from the union parishad is too small to work on the road. Also, Local Government Engineering Department has been very reluctant about doing development work in this upazila. Many other roads in my union are also lying unpaved," said Manosh Roy, chairman of Bajua union parishad.

"I heard that a Tk 798 crore project is awaiting approval of the Executive Committee of National Economic Council, which might solve the problem if approved," he added.

Contacted, M Zahangir Alom, upazila engineer of LGED in Dacope upazila, said they sent a proposal to the higher authorities for renovating 3-km portion of the road with bricks.

"We will start the work after receiving DO letter from the local lawmaker," he added.

ACC sues Sadeeq Agro owner, livestock dept officials

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Corruption Commission yesterday filed a case against seven people, including Sadeeq Agro owner Imran Hossain and livestock department officials, on charges of irregularities and corruption.

ACC Assistant Director Abul Kalam Azad filed the case with the ACC's Dhaka-1 integrated office, said ACC Public Relations Officer Akhtarul Islam.

Apart from Imran, the six other accused are -- Livestock Department's Director (Production) ABM Khaleduzzaman; its Deputy Director ABM Salah Uddin; Central Cattle Breeding and Dairy Farm Director Md Monirul Islam; its Buyer Officer Saiful Islam; Upazila Livestock Officer (Leave Reserve) Firoz Ahmed Khan; and Sadeeq Agro's Touhidul Alam Zenith.

"After a preliminary investigation into Sadeeq Agro's scandal involving American Brahma breed cattle, the ACC has filed the case," said Abul Kalam Azad while talking to reporters.

Confiscate more properties of Matiur, family: court

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday ordered the authorities concerned to confiscate more moveable and immovable properties of Matiur Rahman, former National Board of Revenue official, and his family members in connection with corruption allegations against them.

The other family members are Matiur's wife Laila Kaniz Lucky, also upazila parishad chairman of Narsingdi's Raipura, their son Ahmed Taufiqur Rahman, and daughter Farzana Rahman Ipshita, and Matiur's second wife Shammi Akhter Shewly and one of their close relatives MA Kaiyum.

Judge Mohammad Ash-Shams Joglul Hossain of the Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court of Dhaka passed the order after Anti-Corruption Commission Deputy Director Md Anowar Hossain, also the enquiry officer applied to the court in this regard.

In the application, the ACC official said Matiur and his family members were attempting to transfer the properties and to launder the money. So, an order was needed to prevent them from making such attempts, said the IO.

The immoveable properties are a total of 137.28 decimals in Gazipur's Tongi and a flat (8,070 square feet total) located in Dhaka's Basundhara residential area.

They also opened 19 beneficiary owner's (BO) accounts of different brokerage houses.

ACC public prosecutor Mahmud Hossain Jahangir moved the application on behalf of the watchdog.

Earlier on July 11, the same court ordered confiscation of all moveable and immovable properties of Matiur and his family members.

The immoveable properties are a total of 2,212.35 decimals in Dhaka's Savar, Mymensingh's Valuka, Gazipur, Natore's Singra and Narsingdi's Shibpur, and four flats (7,248 square feet total) located in Dhaka's Mirpur.

The moveable properties are Tk 13,44,36,471 deposited at 116 bank accounts in the country.

However, the court also ordered to freeze of all 116 bank accounts.

They also opened 23 beneficiary owner's (BO) accounts of different brokerage houses.

On June 24, the same court issued a travel ban on Matiur Rahman, Laila and Arnob in connection with corruption allegations against them.

Earlier, the ACC formed a three-member committee to enquire into the allegations brought against them over amassing a huge amount of wealth through illegal means.

TK 9.30 LAKH BRIBERY CASE

Bail of 2 HC Division staffers cancelled

COURT CORRESPONDENT

Two days after granting the bail, a Dhaka court yesterday cancelled bail of two High Court Division employees, who were arrested for their alleged involvement with taking Tk 9.30 lakh as bribe in a judge's name.

The employees are Md Abdur Rashid, a peon of the HC Division bench, and Md Hafizur Rahman, a peon of the Supreme Court registrar general office.

Dhaka Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate Md Sultan Sohag Uddin issued the order after Rajib Sheikh, a sub-inspector of Shahbagh Police Station and also the investigation officer of the case, on July 14 submitted an application for cancelling their bail in the case.

In the application, SI Rajib said the two will need to be taken into custody for quizzing about the issue. So their bail should be cancelled, said the IO.

On July 12, Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Tarikul Islam granted them bail after they were produced before the court with a forwarding report.

In the forwarding report, the IO said both were directly involved in taking bribes in the name of a judge for acquitting death-row convicts in a murder case, which are serious offences. So they need to be confined to jail until the investigation is completed.

But the magistrate turned down the prosecution pleas and granted them bail, considering the depth of the offences brought against them in the case.

The bail order had created a mixed reaction among people, litigants, and lawyers.

According to the case statement, it was alleged that the two allegedly took Tk 9.30 lakh in bribes from the people of death-row convicts in a murder case, in front of the court No-21 of the Supreme Court's main building around 5:00pm on July 10.

Celebrities rally behind quota reform amid violent clashes

In the wake of recent violent clashes between student protesters and Bangladesh Chhatra League (BCL) activists at Dhaka University, a wave of support from celebrities has emerged for the quota reform movement. The incident, which occurred on July 15, resulted in approximately 300 injuries, including female students and BCL members.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT DESK

As of July 16 (7:30pm), six people have been reported to be killed nationwide due to the ongoing clashes.

The unrest spread to other public universities across Bangladesh, including Jagannath University, Jahangirnagar University, Rajshahi University, Chittagong University, and Eden Mohila College.

As tensions escalated, prominent figures from the entertainment industry took to social media to express their views on the contentious issue. Their statements reflect a growing concern over the government's response to the students' demands and the use of force against non-violent protesters.

Veteran actor and freedom fighter Sohel Rana advocated for the quota's removal. He shared his opinion on his Facebook account, stating, "Freedom fighters fought at the call of Bangabandhu for independence... We achieved that immediately after the War. We freedom fighters have nothing more to ask for." While acknowledging the system's past merit, Rana questioned its current relevance: "53 years have passed since the country's independence. At this point, neither freedom fighters nor their children are of age to seek government jobs. So, I don't see the need to keep the quota system active even now." He suggested the system might now serve "hidden self-interests," as it no longer logically benefits freedom fighters or their children.

Actor Rawnak Hasan, general secretary of Actors Equity Bangladesh, advocated for a nuanced approach to quota reform, "Quota reform is certainly possible. The quota for freedom fighters and their children will naturally become ineffective in a few years. A minimum honorary quota from the state for our valiant freedom fighters is necessary." However, Hasan also hinted at possible ulterior motives, noting, "The way this movement of thousands of students has been directed clearly indicates who the masterminds are."

Director Ashfaque Nipun showed solidarity with the students by sharing a powerful image of two female students being assaulted during the protests, simply stating, "Stand by the students."

Filmmaker Mishuk Moni expressed his sorrow over the violent scenes unfolding in the city. He criticised the government's tendency to label dissenters as traitors, saying, "In this country, speaking against the government labels you a traitor. Criticising any government official's corruption also makes you a traitor. Participating in a movement for rightful demands makes you a traitor." Moni questioned the use of force, asking, "Why did BCL activists, wearing helmets and armed with sticks, injure students in the quota reform movement? The government could have sent representatives to negotiate with the students."

Ayman Sadiq, content creator and founder of 10 Minute School, strongly condemned the violence against protesters, expressing his dismay: "Dhaka University is covered in blood. Why is it that blood has been spilled on our campus? I strongly protest against such acts."

Musician Ziaur Rahman of the Shironamhin band argued that the quota system may have outlived its original purpose. He explained, "The quota system now only serves as a path for severe misuse. As a result, talented and qualified youth are losing their opportunities, forcing them to navigate their daily lives with frustration." He called for change, stating, "Let the youth be freed from the quota system. Let merit and qualifications be recognised."

Author and publisher Mohammad Nazimuddin offered a scathing critique of the situation, dismissing claims that the protesters were misled by opposition parties. He stated, "They are not naive or misled by BNP-Jamaat as they say. The real culprits are the vote-rigging thieves and sycophants!" Nazimuddin warned of the consequences of suppressing dissent, saying, "Now, the exploited people are their nemesis."

Director Khijir Hayat questioned the judiciary's role, asking, "Can't the Appellate Division of the Honourable Court expedite their decision considering the current situation of the country, instead of delaying it for a month?"

Dhallywood actor Siam Ahmed expressed his dismay at the transformation of his alma mater into a battleground, questioning, "Why has my campus become a war front? Why are students being attacked?"

Noted actor Nasir Uddin Khan shared images of the brutal attacks on protesters, showcasing the extent of injuries inflicted during clashes with BCL leaders. His question cuts to the heart of the issue: "If the country is moving towards progress, then why is it that blood is shedding all over the place?"

Cartoonist Morshed Mishu took a creative approach to express solidarity with the protesters. He illustrated a student as a Hulk-like figure draped in the colours of the Bangladeshi flag, bravely confronting agitators and trampling the quota system. Mishu's caption reads, "No matter how lightly you take it, throw as many taunts as you like. We will take bullets with our chests out, we will break the system of 'quota'."

Actor Shohel Mondol criticised the government's tactics, describing them as "catching fish in muddy waters" and urged the public to cultivate social awareness to avoid being deceived by political machinations.

Niloy Alamgir made a heartfelt appeal to the prime minister, saying, "Honourable PM, today's students are tomorrow's future leaders. They can't all be wrong in their demands. As a freedom fighter's son, I urge you to reform the quota system."

Popular YouTuber and actor Salman Mohammad Muqtadir took a proactive stance, offering accommodation and assistance to students affected by the violence. He stated, "If there are any students who have been attacked or cannot enter their halls, I will try to manage accommodation for you. If you need a place to stay or require medical assistance, I am here for you."

Khairul Basar shared an emotional post with the photo of an injured female student, expressing his anguish: "She is my sister. My heart aches to see this! You are staining this divine campus, beloved Dhaka University, with blood. Do you ever reflect on your actions?"

Actress Pori Moni added her voice to the chorus of dissent by sharing a disturbing image of a female Dhaka University student being brutally beaten during the quota reform clash. The caption reads, "If you remain silent about violence against women, you are a hypocrite."

As the quota reform movement continues to gain traction, these celebrity voices add weight to the students' cause, highlighting the need for peaceful dialogue and reform. Their diverse perspectives reflect the complexity of the issue and the widespread concern over the use of violence against protesters.

AL, BCL men to take position at unit offices

leaders and workers will also take position at the AL headquarters on Bangabandhu Avenue as "striking forces" and will rush whenever and wherever needed.

"We don't want any confrontation. But we will also not allow anyone to block roads and carry out vandalism," said Dhaka South unit AL president Abu Ahmed Mannafi, adding that all BCL units under Dhaka City were asked to remain vigilant.

The city AL activists will lend law enforcers a hand to keep the situation under control, he added.

AL also has taken initiatives to ensure presence of different professional bodies on the streets to "counter insulting remarks against freedom fighters and uphold the spirit of Liberation War," sources said.

Meanwhile, police were asked not to use force unless necessary.

Police have already increased vigilance and instructed its members to ensure security of all key infrastructures, public transport, government establishments and police establishments, police sources said.

They have been asked to take footage and photographs of agitations to identify any infiltrators. Police will later file cases against these "troublemakers and instigators".

Law enforcers will conduct raids and arrest the "troublemakers" once the situation returned to normal, according to police sources.

"We are working strategically to keep law and order under control. Violence has been taking place in some places, but police are not using force and not taking a frontline position, as it may instigate the protesters," Dhaka Metropolitan Commissioner Habibur Rahman told The Daily Star yesterday.

"A police sergeant and a constable got hurt, and the police outpost at Science Lab was vandalised but still we acted patiently and did not use any force," he said.

The protesters blocked 29 points in Dhaka, he said, adding, "Everywhere, we brought the situation under control by requesting the protesters and sometimes bringing local influential people and teachers to convince the students."

Govt moves SC to scrap HC verdict

this policy decision, Attorney General AM Amin Uddin told reporters at his office.

Replying to a question on whether his office will move the petition before the Appellate Division's chamber judge soon, the attorney general said the apex court is scheduled to hold a hearing on the petition on August 7.

In response to another question, AG Amin Uddin said he thinks that those who are instigating the students for the quota protests are diverting them in the wrong way for political agendas.

Even though the apex court has asked the students to place their arguments before the court, they are continuing their demonstrations, he said, adding that, "Nobody can change the apex court verdict."

Following a writ petition, the HC on June 5 this year declared illegal the circular, issued by the public administration ministry on October 4, 2018, which cancelled the quota system in government jobs.

The circular said in the case of direct recruitment to the posts of 9th grade (formerly class-1) and 10th to 13th grades (formerly class-2), the appointments should be made based on merit.

The HC in the full text of the judgement, which was released on July 13, has also directed the government to restore and maintain the quotas for "districts, women, physically challenged people, tribes, minor races, ethnic groups and others, if any," and to publish a notification in this regard as soon as possible, preferably within three months from the date of receipt of this order.

The HC also said the government can change, reduce or increase the ratio or percentage of the quotas in public jobs, if necessary, and can fill the vacant posts from the general merit list if any quota in government recruitment is not fulfilled.

Protesting the HC judgement on June 5, students staged demonstrations at different educational institutions, including Dhaka University. They took to the streets on July 1. Since then, the protesters have been continuing demonstrations, demanding reforms to the quota system through the formulation of a law.

On July 10, the SC delivered the status quo order following two separate petitions filed by the government and two Dhaka University students seeking a stay on the HC judgement.

"The impugned judgement of the High Court shall remain inoperative till that period," the Appellate Division said in the full text of its order.

Govt cancels Tk 5cr fund

public Facebook page with nearly 7 million followers on July 13.

The post was shared 6,400 times and generated about 2.5 lakh likes and 38,000 comments at the time of filing the report.

Sadiq, a graduate of the University of Dhaka's Institute of Business Administration, posted on the issue again on Monday, the day that Chhatra League activists swooped on quota protesters on the Dhaka University campus, leaving at least 300 people injured.

"Dhaka University is bloodied. Why is there blood on my campus? I protest," he posted.

Sadiq's post was followed by the official Facebook page of 10 Minute School changing its profile picture to a black screen, often used to express grief or solidarity with a cause or event.

About 16 hours after Sadiq's post, Startup Bangladesh on its official Facebook page announced cancelling its proposed investment into 10MS.

Zunaid Ahmed Palak, the state minister of ICT Division, the parent of Startup Bangladesh, made an identical post minutes later.

Palak and 10MS did not respond to The Daily Star's request for comment.

But in a dialogue organised by the Bangladesh Secretariat Reporters Forum at the secretariat yesterday, Palak said that disclosing the reasons for funding cancellation would breach the non-disclosure agreement signed by Startup Bangladesh with 10MS.

Asked if Sadiq's Facebook posts were the reason behind Startup Bangladesh's pulling out from the deal, Palak said: "Whoever the person or whichever the organisation, they must uphold the sovereignty of Bangladesh and the spirit of the Liberation War. Someone can be a successful entrepreneur, journalist, lawyer and have different political ideologies, but there should be no debate on the Liberation War, Bangladesh, and the Father of the Nation."

"In that case, if anyone takes a stand or expresses opinions against the spirit of the Liberation War, there is a saying that even though the wretch is a scholar, he is abandoned," Palak added.

Startup Bangladesh was supposed to disburse the funds to 10MS over the next few days, according to people informed with the proceedings.

Founded in 2015 by Sadiq and Abdullah Abyad Raied, 10MS provides content material for school curriculum and skills development. It also offers a video library, preparation tips, model tests, and pre-scheduled live classes for admission preparation, competitive examinations, and university courses.

Until yesterday, 10MS raised $7.5 million, including Tk 5 crore from Startup Bangladesh.

the religion of peace and harmony, is a shining example in the history of humanity.

The day is a public holiday.

On the eve of Ashura, President Mohammed Shahabuddin and Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday issued separate messages, paying deep respect to Hazrat Imam Hossain (RA) and other martyrs of Karbala.

The president hoped that the great teachings of Ashura would reflect in the lives of all.

The PM, in her message, termed Ashura a very mournful, significant, and glorious day.

Bangladesh Betar, Bangladesh Television, and private TV channels will air special programmes while newspapers and online news portals publish supplements highlighting the significance of the day.

On the occasion, special prayers and discussions highlighting the significance of Ashura will be held at mosques and other places.

Israeli jails, had appeared to be making some progress, negotiators had said.

US State Department spokesperson Matthew Miller said on Monday that two senior advisers to Netanyahu said Israel is still committed to reaching a ceasefire.

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken told the Israeli officials that casualties among Palestinian civilians "still remain unacceptably high".

A Palestinian official close to the talks told Reuters yesterday that Hamas was keen not to be seen as halting the talks despite the stepped-up Israeli attacks.

"Hamas wants the offensive to end, not at any price. It says it has shown the flexibility needed and is pushing the mediators to get Israel to reciprocate," the official, who asked not to be named said.

Alin Khan Farhan, a student of Rajshahi University, said mobile internet connection was too slow to use around the campus area.

Multiple students from Jahangirnagar University, including Amit from the philosophy department, said mobile internet became slow in the evening, making it impossible to use social media or browse the web, adding that the slow speeds lasted till late last night.

However, even though the internet was slow, they said they were still able to make regular phone calls.

Nine killed in Oman Shia mosque gun attack

REUTERS, Dubai

Nine people were killed, including three attackers, in an assault on a Shia Muslim mosque in Oman late on Monday, authorities said, in a rare breach of security in one of the most stable countries in the Middle East.

Four Pakistani nationals and a policeman were among those killed in the gun attack, according to Pakistani and Omani officials. Authorities said 28 people of various nationalities were wounded, including security personnel.

Pakistan's foreign ministry said the attack took place in the Ali bin Abi Talib mosque. A local source said it was also known as Imam Ali mosque.

Describing the incident in the Wadi al-Kabir district of Oman's capital Muscat as a "terrorist" attack, the Pakistani ministry said 30 injured people were in hospital.

Musk pledges $45m a month to electing Trump

AFP, Washington

Tech billionaire Elon Musk said he plans to commit roughly $45 million each month to a new fund backing Donald Trump for US president, the Wall Street Journal reported Monday.

Musk's donations will go to a political group dubbed America PAC, which will focus on promoting voter registration, early voting and mail-in ballots among residents in swing states ahead of the November general election, the Journal reported, citing people familiar with the matter.

Musk is one of several major backers of the new fund, with others reportedly including Palantir co-founder Joe Lonsdale, former US ambassador to Canada Kelly Craft and cryptocurrency investors Tyler and Cameron Winklevoss.

The Tesla founder formally endorsed Trump's candidacy for US president on Saturday after the former president survived a shooting at a political rally in Butler, Pennsylvania.

"I fully endorse President Trump and hope for his rapid recovery," Musk wrote on the social media platform X, which he acquired in 2022.

Musk, the wealthiest man in the world with an estimated net worth of $250 billion, has grown increasingly friendly with Trump over the course of the 2024 US election.

In March, the two met in person during a donor breakfast hosted at the Florida residence of billionaire Nelson Peltz.

J&K FIGHTING

Five Indian security personnel killed

AFP, Srinagar

Five security personnel were killed in a firefight with gunmen in Indian-administered Jammu and Kashmir, the army and police said yesterday, with security sources saying militants had made a "tactical shift" in attacks.

A security official, who asked not to be named, said militants had shifted operations from the mainly Muslim Kashmir valley to the Hindu-dominated southern Jammu area, where "counterinsurgency measures are not as strong".

Kashmir's top political official Manoj Sinha said forces would "avenge" their deaths. The Indian army's 16 Corps said security forces had launched an operation in the Doda forest on Monday evening, some 135 kilometres southeast of the territory's capital Srinagar, in the Jammu area.

A "heavy firefight ensued," the army said, saying four men were killed, including a captain.

Indian army chief Upendra Dwivedi sent his "deepest condolences" to the families of the men.

A police officer, speaking on condition of anonymity, told AFP a police officer also died of his wounds, adding two other soldiers had been hospitalised.

Access to Gaza getting increasingly difficult

Warn 13 leading NGOs, denounce Israel's ongoing attacks on aid operations

AFP, Paris

Access to Gaza has become increasingly difficult for humanitarian groups, 13 leading NGOs warned on Monday, accusing Israel's military of blocking much-needed aid from reaching the Palestinian territory.

Denouncing "Israel's systematic obstruction of aid and its ongoing attacks on aid operations", the humanitarian organisations said that Israel had facilitated only 53 -- less than half -- of the 115 relief missions they had planned.

The aid groups slammed what it called Israel's "siege tactics" in its struggle against Hamas.

The so-called "humanitarian zone" had become "an active combat zone", say aid groups

It said the so-called "humanitarian zone" where most of the strip's population of 2.4 million people now reside had become "an active combat zone" and "extremely unsafe".

The charities also criticised the bombing of UN schools used as shelters by displaced Palestinians. At least six schools have been hit over the past nine days.

"These recent events are exacerbating the humanitarian catastrophe at a time when NGOs continue to come up against the obstacles imposed by the continuation of Israeli military operations on the ground," a press release summarising the 13 NGOs' views warned.

Oxfam, Doctors Without Borders, Save the Children and the Norwegian Refugee Council were among the charities to contribute to the document.

Since Israel began its ground offensive in Rafah in May, humanitarian workers have faced major difficulties in delivering aid to the Gaza Strip's south.

Israel's capture at the beginning of May of the Rafah crossing, which has since been destroyed, brought aid deliveries to a "complete halt", the NGOs added.

Tonnes of "absolutely necessary aid" were left blocked at the crossing points in the south "due to the deterioration in security conditions", the statement said.

More than 1,500 trucks of humanitarian aid containing medicines, first-aid kits and basic necessities were stuck in the Egyptian city of Al-Arish as a result.

Meanwhile, in the north of the Gaza Strip -- which has been isolated from the south by the Israeli army -- aid delivery is "very limited". Oxfam said it took it five weeks to transport just 1,600 food parcels from Jordan to Gaza -- a journey it said "should take no more than six hours".

At Kerem Shalom, designated since May as a priority crossing point for humanitarian aid, the situation had "deteriorated significantly since Israel's offensive in May", the aid groups said.

More than 10m displaced by Sudan war

Says IOM

REUTERS, Cairo

More than 10 million Sudanese, or 20 percent of the population, have been driven from their homes since the war there began, the International Organization for Migration (IOM) said yesterday, as the world's largest displacement crisis continues to worsen.

The number is the latest dire figure out of the east African country, devastated by a conflict that began in April 2023. The war has left half the population of about 50 million facing a hunger crisis and in need of humanitarian aid, the most of any country.

More than 2.2 million people have fled to other countries since the war began, while almost 7.8 million sought refuge inside the country, the IOM said. An additional 2.8 million people were already displaced by previous conflicts in the country.

Fighting between the army and paramilitary Rapid Support Forces that broke out in the capital Khartoum last year quickly expanded across Darfur, with RSF taking control of most centres. UN experts say hunger has replaced violence as the largest driver of migration from Darfur, where they face difficulty delivering aid.

Metsola wins 2nd term as EU Parliament chief

Warns against polarisation

REUTERS, Strasbourg

Roberta Metsola, a Maltese lawmaker from the centre-right European People's Party, easily won a second term yesterday as president of the European Parliament and she appealed for a more inclusive politics to help combat polarisation.

Metsola, who in 2022 became the first woman in 20 years to head the European Union assembly, has emerged as a strong supporter of Ukraine in its war with Russia and its bid to join the EU. President Volodymyr Zelensky sent his congratulations.

Some 562 EU lawmakers out of the 623 who took part in yesterday's vote backed her reappointment to the mainly ceremonial role for a further two and a half years, the largest margin of victory ever for a president of the European Parliament.

"Polarisation in our societies has led to more confrontational politics, even political violence," Metsola, 45, told the assembly.

"We need to move beyond this zero-sum thinking that has excluded people, that turns people away," she said.

Metsola urged the European Parliament to remain a strong supporter of Ukraine, the rule of law, and women's rights, while preparing to add new countries to the EU.

In his message of congratulations, Zelensky wrote on X: "I greatly appreciate President Metsola's personal involvement in supporting Ukraine, as well as her unwavering commitment to protecting people and upholding our European way of life."

5 rights bodies slam attacks on quota protesters

Amnesty International South Asia, in a statement posted on its verified Facebook page, called on the government to immediately guarantee the safety of all peaceful protesters and proper medical treatment of the injured.

"Bangladesh must uphold its obligations under international law and its own constitution to fully respect the people's rights to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly, and protect peaceful protestors from further harm."

Transparency International Bangladesh, in its statement, expressed outrage over the attacks on the student protesters by the ruling party's student wing and external attackers, urging that these attackers be identified and held accountable.

In the statement, TIB Executive Director Iftekharuzzaman termed the attacks on students "disgusting and barbaric".

Reliable media sources have reported that even female students faced indiscriminate attacks and public harassment while a student in Rangpur has died during clashes, said the statement issued in the afternoon.

"We are appalled, outraged, and disappointed by the attacks. We demand the attackers be identified and brought to book, regardless of their political positions and identities."

He added that the government should not ignore the logical demands of the students by passing the burden onto the courts. "Rather, it should take steps for a logical, modern, peaceful, and constitutional solution."

The International Human Rights Commission's Bangladesh chapter, Manobadhikar Sangskriti Foundation, and Shushashoner Jonno Nagorik have also expressed concerns over the attacks.

They urged that effective steps be taken to solve the crisis and said the human rights situation in the country will deteriorate to the extreme, creating obstacles for common people, if the crisis continues.

The statements said the attacks on protesting students, especially the females, are gross violations of the constitution and human rights, adding that the state failed in protecting the students.

114 CITIZENS CONDEMN

At least 114 eminent citizens in a statement yesterday strongly condemned the attacks on quota protesters over the last two days.

They demanded justice for the students and exemplary punishment to those responsible for the attacks.

The statement said, "We've observed with deep concern that yesterday [Monday] and today [yesterday], the quota reform activists and students of different universities were indiscriminately attacked. Media reports state that Chhatra League leaders and activists of different units attacked the protesting students with pistols, rods, sticks and sharp weapons.

"Even female students were not spared ... We're outraged and saddened by this barbaric attack. We strongly condemn the painful news of the deaths of at least four people in the attacks on the protesters."

"Attacking the demonstrators, killing several and injuring hundreds of them are serious criminal offences under the country's customary law. The injured students were attacked again while they were at the emergency of Dhaka Medical College Hospital for treatment, which is equivalent to crimes against humanity," it added.

They also demanded that the ministers and Awami League leaders concerned be brought to book for ordering these attacks.

Condemning the failure of the police and university administrations to prevent the attacks, they extended their support to the logical demands of the quota reform movement.

Ali Imam Majumder, former cabinet secretary; Debapriya Bhattacharya, distinguished fellow at the Centre for Policy Dialogue; Dr Iftekharuzzaman, executive director of Transparency International Bangladesh; Badiul Alam Majumdar, secretary of Shushashoner Jonno Nagorik; Syeda Rizwana Hasan, chief executive of Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association; Prof Anu Muhammad of Jahangirnagar University; Prof Swapan Adnan; CR Abrar, executive director of Refugee and Migratory Movements Research Unit; Prof Asif Nazrul and Prof Shahnaz Huda of DU; Shahidul Alam, renowned photographer; and Maha Mirza, development researcher, were among the signatories.

World's rarest whale washes up on New Zealand beach

AFP, Christchurch

The body of a spade-toothed whale -- a species so rare it has never been seen alive -- appears to have washed up on a New Zealand beach, scientists said.

The remains of the obscure, five-metre long, beaked creature were found near a river mouth in southern Otago province on July 4, government researchers said.

It was identified by experts from New Zealand's Department of Conservation and the national museum, Te Papa, as a male spade-toothed whale. A DNA investigation has been launched to confirm its classification.

"Spade-toothed whales are one of the most poorly known large mammalian species of modern times," said the conservation department's coastal Otago operations manager, Gabe Davies.

POST-POLLS FRANCE

PM Attal to take caretaker role

AFP, Paris

President Emmanuel Macron was set to accept the resignation of the French government yesterday, but ask Prime Minister Gabriel Attal to head up a caretaker administration for now, cabinet sources told AFP.

French politics have been in gridlock since an inconclusive snap election earlier this month, with parties in the National Assembly scrambling to put together a governing coalition and no successor to Attal in sight.

Macron made the announcement yesterday at the first cabinet meeting since his allies got roundly beaten in the snap parliamentary election he called to "clarify" the political landscape.

Macron told the ministers that he would accept Attal's resignation "at the end of the day", but ask him to stay on "for some weeks", probably until after the Paris Olympics, which open on July 26, meeting participants said.

This gives political parties more time to build a governing coalition after the July 7 election runoff left the lower house without an overall majority.

A broad alliance called the New Popular Front (NFP) which includes Socialists, Communists, Greens and the hard-left France Unbowed (LFI) won the most seats, with 193 in the 577-strong lower chamber.

Macron's allies came second with 164 seats and the far-right National Rally (RN) third with 143. The divided NFP alliance has been scrambling to come up with a consensus candidate for prime minister.

But internal conflicts -- notably between the LFI and the more moderate Socialists -- have thwarted all efforts to find a personality able to survive a confidence vote in parliament.

Stop this violence before more deaths

We protest mindless attacks on students

We are horrified by the atrocious violence carried out by the members of Bangladesh Chhatra League (BCL) across campuses and on streets in Bangladesh over the past 48 hours in the name of teaching anti-quota dissenters a "lesson." Countless protesters have been injured in the attacks that show no signs of abating, and as of writing this editorial, at least six individuals have died during clashes. We urge the government to immediately stop this bloodbath before any more loss of lives and a complete breakdown of law and order.

On Tuesday, both protests and attacks escalated, spreading across the country. Along with public university students, students from some private universities and even schools and colleges too joined hands to protest BCL's attacks on the previous day. Science Lab in Dhaka turned into a warzone for most of the day, with chases and counter-chases between students and BCL leading to at least a hundred individuals getting injured. The situation in Rangpur and Chattogram were also very volatile, with clashes leading to at least one death in Rangpur and three in Chattogram. A number of students were also reportedly shot.

These attacks began on Monday when Dhaka University turned into a bloody battlefield for over five hours. According to media reports, BCL men, armed with sticks and rods, swooped upon students who had gathered to protest what they called a "disparaging comment" by the prime minister. Their brutality did not stop with injuring over 300 students, many of whom were women; they stormed into DMCH's emergency department in the evening and beat protesters again, causing unimaginable panic among critically-ill patients who had come for emergency treatment. At midnight and early morning on Tuesday, they continued their mayhem across other campuses. During these clashes, lethal weapons including machete and petrol bombs were used.

It is unimaginable that such violence could take place with impunity, without any attempt by law enforcement agencies to stop them from happening—not even when it took place in the biggest public hospital in the country. Are we to assume that our law enforcers are helpless in the face of BCL's wrath, or that BCL is now an armed extension of the state machinery? Even if we assume that the protesters were in the wrong and needed to be apprehended, what legal or constitutional mandate does a student wing have to carry out such attacks? While the home minister had previously warned of police action against quota protesters if they crossed the line, he seems to now see no excesses in BCL's actions, which are directly undermining the role of his ministry and that of law enforcers. In fact, he has gone so far as to dismiss the ongoing violence as mere "difference of opinion" between opposing groups.

By allowing and enabling such attacks, the government is essentially pushing the protesters to a point of no return, which can have disastrous consequences for the country and its citizens. It must act as a government should—sensitive to citizens' needs and demands. It has to take stern action against those carrying out attacks against members of the public and making a mockery of the democratic and constitutional processes that we fought the Liberation War for.

The government should realise that the ongoing protests are more than just about quotas—they signify a deep sense of dissatisfaction among the youth about the way the country currently operates. The way out is to hear the students' concerns and engage them in dialogue, not to allow violence inflicted upon them, which can only exacerbate their frustrations against the status quo.

Out of control healthcare costs

A holistic approach needed to reduce out-of-pocket expenses

A research finding has confirmed our fear that many people are facing poverty because of high healthcare costs in Bangladesh. A study by the Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies (BIDS), according to this daily, showed that approximately 6.13 million people were pushed below the national poverty line in 2022 because of out-of-pocket health expenditures.

The findings also revealed that more than half the population faces financial difficulties while seeking medical services in hospitals and that a large portion of the healthcare cost is spent on medicines. This is no surprise since many people in Bangladesh visit a pharmacy for basic ailments and buy medicine based on the shopkeepers' recommendations instead of consulting physicians, who are often not available at primary healthcare centres in unions and upazilas. Even when doctors are available, the poor quality of services at health facilities and the high cost of private ones often discourage people from seeking professional help. There is also a tendency among health professionals to overprescribe drugs and write brand names of medicine in prescriptions as a favour to pharmaceutical representatives who shower doctors with incentives.

The most disheartening part is that while out-of-pocket health expenditure continues to rise for the public (from 68 percent in 2020 to 73 percent in 2021), a portion of the health sector allocation remains underutilised. Plus, a significant portion of the allocation is spent on the salaries and wages of staff and health professionals, which often do not benefit patients directly. Although the health minister hinted at introducing a government-based health insurance system, many other ills in this sector need to be fixed to reduce people's healthcare burden. First, our focus needs to shift from curative to preventive care. Then the shortage of doctors and other health professionals must be resolved by instituting proper incentives and monitoring systems at duty stations. Policies and regulations should be introduced and implemented strictly to prevent the over-prescription of drugs, unethical practices of pharmaceutical companies, and regulate fees at private healthcare facilities. Corruption and inefficiencies in health sector procurement processes must be checked. Besides, a well-developed patient referral system will also decrease costs, stopping people from unnecessarily visiting specialists and paying higher fees. Only an overhaul of the entire sector, not just ad hoc measures, can re-establish people's trust in the health sector and reduce healthcare costs.

Is political violence transforming Awami League?

Kamal Ahmed
is an independent journalist. His X handle is @ahmedka1

KAMAL AHMED

The images that surfaced on online news portals, including this newspaper and social media, showing helmet-wearing activists of Chhatra League attacking protesters, including girls, with various weapons and sticks to break student demonstrations at several universities are deeply depressing, outrageous, and deplorable.

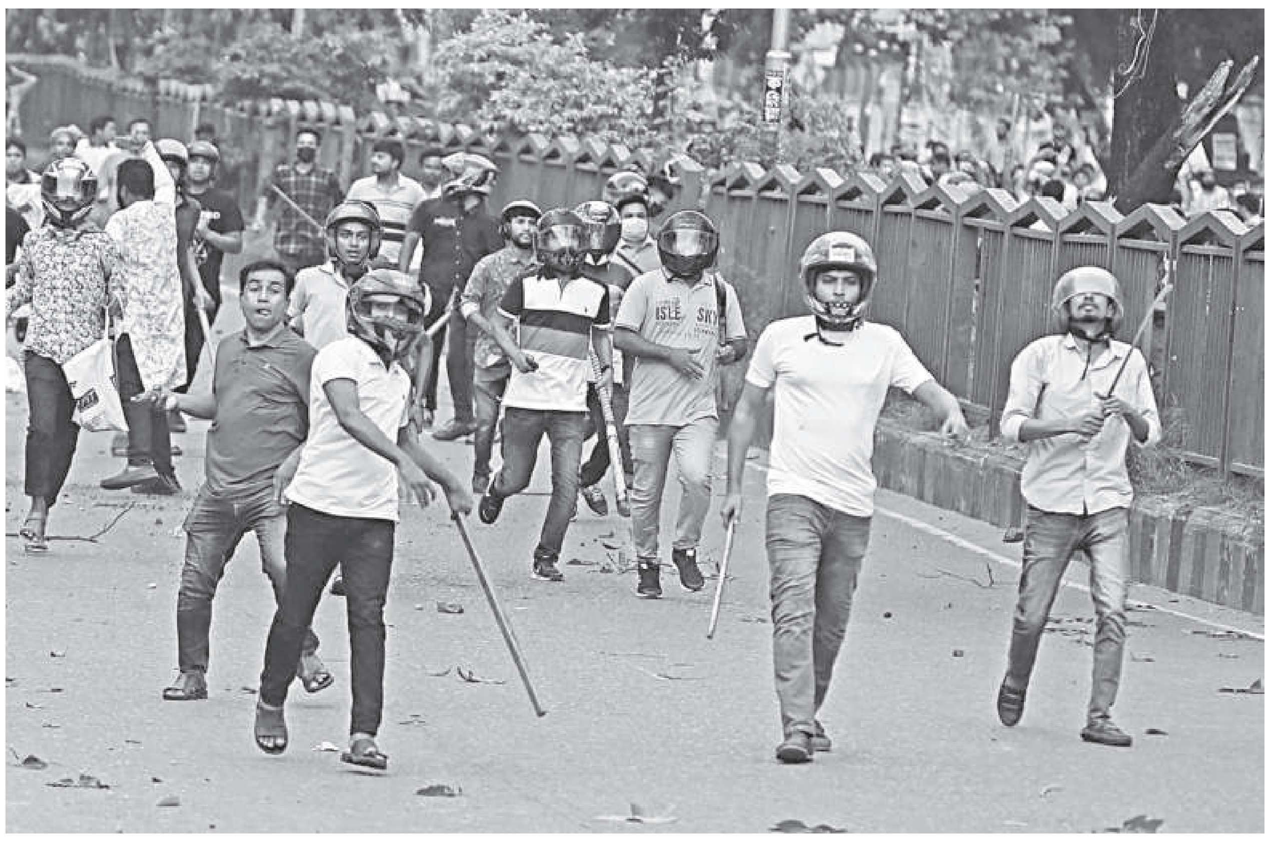
These demonstrators were demanding reforms to the quota system in civil service recruitment, which was scrapped in 2018 following a similar protest but restored on June 5 following a judicial ruling. This ruling shocked many young people. The government's appeal against the ruling suggests it also wants a change in the outcome.

The latest wave of violence against the protesters follows a public pronouncement by the ruling party's general secretary, Obaidul Quader, that Chhatra League would teach a lesson to those who allegedly undermined the spirit of the war of independence. This allegation centres around distortions, selective quotations, miscommunications, and a lack of empathy and understanding. These unnecessary escalations involving party members punishing protesters must stop immediately, and the responsibility squarely falls on the leadership of the ruling party.

These latest developments add to the concerns over the increasing tendency towards intolerance and the preference for violent means to suppress any dissent, whether political or apolitical. The latest data on casualties of political violence in Bangladesh, despite their shortcomings in accuracy, clearly show that the ruling party, Awami League, has seemingly lost control over the organisation. Consequently, the party has turned into fertile ground for factionalism and turf wars. It must be acknowledged that there is no established institutional mechanism for monitoring political violence in Bangladesh, and some civil society organisations, mainly rights groups, compile data from media reports on violence without independent verification, and their choice of news outlets is not always consistent.

This perhaps explains why the Human Rights Support Society (HRSS), in its latest report, stated that 91 people were killed in "political violence" in the first six months of this year, while Ain o Salish Kendra (ASK), another rights group, reported 41 deaths during the same period due to political rivalry and clashes.

Deadly political violence is not rare in our political culture, where the winner-takes-all principle drives political activists to the extreme. In a democracy, a strong opposition acts as a powerful deterrent to deadly violence. But in the absence of an effective opposition, it is natural for the rulers to face opposition from within, leading to internecine conflict. The ASK data, too, cited elections that led to incidents of violence.



Activists of the ruling party swoop on student protestors on July 15, 2024. PHOTO: STAR

The HRSS report, published on July 7, stated that 91 people were killed in 1,004 incidents of "political violence" in the last six months, leaving at least 4,026 people injured. The report observed that most casualties were due to election violence, dominance, and internal conflict between the ruling Awami League and Chhatra League. There were also a few clashes between police and opposition party leaders and activists.

According to the report, 50 people were killed in violence due to Chhatra League's dominance and infighting on public university campuses. While some may argue that the higher levels of violence and casualties during this period were due to the parliamentary election held on January 7 and subsequent upazila elections, both were boycotted by the main opposition BNP and most other opposition parties. Allies of the ruling party, including the current parliamentary opposition Jatiya Party, also largely stayed away from upazila elections, leaving these elections as intra-party contests for the ruling Awami League.

It could be argued that the ruling party's decision to allow and, in some cases, encourage its members to run against its official nominees propelled intra-party rivalry. Many political observers had warned about this likelihood well before these elections, and their reasoning cannot be dismissed outright.

However, looking at historical data of political violence over the last 10 years suggests a disturbing political transformation largely within the ruling party. For example, the number of casualties of political violence in 2022, compiled by ASK, shows that Awami League versus Awami League conflicts resulted in 12 deaths that year, compared to one death from violence between the Awami League and the BNP. According to a Dhaka Tribune report, an earlier publication by ASK compiling data over nearly five years (57 months) between January 2013 and September 2017 found that Awami League and its affiliate organisations had an average of 15 incidents of internal conflict per month, leading to the loss of three lives each month.

This situation raises the question of whether the current leadership of Awami League, on its 75th anniversary, will consider answering crucial questions about whether this transformation into violent politics will help or harm the party in the long run. Additionally, will they take urgent measures to stop further loss of lives among their members and political rivals?

A slogan lost in translation

Azmin Azran

AZMIN AZRAN

The course of the ongoing quota reform protests has taken a drastic turn over the last two days. On Tuesday, at least six individuals, mostly students, died during clashes between protesters and members of Bangladesh Chhatra League and the police—marking a further escalation from the previous day's events. Few would have imagined this scenario when students gathered in Dhaka University and other campuses on Sunday night.

For over two weeks prior to this, they had been boycotting classes and exams, and blockading key intersections in Dhaka and major highways in different places of the country with the demand to reform the quota system in civil service recruitment. But what made them flood campus streets on that night was a specific comment that touched a nerve for the wider student community. On Sunday, in response to a journalist's question during a press conference, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina said, "Why do they [anti-quota protesters] have so much resentment towards the freedom fighters? If the grandchildren of the freedom fighters don't get quota benefits, should the grandchildren of Razakars get the benefit?"

This questionable dichotomy is what lit the fuse, leading to students exploding with renewed vigour. And among all the slogans heard across the DU campus that night, the one that seems to have had the most intense impact is the one that goes: "Tui ke? Ami ke? Razakar, Razakar! [Who are you? Who am I? Razakar, Razakar!]" There have been other, more explanatory variations of the slogan, but for whatever reason, those didn't get much coverage. The question is, what made these students—otherwise proud citizens of an independent Bangladesh, and carrying the legacy of our independence struggle—utter such incendiary slogans?

Grievances over the preferential quota system are nothing new; in fact, the way the protests have panned out this time are starkly reminiscent of what happened during the 2018 quota reform movement. Protests began at Shahbagh then as they did now, before spreading across the country. In 2018, like this time around, a senior member of the ruling party remarked in parliament, "Will the children and successors of those who risked their lives to fight for independence not get an opportunity? Will the children of Razakars get the chance? Will the quota for the freedom fighters be shrunk for them?"

Six years ago, students protested this particular line of reasoning—as they did on Sunday night. And the reaction to it on both occasions was nothing short of extraordinary. That said, it is totally unfortunate that in a movement that concerns the wellbeing of general students in modern-day Bangladesh, the word "Razakar" has occupied so much of the conversation. On principle, we must say we are against any identification—however unintended—with this term. Students, having been familiarised with the history of our nation from a young age, should have known better than to use something that only invokes the hateful memories of the atrocities committed by Razakars in 1971.

> After Sunday night, we have seen the ministers of road transport and bridges, education, and social welfare, and state ministers for ICT and information all come out with hardened words against the protesters. None of them seemed to have noticed that the protesters themselves offered further explanation of their mood by chanting, "Chaite gelam odhikar, hoye gelam Razakar [Demanded rights, only to become Razakar]".

But students say the slogan was lost in translation. Their use of the term, they say, was sarcastic and heavy with context. Take away that context, and you have a totally different connotation. And this is what is happening at the moment. Unfortunately, despite the clarification from students, there has been little hint of reciprocation from those protesting the use of the word Razakar. Clearly, a mismatch exists between the protesting students and the powers that be. But what was stopping Bangladesh Chhatra League, a student party made up of students, from trying to understand the feelings of pain and anguish that led to such utterances? Why, instead of trying to impress upon them the inappropriateness of their slogan or supporting their just cause for quota reforms, did Chhatra League unleash violence on them?

After Sunday night, we have seen the ministers of road transport and bridges, education, and social welfare, and state ministers for ICT and information all come out with hardened words against the protesters. None of them seemed to have noticed that the protesters themselves offered further explanation of their mood by chanting, "Chaite gelam odhikar, hoye gelam Razakar [Demanded rights, only to become Razakar]". Instead of trying to engage with the students and bridge any gap in communication, the Awami League general secretary has instead called BCL to provide a "fitting reply".

We have seen the destructive nature of that reply over the past two days. Such violence and brutal attacks over a naive use of an objectionable slogan are hard to accept. We must remember that these students would never support anti-liberation ideals. Attempts could have been made to clear any confusion through amicable means. That would have been a much wiser way to deal with these realities instead of the violence that has ensued since.

How Trump's assassination attempt affects the US election

Throughout history any attempted assassination has been memorialised, canonised and imprinted onto the public psyche. In many cases the act of assassination has been a turning point—from Benazir Bhutto, to Indira Gandhi to John F Kennedy and Abraham Lincoln, all these world leaders have had an abrupt end to their flaring political careers, but are remembered more for their good than bad, regardless of which side of the political line the public of the day inclines. While many have come up with conspiracy theories after the assassination attempt on former President Donald Trump in a rally in Pennsylvania on Saturday, Trump has received words of assurance, condolence and kindness across the board. The imagery of blood trickling down his face and fist up in the air is quite iconic and heroic—supporters who loved him love him more, and the ones who did not look at him are looking at him now.

This unprecedented event has not only pivoted attention away from major world issues, at least in the US, but it could also be a major turning point for the outcome of the current election. It has already charged the Republican Party, and it will continue to shape their strategy as they move forward with packaging their rhetoric. However, despite the fact that the attack could have been avoided with some form of gun control, the party's position on gun control and the Second Amendment will remain intact. Two of the most talked about US presidents in history, who were party favourites—Theodore Roosevelt and Ronald Reagan were also survivors of assassination attempts and Trump has now joined that list. Though his felony cases did not really play a pivotal role in the public's decision to support or not support him, this incident takes away any clout from the hush money, falsification of business records, corrupt dealings and hearings might have had. Following the attack, a Florida judge dismissed the federal classified documents case against Donald Trump on the grounds that the Department of Justice unlawfully appointed special counsel Jack Smith.

Since the last week of June, Trump has held a lead in the national polls according to FiveThirtyEight; after the assassination, it has gone up by two percent over Biden, while Biden's national disapproval rating is on the rise. The political ground has been made fertile for Project 2025—a $22 million project led by the right-wing think tank, Heritage Foundation, with an autocratic bend that aims to realise staunch Christian nationalist principles, undermine separation of power, eliminate the department of education, curb climate change and civil liberties related regulations, push for significant cut to social security provisions and establish partisan leadership in major agencies. It is a presidential transition operation specifically intended for the republican nominee, Donald Trump, and if it becomes a reality, it would significantly alter US policy and institutions.

The much-talked about debate between the two-party candidates was a smudge, a mishmash of dubious claims—the optics of which takes the public further away from considering the real policy changes and tangible upheavals that they will encounter. The debate did nothing to change minds—undecided voters are still undecided and will likely remain undecided and the ones who have decided not to pick the lesser of the two evils won't hit the polls. The Republican National Convention proved to show a Republican Party recharged with Trump's words minutes after surviving the attempt: "Fight, fight, fight." Security was ramped up for the convention so that the security failures were not repeated, although questions still remain both for the security apparatus and the public on how the shooter got so close and why there was a failure. The Justice Department under Attorney General Merrick Garland can be trusted to carry out a full-fledged impartial investigation, but the question persists if the same can be expected from the Justice Department under another Trump presidency. It is vital to save institutions from the flare of party politics so that they can be dependable service providers for the public. It is the public that should be pushing politics not the other way round, but the opposite is the reality.

The Secret Service which shot the shooter down, has a long discreet relationship with the Trump family with a reputation for spending millions of taxpayer dollars on Trump's hotels, private properties and clubs.

What we are witnessing is a monumental loss of institutionalisation for the Republican Party, as its politics revolve around amplifying Trump, a move from defending conservative ideals which are fundamentally against debasing the branches of the government. The creation of the new party platform for the Republicans is a closed process, which is unlike other election cycles. As Biden attempts to try his chances by declaring he knows how to say the truth, in many ways, so does his opponent Trump is clearly adept at speaking his version of the truth.

While many of Biden's liberal and progressive voter bases are lacklustre—with much of the lethargy stemming from the US' role in the ongoing genocide in Gaza—Trump activists are on the move, and this shooting event has only added more fuel to the movement. Trump has established, although mostly rhetorically, that he is the commander-in-chief who gets things done and he is the one who is taken seriously by the world leaders. The assassination attempt could legitimise Trump's rhetoric for swing voters. Regardless of the sound bites we must not forget what was actually accomplished during Trump's last term and the risks associated with the promises of Project 2025. From the cusp of misinformation, we slid into the labyrinth of fake news, alternate and multiple realities, loss of objectivity, immense push backs against reproductive rights, scandalous turnovers in the government.

The extent to which the public has been exposed to chaos has truly made them immune to the likes of such ruptures in US institutions which were meant to be trusted. The ultimate and the biggest numerical outcome of the Trump presidency was the number of Covid deaths and insensitivity at a time when the world needed to come together. Sure, there was some progress in foreign policy, but the magnitude of loss is much greater. And an important question needs to be considered: would the genocide of Palestinians by Israel stop if Trump takes office? That is a complicated question given that Trump courts evangelical Zionists who are quite influential in the broader national political landscape. He also called Biden a "bad Palestinian" denigrating an entire people and glossing over the constant trauma and brutality against humanity.

Technocracy of the Democratic Party may have made it a party of the elites, but the Republican Party is not quite the people's party and it hasn't been in a long time. People may rather prefer doctors to run a hospital versus a family who would run the healthcare establishment like a business. Trump is known to appoint his family members and loyalists in influential government posts, which reeks of corrupt "third world" family-run governments with compromised institutions. But whether American citizens will see that truth, and the problem with that, seems further away today than it was before the assassination attempt.

Joe Biden—whose candidacy was in doubt, with talks of his replacement dominating the headlines before Trump's assassination attempt—is now in a more precarious position. Biden is a leader who has delivered before, both on the goods and bads, but he has reached a ceiling with his support for the genocide—another political move to keep Israel sympathisers in the Democratic party's pocket. Pollsters can make sound predictions about the general election, but the future of both parties, particularly the Republican Party, looks bleak as its institutional rigour erodes and the party turns into a movement around one man and his family cantered top-down leadership. The optics of the shooting event will only expedite that erosion. In this market place of democracy, we have only a few bad choices.

The most incredible election in French history

Zaki Laidi
is a professor at Sciences Po.

ZAKI LAIDI

By calling a snap parliamentary election in the wake of his party's defeat in the June European Parliament election, French President Emmanuel Macron hoped to "clarify" the political situation for his own benefit. Clearly, he failed. The election produced no parliamentary majority, only a great deal more confusion. With many losers and very few winners, it is the most astonishing election in the country's modern history.

Among the many losers is National Rally (RN), the far-right party that clinched a decisive and shocking victory in the European elections just weeks earlier. Though RN has increased its seat count and emerged as the largest party in the National Assembly, it fell far short of expectations. The second round featured a powerful anti-RN mobilisation, as voters shifted tactically from the centre to the left, and from the right to the centre. Many French apparently concluded during the campaign that RN's candidates were ill prepared to hold power.

Most pundits had come to believe that the French electoral system's natural immunity against the far-right no longer worked. But this election disproved that. Though the far-right is now the country's leading political force, it cannot do anything without allies, and it has none.

PHOTO: REUTERS

The second loser is Macron, whose party lost around 100 seats. Before the election, his Ensemble grouping could anchor a relative majority. Now, it is dwarfed by the left-wing New Popular Front (NFP), which won the most seats overall.

But while Macron probably will be forced to appoint a new prime minister from the left, the NFP remains around 100 seats short of an absolute majority. Moreover, it is a loose coalition whose members disagree on much and whose leader, Jean-Luc Melenchon of France Unbowed, has only one objective: to radicalise public debate and create the conditions for a face-off between him and RN's Marine Le Pen in the 2027 presidential election. Thus, it is not necessarily in Melenchon's interest for a left-wing government (under a different figurehead) to succeed.

To benefit Melenchon personally, the NFP would need to be able to execute on its entire electoral programme; but that will never happen without an absolute majority. Moreover, the next government—whatever shape it takes—will soon have to answer to the European Commission, which recently launched an "excessive deficit procedure" against France.

Still, the NFP is not likely to break up anytime soon. While the Socialists and Greens drew much criticism for allying with Melenchon despite their fundamental differences with him, the arrangement paid off electorally. Of the 40 additional seats won by the left, all went to the Socialists and Greens, whereas France Unbowed made no new gains. One is reminded of the left-wing union that French President Francois Mitterrand led after his election in 1981: by forging an alliance with the Communists, he was in a better position to weaken them later.

> Most pundits had come to believe that the French electoral system's natural immunity against the far-right no longer worked. But this election disproved that. Though the far-right is now the country's leading political force, it cannot do anything without allies, and it has none.

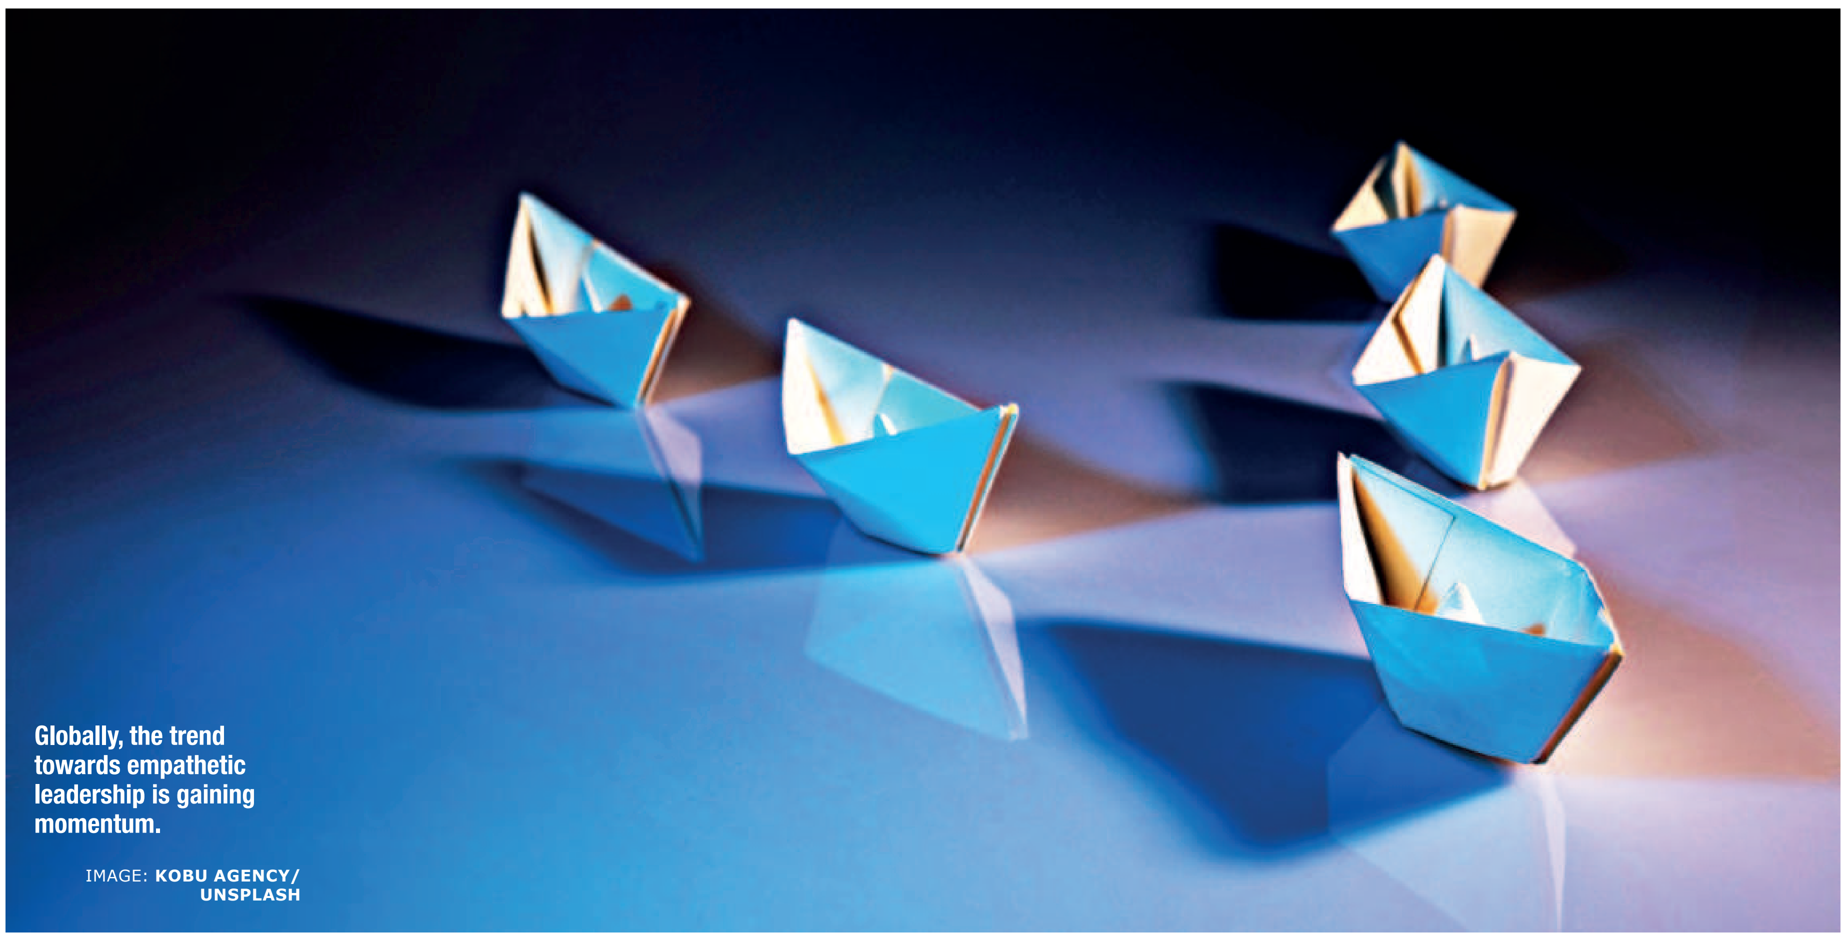
Looking ahead, the most likely scenario is that a moderate minority government will be formed to serve as a caretaker for the next year (the president cannot dissolve the National Assembly again until June 2025). But with Macron on the defensive and lacking a parliamentary majority, France will be in uncharted waters. Specific political personalities will play a much larger role than labels like "left," "right," or "centre." As in every political system, some French politicians want to pursue stability and compromise, while others are bent on crushing perceived enemies.

Thus, the coming year will be marked by deep political uncertainty, which will not help France's economic outlook. No matter what, though, the next government must agree on the 2025 budget within the next few months.

Perhaps the new National Assembly will find some common ground on electoral reform. The current two-round procedure is suited for a bipolar political system, but this election provided further confirmation that French politics is now tripolar. Given the emergence of distinct left-wing, right-wing, and centrist blocs, the only solution is to introduce proportional representation, with each party establishing its level of support and then pursuing voluntary coalitions after the votes are counted. Within the left, for example, the Socialists would not have to tie themselves to France Unbowed to get elected, and they could form alliances with others—such as Macron's party—once in parliament.

France's fragmented politics are not so different from those of other European countries. But its political culture and institutions are unique in the degree to which they favour confrontation over coalition-building.

Will this election outcome spur French politicians to see things differently, or will everyone just keep behaving as they always have? In the latter scenario, RN need only bide its time, capitalise on the government's ineffectiveness, and sooner or later win everything.



Globally, the trend towards empathetic leadership is gaining momentum.

The future of leadership is KINDNESS

> In our personal lives, we strive for happiness, fulfilment, and love, actively avoiding toxic relationships. Yet, paradoxically, in the workplace, many still believe that power and toughness are the keys to success.

ZARIF FAIAZ

In recent years, the business world has seen a paradigm shift in the qualities we value in leaders. Long gone are the days when assertiveness and strength were seen as the sole indicators of effective leadership. Instead, a new wave of thinking, championed by figures like Jacinda Ardern, the former Prime Minister of New Zealand, is advocating for kindness and empathy as core tenets of leadership. Ardern aptly put it, "We've placed over time so much emphasis on notions of assertiveness and strength that we have assumed it means you can't have those other qualities of kindness and empathy." This evolution in leadership ethos is not just a passing trend but a necessary transformation for the future.

The paradox of power and happiness

In our personal lives, we strive for happiness, fulfilment, and love, actively avoiding toxic relationships. Yet, paradoxically, in the workplace, many still believe that power and toughness are the keys to success. This dissonance is baffling. Why should our professional lives be any different from our personal lives when it comes to the qualities we value and the environments we create? It's time to debunk the myth that kindness and empathy are weaknesses in the corporate world.

The myth of niceness as weakness

There is no scientific basis for the belief that being nice, charismatic, or likeable makes one a pushover or unworthy of respect. This outdated thinking lacks evidence and ignores the numerous studies that highlight the benefits of supportive and empathetic leadership. For instance, a 2019 US study revealed that 57 per cent of employees quit their jobs because of their boss. Moreover, 14 per cent have left multiple jobs due to managerial issues, and an additional 32 per cent have seriously considered leaving because of their managers. The evidence is clear: poor leadership, devoid of empathy and support, drives people away.

The science of supportive leadership

On the contrary, the science supports the benefits of kind leadership. Gallup's surveys of US workers consistently find that receiving compliments, recognition, and praise boosts self-esteem, improves self-evaluations, and triggers positive emotions. Similarly, a study by the American Psychological Association found that employees who feel supported by their supervisors are more likely to be engaged and committed to their work. Google's data collection has reached similar conclusions: in the best teams, members listen to one another and show sensitivity to feelings and needs. This approach fosters a collaborative and innovative environment where employees feel valued and engaged .

Competitive advantage through empathy

In their book CEO Excellence, McKinsey noted that the most successful CEOs treat the 'soft stuff'—talent, culture, and organisational design—with the same rigour as financial performance. These CEOs understand that getting the people aspect right is a source of competitive advantage. This insight is not just applicable globally but is highly relevant to the Bangladeshi corporate sector as well.

The Bangladeshi context

In Bangladesh, the corporate culture is gradually evolving. Historically, hierarchical and authoritarian leadership styles have dominated, often leading to high employee turnover and low morale. However, forward-thinking companies in Bangladesh are beginning to embrace a more compassionate approach to leadership. This shift is not just a moral imperative but a strategic necessity. As the local job market becomes more competitive, retaining top talent requires more than just competitive salaries; it necessitates a supportive and empathetic work environment.

Global perspectives on employee satisfaction and leadership

Globally, the trend towards empathetic leadership is gaining momentum. According to a survey by Deloitte, 94 per cent of executives and 88 per cent of employees believe that a distinct corporate culture is important to a business's success. Moreover, a study by the Harvard Business Review found that leaders who project warmth are more effective than those who lead with toughness and power. This is supported by findings from the University of California, Berkeley, which suggest that compassionate leaders are more likely to be respected and followed.

The World Economic Forum has also highlighted the importance of empathy in leadership, noting that empathetic leaders can better connect with their employees, understand their needs, and foster a more inclusive and supportive work environment. This is particularly crucial in today's diverse and dynamic work environments, where employees come from various backgrounds and have different needs and expectations.

The future of leadership

The future of leadership lies in kindness. As we move forward, it is imperative that we redefine what it means to be a leader. Empathy, kindness, and support are not just nice-to-have qualities but essential components of effective leadership. They create a positive work environment, reduce turnover, and drive organisational success. In Bangladesh, as in the rest of the world, businesses that embrace this new paradigm will not only survive but thrive in the competitive landscape. It's time to leave behind the old notions of power and toughness and pave the way for a kinder, more empathetic future in leadership.

What you should know about TSMC, Asia's most valuable company

AFP, Taipei

With a recent market valuation of over $1 trillion, the Taiwanese semiconductor manufacturer TSMC has cemented itself as the most valuable company in Asia. This achievement takes place after a strong second-quarter revenue from the company. Experts believe the number will rise again soon due to the ongoing boom in AI chips' market demands. Meanwhile, here are five things you should know about this Taiwanese chip manufacturer.

How it began

MIT and Stanford graduate Morris Chang founded TSMC in 1987 after an extensive tech industry career in the United States. Taiwan's government was trying to set up a semiconductor industry that would compete with the countries, such as Japan, that led the sector at the time.

TSMC has become one of the world's most important companies in the nearly four decades since -- a leader in producing the chips that help run everything from smartphones to advanced robots.

Chang, who was born in mainland China in 1931, retired from TSMC in 2018. He was revered in Taiwan by then and often described as the "godfather" of the island's chip industry. Taiwan awarded him one of its highest medals of honour in April.

IMAGE: ANN WANG/REUTERS

TSMC has become one of the world's most important companies in recent times.

AI boom

Thanks to the revolution in artificial intelligence sparked by the success of ChatGPT, TSMC has been riding a massive wave of demand for the advanced semiconductors needed to train and run AI apps. It works closely with AI leader Nvidia, which became the world's most valuable traded company in June with a market capitalisation of around $3.3 trillion.

TSMC also supplies Nvidia competitors Qualcomm and AMD, among others, and such is the demand for its chips that production has been reportedly booked for years in advance. Arguably its best-known client is Apple, which relies on TSMC chips for the latest iPhones and MacBooks.

"We have established a research pipeline for technology to enable leading-edge AI devices, circuits, and systems for decades to come," TSMC says on its website.

Fears about China

Taiwan is one of the most important links in the supply chain for semiconductors, the lifeblood of the modern global economy, and TSMC is its crown jewel. However, China claims the self-ruled island as its territory and has not ruled out the use of force to bring it under its control.

Beijing has ramped up pressure on Taipei in recent years, including with large-scale military drills, sparking worries in capitals and boardrooms around the world about its chip industry.

US Commerce Secretary Gina Raimondo told a Congressional hearing in May that a Chinese invasion of Taiwan and seizure of TSMC would be "absolutely devastating". "Right now, the United States buys 92% of its leading-edge chips from TSMC in Taiwan," she said.

US, Japan expansion

TSMC has faced pressure to diversify away from Taiwan, where the bulk of its factories are based, to guard against any further escalation of the tussle between Washington and Beijing.

It is building two "fabs" -- manufacturing plants -- in the United States and announced plans for a third in April, bringing its total investment in the state of Arizona to $65 billion. But its US projects have faced obstacles in the past year, which the company attributed to a lack of human resources because making chips requires highly specialised skills.

TSMC also launched an $8.6 billion plant in Japan this year -- a coup for the country as it vies with the United States and Europe to woo top chip firms with huge subsidies. With "strong" Japanese government support, TSMC has announced a second factory to make more advanced chips. The firm is also planning a new factory in Germany -- its first in Europe.

Quake threat

Geopolitics is not the only worry for TSMC and Taiwan's chip industry. The island is prone to natural disasters, too. It sits on the "Ring of Fire", an arc of intense seismic activity along the Pacific Rim, and -- much like neighbouring Japan -- has a long history of catastrophic quakes.

TSMC was one of the firms that halted production because of a 7.4-magnitude earthquake in April this year, the most severe to hit Taiwan in decades. It told customers the impact of the quake was minimal.

TSMC has invested in several seismic resistance features at its facilities to reduce damage and casualties, including an earthquake early warning system, according to its website.

Thousands of fans joined street celebrations in Madrid after Euro 2024 champions Spain returned home to a royal welcome on Monday, having beaten England 2-1 in the final in Berlin on Sunday. After receptions with King Felipe VI and prime minister Pedro Sanchez, the record four-time Euro winners paraded through the capital city on an open-top bus as supporters gathered at Cibeles Square and lined the streets in anticipation of seeing their heroes and the coveted trophy. Meanwhile, similar scenes were witnessed at the Ezeiza International Airport in Buenos Aires on Tuesday, as thousands of people gathered around the airport to receive the Argentina team that returned home to a heroes' welcome about 24 hours after they beat Colombia to win a record 16th Copa America title. Argentina coach Lionel Scaloni, winger Angel di Maria, who on Sunday played his last match with the Albiceleste, and the Argentine Football Association president Claudio Fabian Tapia posed with the trophy upon the team's arrival.

The debate over Rishad's red-ball readiness

SAMSUL AREFIN KHAN

In Test cricket, the importance of having a skilled leg-spinner cannot be overstated as they bring a unique variation and unpredictability that can turn the tide of a match, even when there is little assistance from the pitch.

Bangladesh, traditionally reliant on orthodox, finger spinners, saw the impact of leg-spin with Rishad Hossain's stellar T20 World Cup performance in the USA and West Indies: the 22-year-old went on to pick 14 wickets, including two match-winning spells against Sri Lanka and the Netherlands.

However, as the team prepares for Test series against Pakistan and India, Rishad's readiness for the longer format has sparked a debate.

While all-format captain Najmul Hossain Shanto has reservations about his current Test credentials, chief selector Gazi Ashraf Hossain Lipu considers Rishad "a prospect for the longer version".

Moreover, the player himself has expressed his willingness to get integrated into the Tigers' Test setup.

Rishad has recently returned for individual practice in Mirpur after completing a two-week vacation following Bangladesh's World Cup campaign.

On Tuesday, the player was seen honing both his batting and bowling skills at the National Cricket Academy, keeping an eye on the national team's next white-ball assignment: against India in October, where they will play three T20Is after a two-match Test series.

Before the T20I series, Bangladesh will feature in Tests against hosts Pakistan, between August 21 to September 3. However, it seems the 22-year-old will have to sit idle during these four Tests as he is yet to be in consideration for Bangladesh in red-ball cricket despite having made his first-class debut in 2018.

The kind of spin Rishad produces can be an asset for the Bangladesh Test team, who have often found wanting in away series due to a lack of variety.

Although Bangladesh possess Test specialist spinners like Mehedi Hasan Miraz, Taijul Islam, and Nayeem Hasan, alongside their superstar all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan, none provide the variation of a leggie.

However, asked about his stance regarding Rishad's inclusion in the Test fold, captain Shanto was skeptical.

"I think it would be better to ask this to the selectors, but from my experience, I don't think he [Rishad] is fully ready for red-ball cricket at the moment," Shanto said during yesterday's private programme at Pragati Sarani.

When this reporter contacted Rishad for his comments on playing Tests, he said that he has "no conditions" about playing any format.

"I'm currently preparing for white-ball games... Let's see how it [prospect of playing Tests] turns out for me," Rishad told The Daily Star.

Meanwhile, the chief selector Lipu believes that Rishad can be counted on as a prospect in the Test fold, but it is dependent on many factors.

"Rishad has been in the pipeline for a long time. Regarding his inclusion in red-ball [format], we can't reach a conclusion by ourselves," said Lipu, who is in Chattogram to oversee the ongoing white-ball series between HP Unit and Bangladesh Tigers alongside one of his deputies, Abdur Razzak.

"Rishad is definitely a prospect for the longer version as well. But when we will give the exposure, only time can tell. The kind of caliber he possesses, he will definitely be in the plan.

"But a Test match is a different ball game, and it's a test for every bowler; it's not like T20. He needs to be competent for it. He is working on googlies and all other variations.

"We will definitely try to give him exposure, but we need the opinions of the captain and head coach as well," the chief selector concluded.

Having received a big round of applause from the country's cricketing fraternity for Rishad's selection in the World Cup squad, now it remains to be seen whether the selectors and team management opt for a similar bold move by having Rishad on board for the upcoming Test hurdles.

Spanish players dominate Euro team of the tournament

REUTERS

Spain midfielder Rodri and 17-year-old Lamine Yamal were among six Spain players named in UEFA's team of the tournament for Euro 2024 on Tuesday.

UEFA's technical observers chose a 4-3-3 formation, which was one of the most frequently used during the tournament, with defender Kyle Walker earning his second successive appearance in it. He was England's only player named in the team.

Spain defeated England 2-1 in the final for their fourth European Championship title.

The remainder of the team was: Mike Maignan (France); Manuel Akanji (Switzerland), William Saliba (France), Marc Cucurella (Spain); Daniel Olmo (Spain), Fabian Ruiz (Spain); Jamal Musiala (Germany), and Nico Williams (Spain).

UEFA's technical observer team was made up of 12 former players and current or former coaches.

Southgate: England's nearly man

AFP, London

Gareth Southgate leaves his job as the second most successful England manager in history but with a string of agonising near-misses to his name.

Two days after the Three Lions came up just short yet again -- losing the Euro 2024 final to Spain -- the 53-year-old has stepped down, deciding it is time for a "new chapter".

The mild-mannered Southgate transformed England into a consistent force on the international stage after decades of under-achievement.

He also reshaped the team culture, breaking down barriers that had previously existed within the camp between players from rival clubs.

But he ultimately failed to end the nation's long wait for a major trophy dating back to Alf Ramsey's 1966 World Cup victory despite having a richly talented generation of players to work with.

Southgate took over with England at a low ebb after a series of humiliations on and off the pitch.

A woeful Euro 2016 exit against Iceland brought a suitably depressing end to Roy Hodgson's reign, while his successor, Sam Allardyce, lasted only 67 days and one match before being forced out after a newspaper sting.

Southgate, short of top-level managerial experience, gained credibility among previously sceptical fans with a surprise run to the 2018 World Cup semifinals in Russia.

He followed that impressive achievement by leading England to their first major final for 55 years at Euro 2021, where they lost on penalties to Italy.

England went out to eventual finalists France in the quarterfinals in Qatar in 2022 but there were still positive signs that this was a young and exciting team heading in the right direction.

Southgate's men were among the favourites to finally get over the line at Euro 2024 but it turned into a roller coaster of emotions for the manager, who went from having beer cups thrown at him to within touching distance of winning the cup in Berlin.

Despite England's success, criticism of his perceived lack of tactical nous and inflexibility has always simmered.

At Euro 2024 he was accused of being too cautious, of an unwillingness to allow his men to express themselves.

But he leaves an important legacy and a framework in place for a tilt at future honours.

'My target is to qualify for the final round in Olympics'

Robiul Islam will become the ninth shooter from Bangladesh to compete in the Olympic Games through wild-card entries. The multiple-medal winner in junior and senior level, in both air rifle and air gun events, dreams of becoming the first shooter from the country to make it into the final round of the Olympics. The 25-year-old spoke to The Daily Star's Anisur Rahman regarding his preparation and ambition in an interview, the excerpts of which are as follows:

The Daily Star (DS): There were whispers that Shaira Arefin, who got an IOC scholarship, would receive the wild card for Paris Olympic but eventually you got it. What do you think was the reason behind this?

Robiul Islam (RI): I missed a quota by only 0.3 points in an event in Indonesia in January. I also produced good results in two other quota-place tournaments. I think the IOC considered these scores when considering awarding the wild card to Bangladesh.

DS: How has your preparation been for the Olympics?

RI: My 10m air rifle event is on 28 July and I have been preparing for a long time by setting a goal. The preparation got hampered a bit over the speculation regarding Shaira's wild card entry. But once I got the wild card, I started afresh with maximum motivation. Our coach has also intensified the training to make up for the lost time. I have been practising 250 to 300 shots per day now, compared to 150 shots in the past.

DS: Since Barcelona Olympics in 1992, Bangladeshi rifle shooters have participated in every edition but there has been no remarkable performance. Will that be the case for you too?

RI: I never think that I will go there, participate and return home. I feel I am carrying Bangladesh on my shoulders; it is a matter of pride and I want to deliver for the nation. My target is to qualify for the final round.

DS: Bangladeshi shooters have never been able to convert practice scores into competition scores. What makes you confident about qualifying for the final with a best score of 627?

RI: I recently scored 630.2 points in a competition in Dhaka. Besides, we recently visited Munch where I fine-tuned my rifle, tested the barrel and did some small things which help a shooter to increase his scores. I have also been doing yoga and meditation so that I can stay focused during the event.

DS: Where does Bangladesh shooting lag behind?

RI: We lag behind in many areas. If you compare, a total of 138 Indian shooters participated in a World Cup in Korea while there were only four from Bangladesh. We need to participate more in overseas tournaments to make a mark in big events.

DS: Bangladeshi shooters won many medals in SA Games and Commonwealth Games but always failed in Asian Games and Olympics. Do you believe the shooters can succeed in coming days?

RI: The shooters from our generation are scoring more than 625 and some even finished among 20 in ISSF World Cup. I believe Bangladesh will take part in 2028 Olympics with direct quota and more international medals will be earned during this time.

DS: What do you expect from the other athletes from Bangladesh?

RI: I will expect that they play for the nation. When athletes play for the nation, their responsibility and focus are boosted but when they play for themselves, they only focus on improving own performance. So, I hope everyone will play for the nation.

'A dream come true'

AFP, Madrid

French superstar Kylian Mbappe was officially unveiled as a Real Madrid player on Tuesday, telling 80,000 fans "my dream has come true".

The striker, who had completed his medical earlier on Tuesday morning, signed a five-year contract and was handed a No. 9 shirt by club president Florentino Perez.

"Wow," Mbappe said in Spanish to roars from a packed Santiago Bernabeu Stadium.

"For years, I've dreamed of playing for Real Madrid and today my dream has come true," said the 25-year-old former Paris Saint-Germain player.

Even though the crowd was expected to be bigger than that 15 years ago when Cristiano Ronaldo was unveiled, the attendance remained somewhat similar.

AL, BCL men to take position at unit offices

To 'help' cops keep law and order

PARTHA PRATIM BHATTACHARJEE and MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN

Leaders and activists of the ruling Awami League and its associate bodies will take positions at their respective unit offices across the country from early morning today and remain vigilant against blocking of roads and highways.

Sources say AL General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday gave the instruction as the quota reform movement turned violent yesterday, killing at least six people in Dhaka, Chattogram and Rangpur.

They say the party wants to face the student movement politically.

The ruling party's student wing Chhatra League has also been asked to take position at their respective units. BCL leaders were also instructed not to initiate any attacks, but resist if they come under attacks, according to the sources.

Editors' Council calls for ensuring safety of journos

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Expressing deep concern over the attacks on journalists covering the quota protests, the Editors' Council yesterday called upon the government, student organisations, and law enforcers to ensure the safety of journalists.

Mentioning that at least 25 journalists were wounded in the attacks in different parts of the capital over the last two days, the council condemned such assaults on journalists on duty.

Several of them were undergoing treatment at hospitals.

Citing media reports, the statement, signed by the council's President Mahfuz Anam and General Secretary Dewan Hanif Mahmud, said eight journalists were injured at Jahangirnagar University on the night of July 15, six at Dhaka University, and nine others in Chattogram, Dinajpur, and Bogura during clashes yesterday.

The injured include Mehdi Mamun of Daily Bonik Barta, Abdur Rahman Sarjil of Dainik Bangla, Jobayer Ahmed of Bangladesh Today, Mushfiqur Rizwan of Somoyer Alo, Hasibur Rahman of bdnews24.com, Wajhhetul Islam of Daily Janakantha, Arifuzzaman Ujjal of Daily

Punctuality of Biman found wanting

RASHIDUL HASAN

Biman is lagging far behind the international standard for on-time performance for its flights, an indication of the continued operational inefficiency of the national flag carrier.

The on-time performance of airlines is the percentage of flights that arrive or depart within 15 minutes of the scheduled time. Globally, airlines target 80 percent and above.

Some 69.37 percent of Biman's flights between July last year and June this year departed on time, according to the flag carrier's own data. During that period, 66 percent of the flights arrived on time.

Biman's poorest on-time performance for international departures from Dhaka was recorded in December last year, 47.25 percent. Its best was in March, 72.24 percent.

Many airlines have embedded on-time performance as a key performance indicator as delays affect productivity and cost airlines thousands of dollars every year.

"It means flights spend longer on taxiways burning fuel unnecessarily -- it means passengers miss connections and get upset," said ATM Nazrul Islam, an aviation expert.

The knock-on effects of the disruptions to onward travel are far-reaching, he said.

In Europe, where passengers are entitled to compensation for late flights, there is a direct cost associated with poor on-time performance.

In 2023, Biman failed to make it to the list of the top 20 most punctual airlines in the Asia-Pacific region.

Biman has identified at least 20 reasons for the flight delays, including the non-availability of adequate number of check-in counters, delays in allocating gates, and assiging a gate to multiple flights.

> Many airlines have embedded on-time performance as a key performance indicator as delays affect productivity and cost airlines thousands of dollars every year.

Space constraints at airports also make it difficult to load baggage containers onto aircraft.

The other reasons include the breakdown of carousels, bad weather, and delays in cabin cleaning.

Biman admitted that passengers become displeased due to flight delays, documents show.

The newly-appointed Biman Managing Director and CEO Zahidul Islam Bhuiyan said maintaining on-time performance is one of his main challenges.

Mobile internet sluggish at campuses

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Students on many university campuses experienced issues accessing mobile internet last night.

The issue was first reported in the evening, hours after the day's violence surrounding the quota reform protests.

Meanwhile, BTRC officials could not be reached over the phone for comments in this regard.

Ashrefa, a student at Dhaka University and a resident of Shamsun Nahar Hall, said, "We started getting poor mobile network coverage on campus in the afternoon, with the internet speed slowing down in the evening."

"As a result, my parents couldn't reach me after repeated attempts, causing them to worry about my safety."

Israeli forces battle Hamas across Gaza

57 Palestinians killed in bombardments in southern, central areas of enclave

AGENCIES

Israeli forces battled Hamas-led fighters in several areas across Gaza yesterday, while Palestinian health officials said at least 57 people were killed in Israeli bombardments in southern and central areas of the enclave.

In Rafah, a southern border city where Israeli forces have been operating since May, five Palestinians were killed in an air strike on a house, while in nearby Khan Younis, a man, his wife and two children were killed, they said.

An Israeli airstrike on a car killed at least 17 Palestinians and wounded 26 others in Khan Younis in southern Gaza, the officials said.

In the historic Nuseirat camp in central Gaza, at least four Palestinians were killed in separate shelling and aerial strikes in central Gaza, medics said. An Israeli airstrike killed four in Sheikh Zayed in northern Gaza, they said.

Hours later, an Israeli air strike on a school in the Nuseirat camp killed 16 people and wounded many others, health officials said.

The Israeli military said troops continued "intelligence-based" activities in Rafah, killing many Palestinian gunmen over the past 24 hours. It said air strikes had targeted Hamas fighters, tunnels, and other military infrastructure.

- Israeli air force strikes 40 targets across enclave

It added that the Israeli air force had struck around 40 targets across the enclave.

The armed wings of Hamas and the Islamic Jihad said in separate statements their fighters attacked Israeli forces in several locations with anti-tank rockets and mortar fire.

More than 38,713 Palestinians have been killed and 89,166have been injured in the Israeli military offensive in Gaza since October 7, the Gaza health ministry said in a statement yesterday.

Govt cancels Tk 5cr fund for 10 Minute School

CEO's Facebook post backing quota reform appears to be the reason

Startup Bangladesh, the government's venture capital fund, yesterday pulled back its proposed investment of Tk 5 crore in 10 Minute School (10MS), Bangladesh's largest edtech platform.

No official explanation was given by Startup Bangladesh for withdrawing its planned investment in the edtech start-up announced in October last year.

However, the move comes after Ayman Sadiq, the co-founder and chief executive officer of 10MS, made a Facebook post supporting the ongoing student movement for reforming the quota system for government jobs.

"We want quota reform. Merit should be the biggest quota. #QuotaMovement," Sadiq, also a media personality, posted on his

Ashura today

BSS, Dhaka

Ashura, commemorating the martyrdom of Hazrat Imam Hossain Ibn Ali (RA), the grandson of Prophet Hazrat Muhammad (Peace Be Upon Him), will be observed in the country today with due religious solemnity.

Today is the 10th day of the month of Muharram in Hijri calendar-1446. This day is well-known as Ashura.

It is regarded as the day of Karbala, a "mourning and heartbreaking event", which has a special religious significance for the Muslim community across the globe.

Muslims across the world recall the sacrifice of Hazrat Imam Hossain (RA) along with his family members and 72 followers, who embraced martyrdom in 680 AD in the desert of Karbala on the banks of the Euphrates river in Iraq while fighting for truth and justice against the Yazid forces.

Their self-sacrifice at Karbala Maidan to uphold the great ideals of Islam,

Biden defends 'mental acuity'

Says 'bullseye' remark about Trump a mistake

AFP, Washington

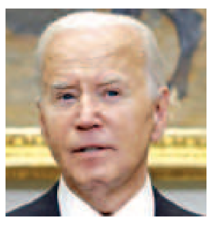
US President Joe Biden defended both his "mental acuity" and his rhetoric about Donald Trump Monday, in a second TV interview aimed at ending calls for him to quit his re-election bid following a disastrous debate.

The 81-year-old delivered an often combative defence of his mental and physical fitness for office during the one-on-one with broadcaster NBC, which nevertheless featured some of the word salads that have worried Democrats.



"I'm old," Biden told host Lester Holt in the interview at the White House. "But I'm only three years older than Trump, number one. And number two, my mental acuity has been pretty damn good."

He added: "I understand why people say, 'God, he's 81 years old. Whoa. What's he gonna be when he's 83 years old, 84 years?' It's a legitimate question to ask."

Biden's interview was the latest attempt by the White House to assuage growing fears over the Democrat's age and mental state following the dismal debate performance on June 27.

The sit-down was announced last week, before the assassination attempt on Republican candidate Donald Trump on Saturday -- which inevitably became a key subject of the interview.

At least 29 dead in daylong mayhem

11 of them students; over 3,000 hurt, many hit by shotgun pellets; protesters reject govt call for talks; violence rocks 19 districts; several establishments including BTV centre set afire

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

In an unprecedented scale of violence across the country, at least 29 people, including 11 students and a journalist, were killed and more than 3,000 wounded in fierce clashes between quota protesters and law enforcers joined in by ruling party activists yesterday.

The 11 students are from Dhaka, Chattogram, Savar, Madaripur, Narsingdi and Sylhet. Many of the victims are yet to be identified, so the number of students killed may rise.

The protests began from where it was left off on Wednesday night, and continued in Dhaka and other parts of the country throughout yesterday.

The violence saw at least two government establishments, including state-run BTV Bhaban in the capital's Rampura, attacked and set alight.

In the afternoon, after many were already killed and injured, the government invited the protesting students to sit for talks, but the students rejected the call and vowed to continue their movement.

"No dialogue will take place over the blood of the martyrs. It is the government that has to find the solution," Nahid Islam, one of the key organisers of the movement, said in a Facebook post in the evening, just hours before the government shut down the internet.

The intensity of violence, and the death toll that climbed to 36 so far are unprecedented in any student movement in recent memory. By the afternoon, parts of Dhaka's skyline turned black with thick smoke coming from burning buildings and cars.

Earlier on Tuesday, six people were killed in Dhaka, Chattogram and Rangpur. Another man who was injured in the previous day's violence died yesterday.

The death toll from yesterday's clashes may go up.

Different private hospitals, especially in Uttara where one of the fiercest clashes took place, struggled to treat the injured patients that rose by the hour.

Violence ensued when law enforcers and ruling party activists carrying firearms, rods, iron pipes, sticks and hockey sticks tried to disperse students enforcing a "complete shutdown" of transport networks, businesses and offices yesterday, demanding quota reforms.

Dhaka was cut off from the rest of the country, as rail and road communications came to a halt.

The protesters also vandalised and set fire to the disaster management office building in the capital's Mohakhali and at least three police outposts in the city.

Parts of Dhaka looked like warzones as law enforcers used shotguns, teargas shells and sound grenades against the protesters, who responded by throwing brick chunks. AL activists and police also hurled bricks at the demonstrators.

Of the dead, 23 were in Dhaka. Of them, 10 were killed in Jatrabari, Shanir Akhra and Azimpur. One of them was a journalist of Dhaka Times. Another nine in Dhaka's Uttara and nearby areas; two in Badda; one

The country witnessed scenes of mindless bloodletting for the third day yesterday. Deadly clashes between quota protesters and law enforcers/ruling party activists took place across the capital and beyond. Violence was worst in Uttara, Dhanmondi, Rampura, Jatrabari and Mohakhali as protesters pressed on with their demonstrations for quota reforms and against the attacks on students on the previous days. Committee formed to probe Abu Sayed's killing

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Dinajpur

Rangpur police yesterday launched an investigation into the killing of Abu Sayed, of Begum Rokeya University, during a clash between cops and quota reform protesters on Tuesday.

In a video footage of the incident, Abu Sayed, 25, an unarmed protester and a student of the English department, was seen getting shot down by policemen in front of his university around 2:30pm.

The persons found responsible for the incident will be held accountable, said Rangpur Metropolitan Police (RMP) Commissioner Md Moniruzzaman.

The four-member probe body, led by RMP Additional Commissioner Saifuzzaman Faruki, has been asked to submit its report in two weeks, he added.

Meanwhile, a case has been filed with RMP's Tajhat Police Station over Tuesday's violence at BRUR.

Bhupoti Roy, sub-inspector of Tajhat Police Station, filed the case on charges of assaulting police, obstructing them from discharging their duties, and disregarding law and order.

So far, nine people have been arrested over Tuesday's clashes.

Ukraine attacked Russian base on Crimea: Kyiv source

AFP, Kyiv

Ukrainian aerial and maritime drones struck Russian military targets on the annexed Crimean peninsula, a defence source in Kyiv told AFP Thursday, after Moscow reported an overnight drone assault.

Ukrainian forces have recently escalated drone and missile attacks on Russian military installations on the peninsula that was captured by Russian forces in 2014.

The source said an operation carried out by the navy and the Security Service of Ukraine (SBU) had damaged or disabled a command centre and an ammo depot among other facilities at Lake Donuzlav in western Crimea.

each in Dhanmondi and Savar lost their lives in the violence, police and hospital sources confirmed to The Daily Star.

Mizanur Rahman, superintendent of Bangladesh-Kuwait Friendship Hospital in Uttara, told The Daily Star around 11:30pm that eight victims were brought dead at their hospital. Six bodies were handed over to relatives, and the rest two were still at the hospital.

At the Crescent Hospital, also in Uttara, our correspondent saw relatives collect a body around 10:30pm.

At least six people were killed outside the capital -- two each in Chattogram and Narsingdi and one each in Madaripur and Sylhet, police and hospital sources said.

Many of the victims were hit by shotgun pellets, as law enforcers fired indiscriminately.

Violent clashes between the demonstrators and law enforcers and AL activists took place in Dhaka's Uttara, Jatrabari, Badda, Rampura, Dhanmondi, Mirpur and Science Laboratory Intersection.

Our district correspondents reported violence in at least 19 districts.

Along with police, Rab and Ansar members, 229 platoons of Border Guard Bangladesh personnel were deployed nationwide.

Many government and private offices were open yesterday in the capital. On the streets, there were very few threewheelers, motorcycles, buses and private vehicles. The metro rail service from Uttara to Motijheel was partially halted.

Agitating students called the shutdown to protest the attacks by police, BGB, Rab and SWAT teams as well as ruling party activists, the deaths of fellow protesters, and also to demand punishment to the culprits, terror-free campuses and a logical reform to the quota system.

Violence erupted on Tuesday when at least six people, including three students, were killed and several hundred injured in clashes as the quota protests swelled after Chhatra League and AL activists attacked them at different universities on Monday.

The students continued their protest on Wednesday though it was a government holiday. They organised funeral and coffin processions and blocked roads and highways at different places. Chases and counter-chases and running battles took place in different parts of the country, including the capital.

The authorities have since closed all public and private universities, colleges and primary and secondary schools. They also asked university students to leave their halls by Wednesday, and dispatched riot police and paramilitary Border Guard Bangladesh members to the campuses.

In a press release last night, the home ministry issued a stern warning against violence.

"Law enforcers have been showing extreme patience so far. But if the miscreants continue to engage in destructive activities, law enforcement will be compelled to use the full force of the law to protect people's lives and public properties," said the release, signed by the senior public relations officer of the ministry.

UTTARA

In Uttara, at least nine people were killed and more than 500 injured during daylong clashes between quota protesters and police.

The dead were taken to different local hospitals. Doctors said some bodies were taken away by students and families.

The violence broke out around 10:30am as police and Rab members tried to disperse students of different private universities, colleges and schools who blocked Dhaka-Mymensingh Highway near ABC Centre.

During the clashes, which continued till evening, law enforcers fired several hundred times from shotguns, over 100 tear shells and more than 100 sound grenades. The protesters hurled brick chips, said witnesses.

Around one kilometre stretch of the highway up to Rajlakshmi turned into a battlefield.

As students took many wounded protesters to local hospitals, doctors struggled to accommodate them all.

Doctors of three hospitals said they had to treat victims on the road in front of their hospitals as a large number of injured people were rushed there.

They said many of the dead were hit by shotgun pellets fired from close range.

In the evening, protesters gathered around Uttara Purba Police Station, and police fired from shotguns, leaving several of them injured, witnesses said.

Several establishments and a BGB vehicle were torched near the police station, according to witnesses.

JATRABARI

A clash between police and protesters erupted at Jatrabari intersection at 9:25am as police fired teargas shells.

The protesters regrouped at Shanir Akhra intersection and marched again towards Jatrabari where another clash took place at 11:00am.

Police fired teargas, rubber bullets, and sound grenades at the protesters. Activists from Chhatra League and Jubo League joined forces with police, throwing bricks at the protesters from the Mayor Hanif Flyover.

Around 1:30pm, the agitators reorganised and moved towards Jatrabari Police Station. They set fire to an abandoned private car next to the station. Police used water cannons to extinguish the fire and also to disperse the protesters.

Police and Rab fired several hundred rounds from shotguns and lobbed teargas shells.

Rab-10 Commander Mohammad Farid Uddin said they fired teargas, shotguns, and sound grenades to disperse the demonstrators.

DHANMONDI

A clash between quota protesters and police, who were joined by stick-wielding Jubo League men, ensued in Dhanmondi around 11:30am as police tried to disperse the students after they blocked the roads at Dhanmondi-27, witnesses said.

Farhan Faiyaaz, 17, an HSC student of Residential Model College suffered injuries and was taken to City Hospital.

Osman Gani, assistant manager of the hospital, said Farhan was dead before he was brought there.

About 200 injured people, mostly students, took treatment at the hospital.

Police fired teargas canisters to break off the agitating crowds, while Jubo League men chased the students.

The protesters later took position at different alleys, and violence spilled over to nearby areas.

Chased, students took shelters at different residential buildings where police lobbed teargas shells, creating panic, residents said.

BADDA

In Badda and Rampura, a man was killed and over 200 others, including students and police, were injured during a series of clashes.

Victim Dulal Matbor, a microbus driver, suffered serious wounds while crossing the area during the clashes. He was taken to a nearby hospital with a hole in his chest around 12:30pm where doctors declared him dead. Doctors could not immediately confirm whether the hole is from a bullet.

The protesters torched 12 motorcycles and the office of the assistant commissioner (traffic) of Rampura zone police box.

Police charged batons and fired teargas canisters at the students. They also lobbed teargas inside the campus of Canadian University of Bangladesh at Merul Badda, witnesses said. Both police and protesters also hurled brick chunks at each other.

Witnesses said several hundred students took to the street in front of the university campus around 10:30am. The clash began as police tried to bar them.

Later, students regrouped and chased away the police members. The clash spilled over to Rampura Bridge, where students of East West University joined the protest. The students allegedly vandalised a traffic police box and torched several motorcycles in Rampura.

At one point, policemen entered the Canadian University of Bangladesh and the demonstrators took position outside. Police fired from shotguns and lobbed teargas shells from inside the university, leaving many wounded. Several shops and establishments were vandalised by the protesters at the time.

Around 3:00pm, Rab helicopters airlifted 60 police personnel from the rooftop of a building.

The protesters also took position in Badda Link Road where some commoners also took part.

MIRPUR-10

Quota reform activists and police aided by Awami League men clashed at Mirpur 10 intersection. Police lobbed teargas shells and sound grenades, dispersing the protesters.

The protesters set fire to a footbridge at Mirpur 10.

Earlier, over 100 students chased AL leaders and activists who were holding a rally at the intersection. They also vandalised chairs brought for the rally and tore down banners.

Later, a chase and counter-chase between stick-wielding demonstrators and AL activists took place.

resist the creators of chaos, Quader said.

In a statement last night, the home ministry said law enforcers would be compelled to use the highest level of force according to the law if the destructive activities continue.

Meanwhile, four organisers of the quota reform protests yesterday on their Facebook pages said that it is the government that has to devise a solution to the prevailing crisis.

They rejected the law minister's call for dialogue and vowed to continue their demonstrations.

"No dialogue will take place over the blood of martyrs. It is the government that has to devise a solution," Nahid Islam, one of the key organisers, said in a Facebook post.

He said he feared that they might be arrested and may become victims of enforced disappearances. He urged others to continue with the demonstrations.

Protest organiser Asif Mahmud on his Facebook page said there can be no dialogue when shots are being fired. "I would rather die than betray the blood of martyrs."

Sarjis Alam, another organiser, said, "How can there be dialogue over my brothers' death?"

Hasnath Abdullah said it is not true that they made proposals for talks with the government.

The Daily Star could not reach the four protest organisers over the phone.

Their Facebook posts came hours after Law Minister Anisul Huq told media that following the offer of the protesters, the government agreed to hold discussions with them.

He also announced taking an initiative to hold the early hearing of the quota-related case pending with the Supreme Court and forming a one-member judicial committee to investigate the killing of six people on Tuesday.

Afterwards, the Cabinet Division issued a circular forming a one-member inquiry committee led by High Court Justice Khandaker Diliruzzaman to investigate killings and other incidents.

Justice M Enayetur Rahim, chamber judge of the Supreme Court, following an appeal of the attorney general, fixed Sunday for a hearing on the quota-related case.

Anisul claimed that they learnt that the protesting students wanted talks. "We have welcomed their proposal. The prime minster also welcomed it."

He said the prime minister assigned him and the education minister to talk to the students. "We will sit with them ...We are ready to sit with them anytime. We are ready to sit even today," he told reporters at the Jatiya Sangsad complex.

"We think there is no need to continue with the protest anymore ... I am requesting them to either call off the demonstrations or suspend it."

Nazrul, also a chemistry teacher of the college, said there were never any instances of him getting involved in any altercations with his classmate.

"Though he was not a regular student in my class due to an illness he had, I always found him to be gentle and humble whenever he attended."

Mourning the loss of a bright student like Faiyaaz, current and former students of Dhaka Residential Model College blackened their Facebook profile pictures, protesting his killing.

Using different hashtags, they demanded justice for the death of all the victims in the violence against quota reform protesters. They also demanded punishment to all those involved in the killings.

Some critisised the law enforcement's actions on the protesters, stating the attacks were carried out to quell the movement.

'Even doctors, nurses couldn't hold back tears'

MASHFIQ MIZAN

"Move aside! Get me a stretcher! He needs help!"

The air inside Dhaka hospitals was filled with cries for help and painful screams.

One after another, injured students flooded into Uttara Adhunik Hospital, their bodies pierced by shotgun pellets.

Visiting the hospital, this newspaper found emergency camps set up in front of the gate, with stretchers, trolleys, and wheelchairs. Friends carried their injured fellows into the hospital, with vans, and CNG-run auto-rickshaws.

Those with comparatively less severe injuries were treated in front of the camps, while those with serious injuries were taken inside. The hospital authorities took an "all hands on deck" approach as day-offs of all the doctors and staffers were cancelled.

The interns and medical students nearby chipped in.

The scene resembled hospitals inside a war zone.

At least nine students were killed as police fired shotgun pellets and lobbed tear shells at protesting students in Uttara's Azampur area, said hospital authorities.

Over 1,000 students, mostly between 16 and 28 years old, sought treatment at Uttara Adhunik Hospital, said sources. Many are in critical conditions, they added.

However, the hospital authorities did not confirm the number of registered deaths.

Inside, this correspondent found the hospital floors filled with blood stains. There were not enough beds to treat all the patients.

Many were receiving treatment in the floor. Some parents were seen crying beside their injured sons.

Even the doctors struggled to fight back tears.

"I haven't seen such a horrific situation in 12 years of my professional life," said a nurse, requesting anonymity.

"Hundreds of protesting students with shotgun pellet wounds have streamed in since this afternoon. There aren't enough beds to accommodate them all. Even the doctors and nurses are in tears," she added.

SCENES FROM HOSPITALS IN DHAKA

The situation was worse in Kuwait Moitree Hospital, as seen by our reporter there. Eight bodies were kept inside the facility, all of whom had shotgun pellet wounds, said Mizanur Rahman, superintendent of the hospital.

Meanwhile, at least 100 injured students were brought to Crescent Hospital in Uttara.

According to hospital source, one body was kept there.

Similar situations persisted in hospitals near Mohammadpur and Dhanmondi.

A 17-year-old named Farhan Faiyaaz died in City Hospital, Mohammadpur. At least 200-250 injured were brought to the facility, said Osman Goni, assistant manager of the hospital. He confirmed Faiyaaz's demise.

Meanwhile, around 100 were admitted to Ibn Sina Hospital in Dhanmondi.

Also, two died and several hundreds were injured as police and students of BRAC University, East West University and other institutions clashed with police in the Badda and Rampura areas.

As such, the hospitals near Rampura and Banasree were also filled to the brim with wounded students. Over 300 wounded were brought to Better Life Hospital in Rampura. In Farazi Hospital, Banasree, over 450 students were admitted.

Meanwhile at Dhaka Medical College Hospital, around 275 people, most of them injured by shotgun pellets, were brought to the hospital. The situation turned dire in the evening evening, as hundreds of injured people started entering DMCH in one ambulance after another.

Most of the injured came from Jatrabai, Azampur and Rampura areas. At one stage, there were shortage of trollies and stretchers. At least seven persons had to be taken to ophthalmology department with eye injuries, including shotgun pellet wounds.

Around 10 bodies were brought to the hospital. Meanwhile, one protester, who was injured on Wednesday, succumbed to his injuries yesterday, said DMCH sources.

Violence escalates across country

STAR REPORT

For the third day in a row, the country witnessed widespread student protests, which erupted like wildfire in retaliation to the earlier attacks on them by law enforcers and Chhatra League men during their protests against quota system.

The protesters yesterday enforced a "complete shutdown" of transport networks, businesses, and offices as part of their movement.

Like the capital, the protests took place in many other cities and district towns, where law enforcers, alongside activists of Awami League and its associate bodies, attacked the protesters.

As a result, clashes took place among them, in which, six people, including three students, were killed outside the capital.

Also, over 500 were injured in at least 19 districts, reported our district correspondents.

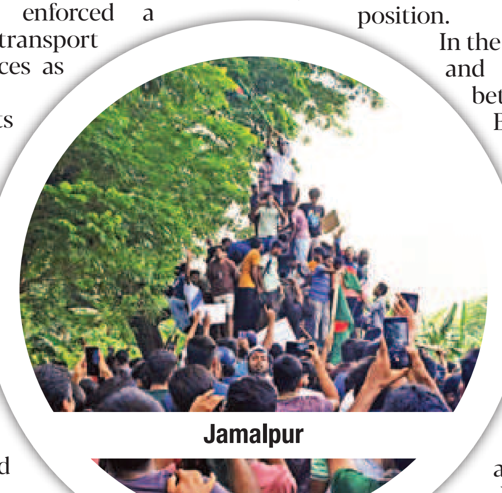
Shaikh Ashabul Yamin, a student of Military Institute of Science and Technology (MIST), was killed in Savar when protesters clashed with police and AL activists in the Savar Bazar bus stand area.

The victim's father Mohammad Mohiuddin confirmed the death.

Yusuf Ali, duty manager of Enam Medical College Hospital in Savar, told The Daily Star that Yamin, who had several rubber bullet injuries on his body, was brought to the hospital dead.

Five other injured were admitted to the hospital, he added.

Earlier, protesters blocked Pakiza bus stand on Dhaka-Aricha highway around 12:30pm and proceeded towards the Pakiza area, where leaders and activists of AL, its associate bodies, police, and BGB members took position.



Jamalpur

In the port city, two people were killed and 50 others injured in clashes between protesters and police in Bahaddarhat area.

Identities of the deceased could not be known immediately.

Tuhin Shubhro Das, emergency medical officer at CMCH, said two people with bullet wounds were brought to the hospital in the evening. One, aged around 21, succumbed to his injuries around 6:30pm while another, aged around 23, died at 7:00pm.

Witnesses said several thousand protesters chased the police and took control of Bahaddarhat Intersection around 2:00pm. Police charged batons and fired tear shells to disperse them.

Protesters also clashed with BCL activists in phases.

Later, the protesters attacked police around 6:00pm. They also set the police box at Bahaddarhat Intersection on fire.

In Narsingdi, two students were killed during clash

Stop 'barbaric attack' on students

Says GM Quader

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Jatiyo Party Chairman GM Quader yesterday urged the government to stop "barbaric attack" on students and accept their logical demands.

GM Quader, also opposition leader of the parliament, said police and BCL have been attacking general students with arms for the last few days, which is unacceptable in a civilised society.

GM Quader made the comment in a press statement.

He decried the "excessive use of force" by law enforcement agencies, and condemned the deaths of protesters in face of police action.

He said police killed Begum Rokeya University, Rangpur student Abu Sayed in cold blood by shooting him at a close range.

BNP's solidarity programmes today

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP will arrange various programmes across the country today in support of the ongoing student movement for the reformation of quotas in government jobs.

The party's secretary general Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir made the announcement at an urgent press briefing at BNP Chairperson's Office in Dhaka's Gulshan last night.

As part of their programmes, it will demonstrate in front of Jatiya Press Club followed by a rally, alongside bringing out similar processions in every city and district headquarters.

Stressing that people are united against this government, Fakhrul said they have extended support to the students' demands and suggested them to solve the problem through discussion.

However, the government itself has blocked the way for solution to the existing crisis, he added.

Take to streets to save country

Quader calls upon party men

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday asked party leaders and activists to take to streets and face the situation to save the country from plots of the evil forces.

He made the remarks while addressing a press conference at the party president' Dhanmondi office.

He alleged that BNP-Jamaat coalition is using the ongoing quota reform movement to get political benefits, saying the movement is no longer in the hands of the general students.

The armed cadres of BNP-Jamaat are operating criminal activities across the country aiming to topple the government, Quader said, adding, "Quota reform is no longer an issue for them."

He said the government is closely watching the situation while the law enforcers are working to ensure security of general students. Action will be taken against those who have created this situation through criminal activities, he warned.

Invest in marine resources

PM urges entrepreneurs

UNB, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday urged local and foreign entrepreneurs to invest in extracting marine resources, as Bangladesh is determined to strengthen its ocean economy amid the growing demand for seafood in the world.

"I would like to call upon all local and foreign investors to invest in Bangladesh and use these [marine] resources in a broader way," the premier said while addressing the inaugural ceremony of Bangladesh International Aquaculture and Seafood Show-2004 at Bangabandhu International Conference Center in the capital.

Bangladesh exports a wide variety of marine fish, Hasina said, adding, "I strongly feel the need to increase seawater fish production."

She said Bangladesh has a huge potential to make its blue economy more prosperous.

"I think we need to pay more attention to how we can extract and use our deep-sea resources. We want to take our country forward using marine resources because the demand for seafood is increasing all over the world," said the prime minister.

The PM said the investors will get all kinds of support from Bangladesh Investment Development Authority as Bangladesh offers many facilities for them.

Parts of Dhaka deserted in 'complete shutdown'

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Parts of Dhaka wore an almost deserted look yesterday with city streets remaining empty, as fear gripped people following students' enforcement of a "complete shutdown" across the country.

Protesting students on Wednesday night announced a "complete shutdown", in protest of the law enforcers' action against them, alongside the one-point demand of quota reform and the additional demand of "crime-free" campuses.

While visiting different areas of Dhaka, it was seen that the number of public vehicles on the roads were thin. The usual scenario of traffic jams on the city roads was not seen yesterday. The number of people using different public vehicles was low compared to other days as well.

Few private vehicles were seen on the roads. Even on the metro rail, the presence of commuters was low although it was a working day.

However, during the enforcement of the "complete shutdown", clashes broke out between protesters and police in different areas of the city, including Shanir Akhra, Jatrabari, Mirpur-10, Science Lab, and Badda.

Amid violent clashes on campuses between quota protesters on one side and police, Chhatra League and Jubo League on the other, the University Grants Commission on July 16 declared that all public and private universities will remain closed until further notice.

At the same time, all affiliated medical, textile, engineering and other colleges will also remain closed, it announced.

The commission also directed the university authorities to vacate the residential halls considering the safety of the students.

On the same day, all secondary, higher secondary, and polytechnic institutes and colleges under the National University were declared closed until further notice.

At least 35 people were killed and thousands were injured till yesterday as clashes took place during nationwide protests demanding the abolition of quotas in government jobs.

Student's protest programme gained momentum as thousands of students from private universities and colleges have also joined the movement, which had previously been dominated by public university students.

The widespread demonstrations began yesterday morning following violent attacks on quota protesters at public universities across the country on July 15.

Violence escalates

between protestors and police at Bhelanagar area.

Deceased were Imon Ahmed, 21, who returned from Malaysia and Tahmid Tamim, 15, a class nine student. The clash left at least 100 more injured.

Mizanur Rahman, residential medical officer of Narsingdi District Hospital and Mahmudul Kabir, RMO of Narsingdi Sadar Hospital, confirmed the deaths.

In Madaripur, Dipta Dey, a student of Madaripur Government College, drowned in Shakuni Lake in the district town after being chased by police and BCL activists during a clash.

The clash left around 50 more injured.

The district's Additional Superintendent of Police Md. Moniruzzaman confirmed the death.

"The protesters gathered at the Shakuni Lake area. They hurled brickbats at the police and attacked with sticks, and in response, police charged batons, fired rubber bullet, and lobbed tear shells to disperse them," he claimed.

Later, police recovered a body from the lake, he said, adding, "However, we don't know how he died. We will know details of the death after investigation."

In the evening, protesters set fire to a police outpost and attacked the offices of the superintendent of police and deputy commissioner.

In Bogura, at least 53, including 10 police men, were injured in Bogura yesterday during the clash between law enforcers and protestors at town's Satmatha and court area.

A total of 43 injured students, including 12 with rubber bullet injuries, were taking treatment at Shaheed Ziaur Rahman Medical College, according to the hospital's deputy director, Abdul Wadud.

In a separate clash with police at the Bogura District Court area around 1:45pm, at least 10 police personnel were injured. They are receiving treatment at Mohammad Ali Hospital in Bogura, said the hospital's resident doctor.

At least 10 protesting students and two police personnel were injured as law enforcers fired shotguns and rubber bullets at protesters outside Shahjalal University of Science and Technology in Sylhet.

Students started demonstrating from 10:00am blocking the Sylhet-Sunamganj Highway. As the police asked them to leave at around 1:15pm, the protestors started throwing stones and brick chunks at police.

Police then baton-charged the students and lobbed sound grenades, shotgun fire, and rubber bullets. Intermittent chase and counter chase between police and protestors at Madina Market, Akhalia and Kumargaon areas continued till 7:30pm

In Natore, at least six individuals, including five police personnel, were injured when protesters clased with police and Chhatra League activists.

In Manikganj, around 100 people were injured in sporadic clashes between the protesters and ruling AL men at Shaheed Rafiq Chattar, Seota, and Khalpar area.

In Rangpur, at least 50 people, including six police, were injured in a clash between students and police at Tajhat area near Begum Rokeya University.

The clash took place when several thousands tried to march towards Tajhat Police Station and police resisted them at around 2:30pm.

In Dinajpur, at least 50 people were injured in several clashes between protesters and AL men in the district town.

The protesters attacked two offices of AL in Dinajpur and burnt 15 motorcycles in front of it. Police charged sound granades to disperse them.

Flood turned them into boatmen

Haor residents in peril amid lack of work

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Moulvibazar

Shimul Ahmed, a saw-mill worker from Hakaluki Haor area under Moulvibazar's Kulaura upazila, has been having a hard time to earn bread for his family since the flood hit the different upazilas of the district.

"As the floodwaters rose, our saw-mill became submerged and had to be shut down. I lived without work for several days. There was no money to manage food for my family of six. Our house also got submerged," he said.

Shimul did what many in his community have done -- he rented a boat and transformed himself into a boatman, ferrying people to safety from flood-affected areas.

Jasim Uddin, a mason from Bhagmatpur village in Kadipur union, has also done the same.

"Once the flood recedes, I will return to my work as a mason," he said.

Suleman Ahmed, another local resident, and a dozen others, shared the same.

"Due to flood, people have been confined to their homes for days, amid a crisis of food and drinking water, without any earnings. So many like us have started to venture out and look for alternative ways to earn some money," Suleman said.

The Nawabganj-Kulaura road in Kadipur union under Kulaura upazila in Moulvibazar has been completely submerged for a month so far, and boats are now the only means of commute.

Similar situation exists across the flood-affected areas in Sylhet and Sunamganj districts.

Md Harun Mia, a former member of Kadipur Union Parishad, said this year's flood has been the worst in recent memory.

He expressed disappointment over the inadequate government response and lack of support from charitable sources.

CHANDURA-AKHAURA ROAD

Pothole woes worsen in Bijaynagar

OUR CORRESPONDENT, B'baria

The 22km-long Chandura-Akhaura regional road in Brahmanbaria's Bijaynagar upazila is in a dire condition, riddled with hundreds of water-filled potholes.

This hazardous state has made the road a hotspot for frequent accidents.

Locals rely on this road to access key institutions, including the Bijaynagar Police Station, Upazila Parishad Complex, Akhaura Land Port, Dhaka-Sylhet Highway, Amtoli Bazar, Daudpur Government High School, Bijoynagar Upazila Health Complex, Awlia Bazar, Champaknagar, and Singerbil Bazar.

The road serves as the primary communication route for over 300,000 people from 10 unions of the upazila, according to LGED sources.

The road is essential not only for Bijaynagar and Akhaura residents but also for people from Madhabpur upazila in Habiganj, who use it for export-import activities via the land port.

Additionally, trucks carrying stones from Sylhet division's districts frequently use this route.

Shahjahan Miah, a resident of Champaknagar village, said, "During the monsoon, almost the entire road is filled with stagnant water. Easy bikes, CNG-run auto-rickshaws, and motorcycles often get stuck in these potholes."

Commuters say a ten-minute journey can take over half an hour due to the road's condition.

Rimon Bhuiyan, a shopkeeper at Singerbil Bazar, often has to walk part of the way as potholes impede vehicular movement.

CNG-run auto-rickshaw driver Shohag Mia said, "Our vehicles are often damaged, and there is always risk of accidents."

LGED's Bijaynagar upazila engineer, Mohammad Ashiqur Rahman Bhuiyan, said, "This road has a carrying capacity of 10 tonnes, but trucks carrying 20-30 tonnes of goods ply it daily. As a result, even after repeated renovations, the pitch casting of the road is easily removed."

He said the damaged parts of the road will be repaired soon.

Man to die for killing nephew, niece in B'baria

OUR CORRESPONDENT, B'baria

A Brahmanbaria court yesterday sentenced a man to death for killing his nephew and niece in Banchharampur upazila in 2020.

Additional District and Sessions Judge Md Abdul Hannan also fined Badol Miah, 34, from Khudadaudpur in Homna upazila of Cumilla, Tk 50,000, court sources said.

The victims -- Shifa Akhter, 14, and her younger brother Mehedi Hasan Kamrul, 10 -- were children of Kamal Hossain from Sahebnagar in Banchharampur.

Badol is Kamal's brother-in-law, and the incident happened when Badol stayed at Kamal's house for two months during the pandemic.

According to the case filed by Kamal, Badol borrowed Tk 13 lakh from him to open a shop. Later, they locked into argument as Badol did not pay him back. At one point, Kamal slapped Badol, which made him furious.

On August 24, 2020, he knifed Shifa and Mehedi to death in the house to take revenge on Kamal, added the case statement.

Flood damages crops worth Tk 106cr

Say officials, local markets hit by vegetable supply crisis

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

The ongoing flood in Kurigram has so far damaged crops worth Tk 105 crore across 7,960 hectares of land in the district.

Crops worth Tk 1 crore have also been damaged by flood across 40 hectares of land in Lalmonirhat.

Officials of the Department of Agricultural Extension in the districts confirmed the matter.

Different vegetables and leafy greens including spinach were damaged on 2,700 hectares while Aman paddy seedbeds and jute were damaged on 5,300 hectares of agricultural lands in the shoal areas of the Brahmaputra, Dudhkumar and Dharla rivers in the districts.

Khandkar Abu Bakkar Siddique, a farmer of Sardob village of Holokhana union in Kurigram Sadar, said he had planted chili on 50 decimals of the land at a cost of Tk 1 lakh.

"The chili field was completely damaged due to flood water. I could not harvest even 5kg of chili," he said.

Nabir Hossain, a farmer of Hatia village in Ulipur upazila of Kurigram, said his eight bighas of jute and three bighas of various vegetables were submerged for about two weeks.

"The flood water receded but my around 5 bighas of jute and three bighas of vegetables were damaged," he lamented.

Due to the damages, local markets in the two districts are going through a supply crisis of vegetables, said traders.

Confirming the matter, Abdullah Al Mamun, deputy director of DAE in Kurigram, said hundreds of affected famers are working on re-cultivating vegetables on their croplands as floodwaters receded.

"Huge damage to the crops has been sustained in the flood. We are preparing a list of affected farmers for government's incentives," he added.

Biden tests positive for Covid, fueling health worries

AFP, Las Vegas

US President Joe Biden tested positive for Covid with mild symptoms Wednesday, shortly after conceding he would consider dropping his reelection bid if doctors diagnosed him with a serious medical condition.

The 81-year-old Democrat gave reporters the thumbs up and said "I feel good" as he cut short a trip to Las Vegas and flew to his beach home in Delaware to go into isolation, which will take him off the campaign trail for days.

Biden thanked well-wishers on X, adding that "I will be isolating as I recover, and during this time I will continue to work to get the job done for the American people."

The infection comes at a critical moment for Biden's campaign, with the president seeking to show he is up to the job after a disastrous debate performance against rival Donald Trump sparked concerns about his health and calls from some Democrats for him to step aside.

It is also the latest development in a tumultuous few days in an already frenetic White House race that saw Trump survive an assassination attempt at a campaign rally.

Biden was forced to cancel a speech to a union representing Latino workers who will be crucial for his election bid, having attended a campaign event earlier in the day and given a radio interview.

His spokeswoman Karine Jean-Pierre said Biden was vaccinated and boosted, was now taking the Covid medication Paxlovid and "continues to carry out the full duties of the office while in isolation."

TRADITIONAL LAL CHINI

Fair price delights Mymensingh farmers

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

Farmers involved in producing red sugar, locally known as Lal Chini, in Mymensingh's Phulbaria upazila are delighted due to a good production and fair price of the item this year.

Lal Chini is a cash crop for hundreds of farmers, mostly small and marginal, in different areas of Phulbaria including Radhakanai, Polashtali, Bidhyananda, Koierchala, Bakta, Kushmail, Kaladah, Enayetpur, Rangamatia, Sontoshpur and Chowdhar village.

Production of Lal Chini is a 200-year-old tradition in Phulbaria and the area is famous for the item, said locals.

Many farmers, who once diverted to other crops cultivation like pineapple, banana, lemon and turmeric due to low price of Lal Chini in the previous years, are now gradually returning to sugarcane cultivation as they are getting a good price of their produce, said 90-year-old Muntaz Ali Fakir of Polashtali Chalapara village.

Muntaz's grandson Enamul Haque, an expatriate in Maldives, recently returned home and started expanding the cultivation area.

Enamul said he made a profit of around Tk 20,000 from his 20 decimals of land this year and he would go for as expanded cultivation next year.

As both the production and prices are quite good this year, each maund of Lal Chini is selling for Tk 6,000 to Tk 8,000 according to its quality, he said.

Farmer Dulal Mia of the locality, who had a reasonable profit from Lal Chini this year, said he will go for more sugarcane cultivation next year as the profit is much inspiring this year.

Cultivation of Lal Chini is comparatively cheap than the other crops as it requires little watering, less qualtity of fertilizers and insecticides, the farmer said.

Another farmer Adam Ali said they would get more profit if farmers could sell their products directly to the government agencies.

Farmers said sugarcane leaves and bagasse are also sold locally, which adds additional financial support to the farmers family.

Phulbaria Sub-Assistant Plant Protection Officer Md Abu Raihan said sugarcane was cultivated on a total of 650 hectares of land in the upazila this year and they have a target to produce around 5,200 tonnes of Lal Chini worth around Tk 100 crore.

Mymensingh Department of Agriculture Extension (DAE) Deputy Director Dr Nasrin Akhter Banu said Lal Chini is produced only in Phulbaria and it has good potential to grow as an industry.

foreign ministry.

He told reporters that they do not comment on the internal affairs of any country.

"It is unfortunate that there is violence and loss of life. However, we believe that the government of Bangladesh and people have the capacity and wisdom to solve their own problems," Wen said.

On the recent visit of the prime minister to China, he said, "After internal coordination, we discussed and are going to provide a package of grants, interest free-loan, preferential loan, and commercial loan. In total, it is $2 billion."

The details of the package need to be finalised at the working level, he said, adding, "This demonstrates our support to Bangladesh. I believe this package will boost our bilateral cooperation and development."

He told Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud that Chinese special envoy on Asian affairs Wang Yingfan will be visiting Bangladesh soon and discuss the Rohingya crisis and the ways of solving it.

The ambassador said China agrees that there was no other solution except safe repatriation of the Rohingyas to their homeland.

"It is a big problem for Bangladesh," he said, noting that conflict broke out in Myanmar, and it is intensifying in Rakhine too.

Bangladesh is hosting nearly 1.3 million Rohingyas in Cox's Bazar and Bhasan Char.

Wen shed light on Hasina's recent visit to China and discussed bilateral issues, including determining the focal point of Bangladesh in terms of comprehensive economic cooperation with China, celebrating 50 years of China's diplomatic relations with Bangladesh, and advancing comprehensive strategic cooperation.

Foreign Minister Hasan through the ambassador invited his Chinese counterpart to visit Bangladesh at a convenient time and urged China to build another road-tunnel in Chattogram.

30 establishments torched

The agitating students also set fire to a police outpost near the Madaripur launch terminal and the district Awami League office, according to police sources.

In Dhaka, protesters torched at least three police outposts in Mohammadpur, Dhanmondi-27 and Mirpur.

Towhidul Islam, additional deputy commissioner (Uttara division) of Dhaka Metropolitan Police, said demonstrators set fire to two vans, including one of the police, in Uttara.

A vehicle of Border Guard Bangladesh was set on fire in Hatijheel around 6:00pm.

The Banani toll plaza of the Dhaka Elevated Expressway was set on fire around 9:00pm.

On Wednesday evening, demonstrators torched the toll plaza of the Mayor Mohammad Hanif Flyover in Jatrabari.

Sources in the Fire Service and Civil Defence yesterday said they received information of at least 33 violence-related fire incidents across the country from July 17 to midnight last night. Twenty-three of those took place in the Dhaka city corporation area.

Over the last two days, one fire was reported in Narayanganj, two fire incidents were reported in Gaibandha, two in Rangpur city, and one each in Kushtia, Sirajganj, Barishal, Natore and Madaripur districts, the release said.

It added that six buses, two microbuses, 20 motorcycles, two offices of political parties, a toll plaza, a police station, a police box, a police car, and two government offices were damaged.

In another release, the fire service said that at least five vehicles of their department were damaged and four staffers were hurt till 8:30pm yesterday.

Talha Bin Zasim, media officer of the fire service, said the four came under an attack by a group of people when they were going to discharge their duties.

Internet service blocked across the country

Telecommunication Regulatory Commission said internet communication is disrupted throughout the country due to fire in a Mohakhali building that houses data centres supplying a large volume of internet traffic.

According to the ISPAB, no fire was set in any building with the data centres. There was a fire in an adjacent building and some overhead cables of data centres located in the vicinity were damaged.

The damage would affect at best 20 percent of internet supply, according to industry insiders who spoke on the condition of anonymity due to the sensitivity of the matter.

Meanwhile, Zunaid Ahmed Palak, the state minister for telecom and ICT, said mobile internet services will be resumed as soon as the environment and the law-and-order situation stabilise.

"A vested quarter is trying to derail the law-and-order situation by spreading rumours on social media — that is why we have disconnected the mobile internet services without any prior declaration," he said at the inauguration of 20 e-learning courses of an ICT Division project in the capital yesterday.

Contacted, Grameenphone, the country's leading mobile operator, said in a statement: "Considering the ongoing situation in the country, the government has temporarily stopped mobile internet services. The honourable state minister has already given his statement in the media. We are dependent on the authorities to restart the mobile internet services. We are in constant communication with the authorities in this regard."

Shahed Alam, chief corporate and regulatory officer of Robi, said the carrier has received threatening messages from its subscribers to resume mobile internet services or else its headquarters would be attacked.

New Gaza strikes after Netanyahu warning

AFP, Gaza Strip

Palestinians yesterday mourned relatives killed in overnight Israeli strikes in the Gaza Strip, where Israel's prime minister has vowed to intensify the pressure on militants even as demands grow for him to reach a deal that would free hostages.

AFPTV images showed mourners at Al-Aqsa Martyrs Hospital in Deir el-Balah city, where several white-shrouded corpses lay on the ground. One man cradled the covered body of a child.

Rescuers confirmed several people had been killed in separate Israeli strikes in central Gaza.

At the hospital, Ahmed Abu Muheisen said one strike had targeted his cousin's family in the Al-Zuwaida area.

"His children and his wife were martyred and so was he," Muheisen said.

"Enough, enough already!" said another mourner, Eid Abu Rakab.

In Israel too, there are similar calls.

Anti-government demonstrators, sometimes marching by the tens of thousands, and separate rallies by families and other supporters of hostages held by Hamas, have stepped up their actions demanding the government reach a deal to free the captives.

"We feel this is a critical moment," Osnat Sharabi Matalon, two of whose brothers were taken hostage, said at a protest on Wednesday in Tel Aviv.

She said they demand a deal before Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu travels to the United States, where he is scheduled to address Congress on July 24.

During the more than nine months of war, Netanyahu has consistently vowed to eradicate Hamas and bring home all the hostages.

On Tuesday he said "we are hurting" Hamas and this is "exactly the time to increase the pressure even more."

He told parliament: "We have got them by the throat."

Far-right members of his governing coalition, including National Security Minister Itamar Ben Gvir, oppose a truce deal. On Thursday Ben Gvir said Netanyahu must not make a "surrender" accord with Hamas.

Israel's military offensive has killed at least 38,848 people, mostly civilians, according to data from the health ministry in Hamas-ruled Gaza.

The latest toll issued Thursday included 54 deaths in the past 24 hours, it said.

All health facilities in southern Gaza have been pushed to "breaking point" due to an influx of people wounded by Israeli bombardments, the International Committee of the Red Cross said on Thursday.

SC to hear pleas against HC verdict in Dhaka's Bailey Road area, as the chamber judge of the Appellate Division is on service round the clock.

Earlier in the day, Amin Uddin told The Daily Star that he would move an application before the Appellate Division on Sunday for the early hearing on the government's leave to appeal petition against the HC judgement.

"Considering the importance of the issue, the apex court may hold the hearing on the leave to appeal petition on Sunday or Monday," he said.

On July 16, the government filed the petition with the SC seeking the scrapping of the HC verdict.

In the petition, the government said it is a policy decision of the government whether to keep the provision of quotas in public service, and the court cannot interfere in this.

On that day, the attorney general told reporters that the Appellate Division is scheduled to hear the leave to appeal petition on August 7.

However, Law Minister Anisul Huq told a press briefing yesterday that the prime minister asked him to take an initiative to hold an early hearing of the quota-related case at the SC.

The minister said he already instructed the attorney general to take an initiative in this regard and the AG would appeal to the SC on Sunday.

Meanwhile, two Dhaka University students yesterday filed a similar leave to appeal petition with the Appellate Division challenging the June 5HC verdict.

Al Sadi Bhuiyan, a student of anthropology and also the president of Dhaka University Journalists Association, and Ahnaf Sayeed Khan, a student of Urdu, submitted the petition through senior lawyer Shah Monjurul Hoque.

Following a writ petition, the HC on June 5 declared illegal the circular that cancelled the quota system in government jobs.

The circular, issued by the public administration ministry on October 4, 2018, said that in the case of direct recruitment to the posts of 9th grade (formerly class 1) and 10th to 13th grades (formerly class 2), the appointments should be made based on merit.

The HC in the full text of its judgement, released on July 14, also directed the government to restore and maintain the quotas for freedom fighters' children, districts, women, physically challenged people, tribes, minor races, and ethnic groups and others, if any, and to publish a notification in this regard as soon as possible, preferably within three months, from the date of receipt of its order.

The court, however, said the government can change, reduce or increase the ratio or percentage of the quotas in public jobs, if necessary, and can fill the vacant posts from the general merit list if any quota in government recruitment is not fulfilled.

Protesting the HC judgment, students staged demonstrations at different educational institutions, including Dhaka University. They took to the streets on July 1, demanding the reinstatement of the 2018 circular.

Students intensified their protests across the country since July 4 as the Appellate Division did not stay the HC verdict following a government petition.

The protesters are holding demonstrations, demanding reforms of the quota system through the formulation of a law.

Amid such a situation, the government and two Dhaka University students moved two petitions before the Appellate Division seeking stay

Jannatur Mohona, staff reporter of Desh TV, and its cameraperson Abdul Khaleq were injured near Karnaphuli Garden City in the capital's Shantinagar, he added.

Senior Reporter of DBC News Farhana Yasmin Juthi, Special Correspondent of The Business Standard Qutubuddin Muhammad Jashim, and Staff Reporter of Banglavision Forrukh Babu were also injured, according to a press release of the DRU.

Earlier, all public and private universities had already been declared closed due to the situation surrounding the quota movement.

Additionally, all secondary and higher secondary level educational institutions (schools, colleges, madrasas, and technical institutions) under the Ministry of Education, polytechnic institutes, and all primary schools in city corporation areas have been declared closed until further notice.

Clashes have been taking place in different parts of the country for several days regarding the protests demanding reform of the quota system in government jobs.

statement yesterday.

The Indian High Commission also advised its citizens in Bangladesh to avoid travel and minimise their movement outside their living premises.

An advisory issued by the mission asked Indian nationals to reach out to the High Commission and Assistant High Commissions in Chattogram, Sylhet, Rajshahi, and Khulna in case of any urgency or need for assistance.

The US embassy said reports indicate several deaths and hundreds injured across Bangladesh. The situation is extremely volatile. Protests are likely to affect local transportation services and make getting in and out of Dhaka difficult.

"US citizens should practice vigilance and reconsider their travel plans, especially to areas around public universities. You should avoid demonstrations and exercise caution in the vicinity of any large gatherings.

"Review personal security plans; remain aware of your surroundings, including local events; and monitor local news stations for updates," it said.

The US embassy in Dhaka was also closed to the general public yesterday. Mission personnel have been advised to limit their movements to the diplomatic enclave.

visited the vice chancellor's residence separately.

In the afternoon, police and students from different schools and colleges chased and counter-chased each other in Azimpur and Nilkhet areas.

At Jahangirnagar University, the situation was calm all day long. A large number of law enforcers were deployed on the campus, reports our Savar correspondent.

Around 6:00pm, some 300 students, mostly from areas close to the campus, gathered in front of the main entrance to the university. They chanted slogans protesting police action on protesters across the county.

Students of Rajshahi University blocked the Dhaka-Rajshahi highway for about two hours from 2:30pm yesterday. Several hundred students from the Binodpur area staged the demonstration near the main entrance to RU.

'US ARMS IN GERMANY'

Russia threatens to deploy nuke missiles

REUTERS

Russia does not rule out new deployments of nuclear missiles in response to the planned US stationing of long-range conventional weapons in Germany, Deputy Foreign Minister Sergei Ryabkov was quoted as saying yesterday.

Interfax news agency cited Ryabkov as saying that the defence of Russia's Kaliningrad region, which is wedged between Nato members Poland and Lithuania, was a particular focus.

"I am not ruling out any options," he told reporters in Moscow when asked about US weapons deployment plan.

The United States said last week it would start deployment in Germany from 2026 of weapons that will include SM-6, Tomahawk and new hypersonic missiles in order to demonstrate its commitment to Nato and European defence.

Mahathir, 99, in hospital

AFP, Kuala Lumpur

Malaysia's nearly 100-year-old former prime minister Mahathir Mohamad has been hospitalised for "continuous coughing", his aide told AFP yesterday.

"Mahathir is expected to be treated for the next few days," Sufi Yusoff said, adding he had been admitted on Monday.

A two-time former PM Mahathir turned 99 last week. He has suffered several heart problems in recent years and underwent bypass surgeries.

Biden working towards what's best for US

Says key senator amid speculations that he may step aside from the presidential race

REUTERS, Delaware

US President Joe Biden is working towards a decision on whether to stay in the presidential race that is good for the country, Senator John Hickenlooper told Reuters, noting sadness among Democrats about the president while stopping short of saying he should step aside.

Hickenlooper, who ran for the 2020 Democratic presidential nomination that Biden won, declined to add his voice to the growing number of lawmakers explicitly calling on Biden to leave the race. But he said there was mounting evidence it would be good for the country if that were the decision Biden made.

"Joe Biden has always put the country first. He's done what's best for America...I think he'll keep doing so," Hickenlooper said in a telephone interview late Wednesday. "He's working towards that."

Asked about Biden potentially stepping aside, Hickenlooper said: "That's his decision to make, but certainly there's more and more indications that that would be in the best interests of the country, I think."

Biden, 81, is facing calls from influential members of his party to leave the Democratic ticket after his shaky debate performance against former President Donald Trump, now the Republican nominee, raised concerns about his age and ability to prevail in the November election.

Hickenlooper said there is a sense of anguish among Democrats who hold Biden, who served in the Senate for 36 years, in high esteem, even if they believe he should not be running for re-election.

"I don't think a lot of people realize how beloved Joe Biden is and what sorrow and anguish people feel that he might not be the candidate. Even people who feel that he should not be the candidate feel a great sense of loss," Hickenlooper said.

"He's been one of the greatest presidents, perhaps the greatest president of my lifetime."

But Hickenlooper said feedback from his constituents in Colorado - not donors, he said, and not insiders - showed overwhelmingly that average Democratic voters wanted Biden to step aside.

Biden is convalescing from Covid 19 at his house in Rehoboth Beach, Delaware. On Saturday he met one-one-one with Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer, who reportedly urged him to exit the race.

Biden has been largely defiant in the face of such calls. The White House said late Wednesday the president told Schumer he was the party's nominee and he planned to win the election.

Hickenlooper said if Biden had wavered in his determination to stay in the race, that would have opened the floodgates for more calls to step aside.

"That doesn't mean he couldn't still in the end decide to stay in," said Hickenlooper, who was a brewpub owner in Denver before launching a career in politics, adding Biden would not waste time in making his decision.

"Everyone's got their own rate of fermentation."

Trump to rally unified Republicans in convention finale

AFP, Milwaukee

Donald Trump was set to get the red carpet treatment yesterday as he accepts the Republican nomination to run for US president in a hotly-anticipated speech capping a historic party convention dominated by the weekend attempt on his life.

The 78-year-old ex-president can expect a hero's welcome on the final day of the Republican National Convention in Milwaukee, as he addresses a nation still reeling from the assassination bid by a lone gunman at a rally in Pennsylvania.

Saturday's attack -- which killed one bystander and left Trump with a bloodied ear -- has loomed large at the convention, with Republicans lining up to applaud the former president for his bravery.

As some Republicans sought to blame Democrats' anti-Trump rhetoric for the attack, the billionaire said he had torn up a more aggressive version of his keynote address in favor of one he hopes will "unite our country."

Trump's keynote address will be followed on television by millions, closing the convention by ushering in "a new golden age for America," according to the campaign.

It brings down the curtain on four days of speeches from elected officials, entertainers, industry figures and everyday Americans who mixed with some 50,000 Republicans who had traveled from all corners of the nation.

Two dead as passenger train derails in India

REUTERS, Lucknow

At least two people were killed and 20 injured after several coaches of a passenger train jumped the tracks in India's northern state of Uttar Pradesh yesterday, authorities said.

TV visuals showed coaches of the Chandigarh-Dibrugarh Express, which connects India's northern states to the eastern state of Assam, on their sides along the tracks, with passengers sitting outside with their luggage.

The derailment occurred in Gonda district, more than 100 km from state capital Lucknow.

A team of doctors was at the site treating the injured before they were moved to a hospital, the state's relief commissioner said in a statement.

The incident occurred around 2:30pm and initial reports said around five coaches had derailed, railways spokesman Pankaj Singh told the ANI news agency. "Our first priority is to complete relief and rescue work there as quickly as possible."

At least 15 people died and dozens were injured last month when a freight train smashed into the rear of a stationary passenger train in the eastern state of West Bengal.

China shopping mall fire kills 16

AFP, Beijing

A fire that tore through a shopping centre in southwestern China has killed 16 people, state media reported Thursday.

Rescue operations concluded at around 3:00 am on Thursday (1900 GMT Wednesday), according to the local fire and rescue services cited by state news agency Xinhua.

Video broadcast by state media CCTV and shared on social media Wednesday night showed thick black smoke billowing out of the 14-storey tower in Zigong, Sichuan province.

The blaze started in the early evening in a shopping centre at the foot of the building, the channel said. Around 30 people were rescued from the complex, with the fire extinguished by rescuers around 8:20 pm on Wednesday, CCTV said.

Later footage provided by a drone operator to AFP showed firetrucks and other first responders blocking off the road late at night, continuing to spray down the charred building.

As of 3:00am, the death toll stood at 16 with no individuals left trapped inside, said Xinhua.

Russia gives cautious reaction to Zelensky's summit offer

AFP, Moscow

The Kremlin has given a cautious reaction to Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky's apparent invitation to a future peace summit, saying that Russia first needs to understand what Kyiv means before attending talks.

Zelensky said on Monday that Russia "should" be represented at a second summit on the Ukraine conflict, a change of tone from last month when Kyiv excluded Moscow from a high-level peace conference in Switzerland.

"The first peace summit was not a peace summit at all. So perhaps it is necessary to first understand what he means," Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov told the Zvezda television channel, responding to Zelensky's comments.

Leaders and top officials from more than 90 countries gathered at the Swiss mountainside resort of Burgenstock in June for the first summit, which Russia derided as a waste of time.

Both Russia and Ukraine are worlds apart on the terms of a possible peace settlement to end the more than two year conflict.

Moscow insists it must keep all the territory it now occupies -- some 20 percent of the country -- while Kyiv demands all Russian soldiers retreat from Ukraine's internationally recognised borders, including the Crimean peninsula, which Moscow annexed in 2014.

/- 'Not worried' -/Washington said Monday that it backed Ukraine's decision to invite Russia to a second summit, but expressed doubt about whether Moscow was ready for talks.

"When they want to invite Russia to that summit, of course, that is something we support," US State Department spokesman Matthew Miller told journalists.

"We've always supported diplomacy when Ukraine is ready, but it has never been clear that the Kremlin is ready for actual diplomacy," he said.

Ahead of last month's summit, Russian President Vladimir Putin said he was open for negotiations and would announce a ceasefire immediately if Kyiv effectively surrendered territory that Moscow claims as its own.

Zelensky slammed Putin's demands as a territorial "ultimatum" reminiscent of those issued by Adolf Hitler, and Ukraine's Western backers including the United States reacted with scorn.

But there is growing apprehension in Kyiv about the long-term trajectory of the conflict, given Russia's recent battlefield gains and the potential for a Donald Trump victory in November's US elections.

Zelensky said on Monday he was "not worried" about the prospect of Trump winning and that he was still counting on support from the United States, Ukraine's biggest financial and military backer.

But the Republican Party candidate has suggested he would end the conflict very quickly if he won back the presidency, a promise Kyiv fears would mean being forced to negotiate with Moscow from a weakened position.

Rwanda's Kagame re-elected with 99.18 percent of votes

AFP, Kigali

Rwanda's all-powerful President Paul Kagame has been re-elected to a fourth term in office with 99.18 percent of the vote, according to full provisional results published Thursday.

The outcome of Monday's poll was never in doubt, with Kagame ruling the small African nation with an iron fist as de facto leader then president for three decades.

Garnering 8.82 million votes, the 66-year-old -- who will extend his rule by another five years -- won by an even greater margin than in the last presidential poll seven years ago, when he secured 98.79 percent.

Democratic Green Party leader Frank Habineza won just 0.5 percent in Monday's vote while independent candidate Philippe Mpayimana received 0.32 percent, according to figures from the National Electoral Commission.

The two men, who had also challenged Kagame in 2017, were the only two candidates approved to run this year after several opposition figures were barred.

Kagame is credited with rebuilding a shattered nation after the 1994 genocide, but is also accused of ruling in a climate of fear at home, and fomenting instability in the neighbouring Democratic Republic of Congo.

He has won every presidential election he has contested with more than 93 percent of the ballot.

In 2015, Kagame oversaw controversial constitutional amendments that shortened presidential terms from seven to five years but reset the clock for the Rwandan leader, allowing him to potentially rule until 2034.

With 65 percent of the population aged under 30, Kagame is the only leader most Rwandans have ever known.

Over nine million Rwandans -- including two million first-time voters -- were registered to cast their ballot, with the presidential race being held simultaneously as legislative elections for the first time.

Definitive results are due to be released by July 27.

A sad day for the nation

What took the government so long to see reason in quota reforms?

No words are enough to adequately describe our shock and pain at the heavy casualties that occurred on Thursday, as a "complete shutdown" announced by the anti-quota protesters degenerated into a complete breakdown of law and order across the country. As of writing this editorial, at least 19 people, mostly students, were killed while many hundreds were injured during violent clashes between the protesters and members of security forces and Awami League-affiliated groups. The overall death toll in the ongoing quota movement, counting the six that died on Tuesday, now stands at 25. The severity of the protests—which continued well into Thursday night—can be understood from the fact that more than 2,500 were injured nationwide, a number of them suffering from shotgun wounds.

So much loss and suffering for a cause that any other country with a reasonable socio-economic ambition would have addressed proactively for its own benefit. This shows the growing disconnect between the students' aspirations and that of the ruling establishment. Could Thursday's tragedy have been avoided? The way protesting students were treated until then—frequently disregarded, disparaged, and finally driven off their campuses and dormitories—did indeed create the chance for any face-to-face confrontation with the security forces to turn violent. And it did. But the authorities must bear the responsibility for the escalation as it seems to have lost any ability to engage with protesters on the streets without resorting to force. Video footages from various thoroughfares and intersections showed scenes for which an apt description ethereal. There were indiscriminate beatings and shootings. Many public properties, offices, and vehicles were vandalised or set on fire. It was like a nightmare through and through.

This is why the government's offer on Thursday afternoon to sit with the students to discuss quota reforms was seen by many as more of an olive branch offering rather than a substantive approach. And they have their reasons. For instance, what took the government so long to make this approach? Why did it use so much force if it was "principally" in favour of quota reforms? Why did it continue to do so even after making the offer? Most importantly, who will take responsibility for all the deaths and sufferings that has ensued over the past four days? Clearly, the government could have avoided all the bloodbath and resultant crisis of faith by handling the situation a lot better, and more peacefully.

Right now, the priority is to raise confidence among the students about the government's sincerity. And words alone will not do that. To really build their confidence, the students will need concrete assurances that there will be no legal persecutions against them, that those responsible for the violence and instigation of violence will be brought to book, and that there will be proper reforms in the government job quota system. The students are right to worry, seeing how past attempts have failed to resolve the quota issue, particularly during the 2018 movement. Without a genuine effort on the government's part—but also on the part of the students to reciprocate, considering public interest—there is no guarantee that this issue will be resolved for good. We do not want to see any more violence and loss of lives.

Courts cannot be absent of witnesses

Authorities must address the fear to testify

It's concerning that our authorities are struggling to bring witnesses to court, calling into question the entire legal system. According to a police report, witnesses are unwilling to testify in criminal cases, due to fear of violence, lack of trust in the legal system, and absence of state protection among other issues. As a result, credibility of cases is being challenged, which often leads to them getting dismissed. This leaves perpetrators unpunished, and in turn, encourages them to carry out more crimes. Suffice to say, the state must address this dysfunction if it's concerned about the lack of law and order.

As per the report, 43 percent of witnesses surveyed don't want to testify in cases centring crimes like robbery and rape, while 24 percent are scared to do so. Furthermore, 28 percent said they were threatened by the accused's side. If this is the scenario, we cannot expect individuals to put their lives on the line to testify. Ensuring this safety falls on the shoulders of law enforcers and the legal system. But when 79 percent of witnesses have no faith in the criminal justice system and 51 percent complain about the lack of state protection, it's clear that the authorities concerned are failing to perform their duties.

The consequences of this failure are far-reaching. As reported, 50 percent of robbery cases have failed to ensure justice as witnesses refused to testify, while lack of proper testimonies has led to 46 percent of cases filed by the narcotics department getting dismissed. Negligence is pervasive as well, as officers reportedly make individuals witnesses without their consent. This is unacceptable and points to a sheer lack of accountability.

There are a host of options for authorities to improve this situation, as stated in the police report itself. Enacting and implementing witness protection laws is of paramount importance, as it's the first measure to ensure their safety. Taking testimonies virtually, providing transport costs, and ensuring swift trial proceedings are some of the other recommendations, which need to be implemented on an urgent basis. Above everything, the state must remember just how important it is to ensure a functioning justice system so that law and order prevails.

Govt has completely failed to understand the youth

Anu Muhammad
is a former professor of economics of Jahangirnagar University.

ANU MUHAMMAD

What is happening in Bangladesh right now is truly unfathomable. Anger, passion and sadness, mixed up with other emotions among the youth of the country, have led to a kind of movement the likes of which we haven't seen in decades. But what are the reasons behind their grievances? The present government has completely failed to understand them. And that failure is leading the government to make one mistake after another.

The anger that has taken hold among the youth, I believe, has been born of three main reasons. The first is the way the economy is operating and the developmental model that this government has adopted and is widely publicising—the youth cannot see any future for themselves in these models. Young people do not see any hope of getting (respectable) jobs that they deserve, according to their abilities. We are seeing jobless growth happen.

The second problem is that whatever employment opportunities exist are mostly in the public sector—be it at government schools, colleges, universities, hospitals or other essential institutions. Thousands of positions in these institutions are left vacant, but the government is not filling them up. Why? Because privatisation is central to its development model. The state of other important government offices is also critical because of the government's neoliberal economic policies.

The third issue is that young people don't believe they will get access to whatever little employment opportunities do exist. That's because all opportunities nowadays have to be bought; they are not granted according to merit. In order to get a job anywhere, you either have to spend money or have connections with the ruling party—in other words, "ruling-party-affiliated quota" has turned into the most dangerous quota. And even outside of that, there are a whole host of other corrupt practices that are taking place.

So, all our young people, whether they are in university, college or even in school, can see a dark future for themselves. Many young people are desperately trying to leave the country. And in the process, sometimes they are betrayed by fraudsters; that is how some end up dying at sea, while others are exploited by criminal brokers and syndicates.

They see the Bangladesh Civil Service (BCS) as the promise of a decent and secure job. But even there, they face 56 percent of quotas, which are limiting their chances, along with question leaks and other forms of corruption.

Young people aren't seeing any way for them to fix the larger economic problems. The only possibility they see is if they can get some reforms made to the quota system. That is what led to the 2018 quota reform movement.

The prime minister's role following the movement then was short-sighted. After getting angry at the protesters, she decided to completely abolish all quotas. That was not the demand of the protesters—they had wanted the system to be reformed. It is only natural that the complete abolishment of quotas wouldn't stand a chance legally, because there are disadvantaged groups in the country who need the quota, and who have a right to it—even the constitution says that.

The government has been saying it can't do anything since it is a matter of the court. But even the court has said that the government can change, reduce or increase the ratio or percentage of the quotas in public jobs if it feels it is necessary. These factors have also influenced the young people and their movement.

Another aspect contributing to the young people's anger is the government's autocratic behaviour—that it can do whatever it wants. That is why young people across the country are in an agitated state right now. If you look at their lives closely, you will see most of them and their families are somehow struggling financially or in other ways. That, too, is influencing their decisions and their actions. Amid their ongoing struggles—either being unable to finance the treatment of their family members or something else—they have been constantly facing torture, intimidation, and/or insults from those affiliated with the ruling party.

To find some relief, they were looking up to the prime minister to take some steps to reform the quota system. Unfortunately, she decided to take the matter completely in another direction. A demeaning comment aimed at them is what triggered them and made them feel even more hopeless. After that, instead of talking to the protesters, the ruling party unleashed its student wing on them. The Awami League general secretary himself was straightforward in saying that BCL would see to the protesters. That is when we saw BCL members—many of whom look older than 30 or even 40 years old—launch a vicious attack on students with rods, sticks and even guns. In places where the BCL couldn't completely run over the students, they hired people and brought them in on trucks and buses to attack the students.

After that, we saw police and BGB being brought in. Why was BGB brought in? BGB troops are supposed to protect the borders.

All these government decisions have increased anger among the students. The way Abu Sayed was killed, as he stood unarmed, with his arms stretched out, when the police shot him, was totally unnecessary. Sayed belonged to a poor family. The people in his village collected money to try and collectively pay for his education. Many people went through so much struggle for him to come this far. And all he wanted was to go even further, using his abilities, which is what he was protesting for.

All the protesters are asking for is a chance to participate in a fair competition. They are not asking for any handouts or any unwarranted favours. For the police to open fire at them for that, and for the ministers to verbally attack them, are unacceptable.

The government refused to understand the anger and feelings that all this incited among the student protesters. And so, they decided to close all the schools and universities. But without addressing their main demand, is it possible for the government to simply shut down all educational institutions and use violence to stop the movement? What does Bangladesh's history tell us?

Bangladesh's history tells us that people in this country have endured a lot of oppression, but they also put up resistance despite all of that. Even BCL leaders were thrown out of campuses by the protesters after the latter were attacked by the ruling party's student wing.

By unleashing such terror upon the students, all the government is doing is displaying its weakness. Even the prime minister has now said that the court will hopefully give a ruling that is satisfying to the protesters. But what about all the unnecessary deaths? Who will take responsibility for them? Hundreds of students have been injured, their families have been hurt, and their education has been hampered. Who will take responsibility for that?

Instead of causing more injury using repressive means, the government needs to listen to the main concerns of the protesters, and take action against those who have attacked and injured them.

There is a serious governance failure in dealing with the student demands for merit-based recruitment system in Bangladesh's government jobs. Those of us following South Asia know how quickly public protests get hijacked by political quarters and flare into violence and vandalism. The state has a responsibility to handle the situation with calm and composure, by engaging with the students and not turning against them with political rhetoric that could amount to advocacy of hatred and subsequent hate crime.

Unfortunately, that is exactly what we have seen happening this week. Many parts of the country have been burning and at least 13 people were killed in the clashes. Abu Sayeed, a 25-year-old student at Begum Rokeya University in Rangpur, stretched his arms wide open, standing alone facing the police a few steps away, a gesture that I interpret as nothing but his bravery to confront unlawful actions. Instead of showing restraint, the police fired rubber pellets at him. He fell on the ground shortly and succumbed to death. This incident is shocking and painful. The deaths and violence against students demanding merit-based recruitment in Bangladesh's public service cast a lawless response to peaceful protests.

This could all have been avoided. The existing quota-based recruitment system favouring descendants of freedom fighters has long faced criticism from students. Quotas in job recruitments elsewhere in the world are designed to uphold equity for the marginalised communities. Currently, a whopping 56 percent of the government jobs are reserved for various quotas. The reserved seats in the government jobs include 30 percent for descendants of freedom fighters, 10 percent for women, 10 percent for people in underdeveloped districts, 5 percent for indigenous communities and one percent for persons with disabilities.

Bangladesh has a bloodied past and a hard-fought freedom struggle behind its independence and sovereignty. It's a pride that every Bangladeshi celebrates. The love for a country cannot be proven by a piece of paper. It is an experience that must be cherished by the people.

The recruitment system in Bangladesh's government services stands as a golden opportunity for many meritorious graduates of the country. It is a matter of job security, a prestige and identity. The government needs to instill the value proposition in these jobs to make them demanding and lucrative. These value propositions must ensure that not only are these jobs hard earned, but they are also a space where the best of the best graduates stand a chance based on their merit, not by some gift of ancestral struggle for liberation of Bangladesh. It is one of those opportunities that the government can use to prevent hundreds of thousands of Bangladeshis from moving to other countries for better opportunities.

An urgent resolution is required in the recruitment process to make the quality of jobs rewarding and accountable, one that is rooted in the principles of equity and equality. This is a policy-oriented issue and must be dealt with full transparency and accountability to meet public interest.

Abu Sayed's death cannot be the price students must pay to ask for a systemic change in the recruitment process. There must be independent, thorough and impartial investigation into his killing.

The state must do better to act responsibly than letting a situation get carried away into violence and then responding to it with brute force in the pretext of containing that violence. This is a tactic of the authorities that wish to escape from their responsibility to address a situation with rigour. Calling student protesters "razakars"—traitors of the country—will do anything but instill love for the country under the given circumstances.

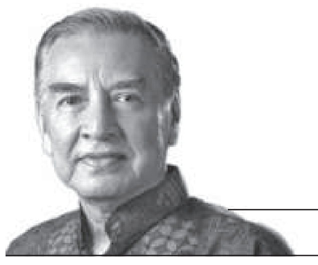
Why was Abu Sayed shot dead in cold blood?



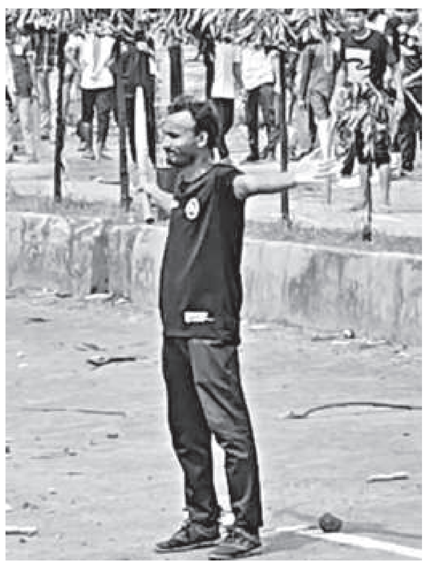
Mahfuz Anam
is the editor and publisher of The Daily Star.

MAHFUZ ANAM

Why was Abu Sayed of Rangpur's Begum Rokeya University shot down by police? He was standing alone, totally unarmed with arms stretched out, holding no weapons but a stick. Nor was he engaged in any violent activities. When he was shot, he posed no threat to police and was standing quite a distance away, which an eye-estimate suggests could be about 50-60 feet. Yet police shot him in cold blood.

Earlier, we saw the home minister, an otherwise soft-spoken person, explain several times how the police were exercising restraint. He claimed repeatedly that police had been instructed not to indulge in any violence and also not to engage the demonstrators in a way that may lead to violence. Yet police shot an unarmed student who stood all by himself showing that he posed no danger.

Sayed was one of the nine children of very poor parents. He was the youngest and the brightest of nine brothers and sisters. When he got admitted to Begum Rokeya University, the first one ever from his family, his siblings were so elated that they all contributed to his studies, even by saving from their own educational expenses. His very old and ill father said they all hoped that Abu Sayed would change the fate of the family after joining the government service, which was his life's sole aim. This made him interested in the quota reforms, and hence he joined the protests. His story clearly shows that his desire was only to reform the quota system so that his chances of success would increase. There was no other agenda as is now being alleged.



As reported in this paper, at 12:37pm on Monday, the day before his murder, Sayed shared a photo card of martyred Professor Shamsuzzoha, a young Rajshahi University teacher who was shot dead while trying to protect student protesters in 1969. He wrote, "Sir, we desperately need you right now ... Your legacy is our inspiration. We are enlightened by your ideals". Prof Shamsuzzoha became one of the heroes of student movement inspiring us in the lead-up to our Liberation War. As someone dedicated to our freedom and progress, he also served as a source of inspiration in the following five decades of our independence.

Sayed was riddled with shotgun pellets causing his death. A post-mortem has been done but result has not yet been made public. Meanwhile, he has been buried.

We are heartened by the PM's promise of a judicial probe. But that will likely take time. We request a separate and immediate enquiry into Sayed's killing and exemplary actions against the guilty. We are no stranger to killings in demonstrations. But such a singular killing that looked very much like a targeted one is something completely new. That is why it needs immediate investigation.

Nothing, absolutely nothing, can justify this action except the arrogance and assured impunity that police have known to be enjoying over the years. Meanwhile, an apology from the police and the home ministry to the family may go a long way to assuage the feeling of outrage that presently exists.

Universities and the govt have failed the students

Dr Samina Luthfa
is associate professor at the Department of Sociology in Dhaka University.

SAMINA LUTHFA

The violence occurring in various campuses in and outside of Dhaka over the last few days is making us anxious and worried about the safety of our students and that of regular citizens. If the universities had fulfilled their responsibility of ensuring safety of their own students, the situation would not have become so concerning. The government's liability is also not to be ignored. We can guess that it is due to the government's direction that the UGC shut down the university campuses.

The campus shutdown was enacted the day after the student body of the ruling party was removed from the residential halls. At the very least, the university authorities had the responsibility of ensuring passage of students following the shutdown of campuses. Not only did they fail to ensure this, but they also enabled the BGB, police, and different ruling party bodies such as Bangladesh Chhatra League (BCL) and Jubo League to violently attack the students. This has resulted in at least 13 deaths—and we are afraid the count will only go up. The responsibility for this bloodshed cannot be avoided by either the government or the university authorities.

On Wednesday, some of us from the University Teachers Network Against Repression tried to rescue the persecuted students. We attempted to organise a rally. There, we witnessed a large deployment of BGB and RAB members on Dhaka University (DU) campus. Instead of ensuring a safe passage for the students to leave Dhaka University, Rokeya University, Jahangirnagar University, Shahjalal Science and Technology University and so on, the students were attacked and forced out of their own campuses. The university authorities and teachers had no consideration of how these students would suddenly return home at the middle of the night or what their mode of transport would be.

Today, we have seen students from schools, colleges, and universities come under atrocious attacks by the police and BCL in many places in Dhaka, including Badda, Dhanmondi, and Mirpur. Brac University attempted to protect its students on its campus, but when injured students tried to seek medical help, they were stopped by law enforcement agencies.

The government needs to move away from this aggressive approach. They need to understand that fulfilling the students' demands was not impossible. The students made logical demands that did not deserve this violent retribution. The universities must be reopened so the students can safely return. Those responsible for the killings and attacks need to be tracked down and brought to justice. None of these deaths can go unanswered. University authorities who have failed their students should resign. These are our demands as conscientious teachers.

WHAT HAPPENED ON WEDNESDAY

An account from JU

A FEMALE STUDENT OF DU

We started the quota reform protest long before the attacks. On July 15, the students who had gone out at 3pm to attend a rally were attacked with sticks by BCL. It also included attackers from outside, i.e. non-JU students led by the JU Chhatra League. As a result, many students were in the hospital. Another portion who were still protesting remained near the VC's residence seeking safety. Cocktails were used and the recordings of the attacks are still available on the Facebook feeds of several students.

The students had felt the VC's residence may have been a safe space, yet they were attacked. When the police arrived, there was some relief, but they soon realised that the police had come to protect the VC, not the general students. At that point, the police used tear shells and other weapons in their arsenal. The attack lasted till 4am, all the way till dawn. Many students had to be admitted to Enam Medical College Hospital, with one student in critical condition.

On the morning of the 16th, when the news spread, thousands of students arrived at campus during the day, and I was one of them. All day, we kept up a blockade and adjourned it at the end. We held a syndicate meeting and made a decision that we will not vacate the halls upon hearing the statement from UGC. After all, the UGC cannot make a decision about an autonomous institute.

On July 17, our demands were two-fold: quota reform and the refusal to vacate halls. On that day, around 200-300 police officers entered the campus. The teachers told us that we ought to return to the halls for our safety. Still, we did not wish to leave, because it was unacceptable for the police to be present on our campus as the police cannot enter an autonomous institution in the manner that they did. The situation became dire, and it was worsened by us not being able to receive any news.

Throughout the country, rumours were spread and there were attempts at fear-mongering. Many students were having lunch at the time when, around 5:15pm, the police attacked us.

During the attack, our group had to disperse. We had to flee to whichever road was empty. Many of us were stuck for hours while tear shells were being thrown. It remains a question: for whose protection did the police fire shots? If we assume it was to protect the students, why were the shots fired in their direction? This shooting went on till evening. When our proctor was called by the department teachers, he claimed that he himself was struck. The police can never enter a campus without the permission of the proctor.

The proctor's statement that we should run to whichever place is safe was not sensible because there was no safe passage for us. The police saw us running to the girl's halls. In the main gate of JU, about a 100 police officers had arrived. Many journalists showed them their press cards so as not to be shot at by the police. The footage of police coming toward us, however, is yet to be broadcast.

After evening, we returned to our halls only for us to hear that we would be forcefully removed from our halls. Around 10pm, we started receiving all kinds of news. I believe it was a BCL tactic to make us leave. Many female students in particular felt unsafe at this time. Yet, many of them were adamant about not leaving the halls. We received frantic calls from our families to leave urgently as they had heard horrifying reports, but we had to assure them those were rumours. Soon, electricity was gone and mobile data ceased to work. I was unable to make a single phone call. We remained awake throughout the night as we had lost faith in the idea that we would not be attacked. I wonder if this is how the nights must have felt during those nine months of the Liberation War.

In the morning, the halls had become empty. Under severe stress, we had to leave the campus in the morning, despite our unwillingness. Right after, the police raided each room, with the proctor and hall provost accompanying them. Why did the administration allow the police to inspect halls in this manner? These were clear attempts to break the student's will, and they succeeded. Though some students are still in campuses, the numbers have reduced to such a great extent that it is not possible to carry out a procession.

An account from DU

Mustahid Riad
is student of the University of Dhaka.

MUSTAHID RIAD

On Wednesday, police were checking everyone's IDs before letting them inside the campus. They had created a human barricade near the metro station at TSC and were not allowing anyone to pass through. Everyone was asked to take a detour and enter the area through Payra Chattor. I did so and reached Bacchu Bhai's tea shop, when I saw the car of a police official enter the area. All the journalists rushed to the car that stopped near the Raju Memorial Sculpture. When the police official got out, the journalists harangued him about the presence of police and BGB on campus. He did not answer them; instead, he pushed them and continued walking towards the police barricade near the TSC station. At that moment, a sound grenade went off. There was smoke everywhere. I felt very afraid.

Inside the campus, too, police members created human barricades—one right in front of the Raju Sculpture and the other at the three-way intersection in front of Ruqayyah Hall. At the VC Chattor, we saw many protesters. Some of them had sticks with them and some came from the halls. When the gathering reached around 1,000, we prepared for the symbolic gayebi janaza (funeral prayers in absentia). At that time, there were many members of police standing in front of the vice chancellor's house, Ruqayyah Hall and Fuller Road, and a police water tank was positioned a few metres away from the Arts Building gate. After the prayer, we decided to bring out a procession from the VC Chattor to Raju Memorial Sculpture with the symbolic coffins, voicing our quota reform demands, questioning the presence of police and BGB on campus and demanding punishment for the students' killings. We pushed through the police barricade and reached the water tank. Some students shouted at the police angrily and provoked them to shoot, questioning their presence on campus. As we continued the procession, the water tank suddenly moved back and we heard a sound grenade go off. Right then, the clash started.

There was smoke everywhere, and I heard gunshots. The police standing near the VC gate were firing rubber bullets and throwing sound grenades and tear gas shells towards us. The procession got dispersed and there was a lot of chaos. I felt a burning sensation in my eyes from the impact of the tear shells. I could not see properly but managed to climb the wall in Hakim Chattor and enter the Central Mosque; I started running through the mausoleum of Kazi Nazrul Islam to reach the National Museum. I was able to leave the campus with a few others by showing our IDs to the police. But a friend, who called me when I reached the TSC metro station, said he had to take shelter inside a hall. He said the police had launched an attack on students who fled towards the Mall Chattor.

LAW AND SOCIETY

On quota reform movement and judicial decision-making

SHARMISTA BANIK

Whether pressure of any social movement can influence judicial decision-making is a complex question and touches on fundamental aspects of constitutional law, judicial independence, and separation of power. The question becomes all the more complicated when the decision-making lies with the highest judicial authority of the state (i.e., the Supreme Court).

While public protests do not have the constitutional authority to directly overturn judicial decisions, they reflect a shift in public opinion that the court cannot entirely ignore. The Supreme Court, while not directly accountable to public opinion, does not operate in a vacuum but within a broader societal context.

While the Constitution does not provide a direct mechanism for public protests to overturn court verdicts, it does recognise fundamental rights such as freedom of assembly and freedom of expression. These rights allow citizens to voice their opinions and potentially influence the broader legal, judicial, and political landscape.

In the landmark case of Brown v Board of Education (1954), the US Supreme Court declared racial segregation in public schools unconstitutional. While the decision was based on constitutional interpretation, it was influenced by the broader civil rights movement and changing social attitudes towards racial equality. Even conservative courts can be influenced by advocacy and public conscience. During Nixon's Presidency, despite conservative appointments, the court made several progressive decisions. This included ruling against sex discrimination and deciding Roe v*Wade* (1973), which legalised abortion. These decisions were influenced by growing public support for gender equality and reproductive rights.

The South African Constitutional Court's decision in Minister of Health v Treatment Action Campaign (2002) demonstrates how a combination of litigation and public mobilisation can influence judicial outcomes. The court's ruling, while based on constitutional interpretation, was undoubtedly informed by the broader social movement advocating for HIV/AIDS treatment access. In India, the Indian Supreme Court's decision in the Vishaka and others v State of Rajasthan (1997), was influenced by women's rights movements and led to guidelines on sexual harassment in the workplace. This judgment was an outcome of both street protests outraged by the decision of the previous Bhanwari Devi case and sustained public advocacy.

The concept of 'popular constitutionalism' argues that the people, and not just the courts, play a role in constitutional interpretation. While this does not suggest that court decisions can be overturned by public opinion, it acknowledges that sustained public engagement with constitutional issues can shape the context in which future cases are decided.

The current debate in Bangladesh over the reformation of quota system brings these issues into sharp focus. The staying of the 2018 government circular and lack of adequate initiatives by government to reform the quota system has sparked widespread protests from general students. It has brought into focus the tension among judicial independence and public sentiment and freedom of expression.

While public protests do not have the constitutional authority to directly overturn judicial decisions, they reflect a shift in public opinion that the court cannot entirely ignore. The Supreme Court, while not directly accountable to public opinion, does not operate in a vacuum but within a broader societal context. The effectiveness of the judiciary in a democratic system is partially derived from public trust and acceptance of its decisions. While Supreme Court judgments are designed to be final and independent of public pressure, among others, the ongoing quota debate in Bangladesh illustrates the complex interplay between judicial decisions, constitutional interpretation, and evolving societal values, highlighting the need for a delicate balance to be struck between upholding legal principles and responding to legitimate public concerns within a dynamic democracy.

RIGHTS WATCH

Right to information and Bangladesh

TAWSIF MOTTAKI CHOWDHURY

Bangladesh experienced a wave of enthusiasm in the wake of the enactment of the Right to Information Act in 2009. Initially, public perceived the law to be a potent instrument that would enable them to keep an eye on government activities, reveal wrongdoings, and hold public officials accountable. However, as time went on, the initial zeal faded, and the Act came to use for only a handful of people.

In theory, the 2009 Act empowers citizens to scrutinise government work, question decisions, and demand transparency. The preamble to the Act holds the right to information to be an inalienable part of Freedom of Thought, Conscience and Speech under Article 39 of the Constitution of Bangladesh. Section 4 of the Act states that every citizen has a right to information from the authority, and the authority must provide so upon demand. Section 8 allows citizens to request information from responsible officers in writing, electronically, or via email. As per section 9, the responsible officer must provide the requested information within 20 working days and if multiple information-provider units or authorities are involved, within 30 working days. Section 9(3) further provides that if the officer is unable to provide the information, they must inform the requester of the reason of such inability within 10 working days of receiving the application.

Ideally, informed citizens should utilise this opportunity to its maximum potential. However, the reality is far from ideal in Bangladesh. Fear of retaliation, lack of awareness about the law's intricacies, and lack of trust hinder citizens from exercising their rights under the Act. This underutilisation reflects a broader trend of information apathy, where the power to challenge corruption and promote good governance through the RTI is acknowledged in theory but overlooked in practice.

Neighboring countries are experiencing a rise in the enforcement of this right in favor of the mass people. The Indian Supreme Court unanimously ruled on 15 February 2024 to overturn the now-infamous Electoral Bonds Scheme of 2018 and ordered the disclosure of a vast amount of sensitive information that had been withheld from the citizens. Bangladesh can gain valuable insights from India's experience with the RTI Act on its immense potential.

In theory, the 2009 Act empowers citizens to scrutinise government work, question decisions, and demand transparency. The preamble to the Act holds the right to information to be an inalienable part of Freedom of Thought, Conscience and Speech under Article 39 of the Constitution of Bangladesh.

Sri Lanka has also witnessed how successful the law can be in holding the government accountable and battling corruption. Sri Lanka's efforts to combat corruption have benefited immensely from their RTI legislation. The International Monetary Fund's Governance Diagnostic Assessment (GDA) recognised the RTI as having a significant impact on improving governance. Special attention was given to the RIT Commission of Sri Lanka for their uncompromising compliance with the law.

However, the same success has not been mirrored in Bangladesh due to several factors. Firstly, the nature of RTI requests in Bangladesh is predominantly personal, lacking the public interest-driven inquiries. Secondly, there is a notable absence of collective civil society action to challenge and safeguard the RTI law's implementation. And lastly, there is an immense lack of cooperation on part of the officials in providing information in our country.

The way forward is evident as Bangladesh grapples with the underutilisation of the RTI. NGOs and our civil society must lead the change in advancing RTI into the forefront of governance. Bangladesh stands at a pivotal moment, where RTI's potential as a weapon against corruption and good governance must be fully realised through collective effort and commitment.

GENDER AND LAW

Obstetric violence and women's human rights in Bangladesh

ARIFUR RAHMAN

Safe motherhood entails a serious consideration of ensuring safe maternal and reproductive healthcare services. Yet, women in our country often face the challenge of trading off their health safety for childbirth. Last year a case was filed against a private hospital and its concerned doctor on the grounds of alleged botched Cesarean sections (C-sections) and fraud following the death of 25-year-old Mahbuba Akter Akhi. C-sections which practitioners are advised to follow in exceptional childbirth scenarios have become a common phenomenon in Bangladesh. Such procedures have become so pervasive over the years that normal delivery procedures are nowadays almost an exception—practitioners follow C-sections even when such procedures are not required. The rate of unnecessary C-sections in Bangladesh rose to 51% between 2016 and 2018 as reported by Save the Children. When we perceive these unnecessary C-sections simply as a medical procedure, we ignore the abuse, coercion, and trauma women experience during childbirth. In fact, women often lose any sense of control over their body and reproductive health when seeking healthcare support during childbirth. Although any birthing body including trans and non-binary persons could be subject to obstetric violence, this essay focuses only on (cis) women. Obstetric violence is an ever-evolving concept but generally refers to the mistreatment of women including but not limited to negligence, abuse, or coercion in obstetric and gynecological care. An example of obstetric violence includes the performance of C-sections without the voluntary and informed consent of the patient. However, obstetric violence is not merely another case of medical negligence and abuse, rather an example of gender-based violence, exemplifying its dynamic nature and the various forms it takes. It is part of the broader structural violence that women face in everyday life.

The World Health Organisation (WHO) in its statement 'The prevention and elimination of disrespect and abuse during facility-based childbirth' provides an array of examples of obstetric violence such as 'outright physical abuse, profound humiliation and verbal abuse, coercive or unconsented medical procedures (including sterilisation), lack of confidentiality, failure to get fully informed consent, refusal to give pain medication, gross violations of privacy, refusal of admission to health facilities', among others. While women in Bangladesh often go through various forms of obstetric violence, it has yet to be recognised as a form of human rights concern. In fact, Bangladesh has not even recognised obstetric violence as a legal issue.

In N.A.E v Spain (2022), the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) Committee, while dealing with obstetric violence experienced by a Spanish woman (the author) found that subjecting the author to unnecessary vaginal examinations, use of oxytocin without adequate justification, and performing episiotomy without consent resulted in the violation of human rights of the author under the CEDAW such as equality and non-discrimination in healthcare under Article 12, and right not to be subject to gender stereotypes under Article 5, among others. The committee further highlighted how gender stereotypes and prejudices lead to gender-based violence if medical practitioners abstain from providing women with explanations for the medical treatment they receive and deny women to express their opinions in reproductive health services.

The principle of equality and non-discrimination is a salient feature of the Constitution of Bangladesh reflecting the country's commitment to foster an inclusive and just society. Obstetric violence, however, comes in direct conflict with such constitutional values and principles because it is, I argue, a form of gender-based discrimination that occurs as a result of differential treatment of women supported by harmful gender stereotypes and cultural norms about their reproductive choices and health. Such stereotypes typically include regarding women's primary role in the society as a mother or a caregiver and, hence, the expectation that 'women should continue their pregnancies regardless of the circumstances, their needs and wishes' (Mellet v Ireland).

To undermine the opinion of a patient in obstetric care and avoid the need to help her make an informed decision also reflects the long-held discriminatory notion that women lack any agency when it comes to making any decision about their reproductive health and choices. It only reproduces stereotypes and prejudices by reinforcing the traditional gendered notion that women should be submissive and obedient and that they are without any capacity of forming opinion. While gender stereotypes and prejudices contribute to the normalisation and validation of gender-based violence during childbirth, such stereotypes about women's sexual and reproductive health eventually allow healthcare providers to take full control of women's bodies.

Obstetric violence has serious consequences for women's human rights. Therefore, instead of sweeping it under the carpet, Bangladesh needs to take obstetric violence seriously because doing so supports its commitment to international human rights treaties and its Constitutional goal of securing (gender) equality and non-discrimination.

Women's Asia Cup begins today

- This will be the ninth edition of the Women's Asia Cup. The first four editions were played in the 50-over format, while the next four were T20 tournaments. The ongoing edition will also be played in the 20-over format.
- India won seven out of the eight editions of the tournament so far. Bangladesh won the title in the only edition in which India failed to secure it. The women in red and green beat India in a last-ball thriller in the final of the 2018 edition in Malaysia.
- Sri Lanka is set to host the tournament for a third time. They played hosts in 2004 and 2008. All 15 matches of this edition, including the two semis and the final, will be held in one venue - Rangiri Dambulla International Stadium in Dambulla.
- No team has featured more times in Women's Asia than India and Sri Lanka, appearing in all eight previous editions. Meanwhile, the UAE is set to feature in only their second Asia Cup.
- No batter has scored more runs than India's Mithali Raj in the 20-over editions of the tournament (402 runs in 10 matches). With the ball, Pakistan's Nida Dar leads with 26 scalps in 18 matches. Bangladesh's Rumana Ahmed is close to Dar with 23 wickets in 16 matches.

SPORTS REPORTER

Seven-time winners India will once again be the favourites to lift the Women's Asia Cup as the tournament's ninth edition gets underway today, with a marquee fixture between India and Pakistan following the tournament opener in Dambulla, Sri Lanka.

India, the most dominant side in the tournament's history, won seven out of the eight previous editions, only losing out to Bangladesh in the 2018 final in Malaysia.

This edition will be played in the 20-over format, for a fifth time in the tournament's history. The defending champions India come into the tournament on the back of a series cleansweep against Bangladesh in a five-match T20I series followed by a 1-1 draw against South Africa in the same format.

Meanwhile, Bangladesh will be looking to take inspiration from their triumphant campaign in 2018 as the Tigresses have not had the confidence of positive results in the build-up to the tournament.

The Nigar Sultana Joty-led side suffered back-to-back series defeats against Australia and India at home and their last win in this format came in December 2023 when they beat South Africa by 13 runs in Benoni.

Since that victory, Bangladesh lost nine consecutive T20Is and will have to produce their best once again to qualify for a top four spot.

Joty's troops failed to progress beyond the group-stage in the last edition of the tournament in 2022 when Bangladesh hosted the event which is why the skipper has made progression to the final four her initial target.

Bangladesh, who were pitted in Group B along with Sri Lanka, Malaysia and Thailand, will begin their campaign against the hosts on Saturday.

Sabina and Co to play Bhutan on July 24, 27

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh women's football team are set to depart for Bhutan on July 22 to play two FIFA friendlies against the hosts.

Coach Peter Butler announced a 22-member squad for the matches on July 24 and 27. While experienced players like Tahura Khatun, Surma Jannat, Shaheda Akter Ripa, and Shamsunnahar Ripa were excluded, new players like Halima Akhter, Bonna Akhter, Mst Sagorika, and Mst Sultana made the cut.

Captain Sabina Khutun emphasised that these matches will be beneficial for the SAFF Championship.

Coach Butler believes this will be a good opportunity for the new players.

This will be my last term: Kazi Salahuddin

Kazi Salahuddin, who has been at the helm of the Bangladesh Football Federation (BFF) for 16 years, is planning to contest for a fifth consecutive term as president in the next BFF elections, set to take place on October 26. The 70-year-old footballer-turned-organiser spoke with The Daily Star's Anisur Rahman about his thoughts on running for president once again. Here are the excerpts:

The Daily Star (DS): Are you going to contest in the next BFF elections for the president's post?
Kazi Salahuddin (KS): I think so.

DS: You have been at the helm for four successive terms. Why are you thinking of contesting again?
KS: This will be my last election. I want to finish the work on the vision I had for the national team, then someone else will take over.

DS: You underwent an open-heart surgery last year and there are concerns whether your health will allow you to continue as BFF president for another term...
KS: I was also concerned about my health, but that's not the real obstacle right now. Actually, the problem is that my family don't want me to continue in BFF. But I think my job here is not yet done, no matter who says what. Everyone has no choice but to accept that the national team has been playing well and the league [Bangladesh Premier League] has been taking place regularly. No one can deny that whether they like me or not. Our women's team is the best in the sub-continent. I think one more term should be enough, then someone else can take over.

DS: You had told the media before the previous election that it would be your last term...
KS: But this time it really will be my last term, considering my health, family and everything.

DS: The national football team has been playing well in the recent past but are still languishing in the bottom half in the world rankings. How do you see it?
KS: If you play 10 matches against similarly ranked sides, you will win more games and your ranking will gradually improve. But we usually play against teams which are ranked 30 to 50 places higher than us. Money is another factor. I need Tk 70 lakh to play one international match. We can't manage the money every time, so, we play fewer matches. Once India used to be close to us in the rankings but they are now a higher-ranked side because they play many international matches.

DS: What did you do to strengthen the financial condition of the BFF in your four terms?
KS: When I first came in power, I used to bring Tk 7 to 8 crore from sponsors for every tournament. But different groups went against me during my second and third terms and the media too was not friendly towards me. There were many rumours including corruption which were not true. This had a bad impact on the BFF's image, thus I lost interest and felt embarrassed to approach the sponsors and kept myself away from the private sponsors.

DS: But FIFA suspended BFF general secretary Abu Nayeem Shohag, CFO Abu Hasan, general manager Minzanur Rahman on financial grounds. What do you have to say about that?
KS: No one read the FIFA report thoroughly, they just read the part that said that financial reasons were behind the suspensions. That has made the situation really difficult for us. The report stated none of the goods were purchased at a higher cost and they were bought at market price. But there were some flaws in the system. It has become really challenging to recover the BFF's image in this ground. There has been a complete overhaul of the BFF finance division. We have a new general secretary, new CFO and new procurement officers. It's a sad thing for us but now everything is being checked and rechecked multiple times.

DS: How do you evaluate your four consecutive terms as the BFF president?
KS: The first thing I had said in 2008, at a time when the football league was not taking place regularly, is that under me there will always be football on the ground. And in the last 16 years, I have kept my word. No one had to think whether or not the league would be held. That was the first thing I accomplished as the BFF president. Then I made sure that Bangladesh takes part in maximum number of tournaments. I also ensured good training grounds, proper jerseys, equipments, match condition for the national football team, which was not there during my playing career. I have ensured providing the best training facilities in Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Korea and Japan and kept the team in five-star hotels. But during our playing careers, we used to be accommodated at the Physical Education College in Mohammadpur and then stayed in BKSP. But the players are now training in Dhaka, availing five-star hotel facilities. These are the things I ensured.

Sagor chosen as Bangladesh's flagbearer

SPORTS REPORTER

Archer Sagor Islam will proudly carry the Bangladesh flag during the march past at the 33rd Olympic Games, set to be held in the French capital from July 26 to August 11.

A 13-member contingent from Bangladesh will participate in the world's largest sports event. Among the five athletes, only archer Sagor qualified for the Olympics directly, making him the third Bangladeshi to do so after golfer Siddiqur Rahman and archer Ruman Sana.

Naturally, the spotlight is on the 18-year-old archer, who will kick off his campaign with the ranking round on July 25.

"I want to thank the Bangladesh Olympic Association [BOA] for giving me the opportunity to carry the national flag, which is a great honor for me," said Sagor at the official press conference at the BOA yesterday.

"I have been training at Shaheed Ahsan Ullah Master Stadium in Tongi, where the competition stage has been designed to replicate that of the Paris Olympics. The environment, complete with background noise, has been simulated to give me the feel of competing in Paris," Sagor added.

"I will be giving my best rather than focusing on advancing to the quarterfinals or winning medals. I believe that if I can control myself, I can achieve something better."

In addition to Sagor, sprinter Imranur Rahman, shooter Robiul Islam, and swimmers Samiul Islam Rafi and Sonia Khatun will be making their Olympic debut.

"It is a matter of great pride for us to participate in the Olympics with a direct entry from archery, and we hope Sagor Islam will perform well," said chef de mission Enthekhabul Hamid Apu.

"The shooter has also prepared well, but there is always a significant difference in preparation between athletes who qualify directly and those who enter with a wild card."

PRESS MEET
BANGLADESH OLYMPIC ASSOCIATION

Since the 1986 edition, Bangladesh has participated in every Olympic event with a small contingent. However, their results have often failed to impress despite being the ninth most populated country, leading to negative reviews from the global media.

"Bangladesh needs a six-to-eight-year long-term plan if we want to achieve good results in the Olympics. The BOA cannot do it alone. We also need support from the Bangladesh Youth and Sports Ministry, and the sports minister is considering prioritizing disciplines with good prospects. We aim to set targets for the 2028 Olympic Games," Mamun stated.

BOA Secretary General Syed Shahed Reza was also present at the event.

Paris Olympics to set sail with unique ceremony

- The ceremony is due to start at 11:30 pm on July 26 (Bangladesh time) and last about four hours, reaching a climax when the sun sets on the Seine.
- The show will be attended by over 100 heads of state and government, and over 300,000 spectators will watch from the river's banks. Organizers said there will be some 80 giant screens along the way.
- The Paris 2024 committee stated there would be about 10,500 athletes, and some 222,000 people will receive free invites, while 104,000 will have to buy tickets.
- Approximately 45,000 police officers will be dispatched to ensure the ceremony's security, including special intervention forces. Snipers will be deployed on top of buildings along the route, and an anti-drone system will be in place.

REUTERS, Paris

Paris will begin its Olympics extravaganza with an unprecedented opening ceremony on the river Seine on July 26th.

Unlike previous Olympics, the Paris 2024 opening ceremony will not take place in a stadium. Instead, dozens of boats will carry thousands of athletes and performers on a 6km route along the Seine, where Paris Mayor Anne Hidalgo swam on Wednesday to convince doubters that its waters will be clean enough to hold Olympic swimming events.

Departing from the Austerlitz Bridge, the parade will sail by Notre-Dame de Paris cathedral and arrive near the Eiffel Tower, after passing under bridges and gateways, including the Pont des Arts and Pont Neuf, and near many of the French capital's landmarks.

Organizers have said they will take advantage of the historic monuments, the riverbanks, the sky, and the water, stating that "there won't be a single riverbank or bridge that won't be filled with music, dance, or performance."

The show will have twelve parts, some of which will play on clichés about France. Athletes and artists will take part in the parade together.

Journo killed while covering quota protests

2 from Star among 11 injured

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A journalist was killed and at least 11 others were injured yesterday while covering the students' "complete shutdown" programme demanding reforms to quotas in government jobs.

Mehedi Hasan

Mehedi Hasan, staff reporter of Dhaka Times, an online news portal, was injured during a clash between police and protesters in the capital's Jatrabari. The 28-year-old was taken to Dhaka Medical College Hospital where doctors declared him dead.

Among the injured are Abir Shafiq Shameen of The Daily Star's multimedia department and Dwoha Chowdhury, Sylhet correspondent of the newspaper.

Abir, a senior assistant producer, was hit by shotgun pellets in the capital's Mirpur-10 while Dwoha was hit by brick chunks at the main entrance to Shahjalal University of Science and Technology, said Mohiuddin, general secretary of Dhaka Reporters Unity (DRU).

Nadira Sharmeen, senior reporter of Ekattar TV, and its cameraperson Syed Rashidul Hasan were hit by shotgun pellets in the capital's Jatrabari.

30 establishments torched in 2 days

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Protesters have set fire to at least 30 establishments, including the main building of Bangladesh Television, along with police and BGB vehicles over the last two days.

Arson attacks were also carried out on government and political party offices, police stations and outposts, and toll plazas.

Witnesses said a large number of students broke open the main gate of the BTV station in the capital's Rampura around 2:45pm yesterday and set ablaze a part of the building.

The fire later spread to the main building, leading to suspension of BTV transmission, Mahafuza Aktar, general manager of BTV, told The Daily Star.

"We had to leave the building around 7:30pm."

Khaleda Yeasmin, duty officer of the Fire Service and Civil Defence, said two fire engines went to the BTV station but were barred by the protesters from entering.

Demonstrators set fire to the office of the Department of Disaster Management in the capital's Mohakhali around 3:30pm. The blaze damaged the cables of some data centres housed in an adjacent building.

LATEST FROM RANGPUR

The DB office and Tajahat Police Station in Rangpur city were set on fire around 1:45am. Firefighters, with the BGB providing security, doused the blaze, said police and fire service sources.

Emdadul Haque, president of the Internet Service Providers Association of Bangladesh, said the centres lost at least 30 percent of their total bandwidth because of the damaged cables.

In the evening, the Setu Bhaban was set on fire, damaging at least 10 vehicles parked in front of the building, said an official of the Bridges Division. Demonstrators also vandalised the ground floor of the building.

In Madaripur, protestors set ablaze a police outpost and vandalised the offices of the superintendent of police and deputy commissioner.

Internet service blocked across the country

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The country is under complete internet blackout after the transfer of bandwidth was suspended to internet service providers (ISPs) and carriers were ordered to shut down mobile data service.

The government had this done yesterday through the international terrestrial cable (ITC) companies, which import bandwidth from India across the border, The Daily Star has learnt with people involved with the proceedings.

ITCs provide over half (3,500gbps) of the total bandwidth import around 5,800gbps.

From 9:00pm, internet supply from the two submarine cables was mostly down, leaving the country with virtually no internet.

"We aren't getting any bandwidth from the ITCs and only a little from the submarine cables," said Emdadul Haque, president of the Internet Service Providers' Association of Bangladesh (ISPAB).

It's not enough to ensure internet for the users, he added.

Exports dropped in last three years

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh's exports have been declining over the past three years, according to the central bank data.

The disclosure was made in the monetary policy statement for the first half of fiscal 2024-25, which was unveiled yesterday.

For instance, in fiscal 2023-24, exports are likely to be around $42 billion, which is $10 billion less than the figure reported by the Export Promotion Bureau, as the receipts, according to the BB, were down 4.28 percent year-on-year in the first 11 months of the year.

As per EPB statistics, exports stood at $51.54 billion during that period, up 2.01 percent from a year earlier.

Similarly, the EPB has shown an export growth of 6.67 percent for fiscal 2022-23 and 34.38 percent for fiscal 2021-22.

The BB receipts indicate otherwise.

The central bank data shows receipts from garment shipments dropped 5.2 percent between July last year and May this year.

The central bank data shows receipts from garment shipments dropped 5.2 percent between July last year and May this year.

Following the export data mismatch, the EPB has decided not to publish the monthly export data until further instructions from the commerce ministry, said a senior official of the commerce ministry wing.

If the EPB can set up its own data centre, it will release the data monthly, he said.

The EPB will assess the export dynamics based on the data from the customs department of the National Board of Revenue and the BB, the official added.

"The export data which the BB has been publishing is correct as the EPB data was inflated," said Mohammad Hatem, executive president of Bangladesh Knitwear Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BKMEA).

Over the last few years, Hatem has been saying that the export data was inflated as the real data of issuance of Utilisation Declaration (UD) certification does not match with the EPB export data.

The BKMEA and Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association issue the UD certification to its members.

Most of the public universities across the country were calm yesterday after the authorities vacated the halls following clashes between law enforcers, Chhatra League men, and students over the quota reform protests.

Dhaka University was almost empty yesterday. Police and BGB personnel took control of the campus on Tuesday evening after sporadic clashes between law enforcers, Chhatra League men, and demonstrators for over two hours from 4:00pm.

At least 15 students were injured during the clashes as police fired rubber bullets, tear gas and sound grenades at the protesters.

Since early yesterday, law enforcers were seen patrolling campus streets and guarding the entries to the campus. Some teachers and officials Foreign missions of Australia, India, and the US have asked their nationals in Bangladesh to remain on alert while travelling amid the ongoing student demonstrations.

They issued travel alerts as the demonstrations have spread across Dhaka and elsewhere in the country over the last few days.

"Traffic delays and public transport disruptions are likely. Avoid large gatherings, including protests, demonstrations, and rallies. These can turn violent without warning. Be aware of your surroundings, monitor local media, and follow the advice of local authorities," said the Australian High Commission in a

Govt imposes nationwide CURFEW

Armed forces deployed to help civil admin; 'shoot-at-sight ordered'; PM cancels Spain tour

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government early today imposed a nationwide curfew and deployed armed forces to assist the civil administration in ensuring national security and protecting lives and properties.

The Public Security Division under the home ministry issued a gazette notification to this end last night.

The curfew will remain in effect till 10:00am Sunday with a two-hour break from noon to 2:00pm Saturday, according to private TV channels.

Emergency services and media will remain out of its purview.

According to the home ministry notification, a countrywide curfew has been declared from today under section 24 (1) of the Special Powers Act, 1974.

During the curfew, district magistrates and police commissioners of the metropolitan areas will take necessary measures to deploy armed forces in aid to the civil administration under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

They will enforce the curfew and take steps for deployment of the armed forces as per their requirement under their respective jurisdictions.

> The curfew will remain in effect till 10:00am Sunday with a two-hour break from noon to 2:00pm Saturday, according to private TV channels.

The move came after Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina held meetings with top Awami League leaders, ministers and leaders of the AL-led 14-party alliance at the Gono Bhaban last night.

At the meeting, the 14-party leaders requested the PM to take strict measures to tackle the ongoing crisis.

They also sought support from the countrymen in this regard.

Briefing reporters after the meeting, Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader said, "It is indeed a curfew." A "shoot-at-sight" order has already been issued, he added.

At the meeting, the PM informed that she had cancelled her visit to Spain scheduled for July 21-23.

Sources at the meeting said 14-party leaders demanded a quick report of the judicial investigation launched into the killing of six quota reform protesters on Tuesday.

They also demanded punishment to those responsible for the killings and urged the state to take responsibilities of the victims' families.

- At least 101 killed in last four days' violence
- Many non-students joined yesterday's protests
- Rab helicopters charged sound grenades, teargas shells from air
- Metro rail service suspended until further notice

By yesterday evening, many Dhaka streets were strewn with the remnants of thousands of rounds of teargas shells, sound grenades, rubber bullets, shotgun pellets, bullets and brick chunks. Those areas looked like battlefields too risky to enter.

By nightfall, at least 66 people were confirmed dead and hundreds more injured across the country, as the unprecedented scale of violence centring on the quota reform movement intensified. Fifty-five of the victims are from the capital.

The death toll may rise as The Daily Star could not reach many city hospitals where dozens of critically injured patients were taken for treatment.

For a second day in a row, thousands of protesters, many of whom were non-students, clashed with law enforcers and ruling party activists in capital Dhaka and at least 16 other districts, said witnesses.

Including yesterday's victims, at least 101 people have lost their lives since Tuesday, when six people were killed in the clash. On Thursday, at least 29 more people were killed in fierce clashes between protesters and law enforcers, aided by ruling party activists.

Yesterday, agitators in Dhaka defied a government ban on gathering to take to the streets in droves, and clashed with police, Rab, BGB members, who were joined in by ruling Awami League activists.

Like on Thursday, protesters set fire to several government and private establishments and vandalised many vehicles, including some belonging to law enforcers.

Of the victims, 31 were either declared dead or brought dead at the DMCH, said Inspector Bachchu Mia, in-charge of the DMCH police outpost, at 1:11am today.

Prof Shafiur Rahman, director of Suhrawardy Hospital, said more than 10 bodies were already at the hospital at 10:55pm. However, it is difficult to give a concrete number as bodies were coming one after another.

Five people were either declared dead or brought dead yesterday afternoon at Uttara Adhunik Hospital, according to an emergency department official. He also sought anonymity.

Four bodies were kept at Mitford Hospital's emergency unit around 10:00pm, said morgue sources.

Three were brought dead at Farazy Hospital in Banasree, said Rubel Hossain, its deputy general manager.

One person was brought dead at the Crescent Hospital in Uttara, said Tofazzal, general manager of the hospital. One died at Kuwait-Maitree Hospital, said its superintendent Mizanur Rahman.

In addition, doctors at Better Life Hospital in Rampura and Advance Hospital in Banasree said they each received five bodies and referred seven of them to Dhaka Medical College Hospital.

The Daily Star could not immediately verify if any of these 10 bodies were later taken to the DMCH or any other government hospital.

Outside Dhaka, four were killed in Rangpur, three in Narsingdi, one each in Savar, Sylhet, Bogura, and Mymensingh, according to hospital authorities.

In the capital, Rampura, Badda, Malibagh, Jatrabari, Mohakhali, Mouchak, Dhanmondi, Mohammadpur,

A brutal day at DMCH

SHAHEEN MOLLAH

The Dhaka Medical College Hospital yesterday relapsed into a zone of fears and uncertainties, with hundreds of people arriving with patients wounded in violent clashes that rocked the capital and beyond.

A large number of patients in the need of urgent help stretched services at the hospital's emergency department. It was a race against time for doctors and nurses. The injured people were transported there -- either by their relatives or volunteers in autorickshaws, ambulances or even trucks.

Outside the emergency department, a desperate crowd waited for donated blood to save life, while some chanted slogans against what they said was "mindless shooting" that killed or injured many with no ties to student protests.

Some patients who were brought dead or declared dead on arrival were left on the tiled floor. Several bodies were delivered with police or hospital authorities failing to conduct autopsies.

At least 35 patients were transferred to the burn unit of the hospital as the emergency department had no space left to accommodate them.

Members of Ansar chased many relatives who were shouting slogans against the shooting by law-enforcement agencies. The parking space was crammed with ambulances, cars and other vehicles.

The rush of patients began to peak at 4:00pm and the hospital turned into a chaotic place with the presence of too many people.

There were shortages of trolleys and stretchers, and doctors were seen treating patients still lying on the laps of their relatives -- almost lifeless.

One of the unlikely patients at the emergency department was 3.5-year-old Abdul Ahad, son of Sumi Begum.

"My son was standing in the veranda of the eight-floor building in the afternoon. Suddenly, a bullet hit him in the forehead," Sumi, a resident of Kazla in Jatrabari, told this correspondent at the hospital as the evening wore on.

Ahad is now under life support at the emergency department and his mother cannot stop crying.

"What is the crime of my son? Who shot my son? If they are a trained force, how can this bullet hit my son? I want an answer from the government," Sumi said.

Hafizur Rahman, one of the volunteers, used a truck to transport some bullet-injured patients from Narayanganj to the

Will consider talks if nine demands met

Demonstrators say curfew enforced to quell protest; vow to continue 'complete shutdown'

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The agitating students have made a nine-point demand and said they would consider sitting with the government after those are met.

They said they would continue with their "complete shutdown" programme.

The students, demonstrating for reforms to the quota system in government jobs, said they would make the final decision on talks after consulting all students.

The protest will continue until the demands are met, Abdul Kader, a coordinator of Baishamyabirodhi Chhatra Andolan (student movement against discrimination), said in a statement at 9:30pm yesterday.

One of the assistant coordinators of Baishamyabirodhi Chhatra Andolan, Abdullah Salehin Ayan, in a text message said the government enforced a curfew in the face of resistance by students and citizens of the country and to suppress their movement.

He urged the army to stand by them.

One of the demands is that Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina apologises in public and take responsibility for the deaths of students.

Dozens of govt establishments set ablaze

Metro Rail stations, Matsya Bhaban among them

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Many government establishments across the country came under attack yesterday like the day before amid the ongoing violence.

Government offices in Dhaka and several other districts were set ablaze and vanalised. Metro rail stations, BRTA offices, and Matsya Bhaban were also attacked.

Several offices of the ruling Awami League and some houses of its leaders were ransacked.

In Dhaka, demonstrators vandalised the Mirpur-10 and Kazipara metro rail stations last evening.

"Metro rail was not in service today [yesterday] and the gates were shut, but the criminals broke open the gates of the two stations and vandalised the first floor of each of those," said an official of metro rail authority.

Meanwhile, the metro railway authority yesterday said operation of metro rail will remain suspended from today for an indefinite period due to the ongoing situation.

Arsonists set ablaze the office of Bangladesh Road Transport Authority (BRTA) in Mirpur-10.

Demonstrators vandalised the BRTA headquarters and Setu Bhaban at Chairmanbari in the capital's Banani.

"Around 50 vehicles weretorched at Setu Bhaban yesterday [Thursday]. The first floor of the Setu Bhaban was vandalised and set on fire today [yesterday]. Three floors of the BRTA head office were also set ablaze," said an official of the road transport and bridges ministry.

Uttara, Pragati Sarani, Kazipara and Mirpur saw some of the most violent clashes as student and non-student protesters fought pitched battles with the law enforcers.

The law enforcers fired live rounds, lobbed teargas shells and blasted sound grenades at the agitators who retaliated with brickbats, creating panic among the residents of different areas.

In an unprecedented scene in independent Bangladesh, law enforcers charged sound grenades and teargas shells on the demonstrators from the air, as Rab helicopters patrolled the Dhaka sky at low height, including in Mirpur 10 and 6, Mohammadpur, and Rampura bridge.

Panicked, many city residents stayed indoors and did not dare venture out. A Rab helicopter was also seen carrying water to extinguish a fire in Mohakhali area.

Fierce clashes were also reported from Narayanganj, Sylhet, Bogura, Brahmanbaria, Tangail, Barishal and Chattogram.

Dhaka was isolated from the rest of the country as road and rail communications were snapped.

The authorities suspended metro rail operation for an indefinite period from today. Rail communications also remained suspended yesterday, and will remain halted until further notice.

Hardly any long-distance bus left Dhaka.

Different government establishments, including metro stations at Kazipra and Mirpur, and BRTA office in Mirpur 13, were vandalised while a Police Bureau of Investigation (PBI) office in Banasree and several police boxes in the capital were set afire.

Besides, at least six establishments of Dhaka North City Corporation in Uttara, Mohakhali, Rampura and Mohammadpur were set ablaze.

Police foiled BNP's rally supporting the student movement, and arrested Ruhul Kabir Rizvi Ahmed, party joint secretary, near the National Press club.

Earlier in the morning, the Dhaka Metropolitan Police (DMP) imposed ban on any kind rally in the capital.

However, around 2:00pm it said political parties will be allowed to hold rally at in front of their central offices. This paved the way for Awami League to hold a rally in front of its party office in Bangabandhu Avenue against the ongoing "anarchy".

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader from the rally said the quota movement does not belong to students anymore, it has turned into a movement of the BNP-Jamaat.

"We have endured enough; our backs are up against the wall... We have to wage a united resistance against these BNP-Jamaat goons," he said.

Hasnat Abdullah, one of the main organisers, yesterday said their anti-discriminatory student movement has no relation and involvement with violence.

The demand for reformation of quota is universal. Anyone can extend their support to the demand of the protestors, said Hasnat, a Dhaka University student.

"But no one will be allowed to take advantage of our movement and use our banner to implement their ulterior political motive," he told The Daily Star yesterday evening.

Meanwhile, BGB has been deployed across the country to maintain law and order, says a BGB text message. BGB also says 52 BGB members were injured while on duty during the ongoing nationwide "complete shutdown" called by the quota protesters.

Several BGB vehicles were vandalised.

RAMPURA-BADDA

Rampura and Badda areas saw the fiercest clash yesterday as protesters clashed with police and BGB from early morning to dusk.

Police and BGB fired bullets at the protesters, mostly on the upper part of the bodies, raising the casualties, said witnesses.

For the second day, the communication through Rampura Bridge was halted due to violence.

Almost all the alleys of the road were blocked by the protesters, including many teenagers. They put trees and electric polls to make the blockade.

Around 12:00pm, the main road from Mouchak to Bashundhara residential area was full with brick chunks.

Some protesters vandalised the CCTV cameras in front of houses and shops.

Around 3:30pm, the BGB shot bullets at the protesters near TV Centre area, killing a student on the spot while several others were declared dead at the hospital. Some others were critically injured by bullets.

Although the situation in Banasree calmed in the evening, hundreds of protestors gathered at Rampura bridge area as soon as Rab helicopters began charging sound grenades from the air.

MIRPUR

Roads and alleys of over two-kilometer areas between Kazipara and Mirpur 6 also saw violent clashes between protestors and police, aided by Awami league men.

Law enforcers fired heavily from shotguns and charged sound grenades and teargas canisters at demonstrators who hurled brickbats in retaliation, said witnesses.

At one point, the agitators ransacked and torched the offices of Dhaka North City Corporation and Bangladesh Road Transport Office, both in Mirpur. They also vandalised Metro Rail stations at Mirpur-10 and Kazipara, and Popular Diagnostic Centre in Mirpur.

Parts of the area were first engulfed in flames and then were covered by black smoke from smoldering structures, locals said.

Rab helicopters flew at low height in the area and lobbed sound grenades.

"One grenade fell near my house. I saw some flying pigeons falling to the ground," said a panicked resident of Mirpur-10 area.

Another Mirpur resident said she and her seven-year-old son were so panicked that they quickly took cover inside their room, and did not open the door until the heavy sound died down.

At least four people suffered bullet injuries, three of them critically, said another witness.

The clash broke out around 3:00pm when Police and BGB members along with ruling party activists carrying sticks, hockey sticks and sharp weapons charged the demonstrators, who blocked the Mirpur-10 intersection. Not all of them appeared to be students.

A clash soon followed, and running battles between the two sides – agitators on one side and law enforcers and the AL men on the other – continued still around 8:0pm.

MOHAMMADPUR

Violent clashes also erupted at Sangkar and Bheribandh of Mohammadpur and adjoining areas as protesters and law enforcers backed by AL activists fought a pitched battle.

The law enforcers fired shots and lobbed teargas shells and sound grenades indiscriminately during the clashes. The protesters, some of whom members of the public, retaliated with brick chunks, according to witnesses.

Residents reported seeing Rab helicopters charging sound grenades from low height.

The clash ensued around 3:45pm at Dhanmondi 27 intersection on Satmasjid road and continued till 8:00pm.

Violent clashes also erupted in Beribdha area in the afternoon and continued till evening.

Confirmation about any casualties or injuries were not immediately available.

Around 6:00pm, hundreds of protesters carrying sticks took position on Mohammadpur-Beribadh road and its adjacent alleys, halting traffic.

They chased away police, Chhatra League and Jubo League activists from there, throwing bricks at them.

DHANMONDI

Hundreds of agitators blocked Sat Masjid Road and Dhanmondi 27 roads, the main thoroughfare connecting Dhanmondi and Mohammadpur, after Jumma prayers.

At around 2:30pm, hundreds of students and youths started to gather at Sat Masjid Road. Armed with wooden and bamboo sticks, they set up makeshift barricades in Shankar, Dhanmondi 15 and Abahani Field intersections.

The protesters cut branches from roadside trees, gathered old furniture and tyres on different roads in the area and set them ablaze.

Russia downs 33 Ukrainian drones

AFP, Moscow

Russia downed 33 Ukrainian aerial drones overnight over Crimea and 10 naval drones that were heading for the peninsula, Moscow's defence ministry said.

"Air defence systems on duty destroyed and intercepted 33 aerial drones over... Crimea," the ministry said in a Telegram post, adding that forces "in the Black Sea destroyed 10 naval drones that were heading towards the Crimean peninsula".

Sevastopol governor Mikhail Razvozhayev said earlier on Thursday that loud noises heard in the Crimean city were linked to the Russian army retaliating "against an attempted attack by a surface drone".

Late last month, Moscow accused Ukraine of carrying out a deadly strike in Crimea using US missiles, killing at least four people, including two children, and injuring more than 150, according to the local authorities installed by Russia.

Two drones were also neutralised overnight in the Bryansk region of western Russia, according to the Russian defence ministry.

"There were no casualties or damage," local governor Alexander Bogomaz said on Telegram Thursday.

Ukraine has stepped up its attacks on Russian territory this year, targeting both energy sites that it says supply the Russian army, as well as towns and villages just across the border and in Crimea.

Both sides have used drones extensively since the conflict began in February 2022.

Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader must step down from the cabinet and their party for illegally using the law enforcers, they said.

Deputy inspectors general of police, commissioners of police, and superintendents of police of the areas where the students got killed must be fired.

Vice-chancellors and proctors of Dhaka University, Jahangirnagar University and Rajshahi University must resign, according to the demands.

Abdul Kader said policemen, who shot students, and the "goons" of Chhatra League and Jubo League, who carried out the attacks, have to be arrested and murder cases should be filed against them.

The family members of the students who have been killed and injured must be compensated, he said in the statement.

The statement also demanded a ban on student politics and said the student unions must be made effective in all educational institutions, including Dhaka University, Jahangirnagar University, Chittagong University, and Rajshahi University.

All educational institutions and halls must be reopened immediately.

Those who are involved in the student movement must be given assurance that they will not be harassed.

Hasnat Abdullah, one of the main organisers of the quota reform protest, yesterday said the student movement against discrimination is not involved in setting fire and damaging vehicles.

The demand for reformation of quota is universal and anyone can extend their support to the protesters' demand, said Hasnat, also a Dhaka University student.

"But no one will be allowed to take advantage of our movement and use our banner to implement their ulterior political move," he said while talking to The Daily Star in the evening.

Hasnat said they disagreed with the government proposal of keeping 20 percent quota in public service.

He added that the demonstrators are demanding five percent quota for groups of people who have fallen behind. Through quality research, the government can only increase it by one or two percent.

He urged all protesting students to continue the demonstration avoiding any kind of violence.

Arsonists also set fire to Mirpur Indoor Stadium, Matsya Bhaban in Ramna, Drug Administration Bhaban in Tejgaon, a toll plaza of Dhaka Elevated Expressway in Mohakhali, an office of the Police Bureau of Investigation in Banasree, Dhaka North City Corporation regional office-3 at Mohakhali, regional office-1 in Uttara, regional office-5 in Mohammadpur, Uttara Community Centre and Shuchona Community Centre in Mohammadpur, Rampura pump house, an old building of the Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS) in Mohakhali, Dhaka Wasa office at Hatirjheel and an Ansar camp in Badda.

Similar incidents of arson attacks and vandalism were reported in Narayanganj, Narasingdi, Tangail, Savar in Dhaka, Chattogram, and Sylhet.

In Narsingdi, demonstrators attacked the district jail and broke open its gates, leading to the escape of many prisoners, said police.

Criminals torched the Madhabdi municipality office and two police outposts in Narsingdi Sadar upazila. The district council office at Bhelanagar of Sadar upazila also came under an attack.

In Savar, protesters set ablaze a police box, four buses and a truck, and vandalised a hospital, a DB office and five AL offices.

In Chattogram, demonstrators set fire to two traffic police boxes in Kazir Dewri and New Market and an AL office in New Market area.

In Sylhet, protesters vandalised a SUV of Prof Farid Uddin Ahmed, the vice-chancellor of Shahjalal University of Science and Technology, at MAG Osmani Medical College Hospital yesterday.

In Narayanganj, demonstrators vandalised the regional passport office on the Dhaka-Narayanganj Link Road in Signboard area around 9:00pm on Thursday. Almost all the furniture and documents in the three-storey building, including about 8,000 passport booklets, were damaged in the fire.

Criminals also torched the district PBI office in Signboard area on Thursday night. Five vehicles parked at the office were burnt.

On Wednesday and Thursday, protesters set ablaze at least 30 establishments, including the main building of Bangladesh Television in the capital's Rampura, during clashes with BGB personnel and police in Dhaka and several other districts.

People suffer for government's wrong decisions

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Due to the government's stubbornness and wrong decisions, people are suffering in the country, said Opposition Leader and Jatiyo Party Chairman GM Quader yesterday.

He demanded an immediate end to the countrywide anarchy and killings.

The JP chief said this in a statement sent to different media through text messages.

"It's very unfortunate that bullets are being fired on general people. It is the responsibility of the law enforcement agencies to ensure security of people's lives and properties," he said.

He also said people are the owner of the country and it is normal that the government will play a role to implement their will.

"It's not the task of the government to impose its own idea and will on people through gagging their voice and repression," GM Quader said.

Violence, fear shut down Dhaka

MD SHAHNAWAZ KHAN

The ongoing clashes between protesters and law enforcement agencies, which ignited over the quota reform protests, brought Dhaka to a standstill yesterday.

Due to unavailability of public transport, essential services and shutdown of all sorts of businesses, people had to suffer immensely.

Moreover, countrywide internet shutdown since July 18 have added another layer of uncertainty and suffering to the ongoing crisis.

As violence escalated in most of the major roads in the city, shops, markets, and office establishments along these streets remained mostly closed for the last few days.

In many areas, residents could not even access essential services like hospitals and diagnostic centres. People from low income groups, daily wage earners and small business owners were the most affected.

Zahid Hasan, a driver of a city bus that runs from Mohammadpur to Sadarghat, said, "If I complete a full trip, I earn around Tk 300. In the last one week, I could only make three to four trips. I have to support a family of seven. Now I don't have any money to buy food for my children."

Unavailability of public transport has also affected commuters who are venturing out for essential activities.

Sharnali Saha, an employee of a healthcare organisation, said, "As I work for a healthcare organisation, I have to go to my office no matter what is happening on the streets. Without any transport, I have to walk for miles daily to reach my workplace. Even rickshaws cannot pass through blocked roads. Doctors and patients are also suffering while trying to reach healthcare centres."

"If this continues for a few more days, I shall not be able to attend my office anymore," she said.

The sufferings of patients and healthcare providers can be clearly seen in front of the gates of major hospitals like Dhaka Medical College Hospital and Suhrawardy Medical College Hospital.

As there is no public transport, and very few rickshaws and taxis are on the roads, patients have to walk a long way to get medical services.

Jahanara Begum, a cancer patient, was trying to visit a treatment centre in Shyamoli from the Mohammadpur area. Finding no transport in the morning, her son had to take her there in a wheelchair, walking all the way to the hospital.

Her son, Murshidul Hasan, said, "This has become unbearable. The government cannot disable the entire country for their failure to deal with a justified movement."

Terrified by the violence, very few people are coming out of their homes. As a result, the once busy streets, restaurants and market places all over the city lie mostly empty, even during Friday afternoon.

Md Arafat, a restaurant manager at Dhanmondi's Shimanto Square, said, "Our business has completely stopped. People are too afraid to come out of their homes. Who will go for shopping and dining out in this situation?"

"As we did not have any customers over the last few days, we had to throw away a large amount of food today. As a result, we suffered heavy losses," he added.

The shop owners of Dhaka's kitchen markets are also suffering due to a lack of customers and shortage of supplies.

Md Sobhan Mia, a businessman of Dhaka's Krishi Market, said, "Very few trucks could pass through Dhaka-Aricha highway for the last three days. Supplies of vegetables and spices could not be replenished. If situation goes on like this, prices of essential food items and other commodities will increase again in the coming days. People will suffer a lot."

"Why didn't they agree with the legitimate demands of the students? It could have ended all the problems easily. We don't know how they will solve it now," he added.

With a blank look, Hasi Akhter was sitting on the floor at the Dhaka Medical College Hospital (DMCH) emergency morgue yesterday.

She was mourning the loss of her only son. Tears have dried on her face from the relentless crying.

Rakib, 23, was killed during a clash between protesters and police yesterday.

Rakib was hit by shotgun pellets at Rampura in the morning. He was taken to DMCH immediately, where the doctors declared him dead around noon.

"How will I survive? He was the only earning member of our family. Rakib was not involved in politics. He was not even a student. Why did they kill him?" Hasi kept asking over and over.

She told The Daily Star that Rakib had been working at the Palli Bidyut office for the last seven years on a day-to-day basis. He became a permanent employee just seven months earlier.

In his wake, Rakib has left behind a widow. The two had gotten married just three years back.

Now, Rakib's mother, two sisters and wife have no one to provide for them.

Our daughters still await his return

Says wife of killed journo Hassan Mehedi

DIPAN NANDY

Even two days ago, Farzana Popy had been living a life full of love and happiness with her husband and two daughters.

But everything changed on Thursday. Her husband, journalist Hassan Mehedi, was killed on duty during a clash in the capital's Jatrabari.

With Mehedi's death, everything just shattered for Farzana and her little girls within a moment. Their two daughters -- three-year-old Nisha and six-month-old Meher -- aren't even old enough to understand the gravity of the situation.

"It's been only five years since we got married, going against our families. We were dreaming of a beautiful life surrounding our two girls; we were all so happy. But now everything is gone...," said Farzana with a broken voice, as she was waiting in front of the DMCH morgue yesterday, alongside her elder daughter Nisha, to take the body home.

"Nisha is still waiting for her father to return from work and play with her, as he used to do every night," said Farzana, a homemaker.

Meanwhile, Nisha was roaming around her mother and was constantly asking about her father's whereabouts.

"I have left my younger daughter at home, she must be really hungry by now," said Farzana, adding, "We will take Mehedi's body to his village home in Patuakhali's Baufal."

"Now I have no idea how I'll run the family," said Farzana.

Before working as a staff reporter at online news portal Dhaka Times, Mehedi worked at Kaler Kantha and Dainik Bangladesher Alo, she said.

Emam Hossain Emon, staff reporter of Dainik Bangladesher Alo who was present during the incident, said Mehedi was shot with shotgun pellets by an Armed Police Carrier (APC) near the ramp of Mayor Hanif Flyover while he was taking video footage.

Mehedi was declared dead at Dhaka Medical College Hospital.

COUNTRYWIDE VIOLENCE

Clashes rage on for the fourth day

STAR REPORT

The ongoing protests showed no signs of abetting yesterday as clashes continued across the country for the fourth day in different cities and districts, alongside the capital.

At least 10 people died and over several hundreds were injured in these clashes that took place between protesters, law enforcers, and ruling party members.

In Rangpur, four persons were killed during a clash between protesters and police in the City Bazar area in the evening.

The deceased were identified as Sazzad Hossain and Moslem Uddin. Both were hit by rubber bullets, said Ashikur Rahman of Rangpur Medical College Hospital. The other two victims are Murad Hossain, 25, and Makbul Hossain, 60.

Meanwhile, a private clinic in the city was torched. Md Moniruzzaman, commissioner of Rangpur Metropolitan Police, said the protesters attacked many police establishments.

In Narsingdi, two people were killed while in a clash between protesters and police and AL men. One of the deceased is Shaon, 20.

Witnesses said a section of protesters torched Madhabdi municipal office around 4:00pm. Then they locked into a clash with the municipal mayor's men and police, in which the two died.

Confirming the deaths, Mahmudul Kabir Bashar, RMO of Narsingdi Sadar Hospital, said they were hit by bullets.

At least 45 people took treatment with bullet injuries at Narsingdi District Hospital.

Panchadhana police outpost also came under attack around 8:30pm, said SI Anwar Hossain of Madhabdi police.

In Savar, a protester was shot dead when they clashed with police and BGB in Radio Colony area around 4:00pm.

The deceased is Al Amin, 24, an honours student at Bangladesh Open University.

Amin, who was brought dead, suffered bullet injuries, said Ezazur Rahman, a doctor of Enam Medical College Hospital.

Attackers to blame for casualties

Says Arafat

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

State Minister for Information and Broadcasting Muhammad Ali Arafat yesterday warned that it won't even take half an hour to control the unruly mob if the government applies five percent of its capacity.

"But it may increase casualty, which is why the government is showing restraint," said Arafat while speaking at a press conference held at the Dhaka North City Corporation office.

"We cannot go for action if there are children at some places. The miscreants can do whatever they wish, but the government cannot," he said in response to a journalist's query.

"We also believe that students have no involvement in the Internet blackout disrupts Ctg port activities

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

Export and import activities at the Chattogram Port have almost ground to a halt due to the countrywide internet blackout since 9:00pm on Thursday.

Assessment of import and export consignments could not be done as the software -- ASCUDA World programme --could not be run in the absence of internet, said Mohammad Fyzur Rahman, commissioner of Chattogram Customs House.

The internet blackout meant the customs and port authority could not do duty assessment for import containers and verification of export consignments, said Md Omar Faruk, secretary of the Chattogram Port Authority.

However, import consignments that had their duty assessment done and payment cleared before the internet blackout were given the exit note by the customs for delivery, he said.

But many of the importers did not take the goods fearing it could get caught up in violence.

They even showed a bullet the medics recovered from the body of an injured.

Around 3:30pm, BGB shot at the demonstrators near the BTV area, leaving a student dead on the spot. Many others were critically injured at the time.

The deceased was identified as Samudra, a student of Rajdhani Ideal College. A bullet hit his arms and pierced through his chest, said hospital sources.

"When his body was lying at the hospital, his mother was calling him repeatedly on his phone," said a doctor.

Again at 4:00pm, The Daily Star correspondents saw BGB personnel fire at demonstrators in front of Better Life Hospital.

Footage from the scene shows, an unarmed teen getting shot in the chest. He fell to the ground and was bleeding profusely.

At Better Life Hospital, these correspondents saw two bodies. One of them was identified as Shawon, 18. He was a restaurant staffer.

Sources of its emergency department in the afternoon said they received five bodies since morning.

Near Boubazar of Rampura, a group of protesters was chanting "Naraya Takbir Allahu Akbar". They stopped when a middle-aged man came in and said not to use the slogan.

On the street, many from the group were seen telling demonstrators lies like the BGB personnel were speaking Hindi and that they were from India. This agitated the protesters more.

In Banasree, Rab helicopters were seen firing teargas and sound grenades at the agitators while BGB personnel were seen firing bullets near Farazi Hospital in the same area.

This correspondent saw two bodies in Advance Hospital, Bansaree. One of them was an unidentified child. The other body was of Maruf, a student of Kushtia Polytechnic Institute, who was in Dhaka for an internship.

Hospital sources said they received at least five bodies since the morning.

At least 250-300 injured took treatment at Farazi Hospital yesterday. Four vehicles of the Red Crescent also gave primary treatment at the spot.

Lives upended by internet shutdown

gas and electricity in my house. I won't be able to do anything about it until the internet is back up."

Safwana Islam, an 18-year-old college student from Mirpur, said that she was unable to top-up not only her own phone, but also for her elderly parents living in the village. "I don't even have enough cash and my local ATM is out-of-service."

Murtoza Zaman, chief executive officer at Unimart, a local supermarket chain, said, "Customers could not pay through their bank cards or their mobile financial services."

Contacted, Bangladesh Bank Executive Director Saiful Islam acknowledged that online banking services were disrupted due to the internet outage.

The information void, created amid the nationwide internet shutdown, is affecting people, both home and abroad, who are concerned about the countries current volatile situation.

Taswar Sharif Bihongo, a 23-year-old studying in Hong Kong's City University, had no way of knowing the current scenario of Bangladesh.

"I've been trying to get news updates online, but no Bangladeshi website was up to date. My fellow Bangladeshi students have been worried sick as well," he told The Daily Star over the phone.

Since Thursday, the country has been under a complete internet blackout after the transfer of bandwidth was suspended to internet service providers, while carriers were ordered to shut down mobile data services amid the ongoing violent clashes surrounding the quota reform protests.

Broadband and mobile network operators have told The Daily Star that this decision was made by the government in view of the current situation and that they were dependent on the authorities to restart the services.

The country's IT and digital commerce sectors faced the biggest blow, with IT firms that export their services fearing permanent damage to their reputation amongst international clients.

"We are facing staggering daily financial losses, but the long-term effect would be more devastating," said Russel Ahmed, president of Bangladesh Association of Software and Information Services (BASIS).

BASIS primarily estimated the financial losses at Tk 80 crore for IT firms in the 24 hours since the internet outage.

Shamsuddin Haider Dalim, head of corporate communication at bKash, said clients who use the internet-based bKash app have been impacted in absence of internet connection. "However, over half of our clients avail our service through dialing *247#."

State Minister of ICT Zunaid Ahmed Palak, meanwhile, urged the people to remain patient.

"This is an unprecedented situation, where we need to ensure both physical and digital protection for the people. We're doing our best to get the internet back up."

He said Asif had called his sister, who lives in Khilgaon, around 11:30am, saying he was at the protest and was in a safe distance from the violence.

"Then suddenly he said he was going to give some water to an injured student who had collapsed on the road. He cut the line and rushed to wounded student with a bottle of water, when police fired pellets at him from a close range. He died moments later.

"He was a brilliant student and dreamt of becoming a BCS [admin] cadre officer, but his life was cut short. His chest sustained around 200-300 pellets," Monuruzzaman said as he held back his tears.

Asif had gotten GPA-5 in both SSC and HSC exams from the science group.

The air in Askarpur village, in Satkhira's Debhata upazila, hung heavy as Asif's body reached his home around 1:30am yesterday in an ambulance.

Asif was buried at his family graveyard around 7:00am.

He had three elder sisters and a twin brother Rakib. For a large part of their lives, they had to grow up without their mother after her death.

Md Abu Hasan, a teacher of Nalta High School where Asif studied, fondly remembered his student.

"Whenever his father came to the school, he would request me to take special care of Hasan and his siblings, saying they were deprived of a mother's love...He was a polite young boy and never raised his voice to anyone."

"A pall of gloom has taken over our village... Asif was a polite boy. His death has shocked us all," Sirajul Islam, a resident of Askarpur said.

Hospitals in southern Gaza at 'breaking point'

AFP, Geneva

All health facilities in southern Gaza have been pushed to "breaking point" due to an influx of people wounded by Israeli bombardments and doctors could soon be forced to make "difficult choices" on who gets treated, the Red Cross said Thursday.

The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) said its 60-bed field hospital in the city of Rafah took in 26 people requiring hospitalisation for shrapnel and other injuries after a strike on the Al-Mawasi camp for displaced people on Saturday.

The health ministry in the Hamas-run territory said at least 90 people were killed and 300 injured in the strike that Israel said targeted military commanders.

Last week also saw an influx of 850 people requiring outpatient care at the Red Cross hospital.

DMCH around 8:30pm.

"We went to different hospitals in Narayanganj but did not find any space. Finally, we came here," he said.

This correspondent saw the body of 24-year-old Shaon, who was taken to the DMCH from the New Market area.

His friend Sajeeb said Shaon used to work in the New Market area as a vendor. Shaon was not a protester, but he was hit by bullets.

"What is his crime? Why was he shot dead?" Sajeeb asked.

"They shot people without looking at who were in the demonstration or not. There were passersby and street vendors who were hit by bullets," Sajeeb told this correspondent.

According to the hospital administration, the patients who were brought to DMCH were mostly aged between 18 and 40. As of 7:00pm yesterday, at least 310 patients were brought to the emergency department.

When the procession reached near the Press Club, police and BGB personnel, deployed there since morning, chased the activists and broke up the procession.

A few minutes later, demonstrators from different alleys of the Purana Paltan started pelting brick chunks at the police and BGB personnel, leading to clashes.

Meanwhile, Islami Andolan took out a procession from the Baitul Mukarram after Juma prayers. When the procession reached the Purana Paltan intersection, the party's leaders and activists hurled brick chunks at the law enforcers.

They got dispersed when police and BGB personnel chased the demonstrators.

The BNP men could not hold their rally as the clashes continued till 4:30pm.

Clashes rage on for the fourth day

Besides, around 100 people were injured in daylong clashes at Amin Bazar, Baliapur, CNB, and Savar Police Station areas.

The protesters also carried out an attack on the Detective Branch office in Savar Bazar Bus Stand area around 8:00pm. They also vandalised some DB vehicles.

Besides, they torched four buses, a truck, a police box, and a few shops, alongside vandalising a hospital and five AL party offices.

Some 25 injured people, including five with bullet wounds, were receiving treatment at Enam Medical College Hospital, while 20 received treatment at Savar Upazila Health Complex.

Dhaka's Additional Superintendent of Police Abdullahel Kafi said he does not know about the death. However, many policemen were injured.

Meanwhile, former Gazipur City Corporation Mayor Jahangir Alam and few of his supporters were injured in an attack by protesters in the capital's Uttara area in the afternoon.

A motorcade of Jahangir and his followers was heading towards Dhaka. They were intercepted by protesters at Housebuilding area, said witnesses.

Jahangir was receiving treatment at a private hospital in Uttara till filing of this report at 9:00pm, said one of his aides.

In port city, protesters locked in clashes with police at different areas after a "Gayebana Janaza" at Laldighi Maidan.

The protesters vandalised an AL office in New Market area, and two traffic police boxes in Kazir Dewri and New Market areas.

Protesters also attacked GTV's reporter Towhidur Rahman and injured him.

Meanwhile, BNP men gathered at Nasiman Bhaban area to attend their declared programme. Police fired sound grenades to disperse the BNP men and protesters at Kazir Dewri, where all the parties locked in a clash.

CMP Deputy Commissioner Mostafizur Rahman said, "Police went to action as protesters started hurling brickbats at them. Police held around 20 persons in this connection."

In Kishoreganj, over 50 people were injured in sporadic clashes between protesters and police in Bhairab upazila.

In Sylhet, a journalist, ATM Turab, bureau chief of Naya Diganta and also staff reporter of Daily Jalalabad, was shot dead.

He got injured with over a hundred shotgun pellets during a clash between police and BNP members around 2:00pm at Bandarbazar area. Arif Mohammad Reza, duty doctor at Ibn Sina Hospital, confirmed the death.

At least 25 people were injured as a clash broke out right after the Juma prayers while leaders and activists of BNP were preparing for a procession.

Meanwhile, hundreds of locals and students blocked Sylhet-Sunamganj Highway around 3:00pm.

In Bogura, a protester was shot dead in a clash between protesters and law enforcers in the town's Amtoli area. The deceased was identified as Saim Shuvo, 16.

Shuvo was brought dead to the hospital at 7:00pm with shotgun pellet injury marks on his body, said Md Saleh, doctor of Bogura Shaheed Ziaur Rahman Medical College Hospital.

In Mymensingh, a 17-year-old boy named Sagor was killed in clashes between AL members and protesters.

He was declared dead when he was taken to Mymensingh Medical College Hospital, said Dr Zakiul Islam, deputy director of the hospital.

The clashes also left some 30 injured.

In Narayanganj, protesters set fire to the district PBI office in Signboard area, along with five vehicles parked at the office. They also set alight the fire service vehicles that went there to douse the blaze.

In the district's Jalkuri area, four persons were injured during a clash.

Several hundred people, led by AL MP Shamim Osman, brought out processions in Narayanganj, where many of Shamim's men allegedly brandished firearms, and iron rods.

Around 8:00pm, at least 26 buses of Shital Paribahan owned by Shamim Osman were burnt at Jalkuri.

Around 10:00pm, miscreants vandalised and set fire to a part of Nagar Bhaban building of Narayanganj City Corporation and torched two vehicles.

In Tangail's Kalihati upazila, protesters torched upazila AL's office, near Kalihati Bus stand, around 4:00pm. When police tried to disperse them, they threw brickbats at police, leading to clash where a few got injured, including OC Kamrul Faruk of Kalihati Police Station.

In Barishal, at least 10 people were injured in a clash between BNP and AL men at CNB Road area. The clash erupted when AL men attacked a BNP procession.

In Brahmanbaria, protesters blocked the Dhaka-Sylhet Highway in front of Ashuganj toll plaza of Syed Nazrul Islam Bridge around 11:00am.

In Rajshahi, at least 12 were injured after leaders and activists of AL and its associate bodies foiled the scheduled rally of BNP.

Around 4:15pm, a group of AL, Jubo League and Chhatra League men started throwing brickbats targeting BNP rally at Bhubon Mohon Park.

In Munshiganj, chase and counter-chase took place between protesters and AL men at Sadar upazila. In Cox's Bazar, protesters blockaded the Chattogram-Cox's Bazar Link Road for hours and staged demonstration.

Meanwhile, a youth, who suffered injuries from shotgun pellets on Thursday, died early yesterday on the way to Chattogram Medical College Hospital.

front of Jatiya Sangsad Bhaban yesterday morning.

With placards that read, "Stop killing", "Why are our sons bloodied on the streets", and "Free democracy", they gathered there at 11:00am and stayed till 11:40am.

Condemning the police action on protesters, Imon said, "The sudden decision to vacate all the public university halls left the students insecure and it is in no way acceptable. The public university authorities across the country failed to ensure the safety of the students as they gave permission to police to enter campuses and subsequently attack students."

"The government used its associate bodies -- Chhatra League and police -- to suppress the students' movement, resulting in violence. It could be solved through discussion," he added.

Imon also said the government has to bear the responsibilities of those killed across the country during the ongoing movement for quota reform.

Over 100 cultural activists took part in the protest event.

Among others, photographer Shahidul Alam; former Jahangirnagar University Prof Rehnuma Ahmed; artists Shatabdi Wadud, Sanjana Preety, Safa Kabir, Shohel Mondal, and Khairul Basar, were present at the gatherings.

Additionally, several theatre troops including Natyadal Bottala, Tarua, Theatre 52, Baatighar, along with several university teachers expressed solidarity with the event.

Meanwhile, in another protest rally, speakers said the government is responsible for the deaths of the students who joined the quota protests.

The rally was organised by a group of teachers and guardians in front the capital's National Museum yesterday.

Addressing the rally, Asif Nazrul, a professor of Dhaka University, said, "We should stand by our students. We should raise our voices strongly."

Tamanna Masud, a university teacher, said they want to be with the students as the government failed to protect them.

anarchy and looting. Because, they took to the streets demanding quota reformation," he added.

"What did they demand? The reinstatement of the 2018 gazette. We have applied to the apex court seeking that. We never had any differences with them."

Arafat said a third party is carrying out the anarchy. "None of them are students. They are hooligans of Jamaat and BNP. It's clear."

"It has been said the rubber bullets have been stocked out. But it would take five years for rubber bullets to run out even if the government fire a bullet every second," he said.

"Till yesterday [Thursday] some students were in the protest. We were worried about them for which we showed the highest level of patience. When the students will get separated from them, only the hooligans will remain on the streets. Then the government will take action against them as per the Universal Human Rights Convention like all other democratic and civilised countries," he added.

He said the attackers are only to blame for all the casualties.

Call for Expressions of Interest For contracting NGOs for WFP's 2025-2026 Partnership cycle (from January 2025 to end 2025/26)
To implement the Humanitarian Assistance Programme in Bangladesh to Enhance Food Security, Nutrition and Resilience

The United Nations World Food Programme (WFP) invites experienced local/national/international NGOs to submit an Expression of Interest for the implementation of "Humanitarian assistance programmes to enhance food security, nutrition and resilience."

About the Programme:
Under the Country Strategic Plan (2022 – 2026), WFP will support Bangladesh on its path to ending hunger and reducing malnutrition by 2030 through four strategic outcomes (SO):

- ▶ SO1: Populations affected by crisis in Bangladesh are able to meet basic food, nutrition and other essential needs during and after crises.
- ▶ SO2: The nutrition needs of women, children, and vulnerable groups in Bangladesh are met through national institutions that have enhanced capacities to design and implement gender- and nutrition-sensitive social safety net programmes by 2026.
- ▶ SO3: Vulnerable communities in Bangladesh are more resilient to shocks and natural disasters owing to enhanced national disaster management capacity and flexible nutrition- and gender-sensitive social safety net programmes by 2026.
- ▶ SO4: Vulnerable crisis-affected populations in Bangladesh benefit from enhanced coordination and improved common services during and after crises.

WFP, through its partners, currently provides humanitarian assistance to approximately 1.2 million people in Bangladesh. In collaboration with the Government of Bangladesh (GoB), other UN agencies, and NGOs, WFP is also working in various sectors namely Food Security, Nutrition, Emergency response and Common Services. In the most vulnerable Bangladeshi communities and the camps, WFP will continue to: i) provide humanitarian food assistance to the Rohingya population every month through E-vouchers; ii) build the resilience of refugees and local communities through skills development, livelihoods, market linkages, food assistance for assets and volunteer services; iii) support schools and learning centres with school feeding and capacity building for relevant national institutions; iv) implementation of an integrated package of malnutrition prevention and treatment interventions and nutrition services targeting children aged 6-59 months and pregnant and lactating women; v) implement safety-net programmes; vi) implement disaster risk preparedness and response to protect the food security of vulnerable population; vii) implement Food and Nutrition Security Programme in Urban areas; viii) provide lifesaving food assistance during Emergency Response to any disaster in any geographical location in Bangladesh (through the provision of a standby emergency roster).

Conditions for entry:
The organization must have:

- A fully filled-in profile in the UN partner Portal (UNPP)
- Legal status (valid registration certificate with NGO Affairs Bureau)
- Experience in the geographic area for which it applies
- Experience in implementing food, nutrition, education (specifically school feeding), cash-based transfers and/or market-based interventions
- Experience in community mobilization and resilience building activities
- Experience in emergency preparedness and response
- Organization's strategic objectives that are aligned with WFP's strategic priorities; SO1 to SO4 mentioned above
- Adequate resource capacity (financial human resources and procurement)
- Relevant sector experience (Food, Nutrition, Logistics and Common Services)
- Strong project management experience
- Adequate financial capacity to conduct the required activities supported by an audited financial statement
- Strong relationships with local administration and relevant local and regional institutions

Application Process:
Interested parties are advised to monitor the UN Partner Portal (https://www.unpartnerportal.org/dashboard) for opportunities published for Bangladesh (Calls for Expressions of Interest – CFEI / Request for Proposal - RFP – under Partnership opportunities) during the period between July and September 2024. Please note, unlike previous years, that these partnership opportunities require a full proposal from the outset.

All interested local/national/international NGOs with a valid registration certificate from the NGO Affairs Bureau must ensure that their Organizational Profile on the Portal is fully updated with all the latest information and documents, and they must actively apply to the WFP partnership opportunity with a full proposal. Applications must be submitted through the UN partner portal within the timeframes given. A detailed guideline for creating an organizational profile in UN Partner Portal is available at https://supportcso.unpartnerportal.org/hc/en-us/sections/360000940774. Please note that there are no fees for applications and that applying is free of charge.

In case interested NGO's encounter any technical difficulties with UNPP, please contact bangladesh.flataskforce@wfp.org.

Tigresses seek momentum in Asia Cup opener

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh women's team will take on hosts Sri Lanka in their 2024 T20 Asia Cup Group B opener in Dambulla today, hoping to bounce back after a poor run of form in recent series at home.

Bangladesh head coach Hashan Tillakaratne was optimistic when asked about his side's chances leading up to the tournament, where the 2018 champions are slated to face off with Thailand and Malaysia on July 22 and 24, respectively, in their following group fixtures.

"We are going there to win the tournament. We have the credentials to beat any side. We have to go and play our A game; and the preparation has been spot on," Tillakaratne told The Daily Star in a recent interview.

The Tigresses will be buoyed by the return of two experienced stars in pacer Jahanara Alam and all-rounder Rumana Ahmed. The duo made their way back to the side on the back of impressive performances in the recently concluded Women's Dhaka Premier League, with Jahanara ending the tournament as the highest wicket-taker.

PHOTO: BCB

"They are experienced and we know what they have done for Bangladesh. It's good to get them back; and selectors recognised their performances in the domestic league. It's a great eye-opener for others also when someone does really well and gets recognised. Experience counts a lot, especially in major tournaments," Tillakaratne remarked.

The completion in the side had increased but, according to the Sri Lankan coach, it also introduced a fear of failure among the players.

The coaching staff had tried to assure the players. "We have to give them courage, and even as we haven't played well in recent times, we have faith in them. The selectors have not closed the door on anyone," Tillakaratne said ahead of the team's departure for Sri Lanka, hinting that Asia Cup performances could open doors to the World Cup squad.

Skipper Nigar Sultana Joty had been carrying the burden of the side's bad batting patch in recent series. Before the team's departure, she had relayed the importance of the opening fixture against Sri Lanka which would be Tigresses' first international match in a while since the home series against India.

Bangladesh have also failed to win any of the matches in the last two home series against Australia and India.

"We could not make the semis in the last Asia Cup. So, naturally, our first objective is to play semifinals. That is why our first game is very important since we have not been playing well for a long time. We have seen some individual performances but not as a team. For our momentum, we want to get a good start in the game against Sri Lanka," Joty said about gaining momentum in a press conference.

Joty was hopeful regarding performances from the two veterans in the team.

"Experience is always useful. Both of them played the last two Asia Cup tournaments. Rumana apu returned after a long time along with Jahanara apu. Both of them played tremendously in the last domestic tournament. I think these two experienced stars would have a big effect on the team," Joty had said.

Bangladesh will be hoping to fix their creaky batting line-up and, after a disastrous run with the bat in recent times, they would be hoping Rumana can add solidity while the rest find more T20-esque approach.

Children from neighbouring areas take to open spaces in the capital's Panthakunja park to play football and cricket yesterday afternoon as widespread violence over quota protests engulfed other parts of the city. The area was relatively spared from the clashes which have induced increased tension among the masses across the country.

Bangladesh eye top-three finish in U-20 Volleyball Championship

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh are eyeing a top three finish in the upcoming Asian Men's Under-20 Volleyball Championship, starting on July 23 in Indonesia, said assistant coach Shafiqul Islam Russel.

On the back of an impressive fifth-place finish in the previous edition in Bahrain in 2022, followed by months of solid preparation under the supervision of local coaches as well as national team coach Alipour Arozi, Bangladesh have their sights on surpassing their Bahrain show.

"Finishing fifth in Asian Under-20 Volleyball Championship was a big achievement for Bangladesh in their maiden appearance. So, we have set our goal to surpass our previous best," Russel told The Daily Star yesterday.

There is also an extra incentive to end up in the top three as those teams, by virtue of their position, will gain qualification for the FIVA Men's Under-20 World Championship in 2025.

The Bangladesh contingent is scheduled to leave for Indonesia in the early hours of Sunday.

For Bangladesh, drawn in a strong Group C along with reigning runners-up India, strong Japan and Kuwait, coming out of the group-stage seems to be tough task.

As part of their preparation leading up to the tournament, Bangladesh played against the likes of Nepal and Bhutan – winning the international tournament in BKSP two months ago – and played a total of 10 practice matches against senior sides.

Of the 12-member squad, 10 are from BKSP while five players - Titas Ahmed, Noman Hussain, Shamim Hossain, Al Sayem Rafat, Tatul Ahmed – have experience of playing the same championship two years ago. However, coach Russel remains concerned about the form of his best two players – Noman and Titas – who joined the camp two months late following their official commitments in Bangladesh Air Force.

"If experienced Noman and Titas can perform well and the new players can deliver their best, then we can expect to get out of the group-stage, beating either India or Japan," said Russel.

I have worked on my death bowling: Marufa

Young pacer Marufa Akter maybe still young in international cricket, but she has already become the leader of Bangladesh's pace attack and the standard-bearer when it comes to fitness and work ethics, according to teammates and coaches. Before departing for Sri Lanka to play in her first Women's T20 Asia Cup, Marufa had a conversation with The Daily Star's Samsul Arefin Khan where she spoke about her preparation and expectation in the regional meet. Here are the excerpts:

The Daily Star (DS): This will be your first Asia Cup and your first tour to Sri Lanka. How excited are you?
Marufa Akter (MA): Last year, I couldn't go to Sri Lanka for a bilateral series due to my board exam. It feels great that I'm going this time. We have won the tournament before. So, our target will be the same; winning the tournament.

DS: You had a decent Women's Dhaka Premier League (WDPL) campaign for BKSP where you took 13 wickets and then were part of the national team's two-week-long residential camp in BKSP. How do rate your preparation for the Asia Cup?
MA: The preparation has been good. The most important thing for me is that I've remained fit. I had a decent Premier League this year. Then, we also had a good camp at the BKSP. We played quite a few practice matches and the camp ended well. So, overall, I can say that all of us are in a good shape.

DS: Bangladesh were outplayed in the home series against Australia and India. Your performances were also not up to the mark. What have you done in the months since then to overcome that bad patch?
MA: More than anything, I practiced spot bowling during this period. I also worked on adding more variations so that I have more options to deceive the batters.

DS: Can you be more specific?
MA: I can bowl well with the new ball. But I struggle to control my line and length during the death overs. During this camp, I worked with the old ball. I tried slower deliveries and yorker. Now, I'm feeling very comfortable with my death bowling.

DS: Did you work with any particular coach for this?
MA: I worked with Shiblu sir [Robiul Islam]. He worked with us during our camp in BKSP. I worked under him for two weeks. He taught me different variations. It was a great experience for me.

DS: In a very short time, you have become the leader of Bangladesh's pace attack. What will be yours and the Bangladesh pace attacks' plan in Sri Lanka?
MA: The wickets in the sub-continent almost always favour the spinners. We have made a plan to bowl according to the wicket. Our coach [Shiblu sir] has worked with us on bowling variations. We will try to bowl what he taught us.

DS: Over the years, batting has almost always been a big issue in big tournaments for Bangladesh. Have the batters done anything specific in the camp to ensure that it they don't let the team down in Sri Lanka?
MA: I think all of our batters worked really hard in the camp. I'm very optimistic that our batters will be able to provide decent performances in the tournament.

DS: We will be hosting ICC Women's T20 World Cup in couple of months' time. How do you see the team's preparation leading up to the World Cup? Will there be an extra pressure as hosts?
MA: If you plan step by step, I think everything becomes easier. I don't think there will be any pressure. The team will get great support from the home fans.

The violence must end

Welcome offer of negotiation is being undermined by continued attacks

Twenty-nine dead, at least, and over 3,000 wounded, in one single day on Thursday. Eleven of those killed were students, a 17-year-old school child among them, and the rest includes a journalist, two rickshaw pullers and a pedestrian. While the identities of all the deceased could not be confirmed, what is apparent from media reports is that most of the victims were hit by shotgun pellets when law enforcers fired indiscriminately. A day later, even without any internet connectivity in the country, reports of violent crackdown on protesters are coming in. As of writing this editorial, at least 66 have been killed in attacks, many of them students. Dhaka as well as many other parts of the country have turned into areas of violence, with gun shots and grenades going off even late into the night.

What can possibly justify any response by the law enforcement that has led to this death toll? What is even more ironic is that while the attacks on protesters continued, the government was making calls for peace and dialogue. Peace and dialogue, as much as we all want it now, are not achieved through shotgun pellets and live bullets.

Who will take responsibility for all the deaths? The protests we have seen were largely peaceful—and the government, too, reacted with great restraint initially—before unprovoked attacks first by armed cadres of the ruling party, and then by law enforcement earlier in the week. What of the right to protest as enshrined in our constitution? It may seem pointless to ask this now, but what's the worst that would have happened had the protesters been allowed to carry out their shutdown programme without any intervention, as we saw in the first weeks of the protest? It may have caused inconvenience to ordinary citizens, and certainly the government, but it would not have led to so many unwarranted deaths. And if the aim on Thursday was to control a crowd from becoming violent, why did they not use non-lethal means to disperse them? Such indiscriminate and disproportionate violence has clearly only further incited an already angry crowd.

There are news reports of the cruel way that many of the students were killed. While we are glad that a police committee has been formed to probe the killing of Abu Sayed, can we expect the same for every death that has taken place? We can only hope that the judicial probe that has been promised to investigate the deaths will look into police excesses and recommend action accordingly.

It may well be that at this point other elements have infiltrated the movement and are carrying out violent activities not endorsed by the students. One of the coordinators of the movement has already disassociated themselves from political elements and destruction of public property. It is imperative that for the credibility of the movement, the students continue their protests peacefully. It is also important to distinguish the quota reform movement from those wanting to take advantage of the situation, but in order to do that, the government must first assuage the protesters. While we welcome the government's move to appeal to the court to keep 80 percent government jobs based on merit, and for the hearing to be held on Sunday, we urge it to follow through with confidence-building measures, first and foremost among which is putting a stop to the violence.

On top of all these, the government has decided to suspend internet connectivity in the country. To what end, we must ask. We have seen time and again how breakdowns in communication breed rumours, insecurity and anxiety. It also makes it impossibly difficult for journalists to do their job and provide a trusted account of what is happening on the ground. Ultimately, it further erodes trust and impedes any path to dialogue. We urge the authorities to restore internet connection across the country immediately.

Ensure proper inmate segregation

Jail overcrowding increases radicalisation risk

We are deeply concerned about the situation in Chattogram Central Jail, where notorious criminals, militants and terrorists are being kept in the same wards as general inmates. According to a report by the daily Samakal, the prison, with a capacity for 2,249 inmates, is currently housing twice as many prisoners. This not only degrades the living conditions for all inmates, but also puts the security of the prison at risk.

The report mentions that there are currently 79 secured cells for dangerous criminals in the prison while the number of such inmates exceeds 700. The recent transfer of imprisoned Kuki-Chin National Front (KNF) members from Bandarban has contributed to the increase in the number of such inmates. One building with secured cells is currently being used to keep KNF members only. As a result, the condemned prisoners and dangerous criminals from that building were shifted to a general ward. Inmates of this prison include leaders of JMB, Ansarullah Bangla Team, Huji and other terrorist outfits. Confining them together with general inmates increases the risk of radicalisation of the latter.

We have repeatedly warned about this issue, calling on the need for rehabilitation and deradicalisation of militants in prison. There have been reports of instances when militant prisoners took advantage of the gaps in surveillance in overcrowded prisons to create new outfits and recruit new members. This compromises the security of a prison and also threatens the future peace and stability of the nation. Besides the militancy threat, keeping notorious criminals with general inmates endangers the latter's lives. The recent killing of one prisoner by another at Chattogram Central Jail is evidence of that danger.

Overcrowding in prison also dehumanises inmates by stripping them of their basic rights such as a proper space to sleep. The objective of imprisonment should not only be punishment; the focus should be on rehabilitation. While the expansion of Chattogram Central Jail is crucial in the short run, planning modern detention centres with proper surveillance systems and facilities to ensure inmates' basic rights, and preparing them, on a case-by-case basis, for social reintegration should be the ultimate goal.

QUESTION LEAKS, QUOTA DEBACLE AND KLEPTOCRACY

When a quick buck reigns supreme

DR MANZOOR AHMED

The leak of question papers, revealed by a TV channel, of a railway recruitment examination under the Public Service Commission (PSC) has brought to the fore the problem of unfairness in public examinations of all kinds—be it selection of candidates for a job, admission to higher education institutions, or student performance at various levels of education. According to media reports, a syndicate comprising, among others, PSC employees and senior officials has been active for over two decades and has orchestrated at least 30 question paper leaks for government recruitment tests, including those for the Bangladesh Civil Service (BCS) exams, over the last 12 years. The PSC had to cancel the 24th BCS preliminary test in 2003 due to allegations of leaked question papers. During the 33rd BCS written test in 2013, there were media reports about alleged question paper leaks and those question papers allegedly getting sold for Tk 5 lakh per set.

VISUAL: BIPLOB CHAKROBORTY

Complaints about question leaks, buying and selling of question papers, and bribery for primary school teacher recruitment and secondary school teachers' certification written examinations and oral interviews have been reported periodically. Over the years, there have also been reports of question leaks during Junior School Certificate (JSC), Secondary School Certificate (SSC) and Higher Secondary Certificate (HSC) exams, as well as for university entrance and medical college entrance tests.

The lack of integrity of recruitment examinations disclosed again at this time is particularly egregious when students all over the country are protesting against the existing system of various quotas in government service recruitment, including a high 30 percent reserved for the descendants of 1971 freedom fighters. Freedom fighters themselves or even their children are no longer of age to enter a government job 53 years after the Liberation War. But then the demand for recruitment by merit instead of through quotas becomes futile if the recruitment exams are not fair or not honestly conducted.

Technical solutions are available for stemming question leaks, which require using digital technology that allows preparing multiple sets of questions and their random distribution to examinees at the last moment so they do not know which set of questions one may get at the test ("Plugging question leaks: A technical solution," The Daily Star, February 17, 2018). These solutions have been applied partially in the secondary and higher secondary board examinations; as a result, there have been less complaints about these examinations in recent years. No technical solution, however, can be fool-proof against totally dishonest and greedy people who will go to any length to make a quick buck in a social environment that breeds and tolerates such actions.

Technical means of plugging leaks should be more widely used in both academic and non-academic examinations. At the same time, political conditions have to be created for the technical means to be applied effectively and for violations of rules to be quickly and severely penalised.

The matter of question paper leak surely added to the frustration of the students who resumed the quota reformed movement earlier this month. Oil was poured in the fire when the ruling party leaders insinuated that the quota protesters were sympathetic to Razakars. And how can it be helpful in finding a reasonable resolution of the issue when the ruling party's student arm as well as law enforcement is unleashed to beat up protesters on campus and in the streets, leading to countless deaths and serious injuries? The university administrations remain hapless bystanders of the organised violence occurring on campuses. The university teachers, united in their own protest, are vocal in putting forth their pension benefit demands, but remain silent about the mayhem on campus. All of them have been failing to fulfil their obligation to protect students' freedom to express views peacefully without being subjected to violence by those holding opposing views.

The narrative of corruption at high levels in major institutions of the state at mind-boggling proportions coming out recently, by coincidence or not, adds to the build-up of a mood of dystopia among citizens, including students concerned about their future.

Declaration of assets and income required by public representation rules submitted by candidates for parliamentary and local government elections have revealed staggering percentage of growth of their wealth counted in multipliers of hundreds and thousands. However, the Election Commission (EC), the Anti-Corruption Commission (ACC) and the National Board of Revenue (NBR) have not considered it necessary to ask any question and no candidate has been barred from election on this ground.

One is also reminded of the deplorable state of the country's financial and banking system that has become the instrument for looting peoples' money through loan defaulting and money laundering by a privileged group. Or the much-hyped mega infrastructure projects which are the costliest by world standards and pass on a heavy burden of loan repayment to future generations. In public perception, kleptocracy is the order of the day.

An air of uncertainty and despair engulfs young people. The cloud of dystopia thickens as public perception connects the dotted line between pervasive corruption, greed, inefficiency and ineptitude on the one hand, and lack of accountability and a culture of impunity created by a crony oligarchy of the political class, civil and law-enforcing bureaucracy and a greedily selfish business class working in collusion on the other.

Technical solutions including digital technology should be applied systematically to limit the chances of abusing the public examinations. A rational response to students' grievances about the quotas must be found by political decision-makers. But, above all, the political leadership must recognise the dystopia that submerges young people. The playbook for holding on to power need to change for the good of the regime and the nation.

Road safety and a nation's betrayal of its youth

__Mahiya Tabassum__

MAHIYA TABASSUM

As I write this, the weight of a recent tragedy bears heavily on my heart. Just months ago, I received a call that shattered my world: my brother-in-law, vibrant and full of life, had been killed in a road accident. The image of his disfigured face, the knowledge that he suffered for those final 10 minutes on the Bekutia Bridge, haunts me still. What was meant to be a symbol of progress—the eighth Bangladesh-China Friendship Bridge—instead became the site of unspeakable loss for two families.

PHOTO: STAR

This personal anguish is far from unique. In the wake of yet another devastating report on road accidents in Bangladesh, we are forced to confront an uncomfortable truth: our nation has failed its young people. The statistics released by the Road Safety Foundation are not just alarming; they are a damning indictment of our collective inaction and apathy. Since 2019, a staggering 5,619 students have lost their lives on our roads. Let that number sink in. These aren't mere statistics; they represent crushed dreams, devastated families, and a generation's potential cut tragically short.

The breakdown of these deaths is equally chilling: around 2,783 (49.52 percent) were either bikers or their passengers, at least 2,641 (47 percent) were children aged 5-17, around 1,534 (27.30 percent) were pedestrians killed by hit-and-run drivers, and 833 students died crossing train tracks in just five and a half years. Each of these numbers represents a life needlessly lost, a family forever altered.

I'm transported back to 2018, to the days of the Road Safety Movement. As an undergraduate, I stood alongside my peers, demanding change. The memory of being chased by armed "helmet gangs" still sends a chill down my spine. I can still taste the acrid sting of tear gas, and see the bruised and bloodied faces of friends and seniors. My younger sister, trapped with classmates in a violent confrontation in Dhanmondi, narrowly escaped harm. Those days left an indelible mark, a trauma that feels as fresh today as it did then.

We thought we had sparked real change. The deaths of Dia Khanam Mim and Abdul Karim Rajib galvanised the nation. We saw a new Road Transport Act, 17 directives from the Prime Minister's Office, and even a high-powered task force led by the home minister. Yet here we are, six years later, and the carnage continues unabated.

The tragedy in Mirsharai serves as a stark reminder of how little has changed. Eleven years ago, on July 11, 2011, as many as 45 lives—including 42 students—were snuffed out in a single, horrific accident. We vowed "never again," yet the body count continues to rise. In the first six months of this year alone, 611 students have already perished on our roads.

How many more children must die before we see meaningful action? How many more families must be torn apart? The development projects our government touts ring hollow when our youth are being mowed down at such an alarming rate. Besides, the regular occurrence of such accidents is inching closer to desensitising us, our hearts turning blunt to these tragedies. We cannot allow this to be our new normal.

The Road Safety Foundation's recommendations offer a starting point: launch comprehensive road safety campaigns in every educational institution; crack down on unsafe vehicles and reckless driving; and address the seven major causes they have identified, including faulty infrastructure and lack of knowledge about safe road use. But we need more than recommendations. We need action. We need enforcement. We need a fundamental shift in how we approach road safety as a society.

To readers who have lost loved ones to road accidents: I see you. I grieve with you. Your pain is not forgotten, and your loss will not be in vain if we can demand better from those in power, while also trying to be a part of the change we wish to see.

Ensuring the safety of the citizens should be non-negotiable. Road safety isn't just about statistics or policy. It's about the fundamental right of every person to travel without fear and to return home safely to their loved ones. It's about building a society where a simple commute doesn't carry the risk of becoming another heartbreaking headline.

We owe it to those we have lost, to those who still bear the physical and emotional scars of past movements, and to future generations to demand better. How long can the government move forward while holding onto empty promises and half measures? We need visible, meaningful action; our lives, and the lives of our loved ones, depend on it.

Whom do the information blackouts ultimately benefit?

Shaer Reaz

When the internet was initially made accessible to the public in the late 1980s, the once-secret communication tool developed by the US military was regarded as a passing fad, reserved for the technically competent and the computer savvy, and not something that would significantly alter daily life. Now, as I write this in the relative information darkness of a country-wide internet shutdown, on a text editor in lieu of Google Docs, with only yesterday's newspapers for fact-checking purposes, it is a sobering reality that we are crippled without access to the internet.

As Bangladesh struggles to contain the outpouring of frustrations of quota reformists, general students and dormant anti-government political opponents who would take advantage of the quota reform movement, internet shutdown is one of the major aspects of control that the Awami League government has exercised to curb the protests.

On July 19, news reports on TV channels communicated the government's official line that nationwide internet outage is due to a fire at a supposedly critical building in Dhaka, contradicting statements made by State Minister of Telecommunications and ICT Zunaid Ahmed Palak that specifically mention enforced shutdown of internet access. Since the night of July 18, internet access has been intentionally withdrawn from the capital, as well as large swaths of the country. Previously, since early July 18, mobile data was completely inoperable across the whole city. This is nothing new, and it was an expected measure from a government that has repeatedly put down mass uprisings by controlling the flow of information.

During past elections and mass mobilisations, the effect of choking the free flow of information has clearly backfired. For example, during the previous quota reform movement and road safety movement in 2018, the nationwide shutdown of Facebook, Messenger, YouTube and mobile data led to a wildfire of rumours and speculations. Whether true or not, such rumours do not do the party any favours.

It is in stark contrast to the general attitude of the Awami League-led government when things are going well. "Smart Bangladesh," "Digital Bangladesh," and the general promise of growth through neoliberal application of technology has long been an election mandate of the party, and to be absolutely fair, the government has largely followed through by steadily increasing the bandwidth of internet connectivity, state-led funding and nurturing of tech parks, startup accelerators, recognition of innovators in the tech industry, and more. However, the price of unmasking a forward-thinking, technology-enabling government is apparently student deaths at the hands of police and Bangladesh Chhatra League during mass uprisings.

When it comes to accepting the blame or taking accountability of state-sponsored violence against students, the proponents of internet and technology-led innovation are equally fickle. The star and darling of startup founders and accelerators, Zunaid Ahmed Palak, has made comments that directly blame Facebook and social media platforms for the deaths of students. Facebook/Meta's complicity in political violence and genocide on a global scale is well-documented, but for Facebook to intentionally target a fourth-year student of English in Rangpur for summary execution—or at least 39 others confirmed killed in the protests as of this writing—is a bit of a stretch. Perhaps the state minister meant it less literally; perhaps he meant the "idea" of Facebook: unfiltered, uncontrolled stating of opinions, political organising, video documentation of police and BCL brutality, requests for help from general people so that high school and university students don't have to face the horrors of it all alone.

Forcing telecommunication operators to shut down mobile data access or reduce network bandwidth is also a common tactic, and we have seen it employed quite effectively to cut communications between protesting groups across the country. The neoliberal machine of the AL government has ensured, through bullying of tax collectors and regulatory bodies, that every private provider of information technology infrastructure is beholden to the government's requests for access or control.

This is a fact that we have also seen applied to foreign entities. Fearing the loss of access to vast user bases, companies like Meta and Google are commonly seen answering requests by the Bangladesh government for data on specific groups or individuals, and monitoring of supposedly encrypted network traffic on these platforms revealing more about users than they are aware of. While other parts of the world are fighting tooth and nail through enforcement of policies like the EU's General Data Protection Regulations (GDPR) and via anti-trust commissions to protect user data, it is exactly here that we see our own government not only taking steps in the opposite direction, but actively utilising predatory data privacy policies of internet and social media platforms to surveil users in Bangladesh.

It is irony of the highest order that the interconnected nature of everyone's lives through the internet and social media—as promoted and established in part by the Awami League's electoral pledges—is also the bane of the party's existence, and one that requires a variety of measures to control. Whether it's the draconian Digital Security Act (now the Cyber Security Act), ICT Act, or more literal tools like BTRC's network jammer vans, threats against internet service providers and telcos or surveillance tools that monitor and track "persons of interest," the government has shown time and again that they have no qualms using information blackouts during elections and protests to establish their agendas.

Then why promote digital innovation and technology adoption in the first place, if your first order of business during a political crisis is to plunge the country into a medieval-era information blackout?

The answer is simple, and it is a sobering reality for tech innovators and proponents of technology to contend with. The more technology adoption there is, the more dependency there is on mediums of communication that ultimately end up in government control and regulations, the wider the blackout. We have seen how protesters use platforms like Facebook and Messenger to organise and coordinate their movements; by first funnelling them into positions where they depend on platforms like these and then creating a blanket enforced outage when the proverbial excrement hits the fan, the information blackout is double effective and actually crippling.

In a country where political representation, freedom of expression and mass mobilisation around common political issues is severely repressed, it is vital that information blackouts are resisted at the root level. Understanding how information flows are surveilled and where access to information can be severed is a critical component of ensuring rights to personal freedom of speech, political protest and assembly. It is important to realise that every political protest will inevitably turn to violent dispersal and information warfare, be it through misinformation or state-enforced blackouts.

If the state has indeed taken steps to provide internet access and digitisation of services with the malicious intent of accessing, surveilling and effectively controlling the flow of information, then it provides dissenters no other option but to take their organising and mobilising offline. It is a scenario where civil unrest can lead to increasingly dangerous and potentially violent situations with plenty of misinformation spreading post-fact, whereas, providing public forums for expressions of discontent without intentional information blackouts can minimise misinformation and unnecessary violence.

If the events of the quota reform movement are looked back upon, it is not going to be any stretch of the imagination to assume conversations post-fact are also full of misinformation and biased attempts at manipulation of public opinion. Numbers—of dead, injured, and picked up for questioning—will continue to be questioned, while events and narratives—that of law enforcement, the protesters, and state actors—will hold less and less value over time. This is a direct by-product of the information blackout imposed on the nation's media houses and civilians.

After being in power for 15 years, it is not strange to expect the Awami League to be comfortable in their position of power enough to let the conversation flow without attempting to control or disrupt it. Dialogue is the basis of any democracy, and if the AL is to show to the world that Bangladesh is indeed a functioning democratic nation—in reality or as just a perception—it is paramount that the government allow information technology to operate uninterrupted, even during times of political crisis. If not for the sake of ensuring freedom of speech and assembly, then for the sake of their own political image.

Are we educated merely to continue the cycle?

Abir Hossain
is a sub-editor at Campus, Rising Stars, and Star Youth.

ABIR HOSSAIN

Education is the beacon of enlightenment. It is also the backbone of a nation. Pursue it well enough, and you can make it up the ladder of success. One doesn't need an incentive to pursue education because the entity itself has always been a means to attain one's goals. Why wouldn't it? What is so wrong about envisioning a better life for oneself, demanding greater resources, and thus mobility? How does one attain that?

Time and again, education has been professed to be an area of great interest—one where our "leaders" would like to invest more. However, a glance at the fiscal year budgets over the last decade coupled with recent developments reveals a rather grim picture of where our education stands. It is stagnant, discriminatory and, unsurprisingly, corrupt. If the supposed backbone of the nation is lofty, made to stand on false promises, as students, what can we hope for, if anything at all?

Meritocracy and perseverance—while lauded by institutions—simply do not have a place in the system anymore. Rather, what gets precedence and thus, opportunities are connections, mostly with the corrupt. In a report by this daily, it was revealed that a syndicate involving officials and employees of the Public Service Commission (PSC) had leaked question papers for government recruitment tests, including those for the Bangladesh Civil Service (BCS) exams, at least 30 times over the last 12 years.

While investigators believe that the syndicate has been active for about two decades now, I can't help but wonder when this practice will come to a halt. Without much scrutiny, who is to say that the government officials who attained a position through the leaked question papers won't indulge in the same practices? After all, they themselves got in through unfair means. The possibility that these officials will allow future examinees to sit for the test without tampering with the outcome is slim. If this is the cycle that persists, who stops it? More importantly, can anyone stop it?

With momentum on the students' side, the quota reform movement has continued to stride forward and make its demands known. However, not even a united body of students across the nation, fighting for what is rightfully theirs, is enough to call for reform. Rather, it is being vilified and thwarted. If the students are unable to amplify their voices, what is our education being reduced to? When we are taught in classrooms, must we only learn to be obedient, even in the face of injustice? Must we submit with blind devotion to the powers that be? If so, then we all must be left to wonder what the real value of our education is. If we are unable to apply what we have learnt, think critically about a situation, and make changes that benefit the masses and not only the few, then we are only commodities helping the order remain in place—not enlightened, educated citizens. Yet, this shortcoming cannot be attributed to the education we undertake, but rather to the system that allows it to remain in place.

Ambitions, dare we have any, are more often than not rooted in change. Despite all the hurdles and bureaucratic inefficiencies of government jobs, I would like to believe that there are a handful of recruits who did make it based solely on their hard work and merit. Yet, it would be wishful thinking to assume that a handful of individuals can enact change. It seems awfully defeating that not even entering the realm of government jobs can help alter the status quo. They are, like most of us, at the mercy of the system, perhaps to an even greater extent. Even if someone were to take steps to eradicate corruption, who is to say that they won't be stopped, penalised, or worse?

When students are taught in classrooms, must they only learn to be obedient, even in the face of injustice? The photo was taken in Chattogram on July 16, 2024. FILE PHOTO: STAR

All of this is to say that once the current student body graduates and joins the workforce, they will hope to see change or undertake it themselves. The vigour of youth emerges because they have not been disillusioned into accepting the deficiencies of the present. It is all the more important for us because these deficiencies pose a risk to our future. The persistence of the status quo is an attack on our aspirations because it undermines the role of education. Should we expect the next generation of the workforce to undertake transformations in the system? Absolutely. But whether it will happen or not will be determined by the actions of the present.

If the cycle is to be broken, the students' demands have to be met. Otherwise, we will risk being stuck in the same vicious cycle of perpetuating corruption and disparaging our brightest minds. More importantly, the onus will then fall on the next generation to fix the foundations of a rotten system, when it is really down to the system to not only rectify such issues but also enable the next crop of leaders to build on their progress. For the time being, though, we are a long way from talking about progress or even stagnation.

A dream shot down by pellets

SHARIFUL ISLAM

Asif Hasan dreamed of completing his studies and becoming a government administration cadre officer.

That dream, however, is never to come true, as the fourth semester English student of Northern University, lost his life to shotgun pellets lodged in his chest.

He and at least eight others were killed and several hundreds were injured during the violent clashes between quota reform protesters and law enforcers, who were assisted by ruling Awami League activists, in the capital's Uttara on Thursday.

Asif's father, who lost his wife to a motorcycle accident in March 2013, has been silenced by numbness, Moniruzzaman, the victim's cousin and a teacher of Hadipur Ahsania High School, told The Daily Star over phone yesterday.

Lives upended by internet shutdown

STAR REPORT

Thirty-two-year-old Uttarkhan resident Noorjahan Kabir runs a Facebook-based business, for which she needs to pay her supplier weekly.

"I was supposed to pay him this [yesterday] morning, but was unable to access the bKash app without a working internet connection. Meanwhile, my supplier got concerned as he is dependent on the payments from online vendors like me to run his family."

Finding no other way, Noorjahan sent her husband to withdraw money from a nearby ATM around 11:00am. However, he came back empty-handed as the booth too was facing network issues.

Like her, people all over the country have been struggling to access essential services that rely on the internet to function, including digital money transactions, digital utility bill payments, online communication, and mobile credit recharge.

Senior photojournalist Sheikh Enam, from the capital's Mugda area, "I was supposed to pay my prepaid gas and electricity bills by today. There's no way to pay these bills with cash.

"If the meters run out, there will be no

Essentials' prices spiral as supply chain disrupted

SUKANTA HALDER

The ongoing unrest centering the quota reform movement has ruptured the supply chain of essentials and other commodities, causing their prices to soar.

Take the case of Mohammad Rajib, an onion wholesaler at Karwan Bazar. He had three truckloads of onions sent from Magura and Rajbari to Dhaka but only one truck reached the capital.

Mohammad Rajib, an onion wholesaler at Karwan Bazar, had three truckloads of onions sent to Dhaka from Magura and Rajbari but only one truck reached the capital.

Like Rajib, almost all onion suppliers are on the same boat. Subsequently, the price of the local variety of onion has ticked up by Tk 2 a kg to Tk 100 in Dhaka's kitchen markets.

"If the situation persists, the price will go up every day," Rajib said.

Yusuf Bepary, a potato wholesaler at the same market, said he has been trying to bring the tuber from Bogura and Rajbari for the last two days as he could not find a truck even after agreeing to pay a substantial premium.

Usually the fare is Tk 18,000; now, it has gone up to Tk 24,000.

Yet, Yusuf could not find a trucker to come to Dhaka amid the countrywide blockade and violence.

Similarly, Mohammad Faruk, a rice wholesaler at Mirpur-1 kitchen market, was desperately searching for a truck to bring the rice he brought from Noagaon, Dinajpur and Kushtia.

Although the price of rice is yet to increase, Faruk is expecting it to go up if the current deadlock continues until next week.

Belayet Hossain, a wholesaler of pulse, oil, flour and sugar at the same market, said he could get any product from dealers since Thursday night.

"If the situation does not improve within Saturday, then the prices of products will go up," he said.

This correspondent found that chicken, fish and vegetables became dearer at Dhaka's kitchen markets yesterday.

Mohammad Rubel, a broiler chicken trader at Duaripara bazar, said the price has increased by Tk 10 to Tk 15 per kg in a day.

Due to supply shortage, the prices of fish such as rui, katla, hilsa have increased by Tk 100 to Tk 150 per kg, said Awlad Hossain, a fish trader at Hatirpool kitchen market.

The strike has affected the supply of commodities causing shortage of products, said Murtoza Zaman, chief executive of Unimart, one of the leading supermarkets with eight outlets.

"Our staff cannot come to the stores -- three of our employees have been injured during clashes," he said.

QUOTA PROTESTS

HC judge tasked with probing deaths

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Justice Khandaker Diliruzzaman, a High Court judge, has taken the responsibility of the commission formed to probe the deaths and criminal activities during the quota protest across the country.

He will talk to the officials concerned of the coordination and reforms unity under the Cabinet Division tomorrow in this regard.

As the head, Justice Diliruzzaman is expected to visit the places of occurrences soon and complete the inquiry in 30 working days, Md Shafiqul Islam, public relations officer of the Supreme Court, told The Daily Star yesterday.

On Thursday, the government formed the one-member commission.

Cabinet Secretary Md Mahbub Hossain the same day issued a notification to this effect.

The coordination and reforms unity of the cabinet unit will provide the commission with secretarial assistance.

The commission will find the reasons behind the deaths of six persons on July 16 and identify those responsible for the deaths and recent incidents of violence, arson, lootings, and criminal activities, the notification said, adding that it will come into effect immediately.

Earlier in the day, Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan nominated the name of Justice Diliruzzaman as the member of the commission following a request from the law ministry, Law Secretary Md Golam Sarwar told The Daily Star.

Horror engulfs Badda, Rampura as bullets fly

ASIFUR RAHMAN, MASHFIQ MIZAN, NAFIS ALMAS SIAM, and AHMED DEEPTO

It was absolute mayhem in Rampura and Badda areas yesterday.

Quota protesters clashed with police and BGB personnel since morning to dusk, leaving at least 13 killed and over 500 injured. Many of the victims had bullet and shotgun pellet wounds on the upper part of their bodies.

These correspondents visited the areas between Rampura and Mouchak yesterday and found all alleys blocked by the demonstrators with tree trunks and electricity poles.

Many teenagers were seen joining the protesters.

The situation took a turn for worse after Juma prayers as BGB opened fire on demonstrators who were marching towards the Rampura Bridge.

In retaliation, the demonstrators hurled brick chunks at police and BGB personnel. Some of them were seen vandalising CCTV cameras in front of buildings and shops.

Police and BGB personnel were stationed in front of BTV building. They had to deal with protesters from five sides -- Mouchak, Banasree, Aftabnagar, Badda, and Hatirjheel.

The clashes continued until 7:30pm. The demonstrators burnt tyres and rubbish on the street and vendalised a few shops.

The agitators vandalised and set fire to the PBI office in Banasree. They also ransacked the Rampura Police Station.

Between 3:30pm and 5:00pm, demonstrators from Badda area attempted to get to the Rampura Bridge at least five times, but they had to retreat in the face of firing by law enforcers.

A group of agitators were seen throwing brick chunks at law enforcers from in front of East West University at Aftabnagar.

Some locals were seen providing the demonstrators with drinking water. They also gave old cloths, which the agitators burnt to save themselves from the teargas.

BGB used bullets, hundreds of teargas canisters, and sound grenades to disperse the protesters.

The doctors in at least three hospitals nearby said most of the patients they received were shot by real bullets, not rubber bullets.

Glitch causes global tech outage

Millions affected as airlines, businesses, emergency services hit

CNN ONLINE

An enormous IT outage hit hard banks, grocery stores, TV networks, airlines and even emergency services across the world causing suffering to millions yesterday.

The problem occurred when cybersecurity firm Crowdstrike was conducting a software update of it's popular product Falcon Cybersecurity Software, said its CEO.

The company stressed that the issue was not due to a cyberattack. The CEO of the firm said the system was sent an update and that update had a software bug in it and caused a problem with Microsoft operating system.

"We identified this very quickly and remedied the issue. As the system came back online, it rebooted and working. And now we are working with each and every customer to bring their service back online," he said.

The Falcon is used by numerous fortune 500 companies including Microsoft. Crowdstrike also provides cyberattacks investigation.

Scores hurt as Islami Andolan activists clash with cops

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The capital's Purana Paltan area turned into a battleground yesterday as activists of the Islami Andolan Bangladesh and Gana Sanghati Andolan clashed with police, leaving scores injured.

Sporadic clashes between the political party activists and law enforcers took place for about five hours from 11:30am.

The BNP and Islami Andolan were scheduled to hold rallies in front of the Jatiya Press Club and Baitul Mukarram, respectively, at 3:00pm to express solidarity with the ongoing student movement demanding reforms to quotas in government jobs.

A procession of Gana Sanghati Andolan, led by Chief Coordinator Zonayed Saki, marched towards the Jatiya Press Club around 11:30am.

Prisoners escape after Narsingdi jail comes under attack

Firearms looted from armoury

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narsingdi

Several hundred people yesterday afternoon attacked the Narsingdi district jail and set its main building on fire, leading to the escape of a large number of prisoners.

There were 826 prisoners in the jail.

Witnesses said the attackers, carrying sticks and iron roads, broke open the main entrance to the jail around 5:00pm.

They broke a part of the boundary wall, vandalised the office of the jail superintendent and set ablaze the main building.

Abul Kalam Azad, jail superintendent of Narsingdi, last night said, "We could not stop the attack as only eight guards were on duty at that time. The attackers broke into the armoury and looted firearms."

Asked how many inmates fled, he said they could not ascertain the number till 9:00pm.

Azad said they did not get support from the law enforcers on time.

Mustafizur Rahman, superintendent of police in Narsingdi, said, "Soon after hearing about the incident, we sent a police team to the jail. But criminals put up barricades on their way to the prison at different places."

He said that they were trying to take the situation under control.

Till the filing of this report around 10:00pm, gunshots were heard in the jail area every 10 to 15 minutes.

People trying to salvage whatever they can from their submerged homes in Gaibandha.

FLOOD IN THE NORTH

A first-hand look into DEVASTATION

As the water recedes, revealing the scars it's leaving behind, fresh anxieties surface. River erosion is worsening in many of these areas.

MASHFIQ MIZAN with S DILIP ROY
back from Kurigram and Gaibandha

Is it a vast river, or a habitable land?

This is the question I kept asking myself while travelling to Kurigram, a district in northern Bangladesh, as my train passed through one submerged land after another.

The answer came in glimpses -- like rooftops peeking through the water and submerged Shaheed Minars hinting there was a school here once.

This year's floods in northern Bangladesh have been the worst in recent memory, particularly hitting remote areas of Kurigram and Gaibandha.

The suffering of those living near rivers and on chars (landforms created by sediment deposits) has been largely unseen due to the remoteness of the affected areas.

I reached Kurigram earlier this month to witness the crisis firsthand.

Kurigram, a district 378km from Dhaka, is almost like a village surrounded by rivers.

About 14 rivers from India enter Bangladesh through Kurigram. Additionally, two more transboundary rivers flow through this district.

Most of Kurigram's remote upazilas lie on the banks of these rivers.

For the northerners, every monsoon brings significant flooding.

But 2024 has been particularly brutal. The Teesta, Brahmaputra, and Dudhkumar rivers have flown above danger level for weeks, inundating the remote chars and mainland.

Losing homes to the rivers is nothing new for people in the north. However, it usually occurs due to river erosion after flood water recedes.

Rarely are homes washed away by the flood water itself. But this year, even before river erosion peaked, hundreds of homes have been submerged by flood waters.

Meanwhile, many stayed back in partially submerged houses as moving to shelters with families and livestock from remote areas is often not feasible.

The residents face a multitude of crises -- food shortages, lack of pure drinking water, and so on.

MAROONED IN KURIGRAM

Upon reaching Kurigram, I requested my colleague to take me to the most remote areas affected by the flood.

We reached Ulipur, some 19km further north from Kurigram.

In the first week of July, the Brahmaputra had surged as high as 80cm above the danger level at Hatiya point of Ulipur, submerging many villages and chars. The Teesta, Dharla and Dudhkumar rivers were also overflowing.

More than 20,000 people were marooned, and over 25 primary schools were closed in this upazila alone.

We drove to Anantapur ghat in Hatiya union of Ulipur.

This terminal, located on the mainland, had also been under water during this year's flood, a first in at least six years, according to locals.

We met Badsha Mia, a 55-year old with despair etched all over his face.

A rickshaw-puller in Dhaka, Badsha had returned to his village for Eid, only to get trapped by the flood. For 10 days, his home had been partially submerged, and his family was suffering from various skin diseases.

Many had to take shelter on an embankment in Ulipur of Kurigram.

Holding a pitcher, a woman wades through waist-deep water in Gaibandha in search for pure drinking water.

We parked our bike beside a shop in the terminal and boarded a small engine-driven trawler.

Then Momin bhai, our weathered boatman, steered his engine-driven vessel into the heavy current.

The sun beat down mercilessly, and within 30 minutes, I, miles away from my comfort zone, began to feel the heat.

As far as the eye could see, there was water, an endless flow of it.

Just a few months ago, this would have been dry land, the sandy canvas of the chars.

"Such are the lives of char dwellers," Momin said.

The journey took on an eerie, haunting turn when submerged rooftops or the skeletal remains of tin-shed buildings started poking through the water now and then. There were people here just a month ago, Momin explained the obvious.

The only other signs of life appeared sporadically: like a lone figure casting a net, in what would have been lush green fields a month prior.

A small boat overtook us, steered by two children, maybe ten or twelve years old. Their faces, etched with a maturity beyond their years, held a stoicism that mirrored the desolate landscape.

After crossing Gabur Char, Gujimari Char, Hawker Char, Babur Char, Jolengar Guri and other places on our way, we anchored our boat in Fakirer Char in Begumganj union.

Almost everyone we talked to on our way said this was the worst flood in six years and their homes had remained submerged for at least two weeks.

"Come, please sit?" "See our sufferings." "We have no one except Allah." These are the voices that welcomed us in Fakirer Char.

There, we met Abdul Rashid and his wife, Hasina Begum. They are a family of seven.

One of the villagers took us aside and said, "You must talk to him. He only had a lungi when we rescued him and nothing else. The river has taken everything."

"What's the point of talking to you? Can you provide us with food? Will clothes and food reach us?" Abdul Rashid confronted us.

He was sad and angry; he had just lost his two houses due to the flood.

After a few minutes, Rashid calmed down and took us on a boat to see where his house once stood.

His wife Hasina and two children accompanied us. After rowing for a few minutes, he stopped and pointed his fingers at what seemed like a mighty river and said, "There lay two of my houses."

A mosque, a madrasa, and more nearby homes completely disappeared in the water, while others remained partially submerged.

Shafiqur Rahman of the same char also lost his home in the flood. He has taken shelter in a relative's house, where 26 people from four families have taken shelter in a single room.

This was a common scenario in any house without water in it.

As we left the char, people gathered outside our boat and waved us goodbyes. Some even offered us guavas and other fruits from their trees. Such are the people of these chars, humble, kind, and resilient.

The devastation the flood left behind was almost similar in other char areas.

DESOLATION IN GAIBANDHA

We also visited the Phulbari upazila in Gaibandha later to see the situation there.

Here, at the Syedpur Primary School, hundreds took shelter with their livestock.

As many as seven families have been staying here in a single room.

We met Hajera Khanom, a 63-year year old who sought refuge in a primary school from Shatarkandi Char. She said she faced a loss worth Tk 1 crore due to submerged crop fields and damaged homes.

In Hatudanga area on the bank of the Brahmaputra embankment, I saw at least 12 families sheltering alongside livestock under the open sky. Polythenes set up with bamboo poles was all they had to shelter them from rain and sun.

Shahidul Islam, 60, had been living there under a shed alongside his 32 cows. He said he didn't go to the shelter because there were no rooms for his cattle.

Others shared similar sentiments.

Then we went to Balashi ferry ghat and sailed on another engine-driven boat towards the remote chars. The scene was similar to Kurigram: water everywhere, no trace of life, abandoned houses in ruins.

In Rasulpur Char, about half an hour from where we started, we saw some signs of life. There, we met Hazrat Ali. His home was submerged under waist-length water.

He, along with his family and livestock, had taken shelter on higher ground. They cooked on boats and had been living like this for at least 15 days, with no sanitation and a lack of clean drinking water.

WHAT AUTHORITIES SAY

Ulipur's Begumganj Union Parishad Chairman Bablu Mia told The Daily Star, "Around 5,500 families in our union have been affected by floods. Only 500 flood-affected families have received government aid, with each family getting just 5kg of rice."

In previous years, the flood situation lasted for 8-12 days, but this year it started on July 2 and may continue for another week, he said.

Buraburi Union Parishad Chairman Asaduzzaman Khandkar said, "Around 4,000 families in our union have been affected, but only 300 families have received government relief."

District Relief and Rehabilitation Officer sources said 37,000 families in 55 of 73 unions in Kurigram's nine upazilas have been affected by the flood.

They have distributed 1,476 tonnes of rice, Tk 45,35,000 in cash, and 21,330 packets of dry food.

In previous years, 27,500 families were affected in 2023; 33,200 in 2022; 35,600 in 2018 and 52,000 families in 2017.

Kurigram Deputy Commissioner Mohammad Saidul Arif said this year's flood is worse than the last 5-6 years. "The situation has been improving since Saturday (July 13) as the Brahmaputra water level is decreasing," he said.

According to Gaibandha Deputy Commissioner Kazi Nahid Rasul, 36,207 families in four upzilas and 26 unions of the district have been affected.

As the water recedes, revealing the scars it's leaving behind, fresh anxieties surface. River erosion is worsening in many of these areas.

The relentless rivers now threaten to claim the remaining scraps of land these communities cling on to. The spectre of displacement looms large, a constant reminder of their very existence.

Skin diseases, a consequence of prolonged immersion in floodwaters, have also become commonplace. The lack of clean drinking water further complicates the situation, increasing the risk of water-borne diseases.

These people need the government's help and attention. And they need it now.

As we left the char, people gathered outside our boat and waved us goodbyes. Some even offered us guavas and other fruits from their trees. Such are the people of these chars, humble, kind, and resilient.

FICTION

After the rain

I finished The Marionette, my last film, and fully devoted myself to making Bindu's career. With great delight and excitement, I chased her auditions and shootings, hiding behind film crews and curious bystanders.

MIR ARIF

Perhaps I should have met that girl. What if I was wrong and imagined an ordinary girl so fantastically that I couldn't even recognise her in real life? I would regret it later as things wouldn't turn out in my favour. I missed my chance to be happy, as moderate as it was, being with this false girl and not letting her know that she was the wrong person. Didn't they look somewhat identical, in their outfit and look? And the idea of standing her up on a fine day, waiting as eagerly as I was to meet with her. But I eschewed any conflicting thoughts and focused on my stagnant life. There was something that people sending me letters saw in my advertisement: publicity, gossip, fun. I received many similar claims and resisted the temptation of meeting them in person. Beneath their claims and long, florid sentences were lonely, depressed souls. They wrote in a desperate state of mind to find meaning and purpose in life. I was on the verge of losing my patience, though. I did away with other necessities—money, temptation, fame, friendship, waiting only for a genuine reply from the girl of my dreams who had changed my life with a kiss. I received another letter after a month—perfect timing at that moment, for I, with the devotion of a hermit, had already decided to wander on earth and empty my mind from pursuing a foolish dream.

I opened the letter quickly, my heart in my mouth. The letter contained a single question, no greetings or signing off. "Why are you so stupid?" It was a blow, an antidote to the fantasies I lived in. I was sure it was the girl I had been looking for so long that I didn't open any other letters from strangers. The sender was Bindu, so that was the name of my beloved, who apparently was a student, writing from the university dorm as the address revealed. I had no clue, no idea, what I could write back. First, I thought the very nature of her question was argumentative. It was a question to mildly rebuke me while at the same time congratulating me for my grandiose love and my efforts. In other words, she was also in love with me and couldn't say it another way. She had to be simple and fiery in her response. My reply was long and persuasive, asking her repetitively to meet me anywhere on earth. But never for once, did it occur to me why I wanted to meet her or why she would meet me. I still thought that my attempts to find someone through a newspaper advertisement were enough to show my desperation and genuineness.

It was evident, after several exchanges of letters, that she was more interested in my acting career than the feeling I had been nourishing for her. I was surprised to see that she didn't know my name and inquired about my siblings, my upbringing, my career. I was still the most sought-after face on screen. To show my prowess I offered her what many would have done for consent and validation. I told her she could be an actress, her uniquely beautiful face being the weapon. The audition would be easy. The pay was good, and the opportunity to travel to different locations in the country and abroad and the fun and excitement of attending social programs and being in the papers and magazines constantly were the added bonus. "It's a life with never-ending progress, profit, and entertainment. You get to discover yourself through the lives you play. You embody the whole nation." I wrote to her, asking her to meet with me but she refused this time. "I'm not going to be stood up again." To my horror, I realised who I had seen at the museum and what I had done, killing the possibility of something extraordinary had I not been so infatuated with my own ideals of love. Now more than anything, I wanted to remedy my mistakes. To secure her audition, I wrote to Mr. Debnath, one of my directors, who promised to assess her acting skills once I finished the shooting of The Marionette, a social realism of middle-class struggle in East Pakistan, which Mr. Debnath hoped would bring him much coveted international fame, something akin to Satyajit Roy. But it was one thing to satisfy the domestic audience with your vociferous dialogues, which in those times was uttered by a flesh and blood prompter on set, quite another to deceive foreign film critics and judges who could see the actor wasn't simply focused on the evolving story but rather on the voice dictating his gestures and movements.

I finished The Marionette, my last film, and fully devoted myself to making Bindu's career. With great delight and excitement, I chased her auditions and shootings, hiding behind film crews and curious bystanders. I saw her from a distance: how she was working through her first shooting; how naturally she applied 'method acting' using depths and emotions from personal experiences, something that the likes of Marlon Brando or James Dean used in Hollywood; how versatile she was with the changing nature of the industry, switching from black and white to colour films, understanding how backlighting and keylighting worked to add depth and textures to a scene. If she made any mistakes, especially when shooting under the hot, tropical sun, on a beach or mustard field or a dirt road, I would feel her frustrations. Things were the same with me—I too had to face such difficulties in the early years of my acting career. At that point, I felt Bindu and I were the same person. A time came when I could feel when she was around me, the warmth of her presence. Once I was sitting on a padded chair and realised somebody had just sat on it. It was still warm, and with the right temperature underneath me, I could feel her.

When Bindu's first film, The Lost Tune, came out, it created a great hubbub. The middle class saw in the story how talents could unfold years later even if they remained dormant in you for a long time. The film was applauded by critics for her debut performance and she signed contracts for two other films, one directed by Mr. Debnath himself, who now renewed his hopes of international fame with an adaptation of Manik Bandyopadhya's story, Prehistoric. Needless to say, The Marionette was a flop, both commercially and artistically, and Mr. Debnath rarely responded to my letters nowadays. On a fine day I wrote to Bindu asking about the kiss we shared, which made me feel so fresh, so full of life. She responded: "I don't think we ever kissed each other, but if you want we can meet sometime." Oh, how I wished I rather received my death sentence from a judge! That kiss that altered my life to the point of madness didn't exist in the first place? My whole life was based on one single event, one single purpose: to recreate the right moments of that kiss, that after the rain effect I held so high in my memory. But I didn't reveal insecurities in the response. Besides, my vanity was still too strong to easily agree to meet with her. Wasn't I the most popular film star in the industry with Best Actor awards for my two best social realist works, The Ribbon of Life and My Homeland? Didn't I receive the Pakistan Film Awards, which rarely awarded East Pakistani films and actors? I simply replied, "I'm so busy these days, but if I get a free weekend, I shall let you know. Best, K."

This is part three of the short story "After the Rain", to be serialised here at Star Literature.

Bird's eye view

A.M. FAHAD

I often think of flying on a bird's eye view
Spread my nimble wings over
A mighty wind that will impel me above fields of rioting green—unseen from the cages—my flaps are used to fidgeting in—a bird's eye view over a golden sunset under a gentle breeze with no flinging of sorts but the release of all my earthly sorrows—does a bird experience grief 500 above the ground where no soil or mud can be found, to bury all the worms/ache I have swallowed
to live?
I often think of flying on a bird's eye view
I've given everything I could give
I do not want to go back to see/look at the empty homes and broken nests
Just this once, I want to breathe in the air to look and to see with my eyes (that don't reek of death)
to feel the tug in my throat taking flight like the yearning inside of me—
to live
and (not) watch the world set itself on fire from the clear blue skies above

SHARMIN JOYA

The beauty of her aura is indistinctive, her smile, as magical as if she were the goddess of beauty, who melts your heart instantly. Paoli Dam is not just a diva for her looks, she is a powerhouse of acting, who won the hearts of millions with her portrayal of some of the most unconventional roles. Some of her remarkable roles include Madhobilata in Kaalbela (2009), Komli in Moner Manush (2010), Preiti in Kagojer Bou (2011), Ela in Elar Char Adhyay (2012), Meghla in Maati (2018), and Binodini in Bulbbul (2020).

The actress recently came to Bangladesh for the shooting of Fakhrul Arefeen Khan's Neel Jochhona. In an exclusive interview with The Daily Star, she cherished the memories of her first visit to Bangladesh, her career, and more.

Returning to Bangladesh after four years still refreshes the memories of Paoli Dam's first visit. "It was in 2010, during the shoots of Gautam Ghosh's Moner Manush, the Indo-Bangla joint venture," shared the actress, whose origin is Faridpur. "I haven't had the opportunity to visit Faridpur till now," she sighed.

"My mother hails from Jashore, and I haven't visited the place either. However, when we hold the premiere of Neel Jochhona, I wish to bring my father with me, and we will visit Faridpur."

While we were speaking, sitting in the lobby of the five-star hotel where she was staying, a Japanese man interrupted us and asked for permission to take a selfie with Paoli. Apparently, he had inquired about Paoli from someone nearby at the hotel after being mesmerised by her beauty and then googled her. While confessing this, he said, "You have such a beautiful smile." The man bid us farewell, saying "Dhonnobaad" in Bangla.

As we got back to our conversation, Paoli expressed her excitement about working in Neel Jochhona, an adaptation of Mostak Ahmed's parapsychology novel Neel Jochonar Jibon. "Interstellar and Everything Everywhere All at Once are two of my favourite films. Plots on the parapsychological genre have rarely been made in Bangla content. I have read the book from which the story has been adapted and it is fantastic. I am also thrilled that we will shoot on a green screen, and VFX is one of my favourite technologies."

This project marks the second Bangladeshi film for Paoli -- she made her debut in Dhallywood with Hashibur Reza Kallol's Swatta (2017), starring opposite Shakib Khan.

She was wearing a maroon pure cotton saree with a black backless blouse. Her eyes were drawn with dark kohl, complemented by the tiny bindi on her forehead, and a pair of grey jhumkas—her classy look made it seem as if she had just stepped out of a romantic classical novel. "I brought all silk sarees, but the weather is very humid, and luckily one of my co-actors, Sushama Sarker, gave me this beautiful cotton one, which I am wearing so comfortably."

In recent years, Paoli has been selective about her roles, and many also assumed that after she stepped into Bollywood, her appearance in Bengali films became sporadic. "It is not like that; however, I have been too selective in the past few years, and when I reflected on it, I realised the reasons. Perhaps, I am being too picky, or we are not producing enough quality content?" This took her to the conclusion that the Bangla industry needs more good writers. "Before the actor's input, it is important that writers and directors can create such characters." She explained that her brief for the role of Binodini in Bulbbul was so good, that she could pull off the character so well. It will be considered as one of her landmark performances in her career. "At the same time, I cannot be a part of any mediocre regressive subject, especially when it comes to women, and I always want to be associated with subjects that are progressive and speak about human empowerment."

She feels that at this point, both Bengals should collaborate more often and the exchange of writers and directors should have equal participation as much as actors. "For instance, Humayun Ahmed is very popular in Kolkata, and we have seen his works, and read his books. However, we don't see any of his stories being adapted to visuals. Exchange of such collaborations is highly required."

Among the roles she portrayed on the screen, how many of them have stayed with Paoli for long or to date? "Every great character has empowered me as a human being. For instance, Madhobilota, an epitome of love, Ela, the role of Keya Chakraborty, Komli, Binodini, Suchitra Sen, and Sreela, and there are some more– such roles have depth, and they have helped me understand different perspectives of life."

Paoli has a visible resemblance with legendary actress Suchitra Sen, and she has also played her role in the television series Mahanayak. "The resemblance is uncanny! Although I didn't feel that much in the beginning. When I played her role, it felt surreal."

After the heartfelt conversation, Paoli bid farewell and made a promise to return soon. "The next time I return, I really want to visit both Jashore and Faridpur."

> "My mother hails from Jashore, and I haven't visited the place either. However, when we hold the premiere of Neel Jochhona, I wish to bring my father with me, and we will visit Faridpur."

Shah Rukh Khan and Gauri Khan

Anant Ambani, 29, son of Indian billionaire Mukesh Ambani, married his longtime girlfriend Radhika Merchant, also 29, in a lavish Mumbai ceremony on July 12. The event, widely discussed on social media, was attended by Bollywood celebrities, Hollywood stars, politicians, cricketers, and other distinguished guests.

Bollywood superstar Shah Rukh Khan attended the ceremony in a regal shade of olive green sherwani paired with a dhoti — accessorising the fit with a diamond and emerald necklace, tinted sunglasses, and brown shoes, to create a standout look.

His wife Gauri Khan wore a shimmery golden and nude lehenga with complementary coloured purse and jewellery.

This renowned couple truly was the talk of the town among the slew of glitzy wedding guests.

WHAT'S PLAY

Karar Oi Louho Kopat

Artcell's rendition of Karar Oi Louho Kopat in their album Riotous 14 breathes new life into Kazi Nazrul Islam's revolutionary anthem from 1921. The band's powerful music complements the fierce lyrics, creating a stirring contemporary interpretation of the classic protest song. Artcell's version maintains the original's spirit of defiance against oppression while adding a modern rock edge that resonates with today's listeners.

The song's enduring relevance is highlighted by Artcell's choice to include it in their repertoire. Their performance likely amplifies the raw emotion and call for freedom inherent in Nazrul's words, making the century-old message of breaking chains and overcoming barriers feel immediate and urgent.

This cover serves as a potent reminder of music's role in social movements and its ability to bridge generations in the fight for justice.

TV TALKIES

A well-done story of a 'Geek Girl' becoming chic

Fresh out of the fame she attained from starring as young Alicent Hightower in the HBO Max series House of the Dragon, actress Emily Carey helms her web-series as a lead in Netflix's Geek Girl.

Based on the novel of the same name, authored by Holly Smale, the show delves into the journey of personal growth of a neurodivergent teenager named Harriet Manners — resembling a modern Cinderella story.

Harriet, a self-proclaimed geek disliked by her peers, is discovered by a top model agent. Seizing the chance to reinvent herself, she takes her best friend's dream, angers her nemesis, embarrasses herself in front of supermodel Nick, and lies to her loved ones.

Smale and Jessica Ruston adapted the first book of the bestselling YA series into a screenplay, directed by Declan O'Dwyer, capturing their joyful spirit. Emily Carey excels as Harriet, supported by Rochelle Harrington as Nat and Zac Looker as Toby.

This onscreen adaptation retains the novel's charm, with vibrant energy and actors who perfectly capture the essence of the source material.

Investment in the south is underwhelming even after Padma Bridge

Banks finance big industrial sectors in Dhaka, but do not want to take risks by financing industries in Barishal. There was a huge opportunity to invest in various sectors in the south, including shipbuilding.

JAGARAN CHAKMA, SUSANTA GHOSH AND DIPANKAR ROY

Two years have passed since the inauguration of Padma Bridge, but the southern region has still not managed to tap the potential brought about by the mega-project due to a lack of physical infrastructure and utilities.

It was estimated that the Padma Bridge would increase Bangladesh's GDP by over 1 percent and benefit about three crore people across 21 southwestern districts. Unfortunately, although it has eased transportation over the Padma River, the region's contribution to the national economy has not picked up as expected.

According to the Bangladesh Investment Development Authority (BIDA), only 18 investment proposals have been registered in Khulna and Barishal over the past year. Around 13 proposals, involving Tk 1,248 crore, were registered in the Khulna region while five projects, involving Tk 92.7 crore, were registered in the Barishal region.

According to businesses and experts, the number of proposals and investments are below expectations.

"There was a potential to grow the GDP by more than 1 percent after the operationalisation of the Padma bridge. But fulfilling that potential requires a 'Padma plus' infrastructure development model," said Selim Raihan, executive director of the South Asian Network on Economic Modeling.

"There is no scope to think that investment will come on its own. Rather, the environment for investment must be created."

The 'Padma Plus' model includes the development of necessary infrastructure, including proper connecting roads, gas pipelines and other utility services, to facilitate investment.

Raihan, who has been engaged with a study on the economic impact of the bridge since the beginning of the project, said Barishal and Khulna needed more connectivity to encourage investors.

Although the Dhaka–Bhanga Expressway leading up to the bridge from Dhaka offers large multi-lane roads, once the bridge is crossed, the roads begin to narrow, before ultimately turning into largely two-lane roads.

He added that the government was yet to complete the work for land acquisition in order to start the development of the proposed economic zones in these regions.

Mohammad Nizam Uddin, president of the Barishal Metropolitan Chamber of Commerce and Industry, said not a single company has invested in the greater Barishal region in the past two years as banks are not interested in financing projects.

"Banks finance big industrial sectors in Dhaka, but do not want to take risks by financing industries in Barishal," he alleged, adding that there was a huge opportunity to invest in different sectors in the region, including shipbuilding.

According to Nizam Uddin, the only noticeable industries in Barishal consist of a pharmaceutical factory, a biscuit maker, and a shoe factory. Banks do not even want to lend to small and medium enterprises in the region, he claimed.

Jakaria Jalal, head of strategy (planning) at Bashundhara LP Gas, said the main barrier to setting up heavy industries in Khulna and Barishal was a lack of gas connections. "There is huge potential to develop industry in these regions if gas connections can be ensured for industries."

Although liquefied petroleum gas (LPG) is available, it is not viable for industries since it is two and half times more expensive than natural gas, he said, adding in the absence of gas connections, only power-based industries were feasible in these regions.

Abu Sayed Mahmud, assistant director of the BIDA's Barishal divisional office, said five companies have registered investment proposals in the region in the past year.

The proposals have come from Opsonin Bulk Drugs Ltd, Chemist Agro Biotic, Afia & Fatima Auto Rice Mill, Asfia Auto Rice Mill & Flour Mill, and Payra Recycling Plant.

These companies have registered with the BIDA for investment after the inauguration of the Padma Bridge, but they have yet to start operations.

He added that he was not aware of anybody seeking to secure permission to set up a large company in Barishal. "So, although it was expected, the industrialisation of Barishal failed to gather steam after the construction of the Padma Bridge."

In the division, 52 industrial establishments have so far received registration from the BIDA with combined investment plans of Tk 1,027 crore.

Saidur Rahman Rintu, president of the Barishal Chamber of Commerce and Industry, said industrialisation would not accelerate if gas is unavailable.

He demanded reducing the interest rate of bank loans and tax concessions. "We have already invested crores of taka in the shipping sector and have faced losses."

Right now, those who have invested in the waterways are facing huge financial losses as road connectivity has enhanced thanks to the opening of the bridge.

Businessmen said that they were not interested in investing in the region due to a lack of gas connections and connectivity.

Pronab Kumar Roy, director of the BIDA for the Khulna division, said although the Padma Bridge has been opened, industrialisation is yet to get momentum. Only some small and medium industries were being established, but not heavy industries.

Sharif Atiar Rahman, senior vice president of the Khulna Chamber of Commerce & Industry, said investors would not be encouraged to invest heavily until gas is made available for industries.

However, he said people in the Khulna region were benefiting as they can now take a round trip to Dhaka in just a single day, which was unimaginable before the Padma Bridge was constructed.

"People can now transport agricultural products and fish to Dhaka within three and a half hours."

Plans to set up economic zones in southwest yet to gather pace

JAGARAN CHAKMA

The Bangladesh Economic Zones Authority (Beza) has taken the initiative to set up 17 economic zones in the southwestern part of the country, but their implementation is yet to gain momentum because of lengthy procedures linked to land acquisition and feasibility studies.

The state-run agency is optimistic that the road connectivity established between Dhaka and the region, following the inauguration of the Padma Bridge, will attract more investment in the industrial sector and create job opportunities.

Earlier, it said the 6.15km bridge will also connect Bangladesh with the Asian Highway, paving the way for an industrial revolution to take place in the country, particularly in 21 southwestern districts.

The Beza has selected five sites for establishing economic zones in Bagerhat, two each in Khulna, Gopalganj, and Barishal, and one each in Faridpur, Madaripur, Bhola, Shariatpur, Satkhira and Kushtia. The zones are part of the government's goal to set up 100 economic zones across the country, aiming to create one crore jobs and export $40 billion worth of goods and services from the enclaves by 2040.

According to a BEZA official, the Mongla Economic Zone (MEZ) is being developed on 205 acres of land near the Mongla Port. It has already constructed the administrative building, boundary walls, connecting bridge and roads, power sub-stations, and water connections. Powerpack Economic Zone Ltd is developing the MEZ under the public-private partnership (PPP) model.

The land-lease deal has been prepared to set up three industrial units there. BEZA sources said there was a slight development regarding the Indian Special Economic Zone (SEZ) in Mongla. The process to form a joint venture has already begun and is currently awaiting implementation.

The Beza has acquired 100 acres of land for the Indian SEZ, with ARTELIA Consulting set to work on implementing the project.

"All negotiations have been completed. We are just waiting for the prime minister's approval to form the joint venture," said a Beza official, requesting anonymity.

The agency plans to set up an ecotourism park on 1,546 acres of land near the Sundarbans in Bagerhat. Furthermore, it has approved the proposal of building two economic zones in Shariatpur: one on 525 acres of land in Jajira upazila and the other on 686 acres of land in Goshairhat upazila.

The Beza has also agreed in principle to build an economic zone on 1,125 acres of land in the Rajoir upazila of Madaripur.

The government has decided to establish an economic zone on 888 acres of land in the Faridpur sadar upazila. Moreover, a feasibility study has already been carried out for another zone on 200 acres of land in Gopalganj's Kotalipara. A detailed project plan has been prepared.

The governing body of the Beza has chosen Terokhada upazila to set up an economic zone. The task to conduct the feasibility study for an economic zone in Magura's Sreepur upazila and another in Satkhira sadar upazila has been initiated.

The feasibility study for the economic zone on about 430 acres of land in Kushtia's Bheramara upazila has been conducted. One zone in the Batiaghata upazila of Khulna is in the pipeline, with the Satkhira district administration providing 262 acres of land. A project has been undertaken to conduct the feasibility study.

The feasibility study for setting up an economic zone in Barishal's Agailjhara has been completed. The Beza has also approved the proposal to develop an economic zone in Hizla.

The Bangladesh Export Processing Zones Authority (Bepza) said it is establishing an export processing zone in Aliapur union under Patuakhali sadar upazila on 411 acres of land, around 40km from the Payra port and 80km from the Mongla port. The estimated cost is Tk 1,443 crore.

Sources said they have already appointed a developer to build the zone, and they are hoping to make it suitable for investment by 2026.

Referring to the master plan of the zone, a Bepza official said they would be able to accommodate 306 industries in the zone, which could potentially attract $1.5 billion in investment and create 100,000 jobs. At least $1.8 billion worth of products will be exported from the zone once it is operational, said the official.

A small glimpse into the potential of the Padma Bridge is offered by the Patuakhali Industrial Estate. After the completion of the bridge, 15 new industrial establishments have been set up there. As it lies along the Patuakhali-Dhaka highway, local entrepreneurs are eager to set up industrial establishments.

Md Al Amin, an official of the Patuakhali BSCIC Industrial City, said that after the opening of Padma Bridge, a direct road network has been established between Patuakhali and Dhaka.

"As a result, industrial products can easily be sent to different parts of the country at lower costs. Due to this, many companies have been established in the zone."

Curfew to stay in force until further notice

Says home boss; 2hr break from 3pm today

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government has decided to extend the ongoing curfew, which was scheduled to end at 10:00am today, until further notice.

The curfew, however, will be relaxed for two hours starting from 3:00pm today.

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan made the announcement at a press briefing following a meeting with law enforcement agencies at his Dhanmondi residence yesterday.

On Thursday, the government imposed a nationwide curfew and deployed armed forces to assist the civil administration in ensuring national securities and protecting lives and properties.

This is the first instance of a curfew being imposed in the last one and half decades.

Responding to a query, the minister

At least 21 dead on first day of curfew

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The first day of curfew was marked by sporadic incidents of violence that left at least 21 people dead and scores injured in Dhaka and other parts of the country yesterday. Most of the victims were hit by bullets.

On Friday night, the government imposed nationwide curfew and deployed army personnel to assist the civil administration in ensuring national security and protecting lives and public properties in the wake of fierce violence centring on quota protests.

Members of the armywere seen patrolling different city points and other districts since yesterday morning. They also set up makeshift bunkers with sandbags at different points.

Amid the curfew, thousands of protesters, both students and non-students, took to the streets with processions, blocked roads and highways and torched tyres and planks of woodon the streets in Dhaka and elsewhere.

- Total death toll at least 127 as fierce clashes continue
- Army patrol begins
- 4 people, including 2 cops, succumb to previous day's injuries
- Govt announces general holidays for today, tomorrow

Of the victims, nine were killed in the capital and four each in Savar, Narayanganj and Mymensingh, hospital authorities said.

In addition, two policemen were brought dead to Dhaka Medical College Hospital yesterday, said Inspector Bacchu Mia, in-charge of the DMCH police outpost. Police and morgue sources said both were beaten to death during clashes on Friday.

Also, two people who suffered head injuries during violence in the city's Mohammadpur on Friday died at National Institute of Neuroscience and Hospital, said Ahad Ali, officer-in-charge of Sher-e-Bangla Nagar Police Station.

Of the nine victims in the capital, eight were either brought dead or declared dead at the DMCH, Bacchu Mia told The Daily Star. Most of them suffered bullet and pellet injuries during clashes in Jatrabari, Rayerbagh, Azimpur and Mirpur.

Another victim was brought dead at Shaheed Suhrawardy Medical College Hospital, said its director Prof Dr Shafiur Rahman.

Including yesterday's victims, at least 127 lives have been lost since Tuesday, when six people were killed in violence. On Thursday, at least 29 more people were killed in fierce clashes between protesters and law enforcers, aided by ruling party activists. Another victim injured in Wednesday's violence also died on Thursday. On Friday, at least 66 people were killed across the country.

The overall death toll and that from yesterday's violence may rise, as The Daily Star could not reach many hospitals where dozens of critically injured patients were taken for treatment. Also, many

Violence flares in Mymensingh, Savar, N'ganj

STAR REPORT

Fierce clashes between agitators and law enforcers in Mymensingh, Savar, and Narayanganj left at least 12 people dead yesterday.

At least four were killed in each of these places.

Over 100 people took treatment at hospitals for injuries sustained in the violence in Savar and Narayanganj.

In Mymensingh's Gouripur upazila, three people were killed during clashes on the first day of the nationwide curfew. At least 30 people, including 12 police officials, were injured.

Witnesses said the agitators blocked the Mymensingh-Kishoreganj Highway at Kaltapara around 11:00am and police rushed there to try and disperse them.

Of the injured, 16 were taken to Mymensingh Medical College Hospital, where Rakib, 18; Biplob, 19; and Jubayer, 18, died around noon, said Md Zakiul Islam, deputy director of the hospital.

Contacted, Gouripur Police Station Inspector (Investigation) Imran Al Hossain confirmed the deaths.

In the district's Phulpur upazila, a pedestrian was reportedly killed, while 10 others, including three policemen, were hurt in clashes between agitators and law enforcers in the Amuakanda Bridge area.

The deceased was identified as Saiful Islam, 32, of the upazila, said police.

In Savar, poultry trader Kurban Ali, 55, was killed as police opened fire during a chase and counter-chase with demonstrators at the Bazar Bus Stand.

He was shot in the throat while he was in his shop, his family said.

Witnesses said the agitators gathered there around 2:00pm. The clash erupted when police fired shots to disperse them. The demonstrators retaliated by throwing brick chunks at them.

Kurban was taken to Enam Medical College Hospital, where he was declared dead, said Rezaur Rahman, a doctor there.

Rickshaw-puller Roni, 27, of Savar's Shahibagh, was shot during a clash around 5:30pm on the Savar

ASIFUR RAHAMAN and AHMED DEEPTO

Nahid Islam, a key organisers of the anti-discrimination student movement, was picked up by plainclothes persons from a house in Sabujbagh early yesterday, according to witnesses.

They alleged the people broke the locks of the building gates to enter and detain Nahid, a masters student of DU's sociology department who has been leading the quota reform protests from the front line since the first week of July.

His family members and fellow protesters alleged that law enforcers picked him up as he declined the government's proposal for a dialogue ahead of the Supreme Court's hearing on the quota issue today.

However, three of the 27 protest organisers met the law minister on Friday night in this regard.

Two varying sets of demands from quota protesters

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Leaders of the quota reform protests have come up with two varying sets of demands.

Three key coordinators of the Baishamyabirodhi Chhatra Andolan placed eight-point demand at a meeting with three ministers at State Guesthouse Padma on Friday night.

Hasnat Abdullah, Sarjis Alam and Hasib Al Islam participated in the meeting with Law Minister Anisul Huq, Education Minister Mohibul Hassan Chowdhoury and State Minister for Information and Broadcasting Muhammad Ali Arafat.

They demanded that those in the government, who instigated Chhatra League and instructed the law enforcement agencies to attack the protesters, be brought to book after an investigation.

Three key organisers of quota protests place 8-point demand before three ministers.

They also called for financial assistance and monthly allowance to the families of those killed and injured during the protests.

The demands also include resignation of the vice-chancellors and proctors for whose "silent role" the students came under attack.

They said the seats at the university halls should be allocated through the university authorities concerned, and the students' unions must be made effective.

The three coordinators demanded immediate withdrawal of the law enforcers from all universities and reopening of halls.

The government must ensure that those who are involved in the movement will face no political or legal harassment or any punitive measures from the university administration, they added.

All the cases filed over the quota reform protests have to be withdrawn immediately, the protest organisers said.

WOMEN'S ASIA CUP

Losing start for Tigresses

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh began their Women's Asia Cup campaign on the back foot, losing against hosts Sri Lanka by seven wickets at the Dambulla Ranagiri International Stadium last night.

The women in red and green opted to bat first in a decent batting wicket, but found themselves in trouble losing early wickets. The Nigar Sultana Joty-led side lost three wickets for six runs and then reached 46 for four in 10 overs.

Joty's 48 eventually helped the Tigresses post 111 for eight.

The bowlers, however, failed to put up a fight as the Lankans raced to the target in 17.1 overs. Left-arm spinner Nahida Akter took all three wickets for Bangladesh. Vishmi Gunaratne scored a half-century for Sri Lanka.

In the other match of the day, Thailand beat Malaysia by 22 runs.

said the government will do everything required to bring back normalcy to the country.

"We will take stern actions against those involved in subversive activities and killings using the quota reform protest," he said, adding that law enforcers did not see any students' involvement in destructive activities.

Asaduzzaman said the quota protesters placed an eight-point demand and government will accept the logical ones at the earliest.

He said the miscreants are using firearms and bombs against law enforcers. Even common people came under their attacks, he added.

> "All these [destructive activities] are being conducted to dislodge the government and form a government with anti-liberation forces. They are tirelessly trying to achieve their goal," Asaduzzaman said.

"The curfew has been announced as miscreants are inflicting huge damage [to our country]. We had no other options. Our main target is to bring back normalcy," he said.

The minister said the government will identify the miscreants involved in vandalism killings and take stern actions against them.

Acknowledging that people will suffer during the curfew, he urged all to cooperate with the law enforcers to identify "the country's enemies".

Asked about the death toll in the ongoing unrest, the minister said he will not be able to ascertain the exact number at this moment.

families reportedly collected the bodies of their loved-ones from the scene, and this newspaper could not contact those families. The Daily Star's count of the victims is based solely on hospital sources.

Some of yesterday's fiercest clashes took place in Rayerbagh of Jatrabari, Mirpur-10, and Mohammadpur.

Besides, law enforcers opened fire on agitators when they took out processions at Badda and Malibagh rail crossing areas. They lobbed teargas canisters and sound grenades in Rayerbagh from low-flying helicopters. Gunshots were heard in Banasree areas as well, witnesses said.

Like in the past few days, Dhaka remained cut off from the rest of the country as road and rail communications remained suspended.

At least 11 international flights were either cancelled or delayed for hours "due to a lack of passengers and a glitch in the flight data system", causing sufferings to several hundred passengers.

In an executive order, the government yesterday announced holidays for today and tomorrow for all government, autonomous, semi-autonomous and non-government offices except those providing emergency services, Public Administration Senior Secretary Mesbah Uddin Chowdhury told The Daily Star.

Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan also announced holidays for the lower courts. But one or multiple magistrates will perform duties at the courts of chief judicial and chief metropolitan magistrates round the clock, said a press release issued by the SC registrar general.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court and the High Court Division will function from 10:00am to 1:00pm.

Today, the apex court is set to hold hearing of two leave-to-appeal petitions that challenged the June 5 HC judgment, reinstating quotas in government jobs.

A tense situation prevails across the country.

Many citizens called The Daily Star reporters and voiced their concerns over the ongoing violence.

Streets of Dhaka wore a deserted look as only a handful number of rickshaws were seen plying. During the recess of curfew for two hours from 12 noon, many rushed to kitchen markets and other destinations for emergency work.

Almost all shops in the capital were closed. Many onlookers went to the main roads to assess the situation.

As the day progressed, hundreds of agitators, including members of the public, took to the streets to stage demonstration.

JATRABARI

Violent clashes took place in phases in Rayerbagh of Jatrabari as protesters blocked the Dhaka-Chattogram Highway from Chittagong Road area to Kajla by placing several trucks and covered vans haphazardly.

Law enforcers fired gunshots, lobbed teargas shells and sound grenades to disperse them. The protesters hurled brick chunks at the law enforcers, and also set afire tyres and planks of wood at different spots.

A local resident told The Daily Star around 5:30pm that he saw helicopters flying low.

"I saw choppers hovering and charging teargas canisters and sound grenades at the protesters," he said.

Witnesses said that streets in Kajla, Rayerbagh, and Chittagong road of Jatrabari saw running battles between demonstrators and law enforcers since morning.

A tense situation has been prevailing in the area since Thursday.

MOHAMMADPUR

In Mohammadpur, the police fired bullets, teargas canisters and numerous sound grenades to prevent a crowd from reaching Mohammadpur Police Station in the afternoon.

The protesters threw brick chips and stones at police and then took position at Mohammadpur Bus Stand. They also blocked the road at different pointsfrom Mohammadpur Bus Stand to Beribadh area.

A reporter of The Daily Star was present there.

Members of the Armed Police Battalion, the BGB and the army reached the area around 5:15pm and a severe clash broke out between protesters and law enforcers.

Till 6:30pm, members of law enforcement agencies fired numerous shots while the demonstrators threw brickbats and stones.

Earlier, hundreds of protesters blocked Mohammadpur-Beribadh road and put up makeshift barricades in adjacent areas around 11:00am.

At one point, the agitators marched towards Mohammadpur Police Station, chanting anti-government slogans.

The protesters included students, children and general people, including women.

Hundreds of protesters also blocked Sat Masjid Road around 4:00pm.

Aged between 15 and 25, the agitators set up barricades at all major intersections from Dhanmondi 15 to Shankar neighborhood.

Around 6:00pm, police used teargas and sound grenades to disperse them. But the protesters, most of whom wore facemask, quickly took shelter in nearby lanes.

When police stopped firing, they regrouped and returned to the street, and hurled brick chunks and stones at police.

MIRPUR

Mirpur-10 and adjoining areas also saw severe clashes as law enforcers opened fire and charged teargas shells and sound grenades on the protesters who gathered on Rokeya Sarani from Kazipara to Benarashi Palli.

A number of residents and witnesses said they saw many injured being taken in ambulances and rickshaws from the spot. They saw also helicopters hovering in the sky.

Around 1:30pm, several hundred people, mostly youths, blocked the road near Kazipara Metro station. A media vehicle was torched there.

Things became tense around 1:45pm, when police opened fire on demonstrators, according to witnesses.

At 3:00pm, a huge number of people gathered on the road from Kazipara to Benarashi Palli and burnt tyres and woods at different places on the road. Additional police, Rab and BGB personnel were called in.

Locals saw armored vehicles and water cannons there.

Several hundred people then brought out a procession from the Kazipara end around 6:00pm when police, Rab and BGB members opened fire, leading to clashes, witnesses said.

At least four journalists were assaulted by protesters who expressed their anger, saying the media is not reporting the actual death toll.

Sporadic clashes also took place at different places on Mouchak-Rampura road for several hours. Law enforcers dispersed protesters by firing rubber bullets and teargas shells, witnesses said.

Parts of the road remain blocked since Thursday.

Talking to The Daily Star yesterday, assistant inspector general of police (media) said the two police members who were killed during clashes are Giasuddin, a Nayek of Dhaka Metropolitan Police, and Muktadir, an assistant sub-inspector of tourist police.

At least 650 police members were wounded across the country till Friday, he added.

However, he said he had no information about the total death toll or the volume of ammunition used on the protesters so far.

Rab director Legal and Media Wing Lt Col Munim Ferdous said none of their members was wounded yesterday. Till Friday, over 100 Rab members were injured, one of them critically. Besides, two Rab vehicles were torched, while two ambulances and nine pick-ups were vandalised.

He said both Rab and BGB were flying helicopters over the Dhaka sky to quell the protest.

Two varying sets

However, another group of protest coordinators in text messages to different media outlets last evening said the Friday's meeting with ministers was a personal decision of a few individuals.

They said their movement will continue until the next announcement is made and the "nine-point demand" is met.

Abdul Kader, a coordinator of the quota protests, placed the nine-point demand in a statement at 9:30pm on Friday.

The demands include an apology from the prime minister for her remarks and resignation of Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader and Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan resign from cabinet.

These demands were left out of the eight-point demand.

Yesterday's text message from Umama Fatima, a key leader of the ongoing movement, contained names of 24 coordinators and 42 assistant coordinators.

It said the coordination committee will let people know about their decision and demands after discussion among themselves once the internet services are restored.

"The government has completely stopped the broadband and mobile internet services ..... That's why it was not possible for us to contact all the coordinators across the country.

"Taking advantage of this, the government itself and a quarter have been spreading rumours," the text message read.

It said the main target and victim of the "digital crackdown" is their platform.

The Daily Star yesterday tried to contact at least 10 coordinators of the protests but was able to reach four, who confirmed the authenticity of the text message.

About the eight-point demand of the three key protest organisers, the message said, "Their decision is devoid of the spirit of the protests."

Meanwhile, the law minister and the education minister yesterday told this newspaper that a logical solution to the students' demands is possible.

"The students have placed their [eight] demands before us. We have discussed those. We think it is possible to find a reasonable solution to what they said on the percentages of job quotas," Anisul told The Daily Star yesterday.

Education Minister Mohibul Hassan Chowdhoury said, "Since a hearing on the matter will be held at the Supreme Court tomorrow [today], a solution will come. We and the students are on the same page regarding these demands."

Bazar Road. He too was pronounced dead on arrival at the hospital.

Mehedi, 24, a mason, was shot in the head around 6:45pm during a clash on the same road. He was also taken to the same hospital and declared dead.

"My son was returning home from work. He was not a protester," said Mehedi's mother Jahanara Begum.

Sixth-grader Saad Mohammad Khan, 13, was killed when he went to watch a clash in Savar's Dogormura area around 6:00pm. He was shot in the abdomen.

He was taken to Enam Medical College Hospital, where he died around 8:30pm, said doctors.

Around 50 people with bullet and shotgun-pellet injuries received treatment at the hospital and at Savar Upazila Health Complex.

Eight of them were in the ICU of Enam Medical.

In Narayanganj, sporadic clashes went on all day long from the Signboard area to Kanchpur on the Dhaka-Chattogram Highway.

Six vehicles and a market were torched.

Law enforcers hurled sound grenades from helicopters to disperse the agitators.

Three men -- Sajal, 22, Shahin, 23, and Hridoy, 22 -- were declared dead in the district's Sugondha Hospital, said hospital manager Abdul Jalil.

Sajal, who was shot in the abdomen, appeared for SSC exams this year, while Shahin, who had pellet wounds on his body, was a cashier at a hotel. Hridoy had bullet injuries in the head and waist.

Meanwhile, garment worker Minarul, 25, was brought dead to the Narayanganj 300-bed Hospital around 8:00pm last night, said Apu Kumar Saha, a medical officer there.

He was shot in the abdomen during the clash, the doctor said quoting Minarul's parents.

Around 50 people with bullet and pellet injuries were admitted to a private hospital in Narayanganj's Signboard area between 6:00pm and 8:00pm, doctors said.

In Kishoreganj's Pakundia upazila, 20 people, including an assistant commissioner (land) and five policemen, were injured as agitators clashed with police and ruling party activists in the Pakundia Bazar area.

In Narsingdi, the Panchadhana Muktijoddha Complex was vandalised and torched by demonstrators around 12:30pm, said police.

In Shibpur upazila, they vandalised a highway police outpost around 3:00pm.

In Sylhet, several groups of people were seen trying to block the Sylhet-Sunamganj Highway but police and army personnel obstructed them.

In Gazipur, a police box was vandalised at Board Bazar and another one was torched at Chandana intersection.

Key organiser of quota demo 'picked up'

The three – Hasnat Abdullah, Sarjis Alam and Hasib Al Islam – placed an eight-point demand to the minister, while Nahid and others earlier announced a nine-point demand.

Multiple witnesses told The Daily Star that around 25-30 plainclothes persons, including a woman, came to the building in two black vans and two SUV's around 1:10am.

After about 10-15 minutes, around five of them jumped over the boundary wall and broke the main gate's lock with an iron rod from the inside. They then brought a cutter from the car and cut two locks of a collapsible gate inside the building, a witness, who is a guard of an adjacent building, described.

He said the people brought out a man from the second floor and left the area around 2:30am.

"The woman among them told us not to call or tell anyone about the incident."

Another witness said locals in the area did not know who Nahid was nor the reason behind his detention.

This newspaper was able to contact Nahid's friend, who was with him that night.

Requesting anonymity, he said, "When they [plainclothes persons] reached the first floor, we knew they came for us. Nahid told me to run and I went and hid on the rooftop. They then took him away.

"I later heard they were from the Detective Branch of police and that a Rab team was also with them."

These correspondents waited in front of the building from 7:30am to 9:00am yesterday to talk to the tenants and house owners, but no one responded.

Nahid's father Badrul Islam said he learned his son was picked up from the house owners.

"My son has been fighting against discriminations. The government tried to convince him to sit with them before the Supreme Court's hearing but my son denied it. That's why the law enforcers picked him up."

However, no law enforcement agency has admitted to picking Nahid up till the filing of this report around 9:00pm.

His father spent the day rushing from the DB office to the CID office and then Sabujbagh Police Station.

In the evening, he said they were yet to get any news from any law enforcers regarding Nahid's whereabouts.

"We want our son back immediately."

Around 11:00pm, Nahid's father filed a general diary with Khilgaon Police Station.

Contacted, both the DB and Rab denied the allegation of picking up Nahid from Sabujbagh. Deputy Commissioner (media) of Dhaka Metropalitan Police Faruk Hossain said they did not detain any of the protesters.

Lt Col Munim Ferdous, director legal and media wing of Rab, said, he doesn't know about any such incident.

Nahid is the member-secretary of Democratic Students Force, a newly formed political party. Its convenor Akhter Hossain, former welfare secretary of Dhaka University Central Students' Union, was also arrested on Wednesday from the campus.

Deployment of armed forces was necessary

Says Quader

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday said the government was compelled to deploy armed forces to protect lives and properties.

He, however, said the curfew will be relaxed when the situation becomes normal.

Quader was addressing a press briefing at the party president's Dhanmondi office.

In an ill-attempt, the BNP-Jamaat is trying to keep the country's people hostage using the quota movement, Quader alleged.

The AL spokesperson said criminals have gathered in the capital under the directive of BNP leader Tarique Rahman, aiming to take advantage of the quota movement.

He urged all to assist the armed forces to face the criminals and foil their evil plan. Quader hoped that the court's verdict will be acceptable by students.

Foreign minister to brief envoys today

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud will brief foreign diplomats today on the current crisis that has arisen out of the quota reform movement in Bangladesh.

The briefing will be held at the state guesthouse Jamuna at 11:00am, he told reporters at the foreign ministry yesterday.

He also thanked the foreign embassies in Dhaka for not making any public statements on the internal affairs of Bangladesh.

Last Thursday, the foreign ministry sent a verbal note to the foreign missions in Dhaka, describing the current situation.

It said that the government has read the demands of the students who were demonstrating for reform to the quota

All major roads and streets in Dhaka wore a deserted look amid curfew yesterday.

Apart from a few sporadic clashes between agitators and law enforcers in different areas, much of the city remained largely empty as most people chose to stay at home throughout the day.

From morning till noon, the kitchen markets, shopping malls, offices and all sorts of businesses remained completely closed. Pedestrians and vehicles were rarely noticed even on the busiest streets including Mirpur Road, Manik Mia Avenue, Kazi Nazrul Islam Avenue, and Sat Masjid Road.

Only a few rickshaws, ambulances and some police vehicles were seen plying the capital's roads, while no public and private transports could be seen anywhere in the city.

When the curfew was lifted on 12:00pm for two hours, people rushed to shops and kitchen markets to buy essentials.

However, the panic-stricken people moved cautiously in and around their neighbourhoods even during this time, only opting for the nearest shops and bazaars, thereby causing long queues and supply shortages in the stores, leaving many compelled to return home empty handed.

The shop owners were seen keeping their shutters half open so they could close shops at any moment if needed.

Rubaya Ahmed went to buy eggs, vegetables, chicken and fish for her family. After waiting for half an hour, she could only purchase four eggs and some vegetables.

Chicken, eggs and fresh fish were out of stock in many shops.

"I walked from one shop to another but could not find chicken and fish. I managed to buy four eggs and some vegetables. The vegetables were not fresh, but I had no choice," she said.

Many customers also alleged that the shop owners were demanding higher prices for essential commodities.

Long queues also formed in front of mobile top-up outlets and mobile financial services (MFS) agent outlets. Amid the countrywide internet shutdown, people are heavily relying on mobile phones for communication.

However, many people could not recharge their phone balance due to poor mobile phone network, and send or receive funds through MFS agents.

Rakib Hasan, a resident of Dhanmondi, said he could not recharge his phone and hence will be unable to make any emergency call for the rest of the day.

"My family lives in another district and they are very worried about the situation in Dhaka. I need to maintain regular communication with them, but due to poor network , even communication through mobile phone has become extremely difficult," he said.

"I also regularly use MFS for financial transactions. Due to poor network and long queues at the agent outlets, I could not send or receive money for four days," Rakib added.

Grief-stricken SI asks after losing 17-year-old son in Jatrabari clash

SHAHEEN MOLLAH

Moynal Hossain, a sub-inspector at Razarbagh Police Lines, and his wife were frantically running from one room to another at Dhaka Medical College Hospital, looking for their son Imam Hossain Tayeem, 17, yesterday.

"Do you know, where we can find this boy?" the couple asked everyone, showing a photograph of Tayeem.

However, even after looking for him for two hours since 5:00pm, they could not find his name on the list of the injured or deceased.

Seeing the photograph, a journalist suggested that Moynal search the emergency mortuary. The tensed father immediately took off in that direction, and found Tayeem's lifeless body there around 7:00pm.

Shell-shocked, Moynal froze for a moment. His wife collapsed on the floor, wailing, "Oh almighty, who took my son? Why did you go outside without telling us, my son?"

Tayeem, a college student in Narayanganj, had left his home around 11:00am yesterday to join an agitation as part of the quota reform protests at Rayerbagh of Jatrabari, which has been a flashpoint of violent clashes for the past three days.

About an hour later, his parents got a phone call that said Tayeem was shot and being taken to DMCH.

"My youngest son had been protesting for quota reforms since the beginning. Yesterday too, he went out to the streets, defying my instruction to stay home amid the curfew," said Moynal.

> Tayeem, a college student in Narayanganj, had left his house around 11:00am yesterday to join an agitation as part of the ongoing quota reform protest at Rayerbagh of Jatrabari, which has been a hotspot of violent clashes for the past three days.

After finding Tayeem's body, Moynal was heard talking to someone over phone, "Sir, my son is dead. His chest was torn apart by bullets [pellets]. Sir, my son is no more."

The aggrieved father asked, "How many bullets does it take to kill a person, sir?"

The Daily Star could not verify who was on the other side of the phone.

INTERNET SHUTDOWN

ATM services, digital banking disrupted

MD MEHEDI HASAN

Online banking, ATM and digital payment services including money transfers and utility bill payments continued to be disrupted yesterday amid the ongoing internet blackout across the country since Thursday.

Robiul Islam, who has an account with EXIM Bank, wanted to withdraw money as he urgently needed cash but failed to do so from numerous ATM booths in different areas of Dhaka.

He finally managed to withdraw money from an ATM booth of Mutual Trust Bank at Panthapath.

"Most ATM booths of different banks were shut down, while those that were open had no money," he told this correspondent.

> A bank account holder

Contacted, Mohammad Feroz Hossen, managing director of EXIM Bank, said they loaded all of their ATM booths with money before the ongoing unrest began.

While all of their ATM booths remained open since then, there is a possibility that some of the booths ran out of cash because the bank was facing difficulties to load money to the booths amid the unrest, he added.

Faria Anjum, a student, wanted to use her bank card for buying some urgent medicines for her mother at Popular Diagnostic Centre in Shantinagar due to shortage of cash in hand.

But she was unable to do so as the POS (point of sale) machine at the diagnostic centre could not run without internet.

"There should be no problem in withdrawing cash if ATM booths have adequate funds. However, ATM booths in some areas are vulnerable to risk of attacks, so those have been kept shut as a precautionary measure," said Syed Mahbubur Rahman, managing director of Mutual Trust Bank.

Saiful Islam, executive director and spokesperson of Bangladesh Bank, said the central bank's systems were operating well and there were no problems at their end.

However, online banking transactions have not been taking place amid disruption to data services, he added.

The transfer of bandwidth was suspended to internet service providers,

Vendor dies amid violence in Banasree

ASIFUR RAHMAN and

"Please help! We need money to send this body to his village for funeral. Donate whatever you can."

There lied the body of Jashim Uddin, 32, on a khatia (wooden platform), covered in a white cloth.

The appeal for help came from his uncle Kala Miah, a street vendor.

These correspondents spotted him in front of a mosque in Sipahibag Bazar area of Khilgaon on Friday evening.

Jashim died when BGB and police, opened fire at protesters in Banasree area around 5:00pm on that day, claimed locals.

They brought the body to a nearby hospital where Kala Miah identified him. The body was handed over to Kala Miah without an autopsy at 7:00pm.

From there, he brought the body to Sipahibag and started collecting funds.

"Look, I am a street vendor, so was my nephew. He used to sell chanachur (a traditional spicy snack). We were already in a tight spot due to rising costs of essentials. On top of that, we didn't earn any money due to violence for the last three days," said Kala Miah.

"His [Jashim's] family lives in Sarail of Brahmanbaria. We need to send the body back home. But I don't have any money. So, I am collecting funds," he told these correspondents.

People, from all backgrounds and ages, were seen chipping in, donating five-taka coins or ten-taka notes, up to over Tk 1,000.

Within an hour, Kala Miah managed to collect Tk 60,000 with the help of locals.

He didn't waste any time. He hired a microbus and left Dhaka with the lifeless body of his nephew.

Before leaving, he said, "Jashim has five children -- four daughters and a physically challenged son. All of them are aged between one and 12. What will happen to them?"

Jashim was sick for the last two days and couldn't earn a single penny as the whole area remained a warzone during the movement.

He was suffering from fever for a week. So, he couldn't venture out to sell chanachur.

No let up in price hike

People suffer as unrest causes supply disruption for third day

SUKANTA HALDER

As consumers hit the markets yesterday amid the nationwide curfew, they had to pay higher prices due to supply of essentials -- rice, vegetables, eggs, etc. -- facing disruptions for the third consecutive day.

Transportation of perishable commodities to the capital remained scarce, hiking the prices.

Jashim Uddin, a resident of Farmgate's Tejturibazar, said he had to pay a lot higher for vegetables and fishes at the local market.

"The traders say they had to hike the prices as they are not getting enough supply. How can we afford to pay the extra in these trying times?" he asked.

Khaled Mia, a resident of the Pallabi area, echoed him.

The supply shortage has increased prices of fish such as hilsa, rui, katla, and some others by Tk 180 to Tk 250 per kg, said Awlad Hossain, a fish trader at Hatirpool kitchen market.

Rahidul Islam, a wholesaler at Mahasthan Bazar, one of the biggest wholesale markets in Bogura, said they cannot send fresh farm produce to Dhaka and other major cities due to the unavailability of trucks.

"Even, when one is available, we have to pay thrice the fare we used to pay," he said, adding that he had to pay Tk 60,000 for a truck which used to be only Tk 20,000 before the unrest.

"Drivers are unwilling to move in fear of attacks," he said.

Due to the crisis, most farmers are not bringing their produce to the market, he said.

"Vegetables are rotting in the fields, and we can't do anything about it," he added.

Sabbir Nasir, executive director of ACI logistics, which owns supermarket retail chain Shawapno, said the unrest is hurting their business.

"Sales have dropped by 30 to 35 percent since Thursday," he said, adding that 48 out of their 483 outlets were closed across the country yesterday.

Nasir said Shawapno's internal supply chain for product delivery across the country started operating in a limited scale yesterday.

Unimart, another supermarket chain, yesterday opened its eight outlets for only one and a half hours from noon, said its chief executive Murtoza Zaman.

He said the decision was taken due to supply chain disruption, alongside several of their staffers being hurt in the unrest.

The unrest has also affected the supply chain of country's biggest commodity importers and processors.

Bishawjit Saha, head of corporate affairs of City Group, said, "We couldn't supply any product yesterday due to unavailability of drivers."

Taslim Shahriar, deputy general manager at Meghna Group, said they could resume limited scale delivery of goods yesterday following a hiatus of two days.

Safiul Atahar Taslim, finance director at TK Group, said they are trying hard to keep the supply of goods as usual.

Since Wednesday, their supply dropped 30 percent, he added.

Passengers stuck as flights grounded

11 international flights cancelled; global IT outage hits Dhaka airport

RASHIDUL HASAN and
PORIMOL PALMA

Hundreds of passengers were stranded at the Dhaka airport yesterday after flights were grounded due to a glitch in a cyber security software widely used by airlines.

Some flights were also cancelled due to a low turnout of passengers.

Many of them could not reach the airport amid the ongoing countrywide violence.

Sources at the Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport said 11 international flights were either delayed or cancelled in the last 24 hours till 6:00pm yesterday.

Many foreign airlines including, Saudia, Air Arabia, and Emirates cancelled the flights, said sources.

Saudi-bound passenger Rimon Mia went through a great ordeal to reach Dhaka from Barishal amid road blockades, lack of transportation, and violence on the streets.

However, upon reaching the airport, he was told that his flight was cancelled.

"My flight was scheduled for takeoff at 6:00am today [yesterday]. I was not informed about the cancellation. No one at the airport is telling me when is the next flight," he said.

"I don't know what to do now as my visa expires in two days," he said.

He added that he did not even have a place to stay in Dhaka as he had no relatives here in the capital.

Similarly, Salamat Sheikh, a Dubai-bound passenger, reached Dhaka from Cumilla by renting a car for Tk 10,000. After entering the airport, he was informed that his flight was cancelled.

Many other passengers shared similar ordeals.

"In the current situation, how will I go outside [out of the airport]? Who will give us security?" asked one Saudi-bound passenger, Mohammad Abir, who came from Narayanganj.

Meanwhile, many passengers failed to reach the airport on time due to the road and rail blockades.

Twelve Bangladeshi migrants who were supposed to fly to Brunei at 2:00am on Friday found out that there flight was cancelled due to a shortage of passengers.

"We arranged accommodation for the 12 Bangladeshi migrants," an official at the airport said.

Civil Aviation and Tourism Minister Muhammad Faruk Khan, however, said operations at the Dhaka airport were going on smoothly without any obstructions.

Air tickets would be counted as curfew pass for the passengers going to airports, the minister added.

Faruk said stern actions will be taken if any airlines increase fares taking advantage of the current situation.

On Friday, an enormous IT outage hit hard banks, grocery stores, TV networks, airlines and even emergency services across the world causing suffering to millions.

The problem occurred when cybersecurity firm Crowdstrike was conducting a software update of it's popular product Falcon Cybersecurity Software, said its CEO.

As a result, he did not earn much.

Just when his physical condition was improving, he saw Banasree, Rampura, and his other usual places of business turn into a battlefield as armed law enforcers fired tear shells, sound grenades and shotgun pellets to disperse protesters, said his neighbour Ruma Begum.

The situation persisted for three days and took a turn for the worse after Juma prayers on Friday when BGB fired live bullets to stop protesters from marching towards the BTV area.

The violence spread to Banasree as Rab helicopters patrolled over the area and fired tear shells and sound grenades on the ground.

"Due to his financial situation, Jashim was getting increasingly restless. He left his home around evening," said Ruma.

Before leaving, he shared peanuts with me and other neighbours, and left with a smile.

"I will be back soon," Ruma quoted Jashim as saying.

"Never have we thought that he will return in white cloth, lying in a poll of blood," Ruma cried.

Yesterday morning, this newspaper contacted Kala Miah again. He said they managed to reach Brahmanbaria amid the curfew.

Some of the money was spent at the funeral, while the remaining were given to his family members.

Broadband and mobile network operators said this decision was taken by the government in view of the current situation, adding that they were dependent on the directives of the authorities concerned to resume the services.

system in government jobs, and that the authorities were working to come to a solution.

Besides, the government was also taking necessary measures to ensure peace and stability amid the demonstrations, the note added.

At the briefing yesterday, Hasan Mahmud also said the foreign embassies can inform the foreign ministry if they have any concern.

"The government has declared curfew and deployed army in aid of the civil administration in the wake of violence."

The minister said the BNP-Jamaat, using the cover of quota protesters, have destroyed public properties. "These attacks are on the state and people," he said.

He went on to say that some of the foreign media have wrongly reported the number of casualties and requested them to verify the numbers before publication.

Meanwhile, Chinese Foreign Ministry Spokesperson Lin Jian at a briefing in Beijing said China noted what happened recently in Bangladesh and that it was Bangladesh's internal affairs.

"We believe that the government of Bangladesh will properly handle it and uphold national solidarity and stability."

Call for Expressions of Interest For contracting NGOs for WFP's 2025-2026 Partnership cycle (from January 2025 to end 2025/26) To implement the Humanitarian Assistance Programme in Bangladesh to Enhance Food Security, Nutrition and Resilience

The United Nations World Food Programme (WFP) invites experienced local/national/international NGOs to submit an Expression of Interest for the implementation of "Humanitarian assistance programmes to enhance food security, nutrition and resilience."

About the Programme:
Under the Country Strategic Plan (2022 – 2026), WFP will support Bangladesh on its path to ending hunger and reducing malnutrition by 2030 through four strategic outcomes (SO):

▶ SO1: Populations affected by crisis in Bangladesh are able to meet basic food, nutrition and other essential needs during and after crises.
▶ SO2: The nutrition needs of women, children, and vulnerable groups in Bangladesh are met through national institutions that have enhanced capacities to design and implement gender- and nutrition-sensitive social safety net programmes by 2026.
▶ SO3: Vulnerable communities in Bangladesh are more resilient to shocks and natural disasters owing to enhanced national disaster management capacity and flexible nutrition- and gender-sensitive social safety net programmes by 2026.
▶ SO4: Vulnerable crisis-affected populations in Bangladesh benefit from enhanced coordination and improved common services during and after crises.

WFP, through its partners, currently provides humanitarian assistance to approximately 1.2 million people in Bangladesh. In collaboration with the Government of Bangladesh (GoB), other UN agencies, and NGOs, WFP is also working in various sectors namely Food Security, Nutrition, Emergency response and Common Services. In the most vulnerable Bangladeshi communities and the camps, WFP will continue to: i) provide humanitarian food assistance to the Rohingya population every month through E-vouchers; ii) build the resilience of refugees and local communities through skills development, livelihoods, market linkages, food assistance for assets and volunteer services; iii) support schools and learning centres with school feeding and capacity building for relevant national institutions; iv) implementation of an integrated package of malnutrition prevention and treatment interventions and nutrition services targeting children aged 6-59 months and pregnant and lactating women; v) implement safety-net programmes; vi) implement disaster risk preparedness and response to protect the food security of vulnerable population; vii) implement Food and Nutrition Security Programme in Urban areas; viii) provide lifesaving food assistance during Emergency Response to any disaster in any geographical location in Bangladesh (through the provision of a standby emergency roster).

Conditions for entry:
The organization must have:
- A fully filled-in profile in the UN partner Portal (UNPP)
- Legal status (valid registration certificate with NGO Affairs Bureau)
- Experience in the geographic area for which it applies
- Experience in implementing food, nutrition, education (specifically school feeding), cash-based transfers and/or market-based interventions
- Experience in community mobilization and resilience building activities
- Experience in emergency preparedness and response
- Organization's strategic objectives that are aligned with WFP's strategic priorities; SO1 to SO4 mentioned above
- Adequate resource capacity (financial human resources and procurement)
- Relevant sector experience (Food, Nutrition, Logistics and Common Services)
- Strong project management experience
- Adequate financial capacity to conduct the required activities supported by an audited financial statement
- Strong relationships with local administration and relevant local and regional institutions

Application Process:
Interested parties are advised to monitor the UN Partner Portal (https://www.unpartnerportal.org/dashboard) for opportunities published for Bangladesh (Calls for Expressions of Interest – CFEI / Request for Proposal - RFP – under Partnership opportunities) during the period between July and September 2024. Please note, unlike previous years, that these partnership opportunities require a full proposal from the outset.

All interested local/national/international NGOs with a valid registration certificate from the NGO Affairs Bureau must ensure that their Organizational Profile on the Portal is fully updated with all the latest information and documents, and they must actively apply to the WFP partnership opportunity with a full proposal. Applications must be submitted through the UN partner portal within the timeframes given. A detailed guideline for creating an organizational profile in UN Partner Portal is available at https://supportcso.unpartnerportal.org/hc/en-us/sections/360000940774. Please note that there are no fees for applications and that applying is free of charge.

In case interested NGO's encounter any technical difficulties with UNPP, please contact bangladesh.flataskforce@wfp.org.

A sudden curfew

Govt must explain the unprecedented scale of deaths

A nation-wide government curfew was declared from midnight on Friday till 10 am on Sunday. A government declares curfew and brings the army to the aid of civilian administration as a last resort when a situation gets out of control. We are made to understand that this last resort had to be taken to stop the unbelievable violence we have been witnessing for the last four days, especially on Friday. We hope and expect the army to handle the situation judiciously and not in the way the police and BGB have, which has been shockingly brutal. We must remember that a curfew does assist the restoration of law and order, but it also throttles the economy, kills small businesses, greatly harms the lives of daily wage earners and generates harmful rumours. Thus, it should be enforced for the shortest period of time.

This brings us to the most horrific part of this crisis—at least 66 (confirmed) lives lost in one day (July 19) and hundreds injured. It puts the death toll as confirmed by this paper at 101, though the actual figure is probably much higher. More deaths have been reported on Saturday. People, mostly students, have been shot dead throughout the country. What happened that so many people had to be killed? According to media reports, the majority of deaths was caused by firing from the police and the BGB (with the highest death toll on July 19). Is it acceptable that law enforcement agents and other state actors can shoot so many civilians "to control a situation?" Can something as irresponsible as law enforcers indiscriminately firing bullets and throwing sound grenades from helicopters, be legitimate? In fact, their action instead of reducing violence, inflamed it further. The nation demands a credible explanation for such unprecedented deaths along with a believable investigation into these killings. Those responsible must be given befitting punishment and those who ordered such violent measures to be taken must be held accountable.

There is some truth in the government's statement that political elements have entered the students' anti-quota movement. It is obvious that non-student elements including those that are political have become players in the crisis which makes it all the more important that the government differentiates the students from these non-student elements. The onus is on the government to find a solution acceptable to the quota protestors. The government must also ensure that no student is intimidated, harassed or attacked for being part of the movement by the police, university authorities or by members of the Chhatra League.

We condemn the large-scale destruction and arson attacks on government establishments which we believe were carried out by non-student actors and fair investigations must be made of these incidents. We urge the government to refrain from any further hardline approach to this crisis and restore the country to normalcy as soon as possible.

Why this prolonged internet shutdown?

Curfew, internet outage combine to severely restrict space for citizens

The nationwide complete internet shutdown has not only brought life as we know it to a screeching halt but also cut off Bangladesh from the rest of the world. The blanket shutdown, which started on Thursday evening and continued as of writing this editorial on Saturday evening, is unprecedented in the history of Bangladesh. Never before has there been such a lengthy internet outage encompassing the whole country. Together with the curfew, also in effect since midnight on Friday, the total restriction of both digital and physical spaces has caused unimaginable sufferings.

As per a report by this daily, people all over the country have been struggling to access essential services that rely on internet to function, including digital transactions, utility bill payments, online communications, mobile credit recharge, etc. Customers couldn't use ATM booths or the apps enabling mobile financial services (MFS), nor could they pay through their bank cards or use other online banking services. The only ray of hope for MFS users was the *247# service, but its scope too was limited. In fact, any service or activity requiring internet has been halted, and its cumulative effect is immeasurable at this stage. In the IT sector alone, BASIS estimates a loss of Tk 80 crore in the first 24 hours of outage. As well as the staggering daily financial losses for the IT and digital commerce sectors, another significant concern is the reputational damage for those operating in these sectors.

The question is, how can the government justify such severe and prolonged restrictions? Internet shutdown is one of the major aspects of control that the government has exercised to curb protests over the last decade. This time, it took it a notch up, timing it with a curfew. The justification given for such measures is that they are essential to restore normalcy amid the complete breakdown of law and order that saw over a hundred people killed in just three days in the ongoing quota reform movement. But the risks of internet outage, in particular, far outweigh any benefits. Besides the losses and sufferings that it brings for citizens, an outage invariably means information blackouts which can only lead to the spread of rumours and misinformation. In a country where freedom of expression and mass mobilisations around common political issues are severely restricted, it is vital that such blackouts are resisted as they sow the seeds of long-term instability. Only free flow of information can neutralise such threats.

We, therefore, urge the government to restore internet connections immediately. It must give citizens a breather from the suffocating environment that has been prevailing because of its failure to ensure peace in the ongoing student movement.

What lies ahead for the nation

SHAHAB ENAM KHAN

Let's begin by revisiting the timeless concept of "protest" in political science. Throughout history, small, loosely connected groups united by a common cause have sparked remarkable and transformative change, political or otherwise. This is a powerful reminder that no display of excessive power goes unnoticed in the annals of history, and no death goes unpunished.

Take the example of 1952. It sowed the seeds of independence and the great Liberation War of 1971. Civil rights movement in the US, the European colour revolutions, the Arab Spring, or perhaps the Indian independence movement—all thrived on the bonding of powerless groups of people against the powerful.

While protests are formed by the powerless banding together, it is common for a wide range of entities—each presenting diverse motivations and grievances—to join them. This diversity underscores the complexity and depth of social issues and individual as well as collective aspirations that fuel protests. That is exactly what is happening in Bangladesh under the quota reform movement 2.0.

The vibrant and energetic young protesters are in their teens and twenties, most of them first-time voters. While electoral politics is not at all a feature of this movement, some have blatantly tried to give it a political spin. As an organic reaction, I am sure many fringe elements have tried to blend in with the movement. Still, their participation does not invalidate the core cause of the general students under any circumstances. Hence, motivations could be different, but the grievances of different sections perhaps coincide.

The students exposed the overall social mistrust and grievances towards political enterprises. One needs to dig deeper beyond our comfortable political narratives.

A protester told me, "The recent protests by auto-rickshaw drivers in May 2024 got the government's prompt and compassionate response. And look at us; aren't we supposed to run the country in the coming years? You think they value merit?"

Another promptly added, "Did we ask for political change? We asked for policy changes and reforms. Can you ask the government who appoints these university administrators or Public Service Commission officials? Our parents and their hard work pay for these universities to run, and all the development work the government brags about."

Nonetheless, the students' awakening was unsurprising for those with some political sensibility left.

The grievances were all clearly written on the walls, as my Dhaka-based journalist friend Shafiqul Alam said, "Those anti-quota protests are bigger than the Nur-led successful protests in 2018." He added that this time protestors have achieved a far greater goal: a major moral reckoning among millions of apolitical young people. With jobs staggering, graft and connections deciding one's place in society, the cost of migration to the West getting pricier, and the economy in the doldrums, this new generation will decide the fate of our of democracy in the next few years.

This time protestors have achieved a far greater goal—a major moral reckoning among millions of apolitical young people.

This leaves us with three painful but critical paths forward.

First, the distribution of quotas must be reformed, which I guess will be done soon through the apex court, as the law minister declared, followed by judicial inquiries to bring justice to the fallen lives. The sooner, the better.

Second, a genuine commitment to reforming the education sector and national integrity institutions must be visible. University recruitment and admission processes must undergo massive reform and become rigorous. The unholy nexus between student politics, vested interests and political patronage must be eliminated. Awami League was often advised to tame its student wing. Its ineptness in doing so compelled the general students to take a stand this time.

At the same time, I can relate to AL's comfortably slow reaction to teachers' pension-related movements because many of the teachers are in good term with the ruling party. And the teachers, in general, lack the ability to take to the street to protest. If a meaningful outcome of the teachers' protest is expected and reforms are to be meaningful, the so-called leaders among the teachers should control their appetite for undue benefits and change their political subservience.

If the government is willing to see stability, all these efforts should be accompanied by political sanity. Denial, false narratives or digital crackdowns cannot be the go-to tactics in politics in the coming years. Let's not forget, the blame game and exploitation of the Liberation War narrative by anyone haven't worked over the past few weeks.

Finally, the students should be given due honour and dignity. Humiliating them will not bring any good and denying them their rights today or tomorrow will not strengthen the nation. They deserve a better academic framework to develop as good human resources.

I must remind you that our students are also a part of a global transformation, in which the number of protests each year has tripled between 2006 and 2024. The transformation shows that the political attitude of "we know everything," inequality, inflation, nationalism, conflictive social relations, and sycophancy can lead to more turmoil in the future.

If the abovementioned issues remain unaddressed, things can go very wrong in the coming months. Mark this as an early admonition from a public university faculty member.

Let there be sanity.

Stop money laundering to curb inflation

Mohammad Jahidur Rahman

MOHAMMAD JAHIDUR RAHMAN

The finance minister, in his final speech in parliament on the proposed budget for FY24-25, said: "While it is necessary to adopt contractionary policies to control inflation, it is undeniable that in the long run, this approach can slow down growth."

Inflation, which erodes the purchasing power for consumers as well as businesses, happens in two ways. One is through an increase in the production cost of goods or services, generally referred to as cost-push inflation; the other happens through an increase in the demand for goods and services due to increased supply of money in the market, which is referred to as demand-pull inflation.

When more jobs and higher wages increase people's income level, it leads to a rise in consumer spending. The overall effect is an increase in aggregate demand, which gives firms the opportunity to increase the prices of their goods and services. As soon as this happens on a large enough scale, it leads to an increase in demand-pull inflation.

The current inflation in Bangladesh has not been driven by an increase in the money supply in the market. Rather, a large portion of the active labour force is unemployed or underpaid due to the impact of post-Covid global factors and the war in Ukraine.

A low unemployment rate is unquestionably good in general, but it can cause inflation because zero or near-zero unemployment means people have higher disposable income. The unemployment rate in Bangladesh was 4.38 percent in 2019, which climbed to 5.21 percent in 2020 due to the pandemic's affects. The unemployment rate dropped to a low of 4.7 percent in 2022. The Ukraine war that started in February 2022 halted the post-pandemic recovery process—and employment generation could not gain much momentum. So, it is evident that low unemployment (or an economy with full employment), which is a cause for demand-pull inflation, is not applicable in the Bangladesh context.z

The inflation rate as of May 2024 was 9.89 percent, whereas it was 5.57 percent in January 2020. So, what we have in Bangladesh is cost-push inflation. The devaluation of our currency has led to an increase in the import cost of raw materials, leading to an increase in the overall price level. The official exchange rate of the US dollar against the taka was 84.86 in 2021. It was Tk 103.02 and 109.75 in 2022 and 2023, respectively. Finally, it stood at Tk 117.00 after the introduction of a crawling peg exchange rate.

The value of a country's currency and its exchange rate significantly influences the level of inflation. If a country's currency depreciates, the cost of imported goods affects domestic pricing. Thus, a weaker currency triggers inflation.

To control inflation, the standard response of a central bank would be to raise official interest rates. When the central bank increases interest rates, borrowing for commercial banks becomes more expensive. Both consumers and businesses might think twice about taking loans for major purchases or investments. This slows down spending, typically lowering overall demand, which leads to reduced inflation.

This monetary instrument to curb inflation is best suited for inflation triggered by an excessive supply of money. But in the case of inflation in Bangladesh, it is triggered by a rise in the cost of production, especially due to an excessive rise in the dollar price. In August 2021, Bangladesh Bank had $48.1 billion in foreign currency reserves, which came down to $24.2 billion in May 2024.

Here, it is evident that the higher inflation rate prevailing in Bangladesh is not due to demand-pull inflation; it is due to a shortage of Forex reserves and an increase in the dollar price. So, contractionary monetary policy will not function here as expected.

Increased policy rate and the introduction of a specific margin plus Six-Month Moving Average Rate of Treasury Bill (SMART) as a lending rate will make the economy grow. It will limit the earning capacity of consumers and affect producers, leading them to lower production. Thus, a vicious cycle will take over the economy, pulling the growth rate down or even push it towards negative growth.

Since the current inflation in Bangladesh cannot be most effectively addressed with a contractionary monetary policy, an alternative financial regulatory intervention through the repatriation of overdue export proceeds and curbing money laundering is needed.

In 2022-23, the mismatch between the actual realisation reported by Bangladesh Bank and the shipment figure provided by the Export Promotion Bureau (EPB) was $12.08 billion. EPB data showed that goods and services exports stood at $63.05 billion in FY23, whereas the central bank reported that Bangladesh received $50.97 billion in the same year. There may be some differences between the export data of the Bangladesh Bank and the EPB due to disagreements and the time lag effect. But such a huge gap must be investigated meticulously to find any unrepatriated export amount.

According to Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB), Tk 26,400 crore or $3.1 billion is illegally siphoned out of Bangladesh every year. Reportedly, hundi, over-invoicing, under-invoicing, and trade mis-invoicing are the primary ways of money laundering.

Corruption has a negative impact on the economic growth of any country, as it reduces investment and consequently lowers the growth rate of industrial output. Undoubtedly, corruption is a big hindrance to sustainable development. But it's not the biggest hindrance for an economy. When money acquired through corruption circulates within the economy, it still generates employment and thus contributes to increasing GDP. The biggest hindrance to sustainable development is the money getting laundered abroad. Money, whether earned legally or illegally, once laundered out of the country, is most likely lost forever and will not make any contribution to its economic activities. The damage that this does is massive, which is why it is so vital to stop money laundering in Bangladesh.

BCB in observation mood as nat'l camp gets held up

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Cricket Board's (BCB) cricket operations chairman Jalal Yunus on Saturday said the board is currently observing the ongoing countrywide unrest and is optimistic about holding the national team's scheduled camp in Chattogram once the situation improves.

"The plan remains the same. We are observing the whole situation. We don't know how long the curfew will continue. Let's see what happens," Jalal told The Daily Star yesterday.

The Bangladesh team was scheduled to begin their preparation camp today in Chattogram ahead of their two-match Test series against Pakistan next month.

Several members of the national team were expected to travel to Chattogram on Saturday for the preparation camp, however, due to the current situation, they had to postpone their flight.

"We have delayed our travel plan to Chattogram. We were supposed to fly today [Saturday]. But it was postponed. We are closely following the direction of the government. We will act accordingly," said cricket operations manager Shahriar Nafees.

During the scheduled camp, the Tigers are expected to play two practice matches on July 23 and 29 respectively before flying to Pakistan mid-August for the Test series, which are part of the ICC Test Championship.

Jalal said that the BCB is still optimistic about holding those matches but they are giving top priority to players' safety.

Jalal informed that some of the national team's foreign coaching staff are already in Dhaka following their vacation post the ICC T20 World Cup and the board is expecting the others to join them soon.

"David Hemp [batting coach] and Andre Adams [fast bowling coach] have already arrived in Dhaka. The rest of the foreign coaching staff are expected to arrive within a few days. There were some flight disturbances for a Microsoft complication. Hopefully, we will learn about their arrival dates very soon."

The first Test in Rawalpindi will take place on August 21-25 while Karachi will host the second Test on August 30-September 3.

Meanwhile, the BCB had to cancel two scheduled white-ball matches between the High Performance Unit and Bangladesh Tigers at the Zahur Ahmed Chowdhury Stadium in Chattogram on July 19 and 20 respectively due to the ongoing unrest.

'We are competing in Olympics as token participation'

SPORTS REPORTER

Swimmer Sonia Khatun, who will represent Bangladesh in the forthcoming Paris Olympics through a wildcard, said she was unhappy with her preparation for the mega event and criticised the prevailing culture in the country's athletics of taking part in the Olympics just to make up the numbers.

"Considering the magnitude of the Paris Olympics, my preparation is not good enough," Sonia told The Daily Star on the eve of her departure to Paris.

"I have been training at the BKSP for the last two months whereas other swimmers across the world began their preparation for the Paris Olympic Games right after the Tokyo Olympics," she added.

The 25-year-old swimmer feels that there is no point in Bangladesh continuing to send athletes for the Olympics if the federations and other relevant sports bodies do not invest in athletes and aim to win medals.

"We are taking part in the Olympics as token participation. We feel really sad when we produce poor timings and don't win any medals. I think we should not participate in the Olympics just for the sake of it.

"If we want to develop our sports, we need to undertake proper planning and also require strong financial backing. We should set a goal and then design the training and other related things to achieve it."

In the last nine editions, since the 1988 Sydney Olympics, Bangladesh have always participated in the swimming discipline in the Games through wildcards, but haven't achieved anything of note.

Sonia, the national record holder in 100m butterfly event, is set to become the fourth female swimmer after Doli Akter, Sonia Akter and Junayna Ahmed to represent Bangladesh in the Olympics.

The Bangladesh Navy swimmer will compete in the 50m freestyle event, where her current best timing is 30.11 seconds, which she set during the Hangzhou Asian Games in China last year.

The Bangladesh Navy swimmer spoke how competing in the Olympics will be a dream come true for her but her underwhelming preparation for the biggest sports extravaganza in the world has somewhat dampened her enthusiasm.

"Of course, like all other athletes, I always dreamed of competing at the Olympics. Despite this lack of preparation, I am optimistic about giving my best and surpassing my previous best timing,".

Sonia, whose journey in swimming began in 2013 after getting admitted at the BKSP, prefers butterfly and freestyle events but will have to compete in the 50m freestyle event in Paris, in which Bangladesh's three-time Olympian Doli Akter (30.72 and 30.23 seconds), Sonia Akter (29.99 seconds) and Junayna Ahmed (29.78) had competed in the past.

Cricketers uncertain about away tours

SPORTS REPORTER

Several cricketers are dealing with uncertainty regarding their upcoming tours abroad due to the country's ongoing political unrest.

While the red-ball team of High Performance (HP) Unit are already in Australia -- currently facing Pakistan Shaheens in the first of two four-day matches -- the white-ball squad is expected to fly to Australia on July 27 for two one-dayers and a T20 tournament, involving Pakistan Shaheens and Big Bash teams.

HP's white-ball preparation had taken a blow as their last two practice matches against Bangladesh Tigers had to be cancelled, and it appears that most of them could likely be forced to stay in Chattogram if the nation-wide curfew, enforced yesterday, is extended.

"We were scheduled to travel to Dhaka on July 23. I don't know when we will be able to fly to Australia," Afif Hossain, who is set to lead HP team in Australia during the one-day series and is also part of the T20 squad, told The Daily Star yesterday.

Meanwhile, all-rounder Mohammad Saifuddin, who was picked by Montreal Tigers in upcoming Global T20 Canada, scheduled to start on July 25, informed he is yet to get visa for Canada.

"I came to my home in Feni two days ago. As far as I know, everyone's visa issues are ongoing. It's not sure [about him playing in Global T20 Canada]," said Saifuddin, who was in Chattogram with Bangla Tigers.

Saifuddin aside, Shoriful Islam and Shakib Al Hasan will represent Bangla Tigers Mississauga and Rishad Hossain will feature for Toronto Nationals in the franchise tournament. Shakib, who is currently representing Los Angeles Knight Riders in the ongoing Major League Cricket in the USA, is expected to fly to Canada after the tournament ends.

Heatwave poses big challenge for Greece's workers

REUTERS, Athens

Yannis Asimakopoulos has worked as a food delivery driver in Athens for 17 years and cannot recall a hotter summer as a new heatwave gripped Greece this week.

Authorities shut all archaeological sites in Athens for a second consecutive day on Thursday and restricted outdoor work as the country sizzled under its second heatwave of the summer.

Thermal cameras have recorded temperatures of about 70 Celsius (158 Fahrenheit) on the road surface, but delivery drivers on their scooters are still needed.

"Driving is really hard. You have to wear a helmet, the lens of the helmet fogs up from the sweat. You have to stop all the time, the tyres melt faster, the street is slippery, the conditions in general are really difficult," Asimakopoulos said after the end of his shift at noon.

"Every year I see a huge difference in the temperature. I see a rise and it lasts longer. Before it was two or three days," he added.

As with many countries in Europe, Greece has repeatedly seen high temperatures disrupt daily activities since June, and hundreds of wildfires have broken out following the warmest winter on record that scientists link to global climate change.

This year Greece recorded its warmest-ever winter. June was also the hottest on record and the current heatwave is forecast to be the country's longest ever, said Kostas Lagouvardos, research director of the national observatory.

The government has ordered some businesses not to let their employees perform heavy outdoor duty from midday until 5 pm (0900 GMT to 1400 GMT) this week as the mercury is expected to reach 42 Celsius (105.8 Fahrenheit) in parts of the country.

For many delivery workers, that is not an option, Asimakopoulos said.

"Many people... who need more money for their families will continue to work, and the employers will exploit this." More than 20,000 drivers deliver food, beverages and other goods in Athens. Their unions are demanding the restriction in working hours to apply when temperature reaches 38 Celsius (100.4 Fahrenheit), not 40 or higher.

In some areas, even the lowest temperature recorded was already 30 degrees Celsius, increasing the impact of heat stress on humans, Lagouvardos said, adding: "There is no hour in the day to feel better."

Hamas even as demands grow for him to reach a deal that would free hostages.

According to the Gaza health ministry, more than 38,919 Palestinians have been killed and nearly 90,000 people have been injured in the Israeli military offensive in Gaza since October 7.

All health facilities in southern Gaza have been pushed to "breaking point" due to an influx of people wounded by Israeli bombardments, the International Committee of the Red Cross said.

Washington has been pushing for a truce deal between Israel and Hamas since President Joe Biden released details of what he said was an Israeli ceasefire roadmap on May 31.

But despite the efforts of Egyptian and Qatari mediators, indirect negotiations between the foes have not yet led to a final a deal. Biden last week said there were "still gaps to close" but progress was being made.

Meanwhile, a drone attack on Israeli land injured several people on Friday night. The Israeli military said they detected the Iran-made drone beforehand but could not shoot it down due to human error.

Houthi movement in Yemen claimed responsibility for the attack.

Editors' Council is urging the government to quickly resume the internet service all over the country, the statement added.

The statement was issued on Friday. However, due to a technical glitch, this portion, which was in our yesterday's report titled "Lives upended by internet shutdown", got dropped. We regret the error.

However, when they could not break the shutter on the first floor, they smashed the window glasses to get into the station.

They vandalised ticket counters, vending machines, fire extinguishers, TV screens, CCTV cameras and each and every room on the floor, the official said, wishing anonymity.

They even tried to break open the ticket vending machines to loot money, he said.

"It seems the attackers had a personal grudge against the metro rail...," he said.

Replying to a question, he said it would take some time to replace all these equipment and fix the rooms. For example, he said, they have to set up vending machines, which have to be customised as per our usability.

"Besides, all these sophisticated equipment need to be replaced. We also have to carry out trials before starting operations in the stations," he said.

Mass Rapid Transit Line-6, the country's first metro rail line, was made partially operational from Uttara to Agargaon in December 2022. The Agargaon-Motijheel section opened for service in October last year.

The government is implementing a Tk 33,472 crore project to build the 21.26km line from Uttara to Kamalapur, with most of the fund coming from Japan as loan.

keep the provision of quotas in public service, and the court cannot interfere in this decision.

On July 18, Justice M Enayetur Rahim, chamber judge of the Appellate Division, fixed today as the date for the hearing at its full bench led by the chief justice.

He passed the order after Attorney General AM Amin Uddin appealed for an early hearing of the petitions considering those as an important and urgent matter.

Following a writ petition, the HC on June 5 this year declared illegal the circular, issued by the public administration ministry on October 4, 2018, which cancelled the quota system in government jobs.

The circular said that in the case of direct recruitment to the posts of 9th grade (formerly class 1) and 10th to 13th grades (formerly class 2), the appointments should be made based on merit.

The HC in the full text of its judgement, released on July 14, also directed the government to restore and maintain the quotas for freedom fighters' children, districts, women, physically challenged people, tribes, minor races, and ethnic groups and others, if any, and to publish a notification in this regard as soon as possible, preferably within three months, from the date of receipt of the order.

The court, however, said the government can change, reduce or increase the ratio or percentage of the quotas in public jobs, if necessary, and can fill the vacant posts from the merit list if any quota in government recruitment is not fulfilled.

Protesting the HC judgment on June 5, students staged demonstrations at different educational institutions, including Dhaka University. They took to the streets on July 1, demanding the reinstatement of the 2018 circular.

Students intensified their protests across the country since July 4 as the Appellate Division did not stay the HC verdict following a government petition.

Amid the situation, the government and two DU students moved two petitions before the Appellate Division seeking stay on the HC verdict.

Following their petitions, the Appellate Division on July 10 directed the authorities concerned to maintain the status quo regarding the subject matter of the case till filing of civil petitions for leave to appeal.

"The impugned judgement of the High Court shall remain inoperative till that period," the Appellate Division said in the full text of its order.

the independence, impartiality, transparency, thoroughness, and effectiveness of the commission.

They demanded that the terms of reference of the commission be made public.

They said they are further concerned that there is no information on what, if any, effective steps are being taken to ensure public participation in the commission's process or safety and security of the victims and witnesses.

They also expressed concern about the transparency of the investigation, saying that there being no information on whether the hearings of the commission will be public, or open to the media or whether or how it will engage with the public.

They also demanded the immediate restoration of internet services across the country, as it is critical for informing and engaging the public in the investigation process.

The signatories include Shahdeen Malik, ZI Khan Panna, Sara Hossain, Fawzia Karim Firoze, Aneek R Huq, Jyotirmoy Barua, Rashna Imam, Manzur Al Matin, Snehadri Chakraborty, Nahid Mahtab, Md Anamul Haq Chowdhury, Qazi Zahed Iqbal, Shakir Khondokar, Anam Hossain, and Rezaur Rahman Lenin.

Meanwhile, Human Rights Forum Bangladesh yesterday demanded that the government ensure fundamental rights of every citizen of the country, especially the right to live, freedom of expression, and freedom of rally.

It also demanded that the judiciary committee formed to investigate the deaths during the protest publish its report and make the investigation process participatory and independent, says a press release.

Terming the quota protest a political conspiracy, the ruling party is trying to corner its opponent while the major opposition party is trying to take political advantage of the demonstration by extending support.

As a result, the nonpolitical movement led to extreme violence, which is the indication of political bankruptcy of both parties. The rights body also thinks that the parties are responsible for violating human rights through violence.

The body demanded compensation for the families of the deceased and wounded and bringing persons responsible to book.

N Korea launching more trash balloons

Says Seoul military

AFP, Seoul

North Korea is launching more balloons believed to be carrying trash towards the South, Seoul's military said Thursday, in the latest round of a tit-for-tat balloon war between the two Koreas.

Seoul's Joint Chiefs of Staff said the North was "launching (suspected) trash balloons aimed at the South once again", adding they were currently floating across the border.

"Citizens are advised to be cautious of falling debris. If you find any fallen balloons do not touch them and report them to the nearest military unit or police station," it added.

Seoul city authorities issued an alert to residents Thursday, saying "a suspected balloon from North Korea is confirmed to have entered the airspace of Northern Gyeonggi province. Citizens should be cautious of outside activities." This is the eighth round of trash-carrying balloons launched by Pyongyang since late May.

The nuclear-armed North has already sent more than a thousand of the balloons south, calling it retaliation for ones carrying anti-regime propaganda floated northwards by activists south of the border.

Internet blackout wallops life and living

MAHMUDUL HASAN

A countrywide internet blackout dealt a massive blow to the lives of the Bangladeshis, upending their digital lifestyle and leaving businesses staring at huge financial losses.

The complete non-availability of the internet has left people without social media, internet-based voice and video calls, online transactions and many more essential services for three days.

Mobile financial services (MFSs), which have become the lifeblood for crores of people, have come to a halt, leaving many with no money in hand.

Export and import activities at sea and land ports are also paused as the entire process depends on the internet.

This scenario delivered the wrong message to the world, portraying Bangladesh as an unreliable business partner.

The digital commerce sector is facing losses of $5 million every day, said Fahim Ahmed, CEO of ride-hailing company Pathao.

From logistical support to money collection, everything is being affected due to the absence of internet, he said.

Russell T Ahmed, president of the Bangladesh Association of Software and Information Services, said: "Many of my association members called and cried as they fear this prolonged internet outage may destroy their businesses in the blink of an eye."

As the internet was suspended without prior notice, IT firms and freelancers could not notify clients about the outage, which may also lead to a downgrade of Bangladesh's rating in the global IT services industry, he added.

He urged the government to restore internet services at least for the export-oriented IT businesses and other firms.

Md Arafat, a resident of Dhaka, said he tried multiple times yesterday to top-up his phone through MFS accounts, but failed. Local flexiload shops offered no solution.

This scenario delivered the wrong message to the world, portraying Bangladesh as an unreliable business partner

Officials of telecom operators said they are losing around Tk 35 crore to Tk 40 crore in revenue each day.

The internet blackout started in Bangladesh on July 16, when the telecom regulator ordered operators to shut down 4G internet services in over 50 university areas amid quota reform protests.

The next day, the government, utilising its own technology, shut down mobile internet to help law enforcers tackle the existing situation, said Zunaid Ahmed Palak, the state minister for ICT.

On July 18, a fire broke out in the building of the Department of Disaster Management in the capital's Mohakhali area, damaging the internet transmission lines of some data centres hosted in adjacent buildings.

The same day, at around 8pm, officials of the Internet Service Providers Association of Bangladesh (ISPAB) said the fire may eat away 30-40 percent of bandwidth supply, leaving some users disconnected and many with slow internet.

But at around 9pm, users across Bangladesh faced a complete broadband blackout, leaving them totally disconnected from the outside world.

The government had ordered international terrestrial cable and international internet gateway companies to stop supplying bandwidth to the internet service providers, said multiple industry players seeking anonymity.

However, the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission (BTRC) said miscreants had set ablaze a data centre in Mohakhali, which had led to the internet disruption.

Yesterday, the BTRC and the ISPAB said they needed more time to repair the damaged data centre and transmission lines.

Standing in stark contrast to the usual bustle, an eerie calm prevails at Naya Paltan, with the silence broken only by the passing of the occasional rickshaws during a nationwide curfew imposed by the government. The photo was taken around 11:00am yesterday.

Fresh blow to fragile economy

AHSAN HABIB

The countrywide shutdown and subsequent violence centring the quota reform movement crippled business and economic activities for the last three days, dealing a further blow to an economy that is already ailing due to high inflation, falling exports and depleting forex reserves.

Fearing further violence and arson, factories, including those in the biggest export-earning sector of garments, remained shut.

Additionally, passenger and freight vehicles stayed away from plying roads and highways, disrupting the transport of exportable goods and imported items to and from the ports.

At the same time, a countrywide internet blackout affected the assessment of imported and exported goods by the customs, causing indefinite delays in clearance.

The ongoing internet blackout also forced the closure of digital commerce activities for a second consecutive day.

Markets in Dhaka and Chattogram, the two biggest economic hubs of the country, shuttered their stores fearing attacks, with only small neighbourhood shops offering essentials to the few who ventured out.

Over the past few days, several public and private assets were also vandalised and set on fire, which will contribute to losses.

Importantly, such a situation will also impact the image of the country. So, export orders and investment may take a hit.

"On the one hand, this has direct ramifications for export earnings. On the other, the current situation tarnishes the image of our country to international customers," said Syed Tanvir, managing director of Pacific Group, one of the largest garment exporters in Bangladesh.

"Global buyers started to believe that Bangladesh had been able to come out of political volatility. This increased their confidence. Now, they feel bad."

Tanvir added that the imposition of a curfew by the government indicates that the situation is extremely volatile. "We have not seen this in almost two decades."

He added that export shipments would be delayed because of problems in transport, which may have a ripple effect.

As such, he called for a quick resolution to the stalemate.

Kamran T Rahman, president of the Metropolitan Chamber of Commerce and Industry (MCCI), said the situation could have been resolved much earlier.

It is so sad that so many students have been killed, he said.

"Trade and businesses will be impacted. Already, the price level has climbed," he said, adding that investment would be affected too.

To reduce economic losses, a fast solution is necessary. The course of the economy depends largely on a proper resolution to the existing impasse, he added.

To reduce economic losses, a fast solution is necessary. The course of the economy depends largely on a proper resolution to the existing impasse, said Kamran T Rahman, president of MCCI

Prof Selim Raihan, executive director at the South Asian Network on Economic Modeling (Sanem), said the economy is bleeding.

The political situation will lead to further deterioration of the economy, he added.

The government should have resolved the demands of the students through a dialogue. "This kind of situation could have been avoided in view of the current economic challenges.

"Any disruption to the economic activities is very costly," he added.

The extent of destruction witnessed in the country has raised the alarm for the economy. This type of situation will create uncertainty and it is not good for the economy, Raihan said.

"The supply chain has been disrupted. Activities in the export-oriented sector are almost suspended. Internet-based business activities are down. This will have a major negative impact on the economy."

Faruque Hassan, managing director of Giant Group and a former BGMEA president, said indirect losses would be more costly than direct losses, especially in terms of losing work orders.

A top official of a leading listed drug company, said the pharmaceutical sector usually remains out of the purview of any restrictions. But that is not the case this time around.

"This time, the government did not announce that the curfew would not be applicable for the pharmaceutical sector. So, we had to keep our plants closed."

Due to problems in transporting medicine, many pharmacies remained closed. As a result, drug sales may halve, he added.

Garment sector's losses piling up as factories remain shut

REFAYET ULLAH MIRDHA

Garment factories kept production suspended yesterday and decided to keep the units closed today as well considering the safety of the workers and the factories amid ongoing countrywide violence and curfew imposed by the government.

For now, the leaders of Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA) and Bangladesh Knitwear Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BKMEA) decided to keep the factories shut until today.

The boards of directors of the two associations will sit again today to decide whether the factory shutdown will be extended or not, BGMEA President SM Mannan Kochi and BKMEA Executive President Mohammad Hatem told The Daily Star over phone.

The suspension of the internet is also hampering the garment sector as factories cannot send inspection reports to international retailers and brands online, which is a must every day to keep the buyers updated, said Faruque Hassan, managing director of Giant Group, a garment exporter.

In the last two days, many goods-laden trucks failed to reach Chattogram port from the factories, but factory owners could not convey that to the buyers as there was no internet, he added.

"If the curfew continues, it will be difficult to keep the factories open," BKMEA's Hatem said.

He said the BKMEA member factories were shut yesterday after the association announced the factory closure a day earlier.

But a few factories at Konabari and Gazipur opened yesterday as factory owners and workers did not know about the imposition of the curfew, the BGMEA chief said.

Garment is the main export earner of the country, contributing over 84 percent to national exports a year.

The sector is losing over $500 million every day due to the closure of factories, industry insiders said.

The indirect losses are greater than direct losses in the case of factory closures, said Faruque Hassan, also a former BGMEA president.

"If a factory is closed, buyers either cancel the work orders or seek discounts or air shipment. They may also shift work orders to other countries due to delays in production."

Ports, transport at a standstill

JAGARAN CHAKMA, DWAIPAYAN BARUA and MOHAMMAD SUMAN

Export and import activities suffered severe disruptions for the third day yesterday amid transport problems because of violence centring the quota reform movement and internet shutdown by the government.

The deadlock affected industrial production and shipment of exportable goods from the ports, especially Chattogram port, which handles roughly 90 percent of Bangladesh's international trade.

Truck and lorry drivers are reluctant to ply their vehicles, for which deliveries of the construction sector's raw materials could not be taken from the port, creating a backlog in production and delivery of the final products.

"Production is being severely hampered as workers, technicians and engineers cannot come to work for the curfew," said Tapan Sengupta, deputy managing director of BSRM.

No raw materials could be received from the port as logistics service providers do not want to risk their vehicles being vandalised, he said.

"We could not even reach products to dealers and clients over the past week," he added.

Almost all steel mills have suspended production, said Jahangir Alam, president of Bangladesh Steel Manufacturers Association.

The mills are unable to receive raw materials from the port and are having to pay storage rent daily, he said. Similarly, no revenue has been earned over the past week but bank loan interest will still have to be paid, he added.

The sufferings of industries such as steel and cement will affect development activities, including the real estate sector, he said.

According to Alam, the effect will be apparent after a couple of months when the rise in production costs will be passed onto consumers.

If production of steel and cement is hampered, its effect directly falls on the construction sector, particularly housing, as these are the major raw materials, said FR Khan, managing director of bti, a leading developer.

MIRPUR-10, KAZIPARA METRO STATIONS

Mindless destruction leaves them in ruins

At least a year needed to fix them, say officials; metro service suspended indefinitely

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

From vending machines to ticket counters, from offices to police control rooms, from computers to television screens and close circuit cameras -- everything inside the Mirpur-10 metro station was smashed to bits.

On Friday evening, miscreants carried out mindless destruction inside the Mirpur-10 and Kazipara stations amid the ongoing unrest.

The scale of destruction was such that it would take at least a year to repair and replace the equipment and structures, authorities said.

The extent of destruction has also put a question mark on the resumption of metro service.

The metro rail authority suspended its operation for indefinite period from yesterday, amid the ongoing unrest. Before the suspension, more than 3 lakh people used the metro services every day.

"There is nothing left... They damaged and looted everything needed for the operations...," said MAN Siddique, managing director of Dhaka Mass Transit Company Ltd, while visiting the Mirpur-10 station yesterday afternoon, along with other DMTCL officials.

While they were visiting the Mirpur-10 station, miscreants attacked the Kazipara station once again, another official said.

Asked when services at the stations can be resumed, MAN Siddique couldn't provide any timeframe.

"The people with technical knowledge, who visited the station [Mirpur-10] with me, said it would take at least a year to make the two stations operational," he said.

Asked whether the destruction will affect the resumption of overall metro rail operations, he said, "It's not possible to comment on the matter now. We will check all the aspects once the situation returns to normal."

Another official, who visited the Mirpur-10 station, said miscreants broke down the (north-west end) entrance gate.

Editors' Council urges govt

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Editors' Council has demanded that the authorities concerned immediately resume the internet service across the country.

In a statement, the council's President Mahfuz Anam and its General Secretary Dewan Hanif Mahmud said the internet service has been suspended across the country since Thursday night, due to which quick exchange of news and scrutiny of information are being hampered.

The council thinks the suspension of internet service in such a manner creates apprehension of information blackout, which can lead to the spread of rumors, and false and baseless information.

SC hears today pleas against HC verdict that reinstated quota

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

All eyes are on the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court that is set today to hear two leave to appeal petitions that challenged the High Court judgment of reinstating quotas in government jobs.

> The government and two Dhaka University students filed the petitions with the SC on July 16 and 18 seeking the scrapping of the HC verdict.

The full bench of the Appellate Division, led by Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan, will sit after 10:00am for hearing the petitions as the curfew will be in force till that time, Attorney General AM Amin Uddin told The Daily Star yesterday.

Usually, the Appellate Division sits at 9:00am on every working day.

The government and two Dhaka University students filed the petitions with the SC on July 16 and 18 seeking the scrapping of the HC verdict.

In the petitions, they said it is a policy decision of the government whether to

DMCH morgue never been thicker with grief

SHAHEEN MOLLAH, DIPAN NANDY and MD ABBAS

The air at Dhaka Medical College Hospital morgue was never this thick with grief before yesterday.

Kamrul Islam could not look more shattered -- his younger son Nayeem Hawlader had just died from bullet wounds. Next to him was one Suraiya Akhter, who was weeping inconsolably over the death of her father from bullet wounds too.

Near them were distraught friends and relatives of Tahir Zaman Priyo, who arrived at the morgue of Dhaka Medical College Hospital on hearing news of his death.

When the correspondents visited the DMCH morgue at 4:30pm, the place was overcrowded with shell-shocked relatives of the deceased. For the next hour, the correspondents saw at least 12 dead bodies entering the morgue.

One of the dead bodies was of Kamrul's son Nayeem, a second year HSC student of Raoshan Ara Degree College in Jatrabari. On Friday, he joined the student protests with his friends and sustained bullet wounds that took his life.

Although his father Kamrul is beside himself with grief, his elder brother Noman is proud as his brother died a hero.

"I am feeling extremely proud as my brother did not lose his life in any political party's programme. He was active in the movement going on against the discriminatory quota system -- he sacrificed his life for a just movement," Noman said.

Suraiya Akhter's father happened to be in the wrong place at the wrong time, just like Arif from Bhola's Lalmohon area.

"We live just opposite the BNP party office. When the clash took place with police and BNP men, my father went there to witness the situation. Suddenly, bullets hit my father in the back," she said.

Her father, a rickshaw puller, died on his way to hospital.

Like Suraiya's father, Arif was an innocent bystander.

Just a month ago, Arif started working at a hotel in Jatrabari, a site of fierce clashes between the police and the protesters.

"My brother was not involved in any politics or clashes. He suffered a bullet wound in his head on Friday in Kajla-Boubazar area. His body bore no other injury mark," Rashed said.

Relatives and friends of freelance photojournalist Tahir Zaman Priyo, were seen sitting in front of the morgue as autopsy was performed on his body.

Priyo was killed during a clash between police and protesters on Friday in Science Lab area while on duty.

He was hit by a bullet in the head and was pronounced dead at 10:00pm on Friday when he was brought to DMCH, according to his grandfather Shafiul Alam.

Like Priyo, Tourist Police's Assistant Sub-Inspector Muktadir was killed while on duty.

"My brother was walking towards his Banasree office from Rayerbagh house. At that time, some miscreants swooped on him, beat him up indiscriminately and smashed his face," his brother Kuddus Ali said.

Muktadir was taken to the DMCH where the doctor declared him dead.

'Stop using excessive force on protesters'

44 jurists urge govt

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Forty-four noted law practitioners, including jurists, legal researchers, and professionals, yesterday condemned the use of "excessive and disproportionate" force on students demonstrating for quota reforms.

"We demand that the excessive use of force must be stopped immediately, and justice along with adequate reparations must be provided to the victims and their grieving families," they said in a statement sent to media via text messages.

They demanded that the perpetrators of the atrocities be held accountable for their actions.

They said they are also concerned by the composition and mandate of the inquiry commission. They questioned if the standards applicable to domestic investigations under the international human rights law were being maintained, particularly regarding

BNP leader Amir Khasru arrested

Rizvi, Nazrul placed on remand

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Detective Branch of police arrested BNP standing committee member Amir Khasru Mahmud Chowdhury from his Banani residence yesterday.

Confirming the incident to The Daily Star, Shamsuddin Didar, a senior member of the BNP chairperson's press wing, said Amir was picked up from his home around 10:00pm.

Earlier in the day, a Dhaka court placed BNP standing committee member Nazrul Islam Khan and the party's Senior-Joint Secretary General Ruhul Kabir Rizvi on one-day remands each in a violence case filed with Paltan Police Station.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Md Mosharraf Hossain passed the order after they were produced before the court. Kabir Hossain Howlader, a DB inspector and the case investigating officer, sought two-day remands for each, said a court source.

DB arrested Nazrul from his Banani residence early yesterday, while police arrested Rizvi from in front of the Jatiya Press Club on Friday afternoon.

On the other hand, Nurul Haque Nur, convener of the Gono Odhikar Parishad, was allegedly picked up by law enforcers from his Uttara home early yesterday.

Speaking to journalists, Nur's wife Maria Nur, alleged that law enforcers broke the front door and entered their house.

"I looked for my husband at the DB office. But they denied arresting him. I clearly saw that those who picked up my husband were wearing Rab, DB, and police uniforms," she said, demanding to know the whereabouts of her husband and his unconditional release.

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir demanded the immediate release of the arrestees.

Khaleda's condition stable

Says her physician

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Amid widespread rumours that BNP Chairperson Khaleda Zia's health has deteriorated, her personal physician yesterday said the former prime minister's condition was stable.

"She's being treated at the Evercare Hospital at the advise of the medical board," Dr AZM Zahid Hossain said.

She gave samples for several blood tests yesterday, Shamsuddin Didar, a senior member of BNP chairperson's Press Wing, told The Daily Star last night.

On June 21, Khaleda was admitted to the coronary care unit at Evercare Hospital following breathing complications.

On June 23, a pacemaker was implanted in her chest. She was discharged from the hospital on July 2.

She was admitted to the hospital again on July 8 as her health condition deteriorated.

Israel's occupation violates int'l law

Rules UN top court; death toll in Gaza rises to 38,919

The International Court of Justice (ICJ) has said Israel's continued presence in the occupied Palestinian territories is "illegal and should come to end as rapidly as possible."

In a non-binding opinion on Friday evening, the UN top court in The Hague said Israel must pay reparations to Palestinians as they lost lands and property due to its occupation.

The lands in its ownership have been under dispute since 1967 after the six-day war when Israel almost tripled the size of the territory under its control.

Before the hearings, Israel said it did not recognise the legitimacy of the proceedings at the world court. Israeli Prime Minister Benyamin Netanyahu called the ICJ opinion a "decision of lies".

The ICJ judgement does carry a moral and political weight to have the world court determine that Israel's occupation violates international law and must end as soon as possible, reports CNN.

The Palestinian authority welcomed the ruling, and said the international communities should respect the ruling and force Israel to end the occupation.

Palestinian group Hamas called for immediate implementation of the judgement.

On the ground, Palestinians mourned relatives killed in overnight Israeli strikes in the Gaza Strip, where Israel's prime minister has vowed to intensify the pressure on

SC VERDICT ON GOVT JOBS

93pc on merit, 7pc from quota

5pc for children of living and martyred freedom fighters and Biranganas

1pc for ethnic minorities

1pc for physically challenged, third gender

The Supreme Court yesterday ordered major reforms to the quota system in jobs at government, semi-government and autonomous bodies, curtailing quotas to only seven percent from the existing 56 percent.

According to the SC order, 93 percent jobs in civil service will be merit-based.

The apex court also scrapped a High Court judgment that reinstated quotas in government jobs.

The seven-member full bench of the Appellate Division led by Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan fixed five percent quota for children of freedom fighters, martyred freedom fighters and Biranganas. One percent quota has been reserved for ethnic minorities and another one percent for persons with disability and people of third gender.

In the short verdict, the top court made no mention of the grandchildren of freedom fighters.

If qualified candidates are not available from the fixed quotas, the vacant posts will be filled from the general merit list. But despite the court order, the government may cancel, amend or reform the quota system if necessary, considering the overall situation, it said.

This has been done to "ensure the principle of equality and representation of backward section of people in the republic's jobs," the SC order said, citing articles 19, 27, 28 (4) and 29 (3) of the constitution.

DEATHS OF STUDENTS

Judicial body to unearth reasons

Hopes apex court in its observation

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Supreme Court yesterday hoped that the students would call off their demonstrations for quota reforms following its verdict in a quota-related case and return to their educational institutions.

The deaths of many people during the demonstrations were "unexpected", observed the apex court while delivering the verdict.

It said it expects the judicial probe commission, led by a High Court judge, to unearth the reasons behind the deaths of the students and the government to take necessary legal steps against those responsible as per the recommendations of the commission.

The seven-member bench, led by Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan, requested the government to ensure necessary support to the commission so that it can perform its duty.

It also asked the government to help establish a favourable environment at educational institutions immediately.

According to the verdict, 93 percent government jobs would be based on merit while the remaining seven percent recruitments would be on quotas.

The court said the 2018 government circular cancelling quotas in government jobs was reinstated when the Supreme Court issued a status quo on the High Court's verdict on July 10.

Earlier, the High Court had declared the circular illegal.

"But our students could not properly realise the actual meaning of our order, resulting in different unwanted incidents and many deaths, which is in no way desirable," it said.

The chief justice said they have asked the protesters to place their points before the court through their lawyers but they did not. However, two students, on the behalf of general students, appeared before the court seeking the scrapping of the HC verdict, he said.

The court asked the students to return to their educational institutions immediately and get ready to take on the great responsibility of the state in future.

It asked the chiefs of all universities, colleges, schools, and madrasas to immediately take necessary measures so that students can return to their institutions.

At least 7 killed, on 2nd day of curfew

Six others injured in previous days' clashes die in hospitals

STAR REPORT

So far, 140 people died in the ongoing violence

At least seven people were killed and dozens wounded in the capital and two other districts in sporadic clashes between law enforcers and agitators on the second day of nationwide curfew yesterday.

Meanwhile, six more people, who were injured in earlier clashes, died yesterday, police and hospital authorities said.

Most of the victims were hit by bullets.

On Saturday night, the government extended the nationwide curfew till further notice to tackle the ongoing violence centring the quota protest.

The curfew was declared and army personnel were deployed on Friday to assist the civil administration in ensuring national security and protecting lives and public properties.

For the second day, members of the armed forces were seen patrolling different points in Dhaka and other districts yesterday.

Of the seven killed, five were brought to Dhaka Medical College Hospital from Sign Board, Chittagong Road and Dhania areas of the city, said Inspector Bachchu Mia, in-charge of DMCH police outpost.

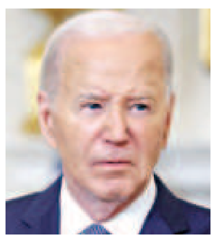
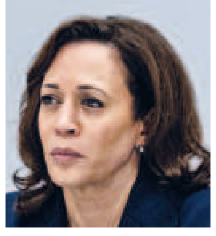
Biden quits race amid criticism

Endorses Kamala Harris to replace him

AGENCIES





US President Joe Biden has withdrawn from the presidential race amid growing calls by his Democratic peers, reports BBC.

He said he would speak to the nation later this week in detail about his decision. He has backed his running mate Kamala Harris, the vice president, to replace him.

Biden faced growing calls to quit the race after a devastating debate earlier this month where he struggled to find words to reply to Republican candidate Donald Trump.

Though he tried to remain defiant, in recent days, a growing number of heavyweight Democrats, including former House of Representatives Speaker Nancy Pelosi and Representative Adam Schiff, joined the call.

According to a White House source, Pelosi reportedly told Biden he cannot win the Nov 5 election.

Schiff said in a statement on Wednesday that he has "serious concerns" about whether Biden can defeat Trump, the first Democrat to come out after the Saturday assassination attempt against the former president.

In a post on X, formerly known as Twitter, Biden said, "My fellow Democrats, I have decided not to accept the nomination and to focus all my energies on my duties as president for the remainder of my term. My very first decision as the party nominee in 2020 was to pick Kamala Harris as my vice president... Today I want to offer my full support and endorsement for Kamala to be the nominee of our party this year. Democrats - it's time to come together and beat Trump. Let's do this."

In another statement issued by Biden, he said, "It has been the greatest honour of my life to serve as your president. And while it has been my intention to seek reelection, I believe it is in the best interests of my party and the country for me to stand down and to focus solely on fulfilling my duties as president for the remainder of my term.

The verdict comes amid violent unrest centring quota reform movement.

More than 140 people, including seven yesterday, have been killed and several thousand injured since Tuesday as law enforcers joined in by ruling Awami League men clashed with protesters in Dhaka and elsewhere. The sheer scale of the violence prompted the government to impose curfew and deploy armed forces across the country.

After 2007, when emergency was declared, this is the first time that the government deployed members of armed forces in aid to civil administration, except during elections.

"We firmly believe that the students will withdraw the quota movement after the verdict and order," said Justice Obaidul Hassan in the observation.

The court asked the students to return to their institutions immediately. It also asked the government to ensure a congenial atmosphere at educational institutions across the country.

'CIRCULAR TOMORROW'

Law Minister Anisul Huq said they will implement the judgment, and a circular in this regard is expected by tomorrow.

At present, there are 20 grades in government job, and the quota system was applicable to 13th-20th grade following a 2018 government circular, which abolished the quota system in 9th-13th grade (Class-I and Class-II) government jobs.

Contacted, Anisul Huq said yesterday's SC order will be applicable to 9th-20th grades. "There is no quota system in 1st- 8th grades of government job. So the quota in 1st-8th grades was not considerable here [in the verdict]."

But Public Administration Minister Farhad Hossain said they will analyse different angles of the court order.

"My initial understanding of the short verdict is that a new quota system will be applicable to all grades. But we will analyse different aspects and issue a clear circular by Tuesday," he told The Daily Star yesterday.

An organiser of the student movement said they consider the verdict a positive move, but they will not make any comment until the government issues a circular clearing everything up.

Another organiser in a text message to media outlets said the SC verdict was unclear and "left enough room for confusion among the public."

QUOTA PROTEST TIMELINE

In October 2018, the government through a hastily issued circular cancelled the quota system in jobs of 9th to 13th grades amid a quota reform movement at different universities.

The students never wanted its abolition, they demanded that it be revised down.

At the time, there was a 30 percent quota for freedom fighters' children and grandchildren, 10 percent for districts, 10 percent for women, five percent for ethnic minorities and one percent for physically challenged people.

The government decision to abolish the quota system was challenged in the High Court by seven children of freedom fighters. In response, the HC on June 5 declared the government circular illegal, essentially reinstating the 56 percent quota.

The HC verdict triggered a student protest on public university campuses in Dhaka and subsequently in other districts.

Students from private universities, colleges and in some cases from schools joined the movement across the country.

Protests intensified after the Supreme Court on July 4 declined to issue a stay on the HC verdict, triggering a massive one-point movement for quota reform.

After three days of nationwide movement, the SC gave a status quo on the HC verdict and set August 7 for hearing. The decision did little to pacify the protesters.

The movement turned violent after Chhatra League men attacked the agitating students on Dhaka University and some other universities on July 15.

The attack came hours after Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader said BCL "would give a fitting reply to those student leaders of the quota movement who labelled themselves as Razakars and were arrogant."

Violence escalated further on the following days after the killing of several students during their clashes with law enforcers and pro-government activists, who were seen attacking the students with iron pipes, rods, sticks and hockey sticks in Dhaka and elsewhere. Some of them also opened fire on the protesters in and outside the capital.

In the wake of the situation, the government requested the top court to hold an early hearing as death toll continued to rise.

THE VERDICT

Yesterday, the court sat around 10:20am amid heightened security in and outside the SC premises, with army, Rab and police personnel taking position at key points.

After dealing with two other cases, the bench started hearing the much-talked-about case with several senior lawyers seeking to place arguments on behalf of the students.

The court allocated five minutes for each after Attorney General AM Amin Uddin started his arguments seeking to scrap the HC verdict.

Then nine SC lawyers placed their arguments.

The court also heard the arguments from the counsels of the original writ petitioners as well as the two students of Dhaka University who challenged the HC verdict.

The arguments took place for around two and a half hours, and the bench took a 40-minute break before delivering the judgment at a jam-packed courtroom around 1:30pm.

The court disposed of the two leave-to-appeal petitions, saying the June 5 HC is scrapped.

The bench said although setting quota is a "policy matter of the state", they, considering the overall situation, were applying article 104 of the constitution for "complete justice."

Article 104 allows the Appellate Division to issue such directions, orders, decrees or writs for doing compete justice in any cause or matter pending before it.

The court also directed the government to issue a circular in this regard immediately.

Other six judges of the bench are Justice M Enayetur Rahim, Justice Md Ashfaqul Islam, Justice Md Abu Zafor Siddique, Justice Jahangir Hossain Selim, Justice Md Shahinur Islam and Justice Kashefa Hussain.

THE ARGUMENTS

Attorney General AM Amin Uddin and Supreme Court Bar Association (SCBA) Secretary Shah Monjurul Hoque placed arguments for the government and the two Dhaka University students who filed the leave-to-appeal petitions challenging the HC judgement.

Senior Advocate Md Munsurul Hoque Chowdhury argued for the writ petitioners who challenged the legality of the 2018 government circular.

Besides, senior lawyers Tanya Amir, Ahsanul Karim, Sara Hossain, ZI Khan Panna and Tanjib-Ul-Alam placed statements on behalf of the protesting students.

The court also heard former attorney general AF Hassan Ariff, SCBA President AM Mahbub Uddin Khokon, former SCBA President Zainul Abedin and lawyer Md Eunus Ali Akond.

The attorney general appealed for scrapping of the HC verdict.

He said the HC verdict was self-contradictory as it upheld the reservation of 30 percent quota for freedom fighters' children and at the same time said the judgement will not prevent the government from changing, reducing or increasing the quota.

It is a policy matter of the government whether to keep quota. Therefore, the HC cannot interfere in policy matters, he said.

The constitution does not permit the HC to order the government.

Advocate Shah Monjurul Hoque said the HC verdict did not discuss why it interfered in the government's policy matter, and is hence liable to be scrapped.

The HC judgement is wrong as it termed freedom fighters as "a backward section of citizens" though there is no definition of the term, he said.

Tanya Amir said freedom fighters and their children and grandchildren are not backward citizens.

Rather, they are the most respected and dignified citizens of the country, she said, adding that the writ petition, on which the HC delivered the verdict, is not maintainable.

Sara Hossain said the quota system should be reformed to eliminate discriminations.

Lawyers AF Hassan Ariff, Zainul Abedin, Mahbubub Uddin Khokon, Ahsanul Karim Tanjib-Ul-Alam, ZI Khan Panna placed their arguments in favour of scrapping the HC judgement.

Advocate Munsrul Hoque Chowdhury opposed the leave-to-appeal petitions, saying that freedom fighters and their children suffered a lot for 21 years since August 15, 1975.

There was no illegality in the HC verdict in treating them as a backward section of citizens, he said.

Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan told him that the constitution does not define "backward section" of citizens.

Mahbub Uddin Khokon said so many lives could have been saved had the government moved the leave-to-appeal petition before.

The chief justice asked him not to place any political arguments before the court.

and order will be normal within a day or two. He urged people to have patience till then.

The minister alleged that BNP-Jamaat carried out vandalism across the country to capture power taking advantage of the quota reform demonstrations by students.

He claimed that students accepted the decision of the Supreme Court that fixed 93 percent recruitment based on merit.

Judicial body to unearth reasons, take legal steps

The court urged parents to tell their children to return to their institutions and focus on studies.

It said the students are the future of the country and that they would one day take on responsibility of the judiciary, the executive, and the legislative.

"They have to uphold the spirit of the Liberation War and the independence in their thoughts and minds; and only then the country will not deviate from its goal. Our motherland, established by the father of the nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, will survive," the court said.

"The martyrs and the freedom fighters are the brightest sons of the soil. We achieved the red-green flag thanks to their sacrifice. The nation will not accept anything disrespectful towards them. Everybody should be careful so that no one fails to pay the due respect to the sacrifice of the valiant freedom fighters," it said.

Picked up early Saturday, Nahid returns battered

He was being treated at a city hospital with severe pain and deep bruises on his left thigh and shoulder.

A student of Dhaka University's sociology department, Nahid said when he gained consciousness around dawn yesterday, he found himself dumped under a bridge in Purbachal.

"I learned where I was after looking at a signboard. After walking along the road for some time, I found a CNG and went home."

Around 12:00pm, he went to the hospital.

"On Friday night, I couldn't return home as the curfew was imposed. I was staying at a friend's house. Around 3:00am, I came to know that police are looking for me. When they came, they told me I need to go with them and then detained me."

There were around four vehicles and at least 25 plainclothes people there, he said, adding, "They blindfolded me with three or four layers of cloth."

He was then handcuffed and after around a 40-minutes-long journey, he was taken into the room and tortured.

About the other protest organisers, Nahid said the coordinators were having trouble communicating due to the internet shutdown. "Many were traceless or went to safe place or were picked up. That's why we aren't being able to reach a common decision.

"I communicated with them [the three protest organisers who met three ministers] till around 10:00pm [on Friday]. However, since then I haven't been able to contact them."

He said he later came to know that different sets of demands were issued.

"I think to avoid the situation, they gave varying statements or took their own different steps. But those do not represent the entire anti-discriminations movement panel."

About the three coordinators meeting the ministers and their demands, Nahid said, "My opinion was that we shouldn't go for any dialogue and the situation was not favourable for it. If the government takes steps to ensure our safety, then we'll decide.

"I believe they met the cabinet members in the face of pressure or to avoid any untoward situation. They said they only placed their demands but didn't have any discussion. They said the media misquoted them."

He said he will make further comments on the movement after sitting with the other coordinators and protesters.

"If the campuses are declared open; law enforcers are removed from the campuses and our safety is ensured, only then we'll make the final statement regarding our movement."

Regarding the Appellate Division's verdict yesterday, he said the SC "only gave a recommendation".

"But it's up to the government to decide whether the quota [percentages] will be increased or decreased. Until the government issues a circular or policy in this regard, it's not finalised ... We'll make a comment regarding it once the government decision is given.

"We saw bloodshed, were harassed, many were killed, thousands of students and police personnel were injured ... So much damage was done during this movement ... These need to be addressed."

Nahid further said, "We demand justice for the victims of the killings and demand legal action against and the expulsion of the Chhatra League men. These would be among our demands."

His father Badrul Islam said after they came to know his son was picked up by the plainclothes persons, he went to the office of the Detective Branch of police but they did not give him any information.

"They only kept our phone numbers, saying they would let us know once they find out about Nahid's whereabouts. Then we went to Khilgaon Police Station to file a GD, but they did not take take it into cognizance."

Meanwhile, Faruk Hossain, deputy commissioner (media) of Dhaka Metropolitan Police, said, "We have no information about this [Nahid being picked up]."

The Daily Star contacted Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan for his comments of the allegations of torture made by Nahid but he cut the line as soon as he heard the question.

QUOTA VERDICT

'It's a victory for govt, not students'

Says GM Quader

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Opposition Leader and Jatiyo Party Chairman GM Quader yesterday said the Supreme Court verdict regarding the quota system in government jobs reflects the government's wish, not the students'.

In an instant reaction, the JP chief said, "The government has won in the Supreme Court verdict as it has fulfilled its demand.

"On the other hand, demand of the students who have been waging movement against all kinds of discrimination in the government jobs, has not been fulfilled," GM Quader told The Daily Star over the phone.

'Step down and give people relief'

Fakhrul urges govt

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday urged the government to step down to give people relief from the current violent situation.

Speaking at a press conference at the BNP chairperson's Gulshan office, he also urged the government to stop its "evil" efforts to put the blame onto BNP and the opposition parties for the violence by using the media.

Fakhrul also said media outlets are running "made up" statements of some arrested leaders of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement.

A relatively calm Dhaka

People throng shops to restock essentials, pay power, gas bills on second day of curfew

MD SHAHNAWAZ KHAN CHANDAN

After days of endless violence, parts of Dhaka were relatively calm yesterday, the second day of the ongoing curfew.

Many ventured out of their homes to buy groceries, essentials and restock supplies.

Although the curfew was lifted for two hours, from 3:00pm to 5:00pm, people started coming out early in the morning to finish incomplete business or run errands.

Most of them thronged kitchen markets, grocery stores, or utility offices.

People had to wait in long queues to compete purchases at grocery stores and markets.

A grocery customer, Rubaya Islam, said, "The price of each product was higher than the previous day... Consumers are still willing to pay the extra buck. However, due to dwindling supply, there is no guarantee that the product would be available when a customer reaches the end of the queue. I feel like I am living in a city under siege."

The shopkeepers, however, blamed supply shortage for the price hike.

Md Anwar Hossain, a grocery store owner at Mohammadpur Town Hall market, said, "We could not replenish our stock in the last six days. Many of my fellow shop owners could not even open their shops as their supplies have run out."

"Whenever we open our shop, hundreds of customers come to us and buy whatever they can at whatever the price we ask for. There is no time for bargaining. My stock will also run out in the next two days, if new supplies do not arrive by this time," he added.

Due to the internet shutdown, prepaid consumers who usually recharge their power and gas meter cards either via MFS, such as bKash or Nagad, or recharge vendors, had to wait in long queues instead for several hours at gas and power offices.

This was the scenario in front of DPDC and Titas Gas offices.

Shahriar Khan, a resident of Gopibagh area, said, "My prepaid electricity and prepaid gas will run out of balance soon. If I don't pay the bills today, there will be no electricity and gas in my house tomorrow. As there is no internet connection, I could not pay via apps."

Veggie prices skyrocket amid curfew

Green chilli now as high as Tk 800 per kg

SHAHEEN MOLLAH

Prices of vegetables including potatoes, onions, and green chillies have increased significantly in Dhaka markets due to a supply shortage amid the countrywide curfew.

Price of green chillies increased to Tk 600 per kg yesterday from Tk 300 per kilogram on Friday .

Onion was sold for Tk 120 per kg yesterday compared to Tk 110 .

As usual, the customers are feeling the pinch.

In Nakhal Para Kitchen market, Tuhin Shubhra, a private service holder, asked a trader how much 250gm of green chillies cost.

After doing some calculation, the trader replied, "It's Tk 150."

" I couldn't believe what I was hearing," said Tuhin. Then he bought 100gm of green chillies for Tk 60.

Nilotpaul Datta, bought eight pieces of green chillies from Hatirpool Kitchen market for Tk 20.

He also bought 250gm of tomatoes for Tk 70 from the same place.

Some traders were charging more than Tk 600 for a kg of green chilli in some markets.

"I was in utter disbelief when the traders said the cost of one kg green chilli is Tk 800. Then, I bought 250gm of green chillies for Tk 200," said Wasim Hasan, who shopped at Shukrabad kitchen market.

Supply of most vegetable items declined by two to three times in the past two nights, said Saifur Rahman Chowdhury Sujan, general secretary of Karwan Bazar Arot Malik Byabshayi Samity.

However, carrying food items does not violate curfew rules.

Still, some truckers were demanding double the normal fare to transport vegetables, claimed Saifur.

In a normal night at Karwan Bazar, unloading of vegetables from trucks coming from various parts of the country start at 10:00pm and continue till 2:00am.

Wholesale selling of vegetables start at the same time and continue till dawn.

CANCELLATION OF FLIGHTS

Saudi-bound migrants in a bind

RASHIDUL HASAN

Uncertainty looms over the fate of hundreds of Saudi-bound Bangladeshi migrant workers as Saudia airlines cancelled multiple flights following the countrywide internet shutdown since Thursday night.

Saudia, national flag carrier of KSA, cancelled around 10 flights since early Friday.

Amid the situation, the stranded migrants are uncertain regarding them being able to go back to their workplace, as many of their visas are set to expire within two-three days.

"I was supposed to fly for Saudi at 3:00am on Saturday. But after arriving at the airport, the Saudia authorities informed us that the flight has been cancelled," Abdullah Al Mamun who came back to the country on a three-month leave, told The Daily Star.

"My visa will expire within three days. I will lose my job if I cannot return on time," Mamun from Cumilla added.

After failing to return to the KSA, an anxious Mamun and hundreds of other migrants yesterday thronged the head office of Saudia at the capital's Sonargaon intersection.

They conveyed their anxiety and grievances to Saudia officials, as many were afraid they wouldn't be able to return to KSA before their visa expires.

Rajib Ahmed of Keraniganj said, "I came to Bangladesh on a six-month leave. My flight was on early Saturday, but when I arrived at the airport, I came to know the flight was cancelled due to the internet outage."

The officials of Saudia noted down our names, flight dates, and dates of visa expiry, said Rajib, who has been working in Saudi Arabia for seven years.

Rajib said his visa will be expired after seven days.

A Saudia official, wishing anonymity, said they are arranging a special flight for those whose visa will be expired within one or two days.

"We have noted down the names and other necessary information of the passengers and will try to arrange flights accordingly so that nobody is affected," he also said.

Saudia officials hoped that the internet situation will become normal soon and they will be able to start flight operations normally.

Like Saudia, passengers of some other foreign carriers have also been facing problems due to flights being cancelled or delayed due to the blackout.

Several hundred incoming and outgoing passengers at the Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport in Dhaka faced severe troubles in this connection.

Many of the passengers got stranded at the airport or had to stay outside the airport, as the international flights were either delayed or cancelled due to technical glitch related to global Microsoft flight data and lack of passengers amid road blocks by the demonstrators in Dhaka and elsewhere in the country over the last three days.

Sources at the HSIA said 16 international flights were either delayed or cancelled in the 72 hours until 6:00pm yesterday.

Apologise for all deaths

33 eminent citizens ask govt

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government must apologise unconditionally to citizens for all the deaths of protesters since July 16, said 33 eminent citizens in a statement yesterday.

They added that law enforcers must engage cautiously and non-violently with students and all citizens.

The statement reads that Bangladesh has become a "death valley" since July 16, when miscreants launched vicious attacks to suppress the quota reform protests in Dhaka University. When students and citizens from all walks of life took to the streets protesting that vicious attack, Abu Sayed, a student in Rangpur, was shot in the chest and murdered in cold blood, it added.

Afterwards, many people like Sayed have been killed by the police, BGB, APBN or by the criminals unleased by the ruling party, as per the statement.

The statement also said, "The helicopters are throwing sound grenades and tear shells from above, which have also injured many people. The ruling party thugs are even creating obstacles for wounded people to get treatment."

Law enforcers must engage cautiously and non-violently with students and all citizens.

Such an inhuman and catastrophic situation is unprecedented in Bangladesh, it added.

The signatories include Shahidul Alam, renowned photographer and founder of Drik, Professor Salimullah Khan, Professor Tanzim Uddin Khan, Barrister Rashna Imam and retired Justice Abdul Matin.

'Why did they target his eyes?'

Asks mother of Imran who suffered pellet injuries during clash; DMCH, Ophthalmology Institute filled with patients with similar eye wounds

AHMED DEEPTO

Eighteen-year old Md Imran joined the quota reform protest in Uttara on Thursday when police fired shotgun pellets, teargas shells and sound grenades to disperse protesters.

Several pellets pierced through different parts of his body, including his eyes and head.

Now, he is fighting for his life at Dhaka Medical College and Hospital, as his mother keeps weeping beside him.

Even after surgery, he has lost vision in one of his eyes, while doctors are waiting for him to get stable before surgically removing the pellets stuck inside his head.

"My only son is barely alive. I have watched as he lost vision in one of his eyes. The condition of his other eye is not good either. Meanwhile, there are pellets still stuck in his head," said his mother Parvin Begum.

"Why did they shoot my boy? Why did they target his head and eyes? What was his fault? Was participating in a just movement his fault?" Parvin said, with a mixture of rage, despair and disbelief in her voice.

"Even if he recovers, he won't see with an eye again. His life will never be the same," she said.

Imran is not alone.

DMCH sources said at least 118 persons have received treatment with eye injuries, mostly from pellet wounds, in the last four days since the violence escalated.

At least 67 such patients are still undergoing treatment at DMCH's Ophthalmology Department.

Two doctors of the department said over 50 persons have either lost their vision in both eyes or one.

A similar situation persists in National Institute of Ophthalmology and Hospital.

Till yesterday, the institute had conducted surgeries on at least 227 patients who came to the facility with eye injuries, mostly sustained from shotgun pellets.

Golam Mostafa, director of the facility, said most of the injured might lose vision completely.

Day Labourer Mujibur Rahman, 35, suffered pellet injuries to his left eye during a clash between law enforcers and protesters in Bangshal on Friday. He is now receiving treatment at DMCH.

RECENT DEATHS

Probe body holds first meeting

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Justice Khandaker Diliruzzaman, chief of the judicial probe commission investigating the deaths and violence during the recent quota protests, yesterday held a meeting with Cabinet Secretary Mahbub Hossain.

The meeting was held at the Supreme Court conference room at 4:00pm to devise the work plan for the inquiry, said Md Shafiqul Islam, public relations officer of the SC.

On July 18, the government formed the one-member inquiry commission.

PRISON BREAK

Tk 50,000 announced for info on looted arms

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narsingdi

A Tk 50,000 bounty has been announced for anyone who will be able to provide information on the arms and ammunition looted from Narsingdi District Jail.

Narsingdi SP Mostafizur Rahman made the announcement yesterday.

On Friday, some 826 convicts fled from the district jail when the prison came under an attack, while 85 rifles, 7,000 bullets, and 19 shotguns were looted, among other stuff.

'CUSTODIAL TORTURE' IN CTG

Bruised, student shares ordeal

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

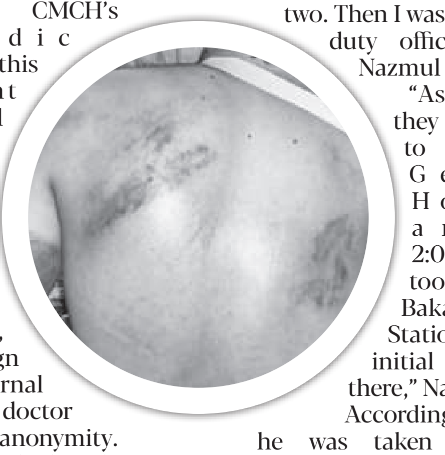
Family members of quota reform protester Nazmul Hosen, a student of Chattogram Govt City College, couldn't trace him for a day after police detained him on Thursday.

They only learned about his whereabouts after a nurse of a local hospital informed them that Nazmul was taking treatment there.

Nazmul is now admitted to Chattogram Medical College Hospital with bruises all over his body after allegedly being tortured in police custody.

Visiting CMCH's orthopedic department, this correspondent saw Nazmul in pain with injuries to his back, hand, thighs and knees.

"Blood is coming out of his rectum, which is a sign of severe internal bleeding," said a doctor there requesting anonymity.



Nazmul alleged that he was tortured twice -- first at Shah Amanat Bridge police box and then at Kotwali Police Station.

Nazmul claimed that police tortured him to make him confess about his involvement with Shibir, a pro-Jamaat student group. They increased the torture when he refused to comply with their order.

On the hospital bed, Nazmul said, "Police detained me from the petrol pump after a clash. They shoved me to the ground and started kicking me. At one stage, as I told them that I am a student, some senior officers intervened and told their subordinates to stop the beating."

"Still, some police men took me inside a police box and used sticks to beat me. They wanted me confess that I was a Shibir activist," Nazmul continued.

Nazmul said, at one stage of the torture, he lost consciousness. "I discovered myself at Kotwali Police Station when I regained my senses," he added.

But his ordeal didn't stop there.

"Two policemen again tortured me [at Kotwali Police Station]. I was screaming and crying in pain. After some time, others [police men] intervened and refrained the two. Then I was taken to the duty officer's room," Nazmul added.

"As I fell sick, they took me to Anderkillah General Hospital around 2:00pm. They took me to Bakalia Police Station after initial treatment there," Nazmul said.

According to Nazmul, he was taken to CMCH around 10:30pm as his condition deteriorated.

Nazmul's brother Nazrul Islam said he first came to know about Nazmul's whereabouts on July 19 when a nurse of the Anderkillah hospital called him.

"Before that, we couldn't trace Nazmul. I called him on Thursday and asked him to come to my residence amid the ongoing unrest," he added.

Kotwali Police Station's OC Obadul denied the allegation of torture. He said Nazmul sustained injuries during clash.

Bakalia Police Station OC Aftab Hossain echoed the same.

INTERNET SHUTDOWN

Small entrepreneurs in big trouble

NILIMA JAHAN

The nationwide shutdown of internet services has had far reaching impacts, affecting a variety of groups.

Take the example of Israt Jahan Banani, a homemade dry food and pickle seller from Dohar, who owns the Facebook page "Fusion Food".

Her business has already been closed for four days. According to Banani, if this continues for a few more days, then she will likely incur a loss of Tk 60,000.

"Besides, I had a stock of halwa worth Tk 17,000, which has now gone rotten," she shared.

Such is the case for many women entrepreneurs operating small businesses through Facebook and other apps. For many of them, this is the sole source of income in their households and is currently closed due to the internet outage.

Noorjahan Kabir, owner of Pure Promise by Noor, an organic oil shop based on Facebook, said she usually purchases her stock on credit from suppliers and pays them after selling the products.

"Over the last seven days, delivery agents were not being able to deliver my products due to the protest. I don't know how I will manage... My supplier is also demanding their dues, but my hands are totally empty. Besides, I was also supposed to get payment from a delivery company I work with. However, they failed to pay me as internet banking is not working," Noorjahan Kabir said.

Mirpur resident Moriom Sultana Chadni, owner of Chadni's Cake and Fastfood Shop, said she runs the page alongside her husband, which is the sole source of their household income.

"We could not deliver the orders we received and prepared, while the ingredients also got rotten in the past four days," Moriom Sultana told this correspondent yesterday.

Uttara resident Asma Akter Kanta, owner of Dhobol on Facebook, said, "This shutdown means I will incur a loss. Meanwhile, I have to pay my 10 female staffers, who are solely dependent on my business."

Nasima Akter Nisha, general secretary of E-CAB, said these Facebook based small entrepreneurs live on their daily sales.

"I have talked to many of them in the past few days and I am very sad hearing their current situations. If everything is not fixed soon, they will face difficulties," she told The Daily Star.

"We urge the government to give a speedy solution to this ongoing crisis," she added.

"The government is making evil efforts to shift its fault onto others. Stop all these foul plays and create a proper academic atmosphere immediately by accepting the just demands of students," he said.

The BNP leader also called upon the country's people to support the justified movement of the students.

"Had the government resolved this problem through the court at the beginning, so many innocent students wouldn't have been killed and the bloodletting situation wouldn't have been created," he said regarding the apex court verdict on quota system.

He also said Awami League General Secretary Obaidur Quader urged the ruling party activists to resist the student movement and the prime minister made derogatory comments against the students, contributing to creating the dreadful situation all across the country.

The BNP leader also said the government has stopped communication with the entire world by shutting down the internet.

This situation has led to a colossal loss for the country's economy, said Fakhrul.

He also urged all to support the students' just movement.

"Defying the curfew, I had to search for DPDC and gas offices for more than two hours and now I'm waiting to pay the bills. I was afraid of being fined or arrested... but I had no other alternatives," he added.

Like the previous day, many could not recharge their phones as well.

On the second day, military men, mounted on trucks and armoured personnel carriers (APCs), were patrolling Dhaka roads. They also stood guard in front of important government buildings.

They frequently stopped pedestrians and vehicles to question them regarding movement during curfew.

In front of Bijay Sarani, police and army stopped several vehicles and motorcycles and asked them to return home.

A police officer on duty, said, "Many people don't know about what they can do and what they cannot do during a curfew. So, when we stop them, we brief them about it and warn them of the consequences."

Veggie prices

Meanwhile, at Ibrahimpur kitchen market, trader Harun Mia said green chillies were sold at Tk 600 per kg yesterday instead of Tk 300 per kg two days ago.

Meanwhile, prices of several other vegetables including brinjal and bitter gourd increased by Tk 20 to Tk 50 per kg at some of the retail kitchen markets since the curfew was imposed.

A retail vegetable trader at Ibrahimpur also cited transportation crisis as a reason behind price hike.

Even when a rickshaw-van driver agrees to carry goods, they are charging double the usual fare, he alleged.

met in the verdict," he said, adding, "Seeds of discrimination are still there. The verdict does not reflect the movement to eradicate discrimination."

The government's political stance was to keep freedom fighters quota, so it was a victory for the government, not students.

GM Quader said he will come up with formal reaction after going through the copy of the full verdict.

The Supreme Court yesterday ordered a major reformation in the quota system in the jobs of government, semi-government and autonomous organisations, curtailing quotas to seven percent from the 56 percent.

The apex court, which scrapped a High Court judgement that reinstated quotas in government jobs, said 93 percent of the jobs are to be given based on merit.

It also fixed five percent quota for the children of freedom fighters, martyred freedom fighters, and Biranganas, one percent for ethnic minorities and one percent for physically challenged and third-gender candidates in the services.

Cultural personalities discuss Supreme Court verdict

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT DESK

Much to the triumph of quota-reform activists, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday overturned the High Court verdict that reinstated the quota system in government jobs. As many had lost their lives in violent clashes that upended the entire nation, cultural personalities welcomed the verdict that looks to re-establish peace across the country. The Daily Star reached out to some of the seniormost cultural figures in Bangladesh yesterday.

Sohel Rana

This is a historic verdict, and a huge triumph for the students. I feel like this is a big win for them, as they have gotten what they had wanted since the beginning of this movement. I did think that they would keep the freedom fighter quota at 10 percent, but 5 percent is not entirely illogical. I also welcome the fact that they did not keep quota for women, since I feel that women today are no less than men in talent and capability. I hope that the government also pays attention to their 8-point demand, as I wholeheartedly support the petition to compensate the victims' families and provide a government job to at least one in their immediate family. For now, I urge the students to go back to class.

Ramendu Majumdar

I am happy with this verdict – I believe that now, talent will take centre-stage at determining who gets more opportunities. I feel like at this point, the students should postpone their movement, and discuss their further concerns with the government bilaterally. I am very disturbed by how many lives were lost due to these violent clashes, who will take the blame for this? I urge the government to investigate the matter and sentence those responsible. Although I support this verdict, I do feel like omitting the quota for women is a misstep.

Nasir Uddin Yousuff

I accept this verdict wholeheartedly, as it means that all the lives lost due to these violent clashes are not for nothing. However, I am very disappointed that the quota for women was omitted. Those who chanted slogans on the roads yesterday (July 21) that there is no need for female quotas, are blissfully unaware of the scenario in rural areas. Women need to be given an opportunity to prosper, as they have to regularly fight against sexist biases – at least 5 percent quotas should have been reserved for them.

Raisul Islam Asad

It must be noted that the children of freedom fighters were highly deprived from proper educational facilities after our liberation war. We also know that after the assassination of Bangabandhu till '96, a certain group tried to erase the actual history of our liberation war, so children of freedom fighters suffered a lot. This is why I believe that the heirs of freedom fighters should receive some form of quota, which the verdict did keep – so I welcome it. I do have a question – why did these students, along with their other demands, not ask for the punishment of whomever caused the destruction of national property? I must say that the ones who participated in destructive activities are enemies of the country.

Abul Hayat

Logical demands have won, and I am sure that along with me, the entire country supports this verdict. Also, freedom fighters were in no way disrespected, as they will still have 5 percent reserved for their families. I wish that the students' demands were fulfilled much earlier, we could have avoided so much unnecessary bloodshed!

At least 7 killed on 2nd day of curfew

Two deaths were reported in Narayanganj and Narshingdi, doctors said.

Of the six people who succumbed to their injuries yesterday, three died at DMCH, said Bachchu Mia.

A doctor at Savar Enam Medical College Hospital requesting anonymity said a fish trader who was wounded during a clash in Savar on Saturday died at Savar Enam Medical College Hospital.

Besides, police recovered two bodies from the National Institute of Cardiovascular Disease and sent those to Shaheed Suhrawardy Medial College morgue for autopsies, said Ahad Ali, officer-in-charge of Sher-e-Bangla Nagar Police Station.

They were injured in earlier clashes in Uttara or Gazipur and were being treated at a hospital in Uttara before being taken to NICVD, he added.

With yesterday's deaths, at least 140 lives have been lost since Tuesday, when six people were killed in violence. On Thursday, at least 29 people died in clashes between protesters and law enforcers, aided by ruling party activists. Another victim injured in Wednesday's violence also died on Thursday. On Friday, at least 66 people were killed across the country. On Saturday, at least 25 people died including four who were injured in earlier clashes.

The overall death toll and that from yesterday's violence may rise, as The Daily Star could not reach many hospitals where dozens of critically injured patients were taken for treatment. Also, many families reportedly collected the bodies of their loved-ones from the scene, and this newspaper could not contact those families. The Daily Star's count of the victims is based solely on hospital sources.

Yesterday's clashes broke out between law enforcers and protesters in Sign Board, Chittagong Road, Shanarpar and Dhania areas when members of police and Rab tried to clear the Dhaka-Chattogram highway.

Witnesses said the law enforcers fired indiscriminately at protesters.

Clashes were also reported in the Bashundhara area of the city. Witnesses said the clashes took place in phases between police and a few hundred agitators at the Bashundhara Main gate near Pragati Sarani.

The clashes ensued after agitators threw brickbats at police, who retaliated by firing shotgun pellets and teargas canisters.

Around 8:45pm, two residents of Bashundhara's Block A told this newspaper over the phone that they were hearing gunshots. Choppers were hovering overhead, they said.

Violence in Jatrabari

Around 10:00pm, agitators in Jatrabari area, which has seen daily protests since the violence erupted on Wednesday, blocked the Dhaka-Chattogram Highway and took positions in the neighbouring areas.

As law enforcers moved to remove the road blocks in Rayerbag, Sign Board, Chittagong Road, Shanarpar and Dhania areas, the agitators pelted brick chips at the law enforcers prompting them to fire numerous tear gas shells and bullets, witnesses said.

The clash continued till the evening. Around 5:00pm members of the joint forces managed to remove the roadblocks and open the highway.

DMCH duty doctors confirmed that five bodies were brought to DMCH from the areas.

More than 70 injured people, many of them in critical condition, from those areas were also admitted to DMCH yesterday. Most of them had bullet injuries, they added.

A large number of police were guarding different parts of the Dhaka-Chattogram Highway till filing of this report.

Of the five victims who were brought to DMCH, three were shot at Signboard area, said Bachchu Mia quoting family members.

He said Imran, 16, a tailoring shop worker, was shot around 2:00pm. Ashraf Hossain Akash, 18, footpath vendor, and Rakib, 18, a garments worker, were shot around the same time.

The other two victims -- Md Amin, 16, a factory worker, and Md Jashim, 45 -- were shot at Boalbari intersection in the evening, he added.

Meanwhile, three people -- Mohammad Zahid, 32, from Uttara, Toufique Ul Islam, 35, from Badda and Mohammad Shohagh, 25, from Gopibagh Railgate area -- died at DMCH yesterday.

The inspector said Zahid and Shohagh were injured by bullet on June 20. Toufique, a water pump technician, was shot on June 19.

In Mirpur, a group of agitators vandalised four vehicles of Dhaka Mass Transit Company Limited at Mirpur-10 around 3:30pm. Around 15 people attacked the vehicles when the officials were inspecting the damages of Metro rail station at Mirpur 10.

Besides, at least two people were killed and 22 were injured yesterday in clashes between agitators and law enforcers in Narayanganj and Narsingdi.

In Narayanganj, a bullet-hit youth, who couldn't be identified, was brought dead at Narayanganj 300-Bed Hospital yesterday morning, said Dr Abul Basar, superintendent of the hospital.

He said 11 bullet-hit people were admitted to the hospital since morning.

Besides, seven bullet-hit people, including a 16-year-old, were admitted to a private hospital in the district's Signboard area yesterday. The teen was in a critical condition, said a hospital source requesting anonymity.

Sporadic, day-long clashes were also reported form Jhalkuri to Signboard intersection areas and from Signboard to Kanchapur.

In Narsingdi, an unidentified man, aged around 18, was brought dead to Narsingdi Sadar Hospital in the afternoon, said Mahmudul Kabir Bashar, residential medical officer of the hospital.

"The man might have been hit by rubber bullets," he added.

Around 2:00pm, law enforcers clashed with a group of miscreants who tried to vandalise a local union parishad building at Meherpara area of Sadar upazila, said police.

Mizanur Rahman, director of Narsingdi 100-bed Hospital, said, "Four bullet-hit people came for treatment at our hospital around 3:30pm."

Meanwhile, a fish trader, who suffered bullet injury on Saturday evening in Savar, died at Enam Medical College Hospital.

The deceased is Nobi Noor, 45, a resident of Bonpukur area in Savar.

Meanwhile, law enforcers yesterday foiled repeated attempts by agitators to block the Dhaka-Aricha Highway at several points between Radio Colony and Genda area.

Shutdown

considering the present situation. Criminals are taking advantage in many ways, he told reporters. The press briefing was aired by Channel 24.

"We will announce our next programme after observing these 48 hours and during this time, we will sort out the confusion regarding the eight and nine-point demands," he said.

"We have suspended our compete shutdown programme and we want the government to also withdraw the curfew," Sarjis told The Daily Star, quoting from a statement given to reporters at the hospital.

Earlier, Hasnat Abdullah, one of the three coordinators who placed an eight-point demand late Friday night following a meeting with three ministers, told The Daily Star, "We are viewing the verdict positively. But our demand was for a logical reform to the quota system in every grade of government jobs."

Nahid was not among the three who met the ministers and placed the eight demands.

Meanwhile, Numan Ahmed Chowdhury, assistant coordinator of the protests, told The Daily Star that they are still pressing on with their nine-point demand.

He said they have watched the announcement made on TV but they believe the three are being influenced by the government. Nahid had been picked up and some other protest organisers are missing, he said.

Numan said an attempt is being made to foil the movement by having the statement issued under duress.

The Daily Star failed to contact other coordinators of the protest but earlier in the day 59 coordinators and assistant coordinators issued a press release sticking to their "complete shutdown" programme and their nine-point demand.

Abdul Kader, a coordinator of the demonstrations who placed the nine-point demand on Friday night, said the Supreme Court judgement was unclear and "left room for confusion".

The press release was sent via text messages from Kader's phone number.

The Daily Star spoke to two coordinators Umama Fatima, Nazmul Hasan, and assistant coordinator Abdullah Salehin Ayon. They said they endorse the text.

The press release said, "There is no specific solution [in the verdict] ... There is a scope for the government to increase the quota percentage at will in future."

The coordinators demanded a special session of the Jatiya Sangsad within a week for enacting a law in this regard.

With such a "vague verdict", the government cannot avoid the responsibility for killing students and people, read the press release.

In the release, Kader, a student of social welfare at Dhaka University, called for a nationwide gayebana namaz-e-janaza after Johr prayers today.

He said the internet service across the country has been suspended for the last two days to suppress the demonstrations and to cover up the real situation.

The nine-point demand includes an apology from Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina over the deaths of students; resignation of Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan and Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader from the cabinet and AL; and termination of the deputy inspectors general of police, the police commissioner and superintendents of police of the areas where students were killed.

UN human rights chief, EU, UK voice concern

the High Commissioner for Human Rights.

The government should take necessary measures to ensure the protection and safety of the students participating in peaceful protests, and to guarantee the right to freedom of assembly and expression without fear of attacks against their lives and physical integrity or other forms of repression.

Bangladesh's political leaders must work with the country's young population to find solutions to the ongoing challenges and focus on the country's growth and development, Turk said.

"Dialogue is the best and only way forward."

The internet shutdown is also of concern as it disproportionately restricts the right to freedom of expression, including freedom to seek, receive and impart information -- particularly in the midst of a crisis.

"We urge the authorities to restore internet access without further delay," Turk added.

Also on the same day, the EU issued a statement on the ongoing violence in Bangladesh.

"The EU is deeply concerned by the violence and tragic loss of life that has occurred in the context of the protests in Bangladesh. It is vital that further violence is averted and that a peaceful resolution to the situation is found as swiftly as possible, underpinned by the rule of law and democratic freedoms," the statement said.

Catherine West, the British parliamentary under-secretary of state at the Foreign, Commonwealth and Development Office, also gave out a statement.

"The UK government is deeply concerned by the violence following protests in Bangladesh. The UK supports fundamental freedoms and respect for human rights, including the right to protest and peaceful assembly. We urge all sides to end the violence and find a peaceful way forward," the statement read.

The ongoing violence was also addressed at weekly briefing of India's Ministry of External Affairs on Friday.

"As you are aware, there are ongoing protests in Bangladesh. We see this as an internal matter of the country," said MEA spokesman Randhir Jaiswal.

India's External Affairs Minister S Jaishankar himself is following the matter closely in the context of safety of the Indians, he said.

"We are aware of the measures taken by the local authorities in view of the protests. Our High Commission remains in touch with local authorities for the safety of our nationals."

Total Indian nationals in Bangladesh are estimated to be around 15,000, which includes around 8,500 students, Jaiswal added.

The following day, US Congresswoman Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez on her official X page posted on the issue, sharing the link of a Reuters post on the issue.

"Dozens of protestors have been killed by Bangladeshi authorities in recent days. My constituents cannot reach their loved ones due to a government implemented communications blackout. I call for an end to the blackout and de-escalation of violence against protestors," she posted.

Ocasio-Cortez is a member of the US House of Representatives representing a district in Queens, New York City, home to a sizeable Bangladeshi diaspora.

On July 20, British member of parliament Rupa Huq also posted on her official X page.

"Incredibly disturbing... students in Bangladesh demonstrating against corruption: Thirteen killed in protests over job quotas," she posted with a Reuters link titled 'Bangladesh quota protesters call for nationwide shutdown amid clashes'.

The next day, Huq's fellow MP Rushanara Ali also posted.

"The Bangladesh government has imposed a curfew across the country and there has been widespread violence resulting in deaths. The Foreign, Commonwealth and Development Office now advises against all but essential travel to the whole of Bangladesh at this time," she posted on her official X page.

She said in the post that she is in contact with the FCDO and keeping abreast of developments in the country.

The UK supports fundamental freedoms and respect for human rights, including the right to protest and peaceful assembly, Ali said

"Like many of my constituents, I have family and friends in Bangladesh, and I am very concerned about the situation there," she said.

Normalcy to return in a short time

heads of international aid agencies, including US Ambassador Peter Haas, Chinese Ambassador Yao Wen, Indian High Commissioner Pranay Verma, Canadian High Commissioner Lilly Nichols, and acting Australian high commissioner Nardia Simpson, were present.

The foreign ministry also screened a documentary on the violence and the destruction of public properties. Over 100 people were killed, and hundreds of others injured in the violence.

On Friday night, the government declared curfew and deployed army personnel across the country in aid to the civil administration to maintain law and order.

Yesterday, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court annulled the judgement of the High Court and set 93 percent recruitment in public service on merit and 5 percent quota for children of freedom fighters, martyred freedom fighters, and Biranghans, 1 percent quota each for ethnic minorities, and physically challenged and third gender.

At the briefing, some diplomats condemned the violence and expressed concern over the blackout of internet, said a diplomatic source.

On Saturday, Australian Foreign Minister Penny Wong expressed deep concern over the escalating civil unrest and violence in Bangladesh.

"We call on all parties to cease violence and resolve differences peacefully. Australia supports universal human rights, including the right to freedom of assembly and peaceful protest," she said in X.

In a statement, Catherine West, parliamentary under secretary of the state at the Foreign, Commonwealth & Development Office, said the UK government is deeply concerned by the violence following the protests in Bangladesh.

"The UK supports fundamental freedoms and respect for human rights, including the right to protest and peaceful assembly. We urge all sides to end the violence and find a peaceful way forward," she said in a statement yesterday.

Other countries, including the US, UK, and Canada, also issued statements.

Hasan said the government made it clear from the outset of the protest that its own position on the reform was mostly aligned with that of the demonstrators and assured them of due actions once the Supreme Court delivered judgement on the matter.

The government made room for peaceful assembly and protests, but the anti-liberation, anti-state elements and religious extremists, including BNP-Jamaat-Shibir clique, took advantage of the situation by infiltrating the protest and turning it extremely violent and destructive, he said.

Unfortunately, nothing proved enough to stop the spread of violence as the BNP-Jamaat took over the protest from the innocent students and resorted to their old tactics of killing, arson, and vandalism, he added.

Hundreds of law enforcement agency members were injured, and some died from their indiscriminate attacks during clashes. Even journalists were not spared, he added.

The pattern of the destructions indicates that the criminals systematically targeted some important public infrastructure, Hasan said.

"The government hopes that the judgement of the Appellate Division will end the quota-related dispute," he said.

He said mindful of the host country's obligations under the Vienna Convention, the government is committed to ensuring safety and security of the diplomatic and consular premises and persons.

The foreign ministry yesterday arranged the issuance of curfew passes to the mission officials.

Users suffer amid internet outage

Like him, many consumers braved the scorching heat to recharge their prepaid cards yesterday.

A shopkeeper told Safina Hoque of Lalmatia that he could not recharge her prepaid card. Her home had been without power since yesterday morning.

Desperate, Safina went to DPDC's Lalmatia office.

"I stood in line but later learned that the DPDC won't recharge my card, but will only extend the existing negative balance of my meter to Tk 1,000," she said around noon.

She said the extension of her negative balance would last her only days.

Meanwhile, people have been running out of credit on their gas meters as well.

Anik Hasan of Nakhalpara told The Daily Star that their gas meter went out of credit on Saturday morning.

"We used our neighbour's kitchen for cooking on Saturday. That night, we just had flattened rice. The next day, we got food from a restaurant."

"We can't go on like this."

Visiting the Titas Gas office at Karwan Bazar in the capital, this newspaper found the office padlocked. The people who were arriving for a top-up, were soon returning disappointed.

Al Amin, public relations officer at Titas, said the prepaid meters have facilities to provide emergency balance which should be enough for a small family to cook 10 to 15 days.

"For now, there is no other way to top-up prepaid gas meters. We're trying to find an alternative," he said.

The company also asked its users to call 16496 if they face any difficulties in getting the emergency balance.

The ordeal was same for consumers using prepaid gas and electricity meters in different parts of the country, including Chattogram and Cumilla.

"My home went dark on Saturday evening," said 45-year-old Kohinoor Begum at Bangladesh Power Development Board's (PDB's) Khulshi office in Chattogram yesterday.

She managed to top-up her card after waiting there for four hours.

Around 8.5 lakh PDB users in Chattogram use prepaid meters.

The chief engineer of PDB in the port city, Humayun Kabir Mazumder, said they were trying to mitigate the sufferings by increasing manpower.

In Cumilla, people were seen rushing to nearby PDB offices in different parts of the city.

There are around 50,000 subscribers who use prepaid meters there.

State minister for Power, Energy and Mineral Resources Nasrul Hamid yesterday visited different electricity suppliers' offices in the capital.

"It is disheartening that the distributors have no other option now other than people coming to the offices for recharging prepaid meters. They have limited machines to provide the emergency support," he said while briefing reporters.

Israel strikes Gaza

Detailing the first strikes claimed by Israel in Yemen, Gallant warned of further operations if the Houthis "dare to attack us" after a rebel drone strike killed one in Tel Aviv on Friday.

In Hodeida, three people were killed and 87 wounded, health officials said in a statement carried by Houthi media.

The trio of militant groups has vowed to keep up attacks on Israel until a truce ends the violence in Gaza, which lies in ruins, with most residents forced to flee their homes.

According to the Gaza health ministry, more than 38,983 Palestinians have been killed in the Israeli military offensive in Gaza since October 7. The toll incudes 64 deaths in 24 hours.

The offensive has also unleashed hunger and health crises in Gaza, with Israel and the United Nations trading blame for vital aid supplies failing to reach those in need.

After the detection of poliovirus in Gaza sewage, the World Health Organization (WHO) said there were "monumental" constraints to mounting a timely response.

WHO spokesman Christian Lindmeier said Friday the agency believes many more diseases are "spreading out of control" inside Gaza.

The Israeli prime minister is due to address US lawmakers Wednesday in Washington, where he will be under pressure to reach a ceasefire with Hamas.

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken said Friday a truce was within reach. "I believe we're... driving toward the goal line in getting an agreement that would produce a ceasefire, get the hostages home, and put us on a better track to trying to build lasting peace and stability," he said.

internet services in the country as soon as possible.

However, the state minister did not mention exactly when the services would resume.

The country has been under complete internet blackout since Thursday after sources said the transfer of bandwidth was suspended to internet service providers (ISPs) and carriers were ordered to shut down mobile data service.

Referring to the attacks on communication infrastructures, industry insiders, wishing anonymity, said this could disrupt at best 30 percent of the connections and that most of the internet connections could be restored immediately if the government gave the greenlight.

They added that the government had ordered international terrestrial cable and international internet gateway companies to stop supplying bandwidth to the ISPs and local carriers to shut down mobile data service.

UK CITIZENS ADVISED TO EXCERSISE CAUTION

UK Foreign, Development and Commonwealth Office (FCDO) has advised British citizens residing in Bangladesh to refrain from travelling unless absolutely necessary, citing the recent incidents of violence across the country.

Referring to the ongoing nationwide curfew, it also urged UK citizens to take shelter in a safe place and follow the advise of local authorities.

The FCDO statement mentioned that communications have been severely disrupted across Bangladesh due to the complete internet blackout.

Railway services in the country have also been suspended until further notice, it added.

Foreign students returning home

Following the recent incidents of violence, at least 978 Indian students studying in Bangladesh have returned to their country, according to a statement by the Indian Ministry of External Affairs issued on Saturday.

Indian High Commission in Dhaka and other assistant high commissions in Chattogram, Rajshahi, Sylhet, and Khulna are in regular contact with more than 4,000 students who are still in Bangladesh and are providing them with necessary assistance.

They are assisting other Indian nationals to return home as well.

"We have also helped students from Nepal and Bhutan to cross into India on request," it said.

ARRESTEES DEMANDED

A Dhaka court yesterday placed BNP leaders Amir Khashru Mahmud, Sultan Salahuddin Tuku, Abdus Salam, Kazi Sayedul Alam Babul, supporter Mahamudus Salehin and Jamaat Secretary General Mia Golam Parower on five-day remand in a case filed over vandalising a BTV building in the capital and setting it on fire, reports our court correspondent.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Mohammad Sheikh Sadi also placed BNP leaders Nipun Roy and Aminul Haq on three-day remand in the same case. Police had sought 10-day remand for each of the accused.

The same court placed former Ducsu VP Nurul Haq Nur on five-day remand in another case filed with Banani Police Station over setting fire to Setu Bhaban in capital's Banani.

Transport operators sitting idle, counting losses

JAGARAN CHAKMA

The violence centring the quota reform protests and associated curfew are preventing trucks and covered vans from plying the roads and highways, leading to losses for their operators alongside businesses dependent on them.

"We have been totally shut for the last three days," lamented Moqbul Ahmed, president of the Bangladesh Covered Van, Truck Panya Paribahan Mailk Samity, an association of transporters.

Ahmed said they mainly transport exports and imports to and from the Chattogram port, which handles around 90 percent of the country's trade.

Given the present situation, garment factory owners are reluctant to dispatch exports fearing attacks on the roads, he said.

At the same time, goods are not being loaded from the Chattogram port due to an internet blackout since July 18, which has impacted the assessment and clearance of imported goods, he said.

There are around 15.5 lakh trucks and covered vans registered with Bangladesh Road Transport Authority. Of them, around 3.5 lakh ply the roads and highways on any given day.

The Dhaka-Chattogram highway alone sees roughly 2,000 covered vans daily, Ahmed estimated.

However, he was hopeful that they would be able to operate normally after the curfew was lifted.

Khandker Anayet Ullah, secretary general of Bangladesh Road Transport Owner's Association, said owners do not want to risk damage to their vehicles despite incurring huge losses.

As the vehicles have been lying idle for the last couple of days, overall losses of the truckers would amount to at least Tk 175 crore per day if Tk 5,000 is considered as the minimum loss, according to Anayet.

Some vehicles, transporting perishables such as fresh vegetables and fruits, are plying the roads but operators are demanding higher fares as risk premium, he said.

"The fare to transport vegetables has increased by around Tk 10,000 per truck due to the threat of attacks," said Saifur Rahman Chowdhury Sujan, general secretary of Karwan Bazar Wholesale Owner Association.

He informed that it costs around Tk 15,000 to Tk 16,000 to rent a truck to carry vegetables in a normal situation. But it has shot up to Tk 26,000 to Tk 27,000 per truck amid the ongoing curfew and violence.

In the case of mangoes, the fare has gone up to Tk 32,000 per truck from Tk 22,000, fruit and vegetable traders said.

Anayet added that the price of transport services tends to increase when the situation is risky and sometimes trucks are always needed to transport essential goods.

However, RN Paul, managing director of Pran-RFL Group, said big companies were largely unaffected by the price hike.

"As we can meet 80 percent of our needs through our own transport, our costs have not increased. Logistics suppliers meet the remaining 20 percent but corporate clients, who have long-term contracts, are not being charged higher fares," he said.

Flatbed trucks used for carrying containers remain parked along the road in Chowchala area in Chattogram city yesterday. For a fourth day straight, the delivery of imports from the country's premier port remained suspended due to violence centring the quota reform movement, a nationwide curfew and the internet blackout. The photo was taken around 11:00am.

Business takes a hit from acute port congestion

DWIPAYAN BARUA and MOHAMMAD SUMAN

Operational activities at the Chattogram port moved at a snail's pace on the fourth day of an unprecedented disruption due to the government's imposition of a curfew and countrywide violence over the quota reform movement, hitting business and economy hard.

Import and export activities as well as cargo and container delivery were also seriously disrupted at the country's largest seaport due to a nationwide internet blackout since July 18.

As deliveries from the port dropped to rock bottom, an acute container congestion was created, hampering handling operations inside port yards.

A total of 7,367 TEUs (twenty-foot equivalent units) of import containers were unloaded from ships at the port over the past two days till Sunday morning. However, only 926 TEUs could be transferred outside.

Even then, berth operators said that most of the transferred containers were in fact transported to private inland container depots (ICDs).

Deliveries to consignees were nominal, with the port authority confirming that not a single import container could be delivered to consignees in the last 24 hours till 8:00am yesterday.

As a result, port yards were choked with 40,898 TEUs containers as of 8:00am yesterday, exceeding 76 percent of the total capacity of 53,518T EUs, according to data from the traffic department of the Chittagong Port Authority (CPA).

Nazmul Haque, executive director of Saif Powertec, which operates two terminals of the port, said the scarcity of space at the port yards had severely hindered operations.

"About 40 percent of the space needs to be free to ensure smooth operations. The internet blackout has made our jobs tougher because we don't have the scope to see the yard on the monitors now. So, staff of berth operators are trying to physically detect free spaces and accommodate containers," he said.

If the situation does not improve over the next couple of days, it will be difficult to maintain operational activities, he added.

Mohammad Saidul Islam, deputy commissioner of Custom House, Chattogram added that assessment of almost all import and export consignments was halted since the internet blackout prevented them from calculating duties, collecting revenue, and logging data entries of examinations.

"We are permitting the release of some imported perishable goods, essential commodities and fuel oil upon receiving an undertaking from importers.

"Similarly, a portion of export consignments that had previously completed the assessment process are being allowed to be shipped," he added.

Port officials said four vessels were scheduled to leave the port jetties yesterday. However, as containers could not be sent to the port on time, two vessels had to extend their stay while the remaining two departed with sparse cargo on board.

Singapore-bound vessel MV Sinarsaba was supposed to receive 380 TEUs of export containers but had to extend its stay after failing to receive even a single container from ICDs.

Similarly, Colombo-bound HR Shahare was booked to ship 250 TEUs of export containers but had to extend its stay by a day as no containers reached the port till the early hours of yesterday.

Kamrul Islam Mazumder, chief operating officer of Ispahani Summit Alliance Terminal at Kattoli, said they planned to send 132 TEUs of export containers to these two vessels by Saturday night but failed to do so because of a disruption in transportation.

Likewise, KDS Logistics failed to send 90 TEUs to the ships as drivers of container-carrying vehicles were unwilling to operate, said a senior official of the ICD.

Additionally, two vessels namely Maersk Port Klang and Anderson Dragon, sailed from the port yesterday with only a fraction of the containers they were booked to carry.

Maersk Port Klang sailed with only 120 TEUs of empty containers against a booking of 1,000 TEUs of empty containers while Anderson Dragon left with 178 TEUs against a booking of 230 TEUs.

The transport of export containers from the 21 ICDs to the port also dropped significantly as very few trucks and covered vans loaded with export cargo arrived at the ICDs over the past four days, said Ruhul Amin Sikder, secretary general of Bangladesh Inland Container Depots Association.

Export activities at ICDs dropped by 80 to 85 percent due to the unavailability of export cargo from factories, he added.

Syed M Tanvir, managing director of leading denim exporter Pacific Jeans, said losses would be disastrous, adding that it may take two months to recover.

Mentioning that the country's export figure has declined in the last two years, he said such a blow to exports at the very beginning of the fiscal year would definitely have a negative impact on annual export figures.

"We hope the government can bring stability as soon as possible. If possible, normalcy should come back within tomorrow since Monday is very crucial for us as it is the first working day following the weekend in countries where our buyers are from.

"If we cannot resume production or communicate with the buyers by Monday, it will be a very wrong message to them."

Khairul Alam Suzan, vice-president of the Bangladesh Freight Forwarders Association, told The Daily Star that this crisis had damaged the country in two ways.

Firstly, it presented Bangladesh in a bad light in the global arena and secondly the economy was dealt a big blow as almost all activities have been paused due to the internet blackout.

Informal workers struggling to make ends meet

SUKANTA HALDER and MD ABU TALHA SARKER

"I can't get you to understand how I managed to pay for meals over the past four days," a dejected labourer, Muzahid Hossain, said yesterday.

His livelihood involves engaging in manual work for which he gets paid at the end of the day. So, if work is not available even for a single day, there is practically no way to make up for it when trying to make ends meet.

Talking to The Daily Star in front of Mukto Bangla Shopping Complex in Mirpur-1, he said he has been arriving there very early in the morning as usual but no one was there to hire labourers over the past four days.

His financial situation has been in dire straits as he had to borrow Tk 2,000 from a neighbour with interest just to get by.

Day labourers in Dhaka are among those who are suffering the most due to the ongoing unrest along with the curfew imposed by the government to stem the violence.

Although wage growth in Bangladesh has been slowly climbing since July 2021, it has remained below the inflation rate for the past two and a half years.

Wages of low-paid and unskilled workers grew 7.95 percent in June, which was 1.77 percentage points below the inflation rate of 9.72 percent in the same month, showed the wage index of the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS).

This trend has been continuing for the past 29 months, as per BBS data.

The annual average price spike in Bangladesh surged to its highest level in 12 years in the just concluded fiscal year despite easing in June, reflecting the persistent erosion of real income and the deterioration of the living standards of the lower-income groups.

LEFT IN THE LURCH

- Income of day labourers has fallen drastically
- Number of rickshaw passengers has come down
- Many day labourers are using their savings to make ends meet
- Many workers are borrowing money at high interest

This is forcing low-income and unskilled workers to cut consumption amid falling real incomes.

The ongoing unrest has added to their woes.

Anis Bhuiyan, a rickshaw puller residing with his four-member family in Muslim Bazar area of Mirpur, said he can usually keep Tk 800 to Tk 1,000 for himself after paying the Tk 350 daily rent to the vehicle owner.

Now he was hardly able to earn even half, reasoning that he was unable to go long distances using the main roads.

"Schools and colleges remain shut. General people don't come out except for urgent needs. As a result, rickshaw pullers like me are not getting a sufficient number of passengers, which has reduced earnings," he said.

"It is very tough for me to survive in Dhaka with a family. If the situation continues, I will be forced to leave the city," he added.

Construction worker Azizul Islam has been sitting idle for the last couple of days as the project site where he had been employed had suspended works.

"When the prices of everything are rising, sitting idle feels suffocating. I have almost used up my meagre savings," said Islam, who lives with his five-member family at Mirpur 11.

Nurul Alam, a 22-year-old man, recently joined mason Maruful Haque as an apprentice working at a site in Sangbadik Abasik Elaka in Mirpur, working round the day pulling off old plaster from bathrooms to set tiles.

"I dropped my studies and left home to make a living because of my family's financial insolvency," said Alam, who hails from Barishal sadar upazila and now lives with his maternal uncle near Kalshi Bazar in Dhaka.

"Initially I was running a battery-run rickshaw for hire but stopped doing so since last week as the number of passengers drastically decreased for all the educational institutions being shut down," he said.

"Now I am stuck in a new crisis. What is there for me to do when the country has come to a standstill? It is really tough for newcomers to survive in this condition," he said.

Meanwhile, Selim Reza, a porter working at Karwan Bazar, one of the largest kitchen markets in the capital, also saw his daily earnings fall drastically.

He usually earns Tk 800 to Tk 1,000 a day but amidst the unrest, he can manage at best Tk 200 to Tk 250. This has forced him to take a loan of Tk 10,000 from his neighbour with interest.

Let factories run, restore internet

Demand garment exporters

REFAYET ULLAH MIRDHA

Garment exporters yesterday demanded that the government keep the sector out of the purview of the ongoing curfew and fast restore internet services for the resumption of production as soon as possible.

Production and shipments are dependent on strict lead times set by international clothing retailers and brands, yet the factories have had to be kept shut for the past three days, they said.

The sector's direct losses for the production suspension during this period amount to around $48 million, according to the Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA).

The sector is facing the losses at a time when the country's exports have been falling over the last three years.

Leaders of the garment and textile sectors held a meeting at a hotel in the capital's Gulshan and afterwards placed their demands on meeting the principal secretary to the prime minister.

"If necessary, we will meet the prime minister with our demand," said SM Mannan Kochi, the BGMEA president, after the meeting on the overall situation in the sector and way forward.

Former BGMEA presidents, leaders of the Bangladesh Knitwear Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BKMEA) and Bangladesh Textile Mills Association (BTMA) were present.

BKMEA Executive President Mohammad Hatem said import and export of goods remain suspended for the internet blackout, for which communicating with international retailers and brands was proving troublesome.

This has also left the factory managements unable to send inspection and status reports to retailers and brands, he said.

Moreover, many trucks could not take goods from the factories to the Chattogram port but it is not possible to inform buyers of this development, he added.

There are bigger indirect losses for delays such as buyers either cancelling work orders or shifting those to other countries or seeking discounts or air shipments, he said.

"Factories will remain shut tomorrow (Monday)," he said.

When international retailers and brands lose confidence in a garment manufacturer, it is a major loss for the sector, said Abdullah Hil Rakib, vice-president of the BGMEA.

There are a lot of uncertainties over the production and shipment of goods because of the unrest and curfew, he said.

Correction

In a story headlined "Garment sector's losses piling up as factories remain shut" published yesterday, it was mentioned that the sector was losing over $500 million a day due to the closure of factories. However, exporters yesterday said the sector's direct losses in the last three days amounted to $48 million.

A timely verdict

Court grants 93 percent quota for talent-based recruitment

We welcome the Appellate Division's decision on Sunday to guide quota reforms by reserving 93 percent of quota for merit-based recruitment in civil service, overturning the High Court verdict on retaining the quota system as it was before the 2018 annulment. The decision from a full bench of the court, sitting under extraordinary circumstances with a nationwide curfew in place, ends weeks of speculations in this regard. It also comes against a backdrop of unprecedented violence that really needed the highest court of the country to intervene judiciously, and we congratulate it for doing just that. While the legal implications of the judgement will be discussed in depth in the coming days, we feel certain issues need to be highlighted.

Beside the 93 percent quota for general candidates, the court stipulates 5 percent for children of freedom fighters and biranganas (women tortured and raped by Pakistani army during the 1971 Liberation War), one percent for ethnic minorities, and one for persons with disabilities and those belonging to third gender. While the court's provision of quotas may be amended by the government in future, if needed, we feel the ruling should be implemented soonest. We are told that a circular based on the judgement may be published as early as Tuesday. The law minister has clarified to the press that the government will follow the directives of the court in full. Without the official circular, it will not be clear as to how the government will implement those directives.

That said, the quota reform, as things stand, is but part of the demands forwarded by the protesting students to the government recently. Those remaining issues also need to be resolved quickly. Students are right to demand answers and accountability for what happened during the last few days of their movement. And without a proper response, their confidence in the sincerity of government efforts will not be restored. In its observation, the court stressed the importance of students returning to classrooms. Now that the legal hurdle has been cleared, students too should be motivated to ensure their swift return—and the country's—to normalcy.

Finally, what happened over the last few days, with the death toll from violent clashes reaching 127 as confirmed by this paper as of Saturday, has left a deep mark in the minds of the public, not just the students. The wounds that have been afflicted would need healing and resolving, too. Once the dust is settled and quieter times return, we will need to start reflecting on those unresolved issues and grievances that found a potent expression under the shadow of the quota movement, effectively plunging the whole country into an unbelievable crisis.

Nation under curfew

Sufferings of mass people are becoming dire

As the nationwide curfew continued onto its second day, the immense socioeconomic cost it caused the ordinary citizens, businesses, and the nation in general, is deeply concerning. Some of the damage could have been mitigated had the government not shut down the nationwide internet service for such a prolonged period. Businesses, for example, could have continued their operations online and with their foreign counterparts; citizens could have availed medical services or purchased essentials online. Media outlets have not been able to publish news through their online platforms since Thursday night. And the uncertainty that comes from not receiving timely information on what's happening across the country—and from being cut off from the rest of the world—imposes its own psychological toll.

While we acknowledge the necessity of a curfew to prevent violence, the harm being done to the economy as a result cannot be emphasised enough. According to a report in this daily, consumers are suffering immensely as prices of essentials—which were already skyrocketing, with inflation hitting a record 12-year high earlier—have shot through the roof. With the transportation of perishable commodities to the capital remaining scarce, and supply chains being disrupted across the country, traders are hiking prices of nearly all goods. And yet, some consumers are still having to return home empty-handed, with markets and stores closing early having run out of supplies. The impact of all these on the poor and low-income groups will be devastating. Even before tensions escalated across the country, the ongoing economic crisis was creating scores of new poor and forcing many to cut back on their meals and nutritional intake. What will happen to them now, we simply shudder to ask.

Meanwhile, emergency services across the country, including at hospitals, have collapsed, as many services that are dependent on the internet have become non-functional, and the number of injured patients flooding in remain high.

Reportedly, at least 24 people were killed on Saturday and hundreds more were injured in clashes with security forces, whose use of excessive force we strongly condemn. For how long can such violence and curfews continue? And who will answer for the massive damage all these are doing to the nation? The government needs to be more aware of the ground realities and sufferings that the general public are having to endure, and pursue a path of de-escalation. It needs to answer for the use of excessive force against citizens by security forces, investigate all such incidents, and ensure they are not repeated. Moreover, it needs to urgently restore the internet service so that people can avail some essential services online, and look for a way to withdraw the curfew without further violence breaking out, so that some semblance of normalcy can return to the lives of ordinary people.

Did we have to pay such a heavy price for this verdict?

THE SOUND & THE FURY

Sushmita S Preetha

SUSHMITA S PREETHA

The verdict is in. The Appellate Division through its observations has recommended that quotas be restricted to seven percent: five percent for freedom fighters' descendants, one percent for ethnic minorities, and one percent for people with disabilities.

For all practical purposes, it is a win for the protesters. Or so it would have been, had the morgues not been brimming with dead bodies, hospitals inundated with those critically injured, and public establishments set on fire around the country. Everyone is anxious, afraid, angry, and agitated—a state of despair exacerbated manifold by the internet blackout imposed by the government to control the free flow of information. How many will be picked up, how many tortured, how many killed, how many maimed for life before all this is over?

Each new day has brought with it ever-more shocking revelations of the cruelty of state apparatuses. The events of Tuesday (when BCL cadres viciously attacked protesters) and Wednesday (when law enforcement agencies stormed the public universities to drive off students from the campuses) already seem like distant memories. And talk as we must about the brutality in the days since, it's worth revisiting why law enforcers would have the right or the audacity to march into campuses of autonomous institutions, firing shotguns and sound grenades aimed at students in their late teens and early 20s. What does it say about our university authorities, VCs and provosts, except what we have known all along—that they are mere puppets to the whims of the ruling party? What mockery they have all made of the sanctity of the university campus(es), whose walls are witness to some of the biggest uprisings against injustice in our history! If the students are now asking for the resignation of the VCs and provosts, it is the least they can demand for being betrayed time and time again.

What law and whose order can justify the use of lethal weapons to disperse protesters, some not even old enough to vote?

The violence unleashed on students over the past week cannot be so easily erased from public memory.
FILE PHOTO: KHALID NAZRUL

Then came Thursday, which brought with it state-sponsored violence, the scale of which none of us were prepared for, despite living through the brutal squashing of the road safety movement in 2018 and every dissenting movement since. Areas in Dhaka turned into zones of unimaginable violence, with law enforcers charging upon and firing on students armed at most with sticks and brickbats, without provocation in most cases. The clips shared by countless students on social media, followed by eye-witness reports in the media, provide chilling accounts of the atrocities conducted by the police and BGB in the name of maintaining law and order. What law and whose order can justify the use of lethal weapons to disperse protesters, some not even old enough to vote? At least 25 people were killed, 11 of them students, including a 17-year-old, and over 3,000 were injured—that we know of. Predictably, the government's heavy-handedness only served to amplify the anger of the masses, and we began to see protesters—or motivated elements infiltrating the movement—turn to increasingly destructive measures to resist.

What did the government really think—that they could shoot the young students into submission after their trusted helmet bahini had failed to get the job done? That they could dangle the carrot of dialogue and concession, all the while opening fire upon the students, including those from private universities who had taken to the streets simply to express solidarity with their public university counterparts? The movement might have started on the issue of the reform of quota system, but underneath simmered discontent accumulated over the years about the culture of repression, conduct of law enforcement and actions of the ruling party's student wing. The outpouring on the streets over the past week is the manifestation of a long and deeply felt sense of injustice that has only been fanned by virulent rhetoric and violent tactics of the powers that be. By resorting to its tried-and-tested strategy, the government once again proved that it is too arrogant to listen to citizens' legitimate and peaceful demands for policy reforms. And in the process, it has done itself the biggest disservice.

Now, the country is in the throes of chaos. From toll booths to offices of Bangladesh Road and Transport Authority (BTRA) offices, from flyovers to metro rail stations, numerous public establishments have been set ablaze or vandalised over the past few days. As per a report in this daily, miscreants wreaked havoc inside the Mirpur 10 and Kazipara metro rail stations, smashing vending machines, ticket counters, close circuit cameras and everything else on sight. We condemn such mindless destruction in no uncertain terms. And while the government can blame third party political elements all it wants now for the anarchy that we have witnessed over the past few days, it cannot evade responsibility for creating the conditions under which such chaos could breed and spread.

If it could declare redistribution of quotas on Thursday night, and the hearing of the Appellate Division could be fast-tracked to Sunday, why could it not do so the week before? Why did it insist that its hands were tied, when the court itself had clarified that should the government want, it could simply issue a new circular? Why did government high-ups vilify the protesters and resort to their age-old strategy of "othering" to justify unlawful attacks by the student wing? Why did it unleash the BCL on protesting students, and then, when the protesters fought back and drove them out of the campuses, close down all educational institutions and halls? And most infuriatingly, why did it pour fuel in the fire by shooting young students and civilians? Why did it fail so miserably at containing the situation without resorting to lethal means? Why did it serve chaos on a platter for the so-called durbrittokaris to take advantage of?

The death toll has continued to rise, with at least 66 killed on Friday alone—that we could confirm—and at least 21 on Saturday, even amid a curfew. In only four days, the death toll has crossed 127, as per data collected directly from the hospitals as of Saturday (the real count could be much higher), and includes law enforcers, journalists, pedestrians, rickshaw pullers and even children. It is truly inconceivable that so many lives have needlessly been lost, simply because the government was too obstinate to "give in" to the students' demands. And that political elements are now trying to create anarchy using the momentum of the movement will only endanger further the lives of ordinary students who are fighting for their dignity. The last thing we want is for the students to become pawns in a wider battle for power.

Even if the protests are ultimately called off, what lies ahead for those who engaged in the protests, particularly those who were in leadership positions? Nahid Islam, a key organiser of the anti-discrimination student movement, was picked up by "plainclothes persons" in the early morning yesterday, allegedly because he refused to agree with the government's proposal for a dialogue ahead of the Supreme Court's hearing. Nahid has since been found by his family and taken to the hospital to tend to injuries allegedly inflicted during the hours he was "missing." After the quota reform and road safety movements of 2018, we saw how students were tracked down, detained, arrested, surveilled upon and threatened, and their lives irrevocably altered, with the state showing no mercy for those who had dared challenge it.

The verdict may be in, but the bloodshed cannot be so easily erased from public memory. At the very least, the government should declare a general amnesty for student protesters as a gesture of goodwill. It should restore internet connection, which will bring some semblance of normalcy back to the country and help assuage people's anxieties and dispel the rumours going around.

It should restore internet connection, which will bring some semblance of normalcy back to the country and help assuage people's anxieties and dispel the rumours going around. If the government is capable of learning any lesson at all, it should be that it can no longer afford to be so arrogant, so impervious to people's simmering frustrations and so ruthless in their handling of mass movements. After all, there is nothing more dangerous than a people who have nothing left to lose.

Bring those who ordered the excessive use of force to account

Barrister Sara Hossain is a Supreme Court lawyer and the honorary executive director of Bangladesh Legal Aid and Services Trust (BLAST).

SARA HOSSAIN

The student protesters' demand for the reform of the existing quota system in government job recruitment is logical, in my opinion. Quota is a temporary special arrangement, which can be enforced in hopes of achieving equality. Our constitution says the same; the preamble mentions creating equal opportunities.

In the preamble as well as Article 8, it is stated that the goal of our state is to create a just economic and social system. In articles 28 and 29, there is a mandate for the state that allows it to take special initiatives in this regard. Article 28 (4) says that for the advancement of women, children and the backward sections of society, the state can take special initiatives. And Article 29 (3) says that for any appointments in the service of the republic or a republic office, there can be reservations for the backward sections. So there is a constitutional mandate that quotas can be created to achieve equality.

> I think quotas should be determined because we need quotas in order to ensure progress towards equality for those who are historically disadvantaged in our society. And that includes certain communities including Indigenous people, people with disabilities, etc—people who have been held back because of their cast, ethnicity or other characteristics.

What we have seen in terms of the excessive use of force against peaceful protesters is unconscionable.

Now the question is, how will the quota be used, and for whom? The quota reform seekers have raised this concern: through which process the quota system is being implemented, and whom it is serving. Are the existing quotas helping us achieve equality, as per the constitutional mandate, or are they the doing the opposite, creating a situation where some groups are getting advantages over others, further creating discrimination? This is why the protesters have labelled themselves as the Students' Movement against Discrimination.

In the verdict we received from the Appellate Division today (yesterday), the court suggested five percent quota for freedom fighters, one percent for differently abled population and the third gender, and one percent for the Indigenous people. The women's quota was not mentioned. I see today's verdict as a suggestion, because how the quotas will be determined is entirely to be decided by the executive branch, as only it has the power to do so according to the constitution. The court also observed that the government can change or reform the quota system as it deems necessary. The court also mentioned a circular to be issued in this regard.

I think quotas should be determined because we need quotas in order to ensure progress towards equality for those who are historically disadvantaged in our society. And that includes certain communities including Indigenous people, people with disabilities, etc—people who have been held back because of their cast, ethnicity or other characteristics. But the process of determining these quotas should be based on evidence. There's already a lot of decisions from our courts and from other courts in the region and indeed elsewhere, that when you make quotas, they can't create further discrimination as a result. These principles have to be borne in mind when the quotas are determined. I think it's important that all these issues should be taken into account when the government does make a decision regarding quotas, that they should be aimed at serving equality for those who are disadvantaged. And this has to be based on exercising constitutional powers and the mandate.

Secondly, about the movement by the young men and women who are students in our public and private universities for the reform of quotas, I understand it to be for ensuring equal opportunities for everyone in our society, to obtain representation in government service. They have always talked about ensuring quota reform so that the system is fair and representative, and that it doesn't unfairly advantage any particular group. They want the quotas to not be imposed in a way that the majority of the aspirants for positions in government offices are blocked out from that opportunity.

What we have seen in the past week in terms of the excessive use of force against peaceful protesters, I think that is unconscionable. We are hearing reports even today that there are firings going on. It is essential that this violence stops. It is critical that there should be proper accounting for who authorised this kind of use of force, which has been excessive and disproportionate. Almost everyone in the country has witnessed, either in person or through the media, the kind of assaults that have been carried out against the peaceful protesters. This has to be brought to account through a process that is independent, impartial, and effective. We need to see not only those who shot directly on the protesters and others, but also those who ordered the firing to be brought to account. The last two days we had a curfew, and we have been told that there is a shoot-at-sight order. What was the order in place before the curfew was imposed? Under whose authority did those shootings happen that led to more than a 100 deaths, as far as we know, or maybe more? How did this take place and how do we hold these people to account? I think this is the most urging question before us now.

An independent Bangladesh is enough for me

TAMANNA KHAN

> While I never had to use any preferential treatment as a freedom fighter's grandchild, today I feel if I had to, I would have felt ashamed to use it especially after so many deaths surrounding this issue. Like I said, my Nana's contribution to the Liberation War has given me a country to call home. A 45-year-old like me in Palestine does not have that privilege. How well I use this gift depends on my own capability. For my descendants, the last thing I want is preferential treatment for their ancestors' legacy.

I am a grandchild of a freedom fighter. My Nana did not fight the Pakistan Army in the battlefront, but as a railway official in 1971, he used train coaches to transport arms and ammunition to freedom fighters. When the Pakistani authorities learnt of his actions, Nana had to spend months as a fugitive, which took a toll on him both mentally and physically. His contribution was recognised by the Bangladesh government. He got promoted after the war, and also received a plot in Dhaka. Though he did not live long enough to build a house there and reside in it, his children, grandchildren and great grandchildren are reaping the benefits of that reward: a place to call our nanabari/dadabari. But, in my opinion, the biggest reward that my cousins and I and our children received, thanks to my Nana and thousand others like him, was Bangladesh—a independent nation, where, I believe, we enjoy much more privilege than our parents did growing up in East Pakistan.

Bangladesh was under Pakistani rule for more than two decades. I don't know how much change my parents witnessed during that time, but in my lifetime, in independent Bangladesh, two decades meant a huge transformation. I will give a tiny example. My earliest memory of travelling to our village in the Narsingdi district in the 80s was crossing a river on a ferry and parking our car at the house of a local influential politician. We had to walk the rest of way to my dadabari on an earthen road. By 2000, there was no need for a ferry to cross the river anymore, and our car could drive right up to the gate of our village home. The serene landscape of green rice fields one could see after crossing the Shitalakkhya Bridge all the way to our village also disappeared gradually, being replaced by numerous factories and mills.

VISUAL: MANAN MORSHED

In the 80s, poor young men and women from our village would come to Dhaka looking for employment opportunities often as domestic help or for other low-skilled jobs. That changed at the turn of the century, so much so that it became difficult to find even agriculture labourers in our village anymore. That happened largely because of the factories that grew on the outskirts of Dhaka.

Some may argue that the change Bangladesh experienced can also be attributed to the global advancement of technology and economy. But is it not true that, after independence, whatever we produced in this country were spent in the development of this country and not some distance land to the west? And it is us, the post-independent generations, who are the beneficiaries of that development.

At a personal level, I believe the change Bangladesh went through helped me and my cousins attain good education and subsequently get jobs, which may not pay enough to buy a goat worth Tk 15 lakh, but help us get by and put food on our plates at least three times a day. None of us hold a government job. Whether we were talented enough to even try for a government job is a different question. Most of us never actually took the BCS exams or the recruitment tests in Bangladesh Railway. I don't think getting a government job was ever our dream—not mine, at least. Growing up in the 80s and 90s, we were attracted to private jobs because the remuneration was way better than any government job. The only government job that sounded "cool" was that in foreign service and our relatives who worked in that government wing scored the highest marks in their public examinations throughout. Mind you that was a different era and only one or two persons could stand first in the public examinations among thousands of students in the entire country. So foreign service remained an unattainable dream, which was not even worth trying for.

One reason why my cousins and I were able to live a more or less privileged life in independent Bangladesh is our parents' hard work. They, too, had an advantage over others. They were educated, and were able to cultivate that privilege so they never needed to rely on any quota system to get jobs. In fact, three of my four uncles worked in the private sector, and my eldest uncle who worked in a government bank had secured the job before 1971. It can be argued that, unlike my uncles, descendants of many freedom fighters might never have had the privilege of a good education to start with. Mere recognition would not have helped improve their situation. Whatever little the state offered them to make their situation better right after liberation was much-needed. In fact, the state could have done more. The political instability the country went through in the mid-70s and 80s denied many freedom fighters and their heirs their rights to access those state benefits. But did things not change in the 90s? Were the children and grandchildren of freedom fighters not able to use the preferential system in the 90s when the Awami League was in power? That should have helped many, who were deprived before, to change their fate by securing government jobs.

The point I am trying to make is, people have had five decades in independent Bangladesh to make their lives better. During that time, at least two generations must have grown into adulthood, and despite all the corruption and crimes in the country, their lives must have been impacted to some positive extent by the country's economic development. If that did not happen, then it is a total governance failure. It is the failure of all the governments Bangladesh has had that the country's progress only touched a privileged few, created opportunities only for a handful, so much so that many want to rely on preferential treatment rather than on their own merit to attain some kind of job stability in their lives. It is also a failure of our policymakers and industrialists that they could not create enough employment opportunities in the private sector in 53 years so that young people, like their Western counterparts, would aspire for jobs in private enterprises or want to be entrepreneurs themselves.

While I never had to use any preferential treatment as a freedom fighter's grandchild, today I feel if I had to, I would have felt ashamed to use it especially after so many deaths surrounding this issue. Like I said, my Nana's contribution to the Liberation War has given me a country to call home. A 45-year-old like me in Palestine does not have that privilege. How well I use this gift depends on my own capability. For my descendants, the last thing I want is preferential treatment for their ancestors' legacy. They should undoubtedly be proud of and thankful for their ancestors' achievement, but also should have the dignity to make their own names on their own merit.

Australian involvement in the Bangladesh Liberation War

Within the space of 10 months, Australian government policy moved from declared neutrality to supporting openly Bangladeshi independence, even if that meant attracting retaliation from Pakistan and the ire of America.

RACHEL STEVENS

If you think about the international reaction to the Bangladesh Liberation War, you most likely would consider the United States government openly siding with Pakistan. The People's Republic of China, Sri Lanka, and the Arab world also aligned that country. Many western nations – such as the United Kingdom – remained neutral in what they considered a civil conflict rather than a war of secession.

Apart from India and the USSR, it seemed that the Bangladesh liberation movement had few allies. My recently published book, Citizen-Driven Humanitarianism and the Bangladesh Liberation War: Australian Aid during the 1971 Refugee Crisis, presents a different picture. In this book I show that when we look beyond the official stance of the Australian government and consider the perspectives of ordinary citizens, we find a populace deeply affected by Bangladeshis' struggle for freedom.

Dear Mr Whitlam,
I have been watching the T.V. and I have been seeing the East Pakistan Refugees sick, dying and they are hungry which you can tell because they are so skinny and look so sad as you would know. I have been PRAYING that our Prime Minister will donate more money for the PAKISTAN Refugees who are sick and dying. Please donate as much as you can. You may need help one day, too. Please help them. Please Help. Thank-you for reading this letter

Please

Sincerely
Belinda Babovic.
(10 years old)

It was not just affluent Australians who expressed concern about the plight of Bangladeshi refugees. In this example, 10-year-old Belinda Babovic wrote to Opposition Leader (and later Prime Minister) Gough Whitlam from a working-class suburb in Canberra, the nation's capital. In the letter, Belinda wrote in pencil and sparsely used pen for emphasis on particular words.

When Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman proclaimed the independence of Bangladesh 53 years ago, Australian newspapers immediately ran front page articles on the declaration. From the beginning, Australian newspapers described in detail the violence of the Pakistani army and the repressive nature of West Pakistani rule.

On 29 March 1971, broadsheet The Age (Australia's newspaper of record), reported on the brutality of the early days of the war, repeating the claim by the Press Trust of India that the Pakistani military had killed more than 10,000 people, including civilians, in just two days. By reporting the war in such terms, Australian journalists laid the groundwork for Australian citizens to understand the conflict through the frame of Pakistani suppression of Bangladeshi demands for independence.

In its 29 March editorial, The Age stated that East Pakistan was a 'besieged province', 'confronted by military forces far stronger' than its own, and therefore had no choice but to declare independence and abandon its legitimate claims for greater regional autonomy. Interestingly, The Age foreshadowed the unlikelihood of a political solution to the conflict. The editor wrote: 'A nation cannot be held together indefinitely by the military repression of a hostile majority of people. To the existing differences of race, custom, language and geography will be added an insuperable barrier of hatred and resentment.'

Within days of the onset of hostilities then, Australians were informed not only of the tragic events unfolding in Bangladesh but also understood the origins of the conflict and why Bangladeshis wanted their freedom.

AUSTRALIAN HUMANITARIAN RESPONSES

My research explores how and why Australian citizens provided humanitarian relief to Bangladeshi refugees in India. While the responses of governments are important, they can never tell the whole story. Indeed, Australian aid to Bangladeshi refugees is an example of civil society leading government action. Typically, one would assume that governments lead the people. During the 1971 Liberation War, the opposite was true as citizens influenced government policies, not just on aid but also on the formal recognition of Bangladesh as an independent state.

In essence, my book is about how citizens and non-government organisations (NGOs) mobilised, fundraised, and distributed aid in a region far from their homes and to individuals with whom they had little in common. Through my research, I found Australians from a cross-section of society who were outraged at the extent of human suffering in the refugee camps, appalled by the injustice of Yahya's military rule and believed that poverty was completely avoidable, if states chose to alleviate it.

My book includes chapters on the aid activities of an array of humanitarian agencies. Chapters cover the activities of the international Red Cross, transnational Christian agencies, and grassroots organisations such as the Freedom from Hunger Campaign.

It is important to note that in 1971, the Australian humanitarian NGO landscape was an over-crowded market. Each organisation competed for brand recognition, prestige, access to political power, and of course, donor dollars. We naturally think of humanitarian NGOs as benign actors. However, my book shows the extent of competition within the sector as they attempted to gain market dominance and outdo one another.

CITIZEN HUMANITARIANISM: AN UNTOLD HISTORY

The final chapter of my book explores humanitarian actions of individuals. This includes a comprehensive analysis of over 2,500 letters written by Australian citizen to their politicians urging the government to give more aid. These letters are a rare find in the National Archives of Australia (NAA) and provide valuable new insights into how Australians of all backgrounds understood the conflict in Bangladesh and how they thought they could help. I found myself particularly moved by letters written by children, even though they were ineligible to vote.

Here are two examples:

Less than one month into the conflict, 11-year-old Vicki O'Meara from a middle-class suburb in Melbourne wrote:

> Dear Sir,
> I know A$10,000,000 [US$85 million in today's money] is a lot of money but I think you could spare it for the poor Pakistan refugees. If all the people in Australia were starving, then I don't think you'd have much trouble in finding the $10,000,000. It's just that they are a long way away from us and it is hard for us to imagine what it would be like. Please hurry and send the $10,000,000 quickly before it is too late and there will not be any cause because the refugees will all be dead.

What I value in the letters penned by children is that they avoid clichés, are blunt, and usually show a sophisticated understanding of global issues well beyond their years.

In this second example, 10-year-old Belinda Babovic wrote to Opposition Leader (and later Prime Minister) Gough Whitlam from a working-class suburb in Canberra, the nation's capital. In the letter, Belinda wrote in pencil and sparsely used pen for emphasis on particular words. Here, Belinda reveals the importance of television and visual imagery in helping her understand the scale of the refugee crisis. She also discloses that she has been praying for the Australian prime minister to donate more money. The role of news media and religious conviction were repeatedly cited by many Australians in their letters to political leaders.

HUNGER STRIKES

Aside from writing to politicians, citizens also engaged in public performances that inspired onlookers to learn more about the Bangladesh liberation movement in general and the suffering of refugees in particular. For example, Indonesian-born poet Paul Poernomo staged an extended hunger strike on the steps of the Melbourne General Post Office to draw attention to the starvation faced by Bangladeshi refugees. As the weeks rolled on, passers-by gave coins to his donation tin, money that was then forwarded on to the Freedom from Hunger Campaign, which had aid distribution staff working in the West Bengal refugee camps.

The 36-year-old Poernomo took his hunger strike (along with a ragtag of followers) to Canberra. Poernomo fasted for two weeks, this time on the steps of Parliament House. He attracted the attention of politicians and journalists, both of whom promoted and broadcast Poernomo's cause to the nation at large.

After a short stint in hospital due to extreme dehydration, Poernomo continued his fasting tour around the country. He staged his final hunger strike outside the Sydney General Post Office. As in Melbourne, passers-by donated money to support refugee relief activities.

The impacts of Poernomo's hunger strike were far-reaching. At a minimum, Poernomo single-handedly raised A$50,000 for the Freedom from Hunger Campaign, making 1971 its most successful year to date. Beyond donations, Poernomo inspired thousands of citizens to lobby their political representatives, urging the Australian government to do more for Bangladeshi refugees and officially support Bangladeshi independence.

INDIVIDUAL ACTIVISM

Paul Poernomo was not the only example of an Australian going to extreme lengths to help Bangladeshis. Melbourne upper-class housewife and Catholic humanitarian, Moira Dynon, had a long history of donating powdered and condensed milk to India throughout the 1960s. When the Bhola cyclone hit in 1970, she turned her attention to East Pakistan. Her humanitarian activities increased again when war broke out in 1971. Unlike large, international NGOs, Dynon was an advocate of person-to-person humanitarianism. By focusing on friendship, goodwill and cooperation, Dynon stressed the importance of personal relationships. She believed that every individual could, and should, make a difference to ease avoidable suffering.

Dynon also proved to be a tireless worker, willing to travel great distances to spread her message. Throughout 1971, Dynon engaged in a speaking tour across Australia, educating Australians on the history and politics of Bangladesh, and why its people demanded independence from Pakistan. She urged her audience to donate money and goods to her small aid agency, which was then forwarded to the West Bengal Council of Women for distribution in the refugee camps.

BROADER SIGNIFICANCE

The examples listed above may seem insignificant on their own. But what they shows is that collectively individual actions can shape public opinion, which then has the capacity to change government policy. In the case of Australia during the Bangladesh Liberation War, the actions of individuals helped push risk-averse politicians to take a moral stand that was at odds with its main ally, the United States. Within the space of 10 months, Australian government policy moved from declared neutrality to supporting openly Bangladeshi independence, even if that meant attracting retaliation from Pakistan and the ire of America. Australian government aid was also increased on five occasions, again in response to public pressure. It is important to note that private aid (that is, donations from Australian citizens) far outstripped government assistance.

From the Australian perspective, the lessons of this event in history are two-fold: one, it provides a rare example of people leading the government, rather than the other way around. It is an inspiring tale of individuals taking action, which had ripple effects throughout Australian society. Two, it shows that Australians educated themselves on the events unfolding in Bangladesh, rather than blindly following the Cold War logic of the United States, which pitted capitalist Pakistan against socialist Bangladesh. This episode reveals Australians as deeply engaged with their Indian Ocean neighbours and committed to creating a just world free from persecution and oppression. I can only hope that Australians and Bangladeshis will remain good neighbours as they confront the complex challenges of the twenty-first century.

Sabina sees ties against improving Bhutan as opportunity

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh women's football team captain Sabina Khatun is looking forward to some much-needed change of environment as the team flies off to Thimphu today for two friendly matches against Bhutan.

The team will play the two matches at the Changlimithang Stadium in the capital on July 24 and 27, with the aim of some match-practice ahead of October's SAFF Women's Championship.

Bangladesh had last played two friendlies against Chinese Taipei at home in June, losing by 4-0 and 1-0 margins, under new coach Peter Butler. While Bhutan are a weaker side compared to Chinese Taipei, Sabina believes the two matches against the Himalayan nation can provide Bangladesh with some physical and mental boost before their SAFF title defence.

"We have been inside the BFF camp for a long time. So I believe this tour will freshen us up for future competitions," Sabina said prior to the team's departure, adding that Bhutan are no longer pushovers in women's football like they used to be.

The captain, however, believes the team will need to play stronger opponents in the next FIFA window in order to properly prepare for the regional tournament.

In the first match against Chinese Taipei, coach Butler played a 3-5-2 formation with a high line defence, something that the players were not used to. The 4-0 defeat in that game, which was the British coach's first match as the head coach of the women in red and green, he was forced to go back to a 4-4-2 formation in the following game.

The team gave a much better account of themselves in that game, and buoyed by that performance, Sabina believes they should have a convincing series against the Bhutanese women.

"We played defensively against Chinese Taipei, but I feel we should play more attacking football against Bhutan and play for victories," said Sabina, the all-time leading scorer for the country.

The team will miss the services of first-team players like Shaheda Akter Ripa, Shamsunnahar Jr. Afeida Khondokar and Tohura Khatun due to exams while striker Krishna Rani Sarkar is still recovering from injury.

Sabina, the poster girl of Bangladesh football, however, is not quite sure of Bangladesh's chances of defending the seven-nation SAFF Women's Championship as she feels, ''the departure of stalwarts like Sirat Jahan Swapna, Akhi Khatun and the injury to Krishna could be crucial to their chances in Kathmandu."

BCB HP look to avoid defeat against Pak Shaheens

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) High Performance (HP) unit are looking to avoid defeat, having reached 20 without loss at the end of day three after being set a target of 429 runs in their second innings by Pakistan Shaheens in the first four-day game at DXC Arena Ground in Darwin yesterday.

Having won the toss on Friday, BCB HP elected to bowl but bowlers failed to trouble Pakistan batters in both innings.

Pakistan put on 468 for three in the first innings, courtesy of Mohammad Hunaira's 218 and Kamran Golam's unbeaten 100. BCB HP pacer Ripon Mondol bagged two wickets in the innings.

The HP unit were bundled out for 266 with Pakistan's right-arm pacer Khurram Shahadat bagging six for 72. Opener Shadman Islam struck 88 in the first innings while Aich Molla and Shahadat Hossain Dipu contributed with 70 and 36, respectively.

Pakistan piled on further 226 runs for three wickets in the second innings to take a 428-run lead as Omar Bin Yousaf hit 100 not out. HP pacers Ripon, Mukidul Islam and Rejaur Rahman Raja bagged a wicket each.

On their multi-format tour of Australia, BCB HP are scheduled to play the second four-dayer from July 26 before taking on Northern Territory on August 1 in a three-nation bilateral one-day tournament, also involving Pakistan Shaheens.

India post their highest WT20I total in UAE rout

SPORTS REPORTER

India registered their highest ever total in Women's T20Is in a 78-run victory over the UAE in a Group A fixture of the ongoing ACC Women's Asia Cup at the Rangiri Dambulla International Stadium in Dambulla yesterday.

In a dominating batting display, India skipper Harmanpreet Kaur and Richa Ghosh smashed blistering half-centuries after opener Shafali Verma hit the ground running with an 18-ball 37. Kaur scored a 47-ball 66 while Ghosh took only 29 deliveries for her 64 to propel India to 201 for five.

UAE's Kanisha Kumari scalped two wickets but had little say in keeping a lid on the proceedings along with the rest of the bowling line-up.

Kumari also managed to contribute with the bat as she managed a 32-ball 40, UAE's highest individual score, and Eosha Oza scored a steady 36-ball 38 but could never pose a serious challenge to India's daunting total.

India's Deepti Sharma was the pick of the bowlers with two scalps as the UAE were restricted to 123 for seven.

With a second victory in the bag, India are on the brink of the semifinals and will have the opportunity to progress as unbeaten group-winners when they take on Nepal in their final Group A fixture on Tuesday.

'Management must take responsibility for continuous batting failure'

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh women's side slumped to a seven-wicket defeat against Sri Lanka in their ACC Women's T20 Asia Cup opener in Dambulla on Saturday, once again bringing the team's batting frailties to the fore.

Bangladesh batting collapsed early, three wickets going down for eight runs on what appeared to be a decent batting wicket. After they slumped further to 49 for five, some rearguard effort from skipper Nigar Sultana Joty and middle-order batter Shorna Akter saw Bangladesh reach 111 for 8.

Sri Lanka batters flourished in the flat batting track and reached the target in 17.1 overs.

It was another dismal effort from the Tigresses and Nazmul Abedeen Fahim, who closely monitors women's cricket as its wing development manager, felt that the current state of the batting unit is unbelievable.

"It was unbelievable. The players who are playing now are either new or have returned after having received some chances before. I saw no dependability in the batting unit. I am doubtful if the management were able to make the players see how competent they are technically or how courageous they could be."

Joty struck an unbeaten 59-ball 48 to see Bangladesh cross the 100-run mark. A 14-ball 25 from Shorna got some wind in Bangladesh's sail and it further highlighted the ineffectiveness of the batting order.

Shorna, who used to bat higher up the order, has not been banked upon to take the game on as she was sent in at lower middle-order. Meanwhile veteran batter Rumana Ahmed was not picked despite the coach and the skipper saying that her experience could have had a big effect on the side.

"Shorna has been with the side for a while and I don't understand why we still haven't found a settled place for her in the side. Why is she batting at number eight?" Fahim asked.

"The team did not trust her. But if she can bat like that at number eight, she would definitely play a lot better further up the order. At one time, she was batting at five or six. Rabeya [Khan] has potential but why she isn't improving isn't clear either.

"Rumana not playing means that players better than her are playing. But that didn't seem to be the case. Rumana knows how to bat in the middle-order and she does not get scared of the task from what I have seen. I can understand Jahanara [Alam] not playing due to team combination but the decision on Rumana surprised me," he added.

Fahim feels that the team management needs to take responsibility for the constant batting failures.

"Not only those playing the game but those in charge of the batting unit and coached them must be held accountable too. We can't only blame the players. In the Premier League [WPDL], I saw many playing well but when they go to international matches, they can't perform. So I am not sure whether the players are being able to play their natural game," Fahim analyses.

"The responsibility to create the environment which brings out their natural game, lies with the management. You can't just tell a player to play as she wants. They have failed consistently and the management must take responsibility," he said.

Bangladesh play Thailand in their second Group B game but with questions over batting and the team's current morale, it remains to be seen whether the Tigresses can bounce back.

Marquez replaces Stimac as India coach

AFP, New Delhi

Manolo Marquez has been appointed the coach of the India men's football team, over a month after Igor Stimac's acrimonious exit.

Spaniard Marquez, 55, has been coaching league teams in India since 2020 and will take on the role for the national team "effective immediately", the All India Football Federation said in a statement on Saturday.

"We are delighted to welcome Mr Marquez to this important role," AIFF president Kalyan Chaubey said, adding the federation was looking forward to working with the new coach "in the years ahead".

Marquez, who has more than two decades of international experience in football management, had been the coach of FC Goa since June last year and said he was "grateful" to AIFF for the opportunity as he considers India "my second home".

"I want to do my best to bring success to the millions of fans we have," he said.

Former West Ham and Croatia defender Stimac was sacked in June following India team's poor performance in World Cup qualifiers.

Stimac's five-year tenure ended controversially, with India's federation accusing him of using astrology to pick his teams.

Stimac, who played a World Cup semifinal for Croatia in 1998, became India coach in 2019 and they briefly broke into the top 100 of FIFA's world rankings for only the second time in nearly three decades.

Once called "a sleeping giant" of the sport by former FIFA president Sepp Blatter, India are currently ranked 124th.

'Bickering' and 'cold sweat' as Paris built its Games

AFP, Paris

The seven-year odyssey of the Paris Olympics should reach shore after a spectacular but hopefully serene opening cruise down the Seine on Friday at the end of a voyage that has survived rocky political moments.

Following the horse-trading to win the Games, came the French infighting over how to host them.

Paris was not sure it wanted to risk another rebuff after losing its 2005 bid for the 2012 Games to a London bid that the French believed inferior.

After the 2015 terror attacks on the French capital, Anne Hidalgo, elected Paris mayor in 2014, decided the city needed to act to rebound from the trauma.

Just after his election as president in 2017, Emmanuel Macron promoted France's case to the International Olympic Committee.

Since 2005, France had built a national velodrome and a canoe-kayak venue near Paris.

"By missing the Games, we built all the facilities," said a former elected official.

After Los Angeles agreed to go for the 2028 Games, France was awarded the 2024 Games in September 2017.

France would host a "sober" Games, using existing facilities and temporary arenas in postcard Paris: the Eiffel Tower, the Invalides, Place de la Concorde. After testing the water with a cautious toe, it added politically-charged swimming in the Seine.

Hidalgo, a Socialist, dredged up an old and unfulfilled promise by Gaullist Jacques Chirac, when he was mayor, that Parisians that would be able to swim in their river.

On July 17, ten days before the Games, Hidalgo took a dip in front of a battery of cameras.

Behind the scenes, the waters were sometimes murky as the national government, local elected officials, and the organizing committee (COJO) bickered.

Deep down, we are pains in the ass," said one former elected official to describe the relationship with COJO.

There was a race to complete all the work, with finishing touches still being applied days before the start.

Nicolas Ferrand, in charge of the construction of the athletes' village, said he was in a "cold sweat" after the outbreak of the war in Ukraine, fearing shortage of materials.

Whatever happens, "two weeks before everyone will say that 'it's a disaster' and in fact it's not," said a close friend of mayor Hidalgo.

Verstappen says he is no longer leader of the pack

AFP, Hungary

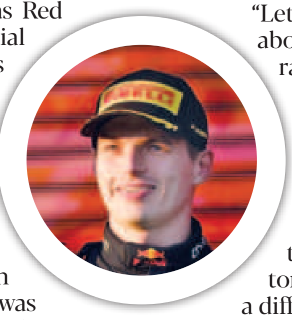
Max Verstappen conceded he is no longer leading the pack and feels as if he and Red Bull are "chasing" after he qualified third for the Hungarian Grand Prix behind McLaren duo Lando Norris and Oscar Piastri.



The three-time world champions and series leader has claimed only one pole position in six Grand Prix as Red Bull's grip on a substantial performance advantage has disintegrated and rival teams have drawn level or passed them.

Verstappen has taken 40 pole positions in his career, but only one-in Austria-since dominating the early season races by taking seven in succession before his spell was broken by Ferrari's Charles Leclerc at the Monaco Grand Prix.

"I love competition," he said on Saturday. "But I like being on top of the competition. At the moment, I feel like we are chasing and having a few more difficult weekends. I don't back out of a fight, but it's just a tricky situation I guess."

In spite of his declining fortunes in qualifying, he has managed-without tangible support from struggling teammate Sergio Perez-to remain a strong contender in races and starts Sunday's contest with an 84-point lead ahead of Norris in the drivers' title race.

However, Red Bull have begun to appear increasingly stretched and desperate in a bid to defend their titles as their performance superiority ebbs away, as the Dutchman admitted when he welcomed the team's major upgrade package this weekend.

"Let's see," he said, when asked about his prospects in the race. "The last few races, the McLaren especially has been really good in the race even compared to qualifying.

"Today was a lot colder than expected, I guess, with the clouds and the rain and tomorrow is going to be quite a different day so I just hope that will help us."

The changing weather conditions have influenced and affected recent results as Mercedes won in Austria and Britain, but struggling in the heat at the Hungaroring where Mc Laren shone on Saturday.

"I tried," said Verstappen. "The whole weekend we have been a little bit behind and I think that was also the case in qualifying. I tried to make it as close as possible, but unfortunately just not enough. "

Normalcy to return in a short time

Foreign minister tells diplomats about protests

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The government yesterday assured foreign diplomats that the situation arising out of students' quota reform protest will normalise within a short time.

At a briefing at state guesthouse Jamuna, Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud told them that the government regrets the disruption to daily life caused by the recent incidents of violence.

He said anti-liberation, anti-state elements, and religious extremists perpetrated the violence infiltrating into the peaceful student protest for quota reforms in government jobs.

"The government understands the anxiety and concerns that might have surfaced among the diplomatic community and the inconvenience caused by interruption to internet connectivity and temporary movement disruption," he said.

Some 60 foreign diplomats and

ONGOING VIOLENCE

UN human rights chief, EU, UK voice concern

STAR REPORT

UN Human Rights Chief Volker Turk has expressed deep concern over the ongoing violence in Bangladesh and called for accountability and dialogue.

"The attacks on student protesters are particularly shocking and unacceptable. There must be impartial, prompt and exhaustive investigations into these attacks, and those responsible held to account," he said in a statement on Friday.

He urged all sides to exercise restraint and called on the security forces to ensure that any use of force is strictly in line with the requirements of international human rights law.

"I am also very worried by reports about the deployment of paramilitary police units such as the Border Guard Bangladesh and the Rapid Action Battalion, which have long track records of violations," said the statement issued by the Office of Eight major business and trade organisations, including the Federation of Bangladesh Chamber of Commerce and Industry (FBCCI), have expressed their support for the government's steps to fight the criminals and evil forces that destroyed state properties.

The other organisations are Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA), Bangladesh Knit Manufactures and Exporters Association (BKMEA), Bangladesh Textile Mills Association, Dhaka Chamber of Commerce and Industry (DCCI), Metropolitan Chamber of Commerce and Industry (MCCI), Chattogram Chamber of Commerce and Industry (CCCI) and Saarc Chamber of Bangladesh.

In a joint press release issued yesterday, the organisations expressed concern over the losses caused to the economy over the last few days due to the violence.

They feared that if the violence continued, it will further harm the economy, industrialisation, and job creation.

"In this situation, the business community fully supports the government for its steps against the criminals who destroyed state properties."

Users suffer amid internet outage

MD ABBAS and ASIFUR RAHMAN

Thousands of consumers across the nation are facing immense difficulties in getting their cards for prepaid electricity and gas meters recharged amid the ongoing internet outage and the curfew.

People were seen standing in queues for hours on end at power and gas supply offices yesterday. And after failing to recharge their cards, many returned to a home without power or gas or both.

Around 2.5 crore electricity consumers use prepaid meters across the country.

The owner of Rofrof Telecom, a shop on Tajmahal Road in Mohammadpur that provides prepaid card recharge services, said there are two types of machines used for recharging prepaid electricity and gas meters. One requires internet and the other does not.

He said they are now having to resort to using only the top-up machine that does not require the internet.

Other vendors complained of having insufficient balance on their top-up machines as DPDC's designated agents could not provide them with credit for the past few days amid the extended bank holidays.

Abdullah Noman, managing director of the Dhaka Power Distribution Company, claimed that they were providing recharge services from 26 zonal offices since Friday.

"As a huge number of people are rushing to the offices, they're having to wait longer. Besides, we've increased our emergency balance by Tk 3,000 to Tk 5,000 based on usage, which should be enough for a good number of days for most people," he said.

"We hope the internet services will resume by this time and if not, we will take further necessary measures," he added.

Md Hasib of Tajmahal Road had Tk 120 left in his meter on Thursday morning. He was going to recharge his card that evening but the internet outage happened before he could do so.

"I started feeling sick after standing in line in front of DPDC's Lalmatia office for two and a half hours today [yesterday]. Luckily, I found a shop on my way home from where I could top-up my prepaid card."

The government yesterday said they were working to restore the internet communication across the country but could not specify when the services would resume.

A number of communication infrastructures, including public and private data centres, came under attack during the violence surrounding the quota reform protests between Wednesday and Friday, said Zunaid Ahmad Palak, state minister for Posts, Telecommunications and ICT.

"Our engineers are now conducting repair works on the damaged equipment and internet services can resume after the repairs are done."

He made the remarks while speaking at a press briefing at the head office of Bangladesh Telecommunication and Regulatory Commission (BTRC).

Palak apologised for the temporary disruption and said the authorities were trying their best to restore

150 arrested over recent violence

Several BNP, Jamaat leaders among them; Amir Khashru, Jamaat secy gen remanded

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

At least 150 people, including leaders and activists of the BNP and Jamaat, were arrested in Dhaka and Gazipur yesterday in connection with recent violence.

The BNP claimed that at least five party leaders were held in the capital.

Law enforcers arrested BNP executive committee member Abdus Salam, adviser to party chairperson Amanullah Aman, International Affairs Secretary Nasir Uddin, Publicity Affairs Secretary Sultan Salahuddin Tuku and Organising Secretary Kazi Sayedul Alam Babul, said BNP media cell member Shamsuddin Didar.

"Many other BNP leaders have been arrested across the country," he told The Daily Star.

Detective Branch of Dhaka Metropolitan Police yesterday arrested 74 leaders and activists of the BNP and Jamaat-e-Islami from different areas of the capital, DB chief Harun-Or-Rashid told reporters.

He said more suspects for the violence will be arrested soon.

Gazipur police arrested 77 people from different areas of the district over attacking police stations and violence.

Nanda Lal, inspector (investigation) of Gacha Police Station, said police arrested 59 people from different areas in Gazipur over attacking the police station on Saturday.

Rafiul Karim, OC of Gazipur Sadar Police Station, said they held 13 people in connection with the recent violence.

Konabari Police Station OC AB Siddique said they held five over the recent violence.

In Savar, families of two BNP men alleged that police yesterday raided and ransacked their homes in Naybari and Chayabithi areas.

However, Dhaka Additional Superintendent of Police Abdullah Kafi denied the allegation.

Police in Pirojpur yesterday arrested Kaukhali upazila Jamaat-e-Islami Secretary GeneralNazrul Islam in Biraljhuri area around 3:30pm.

Humayun Kabir, officer-in-charge of Kaukhali Police Station, said Nazrul was arrested in a sabotage case filed previously.

Chiefs of three services meet prime minister

UNB, Dhaka

Chiefs of three services met Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday to discuss the current situation of the country.

The meeting started around 4:00pm at the Gono Bhaban.

The prime minister gave them necessary directives during the meeting, said PM's Deputy Press secretary KM Shakhawat Moon.

Chiefs of different law enforcement agencies and the PM's security adviser were also present.

The meeting took place at a time when the country is passing a tense time over violence centring the quota protests. Students of different universities and colleges have been demonstrating for around three weeks, demanding reforms to the quota system in government jobs.

Israel strikes Gaza, Yemen, Lebanon

64 more Palestinians killed in the Palestinian enclave; major Israeli operation underway in south of Rafah

AFP, Palestinian Territories

The Middle East was reeling from deadly violence yesterday with Israel bombing Gaza, Lebanon and Yemen in quick succession in response to attacks from Iran-backed militant groups.

The Israeli military said it intercepted a missile from Yemen, as it pressed on with its offensive in the besieged Palestinian territory.

Dozens have been killed since Saturday across the Gaza Strip, the civil defence agency said, including in strikes on homes in the central Nuseirat and Bureij areas and displaced people near southern Khan Yunis.

Residents said a major operation was underway in the Saudi district of Rafah in the south, reporting heavy artillery and clashes.

The deadly strikes in Gaza came hours after Hezbollah and its ally Hamas said they fired at Israeli positions from south Lebanon, while Yemen's Houthi rebels vowed to respond to Israeli warplanes hitting a key port.

The fire left raging by the strikes on rebel-held Hodeida port "is seen across the Middle East and the significance is clear," Israeli Defence Minister Yoav Gallant said.

Won't spare BNP-Jamaat this time: PM

Businesses urge quick restoration of normalcy

STAR REPORT

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday warned that the government will not spare the "BNP-Jamaat clique" this time so easily like in the past, reports UNB.

"They are trying to carry out terrorist activities during the curfew. Who are these people? They are not unknown faces. You saw BNP extended its support, and convicted criminal Tarique Rahman who tried to kill me through grenade attack gave the order [to carry out violence]," she said.

Branding Islami Chhatra Shibir as a militant organisation, she accused it of being involved in destruction in a planned way.

The PM made the remarks during a meeting with leading businesspeople at her office.

4hr break in curfew from 1pm in Dhaka, 4 other dists

General holiday today as well

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government has decided to continue the nationwide curfew until further notice and to give a four-hour break from 1:00pm today in Dhaka, Narayanganj, Gazipur, Narsingdi and Sylhet.

In Barishal, the curfew will be relaxed from 11:00am to 5:00pm, and in Chattogram, the break will be from 1:00pm to 4:00pm.

In other districts and metroplitan areas, magistrates and police commisioners will decide on the curfew breaks.

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan Kamal made the announcements at a press conference at his Dhanmondi residence last night.

'Normalcy to return soon'

The army chief urges cooperation from all

Waker-Uz-Zaman

Army Chief General Waker-Uz-Zaman yesterday said normalcy will return to the country soon with everyone's help.

"We think the situation has started to improve within 48 hours of the deployment [of the armed forces]," he told journalists in front of Sheikh Russel Roller Skating Complex after inspecting various places across the city.

"If we can work together, we will be able to improve the situation further," he said thanking the media for their objective coverage.

"We want your cooperation," he added.

Noting that the destruction of public property is beyond description, General Waker said it could take a few more days to return to the normal way of life.

"I don't know how much longer it will take to recover from the losses. I cannot

Quota reforms on PM's table for final nod

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The public administration ministry yesterday afternoon sent a proposal to Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina for making 93 percent recruitments in the civil service on merit and the rest from quotas.

The ministry also recommended that the reformed quota system be applicable to recruitments for 9-20 grades in government, semi-government, and autonomous bodies, said Public Administration Minister Farhad Hossain.

He told The Daily Star that the reformed quota system would be applicable to appointments that require recruitment tests.

Public administration ministry officials, however, said the PM would decide whether the new quota system would be applicable to recruitments for grade 9-20 or grade 1-20.

Public Administration Minister Farhad Hossain last night aborted a press briefing twice, held a meeting with ministry officials, and then deferred announcement on circular until today.

The appointments in grade 9 to 20 are made through recruitment tests.

There are 20 grades in government jobs. The quota system was applicable to grade 13-20, following a 2018 government circular that

6 more hurt in previous days' clashes die

At least 146 dead so far

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Six more people, who were injured during the previous days' clashes between agitators and law enforcers, died yesterday, said police and hospital authorities.

Four died at the Dhaka Medical College Hospital having suffered either bullet or shotgun pellet injuries, according to the hospital's death register and police.

Three of the four deceased were identified as Rasel, 20, Azizul Mia, and Razu, 36. The other person who died at DMCH was an unidentified person, aged around 35.

Besides, police received two bodies from the National Institute of Neuroscience and Hospital and sent those to Shaheed Suhrawardy Medical College morgue for autopsies, said Ahad Ali, officer-in-charge of Sher-e-Bangla Nagar Police Station.

They were injured in clashes that broke out in Uttara and Gulshan areas in the previous few days, he said.

With yesterday's deaths, at least 146 lives have been lost since last Tuesday, when six people were killed in violence.

The six burnt cars that lie at the entrance to the Department of Disaster Management at Mohakhali can hardly give a sense of the scale of destruction inside the 11-storey building.

In the parking space alone, there were 50 other private cars and microbuses -- all burnt to the skeleton. The acrid smell of the charred vehicles and other objects wafted through the air in the small space. A sub-station, an emergency response coordination centre and a resting room for Ansar members on the ground floor too were burnt down.

Lifts; transmitters used for making contact during natural calamities; television screens; computers; air conditioners -- nothing was spared.

The entire building, now enveloped in darkness, came under attack on July 18.

"Nothing was left untouched by the fire," said Mahbub Rahman, a DMD staffer who saw it all first-hand, told The Daily Star yesterday.

The organisers of the [quota reform] movement have vehemently denied any protesting student's involvement in the destruction.

He said around 200 miscreants, carrying sticks, suddenly appeared around 4:00pm that day and started throwing brick chunks at the building. Those at the front of the line, he said, appeared to be aged under 18.

"Within a minute, they started vandalising the cars, and poured petrol on them and set them on fire. Three on-duty Ansar members stationed there were helpless. The mindless destruction went on for

Pharma production disrupted

Production and distribution of medicines have been disrupted for the last four days due to violence centring the quota reform movement and the curfew imposed by the government, drug makers said yesterday.

Industry operators said they were unable to receive imported raw materials from Chattogram port and Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport as customs assessment and clearance was suspended for the ongoing internet blackout.

This may subsequently affect drug exports too, they added.

ONGOING VIOLENCE

More than 1,400 arrested in three days

Scores of BNP, Jamaat men among them; raids going on in Dhaka, elsewhere

STAR REPORT

Law enforcers have arrested 1,427 people across the country over the last three days in connection with the recent violence.

Of them, 692 were held in the capital alone and the rest in 16 districts.

Dhaka Metropolitan Police has been conducting block raids since Sunday to arrest suspects, said DMP Commissioner Habibur Rahman.

"We are looking for conspirators and criminals hiding in nearby places," the DMP chief told journalists while visiting the capital's Jatrabari yesterday.

Around 50 cases were filed with different police stations in the capital in the last few days accusing 20,000 unidentified people of resorting to violence, Habibur said.

Police said 735 people were arrested in 16 districts over the last three days. They were accused in 43 cases filed over violence.

Of them, 98 were held in Chattogram, 50 in Dhaka district, 35 in Sylhet, 10 in Patuakhali, 120 in Narayanganj, 42 in Kushtia, 33 in Barishal, 104 in Tangail, 59 in Khulna, 10 in Jamalpur, 33 in Mymensingh, nine in Pirojpur, 47

6 more hurt in previous days' clashes die

On Thursday, at least 29 people died in clashes between agitators and law enforcers and ruling party activists.

Another victim injured in Wednesday's violence also died on Thursday. On Friday, at least 66 people were killed across the country. On Saturday, at least 25 people died including four who were injured in earlier clashes.

On Sunday, at least seven were killed in the clashes, and six others who were injured in previous days' clashes died.

The overall death toll from the violence centring quota demonstrations may rise as The Daily Star could not reach many hospitals where dozens of critically injured patients were taken for treatment. Also, many families reportedly collected the bodies of their loved-ones from the scene, and this newspaper could not contact those families.

The Daily Star's count of the victims is based solely on hospital sources.

The forensic departments at DMCH, Suhrawardy Medical College and Mitford Hospital so far conducted autopsies on 84 bodies and they have nine pending.

Meanwhile, none was reported killed yesterday as no major clash was reported across the county on the third day of nationwide curfew.

The curfew was declared and armed forces were deployed on Friday night to assist the civil administration in ensuring national security and protecting lives and property. On Saturday night, the government extended the curfew till further notice.

This correspondent visited different areas in Dhaka, including Mohammadpur, Rampura, Badda, and Mirpur, that had turned battlefields at the height of the violence. There was an uneasy calm yesterday.

Members of the armed forces, police, and Rab were seen patrolling different points.

In another development, Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan yesterday said three police personnel were killed and 1,117 others were injured in clashes centring the quota protests across the country.

Over 200 are stated to be in critical condition and three of them are in the intensive care unit, he told reporters after visiting injured police personnel at Central Police Hospital in Dhaka.

in Pabna, 46 in Madaripur, and 44 in Kishoreganj and Netrakona.

A total of 15 cases were filed with six police stations of Chattogram city and district in the last one week accusing 30,000 named and unnamed people of resorting to violence, said police.

According to court documents, 799 people, including several BNP and Jamaat-e-Islami leaders, were produced before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's (CMM) Court of Dhaka over the last six days following their arrests.

They were arrested in 68 cases lodged with 34 police stations in the capital on charges of attacking law enforcers and damaging and torching state properties. Some of the cases were filed under the Special Powers Act and the Explosive Substances Act.

The court sent many of the arrestees to jail.

On Sunday, 297 people, including BNP chairperson's adviser Zahir Uddin Swapan, former convener of Dhaka city (north) BNP Amanullah Aman, International Affairs Secretary Nasiruddin Ahmed Wasim, and Jamaat Central Working Council member Samiul Haque Faruqui, were produced before the CMM court in a case filed over torching and damaging properties at Setu Bhaban.

The court placed Zahir Uddin, Nasiruddin, and Samiul on five-day remand after the Detective Branch of DMP produced them before it seeking 10-day remand for each.

Earlier, top BNP leader Amir Khashru Mahmud Chowdhury and Dhaka District BNP General Secretary Nipun Roy Chowdhury, Publicity Affairs Secretary Sultan Salahuddin Tuku, Dhaka city (north) BNP member secretary Aminul Haque, Organising Secretary Kazi Sayedul Alam Babul and Jamaat-e-Islami Secretary General Mia Golam Parwar were arrested in a case filed over planning and financing attacks, and vandalising the BTV Bhaban in the capital's Rampura.

They were produced before a Dhaka court on Sunday.

DMP CHIEF'S COMMENTS

DMP Commissioner Habibur yesterday questioned if it was possible for students to attack metro rail stations, BTRC data centre, BTV Bhaban, and Setu Bhaban.

He said criminals had rented homes in the capital to stay long ago with the intent to carry out destructive activities.

Habibur urged the city dwellers to provide police with information about the new tenants.

around half an hour," Mahbub said.

Mohibur Rahman, state minister for disaster management and relief, said over Tk 500 crore worth of damage was done in the arson attack at the DMD office.

"A five-member probe committee, headed by a DMD Director Abdullah Al Noman, was formed to ascertain the exact amount of damage. It was asked to submit a report within seven days," he told reporters yesterday.

Meanwhile, he said, a case was filed with Banani Police Station on July 20 over the attack.

Other establishments that came under such attacks were the Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS) office; Setu Bhaban; BTV centre; the Mohakhali and Banani toll plazas; BRTA Bhaban; the office of the Assistant Superintendent of Police (Traffic) in Badda; Badda Ansar camp; Mirpur Indoor Stadium; Mirpur-10 police box and footbridge; and the Matsya Bhaban.

The destruction between July 18 and 19 were carried out during the unrest centring the quota reform movement.

So far, at least 146 people were killed in the clashes across the country.

The organisers of the quota movement have vehemently denied any protesting student's involvement in the destruction.

Meanwhile, the ruling Awami League has been pointing fingers at BNP-Jamaat men.

Visiting the DGHS yesterday, these correspondents found 22 vehicles vandalised and 19 others completely burnt in front of the directorate's old building.

Pieces of the shattered glass walls, doors, and windows at the MIS (Management Information System) and Old DGHS buildings were strewn all over the place.

Rezaul Karim, an Ansar member and a witness, said, "Some 200-300 people, armed with sharp weapons, entered the building chanting "capture DGHS [Dhor Shastho Odhidaptar]" around 4:15pm [on July 19]. They threatened the on-duty five Ansar members, and vandalised the parked vehicles and structures."

The attackers were carrying red and black bags from where they pulled out petrol, which they poured on the vehicles to set them ablaze, he added.

"We informed our bosses and they called the national emergency helpline-999, seeking help but they too expressed their helplessness."

The toll plazas of elevated expressway at Mohakhali and Banani-2, were also set on fire at 5:00pm and burned till 8:20pm on July 18. The correspondents saw the charred iron structures with ashes all around.

Md Sakib, a security guard of the Mohakhali toll plaza, said, "Several hundred people carrying machetes and sticks first vandalised the toll plaza. Before leaving, two of them set those on fire using petrol."

The toll plaza authorities too called police, whose response, yet again, came in the negative.

Sakib, who witnessed it, added that the attackers did not look like students.

Fazlul Haque, security supervisor of Banani-2 toll plaza, gave a similar description.

In front of Setu Bhaban in Banani, these correspondents saw two burnt cars still lying on the road. The glass front of the building was shattered.

Inside, five motorcycles and 48 cars were burnt while the ground and first floors of the 12-storey building were vandalised and burnt at places.

Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader's room was vandalised, while computers, laptops, televisions and other valuables were looted from the building.

Nearby, BRTA headquarters and the Roads and Highway's executive engineer's Dhaka office were also vandalised and two cars torched.

Bangladesh Television centre in Rampura was also vandalised and set on fire.

BTV Director General Jahangir Hossain said the design section was fully gutted, while the administrative and studio rooms, along with the auditorium, were torched. Cameras and laptops were stolen.

"The attackers also looted the vintage cameras from the BTV museum," he said, adding that 18 vehicles, including a telecast car, were burnt and nine others were vandalised.

In Badda, attackers torched the zonal office of Assistant Commissioner of Police (traffic) and the Ansar Camp office, where at least seven burnt cars were found.

At the Mirpur-10 roundabout, the traffic police box and footbridge were set ablaze, rendering them unusable.

Visiting Badda, Rampura, Mirpur and Banani areas, these correspondents found that at least five burnt cars lying on roads. Streel materials from the road dividers, lampposts, and signboards were also found broken.

Quota reforms on PM's table abolished quotas for ninth to 13th grade recruitments.

A BCS cadre joins the civil service in the ninth grade.

Earlier yesterday, the public administration ministry official told journalists that a briefing would be held at the minister's residence at 5:30pm.

Around 6:30pm, the minister told reporters that they sent the summery of the proposal to the prime minister and they would issue the circular once the PM approves it.

The minister reappeared before the journalists around 9:45pm and said they had the PM's approval. He sat down for the press briefing but immediately left to receive a phone call. Some TV channels then reported that the circular had been issued.

Meanwhile, some top officials of the ministry had a meeting with the minister.

Farhad again sat for the press briefing around 10:45pm and once again left to pick up a phone call.

Half an hour later, he said they would hold a press conference on the circular during a curfew break today.

The government move to issue a circular came a day after a Supreme Court verdict set 93 percent jobs in the civil service on merit. There will be five percent quota for children of freedom fighters, martyred freedom fighters and Biranganas, one percent for ethnic minorities and one percent for people with disabilities and of third gender.

This major reform to the quota system was made in the wake of a massive student protest.

At least 146 people were killed and several thousand injured since Tuesday last week after law enforcers and ruling party men clashed with protesters in Dhaka and elsewhere.

The sheer scale of violence prompted the government to impose a curfew and deploy the armed forces across the country.

In October 2018, the government, through a hastily issued circular, scrapped the quota system for recruitments in grade 9-13 following students' demonstrations for quota reforms.

But the students did not want the quota system to be abolished, they rather wanted it reformed.

At that time, there was 30 percent quota for freedom fighters' children and grandchildren, 10 percent for districts that are lagging behind, 10 percent for women, five percent for ethnic minorities and one percent for physically challenged people.

The government decision to abolish the quota system was challenged in the High Court by seven children of freedom fighters. In response, the HC on June 5 declared the government circular illegal, essentially reinstating the 56 percent quota in government jobs.

The HC verdict sparked students' protests on public university campuses. Students from private universities, colleges, and in some cases from schools joined in.

The protests intensified after the Supreme Court on July 4 declined to stay the HC verdict.

After three days of nationwide demonstrations, the SC issued a status quo on the HC verdict and set August 7 for a hearing. The decision did little to pacify the protesters.

As protests escalated and the death toll climbed, the government requested the top court to hold an early hearing.

The seven-member full bench of the Appellate Division of the SC, led by Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan, on Sunday issued the order regarding reforms of the quota system.

Referring to past destructive activities like arson attacks by "BNP-Jamaat clique," including those in 2013-14, she said her government had taken steps as per the law, according to the UNB report.

"We ensured punishment for many of them, but after getting out of jail, they are showing their old face again. This time we will not spare them so easily like in the past," she said.

Hasina, also the ruling Awami League president, said the country will return to normal very soon with gradual relaxation of the ongoing curfew, imposed on Friday night in the wake of a massive nationwide unrest centring quota reform protests.

"I want to improve the situation quickly, and we have already been able to calm down the situation. The curfew will be relaxed more in the coming days."

The PM said the government was forced to impose curfew to save the lives and properties of the people.

According to The Daily Star count, at least 146 people have been killed across the country since Tuesday, although the death toll may rise. Also, dozens of public and private establishments, including BTV centre and two Metro stations, and scores of vehicles were vandalised or burned or both.

"Many people wanted to tell we have deployed army against the students. I am doing politics and I have come here after doing student politics. We have tried till the last moment to resolve the matter politically. After that we have been forced to deploy the army."

Students are the most sensitive subjects, and the government has to look after the students and their security, she said adding that the government had tried to provide them security by the police and other law enforcement agencies.

When destructive activities began, the students said they were not involved with those activities. They also condemned those activities, she said.

"Only then did we deploy the army. We did not deploy the army before that," the PM said, adding that she is worried about the trade and commerce of the country in the wake of the situation.

"I have invited you here and we need your support and cooperation to run trade and commerce," she told the businesspeople.

Talking about a rumour that she had left the country, she said, "Sheikh Hasina never flees."

She said that when she sits with businesspeople, she does see who is in favour of BNP or who is in favour of Jamaat. "I know everyone. I never identify businesspeople based on their party affiliations, because I love my country."

Regarding business communities' demand for opening mills and factories, she said the government will allow those to open once it is convinced that there is no risk in a particular area.

"You can also reopen your factories and mills if you want at your own peril. If anything happens, you will be responsible for that," she said.

FBCCI President Mahbubul Alam, BGMEA President Abdul Mannan Kochi, Banks Association of Bangladesh (BAB) President Nazrul Islam Majumder, Shop Owners Association President Helal Uddin, BKMEA leader Mohammad Hatem, Basundhara Chairman Ahmed Akbar Sobhan, Syed Nasim Manzur of Apex, and Pran Group Chairman Ahsan Khan Chowdhury also spoke.

A documentary on the recent carnage was screened at the programme.

After a halt to businesses activities due to violence and curfew, the businesses yesterday demanded a quick restoration of the normal business environment and internet services as losses pile up.

Goods transport, production, sales, financial transactions in banks and even in the financial mobile services remain halted.

FBCCI President Mahbubul Alam led the business delegation to place their demand.

After the meeting, FBCCI Senior Vice-President Md Amin Helaly said they mainly placed three demands to the PM -- restoration of normalcy in business, restoration of the internet service and normalcy in transport of essential goods.

Garment factory and textile mill owners demanded that the government allow them to open their units.

Nearly 450 heads or representatives of trade bodies, business chambers, individual businessman from the capital, divisions and districts joined the 2-hour meeting from 3:00pm.

BGMEA President SM Mannan Kochi said they are counting losses every day as their factories remain closed.

Nasim Manzur of Apex wanted to know at the meeting if the intelligence agencies gave any alert about the unrest.

"If not, it should be investigated why they have failed," he said.

even estimate how much more public money will have to be spent [for the recovery]."

Asked what is his message for those involved in the subversive activities, he said, "I have one message for them: anyone may have grievances, but what's the point in destroying public property?"

Terming the destruction "incomprehensible", the army chief said those properties did not belong to any individual, but to the public. "We the people are the sufferers. I don't know what would be gained from this."

He said the armed forces have been deployed to protect public property and they are committed to do so.

Replying to a query, General Waker said supply of essentials through Jatrabari, which was blocked for four to five days, has resumed already.

"Aviation fuel delivery to Dhaka airport from Narayanganj [through Jatrabari] has started," he said, adding that it might take a little time to normalise the flow.

"We will have to restore confidence among people. We will have to reassure the drivers. I think it will happen in a couple of days."

Asked when the situation will become normal, he said, "Give us a little time. We have been here for only 48 hours. I believe, if all of us work together, we will achieve that goal soon."

He said the air force, navy and police are playing an important role alongside the army. Together with Rab, BGB, and Ansar forces, we are working to improve the situation, he added.

"I am sure we are heading towards the right direction," said the army chief.

Restore internet, withdraw curfew

Demands platform of university teachers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

University Teachers Network (UTN) yesterday called upon the authorities concerned to immediately withdraw the countrywide curfew and resume internet services to end public sufferings.

Due to the disruption, people are struggling to get essential services, the platform of public university teaches said in a statement.

The government imposed the nationwide curfew from early Saturday and internet services were also shutdown as scores were killed and many government establishments were torched and vandalised amid the clashes between law enforcers and protesters.

"Mindless killing of people has to be stopped now and those who have gone missing should be traced immediately," reads the statement.

The platform called for proper and non-partisan inquiry into the killings by a neutral probe body to be formed in line with different global human rights instruments.

It called upon everyone to not "dehumanise" the protesters and refrain from using any offensive words against

BNP-Jamaat behind attacks, sabotage: Arafat

UNB, Dhaka

State Minister for Information and Broadcasting Mohammad A Arafat yesterday said BNP-Jamaat activists carried out attacks across the country as part of their well-thought and pre-designed blueprint to disconnect the country from the world and stop development efforts.

"Look at their dress-up, approach and attitude," he said, adding that even some of the attackers were drugged.

He was highlighting the extent of the destruction caused to the government properties at a views-exchange meeting between Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina and the country's business leaders.

Arafat said BNP-Jamaat cadres are responsible for staging sabotage in the country while the attackers targeted general people and key establishments.

He said a solution is being found through discussion with students while curfew was imposed to check the attackers.

The government said the ill motive of the perpetrators was exposed when the coordinators of the quota protests made public statements denying any involvement in the indiscriminate violence, vandalism and arsons and called on all quarters not to take evil political advantage from their apolitical movement.

SAUDI ARABIA-BOUND MIGRANTS

Stranded, they continue to suffer

RASHIDUL HASAN and JAMIL MAHMUD

Md Mahbul, a Saudi-bound migrant worker, was scheduled to fly for the KSA at 2:35am on July 19. However, his flight was cancelled due to technical issues caused by countrywide internet shutdown.

He was forced to stay overnight at the Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport as there was no arrangement from the authorities concerned for accommodation and food for the stranded passengers.

Like Mahbul, several hundred migrant workers had to face massive troubles at the Dhaka Airport due to cancellation or delay of flights of different airlines including Saudia, Air Arabia and Emirates in the last three days since Friday.

Many of the passengers got stranded at the airport or had to stay outside the airport as international flights were either delayed or cancelled due to a technical glitch related to global Microsoft flight data and lack of passengers amid road blocks by demonstrators and the curfew.

Mahbul, who came to Dhaka from Pabna while suffering huge hassle on the road, said, "As there was unrest in different parts of the country, I didn't dare to go back to Pabna. Instead, I decided to stay in Dhaka as I was not sure when my flight will be rescheduled."

Saiful, another Saudi-bound migrant, whose flight also got cancelled on July 20, said, "We contribute to the country's economy with our hard-earned money. But the respective ministry or any other government authorities bothered little to look after us during this hard situation."

Sakibul Hasan of Bhola, another Saudi-bound migrant, said, "I have been at the airport for the last 16 hours to learn when my flight has been rescheduled. But neither the airlines authorities, nor airport authorities could give us any information."

"At the airport, I had to cross half a kilometre to get water and food while carrying my heavy luggage on my head, as there was no such arrangement at the waiting area outside the terminal," said a frustrated Sakibul.

Amid the sufferings of migrant workers, Aviation Minister Mohammad Faruk Khan on Saturday said for migrant workers, there were arrangements for food and accommodation at the Hajj Camp and the rest house of expatriates' welfare ministry at city's Ashkona.

But several migrant workers

COUNTRYWIDE VIOLENCE

Power sector incurs loss of Tk 1,000cr, DNCC Tk 205cr

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The power sector incurred a loss of at least Tk 1,000 crore during the violence centring the quota reform protest, said State Minister for Power, Energy and Mineral Resources Nasrul Hamid yesterday.

He said the saboteurs were BNP-Jamaat men. The miscreants vandalised, looted or torched at least five power sub-stations in Dhaka and beyond.

Besides, Palli Bidyut offices in Narsingdi and Narayanganj were torched and vandalised.

When sufferings of people failing to recharge pre-paid meters without the internet were brought to his attention, he said the situation is improving.

"Zonal offices of the power distribution companies have been recharging the prepaid customers... They are working 24 hours... we have increased limit of the emergency balance," he added.

Meanwhile, Dhaka North City Corporation incurred a loss of around Tk 205 crore in the unrest centring the student protest on quota reform on Friday and Saturday.

The city corporation said one-fourth of DNCC vehicles tasked with garbage management had been set on fire.

DNCC Mayor Md Atiqul Islam presented a primary estimation of their loss at a press conference held at Nagar Bhaban in Gulshan yesterday.

The mayor said most of the damages were reported from Mirpur-10, amounting to Tk 120 crore.

He said a footbridge at Mirpur-10 intersection, four garbage carrying compactors and 29 vehicles including 10 garbage carrying container careers had completely been burnt on Friday and Saturday.

DNCC faced a loss of around Tk 3.10 crore in zone-1 and zone-5, Tk 1.25 crore in zone-3 and around Tk 7 lakh in zone-6.

Besides, LED lights, road medians and similar structures were vandalised in areas under DNCC, amounting to Tk 65 crore in damages.

Also, a storm sewage pump was damaged in Rampura, disabling DNCC to pump out additional water from Hatirjheel now, the mayor said.

3RD DAY OF CURFEW IN DHAKA

Free from violence but far from normal

MD SHAHNAWAZ KHAN CHANDAN

After nearly a week of chaos, no incidence of violence or clash was reported inside Dhaka on the third day of curfew. People were seen heading to kitchen markets, grocery stores and paying utility bills.

Nasrin Akhter, a resident in Dhanmondi area, moved out to dump the household garbage into a garbage can located a few hundred metres away from her home.

"Cleaners and garbage collectors from the city corporation could not come to our building for the last five days due to clashes. Many of these wastes started to rot and stink. So, I came out myself to dump it into the local garbage container."

Although there was no violence on the streets, the situation was still far from normal. Most of the shops, shopping malls, restaurants, public places and offices were closed throughout the city. Public transport was absent like the previous days. App-based ride sharing services were closed as the internet shutdown is still in effect.

Very few private vehicles were plying the roads and people were using mostly rickshaws and battery-powered auto-rickshaws to move about. They said rickshaw-pullers were asking for exorbitant fares taking advantage of the situation.

Naimur Rahman was trying to go to Farmgate from Mohammadpur but failed to find any rickshaw. He said, "The usual fare should be Tk 80. But, rickshaw-pullers are asking Tk 140-150."

Although there was no violence on the street yesterday, people are now in fear of getting arrested as news of mass arrests made rounds on mainstream media.

Sadequr Rahman, a delivery man of an app-based company, said, "There are thousands of youth like me who are now sitting idle at home without any work due to curfew and internet shutdown. We have no income for a week and now we are passing days with extreme fear and anxiety as we are getting news of mass arrests."

Suraiya Akhter, a sales worker of a shopping mall in Farmgate, said, "The government should bring the country back into normalcy as soon as possible."

People suffer for power outage

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

Residents of Boalkhali and Patiya upazilas in Chattogram suffered a lot due to prolonged power outages following technical glitch in the supply line of Palli Bidyut yesterday.

Farzana Akter from Boalkhali said power went out at around 6:00am and came around 11:30am; later, it went out again around noon and didn't come till 6:00pm.

"We are suffering in the sweltering heat," she said, adding, "We cannot recharge our mobile phone sets and cannot communicate with others over phone for emergency purposes."

Mizanur Rahman, deputy general manager of Chattogram Palli Bidyut Samity-1, said as the technical glitch occurred in the breaker of supply grid, power outage started in those areas.

"A total of 72,000 clients are there in the zone under Palli Bidyut," he added.

Three children drown in ponds

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Jamalpur

Three children drowned in ponds in Jamalpur yesterday afternoon.

The incident took place at Kalkihara and Malirchor villages in Bokshiganj upazila, police quoted locals as saying.

At Kalkihara, Shoeb Hassan, 6, son of Gofur Badsha; and Robiul Miah, 8, son of Ayob Mia, drowned while they were bathing in a pond near their houses around 5:00pm, said Abdul Ahad Khan, officer-in-charge of Bokshiganj Police Station.

Meanwhile, Safa Aktar, 4, daughter of Raju Miah from Malirchor village, drowned in a pond, said the OC. The bodies were handed over to the families.

This roll of cable was burnt during the violence on July 18. DPDC was installing underground wires in Basila area of Mohammadpur, when miscreants set it on fire. The photo was taken yesterday afternoon.

NATIONWIDE CURFEW

7,500 tourists stuck in Cox's Bazar

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Around 7,500 tourists have been trapped in Cox's Bazar amid the ongoing nationwide curfew.

Being anxious to return home, they are collecting curfew passes from deputy commissioner's office, so that they can have a safe passage.

They are also facing massive financial troubles due to the online banking system not working because of the nationwide internet shutdown.

Mohammad Yousuf, a tourist from Dhaka's Elephant Road, said he and his friend came to Cox's Bazar on July 17 for two days.

However, due to the curfew, they got trapped here, and they were already out of cash as they could not withdraw any money through mobile banking services, he said.

"We had to get our meals and stay at the hotel on credit. Later, we managed to pay our bills after we could withdraw some money from a distant ATM booth. Since we have been staying at the hotel due to an unfortunate circumstance, it would be nice if the hotel gave us a discount, but they didn't give any," said Yousuf.

Another tourist Morium said she came on a two-night trip with 50 of her colleagues four days ago, but still they have not been able to leave Cox's Bazar due to curfew.

The extended stay is hurting them financially, she added.

Masud Rana, an executive magistrate, said the district administration is arranging buses with regular fare for the trapped tourists to leave Cox's Bazar.

"Around 50 buses will leave Cox's Bazar tomorrow [today] morning with the trapped tourists," he added.

Around 4,000 curfew passes were issued to the tourists on Sunday and many others were being issued passes yesterday, Masud Rana told The Daily Star in the evening.

According to the District Tourist Police, around 7,500 tourists are trapped in the Cox's Bazar, he added.

Meanwhile, tourists complained that they are having to pay higher fares for both buses and airlines.

Sirajul Islam, a tourist from Narayanganj's Araihazar, said the same sleeper coach that carried them to Cox's Bazar for Tk 1,100 per seat, is now asking Tk 2,500 for the return ticket.

Iftekhar Mahmud, a businessman from Dhanmondi, said airline companies are asking Tk 8,000 to Tk 11,000 for return tickets, while the fare was Tk 5,500 when he was getting tickets to come to Cox's Bazar.

'Reducing quota for indigenous people not logical'

Says Adivasi Quota Sangrakkhan Parishad

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Reducing the quota for people from indigenous communities in government jobs from five percent to one percent is not logical, said Alik Mree, convenor of the Adivasi Quota Sangrakkhan Parishad.

"Now it would be impossible for indigenous community members to attain higher growth through sustainable and inclusive development as pledged in the SDGs," he said in a text message.

Besides, the pledge to change the quality of living standard by reducing poverty and inequality among the marginalised communities will be also not viable, he also said.

The quota reduction will keep the indigenous communities lagging behind, which will in turn impede the building of "Smart Bangladesh" and attaining the SDGs, he remarked.

Mree urged the Supreme Court and the government to restore the five percent quota for indigenous communities in government jobs.

Pahari Chhatra Parishad in a statement yesterday demanded that the government restore the five percent quota for indigenous communities.

Surrender or face stern action

IGP warns convicts who fled Narsingdi jail; 64 out of 826 arrested so far

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narsingdi

Inspector General of Police Chowdhury Abdullah Al Mamun yesterday said police will take stern action against the convicts who fled from Narsingdi District Jail on July 19 unless they surrender immediately.

"We urge all the convicts, who have fled, to surrender. Otherwise, we will take stern action against them," he said.

Police have so far arrested 64 out of the total 826 convicts who fled from the jail, and recovered 21 of the 85 arms that were looted on the same day, the IGP said while briefing reporters in front of the Narsingdi jail premises yesterday.

The IGP also announced a reward of Tk 50,000 to anyone who will provide information or help to recover the looted arms.

Narsingdi Deputy Commissioner Badiul Alam and Superintendent of Police Mohammad Mustafizur Rahman were present among other senior officials at the briefing.

Contacted, Tanvir Hasan, officer-in-charge of Narsingdi Sadar Police Station, yesterday said few convicts have already surrendered to them. He, however, did not mention the number of convicts who surrendered.

On July 19, a total of 826 convicts fled from the jail, while 85 arms and 9,000 bullets were looted.

Meanwhile, two separate committees have been formed to investigate the incident.

them, urging the authorities to publish identities of the murdered and injured ones.

The platform said the government has to withdraw "false and fabricated" cases against student protesters and other innocent people.

Besides, safety of all student coordinators has to be ensured, it added.

It said those who were injured should be provided with adequate treatment.

The platform condemned atrocities allegedly committed by police and other law enforcement agency members and demanded that the power of those who gave the orders should be curtailed and that they should be brought under an accountability framework.

It said before resuming classes across the country, an education-friendly environment has to be ensured.

It said a "delayed" but recent verdict from the country's apex court came as a positive development in regards to fulfilling demands of the students, however, their eight-point demand was still awaiting implementation.

Meanwhile, Gonoforum, in a statement, demanded prosecution of those who killed protesting students, a cease to the ongoing mass arrests and harassment, release of all political prisoners and re-opening of all educational institutions.

Social Resistance Committee, a platform of 66 women, human rights and development organisations, expressed deep concern over the latest verdict of the Appellate Division that eliminated the female quota.

"The SDG-5 clearly mentions equality of men and women and female quota is necessary to achieve that goal," said Bangladesh Mahila Parishad President Fauzia Moslem, on behalf of the platform, in a statement.

Meanwhile, 25 female rights activists and teachers termed the Supreme Court's verdict on quota system "confusing, illogical and a farce", and demanded its withdrawal.

In a joint statement, they said the SC verdict was "a trap to confuse the ongoing just protests against the fascist government".

"The government has tried to blackout the information of killing at least 174 general people with internet shutdown and by imposing curfew," reads the statement sent through a text message.

Signatories of the statement include: Bangladesh Nari Mukti Kendra president Sima Dutta; rights activist Rehnuma Ahmed; Dhaka University teacher Samina Lutfa Nitra; Bangladesh Hill Women Federation president Niti Chakma; artist Sayan; and teacher Monira Sharmin.

Stranded, they continue yesterday claimed the situation at Ashkona Hajj Camp and the rest house is not good at all.

Besides, the roads that lead to the two places are unable to be used as those are under repair, they said.

While visiting Dhaka airport yesterday afternoon, hundreds of exhausted migrant workers were found waiting for 8-12 hours for their flights.

Shariful Hasan, associate director of BRAC Migration Programme, said many migrant workers, both outbound and returnees, were affected due to the curfew and internet shutdown.

"There was fear and uncertainty among the migrants to catch their flights on time amid the situation. As a result, many reached the capital from different districts a day before and later found it difficult to spend the night," Shariful said.

BRAC has provided support to many migrants in distress, he said.

Hamidur Rahman, director general of Wage Earners' Welfare Board, said currently they provide accommodation facilities to both outbound and returnee migrants at the Bangabandhu Wage Earners' Centre at Khilkhet, where 50 people can reside at a time.

If required, migrants can use the facility as a short-time shelter, he said, adding that they also have ambulance service at the airport. Meanwhile, sources at HSIA said at least 12 international flights were cancelled and many others delayed in the last four days.

The CPA is also trying to adopt manual documentations as a part of its efforts to keep the port running, he said.

Transport of import and export-laden containers between the port and the private ICDs, however, improved a bit yesterday morning.

Four vessels departed from the port yesterday and they took almost all of the containers for which bookings had been placed on them.

Far East Group, a Gazipur-based garment factory, imported three containers of cotton and chemicals from China and India which were unloaded from a ship on July 17.

The assessment and payment of duties against these consignments were completed by July 19 but they could not be delivered until yesterday, said Kamruzzaman Sagar, proprietor of ABS Corporation, the clearing and forwarding agent.

Because of the internet blackout, the three containers could neither be traced nor be run through a final verification by customs in the last three days, he said, adding that it was difficult to carry out these activities manually.

Hall owners face huge losses, look to recoup with 'Toofan'

It seemed like silver-screen cinema was finally back, when 'Toofan' started breaking all records for a Bangladeshi film. However, the unforeseen situation has seemed to put a halt to that.

ZAHID AKBAR

Irrespective of whether it was on single-screens or multiplexes, Shakib Khan starrer Toofan was doing incredible business in cinema halls after its release this Eid-ul-Azha. The Raihan Rafi directorial was expected to run for the foreseeable future before the quota reform protests started. According to the producers, the film earned around Tk 25 crores, a rare feat for a Bangladeshi film. Even though some people did go see the film at the start of the movement, cinema halls had to close down after nationwide violence started, claiming the lives of many involved.

In the past few years, films like Hawa, Poran and Priyotoma showed that there is still promise for Bangladeshi films, and if done right, it can pull people to cinema halls despite the dominance of OTT.

Hall owners now are facing considerable losses during the current curfew, as noted by Mesbah Uddin Ahmed, senior manager at Star Cineplex, the country's biggest multiplex chain. "We were running 46 shows of Toofan, it was doing really well for us," he said. "However, we had to close down. It is unfortunate, as no film in recent memory made as many records as this film – and now, we are facing huge losses which will be hard to recoup if we have to keep the halls closed for a few more days."

Iftekhar Uddin Nawshad, owner of Madhumita Cinema, is distraught at the situation. "After a huge gap, we started seeing good business with Toofan – the timing of closure could not have been more unfortunate. I do understand that this is a national emergency, but so many lives depend on our business as well. What I can tell you is after the situation is better, we will run the film again to attract people to our halls.

Shyamoli Cinema's Ahsanullah also echoed the same sentiment, "We had to keep our hall closed from July 19 onwards, was it even possible to run films in this situation? Thanks to Shakib Khan, we finally started seeing profitable days, but that has been upended by the nationwide violence. We hope to keep Toofan running after the situation gets better."

'Sitting at home, hoping for normalcy'

Chanchal Chowdhury was in the USA when the quota reform movement started in Bangladesh. However, the actor had no idea that it would lead to so much violence. He is now at home, hoping for the situation to return to normal. "I am shocked at the amount of violence that has ensued, must there have been bloodshed?", he said. "I am now obeying the rules of the curfew, and I can only hope that we can once again see normalcy in our beloved country."

Chirkutt's Dhaka return delayed amidst protests

Known as Bangladesh's 'international' act, Chirkutt was on its Canada tour for the past month, and was supposed to return to Dhaka on July 20. However, the band's flight has been delayed, amidst continued violence. "We are horrified to learn about the situation in our beloved country," said Pavel, the band's drummer. "We are all praying that we can all get through this together." The band hopes to return as soon as it is safer to land in Dhaka.

Trump, Vance heap scorn on Biden, Harris

AFP, Washington

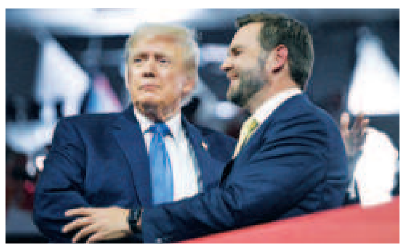
Donald Trump and running mate J D Vance on Sunday slammed the record of Joe Biden and Kamala Harris, as the incumbent bowed out of the White House race and sought to pass the torch to his number two.

Biden's momentous decision to ditch his reelection bid was met with quick scorn from Republican presidential candidate Trump, in a series of posts on his Truth Social platform.

"Crooked Joe Biden was not fit to run for President, and is certainly not fit to serve - And never was!" Trump wrote. "Whoever the Left puts up now will just be more of the same."

Then his campaign team piled on, lashing into the vice president after Biden endorsed her to take his place atop the Democratic Party's presidential ticket, saying she would be "even worse" than the outgoing leader.

"Harris will be even worse for the people of our nation than Joe Biden. Harris has been the Enabler in Chief for Crooked Joe this entire time. They own each other's records, and there is no distance between the two," the campaign said in a statement.



Later, it was Vance's turn to heap scorn on Biden and Harris.

"Joe Biden has been the worst President in my lifetime and Kamala Harris has been right there with him every step of the way," the Republican senator wrote on X, saying Harris had "lied for nearly four years about Biden's mental capacity."

"President Trump and I are ready to save America, whoever's at the top of the Democrat ticket. Bring it on," Vance concluded.

The Republican convention last week has put the party unity on display, in contrast to the divisions roiling Democrats. Trump's former top rivals for the nomination, former UN envoy Nikki Haley and Florida Governor Ron DeSantis, offered strong endorsements of his candidacy despite their past criticisms.

US PRESIDENTIAL RACE

What happens after Biden exit?

AFP, Washington

US President Joe Biden's decision Sunday to withdraw from the presidential race at such a late date -- just over 100 days until the November 5 election -- is unprecedented in modern US electoral history.

In the coming days, Biden's fellow Democrats "will undertake a transparent and orderly process to move forward as a united Democratic Party with a candidate who can defeat Donald Trump in November," chairman Jaime Harrison said in a statement.

Here's a look at how replacing the 81-year-old could work.

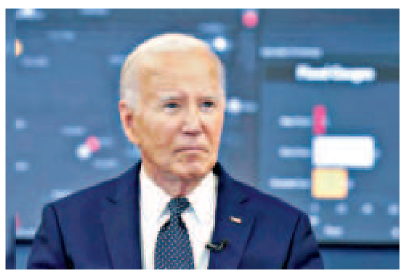
CHAOTIC CONVENTION?

To designate a formal nominee, delegates chosen from all 50 states, the US capital and overseas territories attend their party's summer nominating convention to officially anoint a candidate.

Biden overwhelmingly won the primary votes, and the party's roughly 3,900 delegates heading to the convention -- scheduled to begin August 19 in Chicago -- are pledged to back him.

Party leaders had previously planned to formally nominate Biden via a virtual roll call ahead of the convention, due to potential legal issues regarding Ohio.

With Biden exiting, it is unclear if or when that early meeting will occur, but naming his replacement will ultimately fall to the delegates.



"Our delegates are prepared to take seriously their responsibility in swiftly delivering a candidate to the American people," Harrison said, adding that the "process will be governed by established rules and procedures of the Party."

The last-minute change could bring US politics back to the old days, when party bosses jostled to pick a nominee through deal-making in smoke-filled back rooms and endless rounds of voting.

On March 31, 1968, then-president Lyndon Johnson made the shock announcement in the middle of the Vietnam War that he would not seek reelection.

The move -- though announced far earlier in the campaign than Biden's -- turned that year's convention, also in Chicago, into a political crisis, with protesters in the streets and left-leaning delegates angry at the pro-war stance of party-picked candidate Hubert Humphrey. Following that debacle, states more widely embraced primary process and conventions have become well-oiled affairs whose outcomes are effectively known in advance.

WHO MIGHT STEP IN?

A natural -- but not automatic -- pick to take Biden's place would be Vice President Kamala Harris, whom Biden quickly endorsed Sunday -- and who vowed to pick up the baton.

Otherwise, any of a number of strong Democratic politicians -- Governors Gavin Newsom of California, Gretchen Whitmer of Michigan and Josh Shapiro of Pennsylvania have been mentioned -- might be called on.

Ukrainian drone strikes spark fire at Russian oil refinery

AFP, Kyiv

A barrage of Ukrainian drones sparked a blaze overnight at an oil refinery and separately killed one person in southern Russia, officials in Russia and Ukraine said yesterday.

Kyiv and Moscow have intensified fatal cross-border missile and drone attacks over recent months with both sides primarily targeting energy infrastructure.

Authorities in the Russian Black Sea town of Tuapse in the Krasnodar region said debris from one downed drone sparked a fire at an oil refinery.

The governor of Russia's southern Belgorod region meanwhile said one person driving a tractor was killed by a Ukrainian drone and his wife had been injured. A source in the Ukrainian defence sector said drones linked to the Defence Intelligence of Ukraine were behind the oil refinery attack and that the facility was operated by Russian state energy giant Rosneft.

Taiwan remodels war games in the face of China's threats

AFP, Taipei

Taiwan launched annual war games yesterday aiming to more realistically simulate an attack from China, dropping drills deemed to be out-of-touch with the growing threat of conflict.

Self-ruled Taiwan's military has discarded exercises "that were more for demonstration purposes", such as live-fire drills laid on for the media on the main island, said new Defence Minister Wellington Koo.

Officials have said such drills will now be held on Taiwan's outlying islands, where Chinese vessels and warplanes have edged closer in recent months, and that troops would now take part in "impromptu" exercises.

The changes come as Beijing, which claims Taiwan as part of its territory, has increased its military presence in skies and waters around the island. "Nowadays the situation is more threatened than before, so this type of public relations exercise is useless," Ou Sifu of Taiwan's Institute of National Defense and Security Research said of previous drills.

Apart from the daily financial losses of Tk 70-80 crore due to the internet outage, the country will face a long-term image crisis in the international market, said Rashad Kabir, managing director of software firm Dream71.

"The international buyers won't consider Bangladesh as an outsourcing destination in the future because commitment and timely delivery are most important for them."

There is a high chance that these buyers will shift to India, Vietnam, the Philippines and other competitor countries, according to Rashad.

At one point, the agitators set the building on fire. The trapped police personnel went to the roof and were rescued by a helicopter.

The commission was asked to submit its probe report to the government within 30 working days.

Meanwhile, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court on Sunday said it expects the commission to unearth the reasons behind the death of each and every student and the government to take necessary legal steps against those responsible as per the recommendations of the commission.

Biden exit offers scope, pitfalls for Democrats in the strongest position to replace him and may be able to consolidate support in the coming days -- a coronation that would allow Democrats to turn their fire on Trump.

If that doesn't happen then a chaotic -- and potentially damaging -- fight for the votes of almost 4,000 delegates at the Democratic National Convention in Chicago in just four weeks looks more likely.

The party's national chairman Jaime Harrison promised a "transparent and orderly process" to replace Biden, the first president since Democrat Lyndon B. Johnson in 1968 not to seek a second term.

His campaign began collapsing after his dismal debate performance against Trump last month prompted concerns over his advanced years and mental capacity.

Trump, who would be 82 at the end of a second term, appeared more robust -- but opposition from a younger candidate would turn the spotlight on his speeches and interviews, where he often appears incoherent and confuses names.

Several rising Democratic stars -- all younger than 60 -- have been floated as Biden alternatives, including governors Josh Shapiro, Gretchen Whitmer and Gavin Newsom.

Whitmer immediately appeared to suggest she would not be running and Newsom has previously said he would not challenge Harris, but neither explicitly ruled themselves out.

A campaign led by Harris and backed up by a moderate mid-western running mate could present the best chance for Democrats -- helping turn out more women, who historically vote in greater numbers than men and are a weakness for Trump.

Harris would also give Democrats a chance to redefine the race at their convention as a clash of cultures between a former prosecutor and a convicted felon.

"While she has largely been in the shadows for the last four years it is time for Kamala the prosecutor... to make her comeback," said Sara Sadhwani, an assistant professor of politics at Pomona College in Claremont, California.

A new survey from Democratic polling firm Public Policy Polling released Thursday found that Harris -- with the right running mate -- could defeat Trump and Vance in Pennsylvania and Michigan, two of the three "Blue Wall" states seen as critical to electing a Democratic president.

Ryan Waite, a political marketing expert from Brigham Young University-Idaho, told AFP a contested nomination might actually benefit Democrats by depriving Trump of headlines for several months.

"A new Democrat candidate will benefit from a short vetting window and significant earned media impact right before the election," he told AFP. "The story is now who will it be and that will take the air out of the room through their convention."

2024 decisive to ending AIDS as health threat: UN

AFP, Geneva

Decisions political leaders take this year will be decisive whether a target to end AIDS as a public health threat by 2030 can be reached, the United Nations said yesterday.

Figures from 2023 show a global improvement in the number of new infections, the treatment of HIV-positive patients and a fall in the number of fatalities, but UNAIDS warned such progress remains fragile.

Nearly 40 million people are living with HIV, the virus that can cause AIDS, the new UN report said.

Around 1.3 million new infections were recorded last year, an increase of 100,000 compared to 2022 but a significant fall since a peak of 3.3 million in 1995.

But the long-term trend is still way off a UNAIDS target of 330,000 new infections next year.

Figures for AIDS-related deaths are also down, from 670,000 in 2022 to 630,000 last year, according to the report.

Access to antiretroviral medication is a major issue, with 30.7 million patients receiving such treatment compared to just 7.7 million in 2010. But the figure falls far short of a target of 34 million set for 2025.

Eastern and southern Africa remain the most-affected regions, with 20.8 people living with HIV, 450,000 infected last year and 260,000 fatalities.

While recognising the progress, UNAIDS chief Winnie Byanyima said the world is not on the right track to reaching the agency's 2030 objectives.

"The inequalities that drive the HIV pandemic are not being addressed sufficiently," Byanyima said in the report.

"A person dies from AIDS-related causes every minute," she added.

Stigma, discrimination and sometimes criminalisation affects certain groups, resulting in much higher infection rates because people are unable to seek help and treatment without danger.

Globally, the prevalence of AIDS among people aged 15 to 49 is 0.8 percent, but 1.3 percent among prisoners and 2.3 percent among women and girls aged 15 to 24 in eastern and southern Africa.

Infection rates rise further among sex workers (three percent), people who inject drugs (five percent), gay people and men who have sex with men (7.7 percent) and transgender people (9.2 percent).

In an AFP interview, Byanyima criticised a "well-coordinated, well-resourced pushback" against LGBTQ rights, reproductive rights and gender equality.

While some countries of sub-Saharan Africa have seen new infections fall by more than half since 2010, Byanyima noted "we also have regions such as Eastern Europe, Central Asia and Latin America where we see new infections moving in the wrong direction and rising," with stigma pushing people away from services.

4hr break in curfew

He also said the Dhaka-Chattogram Highway, considered the country's lifeline, is now under the control of law enforcers and could be operational during the curfew break.

"Everything is now under the control of the law enforcement agencies. After the Supreme Court's verdict, we believe they [the quota reform protesters] have accepted it and those who wanted to take advantage of the movement for their own vested interests will no longer be able to do so."

Meanwhile, the public administration ministry in a gazette notification extended the general holiday for all government and non-government offices for today. Emergency services will be out of the purview.

Philippines 'to assert rights' after China sea deal

AFP, Manila

Manila insisted yesterday it will continue to "assert our rights" over a hotspot South China Sea reef, after reaching a deal with Beijing for resupplying Filipino troops stationed on a grounded warship.

The Philippine foreign ministry also rejected suggestions by China that the "provisional arrangement" announced Sunday required Manila to give Beijing "prior notification" and verification of deliveries to the BRP Sierra Madre on Second Thomas Shoal.

China claims almost the entire South China Sea, including Second Thomas Shoal, which lies about 200 kilometres (120 miles) from the western Philippine island of Palawan and more than 1,000 kilometres from China's nearest major landmass, Hainan island.

Trial starts for Vietnam tycoon in $146m graft case

AFP, Hanoi

A former Vietnamese property and aviation tycoon charged with $146 million in fraud and stock market manipulation went on trial in Hanoi yesterday, the latest corruption case targeting the communist country's business elite.

Trinh Van Quyet, who owned the FLC empire of luxury resorts, golf courses, and the budget Bamboo Airways, had nearly $2 billion in stock market wealth before his arrest, according to state media estimates.

But yesterday, the 48-year-old -- handcuffed and dressed in a white shirt -- was led into court by police officers.

The trial comes just days after the death of former Communist Party of Vietnam leader Nguyen Phu Trong, who is credited with spearheading a crackdown on graft at the highest levels.

Trong, 80, died on Friday at a military hospital in Hanoi "due to old age and serious illness", the party said, a day after announcing he was standing down to seek medical care.

Tycoon Quyet is accused of illegally pocketing more than $146 million between 2017 and 2022.

Following his arrest in March 2022, 49 other alleged accomplices were picked up -- including his two sisters and the former chairman of the Ho Chi Minh Stock Exchange and its chief executive officer.

According to the prosecution indictment, Quyet set up several stock market brokerages and registered dozens of family members to, ostensibly, trade shares.

Drug production, supply take a hit

JAGARAN CHAKMA

Production and distribution of medicine have been disrupted for the last four days due to violence centring the quota reform movement and associated curfew to contain the situation, drug makers said yesterday.

Industry operators said they were unable to receive imported raw materials from Chattogram port and Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport as customs assessment and clearance were disrupted for internet blackout.

This may subsequently affect drug exports too, they said.

"Production of lifesaving drugs remains suspended since last Friday," said Md Mahbubul Karim, executive director (supply chain) at Incepta Pharmaceuticals.

There are adequate stocks of all the pharmaceuticals now to meet market demand for around one week but if the deadlock persists any longer, healthcare services will be seriously affected, he said.

Another concern was the absence of temperature-controlled facilities at the port and airport, for which some ingredients could get spoiled, he said.

Duty payments in cash are not accepted for release of raw materials, explained Karim.

All exports have been suspended since Thursday, said Wasim Haider, senior manager (international marketing) at Beximco Pharmaceuticals.

Their production facilities were running in full swing, but uncertainties remain over how long it could be continued, he said.

Domestic and global supply chains are almost wholly dependent on the internet and the blackout was seriously hampering trade, he added.

Bookings for shipment of four consignments had to be cancelled in the last three days while keeping contact with foreign clients over phone, especially centring shipment and payment confirmations, was troublesome, he said.

Jahangir Alam, chief financial officer of Square Pharmaceuticals, said their factories were running operations partially to produce some essential drugs such as insulin as employees had apprehensions over the commute to their workplaces.

Drug distribution was also affected as they were having to manually issue invoices for delivering products, he said.

On any given day they usually issue 30,000 invoices but nowadays it had come down to 8,000 to 10,000 as many pharmacies opt to stay closed, he added.

Exports had been growing but the current situation would definitely have an impact on the overall production and supply, said Monjurul Alam, chief executive officer of Medicare, a wing of Beacon Pharmaceuticals.

Most drug makers are facing troubles maintaining correspondence with foreign clients and distributing medicine in local markets due to the unrest, he said. Some new foreign clients have even postponed scheduled factory visits, Alam added.

Export orders tend to be placed in July-September and the ongoing unrest may affect the sector's business, which would be apparent at the end of the year, he said.

Moreover, foreign buyers might lose confidence in the local manufacturers if they fail to stick to shipment schedules, Alam said.

There were very few vehicles plying the Dhaka-Chattogram highway yesterday, the third day of a nationwide curfew imposed to tackle violence centring the quota reform protests. The photo was taken in Sitakunda around 10:00am.

Dhaka-Ctg highway is disrupted. What does it mean to economy?

AHSAN HABIB and TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

The disruption in the Dhaka-Chattogram highway for the last six days amid violence centring the quota reform movement has dealt a huge blow to the economy, damaging the pipeline for around 90 percent of the country's $120 billion trade and causing fears of a lasting ripple effect.

A huge number of industrial establishments have been built along the highway, hoping to capitalise on the connectivity to the country's largest seaport in Chattogram.

However, that means their supply chain is also dependent on the proper functioning of the highway. Furthermore, most of the tourism sector is also reliant on the highway as it links Dhaka to Cox's Bazar, the country's single largest tourist destination.

Against this backdrop, economists and businessmen were desperately seeking to ensure the security of the highway and guarantee hassle-free movement.

Agitators prevented vehicular movement on the highway several times this month, severing road connectivity, while protesting Cumilla University students shut it down as recently as Wednesday.

A few vehicles started using the highway on Sunday.

According to data from the Roads and Highways Department (RHD), on average around 35,000 to 40,000 vehicles use the four-lane highway daily.

Among the vehicles, 35 to 40 percent are goods-laden, an RHD official said, citing data from toll plazas at Meghna bridge and Gumti bridge along the highway.

"But, the number of vehicles was very thin in the last few days," the official added.

On average around 35,000 to 40,000 vehicles use the four-lane highway daily. That number fell by nearly 80 percent to 8,550 on Sunday

Only 8,550 vehicles used the highway on Sunday, according to data from these two toll plazas. From midnight to 7pm yesterday, 10,018 vehicles plied the highway.

Another RHD official said the highway was cleared of debris last night but the road from Jatrabari flyover area to Shitalakhya bridge was severely damaged as agitators had started a number of fires.

Additionally, barriers, medians, signs and signals along the highway were either burned or looted, which is expected to pose further problems, the official said, asking not to be named.

The closure of the highway is also a source of huge sufferings for tourists and general passengers.

Khandaker Enyet Ullah, secretary general of the Bangladesh Road Transport Owners Association, said many tourists were stuck in Chattogram and Cox's Bazar due to the situation.

Prof Md Shamsul Hoque, a noted transport analyst, said the country is dreaming of becoming a developed nation by 2041. Although Bangladesh's $450 billion economy is mostly dependent on the Dhaka-Chattogram route, the government is yet to turn it into an expressway.

The four-lane road is not of the quality required for the expected economic development, he opined, adding that expressways are the best way to ensure connectivity, reduce travel time and congestion, and ensure reliability.

He added that exporters also demand a quality road connection since their activities are time-sensitive. "They are ready to pay a handsome amount to use quality roads. General people will also pay for it when they get proper service," Hoque said.

Bangladesh has eight highways. But the Dhaka-Chattogram highway undoubtedly deserves to be an expressway given its economic importance since it has enormous multiplier effect as it is also connected with major tourism hubs, he added.

Fazlul Haque, a former president of the Bangladesh Knitwear Manufacturers and Exporters Association, said the country's main seaport would be better served by a railway connection, which is the most popular method in the world to carry goods.

However, even railway services remained shut down during the past six days.

The Pangaon water port is not an attractive option either as it lacks adequate infrastructure and supporting facilities. It also takes longer to send goods, he added.

A top official of a leading garment manufacturing company, preferring anonymity, said when he was travelling via the Dhaka-Bhanga expressway, he felt this type of expressway was required to connect Dhaka and Chattogram.

As the corridor has a huge economic impact, an expressway could lead to greater contributions to the economy.

At a meeting between Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina and top business leaders yesterday, Syed Nasim Manzur, president of the Leathergoods and Footwear Manufacturers and Exporters Association of Bangladesh, urged the government to ensure safe passage through the Dhaka-Chattogram highway.

"Otherwise, we will not be able to survive," he said.

Internet blackout intensifies port congestion

DWAIPAYAN BARUA, Ctg

Container congestion turned acute at the Chattogram port yesterday as deliveries remained suspended for a second consecutive day for operational complexities caused by an ongoing internet blackout and a lack of transportation facilities.

At least 1,252 TEUs (twenty-foot equivalent units) of containers were unloaded from ships and placed at the port yards yesterday.

As of 8:00am, there were 42,150 TEUs of containers at the yards.

This is around 78.76 percent of the total storage capacity of 53,518 TEUs, according to data of Chittagong Port Authority (CPA).

Port officials say it becomes tough to load and unload containers and manoeuvre them through the yards once 60 percent of the storage capacity was reached.

Moreover, importers are having to bear storage rent for each additional day that they are having to keep import-laden containers at the port yards.

Export and import activities have been facing unprecedented disruptions following the countrywide internet blackout since Thursday evening as digital entry of data is a must for port operations, said the port users.

They underscored the need for immediate resumption of internet services to prevent the situation from deteriorating further.

AT A GLANCE

- Another 1,252 containers piled up at Ctg port in a day
- No import container could be delivered for the second day
- Importers are counting extra store rent
- Container transport between port and private ICDs improved a bit
- Port users called for immediate resumption of internet

Meanwhile, container handling activities have dropped by around 50 percent as only 5,079 TEUs were handled in the 24 hours till 8:00am yesterday, much lower than the 8,000 to 9,000 TEUs handled on any regular working day.

In the same period, a total of 2,107 TEUs of containers were discharged from the vessels and 2,972 TEUs were loaded onto ships, according to the CPA data.

Some 415 TEUs of import-laden containers were transported from the port to inland container depots (ICDs) during this time, but not a single one could be delivered to the consignees, said CPA Secretary Md Omar Faruk.

NBR for manual assessment of essentials

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Chattogram

The National Board of Revenue (NBR) has recently instructed customs to release imported perishables, food, chemicals and industrial raw materials through manual assessments to keep supply chains and factories operational.

The same has been directed for shipment of exportable goods.

"We have given instructions to clear the goods from day one as the internet is not working," NBR Chairman Abu Hena Md Rahmatul Muneem told The Daily Star yesterday.

The move comes as an internet shutdown since the night of July 18 has been hindering the assessment of tariffs of imports and exports.

Chattogram customs began to assess goods in line with the directive. Officials said they are carrying out the task manually for imported industrial raw materials and fuel oil too.

Until now, importers received 22 consignments of fly ash, cement clinker and stone weighing 3,500 tonnes, said an official yesterday.

However, importers could not receive any perishable item as they could not submit any documents.

Garment buyers worried over shipment

International clothing retailers and brands are faced with uncertainties over work orders placed with Bangladeshi manufacturers as communication has become troublesome due to an internet blackout.

Following the internet outage since the night of July 18, liaison offices of foreign retailers and brands in Bangladesh have been unable to share documents with the port and customs authorities for clearance of goods. They have also been unable to send inspection reports to their headquarters.

A number of retailers and brands also have doubts about placing work orders amidst violence centring the quota reform protests, subsequent curfew to contain the situation and disruption to communication stemming from the internet shutdown.

"Our garments worth $200 million are now lying at the Chattogram port as we cannot clear customs procedures because of the ongoing violence and curfew," said a top official of a European retailer asking not to be named.

"Similarly, I have been unable to place fresh work orders at the local factories over the past week due to the ongoing crisis," he said.

He said the disruption to the internet was also creating problems in communicating with their headquarters in Europe.

"The current situation will have a bad impact on business as the country's reputation will be under question," he said, urging the authorities for fast restoration of at least broadband internet services.

Another Dutch clothing retailer also said he was unable to communicate with his headquarters because of the internet blackout.

Curfew and violence slowly bleeding the economy

Resulting damage could have severe long-term impacts

The ongoing nationwide curfew, which may be necessary for security reasons, and internet shutdown are slowly bleeding the economy and causing untold sufferings for businesses and ordinary citizens. The country's biggest exporting sector, the garment sector, has already endured direct losses amounting to around $48 million due to the production suspension, according to a report in this daily. When the country's exports have been on a decline over the last three years, such a big hit to its largest export sector could prove seriously damaging moving forward.

The violence that happened across the country in recent days, along with the repressive tendencies demonstrated by government agencies, has definitely damaged the image that Bangladesh has painstakingly built in the global arena over the years. This could mean that less business prospects will be available for local businesses with international partners, and other indirect losses that industries will have to incur. Losses due to delays, with buyers either cancelling work orders or shifting them to other countries, is already a concern that garment industry insiders are fearing.

On top of that, the shipment of goods because of unrest and curfew has come to a grinding halt. Reportedly, 6,000 export goods containers are currently stuck at Chattogram Port depots as customs cannot clear export consignments, and shipping agents have lost contact with main line operators without access to the internet. Operational activities at the port have been moving at a snail's pace, and port yards have been choked with containers. Meanwhile, export activities at Inland Container Depots dropped by 80-85 percent due to the unavailability of export cargo from factories.

With vehicles used to carry goods sitting idle for the last few days, the overall losses of the truckers would amount to at least Tk 175 crore per day. And due to the increased transportation risks, the very few vehicles transporting perishable goods such as fresh vegetables and fruits are demanding higher fares as risk premium—in most cases nearly double the normal rent per vehicle. As a result, prices of essential commodities including vegetables and eggs skyrocketed in kitchen markets across the capital and elsewhere. Low-income people and informal workers have been hit the worst by this. According to the Labour Force Survey 2022, more than five crore people (84.9 percent) of the employed population are engaged in the country's informal sector, over one crore of them working in Dhaka. What will happen to these people if the curfew continues? Without any available work, how will these people meet their daily needs, particularly with prices of essentials rising by the hour?

Under the circumstances, the government urgently needs to restore the country's internet connection and lift the curfew, so that all economic activities can resume as per normal.

Ensure accountability

Investigate allegation of abuse

We are disturbed by reports that Nahid Islam, a key organiser of quota reform movement, was allegedly abducted and tortured mentally and physically until he lost consciousness. In comments made to The Daily Star, Nahid stated that he was picked up in the early hours of Saturday from a house in Sabujbagh by at least 25 men in plainclothes. Blindfolded and handcuffed, he was then taken to a room where he was interrogated repeatedly about his involvement in the student movement and tortured. His body bore deep bruises sustained in his arm and legs.

Once he regained consciousness, he found himself dumped under a bridge in Purbachal. The inevitable question is: who abducted and tortured him so? Once his family came to know that their son had been picked up, they went to the office of the Detective Branch of police, but they said they have no information about him. Then they went to Khilgaon Police Station to file a GD, but there the police did not take the matter into cognizance. When contacted by this daily, the police have reiterated that they have no information about Nahid having been picked up.

How are we to interpret this incident, at a time when the government wants to accommodate the demands of the protesters? Nahid's family and fellow protesters had earlier alleged that Nahid was picked up as he was against the idea of holding a dialogue with the government prior to the Appellate Division verdict. If we accept, as we would like to, the version given by law enforcers, then isn't the obvious step to find out who the culprits are? The fact that Khilgaon Police Station refused to record the GD of Nahid's parents opens up many uncomfortable questions.

We urge the government to ensure, at the very least, security for the student activists and due process of law during any questioning of student protesters in the future. We have seen in the past how activists and dissenters have been arbitrarily and illegally detained and harassed by various state machineries in the aftermath of previous student movements. If the government is to restore people's confidence in the rule of law, the government must prioritise and protect human rights.

The Supreme Court on Sunday stated that it expects the judicial probe commission, led by a High Court judge, to unearth the reasons behind the deaths of the students. We hope that any excess of state machineries and ruling party will also be investigated.

Move away from blame game and confrontational power politics

Dr Iftekharuzzaman
is executive director of Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB).

IFTEKHARUZZAMAN

The Appellate Division verdict of July 21 has opened the scope for resolution of the main issue around the demands coming from the quota reform movement. However, its observations associated with the judgment represent at least partial insensitivity to the bigger picture around the constitutional provision of equality and justice for the underprivileged section of society, especially women and Indigenous communities. The women's issue has been totally ignored, while the provision for Indigenous communities have been curtailed. One would hope that the government would exercise its leverage to address these critical issues before long.

Be that as it may, the nation has once again been reminded that student power is invincible, especially when fighting peacefully for a legitimate cause. Like many a time in the past, they have also shown the limits and fault lines of regime power that neglects lessons of history.

The student movement for quota reform, which challenged the prevailing state of discrimination in public service recruitment, cannot be in any manner linked to its violent and devastating turnaround. Though the movement and the violence were isolated from one another in terms of respective objective and means, what facilitated an unholy and unsurprising sync between the two is the country's confrontational zero-sum game of politics. From the beginning, there were clear replays of the ruling authority's usual practice of smelling in the quota reform movement a rot of conspiracy of the political opposition. The latter—as yet another example of its political bankruptcy—in the name of solidarity, took the quota reform movement as an opportunity for political mileage, for their core agenda against their political arch-rival.

Thus, when the student front of the ruling party, inspired by its general secretary, cracked down on protesters with the support and participation of law enforcement agencies, condoned by the partisan administration of most educational institutions, unprecedented violence was unleashed. What initially erupted in the campuses very quickly then spread nearly all over the country.

This opened the floodgates of mayhem by the subversive forces that have clearly been gaining from strength to strength in the space created for them by the confrontational politics between two major contenders. Needless to say, these subversive forces capitalised not only on the confrontational power game, but also on public discontent over growing economic hardships, governance deficits, and the atmosphere of intimidation and insecurity against free speech and freedom of association.

The kind of violence and destruction of public properties can represent nothing but evil designs and acts of such subversive elements. The cost of management failure of a crisis around a very genuine grievance of the young generation for justice, equality and non-discrimination in the public sector job market has already crossed enormous proportions. On top of all are at least 170 lives and countless injuries inflicted upon students, youth, and even children as well as professionals like journalists and police. Not to underestimate the huge loss of public properties, including key state installations and infrastructures.

But the economic cost of the deficit of political acumen in crisis management that catalysed the violent turnaround is going to be unprecedented in terms of disruptions of production, services, and businesses. A ballpark estimate of direct GDP lost is no less than $1.3 billion daily since July 18, when everything came to a standstill, including the internet being shut down, unprecedented not only in Bangladesh but perhaps anywhere else in the world. Beyond the monetary value, the cost of public suffering and harassment for being deprived of various essential services including utilities, not to speak of the mental stress and agony, is mind-boggling. Whether the continued internet shutdown is attributable to reported damages caused to relevant infrastructure or whether it is because of the failure to determine how to cope with implications of the free flow of information and opinion remains an open question.

With such baggage, whether Bangladesh will continue to be treated as the second most attractive destination for foreign investment in the region is anyone's guess. The same can be said about the time needed for our development and foreign trade partners and even the employers of our stranded expatriate workers to regain the eroded confidence.

It is indispensable to ensure exemplary accountability and justice for those who were victims of abuse by both politically patronised power and the institutionally mandated authority.

No less important is the national and international implications of the information and images of human rights violations unleashed by the attackers on the movement as well as the disproportionate use of force by law enforcement agencies, despite the foreign ministry's invitation to follow the ostrich syndrome. Equally disturbing will be the possible impressions of us as a violence-prone society created by the images of destructions by the subversive elements who took advantage of the crisis.

The key lesson of the crisis, therefore, is that intransigence, non-responsiveness, denial of reality or overconfidence of absolute power, and use of disproportionate force do not serve the purpose and can only be counterproductive and self-defeating.

The more the regime power is detached from the people and public interest, the more fragile and vulnerable to governance deficits and political failings it can be. Vulnerabilities are further accentuated by partisan control of state institutions, which may serve only short-term interests at the expense of a greater public good.

Moving on, the top priority is to ensure safety and security of the striking students. Ministers have promised no legal or administrative action against the students, which may be encouraging. But the question is whether the government or relevant agencies will walk the talk in a "securitised" context where some actions do not require legal or administrative mandate, like the reported abduction and torture of one of the coordinators of the movement, Nahid Islam. To be sure, this is nothing new nor isolated, while such "operations" not only remain unaccountable but also assume their own dynamics outside mainstream governance structure.

It is indispensable to ensure exemplary accountability and justice for the victims of perpetrators of violence against the striking students and others who were victims of abuse by both politically patronised power and the institutionally mandated authority, like the point-blank shooting down of a student in Rangpur. Failure to do so will further erode public trust in the government and the state institutions.

No less important is to identify and bring to justice those responsible for orchestrated violences, targeted attacks and enormous damages caused to public properties, including some key institutions. But as experience has also shown, ensuring accountability of perpetrators alone is not enough, especially leaving the breeding ground open on a daily basis for such militant forces to grow. On top of preventive measures is the imperative of moving away from the politics of blame game and confrontation for power, with a view to putting back public interest and people's participation at the core of political culture.

QUOTA REFORM PROTESTS

Govt failed to handle the situation properly

Brig Gen (retd) Dr M Sakhawat Hussain, former election commissioner of Bangladesh, is senior fellow at the South Asian Institute of Policy and Governance (SIPG), North South University (NSU). He can be reached at hhintlbd@yahoo.com.

M SAKHAWAT HUSSAIN

The demand that was placed by student protesters could have been fulfilled through discussion. They had only one demand: that the existing quota system in government jobs be reformed to make space for meritocracy. They did not ask for a change in government or chant slogans against the government. But the government handled the issue from an egoistic stance, and made several wrong decisions while tackling the situation. The way they tried to quell the protests by using Chhatra League, the ruling party's student wing, cannot be justified, either legally or morally. The situation came to what it is today because of that.

It is being said that some political parties have infiltrated the protest. This not something new; political parties usually get involved with this kind of movements. It happened during the protests in Ershad's time and even during the Pakistan period. It is unfortunate that the issue got prolonged and so many lives were lost, which according to various media reports, is about 170. This is too much! This means excessive force has been applied in this situation. The way our law enforcement agencies tackled this situation, using helicopters, is unprecedented. A civil protest should not have been dealt with this way.

Those who died, about half of them, if not all, were students. These were children! Farhan Faiyaaz, Abu Sayed—losses like these is even harder to process. Also, why were the key point installations, some of which were attacked and burnt down, not protected by the authorities from the beginning? Even the way the police acted shocked us. I saw law enforcement agencies with assault rifle in hand! Overall, I think, the government could not handle this situation properly and is still failing to do so. Bringing the military in and imposing a curfew mean that the government had no other options left. A different message is being projected to the whole world because of military deployment and the curfew.

I think, the government could not handle this situation properly and is still failing to do so. Bringing the military in and imposing a curfew mean that the government had no other options left. A different message is being projected to the whole world because of military deployment and the curfew.

Regarding the government's narrative that the data centre was burnt down, the question arises: what happened to the back-up for that? Why are those not working? Crores of taka is being lost every day because of internet shutdown. People are complaining that they cannot transact money or pay their electricity bills because of this. When most businesses are dependent on the internet, I do not think shutting the internet service down across the whole country is worth it. Shutdown is okay for a day or two, but for how long will it continue, especially when the violence did not stop completely despite the internet shutdown? Lives were lost even yesterday (Saturday); about 35 people were killed, according to newspapers. Did the past protests—in 1969, for example—not take place when there was no internet? The internet shutdown is causing a great loss to the economy.

Anyway, all we can hope for is that good sense will prevail all over. The government should now properly heed the rest of the protesters' demands. There is not a single demand that cannot be implemented. I have all the sympathy for the students and their movement, which they had started peacefully but unfortunately a lot of lives were lost and much blood shed on the streets. I pray for the souls of those students who died, and for their families.

BIDEN DROPS OUT OF 2024 PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION

A historic decision, but can Kamala Harris beat Trump?

Ramisa Rob
is in-charge of Geopolitical Insights at The Daily Star.

RAMISA ROB

Few weeks ago, even after Joe Biden's disastrous presidential debate, it didn't seem that his need to drop out of the race would become inevitable. Then things changed overnight, as it happens with politics: an unprecedented assassination attempt on former President Trump, and a viral picture of his blood trickled face with a fist held up high fuelled widespread speculation: "Did Trump just win the election?" It was followed with a loud Republican National Convention, a recharged MAGA cult and the altogether deification of Donald Trump: "a man impeached, convicted, almost killed but chosen by God to lead the United States of America," according to Trump supporters.

The pro-Democrat, liberal US media who want Donald Trump to lose—from CNN to ABC News—ran rigorous reporting, or rather a campaign, to get Joe Biden to step down. Just two days before Biden announced the historic decision, CNN reported that Biden was "seething" at all suggestions to step down, including from former President Obama and Nancy Pelosi, when they tried to explain that his chances at winning were becoming untenable. Each passing day, it seemed like the Democrats were playing a losing game with a defiant old Joe stubbornly holding onto power.

Kamala Harris breaks the wheel of Vietnam War-era politicians which voters are frustrated of seeing.

It was becoming increasingly clear that the party needed a jaw-dropping, shocking moment to turn the tide against the surging popularity of Donald Trump. The clock was ticking, and the party delivered on the desired drama on Sunday, July 21, when Joe Biden announced that he is dropping out of the race, two weeks ahead of the Democratic National Convention. Biden has now undoubtedly sealed his legacy, for the good and the bad. He has had one of the longest political careers in US history—the youngest to become a senator, and the oldest to become a President.

Joe Biden will be remembered as the politician who let go—when veteran politicians in power rarely do—by choice. The step Biden took will domestically restore at least some of his tarnished image, especially in regard to his foreign policy blunders since last year. While there's a lot to learn from Joe Biden's wrongs, there's also a lot to learn from his best decision yet: a reminder for leaders around the world that even as heads of state, it is the country, the people, that matter first in every democracy.

The Republican Party's vigour will be overshadowed by Biden's decision and the overall respect for Biden, for at least the next two weeks till the DNC. The Republicans chose to stand behind a convicted felon, milking the tragedy of his assassination attempt. Most of them who spoke in the RNC, from DeSantis to Nikki Haley, had bashed Trump just six months ago when they ran their own presidential campaigns. After losing and realising Trump is their only ticket to power, they all became worshippers, embracing crass opportunism that is now the defining character of the Republican Party. By contrast now, the Democrats appear to voters as the party that has democracy internally within its ranks. The message this will send to voters is that unlike Trump and the Republicans, it is the Democrats who are "the true patriots and public servants."

Biden endorsed his Vice-President Kamala Harris right away. After being widely unpopular, she's risen more to the spotlight in the last year, and more so after the President's implosion at the debate last month. Every liberal media outlet had, in fact been subtly lobbying for Harris in the past few weeks, even though she kept defending Biden endlessly. Still, polls were conducted on Harris, Trump and Biden. A poll by The New York Times conducted on July 9-12, showed that she was ahead of Biden to beat Trump, amongst almost all age and racial groups, except only the demographic of 65 years and older.

As exciting as this new horizon appears, this doesn't mean the Democrats are no longer in crisis. The battle against Trump is still uphill. Polls conducted by CNN show Harris is lagging behind Trump, but not as much as Biden was. If Harris is going to be the Democratic nominee, she will still need to win the key battleground states like Pennsylvania, Michigan, and Minnesota.

His endorsement doesn't mean that she automatically becomes the nominee—the party has to nominate her in the DNC. Endorsements are flooding in from prominent Democrats, but the party so far seems sincere to hold a competitive race, and a proper transparent process with other contestants. The logistics for Harris to run a successful presidential campaign is a lot easier; she has the funds that has been raised so far for the "Biden-Harris" campaign. It is highly unlikely that Kamala Harris will not be the nominee, even if there are surely better candidates out there—as that would reveal cracks within the Democratic Party, which they wouldn't want to risk against a united Republican Party. But showing that she has "earned" it through an open convention will legitimise her candidacy.

There is a lot favouring Harris, by luck mostly; she does have a shot at defeating Trump if she plays her cards right. She offers a face of change and breaks the wheel of Vietnam War-era politicians which voters are frustrated of seeing, while Trump is now the oldest presidential nominee. And policy-wise, she has the accomplishments of the Biden-Harris administration in her resume to maintain Biden's base voters. As vice-president, yet a new candidate, she could also cleverly deflect Biden's shortcomings—though that will remain to be seen, especially with Arab voters.

As exciting as this new horizon appears, this doesn't mean the Democrats are no longer in crisis. The battle against Trump is still uphill. Polls conducted by CNN show Harris is lagging behind Trump, but not as much as Biden was. If Harris is going to be the Democratic nominee, she will still need to win the key battleground states like Pennsylvania, Michigan, and Minnesota. While talks have already begun of her running mate, her most strategic decision to have a chance at winning, would be to have a governor from a key battleground state, such as Governor Josh Shapiro from Pennsylvania who has already endorsed Harris.

The Trump campaign will come at Harris with their full wrath and their vintage sexism. The fact that she defended Biden's mental acuity and chose loyalty over the country, will surely be a point to poke at. It's also well-known that Harris had a disturbing track record as a harsh prosecutor, especially for the Black community, and that could hurt her. But it's also worth noting that many Democrat research groups recently found—just before Biden dropped out—that she can mobilise young Black, Hispanic voters, which Biden could not. She has been vocal and precise on re-establishing reproductive rights, which are projected to galvanise the younger female voter base to vote.

At the end of the day, debates and campaigning leading up to November shape the election outcome. Trump's 90-minute speech—the longest acceptance speech in RNC history—veered off the teleprompter and showed that the xenophobia in Trump has not changed an iota. Kamala Harris, a seasoned prosecutor, is fiery at debates and as many commentators have projected, she has the ability to attack Trump and call out his lies. A lot of people feel nervous with a woman, especially of colour, running against Trump—reflecting some sort of post-traumatic stress from 2016—when Hilary Clinton lost to Trump. Gender and race do play roles in US elections, and that is undeniable. Everything is still up in the air, but just because that other woman could not, does not mean this woman cannot.

Teesta is no longer a bilateral issue

Shamsher M Chowdhury, Bir Bikram is a former foreign secretary of Bangladesh.

SHAMSHER M CHOWDHURY

During former Indian Prime Minister Dr Manmohan Singh's visit to Bangladesh in 2011, a deal on the sharing of transboundary river Teesta's water was supposed to be signed, sealed and delivered. But all such expectations were sadly dashed when West Bengal Chief Minister Mamata Banerjee backed out at the very last minute. This was not just an embarrassment for both sides—it took the wind out of such an important visit and left a bad taste here in Bangladesh. The event even prompted the highly respected Indian prime minister, a perfect gentleman, taking the blame and even offering a public apology for the failure to deliver. Since then, the Teesta deal has been stuck in a limbo, with the central and the West Bengal state governments in India blaming each other for any lack of progress as public disappointment on the Bangladesh side continues to gain traction.

It has been customary, especially in Bangladesh, that during any bilateral visit at the highest level between the two neighbouring countries, the burning issue of sharing the waters of transboundary rivers, especially the Teesta, would feature prominently at the talks between the two sides, with the hope that an acceptable solution would materialise. While the issue has featured in the discourses over the years, nothing concrete has yet appeared on the horizon.

However, things took a dramatic turn during Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's two-day official visit to New Delhi in June this year, with India agreeing to dispatch a technical team to work on developing a comprehensive project covering conservation and management of the Teesta River inside Bangladesh, within a mutually agreed time frame. This was a major move forward. This, taken with an announcement of discussions at the technical level on the renewal of the Ganges Water Treaty, due in 2026, and a basket of other measures on key issues—such as exponential enhancement of multimodal transport and electricity connectivity; increased defence cooperation; extensive collaboration in frontier technologies including civil nuclear, oceanography and space technology; India partnering in the development of a small satellite for Bangladesh and its launch using Indian launch vehicle; and the decision to commence early negotiations for a Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA) aimed at promoting bilateral trade and investment—gave the visit major substance. All this was covered in a Shared Vision statement for the future course of relations between Bangladesh and India, bound as they are by shared history and geography.

While there is no denying that the Teesta is of strategic importance, a significant issue of great geopolitical value was the joint reiteration of a shared commitment to a 'free, open, inclusive, secure, and rules-based Indo-Pacific region.'

The Teesta issue has now become a diplomatic issue of strategic importance.

FILE PHOTO: S DILIP ROY

To observers here, though, it was the signal of a positive development on the Teesta issue that understandably drew major attention. However, it is not without a context. With little to no visible progress in finding a mutually acceptable solution to sharing Teesta water until then, there emerged talks of a Chinese study on developing a project on the Bangladesh side of the Teesta, which would include conservation and management of the river. Given the geographical location of the Teesta—so close to the Indian border and not far from the strategically important Siliguri Corridor, commonly known as "the Chicken's Neck"—even the thought of China getting involved in a project of such magnitude presented the possibility of raising serious security concerns for policymakers in New Delhi, more so when there have been limited armed skirmishes between the militaries of the two Asian giants recently. Political commentators in India, including former diplomats, made no secret of the concern. This is when Teesta ceased to be just a river; it assumed a status of strategic importance.

Just days after her return from New Delhi, the Bangladesh PM, while responding to a question at parliament, clearly stated that she had asked the relevant ministries to look at the Chinese proposal on the Teesta. And yet, exactly 10 days later, the Indian decision of sending a technical team to prepare a comprehensive project, one that would include conservation and management of the Teesta River inside Bangladesh with Indian assistance, was announced in New Delhi and in the presence of the two heads of government. Reference was also made on finding an interim arrangement on water-sharing, although no details were given how this sharing would be executed.

That the Teesta issue has now become a diplomatic issue of strategic importance was made abundantly clear by a confident Sheikh Hasina at a press conference after her return from an official visit to Beijing. While the prime minister made it known that she would "give priority to India for the Teesta project," at the same time, she made reference to the Chinese proposal, implying Bangladesh has options. "This is diplomacy," she said.

Realistically, in the end, it is the Indian offer that will see the light of the day. The mention of the words "within a mutually agreed time frame" in the Shared Vision statement is a signal to set the right pace for its implementation. It it is a win-win outcome for both sides.

While there is no denying that the Teesta is of strategic importance, a significant issue of great geopolitical value was the joint reiteration of a shared commitment to a "free, open, inclusive, secure, and rules-based Indo-Pacific region." Such a commitment from Dhaka would not only be welcomed by New Delhi, it would also please listeners in Washington, Tokyo and Canberra, where the terms "open," "secure" and "rules-based Indo-Pacific" have become an integral part of the geo-strategic lexicon. At the same time, the insertion of the word "inclusive" should give some comfort to Beijing.

In sum, the overall outcome of Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's back-to-back official visits to New Delhi and Beijing served to reinforce the point that relations between Bangladesh and other key Asian players are no more confined to the bilateral frame alone; they play out on a much broader regional and global canvases.

Internet blackout: FREELANCERS IN TROUBLE

MD. ZAHIDUR RABBI

With the nationwide complete shutdown of internet services for the last four days, life on the digital frontier across the country has come to a halt. Mobile internet blackout was ordered on July 16 amidst country-wide protests against quota reinstatement in government jobs. After violence on the streets escalated, a complete internet blackout without any prior notice was suddenly in effect from July 18. Now, the freelancers of the country are facing significant troubles as their source of income is dependent on access to the internet.

Timely communication is one of the most important factors when it comes to freelancing in online marketplaces like Fiverr, Upwork etc. As freelancers communicate on the embedded messaging option of the platforms, no communication was possible due to internet shutdown.

Shaikh Abdullah, a Dhaka-based motion designer and video editor working for international clients said, "I was communicating with a client for an order worth $500. During negotiation, the internet was suddenly cut off without any prior announcement. After four days of complete inactivity, if the client reports my profile, I would lose profile impression which will significantly reduce click rates and overall impression of my profile. I would lose potential future clients which will reduce my income rate."

The freelancing marketplace across the globe moves at a fast pace, as clients and workers usually maintain strict timetables for work orders and deliveries. Failure to deliver the orders on time, in most cases, generate negative impressions from the clients, which in turn, affects the earnings of a freelancer if enough negative impressions rack up.

Sudiptta Apu, a Khulna-based freelancer and graphic designer said, "I had 8 ongoing orders which were valued over $1,000. Due to the internet blackout, those orders are now on hold. It is highly likely that the clients will move on to other service providers as most of them require their orders urgently on a day-to-day basis."

Mentioning about regular clients out of the freelance marketplaces, Sudiptta added, "Due to the internet shutdown, I tried communicating with out of the marketplace clients through ISD calls based out of India and the USA. However, they could not properly hear me due to network issues and it is highly likely that I would lose most of my regular clients as well."

Due to internet shutdown, many freelancers failed to deliver their orders which were already completed. Sohag Islam, a Dhaka-based UI-UX designer, and the founder of Designera, an IT firm, said, "I had two deliveries scheduled, one worth $1200 and another worth $660. Some one hour before the final delivery to the client, I lost internet connectivity. Communication with all my regular clients is completely cut off. I suffered a minimum loss of $3,000 due to internet shutdown."

Sohag Islam also mentioned that he works remotely for a USA-based firm but he could not properly communicate with them due to internet shutdown.

In the face of ongoing blackout, agencies and firms that handle online payments for digital advertisements also faced issues in handling their regular operations. Munaf Mojib Chowdhury, Partner Director, Aleph Holding (formerly, HTTPOOL) said, "We will understand the global reaction to this situation once we can properly communicate with our clients and partners after the restoration of internet."

What is emotional intelligence and why do we need it?

In modern day and age, Emotional Intelligence is more valued than any other form of intelligence. For the development of interpersonal relationships between peers, colleagues and even friends and family, this can be a game changer in establishing a clear and meaningful communication. Emotional Intelligence is also very much celebrated for its significant contribution in self-development and professional growth.

NOMROTA SARKER

Emotional Intelligence refers to the ability to recognise, understand and regulate our own emotions as well as do the same with others'. In practical terms, this means being aware of the fact that emotions have a significant impact in human behaviour and decisions both positively and negatively. Coined by Peter Salavoy and John Mayer, this term gained popularity in 1996.

In modern day and age, Emotional Intelligence is more valued than any other form of intelligence. For the development of interpersonal relationships between peers, colleagues ,and even friends and families, this can be a game changer in establishing a clear and meaningful communication. Emotional Intelligence is also very much celebrated for its significant contribution in self-development and professional growth.

THE FOUR QUADRANTS

Emotional Intelligence is all about channeling one's energy and feelings into exciting and positive pathways through building an awareness of emotional logic. Emotional Intelligence revolves around four quadrants with which a person's emotional excellence is determined. The quadrants are self-awareness, social recognition, self-management, and social relationship management.

SELF-AWARENESS

Self-awareness typically reflects interpersonal communication. This quadrant is concerned with how well you understand yourself and your personal psychology. Self-awareness is the first step towards a better perspective of the vision that you might have for yourself. This includes closely inspecting your own personality and learning styles, mental attitudes and states, strengths and weaknesses, stress levels, and spirituality.

In simpler terms, it is the attempt you need to take to address your feelings for exactly what they are, instead of trying to relate it to a similar yet non-applicable scenario for yourself.

SOCIAL RECOGNITION

The social recognition quadrant reflects your consideration of the feelings and responses of others. This is where empathy plays a crucial role. It is important to maintain sensitivity to the moods and emotions of others because it allows for superior intuition and connection. Oftentimes, communication with a colleague can seem to be hard if their emotions are opaque to you.

Social recognition is that step you take to be attentive and listen to them with an intention to build an effective communication with them. It is how you show your control over the external factors and scenarios. The key element for social recognition is your 'reaction' to your surroundings and how you tackle consequences to external decisions.

SELF-MANAGEMENT

Self-management quadrant reflects indicates self-evaluation coupled with self-regulation. 'Indulgent' behaviour is what we are trying to avoid here. This quadrant is only concerned with your internal discipline and your ability to achieve personal objectives. In the case of developing inner resolutions, self-management is the key quadrant that can build an achievement-oriented outlook for you. It can give you a direction, as to how to start working on yourself and bring back discipline in your life.

SOCIAL RELATIONSHIP MANAGEMENT

Social relationship management includes interpersonal skills and focuses intelligence on generating results. This quadrant of emotional intelligence fosters collaboration and connection to tap the power of synergy. This quadrant pulls together the other three quadrants and creates the final product; relationship management. Often if we have the other three dimensions figured out, this will flow more naturally.

Relationship management can be used to influence those around us to make a good decision. We can sense the reactions of others to the situation and fine-tune our response to move the interaction to a positive direction. This comes in handy in the case of collaboration, team management, and good leadership.

PREPARATIONS HAMPERED as practice match postponed

SPORTS REPORTER

The first of the two three-day practice matches of the national team, scheduled to begin today in Chattogram, has been postponed due to the ongoing unrest in the country as cricket in Bangladesh remains at a standstill during the ongoing unrest.

"A decision on the Bangladesh Tigers camp is due but the match is not taking place tomorrow [today]," one Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) official told The Daily Star yesterday.

The BCB is still hopeful about holding the matches, which were originally scheduled to begin on July 23 and 29 respectively, once the situation improves.

"The players are still at the hotel and we are hoping that when the situation improves, we will play the games. They have been waiting patiently at the hotel. We have been communicating with the law enforcement agencies over there on whether we can hold practice if the situation allows," cricket operations chairman Jalal Yunus told The Daily Star yesterday.

Our journey date has been postponed. When everything is sorted, we will possibly fly to Chattogram. The practice matches might get rescheduled. Honestly speaking, the preparation for Pakistan series has been hampered quite a bit.

Bangladesh captain Najmul Hossain Shanto on how current situation impacted the Tigers' preparation for upcoming Pakistan tour.

The hampering of practice schedules and practice matches due to the ongoing unrest has been a cause for frustration for the Bangladesh players, as it has disrupted the build up to their two-match Test series in Pakistan next month, which is part of the ICC World Test Championship cycle.

Two white-ball practice games on July 19 and 20, between Bangladesh Tigers and the High Performance unit were cancelled earlier due to the ongoing unrest.

Many of the Bangladesh national team stars including skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto, who was set to join the Bangladesh camp in Chattogram to play the three-day games, could not travel to he port city to join the rest of the players in the programme.

"Our journey date [to Chattogram] has been postponed. If everything is sorted, we will possibly fly to Chattogram," Shanto told The Daily Star yesterday.

"The practice matches might get rescheduled. Honestly speaking, the preparation for the Pakistan series has been hampered quite a bit," he added.

Shanto had been training individually in Dhaka but for him and many of the Test players, the three-day practice games were crucial especially in light of national team's previous Test series against Sri Lanka, where questions were raised about their preparation after they got routed 2-0 at home.

While the BCB are still waiting for a green signal from law enforcement agencies to hold the remainder of the camp in Chattogram, another BCB official said they were hopeful of beginning practice from Wednesday.

"If they [law enforcement agencies] give us the green signal, and if we can move, the players will go to the practice, whether there is a curfew or not," he said.

HP fall to 149-run loss in Darwin

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) HP outfit were bowled out for 279 in the second innings in chase of the 429-run target set by Pakistan Shaheens to suffer a 149-run defeat on the fourth day at the DXC Arena Ground in Darwin yesterday.

Continuing from an overnight score of 20 without loss, HP were bowled out for 279 in 83.2 overs. Amit Majumder hit a team-high 71 while Parvez Hossain Emon struck 57. Shahadat Hossain Dipu, who scored 36 in the first innings, followed up with 42 in the second innings but it was not enough to see HP bat the entire day to draw the match.

Pakistan Shaheens' left-arm spinner Mehran Muntas was the pick of the bowlers, bagging four wickets for 84 runs.

Earlier, Mohammad Hunaira's double century in the first innings saw Pakistan Shaheens post 468 for three. Bangladesh HP were restricted to 266 in the first innings, with Shadman Islam scoring 88 before the Pakistani side put 226 for three in the second innings to set a 429-run chase for the fourth innings.

Boycott back in hospital

AFP, London

England batting great Geoffrey Boycott was on Sunday readmitted to hospital after suffering a setback in his recovery from throat surgery, his family revealing "things have taken a turn for the worse".

The 83-year-old was discharged from hospital only on Friday after a successful operation to remove a cancerous tumour.

However, he has now developed pneumonia. "Thank you all for the well wishes, we've been blown away by the sheer number of them," read a statement from the family on Boycott's X account.

"Unfortunately, things have taken a turn for the worse and my father has developed pneumonia and is unable to eat or drink so is back in hospital on oxygen and a feeding tube for the foreseeable."

Boycott had previously been treated for throat cancer in 2002 with chemotherapy and radiotherapy. Boycott is one of a select group of cricketers to have scored 100 first-class hundreds. He scored more than 8,000 runs in 108 Tests for England.

After his 24-year first-class career ended with Yorkshire sacking him in 1986, Boycott established himself as both a newspaper columnist and a noted broadcaster, developing a global fanbase.

ICC puts USA Cricket on notice for 'non-compliance'

AFP, Colombo

The International Cricket Council put USA Cricket on notice on Monday to comply with its membership rules on governance, along with Cricket Chile, just weeks after the United States co-hosted the T20 World Cup.

"Neither Member is considered to have in place a fit for purpose detailed governance and administrative structure and systems," the ICC said in a statement after its annual conference in Colombo, adding that both had 12 months "to rectify their current non-compliance".

Fitness cost Pandya T20 captaincy: Agarkar

AFP, Mumbai

Hardik Pandya lost out on India's T20 captaincy to Suryakumar Yadav because of concerns over his availability after frequent injury absences, India's chief selector Ajit Agarkar said Monday.

Explosive middle-order batter Suryakumar, 33, was last week named Rohit Sharma's successor in the T20 format for India's white-ball tour of Sri Lanka, which begins Saturday.

All-rounder Pandya, 30, was Rohit's deputy during India's T20 World Cup triumph last month but he has suffered from fitness problems and missed the 50-over World Cup last year with an ankle injury.

"Fitness has been something that he's struggled with," Agarkar told reporters in Mumbai alongside new coach Gautam Gambhir.

"As selectors, it becomes difficult then. The thought behind it was that we want someone who is likely to be available more." India begin their Sri Lanka trip with the first of three Twenty20 internationals on Saturday and Pandya has reportedly opted out of the three subsequent one-day internationals.

He was "still a very important player," Agarkar said. "And that's what we want him to be, those skill sets are hard to find." Agarkar praised Suryakumar's captaincy credentials. "He is one of the best T20 batters in the world," said Agarkar. "We feel that Surya has all the necessary qualities to be a good captain.

"We wanted a captain, who is likely to play all the games." Suryakumar would remain solely a T20 player, said Agarkar. Rohit has retained the 50-over captaincy.

Gambhir explained his coaching philosophy, speaking to reporters for the first time since succeeding Rahul Dravid. "I think it is important to give players the freedom, that's what I believe in," he said.

'France ready to host Olympics'

AFP, Paris

President Emmanuel Macron said on Monday that France was ready to host the Paris Olympics as he visited the Athletes' Village four days before the Games begin.

"We are ready and we will be ready throughout the Games," Macron said.

"We have been working on these Games for years now and we are at the start of a decisive week which on Friday will see the opening ceremony and then the Olympiad which will be held in Paris, 100 years since the last one."

He added: "This is the fruit of an immense amount of work which has profoundly changed the country, in particular area" of Seine-Saint-Denis, where the Athletes' Village is situated.

International Olympic Committee President Thomas Bach also visited the Village to the north of the French capital, where thousands of athletes and officials are arriving, with up to 14,500 expected there at the peak of the Games.

Comprising 40 different low-rise housing blocks, the complex has been built by employing innovative construction techniques using low-carbon concrete, water recycling and reclaimed building materials.

It was also intended to be free of air-conditioning with a natural cooling system, but some Olympic delegations are unconvinced and have ordered around 2,500 portable cooling units for their athletes.

Seine-Saint-Denis, where the main athletics stadium for the Olympics is also situated, is the poorest area in France and is hoping to reap benefits from the sports extravaganza.

Macron promised the area would not be forgotten after the Olympics.

Meanwhile, France's foreign minister said Israeli athletes were welcome at the Paris Games after a hard-left member of the French parliament sparked outrage by urging them to stay away because of the conflict in Gaza.

"The Israeli delegation is welcome in France," Stephane Sejourne said in Brussels ahead of talks with his Israeli counterpart, adding that the call by France Unbowed (LFI) lawmaker Thomas Portes for the country's exclusion had been "irresponsible and dangerous".

"We will ensure the security of the delegation," Sejourne added.

Portes drew an angry response from French Jewish groups and both political opponents and allies.

Meanwhile, French security forces were continuing preparations for the unprecedented opening ceremony on Friday, the first time a Summer Olympics has opened outside the main stadium.

Between 6,000 and 7,000 athletes are to sail down the river on 85 barges and boats, with a backdrop of world-famous monuments including Notre-Dame cathedral, currently being renovated.

The athletes will disembark for the culmination of a ceremony at the Trocadero opposite the Eiffel Tower that organisers promise will be spectacular.

Up to 300,000 ticketed spectators will watch from stands and on the river banks and another 200,000 are expected to watch from the overlooking apartments.

Mushfiqur, Mominul to play in 'A' team's Pak tour

SPORTS REPORTER

Veteran Bangladesh batters Mushfiqur Rahim and Mominul Haque are expected to be part of Bangladesh 'A' team's tour of Pakistan, which takes place ahead of the national team's Test tour of the country in August-September.

Mushfiqur and Mominul, currently with Bangladesh Tigers programme, will play the first four-day fixture of the A team, a BCB official informed The Daily Star.

The team is slated to depart for Pakistan on August 6 after holding three days of practice sessions in Dhaka. The team will play two four-day games in Pakistan, the first of which will take place from August 10 to 13 and the second one is slated for August 17 to 20. The last three fixtures are scheduled for August 22, 25 and 27 respectively.

Along with Mushfiqur and Mominul, players mostly from the Bangladesh Tigers programme will form the 'A' team's squad. Two other national team batters may join up to acclimatise with the conditions in Pakistan.

The national team would play two Tests in Pakistan from Aug 21-25 and Aug 30 to Sept 3 in Rawalpindi and Karachi respectively.

"We are trying to ensure that the players get maximum match practice and avail all the facilities. This is how we have been trying to schedule so that our players [members of the national team] can already play a match there [in Pakistan before the Tests]," Shahriar Nafees, in-charge of BCB cricket operations, told The Daily Star yesterday.

The national team players will, meanwhile, train in Dhaka from August 3 to 16 before departing for the Pakistan Tests.

'Bashir showed his full bag of tricks'

AFP, Nottingham

Ben Stokes said Shoaib Bashir had "showed the world" he belonged in international cricket after the 20-year-old off-spinner bowled England to a series-clinching victory over the West Indies in the second Test at Trent Bridge on Sunday.

Bashir took 5-41 as the West Indies collapsed to 143 all out on the fourth evening, with England triumphing by 241 runs to take an unassailable 2-0 lead in a three-match campaign.

It was Bashir's third five-wicket haul in just five Tests but first in England after he twice achieved the feat on spin-friendly Indian pitches earlier this year.

His latest exploits were all the more impressive given Bashir did not bowl a single ball and was out for a duck during England's innings and 114-run thrashing of the West Indies in the first Test at Lord's.

Bashir removed Kirk McKenzie, Kavem Hodge and Alick Athanaze -- all top-order batsmen -- in quick succession before bowling Jason Holder and last man Shamar Joseph as West Indies, set 385 to win, slumped to 143 all out.

"I think what Bash has done today is to show the world what he can do," said England captain Stokes.

"That wicket hardly offered anything for a spinner throughout the whole Test match and look at what he was able to do today.

"The way in which he can change his pace, produce over-spin and under-spin...I think he showed his full bag of tricks. He's got so much talent and the ceiling is so, so high. He's got an unbelievable desire and a will to get better and learn."

Stokes added: "It's really good for a young guy to come out and put in a performance that wins England a Test match, it's pretty cool for him."

For all his success in India, rising star Bashir was unable to break into the Somerset side at the start of the season after the side opted for a more experienced England spinner in Jack Leach.

That led Bashir to go on loan to Worcestershire last month, but England kept faith with him all the same.

"The decisions we make are all based around not only how far we think their talent can take them, but whether we think they're good enough for international cricket straight away," explained Stokes.

"I don't want to sound like it's an 'I told you so' kind of thing but it sort of is."

Defeat left West Indies with just pride to play for in next week's third Test at Edgbaston.

They actually managed a much-improved showing with the bat in Nottingham while making 457 in reply to England's first-innings 416 prior to Sunday's spectacular slump, which saw all 10 of their second-innings wickets lost in 23 overs.

"The big positive was our first innings, scoring 400 runs was great," said West Indies captain Kraigg Brathwaite.

"The two defeats are gone but we still have five Tests matches remaining for this year. So we keep learning and by the end of the year we'll be better off, once we have that correct mindset."

3 bodies found at shopping centre

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narayanganj

Three charred bodies were recovered from the second floor of Haji Ibrahim Shopping Centre in Shimrail area of Narayanganj yesterday.

Agitators torched the eight-storey building on Saturday during a clash with members of law enforcement agencies. The building was completely burnt.

The second floor of the building housed Shimrail Branch of Dutch Bangla Bank where several construction workers were working on its interior. When the clash broke out and the building was set on fire, all but the three of them were able to escape, said police.

Abu Bakar Siddique, officer-in-charge of Siddhirganj Police Station, said two injured workers, who were undergoing treatment at the Dhaka Medical College Hospital, informed police that their three fellow workers got trapped in the building.

He said as the clash was going on, police and fire service personnel could not reach the building. Yesterday, locals went into the building and found the Judicial body to visit spots once situation calms down

The judicial commission, formed to probe the deaths in violence centring the quota protests, will begin visiting the flashpoints of clashes as soon as the situation improves.

Led by Justice Khandaker Diliruzzaman, a High Court judge, the commission is now formulating its plan of action in order to properly conduct the inquiry into the violence, a source close to the commission told The Daily Star yesterday.

"The commission will work as per the relevant terms of condition," according to the source.

The source, however, did not clarify whether the commission will probe all deaths since the violence broke out or only the deaths of six people on July 16.

On July 18, Cabinet Secretary Md Mahbub Hossain issued a notification saying that the commission will learn the reasons behind the deaths of six persons

IT, BPO firms staring at a bleak future

MAHMUDUL HASAN

The country's promising export-oriented IT firms and business process outsourcing (BPO) companies, which fetch close to $1 billion a year, are fearing getting dropped by their foreign clients after abruptly going off the grid on Thursday night for the internet blackout.

The nature of their work needs them to provide services to their clients round-the-clock and also submit tasks within a strict timeframe.

Bangladesh's internet blackout from 9:00pm Thursday, which came without any warning, meant that the companies could not inform their clients of the impending service disruption.

"We have not been able to inform our clients of our current situation -- even during the depths of the pandemic there was no service disruption," said Md Riajul Islam, chief executive officer of Bright River Bangladesh.

> There is a high chance that these foreign clients will shift to India, Vietnam, the Philippines and other competitor countries.
> RASHAD KABIR
> MD of Dream71

Bright River provides services to clients in 16 countries in North America and Europe and saw a bump in client intake following the pandemic as the firm proved itself to be a dependable service partner.

But now, due to this service disruption, the foreign clients will divert orders to other countries even if the rates are not as competitive as Bright River's.

"I don't know how many employees I have to say goodbye to now," Riajul said, while urging the government to restore the internet service immediately and block social media if need be so that they can at least do some damage control.

Being without internet for even a day is disastrous for BZM Graphic, which does photo processing for ecommerce companies with 3-12 hours' deadline, according to its Managing Director Apel Mahmud Khan.

BZM mostly works as the production partner of Pixelz, which processes photos for 50,000 e-commerce platforms around the world.

"We have built this relationship with Pixelz over eight years of quality work with great reliability."

But now, this partnership is most definitely in jeopardy as BZM was not even able to ask the client to look for a temporary vendor.

"Our clients would not only be deserting our company but also our country. They may lose confidence in Bangladesh completely," Apel Mahmud added.

The daily financial losses to the IT industry due to the internet outage is about Tk 80 crore, said Russell T Ahmed, president of the Bangladesh Association of Software and Information Services.

"If it continues longer, the overall image of Bangladesh as a reliable partner in IT services will be tarnished. The progress that Bangladesh made in digital services will also be on halt."

Supporting the government's move to stop the violence, he said a mechanism should be

HQ of ex-Pak PM Imran's party raided

AFP, Islamabad

Pakistan police raided the headquarters of jailed former prime minister Imran Khan's party yesterday, a week after the military-backed government vowed to ban the political movement.

An AFP journalist at the scene saw the headquarters of Khan's Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) sealed off by police, who led a number of party workers into waiting vans.

Pakistani media initially reported party chairman Gohar Ali Khan, a barrister, was among those taken away.

However, an official at Islamabad Police, who asked not to be identified because he was not authorised to speak to the media, told AFP that they had not arrested him.

The official confirmed the arrest of Raoof Hassan, a founding member of the party and head of its press department.

"Raoof Hasan was arrested but the police did not arrest Gohar Ali Khan," the police official said.

The government's information minister said last week it would ban Khan's PTI, just days after the Supreme Court made a crucial ruling in the party's favour that dealt a huge blow to the government.

Candidates loyal to Khan won the most seats in February elections but were kept from power by an alliance of usually feuding parties, led by Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif, with the key backing of the powerful military.

Residents of Khan Yunus flee as Israel prepares offensive; 45 more killed in Gaza

AFP, Palestinian Territories

The Israeli military yesterday ordered Gaza civilians to leave the eastern part of Khan Yunis city, saying it was preparing to "forcefully operate" there after rockets were fired from an area designated as a humanitarian zone.

"Due to significant terrorist activity and rocket fire toward the state of Israel from the eastern part of the humanitarian area, remaining in this area has become dangerous," the military said in a statement.

In recent months the Israeli army has launched intense military operations in several areas of Gaza that were previously declared free of Hamas fighters.

Yesterday, it prepared to launch an operation in parts of Khan Yunis governorate, whose namesake city is the largest in the Palestinian territory's south.

- Heavy tank shelling reported in town of Al-Qarara
- No space for displaced in crowded makeshift encampment
- Gaza death toll rises to 39,028

Youssef Abu Taimah, from the town of Al-Qarara in Khan Yunis, told AFP yesterday that this evacuation order was the fourth time his family was displaced.

"We left amidst ongoing air and tank shelling, and drones firing shots," said the 27-year-old, who saw "injured and dead people transported by tuk-tuk (three-wheeled motorcycle) and donkey cart to Nasser Hospital" on the way.

Abu Taimah said his family headed to the humanitarian area of Al-Mawasi, but found there was no space for them in the crowded makeshift encampment.

"We will stay on the street, and even the sidewalks are full of people and tents. We are tired and fed up. Enough of this displacement."

Ahmed al-Bayouk, a 53-year-old man from Khan Yunis, felt similar despair. "Al-Mawasi is packed with people. There is no empty space," said Bayouk, who was displaced for the third time, "each time harder than the last".

"We barely settle for a few days before the army comes, bombs, displaces us, and destroys more," he told AFP. "Where should we go? Every place is at risk of bombing."

According to the Gaza health ministry, more than 39,028 Palestinians have been killed in the Israeli military offensive in Gaza since October 7. The toll incudes 45 deaths in 24 hours, reports Al Jazeera online.

Earlier this year the military had carried out a sweeping operation in Khan Yunis for months that saw swathes of the city reduced to rubble and tens of thousands of people displaced to a nearby humanitarian zone.

Bangladesh bounced back from a first-game defeat with a seven-wicket victory against Thailand in their Women's Asia Cup Group B match in Dambulla yesterday.

Young leg-spinner Rabeya Khan took four wickets for 14 runs as Bangladesh restricted Thailand to 96 for nine after being asked to bowl first. Opener Nattaya Boochatham scored innings-high 40 off 41 deliveries for the Thai women.

Bangladesh, who sufferred a seven-wicket defeat against Sri Lanka on Saturday, romped to the victory target in 17.3 overs, thanks to a 55-ball 50 from opener Murshida Akter.

The Tigresses will play against Malaysia in their final group match tomorrow.

Biden exit offers scope, pitfalls for Democrats

AFP, Washington

Joe Biden's withdrawal from the US election offers Democrats the precious opportunity for a late reset in a campaign that was going badly -- but ushers in an uncertain few weeks that will make or break their chances against Donald Trump.

Grassroots voters will hope to be better served than they were during the initial nomination race, when Democrats put up no serious competition to the 81-year-old president's candidacy despite worries over his age.

"Remarkable leadership shown by Joe Biden. Now it falls to the (Democrats) to show equal leadership by having an open process to determine the best candidate(s) to take on Trump-Vance in November," said entrepreneur Andrew Yang, who ran against Biden for the party's nomination in 2020.

"The goal should be simple -- to win," he wrote on X.

QUOTA IN GOVT JOBS

New system applicable for all grades

Following SC order, govt circular says 93pc jobs to be given on merit

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

In a major reform to the quota system in public jobs, the government yesterday issued a circular, taking merit-based recruitment in civil service to 93 percent from the existing 44 percent. The rest seven percent will come from various quotas.

The new quota system, which came in line with Sunday's Supreme Court order, will come into effect immediately and will be applicable to all grades of the government, semi-government, autonomous, semi-autonomous, statutory bodies and corporations in case of direct recruitment through exams, according to the circular.

There are 20 grades in government jobs. Direct appointments are usually done in 9th-20th grade. However, such direct appointments are also done in case of a handful of posts in some top grades like 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th grades, according to public administration ministry officials.

As per the circular, there will be five percent quota for the children of freedom fighters, martyred freedom fighters and Biranganas. One percent quota has been reserved for ethnic minorities and another one percent for persons with disability and people of third gender.

If enough candidates are not available from the quotas, the vacant posts will be filled up from the merit list.

"We have implemented the apex court's verdict as is... It was mainly a movement to reform the quota and we have done it. The students should now return to their classrooms," Law Minister Anisul Huq told a press briefing, announcing the circular.

Four key organisers of the quota reform protest rejected the circular, saying there should have been a discussion with the stakeholders before issuing the circular.

QUOTA: WHO GETS WHAT

- 5pc for children of freedom fighters, Biranganas
- 1pc for ethnic minorities
- 1pc for persons with disability & people of third gender
- No quota for women
- No quota for grandchildren of freedom fighters
- Vacant posts to be filled up from merit list

"Our movement will continue until justice is done about those killed and injured," said Nahid Islam, one of the organisers, about two hours after the law minister's announcement.

The circular came in the wake of an unprecedented violence centring on student protests for quota reforms.

According to The Daily Star's count, at least 150 people have been killed and several thousand wounded in clashes with law enforcers, joined in by alleged ruling party activists, since Tuesday.

The overall death toll may rise, as The Daily Star could not reach many hospitals in Dhaka and elsewhere where many critically injured were taken for treatment. Also, many friends and families reportedly took the bodies of their loved-ones from the scene and this newspaper could not contact them. The Daily Star's count of the death toll is based solely on hospital and police sources.

The massive unrest also saw dozens of public and private

Four key organisers of the quota reform demonstration have said the protests would continue after they rejected yesterday's government circular announcing the new quota allocation in government jobs.

"Before issuing the circular, the authorities should have held a dialogue with students and other stakeholders. We'll not accept the circular as the final resolution," Nahid Islam, a key coordinator, told a press briefing at Dhaka Reporters Unity yesterday.

The statement came two hours after Law Minister Anisul Huq briefed reporters on the circular at his residence around 3:30pm.

As per the government decision, 93 percent of the recruitment at government, semi-government and autonomous bodies will be based on merit.

A welcome move

The public administration ministry yesterday published a circular in line with the Supreme Court verdict on the quota system in government jobs. Following the circular, The Daily Star's Baharam Khan spoke to experts who expressed hope that the circular would bring about significant changes to the government recruitment process.

I think the issuance of the government circular on the reforms to the quota system is the right move for this moment as it will play a role in normalising the situation. 7-hour curfew break in Dhaka, 3 other districts

Govt offices to stay open from 11am to 3pm

The government has decided to continue the ongoing nationwide curfew until further notice.

The curfew will remain in force in Dhaka, Narsingdi, Narayanganj and Gazipur with a seven-hour break from 10:00am to 5:00pm today and tomorrow.

It also decided to keep all government, semi-government and autonomous offices open from 11:00am to 3:00pm today after the three-day general holiday, according to public administration ministry officials.

In Dinajpur, curfew will be relaxed between 8:00am and 5:00pm, said Shakil Ahmed, deputy commissioner of the district.

In Chattogram, curfew will be relaxed from 9:00am to 6:00pm, said Chattogram DC Abul Bashar Mohammad Fakhruzzaman.

Prof Yunus' statement anti-state

Says foreign minister

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud has said Nobel laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus' statement calling on the world leaders to end the violence in Bangladesh is anti-state.

"Prof Yunus has urged the global community to end violence here. Such a call means making a suggestion for intervention in the internal affairs of a country. This is anti-state. It is unfortunate. We cannot expect this. I condemn it," he said.

The minister said Prof Yunus did not condemn the attacks on state, rather he talked about the law enforcers killing people with bullets.

Hasan was speaking at a media briefing at the foreign ministry yesterday.

Prof Yunus in a statement on Monday urged the international community to stop the deadly violence in Bangladesh. The Daily Star did not run any report on the statement.

Ethiopia landslides toll hits 229

REUTERS, Addis Ababa

The death toll from two landslides in southern Ethiopia has jumped to 229 and could rise further as the search for survivors and casualties continued into a second day, a government official said yesterday.

A landslide buried people in Gofa zone in Southern Ethiopia regional state on Sunday night, then a second one engulfed others who had gathered to help on Monday morning.

"I don't know when it will stop. We are still recovering bodies," Markos Melese, head of the National Disaster Response agency in Gofa Zone, told Reuters by phone. "We are still digging."

On Monday an official said at least 50 people had died and children and police officers were among the dead.

Footage shared by the local administration showed people digging up bodies with shovels and bare hands.

"The death toll surged after the people who came to rescue also got trapped," said Gofa district administrator Misikir Mitiku. "It is a very sad incident."

President Abiy Ahmed said he was deeply saddened by the terrible loss of life, and that federal officials had been deployed to reduce the impact of the disaster.

"We stand in strong solidarity with the people and Government of Ethiopia as rescue efforts continue to find the missing and assist the displaced," African Union chairperson Moussa Faki Mahamat wrote on the social media platform X.

women in government jobs too considering that they belong to underprivileged group.

However, the government should take a decision based on evidence if it wants to reform the quota system again in future. That means the government should analyse relevant data such as the percentage of employable workforce among the population for whom the quota is intended and the percentage of employed people among them.

On the other hand, the apex court has established the fact that only the government has the authority to decide on quotas. So, there will be no confusion about it in the future.

recruitment to grades are done under different laws and rules. This circular will not change those recruitment processes. That means, quota for female in primary school teachers' jobs and ward quota in Bangladesh Railway have not been changed by this circular. Those quotas are still in effect. However, the ministry of public administration can clarify these issues.

I think the government should consider quota for females. Women of our country are still underprivileged. So, I hope the government would keep quotas to bring them into the mainstream of our society. Under the previous quota system, there were some provisions like district- or upazila-level positions for which only candidates of that particular district or upazila could apply. The ministry should clarify if this system still exists.

In my opinion, the biggest achievement of the new quota system is a smooth and trouble-free recruitment process. The previous quota system had made the recruitment process a really complicated task.

Abul Kashem

Thanks to the new directive, most of those difficulties are now gone. It will help speed up the government recruitment process. On the other hand, meritorious candidates, who used to be deprived due to the previous quota system, will now have better opportunities to join the civil service. The new system will increase competition among the candidates.

Recruitment of primary schoolteachers and enforcement of ward quota for Bangladesh Railway are done under separate laws and rules. Those laws and rules cannot be nullified by a government circular. However, the government will decide, if necessary, whether the Supreme Court verdict on quota reform will also be applicable to those.

Iran seizes oil tanker, arrests 12 foreign crew

AFP, Tehran

Iran's Revolutionary Guards seized a Togo-flagged oil tanker on Monday and arrested its 12 foreign crew members over alleged fuel smuggling, the Guards' news website said.

"The Revolutionary Guards' navy captured an oil tanker flying the Togolese flag and carrying over 1.5 million litres of smuggled oil," the Sepahnews website said.

"The vessel was brought to the port of Bushehr, along with its 12 crew members, who are of Indian and Sri Lankan nationality," it added.

Iranian naval forces frequently announce the detention of vessels transporting fuel in the Gulf.

establishments, including BTV centre and two Metro stations, vandalised or burned or both. Scores of vehicles also came under arson attacks.

Many non-students also took to the streets in Dhaka and elsewhere, especially in the last few days, to join the student protesters.

The sheer scale of the violence prompted the government to impose curfew and deploy armed forces across the country.

THE QUOTA DEBATE

The latest quota reform is the biggest yet since its introduction in 1972.

From 1972 to 1976, 20 percent recruitment was merit-based. It was increased to 40 percent in 1976 and continued until 1985, when it was further increased to 45 percent.

In 2012, one percent quota was introduced for persons with disability, taking merit-based recruitment to 44 percent.

Until the 2018 government decision, 44 percent government jobs were merit-based, 30 percent was reserved for freedom fighters' children and grandchildren, 10 percent for districts, 10 percent for women, five percent for ethnic minorities and one percent for persons with disability.

In October 2018, the government through a hastily issued circular cancelled the quota system in 9th-13th grades (Class-I and Class-II jobs) amid a massive quota reform movement at different universities.

The students never wanted its abolition, they only demanded that it be revised down.

Subsequently, the government circular was challenged in the High Court by seven children of freedom fighters. In response, the HC on June 5, 2024, declared the government circular illegal, essentially reinstating the 56 percent quota.

NATIONWIDE PROTEST

The HC verdict triggered a student protest on public university campuses first in Dhaka and within days in other parts of the country.

Thousands of students from private universities, colleges and in some cases from schools joined the nationwide movement.

Protests intensified after the Supreme Court on July 4 declined to issue a stay on the HC verdict, triggering a massive one-point movement for quota reform.

After three days of countrywide demonstrations, the SC gave a status quo on the HC verdict and set August 7 for hearing. The decision did little to pacify the agitators.

The movement turned violent after alleged Chhatra League and other ruling party activists attacked the agitating students at Dhaka University and some other universities on July 15.

The attack came hours after Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader said that "Chhatra League would give a fitting reply to those student leaders of the quota movement who labelled themselves as Razakars and were arrogant."

Violence escalated further after the killings of several students during their clashes with law enforcers and alleged pro-government activists, who were seen attacking the students with iron pipes, rods, sticks and hockey sticks in Dhaka and elsewhere. Some of them also opened fire on the protesters in and outside the capital.

In the wake of the situation, the government requested the top court to hold an early hearing as death toll continued to rise.

After hearing the matter for about two and a half hours on Sunday, the seven-member full bench of the Appellate Division led by Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan gave the verdict, curtailing quota to only seven percent.

In disposing of the matter under article 104 of the constitution, the top court "considered the importance of the case and the prevailing overall reality."

THE PRESS BRIEFING

At the briefing held at the law minister's official residence, Anisul read out the circular, and provided its context.

Education Minister Mohibul Hassan Chowdhoury, Public Administration Minister Farhad Hossain and State Minister for Information and Broadcasting Mohammad Ali Arafat were present.

Asked about women quota, the law minister said female students during the movement said they are empowered enough and they do not need this quota.

"I have nothing to say if the Appellate Division listened to them," he said.

He also said the government will take care of the treatment of the general students who were injured during the movement.

"Earlier, the prime minister in her address to the nation said that she will take steps about those who have been killed and injured. We are sticking to that comment," Anisul said, replying to a question.

"We came to know they have something to say about the cases that were filed. We are trying to reach out to them [protesters] through the media. It they give us information about the cases, we will look into the matter."

He said the government will create a congenial atmosphere at educational institutions and ensure safety and security of the students.

He also claimed that "militants, BNP, Jamaat, Islami Chhatra Shibir and Jatiyatabadi Chhatra Dal" infiltrated into the quota protest to destroy the country.

"We believe the situation will not deteriorate, as the problem has been solved. If anyone makes any ill attempt to deteriorate the situation, we will take stern actions."

About allegations that some international media ran reports using "distorted information," Arafat said a plan for carrying out violence using the students as a shield was hatched long ago.

"They had preparation to attack the data centre and disrupt internet service. Without internet, we also suffered as we could not communicate globally. As we could not communication globally, their syndicate abroad carried out a disinformation campaign. As a result, international media is providing wrong information," he said.

He claimed "BNP, Jamaat and Shibir men" attacked different government structures like BTV, data centre, toll plazas and Setu Bhaban.

"I received phone calls from BTV. They were crying, feeling threatened. They were saying, 'sir save us.'"

"When you are attacked, you have to fight back. When we fought back in defence, the clashes left many people killed and injured. The attackers are responsible for the killings. Each and every one involved in the killing will be brought to book," he said.

The education minister said students were used as a shield in the movement.

"We will assess how many students were involved in the movement and from which institutions after reopening of the educational institutions," he said.

accused were not mentioned and only stated "many unidentified accused".

Among the over 1,100 arrestees, 505 were in the capital, according to police and court sources.

Of the others, 102 were arrested in Chattogram; 34 in Barishal; 12 in Dinajpur; 33 in Rangpur; 55 in Mymensingh; 12 in Kishoreganj; 31 in Narsingdi; 18 in Khulna; nine in Manikganj; 100 in Savar; 72 in Rajshahi; 80 in Narayanganj, and 60 in Gazipur.

With the latest count, at least 2,657 people have been arrested across the country in the last four days.

Shamsuddin Didar, a member of the BNP's media cell, yesterday said police arrested BNP leader Shamsur Rahman Shimul Biswas and Dhaka city (north) BNP convener Saiful Alam Nirob from the capital's Bailey Road and Bashundharaarea yesterday.

BNP Treasurer Rashedujjaman Millad and executive member Tariqul Islam were also arrested in capital yesterday, he alleged, adding that law enforcers raided BNP standing committee member Gayeshwar Chandra Roy's Nayapaltan office, but did not find him there.

Police started block raids in the city and other parts of the country after violent clashes and destruction took place in the capital and elsewhere.

According to the Police Headquarters, 281 different kinds of police vehicles were torched or damaged, while 235 police establishments, including stations and outposts, were also vandalised or gutted.

Yesterday, the 505 arrestees in Dhaka were produced before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court, which sent almost all of them to jail. A few were placed on remand on different terms, court sources said.

According to court records, 799 people were produced before the CMM court in three days till Monday.

Meanwhile, Additional Commissioner of DMP's Detective Branch (DB) Harun-or-Rashid yesterday said the DB has so far arrested 150 BNP and Jamaat leaders.

At a press briefing in his office yesterday, he alleged that different wings of the BNP and a section of Jamaat-Shibir activists carried out arson attacks on the BTV Bhaban, Setu Bhaban, Data Centre, metro rail, police traffic boxand police stations, upon the instructions from Tarique Rahman, acting chairman of the BNP, from London.

Harun said they arrested BNP executive committee member Tariqul Alam yesterday. According to the DB chief, Tariqul had been in contact with Tarique and used to convey his messages to other leaders.

for ethnic minorities and another one percent for persons with disability and people of third gender.

The new allocation is in line with Sunday's Supreme Court verdict.

Nahid said the verdict and the circular were in favour of the protesters. But the government should answer for the recent bloodshed and deaths.

"So, we demand a policy-making dialogue involving the stakeholders in a conducive environment. Besides, we urge the government to form an independent commission to avoid issues regarding the quota system in future.

"Our movement will continue until justice is ensured for the deaths and injuries."

Two other coordinators, Sarjis Alam and Hasant Abdullah, Assistant Coordinator Hasib Al Islam, and Billal Hossain, father of Asif Mahmud, an organiser who allegedly had been missing since July 19, were present at the briefing.

There were also some policemen at the briefing, while a large number of them were seen outside.

Nahid said the situation escalated as a result of "instigating speeches by different government officials, controversial activities of Jubo League and Chhatra League, and use of excessive force by the law enforcers".

Taking advantage of the anarchic situation created to foil the movement, criminals launched arson attacks on different government establishments, he added.

"It's clear that irresponsible acts by the government and oppressive policy are to blame for this anarchic situation. For this, the government is solely responsible, while the law enforcement agencies failed to ensure public safety."

He added that the government was now shifting the blame to students and different political parties.

The government called for a dialogue while driving students out of campuses and shooting at protesters. "So, we had then rejected the call for dialogue."

He added that he was abducted and tortured physically and mentally for 24 hours, but did not say who abducted him.

"We don't feel safe."

"The government tried to suppress the movement through arrests, enforced disappearances, and use of excessive force."

Hasanat Abdullah said that before things got out of hand, the students urged the government to hold dialogue. "But they did not listen. The government cannot avoid responsibility for the damage."

"The internet shutdown caused a lack of coordination among the organisers." Meanwhile, three organisers Asif Mahmud, Abu Baker Majumder, and Rigat Rashid had been missing, he added.

Sarjis Alam said 300 to 400 people have been killed in the recent violence. "This loss is irreparable."

He said dialogues with the government could only be held when the safety of the protest organisers is ensured, the internet is fully restored, the curfew is withdrawn, educational institutions are reopened, and law enforcers leave the campuses.

The protesters on Friday night put forth a set of demands that include a public apology from Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina and the resignation of Road, Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader and Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan from the cabinet.

They welcomed the government decision to restore internet as a trial around 10:00pm yesterday and demanded full restoration of internet.

In future, the media should have internet services during such situations.

The closure of the internet services is disrupting the exchange and verification of information. The economy is also being affected badly.

Such closure of internet service creates a fear of information blackout, it said, adding that resumption of internet service is imperative in keeping the economy running.

The statement said several journalists lost their lives and at least 100 others were injured.

"Journalists discharging their professional duties are still in a state of insecurity. All parties have to take the responsibility to ensure safety of journalists.

"The situation turned worse as rumours, false and baseless information spread over the last few days due to the internet closure," added the statement.

The meeting was attended by Mahfuz Anam, editor and publisher of The Daily Star; AK Azad, publisher of Samakal; Matiur Rahman, editor and publisher of Prothom Alo; AMM Bahauddin, editor of Dainik Inqilab; Naem Nizam, editor of Bangladesh Pratidin; Alamgir Hossain, editor of Samakal; Zafar Sobhan, editor of Dhaka Tribune; Mostafa Mamun, editor of Desh Rupantor; Md Golam Rahman, editor of Ajker Patrika; Nurul Kabir, editor of New Age; Shahriar Karim, executive editor of Sangbad; Shamsul Huq Zahid, editor of The Financial Express; Matiur Rahman Chowdhury, editor of Manabzamin; ASM Shahidullah Khan, publisher of New Age; Shyamal Dutta, editor of Bhorer Kagoj; Dewan Hanif Mahmud, editor and publisher of Bonik Barta; Altamash Kabir, editor of Sangbad; and Saiful Alam, editor of Jugantor.

High Court divisions of the Supreme Court, will remain suspended during the curfew hours.

The courts will resume judicial proceedings if the curfew is relaxed.

The SC administration yesterday issued three notifications in this regard detailing the instructions.

The offices and sections of the courts will remain open as usual even during the curfew.

If the government declares any general holiday, the courts will remain closed on that particular day, SC Registrar General Abdul Aziz Bhuiyan told The Daily Star citing the notifications.

According to a notification, the district judges, district and sessions judges, metropolitan sessions judges, chief judicial magistrates and chief metropolitan magistrates will fix the timing of their courts and offices after coordinating with the district magistrates and the police commissioners concerned.

They will conduct the judicial functions after informing the judges, officials and lawyers about the timing.

In Gazipur, eight factories were shut in Sreepur upazila yesterday for running operations during the curfew hours, said Assistant Commissioner (land) of Sreepur Atahar Shakil.

Some of them are teens, some in early 20s and many are middle-aged men. The one thing common between all of them is that they have been shot either by shotgun pellets or bullets, as police and BGB opened fire at protesters and alleged infiltrators during the recent unrest centring the quota protests.

Many claimed they had nothing to do with the violence or protests. According to them, they were either harmless onlookers or commuters who had to venture out for different emergencies. And now, they are barely surviving on hospital beds, after coming in the line of fire.

From Thursday, Dhaka hospitals, mainly Dhaka Medical College Hospital, were stretched to their limits with patients suffering from pellet and bullet wounds.

Take the case of Shafiqul Islam.

He was shot in his back on Sunday evening when he went out to see what the situation was outside.

When these correspondents visited DMCH yesterday, his four-year-old daughter Fatema was peacefully sleeping beside him.

But peace was the last thing on Shafiqul's mind. He was barely awake, completely worn out after going through a life-saving surgery.

"I cannot move my body. Sometimes, the pain is so severe that I think even death was better. I don't think I can return to normal life," he said.

Currently, 217 patients with pellet and bullet wounds are undergoing treatment at the facility.

As many as 1,071 patients, with injuries sustained from sharp weapons, pellets, and bullets, have sought treatment at DMCH from July 15 to July 22, according to DMCH Director Brig Gen Md Asaduzzaman.

Around 60 bodies were brought to the facility during this time, while 19 died undergoing treatment, he added.

Miraz Hossain is one such patient who is still undergoing treatment.

He went out of his home to grab breakfast. When he reached Boubazar, Rampura, he suddenly heard gunshots. People were

Healthcare limps on

AHMED DEEPTO

Private medical colleges, hospitals and diagnostic centres across the country have been facing unprecedented disruptions due to the ongoing internet shutdown.

All online healthcare services are now out of reach for patients. Mobile internet was shutdown from 1:00pm on Thursday while broadband services came to a halt from 9:00pm the same day.

There are a total of 15,247 registered private hospitals, clinics, diagnostic centres and blood banks. Of them, 5,029 are hospitals and clinics, 10,021 are diagnostics centres and 197 blood banks, according to DGHS.

"The central operating system connecting every branch of our hospital has been stopped as we don't have internet. All the lab reports are being registered through typing, which takes a lot of effort and time," said AM Shamim, chairman of LabAid Group.

"There is no alternative to restoring the internet for healthcare services. We don't want social media. We only need the internet," he said.

Square Hospitals authorities said they are facing six types of trouble because of the internet shutdown. Online doctors' appointments, receiving lab or investigation report through apps and emails, updating software's and high-tech equipment, online call centres -- these services are off.

Many attendees used to pay their hospital and test bills through online services, which is totally off now, said Esam Ebne Yousuf Siddique, chief operating officer of Square Hospitals.

Moniruzzaman Bhuiyan, president of Bangladesh Private Clinics and Diagnostic Owners' Association, said they urged the government to restore internet to prevent further damage to the private health sector.

Nilufar Yasmin, 55, a resident of Dhanmondi, said, "I have chest pain for the last couple of days. My physician advised me to conduct an X-ray and an echo-cardiogram. Earlier, I used to get my lab report online, but now I cannot."

Meanwhile, State Minister for ICT Zunaid Ahmed Palak yesterday said broadband services would resume by midnight on a trial basis.

ARRESTS FOLLOWING UNREST

Desperate for a glimpse of loved ones

Families crowd CMM court

EMRUL HASAN BAPPI

Julekha Khatun could not sleep. Her husband Helal, 49, was arrested at 2:00am yesterday from their residence in Karail slum.

She headed to the kitchen early morning and cooked some food. She heard from law enforcers that her husband, a tea seller, would be produced in front of Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court.

With home cooked meal, she left house for Old Dhaka, where the court is situated, despite the ongoing curfew.

After walking for hours, she finally reached her destination, walking past several check-posts.

All she wanted was to catch a glimpse of her husband, and hand him the food if possible.

But she failed. Even after waiting for five hours till 5:30pm, she couldn't meet him.

"My husband sells tea. He was not involved in any violence, yet police arrested him," she claimed.

Helal was among 505 people produced before the CMM court yesterday in cases filed centring the recent violence, according to court sources.

The court premises were filled with relatives of the arrestees, and many couldn't get to see their loved ones amid the rush of people.

"We live on my husband's meagre earnings. How will we maintain the family expenses now?" Julekha asked.

Later in the day, Helal was sent to jail after police produced him before the court in a case filed with Banani Police Station over violence.

Hafsa Akter, 40, came to the court premises from Fakirerpool to find her son Mamun.

She said her son is an employee of a grocery shop in the area. Police arrested him on Monday evening when he went to buy medicine.

However, like Julkeha, she too couldn't catch a glimpse of her son.

Meanwhile, Hosna collapsed in front of the court premises when she saw her 21-year-old son Hridoy being taken away from the court in a prison van.

Travel agents face EXISTENTIAL CRISIS

Says ATAB president; activities of 4,000 agencies remain halted since Thursday

The travel agents are facing an "existential crisis" due to the countrywide internet blackout as all activities of around 4,000 travel agents have remained halted since Thursday night.

Association of Travel Agents of Bangladesh (ATAB), a platform for travel agents, said ATAB is incurring a loss of around Tk 100 crore as all kinds of air ticket sales, rescheduling and hotel bookings have remained halted since July 18.

Besides, travel agents also couldn't realise money from different corporate and regular clients from earlier sale of tickets, as monetary transactions remained suspended due to the closure of banks and other financial services, said ATAB.

"Our existence will be in danger if internet service does not resume immediately. We need to start our activities as soon as possible," ATAB President Abdus Salam Aref, told The Daily Star yesterday.

"We assume bitter days are awaiting us due to the ongoing situation," he added.

ATAB fears that travel agencies will fail to pay International Air Transport Association (IATA) bills if the current situation continues for another day or two.

Different foreign airlines collect money against ticket sales from IATA, as it acts as a mediator between travel agents and foreign airlines.

Travel agents pay airlines through IATA every 15 days. The next payment date falls on July 30, said the ATAB president.

"Besides, if we cannot collect the ticket sales money from buyers and organisations, we won't be able to pay arrears to respective airlines," he added.

"We have not been able to contact any airlines in the last five days due to the internet shutdown," he said, adding that global distributing system, ticket booking -- everything entirely depends on online

DHAKA TO GAZIPUR BRT LINE

Arson chars 22 escalators, project may get delayed

TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

The launch of a dedicated bus service between Dhaka-Gazipur corridor may get delayed further as miscreants have damaged 22 escalators to be used for elevated stations on the route during the recent unrest.

After changing several deadlines, the authority planned to start trial run of the service on Bus Rapid Transit (BRT) Line-3 from January next year.

"But the trial run is likely to be delayed," Md Moniruzzaman, managing director of Dhaka BRT Company, told The Daily Star yesterday.

Even if they can start trial in January, all the stations will not be ready by then due to the escalators being damaged, Ilias Shah and Mohirul Islam, two project directors, told this correspondent yesterday.

'Detention, arrest of students concerning'

Say 22 current, ex-DU IR teachers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Twenty-two current and former teachers of International Relations Department at Dhaka University yesterday expressed grave concern over "large-scale arrests and detention of students" for participating in the quota reform protest, and demanded their immediate release.

In a statement, the teachers said the students have merely exercised their rights to freedom of assembly and expression, guaranteed in the constitution.

They alleged that Rashidul Islam, a third-year student of DU IR and a co-coordinator of the protest, has been missing since July 18, and demanded that the authorities find him and ensure his security.

"There have been news reports of disappearance of student activists, with some being subsequently found abandoned in isolated places with severe bodily wounds. We urge the authorities to take appropriate action against the perpetrators and ensure that everyone is treated in accordance with the law," said the statement.

JAIL ATTACK

Trying hard to arrest attackers

Says home minister

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narsingdi

The government is trying hard to arrest all the attackers of Narsingdi District Jail and the masterminds behind the incident, said Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan yesterday.

"We have already arrested 95 people who carried out the anarchy... We are trying our best to arrest the rest of the criminals involved in the incident," he said.

The minister was briefing reporters on the Narsingdi Jail premises.

"Many convicts -- who fled from the prison -- are now surrendering," he said.

"We have formed two probe committees to investigate the incident. We believe that BNP-Jamaat men are behind the incident," he added.

The home minister also informed that the nationwide curfew will be withdrawn within a day or two.

In a separate press conference yesterday afternoon, the district's Deputy Commissioner Badiul Alam said 136 convicts have already surrendered and 33 firearms have been recovered.

Narsingdi Jail Superintendent Md Abul Kalam Azad and Jailer Md Kamrul Islam have been suspended, he said.

On July 19, a total of 826 prisoners fled from the jail, while 85 arms, and 9,000 bullets were looted.

RECENT VIOLENCE

Funding came from abroad

Says Rab

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Rapid Action Battalion yesterday claimed that miscreants collected funds from Europe and Middle East in the name of providing aid to students during the quota protests.

These funds were used for subversive activities by communicating with the vested quarters in the country and abroad.

Rab made the claims while addressing media at the capital's Karwan Bazar yesterday following the arrest of four members of Gono Odhikar Parishad, including its joint member secretary, for their involvement in violence and sabotage activities in BTV building and metro rail.

Arrestees are Tareq Rahman, 31, joint member secretary of the party; Sajal Mia, 24; Al Foysal Roky, 27; and Ariful Islam, 30.

Lt Col Munim Ferdous, director of legal and media wing of Rab, said they have already identified four people who financed the violence.

Without disclosing the details, he said they are investigating to know the roles of suspects.

Addressing media at the same venue, Harun Ar Rashid, additional inspector general of Rab, said the protests turned violent from July 19.

Protesters targeted the police and conducted violent activities at different government establishments, said the Rab chief.

Fuel sales drop by 89.3pc

MD NAZRUL ISLAM, Ctg

The ongoing curfew, which began on Saturday, has resulted in fewer vehicles plying streets throughout the country. As a result, fuel sales have decreased significantly.

The sale of diesel has dropped by 98 percent, while sales of petrol and octane have fallen by 82 and 88 percent respectively. On average, fuel sales dropped by 89.3 percent.

Chairman of Bangladesh Petroleum Corporation (BPC) Aminul Ahsan told The Daily Star that there is a sufficient fuel stock in the country. Fuel depots were closed due to unstable situation, but now all activities in the depots are normal.

"Sale of fuel decreased in the past few days, as vehicular movement remained stopped," he said, adding, "As the situation has improved now, sale of fuel has also increased since Tuesday."

As per data from BPC, around 3,000 tonnes of diesel was sold on Monday. On the same day, 175 tonnes of octane, 295 tonnes of petrol and 1,400 tonnes of furnace oil was also sold.

On Saturday, only 1,400 tonnes of diesel, 42 tonnes of octane and 160 tonnes of petrol were sold. No furnace oil was sold on that day.

Requesting anonymity, a number of officials of BPC said 11,000 tonnes of diesel was sold in the country on July 20, 2023 while 1,000 tonnes of octane and 1,300 tonnes of petrol were sold on that day.

The sale of diesel has dropped by 98 percent, while sales of petrol and octane have fallen by 82 and 88 percent respectively.

At present, the demand for diesel in the country is 15,000 tonnes a day, while for octane the daily demand is 1,500 tonnes and 1,600 tonnes for petrol.

According to officials at the depots, demand for diesel is high in the northern districts of the country, including Rangpur and Dinajpur, at present. So, supply of diesel is being ensured in this region through railway wagons.

BPC chairman Aminul Ahsan said jet fuel is being supplied to the four airports in the country with the help of security forces.

Taken in November 2012, the project, formally known as Greater Dhaka Sustainable Urban Transport Project, was originally planned to be completed by December 2016 at a cost of Tk 2,037.9 crore.

But long delay was caused by issues relating to land acquisition, relocation of utility services, design changes, contractors running out of money, and the pandemic. Moreover, physical work was suspended twice.

As a result, the total project cost is now estimated at Tk 4,268.3 crore and the deadline is December 2024.

The 20.5-kilometre bus corridor, the country's first dedicated rapid bus service, will allow people to reach Dhaka from Gazipur in 35-40 minutes, which now takes between 1.5 and two-three hours. There will be 25 stations.

Moniruzzaman said all construction works under the project is supposed to be completed within September and they have already floated the tender to procure buses for the dedicated bus service.

According to the progress report, 94.61 percent of physical work of the project was completed by May this year.

He, however, said at least 22 new escalators, which were kept on the project site, were burnt down either fully or partially during the unrest centring the quota protests.

Cost of each escalator is around Tk 50 lakh to Tk 60 lakh, he said.

He said they were now checking whether these escalators can be repaired or they have to be replaced.

"All these escalators were imported from abroad. It would take a good amount of time if these need to be imported again," he said.

Ilias Shah, project director (Roads and Highways Department part), said out 57 escalators, 16 were burnt down partially or fully. Besides, different equipment at several under-construction stations from Uttara's Azampur area to Gazipur's Board Bazar area were either vandalised or burnt down, he said.

Now, they will have five months to either repair or replace the escalators before launching the trial run, he said. If they cannot repair or replace the escalators by this time, they will have to ration the rest of the escalators among 19 stations that fall under their (RHD) project area, he told The Daily Star yesterday.

Mohirul Islam, project director (Bangladesh Bridge Authority part), said six out of their 12 escalators for six stations under their (BBA) project area were affected.

He said they could not ascertain whether those have to be repaired or replaced.

If those escalators are found to be unusable, then all the stations may not be opened during the trial run, he told The Daily Star yesterday.

running and screaming, and before he could understand anything, a bullet hit the left side of his chest and pierced through his back.

When he regained consciousness, he found doctors trying to stop his bleeding at DMCH.

He had to go through a surgery. Although his condition is now stable, he can neither eat, nor use the bathroom without the pipes installed in his body.

Md Sumon, a middle-aged trader in New Market area, shared a similar ordeal.

He was shot below his waist.

"I stay in Azimpur. On Friday, I went out for Juma prayers. When I reached the New Market area, a bullet suddenly hit me. Although doctors saved my life, I don't think I can ever return to normal life. I am not sure if I can even walk again," he said.

For Md Sifat, 17, a joyous trip to his "nana bari" (grandfather's home in village) in Narsingdi turned into a nightmare as he was hit by a bullet when he went out.

The bullet pierced through his waist. A cannula was installed on his wrist, and all sorts of pipes through his body. He couldn't talk to this correspondent, only tears rolled down his cheeks.

His aunt, Nasrin Akhter, said, "Our Sifat is a good boy. He was never involved in politics. He came to his native village in Narsingdi from Shariatpur after education institutions were closed."

"He cannot eat solid food now. Only liquids are being given to him through a pipe," Nasrin said.

Meanwhile, 16-year-old Waliullah is the middle child in a family of five.

Due to poverty, his parents couldn't afford to send him to school.

He worked at a repairing shop in Narsingdi to support his father. On Friday, he went outside after lunch and got hit by a bullet. His condition is similar to Sifat.

Md Rubel, was stuck in his home for a day as sounds of gunfire and sound grenades rocked his neighbourhood on Friday. However, they ran out of drinking water.

So, he had to go out to buy water. When he reached Mugda Bishwo Road, a bullet pierced through his back.

Dr Md Alauddin, resident medical officer at DMCH, said all the patients admitted now were brought in a critical condition. They all had to undergo surgery.

"Although most of their condition is now stable, there are chances of infections in the wounded areas," he added.

The situation was more or less the same in National Institute of Traumatology, Orthopedic and Rehabilitation, and Suhrawardy Medical College Hospital.

In NITOR, around 1,369 patients were treated from July 17 to July 21, mostly with bullet and pellet wounds in arms and legs, said its Director Prof Dr Kazi Shamim Uzzama.

Of them, 537 had to be admitted.

The situation was the worst on Friday, the director said.

"The day-offs of all our doctors and staff had to be cancelled. They worked round the clock, and we had to keep all the eight operation theatres open for 24/7," he added.

Doctors at the emergency department said many patients, who were admitted to the facility before the violence, had to be discharged before time to make room for patients with bullet wounds.

Nayeem Mia, 19, is one such patient. He had to undergo a surgery on his limbs on July 9.

His father Naser Mia said his son was supposed to stay for at least a week, but the doctors told them to leave and return when things turn normal to make room to for the influx of patients on July 19.

In SMCH, as many as 518 people were treated during the same timeframe, according to its Director Prof Shafiur Rahman.

Of them, 30 had to undergo major surgeries while 150 minor ones.

Meanwhile, at least 394 patients were treated in National Institute of Ophthalmology, most with bullet and pellet wounds in eyes.

Of them, 157 had to be admitted, as per hospital sources.

communication.

The ongoing crisis has also put outgoing passengers in limbo.

ATAB leaders said they are in total darkness regarding whether passengers who have already bought and issued tickets will be able to fly to their respective destinations.

In the present situation, passengers who need to fly immediately buy tickets directly from the respective airlines at airports.

Things are really chaotic in the travel industry now, said Abdus Salam Aref.

Due to the internet outage, the total ticket-selling system has collapsed, said different airlines as foreign airline depends on agencies for selling tickets.

Due to passenger shortage, around 26 flights have been cancelled since last Friday, they said.

Several hundred passengers, mostly Saudi Arabia-bound migrant workers, suffered immensely due to the cancellation or delay of flights to and from Dhaka airport.

The return of the workers to KSA on time became uncertain as Saudia, the national flag carrier of Saudi Arabia, cancelled at least 10 flights.

Meanwhile, according to the civil aviation and tourism ministry, limited-scale internet service has resumed at airports.

RMG factories

Law enforcers allowed workers with identity cards to enter the factories, he said.

"Production resumed at Klarion Designs located in Dewanhat area at 8:00am," said Managing Director Altaullah Siddique Masud.

Around 95 percent of the factory's 1,100 workers came to work, as most live nearby, he said.

The workers of a sister concern, MKM Designs, travelling to their factory on eight buses were stopped by local police at Kalurghat, he said. They were released after confirming where they were going, said Masud.

He said he was scheduled to ship 150 containers of jerseys to Spain by the end of this month.

"We already lost four days. Now we need our workers to do overtime to ensure timely shipment," he said.

Meanwhile, many workers complained of having to pay double the transport fares to reach their factories.

Sultan Ahmed, quality in-charge at Uni Garment at Bayezid, said he had to spend over Tk 90 against Tk 40 on a regular day.

"Along with the production resumption, restoration of internet is also needed now to ensure timely shipments," said Rakibul Alam, vice-president of the BGMEA.

MYANMAR CRISIS

Junta chief takes on acting president role

AFP, Yangon

Myanmar's acting president has taken medical leave and transferred his duties to military chief Min Aung Hlaing, the junta said on Monday.

Myanmar has been in turmoil since the military seized power in 2021, deposing the government of democracy leader Aung San Suu Kyi.

Acting president U Myint Swe "took sick leave and is getting treatment according to his current health situation", the junta's information team said in a statement.

"Acting president duties have been handed over... to the chairman of State Administration Council," he said, using the name the junta calls itself.

Myint Swe was vice president under the democratically elected government of Aung San Suu Kyi that the military ousted in 2021.

He was later appointed acting president by the junta.

He had been suffering "psychomotor retardation and malnutrition," state media said on Friday.

A Palestinian woman and a little girl ride on a donkey cart laden with their worldly goods, as thousands of Palestinians who fled following the Israeli army's evacuation order for parts of Khan Yunis, including the Al-Mawasi humanitarian zone, arrive in another area of the southern Gaza city yesterday.

POST-WAR GAZA PLAN

Hamas announces 'unity' deal with Palestinian rivals

AFP, Beijing

Hamas announced yesterday that it had signed an agreement in Beijing with other Palestinian organisations including rivals Fatah to work together for "national unity", with China describing it as a deal to rule Gaza together once the offensive ends.

Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi, who hosted senior Hamas official Musa Abu Marzuk, Fatah envoy Mahmud al-Aloul and emissaries from 12 other Palestinian groups, said they had agreed to set up an "interim national reconciliation government" to govern post-offensive Gaza.

"Today we sign an agreement for national unity and we say that the path to completing this journey is national unity. We are committed to national unity and we call for it," Abu Marzuk said after meeting Wang and the other envoys.

China has sought to play a mediator role in the conflict, which has been rendered even more complex due to the intense rivalry between Hamas, which rules the Gaza Strip, and Fatah, which partially governs the occupied West Bank.

Israel has vowed to keep fighting until it destroys Hamas, and world powers including key Israeli backer the US have scrambled to imagine scenarios for the governance of Gaza once the offensive ends.

US Secret Service chief resigns

AFP, Washington

US Secret Service Director Kimberly Cheatle resigned yesterday, a day after acknowledging that the agency failed in its mission to prevent an assassination attempt against Donald Trump.

Cheatle was facing bipartisan calls to step down after a 20-year-old gunman wounded the former Republican president and current White House candidate at a July 13 campaign rally in Butler, Pennsylvania.

"It is overdue, she should have done this at least a week ago," Mike Johnson, Republican Speaker of House of Representatives, said.

Blinken heads to SE Asia to reaffirm ties with strategic allies

AFP, Washington

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken heads to Southeast Asia this week to deepen ties with Washington's strategic allies, an official said Monday, as the United States seeks to bolster its regional stance against an increasingly assertive China.

On a 10-day trip that will see him visit Vietnam, Laos, Japan, the Philippines, Singapore and Mongolia, Blinken will carry a message of US commitment to its allies in the region, said Daniel Kritenbrink, a senior US State Department official.

"We're deepening our bilateral relationships, we're expanding our allied and partner relationships, which have reached unprecedented heights, and we are creating a latticework of mutually reinforcing partnerships together," he said.

The United States has in recent years significantly increased its engagement with several countries in Southeast Asia, particularly those locked in territorial disputes with Beijing in the South China Sea.

Blinken's tour will include his participation in an Association of Southeast Asian Nations (Asean) ministerial meeting in Laos, where he will also meet with his Chinese counterpart Wang Yi on the sidelines.

President Joe Biden has made expanding US alliances in the region a core part of his administration's foreign policy, and Kritenbrink said there was "strong bipartisan support on Capitol Hill for our allies and partners and our approach to the region."

Under Biden, Washington has doubled down on its engagement in what it terms the "Indo-Pacific" region, upgrading ties with several countries in the region and forming the so-called "Quad" alliance, which includes the United States, Japan, Australia and India.

Blinken's visit to Asia will be his 18th to the region since he took office more than three years ago.

"The message that the Secretary is going to be conveying to the region is that America is all in on the Indo-Pacific," said Kritenbrink.

Blinken will begin his six-nation tour in the Vietnamese capital Hanoi, where he will attend the funeral of late communist leader Nguyen Phu Trong which is scheduled to begin tomorrow.

Trong died last week at a military hospital in Hanoi "due to old age and serious illness" at the age of 80.

In Laos, the US Secretary of State will participate on Friday and Saturday in the Asean ministerial meeting, where he will also meet Foreign Minister Wang.

Neither the United States nor China has confirmed whether the meeting will be a full bilateral sit-down or a less formal exchange.

India on $24bn jobs drive in Modi's first post-polls budget

AFP, Mumbai

India's government will spend $24 billion on employment and training, it said yesterday, as Prime Minister Narendra Modi looks to address uneven economic growth and mollify disgruntled voters after a surprising election setback last month.

The funding will be used over five years for a package of five schemes and initiatives to "facilitate employment, skilling and other opportunities" for more than 40 million young people, Finance Minister Nirmala Sitharaman said in her annual budget speech.

Some will go on "employment-linked incentives" for companies, which the government hopes will create jobs.

"The global economy, while performing better than expected, is still in the grip of policy uncertainties," Sitharman said.

"In this context, India's economic growth continues to be the shining exception and will remain so in the years ahead," she added.

Modi's Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) fell short of an outright majority in recent national elections.

based solely on hospital sources.

Hridoy was a residential student of CU's Shah Amanat dormitory, reports our Chattogram correspondent.

With his death, six people were killed in clashes in Chattogram.

Victim's friend Tahmina Firuz Hasan said Hridoy was rushed to Chattogram Medical College Hospital on July 18 evening after being hit by bullets and later he was moved to Park View Hospital's ICU. The next day, the doctors referred him to Dhaka for better treatment.

Youngest among two siblings, Hridoy hailed form Patuakhali Sadar upazila. Losing his only son, Ratan Chandra Tarua and Archana Rani became shell-shocked, reports our Patuakhali correspondent.

About the death of another youth, Ahad Ali, officer-in-charge of Sher-e-Bangla Nagar Police Station, said police received the body from the neurosciences hospital and sent it to Shaheed Suhrawardy Medical College morgue for an autopsy.

He sustained head injuries during clashes in the capital's Uttara, the OC said.

Shuvo Shil, 24, who had bullet wounds in clashes between agitators and law enforcers at Savar on Saturday, died at Savar Enam Medical College Hospital yesterday morning.

Yousuf Ali, manager of the hospital, confirmed the death.

According to him, another youth Faruk, 24, who was hit by bullets during Saturday's clash, breathed his last early Sunday.

Faruk was among Sunday's 14 deaths.

Quader stays away from press

questioned the organisational strength of the party's Dhaka city units and its associate bodies, said sources.

He expressed disappointment at the failure of the leaders and activists of the party's Dhaka city units and some associate bodies to take to the streets despite the party's directives.

After violence broke out at different parts of the country, Quader on several occasions urged the party men to take to the streets and put up resistance against the troublemakers.

On July 16, Quader in a meeting with the Dhaka city unit AL leaders instructed them to remain vigilant.

But no leaders and activists of the AL and its associate bodies were seen in many parts of Dhaka city during the demonstrations over quota reforms.

Violence broke out since July 16 that left at least 150 people dead and several hundred injured.

In yesterday's meeting, Quader expressed his frustration that the thana unit committees of the Dhaka city AL have not been formed. He asked the leaders to form those committees immediately.

The AL leader requested the party activists to comply with the curfew rules.

were given a list of social media and messaging apps at a meeting at the BTRC and instructed to submit a report on the success rate of blocking those apps after running trials, according to sources involved with the process.

They requested anonymity due to the sensitivity of matter.

While, the government and the BTRC said the internet blackout occurred due to the attack on the data centres in the capital's Mohakhali, the sources said the shutdown of the internet was ordered by the government.

The Daily Star visited the data centres in question and found no sign of fire damage to the building that housed them.

Officials of these data centres also confirmed that the fire did not reach their offices.

They said the fire that broke out on Thursday in the building of the Department of Disaster Management in Mohakhali, adjacent to the data centres, has damaged several overhead cables connected to the data centres.

Even if these data centres were completely gutted by the fire, the internet connections of less than one-fourth of country's users at best should have been disrupted, Mohiuddin Ahmed, president of the Bangladesh Mobile Phone Consumers Association told this newspaper.

He went on to say that since there were redundancies and big internet service providers did not host their servers at those centres, the countrywide internet service should have been running largely smoothly.

Terming internet service as a basic need, Mohiuddin urged the government to restore internet for every citizen as soon as possible.

Multiple broadband service providers said many of their cables and equipment were vandalised during the recent violence, but it should have only resulted in suspension of internet connections in those specific areas, not a complete blackout.

On July 17, after the government ordered the shutdown of mobile internet, Palak, state minister for ICT, said the decision was taken in light of the current unrest in the country and to stop the spread of fake news on social media.

On July 18, a fire broke out in the building of the Department of Disaster Management in Mohakhali, damaging the internet transmission lines of some data centres housed in an adjacent building.

On the same day, around 8:00pm, officials of Internet Service Providers Association of Bangladesh (ISPAB) said fire may eat away 30 to 40 percent of bandwidth supply, leaving some users disconnected and many with slow internet.

But around 9:00pm, Bangladesh went under a complete internet blackout.

Emdadul Haque, president of ISPAB, yesterday said though there are some works still going on to restore their damaged lines, they are now prepared to provide broadband internet across the country.

Gaza City, with four others killed in the Jabalia refugee camp.

At least 39,090 people have been killed since the Israeli offensive began on October 7. The toll includes 84 deaths in 24 hours, according to the Gaza health ministry figures.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, under pressure to reach a truce and hostage-release deal, arrived in Washington to address the US Congress today.

Netanyahu will meet US President Joe Biden tomorrow. In late June, Netanyahu said the offensive "in its intense phase" was about to end.

The evacuation order for Gaza's Al-Mawasi area came just two months after the military directed Palestinians there for their own safety.

"Due to the Israeli occupation's attacks and massacres in Khan Yunis governorate from the early hours of this morning until now, 70 people have been martyred and more than 200 wounded," the Gaza health ministry said.

The Israeli military did not offer comment on the toll when asked by AFP. But in a statement, the military said its fighter jets and tanks "struck and eliminated terrorists in the area".

It said forces targeted more than "30 terror infrastructure" sites in Khan Yunis. Israeli warplanes also hit a weapons storage facility, observation posts, tunnel shafts and structures used by Hamas, it added.

UN, US, UK slam violence

when they come under attack, which is true for any country in the world. Police were forced to shoot when they were attacked, and public properties were destroyed and set on fire.

Catherine West, parliamentary under-secretary of state of the UK Foreign, Commonwealth and Development Office, on Monday expressed deep concerns over the violence in Bangladesh in recent days.

"The loss of life is unacceptable ... the rights to protest, to peacefully assemble and to express different political views are rights, which the UK holds dear and must be protected," she said, calling for quickly restoring internet.

"We urge an end to the violence and loss of life and call on all sides to find ways to restore calm across Bangladesh, including by establishing a pathway for constructive political dialogue in the interest of the people of Bangladesh."

Meanwhile, the UN has conveyed its concerns to Bangladesh authorities over the "misuse of UN-marked vehicles" during the student protests over the last week.

"The misuse of UN-marked vehicles is alarming and has been conveyed to Bangladeshi authorities," a UN spokesperson told a briefing in New York on Monday.

During the diplomatic briefing by Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud on Sunday, acting UN resident coordinator Domenico Scalpelli also spoke about UN logos on helicopters seen on TV.

"This has now come to the attention of the UN headquarters in New York," Scalpelli said.

A UN official in Dhaka told this correspondent yesterday that these vehicles are the properties of Bangladesh government, but use of those marked with UN logos during violence is a reputational issue for the UN.

Asked, Foreign Secretary Masud Bin Momen told this correspondent yesterday evening: "We are looking into it."

The UN spokesperson in New York said the "brutal crackdown on the student protesters" in Bangladesh is unacceptable. Accountability and dialogue are essential.

Domenico Scalpelli told Hasan on Sunday that internet outage is impacting the lifesaving work of UN and NGO partners for flood victims and Rohingya crisis response, as well as government's monthly social security cash payments for most vulnerable poor families.

"Reduction of security forces in Cox's Bazar camps risks resulting in further increase of insecurity in those camps."

"We need government's facilitation for us now to bring in satellite phones and other equipment for emergency communications," he said.

reforms protests left at least 150 people dead and several hundred injured.

On Friday, the government declared curfew and deployed armed forces to help the civil administration restore normalcy.

The US State Department spokesperson on Monday condemned the reported shoot-on-sight orders and called for those to be rescinded.

"We said everywhere in the world police take action if they come under attack.... [In Bangladesh] police had no other option but to open fire when they came under attack, houses and properties were destroyed or set on fire."

The minister said some vested quarters are spreading rumours abroad amid the internet outage at home. The foreign ministry has instructed the Bangladesh missions abroad to send messages to the Bangladesh communities and foreign governments describing the real picture of what has happened in Bangladesh.

Hasan said the foreign ministry has also arranged a visit for the foreign diplomats stationed in Dhaka to the destroyed public properties today.

"As these need to be rebuilt, we will not be able to show them later. So, we have arranged the visit tomorrow [today]," he said.

About diplomatic mission staff going on voluntary leave, the minister said he had no idea about how many staff went on leave. "The situation is not like that the diplomatic staff will have to leave Bangladesh."

He said Dhaka has issued a note to New Delhi regarding West Bengal Chief Minister Mamata Benarjee's remarks on "students' bloodshed" in Bangladesh.

"With due respect, we would like to say that we have good relations with her. But her remarks may create a scope for confusion. We have already issued a note to the Indian government about it," he said.

The minister said many media personnel came under attack during the violence. Two journalists were killed and many injured.

RMG factories start to reopen gradually

All units may resume production today

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Garment and textile factories started to gradually reopen yesterday after being kept shut for four days with the expectation that all factories will reopen today.

Nearly 30 percent of garment factories, including some in Dhaka, were opened yesterday and no untoward incident was reported.

All factories will reopen today, SM Mannan Kochi, president of the Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA), said after a meeting with the home minster, who assured him of safety.

"We are hopeful that all the factories will reopen tomorrow," said Mohammad Hatem, executive president of the Bangladesh Knitwear Manufacturers and Exporters Association, over the phone.

He added that they were facing challenges in communicating with their foreign buyers due to an ongoing internet blackout.

Local liaison offices of international clothing retailers and brands have also complained of being unable to contact their headquarters and place new work orders.

Leaders of the garment and textile sectors have been lobbying the home minister and state minister for ICT over the last two days to ensure safety of workers and restore the internet.

They met the prime minister on Monday seeking to reopen factories. The prime minister advised to do so at their own risk.

Kochi added that the sector has already suffered losses amounting to Tk 6,400 crore in potential earnings due to the shutdown over the four days.

Nearly 30 percent of garment factories, including some in Dhaka, were opened yesterday and no untoward incident was reported

The factory owners will have to pay Tk 1,000 crore in wages although there was no production in the factories, he added.

Similarly, the losses in the garment accessories sector stands at over Tk 2,500 crore, Kochi also said.

The sector leaders were scheduled to sit in another meeting with the home minister last night.

Members of the Bangladesh Textile Mills Association are also trying to reopen their factories but some have been barred by local administrations over safety concerns.

Meanwhile, many garment factories in Chattogram, except those inside export processing zones, have resumed production.

Law enforcement agencies and the local administration consented to the reopening in a meeting with leaders of the BGMEA's Chattogram chapter on Monday, Syed Nazrul Islam, first vice-president of the BGMEA, told The Daily Star.

"Around 70 to 80 percent of the 450 factories currently operational outside the EPZs resumed production yesterday," said Islam.

A bus terminal in the capital's Syedabad is overflowing with vehicles, which have been forced to stay off the roads due to a nationwide curfew amid violence centring the quota reform protests. Transport operators are counting heavy losses because of the volatile situation, which has seen them unable to ply the roads for nearly a week.

Bus operators stare at losses

JAGARAN CHAKMA and TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

Bus services, the main mode of passenger transportation in Bangladesh, have been shut for nearly a week in the wake of violence centring the quota reform movement and the subsequent imposition of a nationwide curfew by the government.

The shutdown not only deprived operators from carrying passengers and earning revenue, but also caused them to incur huge losses. This is because they still have to bear expenses to repay bank loans, pay salaries to employees and pay counter rent.

There is no exact estimate of losses, but a top leader of a bus operators' association said inter-district operators have been losing out on at least Tk 18 crore in daily revenue since Friday, when they stopped plying the roads amid escalating violence.

Around 30,000 buses ply inter-district routes daily under around 200 companies. Each bus is losing at least Tk 6,000 in revenue daily, said Khandker Enayet Ullah, secretary general of Bangladesh Road Transport Owner's Association.

The loss is even greater if fixed expenditures are factored in.

Bangladesh has over 83,000 registered buses, with private investment in the business growing in line with the expansion of national and regional highways.

The country now has roughly 4,000 kilometres of national highways and 4,900 kilometres of regional highways.

Buses carry roughly 70 percent of passengers, followed by inland waterways, rail and air.

Enayet estimated overall investment in the sector by private operators at several thousands of crore taka, saying that they are the first victims of any violence or unrest.

Around 30,000 buses ply inter-district routes daily under around 200 companies. Each bus is losing at least Tk 6,000 in revenue daily, said owners

He added that the sector directly employs around 10 lakh individuals.

Enayet said their business suffered heavily when a lockdown was imposed during the Covid-19 pandemic. Operators did not get support from the government, nor did banks defer interest and instalment payments, he said.

Md Abdur Sattar, general manager of Green Line, an air-conditioned bus service provider, said they have not been operating for a week due to the ongoing violence and curfew.

Green Line operates over 100 air-conditioned buses on eight routes, he said, adding that they have 47 counters and around 400 staff members.

"Although we are not operating, our unavoidable costs (fixed costs) are almost Tk 1.5 crore per day, including rent of counters, staff salary and utility charge," he said.

"We have no revenue because our operations are stopped, but bank interest will still have to be paid," he said.

However, he said they would not need to pay drivers, conductors or helpers as their job is under the master roll, meaning they are not paid when operations are halted.

A number of their buses were stranded in different districts, Sattar said, adding that they even had to repay passengers who had booked trips in advance as those were cancelled.

He further said that miscreants had vandalised three of their buses.

"But we have to accept reality as we have no alternative," he lamented.

Moshareff Hossain, general manager of Hanif Paribahan, said they will resume operations after getting the green signal from the government.

On the other hand, sources at the Bangladesh Road Transport Corporation said they are yet to get any order regarding bus operations from government high-ups.

SM Nadiruzzaman, managing director of Dola Paribahan, which operate buses on the Dhaka-Khulna and Dhaka-Pirojpur routes, said they have also faced huge business losses due to unavoidable circumstances like other operators.

"Although we did not need to pay salary to the drivers and support staff, we have to provide food to the staff and allowances to those who take care of the vehicles. That amount is not low at all," he said.

He added that they had decided to begin operating from today as the government has relaxed the curfew hours.

Shuvenkar Ghosh, proprietor of Shyamoli NR Travels, said they already started to operate considering the plight of their workers. As they needed to make a living, the company decided to operate on a limited scale on very limited routes, he said.

"Despite starting operations, the number of passengers is very low. If the number of passengers rises, we will increase the number of buses on all routes," he said.

Ghosh, also joint secretary of the Bangladesh Bus, Truck Owners' Association, said other operators will also start operations soon.

Container congestion eases slightly

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

Container congestion at Chattogram port eased slightly yesterday as a noticeable number of containers could be transferred to private inland container depots (ICDs).

The number of total containers lying in different port yards came down to 41,620 twenty-foot equivalent units (TEUs) as of 8am yesterday, down from 42,150 TEUs a day ago.

Around 1,110 TEUs of containers could be transported to different ICDs in the 24 hours to 8am yesterday, said Md Omar Faruk, secretary of the Chittagong Port Authority (CPA).

Moreover, 65 TEUs of import containers could be delivered from the port yards to consignees yesterday whereas none could be delivered to consignees in the previous two days.

Transport of import and export containers between the port and private ICDs also improved, said officials of ICDs.

However, import containers and cargoes started piling up at the ICDs because of slow release of containers thanks to problems in duty assessment amid internet shutdown and poor vehicular movement on the Dhaka-Chattogram highway.

Very few export cargo from Dhaka and other parts of the country reached the port, as most factories remained closed yesterday, said Ruhul Amin Sikder, secretary general of the Bangladesh Inland Container Depots Association.

Banks waive penalty for delayed loan repayment

MD MEHEDI HASAN

Some banks have decided not to impose any interest or fees on clients for delayed payment of loan instalments, including that against credit cards, amidst a nationwide curfew and internet blackout.

A good number of banks are also on way to take the decision in the next one or two days.

Four local private commercial banks, BRAC Bank, City Bank, Mutual Trust Bank and Pubali Bank, and foreign lender Standard Chartered Bangladesh have already taken the decision.

Jamuna Bank Managing Director and CEO Mirza Elias Uddin Ahmed confirmed to The Daily Star that they have already spoken to their chairman so that the decision could be taken.

The Association of Bankers Bangladesh (ABB), a forum of chief executive officers of private commercial banks, requested the Bangladesh Association of Banks (BAB), comprising owners of banks, to take the decision taking into consideration the unavoidable circumstances at present, said industry insiders.

Issuing a notice, BRAC Bank said it took the decision against the backdrop of general holidays and internet outage and would reimburse any such interest or fee that might have been already charged.

"We took the decision as clients are facing trouble conducting online banking," Managing Director Selim RF Hussain told this newspaper.

They have ensured that their ATM booths contain adequate cash but international transactions for export and import, remittance collections and all payments abroad are now suspended for the internet shutdown, confirmed Hussain, also the ABB chairman.

KEY POINTS

- BB urged BTRC to allow broadband internet for banks
- People facing trouble in withdrawing money
- Foreign transactions for export-import halted
- Banks can't make overseas payment
- Banks' profitability will be impacted adversely

Mutual Trust Bank also has taken the same decision, confirmed Managing Director Syed Mahbubur Rahman.

Pubali Bank Managing Director Mohammad Ali said they generally do not impose such interests or fees and took the decision to refrain from imposing those as it would not have been ethical to do otherwise.

He believes the internet blackout will adversely affect the banking sector alongside the bank's profitability.

In another notice, Standard Chartered Bangladesh said it would waive any extra fees, charges or interest on credit cards or loans incurred for repayment delays. It added that its ATM network was active.

Top Bangladesh Bank officials spoke to Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission (BTRC) to ensure broadband internet for banks, said a senior central bank official seeking anonymity.

Mirza Elias Uddin Ahmed of Jamuna Bank told The Daily Star that the central bank assured them of talking to government stakeholders to reconnect banks with broadband internet.

"We came to know that the central bank is going to meet with the BTRC to restart broadband internet of banks as soon as possible," said Selim RF Hussain.

Around $80 million to $100 million in remittances are sent to Bangladesh on a regular day, which was disrupted for the internet shutdown, he said.

Amidst the internet shutdown and nationwide curfew, people have been unable to conduct online banking since July 18. A lot of ATM booths have been kept shut while others have run out of cash.

Dairy farmers' income falls amid curfew

AHMED HUMAYUN KABIR TOPU, Pabna

Dairy farmers in Pabna and Sirajganj are reporting a drop in sales revenue, citing that a few companies have either reduced or stopped making purchases amidst the curfew.

Farmers are now depending on local traders to sell their milk at low prices.

Around 34 lakh litres of milk are produced per day by dairy farmers of Pabna and Sirajganj, according to the district livestock offices.

Out of the 19 lakh litres produced in Sirajganj, dairy companies buy 7-8 lakh litres while local traders the rest, said Md Omor Faruk, the livestock officer of Sirajganj.

Around 15 lakh litres of milk are produced in Pabna every day and dairy companies buy 1.5 to 2 lakh litres, said Gourango Kumar, the livestock officer of Pabna.

However, there is no scope of any milk going to waste as many private companies and sweetmeat shops operating in the region end up purchasing leftovers, he said.

A local conglomerate has dropped their daily purchases from their usual 550-600 litres to 300-400 litres, said farmer Md Al Amin of Pabna, adding that they were having to sell off their milk to locals at low prices.

Local traders used to pay Tk 52 per litre but now they pay Tk 50, he said.

The cost of producing each litre of milk is Tk 48 to Tk 50, said Md Saiful Islam, president of Dairy Farm Owners Association of Pabna.

Farmer Md Raju Ahmed of Ramkharua village in Shahzadpur upazila of Sirajganj said his usual daily sales to a cooperative in Baghabari has dropped from 20 jars which are of 40-litre capacity to 16 jars.

Locals pay lower than the rate which dairy companies usually set based on the percentage of fat, he said.

HOW OUR LIVES are interwoven by the internet

The internet has revolutionised communication, allowing the general public to spread messages to the world with the click of button and by ensuring that business deals can be completed in minutes by facilitating the easy transfer of documents. At present, the internet is so ubiquitous that life crawls to a standstill without it. Essential services such as customs procedures and port operations are severely hindered while the general public is left without entertainment, access to money or online services. The recent internet blackout shows how it has impacted our lives.

Time for a deeper reflection on protests

Legal action for violence is vital, but so is addressing popular anger

It is natural to be consumed by the sheer number of people killed during the recent clashes—at least 146 in six days, as per The Daily Star, and even higher by some other estimates. Tragedies like this leave behind a crippling sense of doom and hopelessness, especially with restrictive measures like curfew and internet shutdown isolating us not only from the outside world but also each other. But while we try to process all this, it is crucial to take stock of other losses suffered, notably through the destruction of key public infrastructures, which we condemn in unequivocal terms. People are already having to suffer for this, with key services disrupted or discontinued. Images showing charred remains of so many government establishments and installations indicate that any recovery from the fallout will take months, if not years.

The question is, how should we go about this unprecedented crisis in our life? While attempts are underway to bring back some semblance of normalcy, including through restoring internet partially, a key concern relates to establishing accountability for what happened so far. The government appears to have made up its mind, even before investigations. It claims that BNP-Jamaat men are responsible for the destruction and arson attacks, with the PM issuing a stern warning about not sparing them "like in the past." But any blanket accusation shrinks the space for a more nuanced reading of the situation. Is it possible that what's really to blame is a combination of political foul play and outbursts of popular anger? Would the situation become so uncontrollable if the government handled the initial protests more judiciously, without resorting to force? And is accountability at all possible without critically probing the role of security forces, especially the intelligence services?

It is important to separate the movement from the violence that has ensued, however. As experts have pointed out, what facilitated the unholy sync between the two is the "zero-sum game of politics" which leaves little space for opposition. In such a climate, subversive forces may capitalise on public discontent over growing economic hardships, governance deficits, and the general atmosphere of intimidation and insecurity against free speech and freedom of association. People want their grievances to be heard and acted upon. But intransigence and non-responsiveness, denial of reality, or use of disproportionate force in the event of protests may be counterproductive for the authorities in the end.

What we understand from analyses like this is that it is possible, even critical, to see the recent clashes from more perspectives than one (the government's). As we write this, over 1,400 people were arrested across the country. Many cases were also filed. This trend will likely continue as the nation searches for answers. But before this again becomes a one-way road to political blame game and suppression of rivals, it is vital that the authorities try to understand the broader circumstances in which those indiscriminate killings and destructions occurred, and ask whether it was possible to prevent them. Otherwise, we may continue to be at risk of such meltdowns.

Dhaka filling up with garbage

Urgent action needed to remove accumulated waste

In the aftermath of the mayhem that saw the destruction of multiple public infrastructures across Dhaka city on July 18-20, we face a grim, putrid reality. While several service sectors have been severely disrupted due to the violent clashes and attacks, the city's garbage management system has also collapsed. According to media reports, since July 18, the authorities have been unable to collect household waste from residential and other areas. As a result, Dhaka has been filling up with garbage.

The events of the last one week disrupted the garbage management system of both city corporations. Garbage collection was halted during the complete shutdown called by the quota reform movement. Later, saboteurs vandalised garbage management offices and vehicles. According to a report by this daily, four garbage-carrying compactors and 29 vehicles including 10 garbage-carrying container carriers used by the Dhaka North City Corporation (DNCC) were set ablaze at its zone-4 office in Mirpur-10 on Friday and Saturday. Meanwhile, in the Matuail landfill area, four garbage-carrying vehicles of Dhaka South City Corporation (DSCC) were burnt down, Prothom Alo reported. Amounting to Tk 120 crore in losses, these made up one-fourth of DNCC's garbage management fleet and had the collective capacity of carrying 400 tonnes of waste.

The massive loss has greatly affected the city corporations' garbage management system, the result of which is visible now. Piles of household waste are seen lying on the streets, spreading stench around. Collectors have not visited households for the last four or five days, forcing people to dump their garbage either in the local garbage containers or directly on the streets, per another report in this daily. The secondary transfer stations are full to the brim and the garbage is now spilling onto the streets in several areas of the city. We understand that this is an unprecedented situation, and the city authorities have limited resources at the moment. But they should have had a back-up plan.

The DNCC mayor has said his office is prioritising garbage removal and has staff working in shifts amid the curfew, but it will still take a week for things to go back to normal for all kinds of crisis. If the garbage is left to rot out in the open, it poses a serious threat to not only public health and well-being, but the environment as well. Moreover, if it rains, the garbage could block the drains and cause water-logging, exacerbating the problem. We urge the city corporations to be more prudent in handling the situation and mobilise the available resources to urgently remove all the garbage from the streets to prevent another potential crisis.

Saluting the spirit of our young people

NO STRINGS ATTACHED

Aasha Mehreen Amin
is joint editor at The Daily Star.

AASHA MEHREEN AMIN

There is no shame in admitting that in the last few days many of us have cried helplessly, over the senseless deaths of students—teenagers or in their early twenties—the same age or close to the ages of our children. The first time we saw the video of Abu Sayed, one of the coordinators of the movement in Rangpur, being shot to death as he spread out his hands in surrender, our hearts broke at the ruthlessness of a law enforcer, repeatedly shooting at a young man who was practically unarmed. But our hearts filled with awe at the bravery of this young man who was so steadfast in a cause that demanded equal opportunity for young people to compete for government jobs.

Amidst the anguish and despair, this is what stands out the most—the spirit and courage of our young people. Our young students have proved to us once again that they are a conscious generation—contrary to common perception of them. They are well aware of the reality they are surrounded by and do not live in a bubble. We got a glimpse of this clarity of purpose during the 2018 Road Safety Movement by school students after a few of their fellow students were crushed by a raging bus at a bus stop. Their outrage took a positive form as they organised themselves into monitoring groups and started checking vehicles for their fitness, licenses etc. They were doing the job the traffic police were supposed to be doing and trying to implement basic road safety rules that should have been enforced by the government a long time ago. They showed us what their state had failed to do, which was to keep people safe from the road crashes we have become notorious for. On the streets, we saw uniformed school kids stopping vehicles—even VIP cars going the wrong direction were turned back—and checking documents. What we saw in those young faces was hope, belief in a better future, a saner world where people do not have to worry whether they will come home alive, every time they step into the streets. Their selflessness, determination and immense courage, gave us an optimism we had forgotten how to feel anymore. Sadly, their movement was nipped in the bud with violence and intimidation, though it didn't erase the fact that they had made history during those days and shown the country their worth as leaders.

The anti-discrimination protests for quota reform started the same year and was considered successful as it led to the government to abolish the quota system altogether. This move, however, done in haste and possibly in a huff, proved to be controversial when the High Court ruled in July 2024, that it was unconstitutional and had to be scrapped leading to the second anti-quota protests. As we know, the anti-discrimination movement was never one to abolish all quotas but to come up with a logical, fair percentage for the various marginalised groups.

The young leaders of the current movement—Students' Movement against Discrimination—from what we saw through clips of videos aired by the media (before the internet blackout), seemed to have a much more determined and organised plan. Their agenda was the same as before—to have a reasonable quota system that would give more opportunity for regular, non-quota BCS candidates a chance to compete for government positions. They were challenging the system that gave 30 percent quota to freedom fighters, their children and grandchildren, a quota which, even many freedom fighters feel, is outdated and unnecessary after 53 years of independence.

The peaceful demonstrations started to spread all over the country, and were joined not only by students of public universities but private universities, colleges and even schools—young people who joined in out of solidarity for their brothers and sisters. This fraternity of students was something so beautiful to witness that we, the grownups, could not help but feel proud despite the inconvenience of prolonged traffic jams and restrictions on movement. The cause they were demonstrating for in the heat and rain, for hours on end, was justified and there seemed no reason for the government not to endorse it with open arms.

But what happened in the following days is a painful reminder of the disconnect between our leaders and their young population. The government decided to "nip it in the bud" yet again but this time their strategy backfired badly. The students refused to back down, even after they were beaten mercilessly by ruling party goons, even when the pellets from police shotguns pierced their young bodies and blinded their eyes, even when live bullets went through their hearts. The more force and brutality were inflicted on them, the more their numbers swelled in the demonstrations, the more resolute they became. It is this fearlessness that has shown us what these young people are made of.

While the movement was derailed by the government's disproportionate use of force that took the lives of at least 146 people, many of them students and innocent bystanders, which gave the scope for political and extremist elements to carry out vandalism and arson attacks, the steadfastness of the student protesters of the current quota reform movement remained. While we can never reconcile ourselves with this unprecedented level of violence and deaths, we will never forget those bright young faces, their fiery speeches and articulate understanding of the realities they live in. Those heroes who literally took the bullet to bring about change will be remembered as crucial figures of a tipping point in history.

The more force and brutality were inflicted on them, the more their numbers swelled in the demonstrations, the more resolute they became.

Preparing for a future of extreme heat waves

RENZO R GUINTO

People across Asia have eagerly awaited the end of heat-wave season, which now appears to be drawing to a close. In my home country, the Philippines, the first typhoon of the year arrived in late May, lowering temperatures that had climbed to nearly 50° Celsius (122° Fahrenheit). Over the previous few months, the record-breaking heat led to school closures, a spike in emergency-room visits, reduced productivity, and a return to remote work.

While the public-health effects and economic impact of extreme heat waves can be difficult to measure, the speed at which they are forgotten is alarming. This mirrors the cycle of panic and neglect that often follows pandemics: societies forget the lessons of past health crises and are caught unprepared when the next one arrives.

Just as we must improve pandemic preparedness, we must mitigate the health risks posed by life-threatening temperatures. As climate change accelerates, heat waves are expected to become increasingly frequent and intense, especially in Asia. To survive this "new normal," we cannot rely on inadequate public-health guidelines like drinking more water and staying in air-conditioned spaces, as if the vast majority of the world's population has access to air conditioning or even clean water. Nor is it acceptable to suggest that women should cope with extreme heat by not wearing underwear, as a former Philippine health minister recently suggested.

Instead, governments must adopt a more proactive approach and accelerate efforts to build heat resilience. By the time the next historic heat wave hits, all countries should have a national plan to address it, along with adaptation measures for local communities. In fact, every aspect of policymaking should be viewed through the lens of resilience. Beyond the health sector, the top priorities should be housing, transportation, and water—which are all targets under the Sustainable Development Goals.

Housing should come first. Many of Asia's most vulnerable people live in poorly ventilated public housing or densely populated slums. Globally, an estimated 1.6 billion people suffer from inadequate living conditions. Given that such surveys do not usually account for ventilation, this could well be an underestimate.

There are more viable options for adaptation than advising poor people to live in air-conditioned buildings. In addition to being costly, air conditioners consume vast amounts of electricity, with researchers estimating that they are responsible for 3.9 percent of global greenhouse-gas emissions. Instead of burning more fossil fuels to meet this increased energy demand, policymakers must reimagine urban development to protect both the planet and public health. For example, some countries in Asia, including Indonesia and Singapore, have begun using low-cost "cool roof" paint to lower indoor temperatures without air conditioners.

Transportation is another heat-sensitive sector. Whether riding in overcrowded buses or waiting for extended periods on sweltering train platforms, commuters in low- and middle-income countries are often exposed to extreme temperatures. Investing in sustainable transportation systems that also provide comfort during heat waves is crucial to achieving vital climate and public-health goals.

To build heat resilience, governments must also address the global water crisis. Although hydration is crucial for protection against extreme heat, nearly one-third of the world's population does not have access to safe drinking water. Single-use plastic water bottles are not the answer; like air conditioning, they are costly, carbon-intensive, and polluting.

Heat-preparedness programmes must focus on highly vulnerable groups, such as farmers and fisherfolk, construction and factory workers, the elderly, and people with comorbidities. This effort must also be extended to prisoners, detained migrants, and psychiatric patients, all of whom are often confined to extremely hot, cramped spaces.

Like storm and pandemic-response protocols, heat preparedness must be embedded in health policies. To this end, Asian countries' disease-surveillance systems should be updated to account for heat-related illnesses before the region endures another historic heat wave. Maintaining adequate supplies of medical equipment, from basic items like intravenous fluids to cooling vests, is also crucial.

Moreover, the potential effects of extreme heat must be integrated into the education and training of emergency doctors, community-health workers, and primary-care providers, who are often the first point of contact for underprivileged patients. Regrettably, the clinical management of heat-related illnesses like heatstroke was mentioned only in passing when I was a medical student.

Lastly, researchers must focus not only on the epidemiology of heat, but also the effectiveness of our policies and interventions. The National University of Singapore, for example, launched a research centre dedicated to heat resilience in 2023; my institute will complement this with a new initiative on planetary health that will help health systems and communities across Asia build climate resilience.

With global temperatures rising at an alarming rate, we have no choice but to adapt to a warmer world. At the same time, accelerating decarbonisation could enable us to reduce the frequency and intensity of extreme heat waves. By pressuring governments and corporations to stop burning fossil fuels, we can build true heat resilience and improve planetary health.

What are the implications of revised export figures?

Dr Sadiq Ahmed
is vice-chairman of the Policy Research Institute of Bangladesh (PRI). He can be reached at sadiqahmed1952@gmail.com

SADIQ AHMED

Bangladesh Bank (BB) recently released revised export figures for July-May 2024 that are much lower than the figures reported by the Export Promotion Bureau (EPB). According to BB, actual export earnings for the period was $40.7 billion, compared to $51.5 billion reported by EPB.

> Exporters in general have been complaining about rising costs and falling demand for RMG. Moving forward, the recent correction of the exchange rate policy should help. Reduction of inflation would also be helpful. But a much more aggressive export diversification strategy is needed.

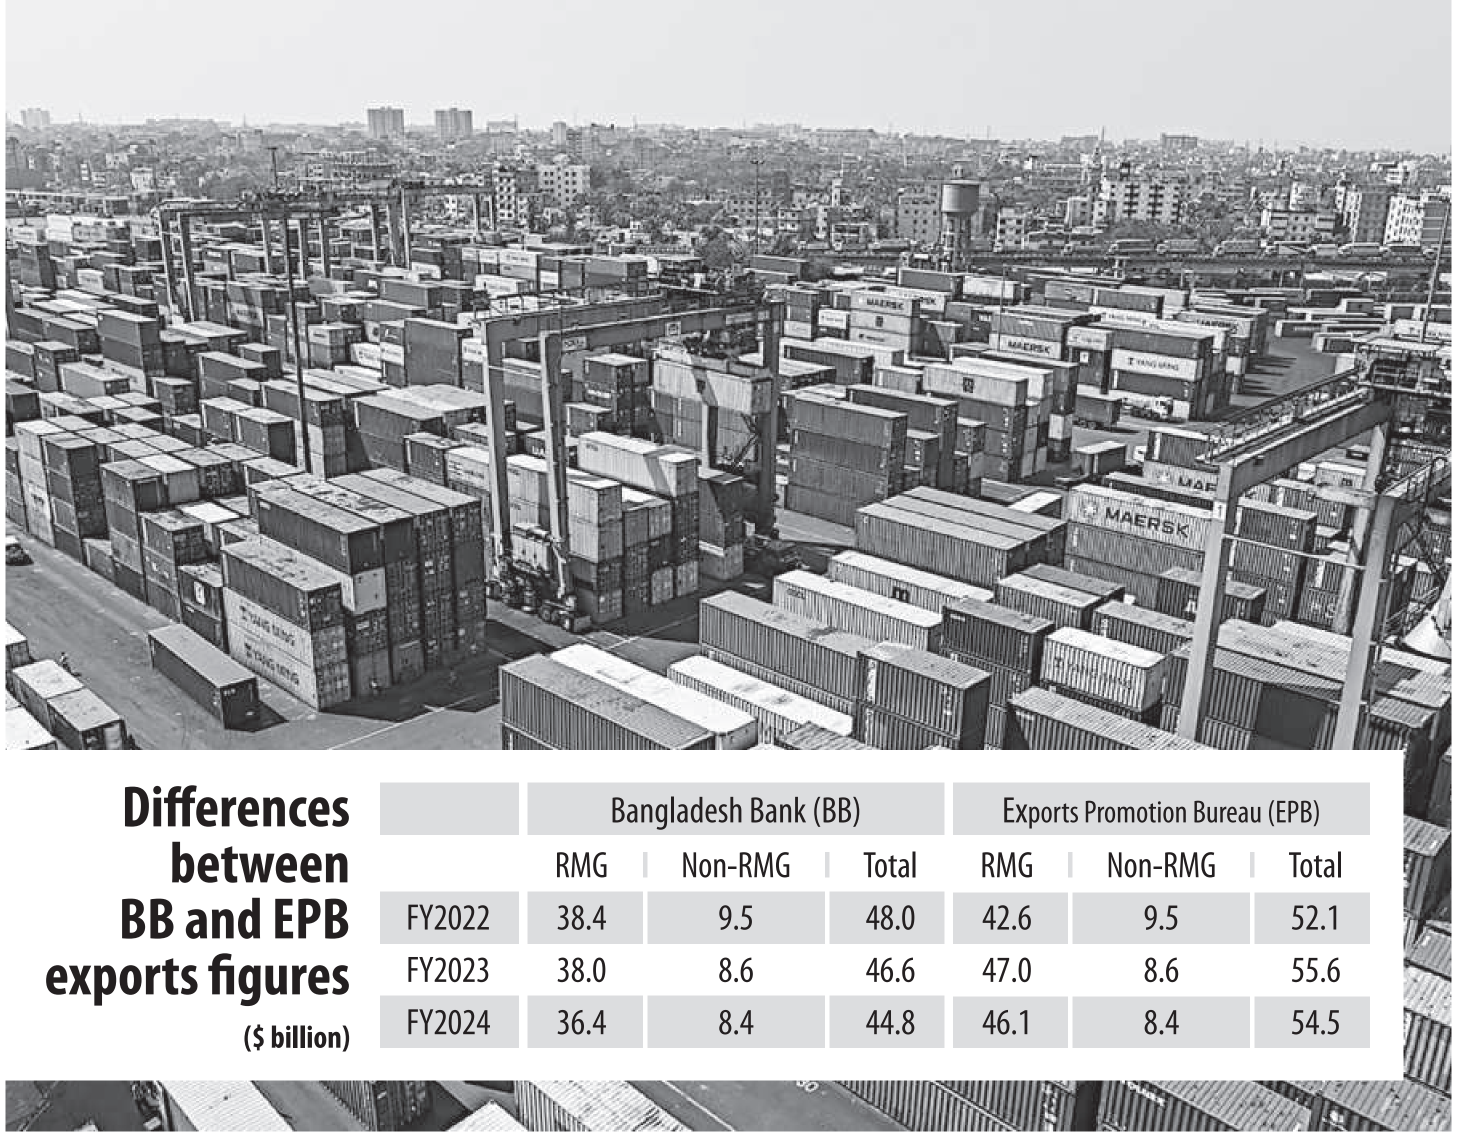
This nearly $11 billion discrepancy has raised considerable speculation about the true export performance and reliability of macroeconomic data in Bangladesh. It has also led to speculations about the implications of this adjustment for the macroeconomy.

The reliability of the export data, published by EPB, has been under scrutiny from BB for well over a year. Since FY2022, actual export earnings emerging from the banking sector data were significantly lower than the figures reported by the EPB based on the customs data of the National Board of Revenue (NBR). The initial reasoning was a combination of the gap between export shipment and actual earnings, and the suspicion that exporters were not sending back all earnings and were instead holding them outside Bangladesh (capital flight). Accordingly, in their published data, BB continued to use EPB figures for exports but adjusted the difference below the line in the financial account under the heading of negative trade credit.

The gap between EPB figures and earnings reported by commercial banks got cumulatively larger, which ballooned the negative entry of trade credit in the financial accounts.

Prodded by the IMF, the BB established an investigative team led by the bank staff, with participation by staff from NBR and the EPB. Detailed investigations showed that the NBR reported exports figures to EPB were overstated owing to several accounting errors all pertaining to RMG exports. These included: (i) serial duplication errors in customs data; (ii) miscalculation of value of fabrics; (iii) sample items classified as products with export value; (iv) sales by EPZ-based firms being counted twice; (v) failure to adjust the gap between initial LC value and actual export proceeds; and (vi) loses from stock-lot sales, discounts, and commission not being adjusted.

The inevitable conclusion is that export figures reported by EPB based on NBR customs data for RMG were much higher than actual RMG exports as reported in the export earnings figures emerging from the banking sector reports. The estimated gap for the FY2022-FY2024 is shown in Table 1. For FY2024, the full fiscal year estimates are based on July-May data. The revisions are still preliminary and a team comprising of EPB, NBR and BB staff has been constituted by the finance minister to undertake a detailed review of all export numbers. The findings are expected to be available in the next 3-4 months.



Differences between BB and EPB exports figures
($ billion)

	Bangladesh Bank (BB)			Exports Promotion Bureau (EPB)
	RMG	Non-RMG	Total	RMG	Non-RMG	Total
FY2022	38.4	9.5	48.0	42.6	9.5	52.1
FY2023	38.0	8.6	46.6	47.0	8.6	55.6
FY2024	36.4	8.4	44.8	46.1	8.4	54.5

What are the implications of this revision?

First, while the substantial downward revision in the export figures is disappointing, it paints a much more realistic picture about the challenging global environment for exports faced by Bangladesh. Exporters in general have been complaining about rising costs and falling demand for RMG. Moving forward, the recent correction of the exchange rate policy should help. Reduction of inflation would also be helpful. But a much more aggressive export diversification strategy is needed. The supportive policies include reform of trade policy to eliminate the anti-export bias, sharp improvements in trade logistics, attraction of FDI in export-oriented enterprises, and upgrading of labour skills through in-house and government-financed training programmes.

Second, the immediate effects of this adjustment for the macroeconomy are thankfully negligible. The effect on the balance of payments (BOP) is zero because the BB numbers are already built into the actual BOP numbers. In a way, the correction of the financial accounts provides some relief that the perceived huge negative outlook of trade creditors about Bangladesh reflected in the large negative trade credit balance is not true. It is also a relief that the perceived huge capital outflows from the export account is not based on facts. There may still be some element of that, but if so, it would likely be small. The correction of the overvaluation of exports could have implications for GDP estimates. But the government has clarified that the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS) uses actual export earnings data provided by BB for calculating GDP, which is then double-checked with production data.

Third, and most importantly, the revision serves as a wake-up call for the government to really upgrade its capacity to gather correct information and share it on a timely basis with the people at large. Credit goes to BB for having the courage to report the errors in the public domain. BB also has a strong team of economists and statisticians and therefore is able to provide good data on a timely basis on its website. But this is not true of many other government entities. For the immediate future, the EPB and the NBR must make all-out efforts to upgrade their data collection, investigation and analytical capabilities with some minimum staffing of professional economists and statisticians. The NBR collects a lot of data on revenues but has very little investigative or data analytical capabilities. As a result, it is impossible to determine the quality of the data.

At the national level, the primary data agency, BBS, has been slowly upgrading its capabilities but there is still a long way to go. Concerns about the reliability of national accounts and inflation figures have been raised by many researchers. Since the BBS provides public goods (knowledge and information), it should be an autonomous body funded by the government, but managed by professionals rather than civil servants.

> For the immediate future, the EPB and the NBR must make all-out efforts to upgrade their data collection, investigation and analytical capabilities with some minimum staffing of professional economists and statisticians. The NBR collects a lot of data on revenues but has very little investigative or data analytical capabilities.

Overall, a strengthening of BBS with professional staff and some minimum investment in upgrading data mobilisation and analytical capabilities of core government institutions dealing with the macroeconomy, and sharing them widely online will go a long way in calming the prevailing skepticism about the true state of the macroeconomy.

In the long drawn out days since the lines of communication were shattered, I have thought of what the long term impact will be of such a violent reaction to a justified demand.

Protests, deaths and a collective breakdown

Aliza Rahman
is a member of the editorial team at The Daily Star.

ALIZA RAHMAN

It is a special kind of horror to see the semi-abstract theories you studied for your semi-abstract major come to life, and begin to apply to events 20 minutes away from you. I came across the term necropolitics as a student in the last year of my bachelor's. A play on biopolitics, this specific rendition spoke to a new form of sovereignty, one where the state pushes to death certain lives deemed unworthy of keeping alive. It's the word that has been ringing in my mind since the start of the whole affair that cracked open the consciousness of the whole nation. It has been the only word that I can use to make sense of the violence that has ruptured across the lives of the young protesting for a fair chance at a decent future.

It is a fact well known that wordless horror brings with it a gnawing kind of pain that doesn't subside. But what of the pain that has a name but we are forbidden from saying it? What of the people who have questions, and even corresponding answers, but are not allowed to voice them? At the apex of the conflict, before the internet shutdown, things that must not be said were being stated on countless social media accounts. My Facebook app showing the same 20 posts that had loaded before the blackout all consisted of people fearlessly sharing information to assist the students, or revealing in fear and desperation the violence unleashed upon them.

In a near surreal turn of events, the BGB and were deployed along with the police to reign in a largely defenseless body of students demanding what is wholly allowed by our constitution. In the empty roads outside my house, bombs and guns were heard because of the fighting on the main road. For the past few days, a helicopter has been flying over our house and flocks of birds have intermittently flown off at the sudden sporadic loud sounds emanating from a place out of our view. The quiet and the unquiet moments have caused an equal amount of trepidation, all exacerbated by the sudden cutoff of information.

A dome has been placed upon us, and we have been feeling its presence since the day it descended. The atmosphere outside Bangladesh and the atmosphere inside it have been separated cleanly as if by surgical cut, severing us not just from the rest of the world, but even each other.

I try to imagine and then try to forget how frightened the kids must have been as they ran from the pellets fired from trained and armed personnel, how they rushed themselves and their friends to hospitals to tend to wounds they should have never gotten in the first place. All this systemic violence for a demand they had every right to make.

When the classes will begin, I will be forced to ensure normalcy, even when I know that of the over 100 students I am teaching, at least one may have lost a friend, or seen a kind of brutalisation that I personally can only justify if it were carried out in self-defence. We know from one of the most enduring images of the resurgent movement that not all the shootings were carried out for that reason.

In the days since the shutdown, I have felt the full slowness of each day. Throughout, it feels as if the time is not passing. Perhaps, however, it shouldn't pass, and the knot we feel in our chests should remain until a semblance of justice is achieved. Perhaps it is only right that I find myself sweating at the thought that a student may have died in the educational institution I have begun to teach in, because when I asked myself how to comfort the students, I came to the thought that perhaps comfort should be kept at bay for the time being. I have felt time and again since July 15 that we not only be allowed to keep grieving, but that we need to keep grieving. Perhaps the refusal to return to the previous state of normalcy will be the beginning of a quieter resistance, one tempered by the bone chilling fear of weapons on the land and sky far surpassing the collective will of people who want and believe in similar things, but still present even if in a dimmed capacity. Maybe we will find answers in the everyday acts of assistance toward a community that has been, and in many ways will continue to be segregated, not just by class, but by prejudice and unbacked assumptions.

> I try to imagine and then try to forget how frightened the kids must have been as they ran from the pellets fired from trained and armed personnel, how they rushed themselves and their friends to hospitals to tend to wounds they should have never gotten in the first place. All this systemic violence for a demand they had every right to make.

In the long drawn out days since the lines of communication were shattered, I have thought of what the long term impact will be of such a violent reaction to a justified demand, from a segment of the population who know their rights precisely because they are intelligent and educated. What will be the effect of this crackdown on civil society? Will we slowly fold in and become smaller to accommodate powers we feel we should never question? What will happen to the many qualified people unable to find suitable employment that allows them to assist their families? Where will their frustrations go if they feel that their demands will be shut down with violence over and over again? What will it say about us if we stay silent? For the time being, the least we can do is make sure we remember, both the demands made, and the lives lost, because there is no discussion, acquiescence or reform that will bring them back.

OTT platforms reel from daily losses

The uncertainty of the continuation of internet services meant heavy losses for these organisations each day, amounting to crores in certain cases.

SHARMIN JOYA

Over the Top (OTT) platforms are one of the major digital mediums of entertainment. The country has been suffering from a complete internet outage, resulting in huge financial losses for industry leaders.

The Daily Star caught up with the leaders of four major streaming platforms of the country.

Redoan Rony, Chief Executive Officer, Chorki, said, "We were at the promotional stage of our upcoming project from Ministry of Love, titled, 36-24-34. It was supposed to release on Thursday. If we calculate the financial loss, it will approximately be around Tk 5 to 7 crores, and it is not possible to recoup," shared Redoan Rony.

The uncertainty of the continuation of internet services meant heavy losses for these organisations each day. In this regard, Sakib R Khan, Country Head, Hoichoi Bangladesh, shared that within these few days, there had been no new subscriptions. "We are completely a subscription-based platform; thus, it is obvious that without this revenue, we are suffering profusely." Sakib shared that a Tk 15-20 lakh loss has been incurred. "We were also at the dubbing stage of our upcoming content Rongila Kitab featuring Pori Moni, and the dubbing was supposed to end on July 19. However, we couldn't complete it. This will affect the post-production and release date as well."

He also added that the pre-production of Ashfaque Nipun's Jimmi featuring Jaya Ahsan is complete, and they were ready to move to the shooting floor from August 10, however, the situation will also hamper the shooting.

Mushfiqur Rahman, Chief Content Officer, Bongo, stated that Bongo is only one of their multiple online platforms. "From Bongo alone, we are facing a loss of approximately Tk 10-15 lakh every day, if we add the other services, it will be around Tk 30 lakh," shared Mushfiqur. "During COVID lockdown, OTT platforms became popular and during that crisis, we received a lot of subscribers, but didn't have enough content -- but now, the scenario is completely different. This situation has made us realise that we are solely dependent on the internet, and now we are helpless."

Hoping for the quick recovery of the country's current situation, Head of Content, Binge, Umme Khairun Islam Swizee shared that during this time they have an opportunity cost of 10,000 subscribers. One of their projects, Vicky Zahed's Ekti Khola Janala, was supposed to release on July 18. "We have to re-promote this content, and fix another release date. It is obvious that in this critical situation, people will not remember this content." She also informed that the promotions for Maya directed by Raihan Rafi and another series by Anjan Dutta have been stopped.

Looking forward to peaceful times:

Fazlur Rahman Babu

Amid the ongoing nationwide curfew and suspension of internet services, people are left suffering with no means of entertainment. The Daily Star spoke with veteran actor Fazlur Rahman Babu to inquire about his concerns and activities during this crisis.

The artiste said, "I usually don't get to spend as much time at home. Although I have been spending this abundant time, it's making me feel anxious."

In hopes to see our collective better days, he said, "I am optimistic that good days are bound to return to all of us. I hope for better days to arrive peacefully."

However, he admitted, "I may be getting to spend time with my wife and our two children, yet we are constantly feeling apprehensive. During one recent instance, my blood pressure shot up."

"In terms of how I am currently occupying my free time– I've been reading a lot, both fiction and nonfiction, while also watching TV pretty often," he concluded.

Rahat Fateh Ali concert in Dhaka uncertain

Pakistani musician Rahat Fateh Ali Khan was scheduled to perform in Dhaka on July 20. However, due to the ongoing political unrest and nationwide curfew, the concert has been postponed to November.

Organised by Asiatic Limited and sponsored by Buy Here Now (BHN), the show was supposed to take place at the United Convention Centre.

Rahat Fateh Ali announced the concert on his official Facebook page on July 11. Priced at Tk 10,000 each, the tickets for the show were already sold out.

However, Hasib-Ul-Islam from Asiatic informed The Daily Star that the exact date for the concert would be announced as soon as the internet services are resumed in the country.

The organisers have also decided to offer a refund option for the sold tickets since the show has been postponed. The refund option would be available on their website following the announcement of the latest concert date.

'Kalki' sequel on the horizon

Nag Ashwin's directorial film Kalki 2898 AD, featuring Prabhas, Deepika Padukone, and Amitabh Bachchan, is reported to see sequels and spin-offs after setting record of Rs 1000 crore in global box office as the first Indian cinema of the year.

However, the release dates for the upcoming productions have not been confirmed yet.

Produced under the banner of Vyjayanthi Movies, the sci-fi film has marked earning of Rs 600 crore in Indian box office. It amassed Rs 95 crore on the opening day, of which Rs 64.5 crore was collected from the Telegu version of the film.

The film also stars Kamal Haasan and Disha Patani, among others.

Making history, Kalki 2898 AD became the first Indian film to have its first glimpse revealed at the prestigious San Diego Comic-Con.

INFLUENCERS LEFT without influence during internet outage

If your livelihood was based on the internet, specifically social media, what would you do if there was an outage that lasted almost a week? We caught up to some popular Bangladeshi influencers to see what they were up to during these unstable times.

RAKSHANDA RAHMAN MISHA

ILLUSTRATION: ANWAR SOHEL

RAKIN ABSAR

Before the complete shutdown took place, we had only one concern -- and that was the students' safety. We, the influencers community, tried our best to get the immediate help necessary for the students as much as we could.

Just hours before the shutdown, students had a hard time breathing due to exposure to tear shells and other harmful substances, many of the students were massively injured and they were asking for oxygen cylinders on social media. We were trying our best to arrange oxygen cylinders at that time when the situation escalated, and the internet was cut off abruptly. I really don't know what happened to those students, and whether they received the oxygen cylinders or not.

Apart from that, personally speaking, our business is also completely shut down due to the disruption of the internet.

My first priority after getting back the internet would be to look after the people who need my help. I would want to know about their whereabouts. I really hope they are fine.

KAARINA KAISER

When the internet went off, I was really confused as to what was happening around. Earlier, we were getting updates via internet, and then things escalated towards disaster. I started calling my friends to see if they were okay.

I feel like this is the longest internet blackout in our country. I thought it would come back the next day, but it is heading towards a week now. Since we don't use cable television in my house anymore, we were completely in the dark and reliant on phone calls.

The first thing that I would do when the internet comes would be to pay my condolences to the bereaved families that have lost their bright stars. I would also like to congratulate the students for their victorious move on getting the government to approve their rightful demands. This verdict shows that our country is progressing towards the right direction.

ANTIK MAHMUD

As I was living in Mirpur, I was really panicking at that time, as a lot of rumours were circulating on social media. As soon as the internet went off, I was completely at loss.

For content creators like us, when we are active on the internet, we get an email that we have received the monetisation money from YouTube advertisements. Now that the internet is off, we won't get that, and YouTube will not give us ad money since no one in the country is able to watch our content. Apart from that, we are also not earning any money from selling our merchandise in Rokomari, Daraz and Facebook.

After the internet comes back, I would immediately check on students who were injured during the protest.

DANA BHAI

I am a student of BRAC University and during the protest on Thursday (July 18), I witnessed numerous batchmates getting injured during the quota reform protest. I could not check up on them after the internet outage. We are so dependent on internet, that we couldn't transfer money or recharge our mobile phones.

As content creators, we are supposed to share content every week, and I used to upload my content through stories. Due to the outage, I feel entirely detached from the world, and completely helpless. After the internet comes back, my biggest priority would be to reach out to people involved with the movement and get update about the current scenario.

PARI RUKH AL MARTIN

From the start, I had been sharing emergency helplines and numbers to help the students who were injured during the protest. I was going insane seeing all the violent videos and then, the internet went off. I faced a massive reality check, where I realised I couldn't pay my bills and renew my prepaid gas system. As the curfew started, I couldn't go outside, or even order food from restaurants. I had to buy an electric stove to cook food for my family. I was also supposed to upload a video on Saturday for my client, which I couldn't.

The government could have declared the shutdown at least half an hour earlier, so that people could pay their necessary bills, so that they didn't have to face the challenges that they are facing right now.

PARIS lacking football stars

AFP, Paris

Kylian Mbappe wanted to take part in this year's Olympics in his home city, while there were hopes that Lionel Messi would feature for Argentina, but instead the men's football tournament at the Paris Games will be largely devoid of star attractions.

As captain of France and the most famous athlete in the country hosting this year's Games, Mbappe's presence in coach Thierry Henry's Olympic squad would have been an enormous boost for organisers as well as for the team's chances of winning gold.

But Mbappe, 25, had to accept that his new club Real Madrid would not allow him to participate immediately after he played in the French side that reached the semifinals of Euro 2024 in Germany.

That is the problem for the men's football competition, which begins on Wednesday and runs until August 9.

Clubs are not obliged to release players for a tournament held outside an official FIFA window for international football.

Messi, now 37 and part of the Argentina team that claimed Olympic gold in Beijing in 2008, ruled himself out of Javier Mascherano's squad for Paris shortly before the Copa America in the United States, which his country won.

"I spoke with Mascherano, and we immediately agreed on the situation," Messi told ESPN.

Henry, a French footballing great, also missed out on several other players he had hoped to call up.

"The last time I had so many rejections was when I was at high school," he joked when announcing a team in which the most recognisable names are Alexandre Lacazette, the Lyon striker, and new Bayern Munich signing Michael Olise.

The competition is restricted to players aged under 23, apart from a maximum of three overage players per squad.

As well as the superstar names, the tournament is also missing Brazil, who won gold in Rio de Janeiro in 2016 and retained the title in Tokyo three years ago.

They failed to qualify, but Argentina must fancy their chances of ensuring a sixth straight Latin American winner of the men's football gold medal.

In Julian Alvarez, the Manchester City striker who won the 2022 World Cup and the recent Copa America, they will have one of the highest-profile players.

Argentina are in Group B with Iraq, Ukraine and a Morocco side who have secured the services of Paris Saint-Germain right-back Achraf Hakimi.

Winners in 1992 and silver medallists in Tokyo, Spain are targeting gold after their triumph at Euro 2024.

Luis de la Fuente, coach of Spain's Euros-winning side, led the team to the final at the last Olympics. Santi Denia, his assistant three years ago, is in charge now.

Leading names from the European Championship such as Lamine Yamal are not involved, but another prodigious young Barcelona talent will feature, in 17-year-old centre-back Pau Cubarsi.

Cricketers return to training in Chattogram

SPORTS REPORTER

Cricketers in the Bangladesh Tigers programme returned to training on Tuesday for the first time since July 16, Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) cricket operations chairman Jalal Yunus informed the media yesterday.

"As the curfew was relaxed for four hours today [yesterday], we communicated with the Chattogram police and when they assured us that we can go to the ground under their protection, the players went to the ground for the practice session," Jalal told reporters on Tuesday.

Earlier, the cricketers had been held up in their team hotel amidst the ongoing unrest in the country. Quite a few national team stars which included the likes of skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto and veteran Mushfiqur Rahim, could not move to Chattogram due to disruptions in flight schedules.

"They will leave as soon as possible. There were disruptions in flight schedules and tickets. Since we didn't know at first how relaxed the curfew would be and since day by day the situation is improving, we are planning to send the rest of the national team players in one or two days," Jalal informed.

Practice matches on July 19 and 20 had been scrapped and the three-day practice match which was supposed to begin on Tuesday was postponed.

Jalal informed that they would like to continue with the scheduled practice match on July 29, depending on the situation, adding that 'eight to nine hours of curfew relaxation' would be required to hold the match.

Meanwhile, head coach Chandika Hathurusingha, along with the fielding coach and strength and conditioning coach are expected to arrive in the country in three to four days with Jalal informing that some of them are resolving visa issues while others have been able to manage air tickets.

Messi, Suarez out for MLS All-Star Game

AFP, Miami

Argentina star Lionel Messi and Inter Miami teammate Luis Suarez will miss Wednesday's Major League Soccer All-Star Game with injuries, the league and team announced Monday.

An updated MLS roster for the match-up against Mexico's Liga MX All-Stars at Columbus, Ohio, listed Messi and Uruguayan striker Suarez among those who would not play.

Inter Miami detailed the injuries, with Messi still sidelined after missing two MLS matches last week with a right ankle injury suffered in Argentina's Copa America final triumph over Colombia.

"Messi will miss the All-Star Game due to an ankle injury while Luis Suarez, who recently returned from international duty after over 40 days away from the club, will miss the All-Star Game due to knee discomfort," Inter Miami said.

It would have been the first MLS All-Star appearance for 37-year-old Messi, who joined Inter Miami last July.

Eight-time Ballon d'Or winner Messi, who helped spark Argentina to the 2022 World Cup title, led Miami to last year's inaugural Leagues Cup crown in a tournament of MLS and Mexican league squads.

But Miami said Messi's status and that of Suarez remain in doubt for Saturday's home match against Mexico's Puebla, Inter's first step in defending the Leagues Cup title.

The availability of Messi and Suarez will be determined by their "daily recovery process" according to the team statement.

'We can understand our current state' in Australia

Bangladesh's U-19 World Cup-winning skipper Akbar Ali is all set to lead Bangladesh Cricket Board's High Performance (HP) Unit in their upcoming assignment in Australia, where they will feature in a T20 tournament involving Pakistan Shaheens and Big Bash teams. The wicketkeeper-batter spoke to The Daily Star's Samsul Arefin Khan on Monday about his side's overall preparation for the series, his personal target, and more during the nationwide unrest. The excerpts of the interview are as follows:

The Daily Star (DS): How was the overall preparation for the Australia tour?

Akbar Ali (AA): For the last six days, we've been stuck at our team hotel [in Chattogram]. We came here to undergo extended preparation for the Australia tour, only to end up playing just two practice matches. We were to play two more matches, but it didn't happen due to the prevailing situation in the country, which isn't in our control.

DS: How excited are you about the series, where you will be leading in one format, in your maiden Australia tour?

AA: Obviously, there is huge excitement as we are going there to play for the first time. We will try to adjust with conditions within our two or three practice sessions there.

DS: How much the series mean for you and others who might represent the national team in future, given a Test series lined up in Australia in 2027?

AA: We don't usually get chance to play in Australia. If we can provide a notable performance in Australia, it will give us confidence that we can also do well there. With the presence of competitive teams in the tournament, we can also understand our current state.

DS: What could be the biggest challenge there?

AA: Actually, we will realize that after going there. But we have obtained some information about the conditions and wickets, which are expected to be fast and bouncy.

DS: Have you lot underwent any special batting practice to bat on such pacey wickets?

AA: Apart from the conventional training sessions, we tried to practice on wickets made of slabs; so hopefully, it will help. Also, we had some programmes which were designed for the Chattogram camp, but those were hampered due to the current situation. But we did that work specifically during our Rajshahi preparation phase, keeping the bounce and fast conditions in mind.

DS: You are still in HP after having led the U-19s winning campaign in 2020, while many of your teammates have gone on to make their marks with the senior side. Will this series open your pathway to the national team?

AA: I think the series is a great opportunity for me. Not only this series, wherever I play, I think the opportunity for the national team will come if I do well. I always try to perform, be it NCL, BCL or Premier League.

DS: You have gained good domestic experience, apart from playing in BPL. Do you think you lack T20-related preparations?

AA: I think I have been regular in all domestic tournaments, except BPL. As we have in store a domestic T20 tournament, featuring only local players, my focus will be on performing well over there.

DS: Do you have any personal target for the Australia trip?

AA: As a group, we will go there to become champions [in T20 tournament]. About personal target, I will say I want to contribute in some of our winning causes. It can be 20, 30 or 40 runs, whatever.

Asalanka named new Sri Lanka T20 captain

AFP, Colombo

Sri Lanka named Charith Asalanka their new T20 captain Tuesday ahead of a white ball series against visiting India.

The 27-year-old middle-order batter replaces Wanindu Hasaranga, who stepped down 11 days ago following Sri Lanka's early exit from the T20 World Cup in June.

The board did not say if it was making changes to the ODI squad, led by Kusal Mendis, while Dhananjaya de Silva remains Test captain.

The Indian team arrived on Monday ahead of the first of three T20 matches on Saturday at Pallekele in Kandy. The three-match ODI series will be played at the Premadasa Stadium in Colombo from August 2.

Sri Lanka T20 squad: Charith Asalanka (captain), Pathum Nissanka, Kusal Perera, Avishka Fernando, Kusal Mendis, Dinesh Chandimal, Kamindu Mendis, Dasun Shanaka, Wanindu Hasaranga, Dunith Wellalage, Maheesh Theekshana, Chamindu Wickramasinghe, Matheesha Pathirana, Nuwan Thushara, Dushmantha Chameera and Binura Fernando.

Murray set for emotional farewell

AFP, Paris

Just two weeks after Wimbledon, the stars of tennis switch from grass back to the clay of Roland Garros, home of the French Open, in pursuit of Olympic gold.

Former world number one and three-time Grand Slam title winner Andy Murray will call it quits in Paris after almost two decades on tour while Rafael Nadal, another two-time champion, looks to successfully exploit the surface which brought him 14 Grand Slam titles.

In a tennis dream team, Nadal will also partner Carlos Alcaraz in the doubles.

Now ranked at 121, and playing with a metal hip since 2019, time has caught up with the 37-year-old Murray who suffered ankle damage this year and underwent surgery to remove a cyst from his spine which ruled him out of singles at Wimbledon.

"I want to play forever, I love the sport and it's given me so much. It's taught me loads of lessons over the years I can use for the rest of my life. I don't want to stop so it is hard," admitted Murray.

Murray won gold at the 2012 Olympics on an emotional day at the All England Club where he defeated Roger Federer just weeks after he had lost the Wimbledon final to the Swiss on the same Centre Court.

Four years later, he defeated Juan Martin del Potro to become the first player, male or female, to win two Olympic singles golds.

Meanwhile, Nadal captured Olympic singles gold in 2008 at Beijing before adding the doubles title alongside Marc Lopez in Rio eight years later.

Now 38, Nadal has been plagued by injuries which have limited him to six tournaments this year and seen his ranking slip to 161.

At the weekend, he reached his first final since 2022 but his run at Bastad in Sweden saw him finish runner-up to Portuguese journeyman Nuno Borges.

"The level was so far from what it should be. Probably the energy too," admitted Nadal.

Nadal has collected 14 of his 22 majors at Roland Garros, losing just four times in 116 matches.

His 2024 campaign, however, ended in the first round at the hands of defending Olympic champion Alexander Zverev.

Nadal will also play Olympics doubles with French Open and Wimbledon champion Alcaraz who was only two when his compatriot won his first Roland Garros title in 2005.

Tigresses eye 'A' game against Malaysia

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh women's team will be looking to put forth their 'A' game when they take on Malaysia in their last Group B match of the ongoing Women's T20 Asia Cup 2024 at the Rangiri Dambulla International Stadium in Sri Lanka today.

The Tigresses have played two matches so far in the ongoing meet but their performances were not convincing in either games.

Against Sri Lanka in their tournament opener, Bangladesh could make only 111-8, which the hosts chased down with 17 balls to spare and seven wickets in hand.

The Tigresses then took on Thailand on Monday, where it took them 17.3 overs to chase down a target of mere 97 runs. Nonetheless, Bangladesh's semifinal hopes are still alive thanks to the win over the Thai side.

Bangladesh skipper Nigar Sultana Joty heaved a sigh of relief after the much-needed victory, which was also their first in this format this year, but admitted that they were still far from their best.

Bangladesh, who are currently sharing the second spot with Thailand in their group, should reach the last four if they beat Malaysia today.

Sri Lanka have all but confirmed their place in the semis from this group after winning their first two games and will face Thailand in the last Group B match at the same venue later in the day.

De Bruyne won't be leaving City: Guardiola

AFP, London

Pep Guardiola insists Kevin De Bruyne will not leave Manchester City this season after reports the Belgium star could move to Saudi Arabia.

De Bruyne has just one year left on his current City contract and the midfielder revealed recently he has spoken with his wife Michele about his future plans.

"For Michele an exotic adventure is OK," De Bruyne said in a hint that he could end his successful spell at Premier League champions City.

Saudi Pro League club Al-Ittihad were believed to be interested in De Bruyne.

But UK press reports on Tuesday said City manager Guardiola had rejected any thought of the 33-year-old being allowed to walk away this season.

Speaking ahead of Manchester City's friendly against Celtic in North Carolina, Guardiola told reporters "Kevin isn't leaving".

De Bruyne returned after missing the first half of last season due to injury and helped City make history with a fourth successive Premier League title.

He has been with City since joining from Wolfsburg in 2015, winning 15 major trophies including six Premier League titles and one Champions League crown.

While Guardiola is adamant his influential playmaker will stay at the Etihad Stadium this term, it remains to be seen if he can persuade the Belgian to remain in Manchester.

Guardiola claimed City would not make major changes to his squad before their Premier League season kicks off against Chelsea on August 18.

Broadband internet back in selected areas

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Broadband internet connections were restored in selected areas yesterday after five days of complete countrywide shutdown amid the violence over quota protest.

The area-based partial restoration of the broadband service will be on a trial basis, with priorities initially given to the banking, commercial, technology, exports, outsourcing service providers, and media outlets, Zunaid Ahmad Palak, state minister for Posts, Telecommunications and ICT told a briefing at the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission (BTRC) yesterday.

Internet connections will soon be restored in the remaining areas, he added.

Asked if users would be able to use social media, Palak said he could not clarify the level of access to social media apps that the government could allow at this time.

Asked about the restoration of mobile internet, he said he would address the matter today.

Earlier on Monday, International Internet Gateway (IIG) companies

Quader stays away from press for three days

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday held a meeting with the top leaders of the party's Dhaka city (north and south) units and associate bodies at the party headquarters on Bangabandhu Avenue.

Quader, however, did not brief the media about the outcome of the meeting.

The AL spokesperson, who usually briefs the media on a regular basis, visited the party president's Dhanmondi office last three days and held talks with the party leaders, but did not make any statement to the media, according to party sources.

If the party spokesperson did not appear before the media, the AL office would issue a press statement on his behalf. But no such statement was issued over the last three days on Quader's behalf.

The AL general secretary, also the road transport and bridges minister, last appeared before the media on Saturday and spoke about the justification for declaring curfew. He accused the BNP-Jamaat of resorting to violence.

In yesterday's meeting, Quader

QUOTA PROTESTS

Ctg student, 2 others die from wounds

STAR REPORT

Three more people, including a student of Chittagong University, who sustained injuries during clashes between law enforcers, Chhatra League, and agitators centring quota protest, died at hospitals yesterday.

Hridoy Chandra Tarua, a third-year student of history department, breathed his last at the Dhaka Medical College Hospital yesterday morning while an unknown youth, aged around 22, died at the National Institute of Neurosciences and Hospital, police said.

Another youth, Shuvo Shil, 24, died at a hospital in Savar.

With yesterday's deaths, at least 150 lives have been lost since last Tuesday, when six people were killed in clashes between agitators, law enforcers, and ruling party activists.

Thirty people died on Thursday, 66 on Friday, 25 on Saturday, 14 on Sunday, and six on Monday.

The overall death toll from the violence between agitators, law enforcers, Border Guard Bangladesh members and ruling party activists, may be more as The Daily Star could not reach many hospitals where dozens of critically injured patients were taken. Also, many families reportedly collected the bodies of their loved ones from the scene, and this newspaper could not contact those families.

Prices of some commodities drop as supplies resume

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The prices of some commodities dropped in Dhaka's kitchen markets yesterday after stock was replenished overnight.

During the visit to kitchen markets in Mirpur, Karwan Bazar, Mohammadpur, the prices of papaya, onion, garlic, potato, eggplant, cucumber, gourd and green chilli and many other vegetables were found to be lower than in the previous day.

The prices of fish such as rui, katla, pangasius, tilapia and shrimp, as well as broiler chicken and egg, dropped.

However, the prices of rice, soybean oil, palm oil and loose sugar remain elevated.

The price of pointed gourd dropped by a half overnight to Tk 40 a kg, while the price of eggplant declined by Tk 20 to Tk 120 a kg, said Mohammad Masum, a retailer at Karwan Bazar kitchen market. The green chilli price dropped to Tk 160 to Tk 200 a kg from Tk 300 on Monday.

The price has come down due to supplies coming in once again, he said.

The price of broiler chicken declined by Tk 10 overnight to Tk 190, while the price of egg came down by Tk 5 to Tk 10 to Tk 150-155 a dozen.

Retailers from outside Dhaka have not been supplying rice until yesterday, said Md Nazimuddin, a rice wholesale retailer at Mohammadpur Krishi Market.

"I talked to the deputy commissioner of Bogura and Naogaon so that the rice trader from these districts can supply rice properly," said Ahsanul Islam Titu, the state minister for commerce.

There is no crisis of products in the market, he said after visiting the Kawran Bazar and Mohammadpur kitchen markets.

During a visit to the Mohammadpur Krishi Market, Halima Begum, a housewife, said that she was already suffering due to the persistent high inflation.

"The high prices now are affecting us even more -- we hope the government will solve everything soon," she said.

DU pledges to protect students

Says univ to open soon

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

No student will be harassed in future for holding programmes to realise their logical demands, said the authority of Dhaka University yesterday.

Pledging security to students, it also said it is working relentlessly to open the university as soon as possible.

In a press release sent to newspapers, the DU administration said it is deeply saddened by the recent untoward incidents on the campus.

"We believe that no Dhaka University students were involved with any such incidents centring the protest to realise their just and logical demands," the notification said.

It pledged to take necessary actions as per the university rules in the quickest possible time after a proper investigation into the incidents.

The notification also said members of law enforcers will remain at DU entry points to ensure that outsiders cannot enter the campus to carry out subversive activities. However, they will remain deployed at important establishments.

Given that the law-and-order situation has been restored, the university will reopen as soon as dormitory rooms are repaired, according to the press release signed by Mahmud Alam, director of public relations office of DU.

"It will also be ensured that only regular students stay at university dormitories. Seats will be allocated based on merit as per university rules," said the press release.

WHO sounds alarm over disease outbreaks in Gaza

Says poliovirus detected in Gaza sewage; 84 more Palestinians killed in Israeli offensive

Ayadil Saparbekov, the World Health Organization's head of health emergencies in the occupied Palestinian territories, also said the number of people in the Gaza Strip now needing to be evacuated from the territory for medical care may have risen to 14,000.

Meanwhile, the health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said that an Israeli operation in the main southern city of Khan Yunis overnight killed 70 people and wounded more than 200, after Israel warned its forces would "forcefully operate" in the area.

Thousands of Palestinians fled southern areas of the territory following the Israeli army's temporary evacuation order for parts of Khan Yunis, including the Al-Mawasi humanitarian zone.

The latest incident comes days after the health ministry said 92 people were killed in a strike on Al-Mawasi, when Israel said it was targeting a Hamas commander.

Banks reopen today from 11am to 3pm

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Banks are set to re-open today from 11:00am to 3:00pm after four days of general holidays.

The central bank's decision to re-open banks came after the government relaxed the curfew today from 10:00am to 5:00pm. The reduced banking hours are for today and tomorrow.

Banks can open a limited number of branches from 11am to 3pm on Wednesday and Thursday, said Bangladesh Bank spokesman Md Mezbaul Haque.

Banks will decide how many branches and which branches will be kept open, he said.

BB and the head office of scheduled banks will remain open on Wednesday and Thursday.

The development will bring relief to the general public, who were most frozen out of banking and digital services amid the internet shutdown and nationwide curfew.

UN, US, UK slam violence in Bangladesh

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The UN, US, and UK have condemned the violence during last week's students' protests that left at least 150 people dead.

They also expressed worry over the impacts of the current situation on the economy and the people of Bangladesh.

"We condemn all recent acts of violence in Bangladesh and reiterate our unwavering support for peaceful assembly," US State Department Spokesperson Matthew Miller told a media briefing in Washington DC on Monday.

"In addition, we remain deeply concerned by the reports of ongoing telecommunications disruptions across the country, which limit the ability of people in Bangladesh, including American citizens, to access critical information," he said, calling on the government to restore internet service.

"The US also condemns the reported shoot-on-sight orders that have been given and called for those to be rescinded."

Economy with deep scars limps along

Businesses, factories reopen amid curfew break

AHSAN HABIB

Business and industrial activities resumed yesterday amid a semblance of normalcy after a spasm of violence, internet outage and a curfew that left deep wounds in almost all corners of the economy.

Violent clashes, stemming from the quota reform demonstrations, shuttered garment factories and shops and choked port activities when the country was grappling with the toughest economic challenges in decades: high inflation, falling exports and a persistent dollar crisis.

Economists predict that the impact of the widespread unrest and internet blackouts will be much greater than the fallout of the Covid-19 pandemic. By one estimate, the economy bled out about $1 billion a day for a stretch of five brutal days that saw deaths and destructions of a scale never before seen in independent Bangladesh.

Amid economic gloom, garment factories restarted production yesterday to meet the tight deadline for delivery. Shipments of export containers and delivery of imported items gained pace, and trucks began to roll as the broadband internet was restored.

However, factories faced a scarcity of raw materials due to supply chain disruptions, according to Mohammad Hatem, executive president of Bangladesh Knitwear Manufacturers and Exporters Association.

"Had the government given importance to resolving the quota issue through dialogues, the situation would not be so dire," he added.

NATIONWIDE CRACKDOWN

787 more arrested

STAR REPORT

At least 787 more people were arrested in the capital and other districts in the 36 hours to 6:00pm yesterday in cases filed over the recent violence across the country.

Of them, 413 were arrested in the capital and the remaining 355 were in eight districts and metropolitan cities, according to police and court sources.

The highest number of arrestees were from Narayanganj: 107. It was followed by Chattogram (103), Savar (50), Rajshahi (37), Tangail (25) and Natore (17). Eight people were arrested in Khulna and Manikganj each.

With the latest count, at least 3,425 people have been arrested in the country in the last five days.

Until yesterday, Dhaka Metropolitan Police arrested 1,380 people in 154 cases filed with different police stations in the city over the violence and sabotage in the capital over the last few days, said a top police official on the condition of anonymity.

At least 75 cases were filed in six districts in connection with the recent violence, according to police. Of them,

Lifting curfew depends on this Friday

Ministers say in high-profile meeting

PARTHA PRATIM BHATTACHARJEE

The government may decide to reopen the educational institutions and lift the curfew in most places after Friday as the last weekend saw large-scale violence over the quota-reform protest.

The government wants to see what happens on Friday and will deploy a large number of law enforcers in Dhaka that day. The authorities will then make a decision if no untoward incident happens that day, said sources present at a "high-profile" meeting at the home ministry yesterday.

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan, Law Minister Anisul Huq, Education Minister Mohibul Hassan Chowdhoury, Prime Minister's Private Industry and Investment Adviser Salman Fazlur Rahman, State Minister for Information and Broadcasting Mohammad Ali Arafat, Inspector General of Police Chowdhury Abdullah Al-Mamun, and police's Special Branch chief Monirul Islam were present at the meeting.

Fierce clashes turned Dhaka into a battlefield after Juma prayers last Friday, leaving, as per The Daily Star findings, 55 dead. Eleven others got killed in different districts.

Bus, train services may take days to normalise

TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

Even though the inter-district bus service resumed yesterday, it may take a few more days for passenger transport services to become completely normal in the capital and other parts of the country.

Metro rail will be suspended and Dhaka Elevated Expressway will remain closed for a few more days, officials said.

Bangladesh Railway last night changed its plan of resuming limited scale train services from today.

The BR from its control room sent messages to the officials concerned after 11:00pm that operations of all trains, including freight trains, will remain suspended, two BR officials confirmed The Daily Star.

The message did not give any reason for the move.

Earlier in the day, Railways Secretary told The Daily Star that they would operate two commuter trains on Dhaka-Narayanganj and Dhaka-Joydevpur routes from today when the curfew is in pause.

He said operations of freight trains resumed yesterday and trains carrying oil ran unhindered.

Launch services resumed partially yesterday with only three launches leaving the capital's Sadarghat Launch Terminal for Chandpur and Bhola.

Bus, launch, and train services were suspended on Thursday amid widespread violence at different parts of the country centring the quota reform demonstrations.

Criminals vandalised Mirpur-10 and Kazipara metro rail stations and set fire to two toll plazas of the Dhaka Elevated Expressway in Banani and Mohakhali on July 18 and 19.

Four more die from bullet wounds

6-yr-old shot while in her father's arms passes away

SHAHEEN MOLLAH

The entire neighbourhood of Nayamati in Narayanganj had been praying for the recovery of Riya Gope for the last five days.

The six-year-old sustained a bullet injury on Friday afternoon when she was playing on the roof of her family's four-storey building.

As clashes broke out outside, her father, Dipak Kumar Gope, a prominent businessman, rushed to the roof to get her inside.

Dipak took her in his arms and headed towards the stairs when a bullet hit Riya in the back of her head.

With blood gushing out of her head, Dipak took her to a local hospital. She was transferred to Dhaka Medical College Hospital the same day.

Despite the efforts of the doctors, who conducted surgery on her and the prayers of her neighbours, Riya passed away yesterday morning at DMCH.

'I apprehended such an attack'

Says PM at Editors' Guild event

UNB, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said she had an apprehension that the BNP-Jamaat nexus might unleash destruction across the country to cripple the economy and hold back the nation from marching towards prosperity.

"...they [BNP-Jamaat] tried to prevent us from holding the election [January 7], but we held it. Then they thought the election would not be acceptable to all, but we could make it acceptable. We formed the government. But I had an apprehension that a blow like this [recent violence] would come," she said.

Hasina was exchanging views with the editors and heads of news of different media outlets at a meeting, organised by Editors' Guild, at her office.

2 KNF members killed in Ruma

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Two members of Kuki-Chin National Front (KNF) were killed during a raid by a team of joint forces in the Saikatpara area of Bandarban's Ruma upazila yesterday, said a press release of the Inter-Services Public Relations Directorate.

According to the press release, the team has also recovered arms, ammunition, and other items.

The joint forces of army, BGB, Rab, police, and Ansar are conducting a drive in the area since the robberies of Sonali and Krishi banks in Ruma and Thanchi on April 2 and 3.

Earlier on July 13, five other members of the Bawm community were sent to jail yesterday on suspicion of being members of the KNF.

They were presented before a court on charges of bank robbery and arms theft that took place in Ruma.

25 killed in migrant wreck off Mauritania

At least 25 migrants have died and dozens are missing after their boat capsized off Mauritania, the country's news agency AMI said yesterday, in the latest in a string of migrant tragedies off the coast of West Africa.

Approximately 300 people were on the boat, said the International Organization for Migration (IOM).

after holding a hearing on the petition.

Speaking to The Daily Star, petitioners' lawyer Abdullah-Al-Mamun said his clients will move an appeal before the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court challenging the HC order.

He said the case was filed against his clients with an ulterior motive even though there was no allegation against them and they were not involved in any wrongdoing mentioned in the case.

The documents placed by the prosecution in the court did not have any prima facie evidence, he added.

ACC lawyer Khurshid Alam Khan told this correspondent that the HC summarily rejected the petition on the ground that the offences of misappropriation of funds and money laundering have been disclosed.

There is no legal bar to running the trial of the case against all the accused by the lower court concerned, he added.

During the hearing on the petition yesterday, counsel Abdullah-Al-Mamun told the HC that his clients did not commit any offence of money laundering or embezzlement or fraudulence in running Grameen Telecom, which was established as a non-profit and charitable organisation under section-28 of the Companies Act, 1994.

All the transactions of the organisation were done properly under the settlement agreement between the company and its workers, he argued.

Mamun said his clients have paid the money to their workers in accordance with law.

He said the case was filed against the petitioners, including Prof Yunus, in order to harass them and the allegations brought against them are completely fabricated and baseless.

The ACC officials submitted the charge sheet of the case without approval from the graft watchdog and therefore, the charge sheet and charge framing order against the petitioners are illegal. That is why the trial proceedings of the case can be scrapped, the lawyer argued.

ACC lawyer Khurshid, Attorney General AM Amin Uddin, Additional Attorney General Sk Md Morshed and Deputy Attorney General AKM Amin Uddin Manik opposed the petition, saying that there are specific allegations against the petitioners.

During the trial of the case, the lower court concerned will examine whether the allegations are true, they argued.

Prof Yunus and six others of Grameen Telecom on July 8 submitted the petition seeking an HC order to scrap the trial proceedings of the case.

On June 12, a Dhaka court framed charges against Yunus and 13 others in the case.

The 13 other accused are Grameen Telecom Managing Director Nazmul Islam, directors Ashraful Hassan, Naznin Sultana, Parvin Mahmud, M Shahjahan, Nurjahan Begum, and SM Huzzatul Islam Latifee, Grameen Telecom Sramik-Karmachari Union President Kamruzzaman, General Secretary Firoz Mahmud Hasan, and representative Mainul Islam, Jatiya Workers Federation Office Secretary Kamrul Hasan, and lawyers Zafrul Hasan Sharif and Yusuf Ali.

of inward remittances and payment of utility bills after a three-day general holiday announced in the wake of the unrest.

Despite the pressure, most banks were able to provide services by and large, said Selim RF Hussain, chairman of the Association of Bankers Bangladesh.

The moribund stock market nervously resumed trade at 11:00am yesterday, but the key index of Dhaka Stock Exchange sank 1.76 percent, the steepest decline in almost two years.

Retail shops in Dhaka, the main hub of trade, reopened but salespeople were disappointed by the thin presence of customers.

Alam Sheikh, a salesman at a clothing store at Nurjahan Supermarket, opposite to Dhaka College, was one of them.

"Customers seems to be afraid of the risk of violence," he said.

Between 10:30am and 1:30pm, Alam Sheikh's sales stood at Tk 3,000, a third of his sales revenue on a regular business day.

All these bleak data point to Bangladesh's plunge into an economic stasis, however short-lived. Save for agricultural activity, trade, manufacturing and all other economic activities were almost suspended for a week.

In the months to come, consumer prices may go further up. New investments will be on hold and jobs will evaporate. Bangladesh also runs the risk of losing export orders and many companies will struggle to pay their employees on time.

"This is a huge loss for Bangladesh when the country is already facing an economic crisis. The latest unrest has a significant impact on the economy," said Ahsan H Mansur, executive director of the Policy Research Institute, sharing his estimate that the country lost around $1 billion a day over the last few days.

"Supply chain disruptions will fuel inflation, which is already high," he said.

His grim prediction has a basis as annual inflation rose to 9.73 percent in fiscal 2023-24, the highest in 12 years, overshooting the government's target of containing it to 7.5 percent.

Ahsan Mansur, a former economist at the International Monetary Fund, warned that export orders might be diverted to other countries in the wake of the recent crisis in Bangladesh.

Zahid Hussain, another noted economist, described the crisis as the nation's double jeopardy: a real-life lockdown and a virtual lockdown.

"Its impact will be more severe than the Covid-19 pandemic, as people could run businesses at the time. During the pandemic, online payments were unhindered. But this week, everything was closed due to internet outage," he said.

The unrest killed at least 154 people, according to The Daily Star's count based solely on hospital sources, although it could be higher as this newspaper could not reach all the hospitals where many critically injured patients were taken for treatment. Also, many friends and families reportedly collected the bodies of their loved-ones from the scenes, and this newspaper could not contact them. Additionally, many hospitals did not even record the deaths, and asked the relatives to take them away.

All these will hit the confidence of foreign buyers and dent the image of the country which registered about 6 percent GDP growth over the last one and a half decades thanks to the political calm, Hussain said.

"The internet blackout was suicidal for the economy. How deep the injury is and how long it will stay remains to be seen," he said. "But we cannot count the loss of lives, which is countless."

Bus, train services may take days to normalise

Metro rail remained suspended and Dhaka Elevated Expressway remained closed since Thursday.

The elevated expressway will remain closed until the curfew is lifted fully, said Captain (retd) Hasib Hasan Khan, manager (operations and maintenance) of First Dhaka Elevated Expressway Company Ltd (FDEE), the operating company of the expressway.

"The expressway is operated by a consortium of foreign countries. So, the authority has decided to keep the expressway closed until the curfew is lifted fully," he told The Daily Star yesterday.

He said the two ramps of the expressway where the toll plazas were torched would be kept closed even after lifting of the curfew.

The company is considering opening the Banani ramp where tolls will be collected manually, Hasib said.

He said the company incurred a loss of around Tk 50 crore because of the torching of the two toll plazas.

The Airport-Farmgate section of the first elevated expressway was opened to traffic in September last year. Another ramp of the expressway at the FDC gate was opened early this year, bringing much relief to the commuters.

Over 50,000 vehicles used the expressway daily and the authority used to collect Tk 40 to 45 lakh in tolls daily, Hasib said.

DMTCL FORMS COMMITTEE

MAN Siddique, managing director of Dhaka Mass Transit Company Ltd, yesterday said they formed a committee to evaluate when the metro rail operation could be resumed. The committee is supposed to submit its report within 10 days.

"The committee started works today [Wednesday]. We will act on the basis of its report," he told The Daily Star.

Siddique had told this correspondent earlier that it would take at least one year to make the two metro stations operational.

BUS SERVICES

Bus services to and from Dhaka resumed yesterday morning with a low number of passengers.

Md Kawsar, a staffer of Dola Paribahan at Sayedabad Bus Terminal, said at least eight to nine buses had left the capital for Chattogram, Sylhet, Barishal, and Khulna till around 12:30pm.

Mosharref Hossain, general manager of Hanif Paribahan, said they resumed their services on all routes from 9:00am.

Khandaker Enayet Ullah, general secretary of Bangladesh Road Transport Owners Association, said buses will operate only when the curfew is in pause.

Railways Secretary Humayun Kabir told The Daily Star yesterday that the BR incurred a loss of around Tk 8 crore as criminals torched four carriages of a train and vandalised many coaches and other establishments of the railway.

The BR operates over 360 passenger trains daily.

Alamgir Kabir, joint director of Bangladesh Inland Water Transport Authority, said only three launches left Dhaka between 10:00am and 5:00pm yesterday.

No launch left Dhaka for Barishal and other popular destinations as vessels on those routes usually leave Dhaka at night, he said.

"But we did not allow any launches to depart Dhaka after 5:00pm as curfew came into force then," he said.

As the news spread, a pall of gloom descended on the entire neighbourhood. As this correspondent visited the house, he saw family members and neighbours gathering at the house to console the couple. But Riya's mother was inconsolable after losing her only child. She just kept on wailing.

Golam Rahman, who has been working as a security guard at the residence of Dipak for over eight years, said, "Riya was the centre of the couple's world. We were all so happy after she was born. I saw her grow before my eyes. I feel I lost a child..."

Riya was among four who sustained injuries in previous days' clashes and died yesterday.

The others are Sajidur Rahman Omar, 22, an IT technician in the capital's Demra; Shahjahan, a salesperson of Mohakhali, and Tuhin Ahmed, 26.

Sajidur and Shahjahan died at DMCH while Tuhin passed away at Savar's Enam Medical College Hospital.

Sajidur was shot during clashes in Konapara area of Demra on Sunday, while Shahjahan was injured on Friday during a clash at the Mohakhali level crossing, police and family members said.

Tuhin was shot during clashes between agitators and law enforcers in Savar on Sunday, reports our Savar correspondent.

Yousuf Ali, the hospital's duty manager, confirmed his death.

With yesterday's count, at least 154 were killed since last Tuesday, when six people were killed in clashes between agitators, law enforcers, and ruling party activists.

The overall death toll from the violence between agitators, law enforcers, Border Guard Bangladesh members and ruling party activists, may be higher as The Daily Star could not reach many hospitals, where dozens of critically injured patients were taken.

Also, many families reportedly collected the bodies of their loved ones from the scene, and this newspaper could not contact those families.

The Daily Star's count of the victims is based solely on hospital sources.

787 more arrested

27 cases were filed in Chattogram, 17 in Rajshahi, nine each in Narayanganj and Savar, eight in Natore and five in Tangail.

According to an analysis of 29 of the cases, 499 named and 74,055 unnamed people have been made accused in the cases lodged with 17 police stations on charges of attacking law enforcers and damaging and torching state properties.

The number of accused was not mentioned in 24 cases, which only stated "many unidentified accused".

Many of the arrestees were on remand and divulging important information about the financing behind the sabotage and those who gave the directives for the violence, said Biplob Kumar Sarker, joint commissioner (operations) of DMP, at a media briefing at the DMP headquarters yesterday.

The miscreants had attacked around 69 police establishments in Dhaka and set several traffic boxes on fire, he said.

DMP in a statement said they incurred a loss of Tk 61 crore due to the violence.

The main targets of this attack were the DMP and Bangladesh Police, according to Sarker.

"The violence and sabotage that took place in Dhaka over the last few days and the way the police and other government establishments were burnt cannot be a protest of the students in any way -- it is the BNP-Jamaat people who have done this and diverted the student protests to a different direction," Sarker said.

The sabotage was carried out by miscreants amid the quota reform movement, which turned into deadly clashes between the students and law enforcers. Ruling party activists allegedly joined in too.

At least 154 people were killed and several thousand were wounded, according to The Daily Star's count.

Meanwhile, BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday dismissed the government's allegations involving BNP with subversive activities as baseless.

The party was with the movement but it does not mean that they patronised sabotage.

"[The govt] incited the violence and invited the trouble," he said while speaking at a press conference at the BNP chairperson's Gulshan office.

At least 2,000 opposition leaders and activists were arrested across the country following the violent student movement, Fakhrul said, while demanding immediate release of their arrested leaders and activists.

Lifting curfew

Awami League leadership believes that there are risks of violence on Friday, and its activists will stay alert, said party insiders. The AL will hold a rally in front of its central office on Bangabandhu Avenue at 3:00pm that day.

At yesterday's meeting at the home ministry, reports made by deputy commissioners from across the country were discussed, said the sources.

The participants opined that the situation is satisfactory in all districts except Dhaka, Narayanganj, Gazipur, Narsingdi, and areas under the capital's two city corporations, Narayanganj City Corporation, and Gazipur City Corporation.

In other districts, primary schools may reopen in phases after the authorities evaluate Friday's situation, said the sources.

A minister present at the meeting said, "We want to bring primary school students back to the classrooms because the new activity-based curriculum requires their presence. We are considering opening schools everywhere except those in the four districts. We will decide about secondary schools afterwards."

Amid widespread violence, the government on July 16 announced closure of educational institutions. The education boards later postponed the Higher Secondary Certificate and equivalent examinations scheduled for July 18, 21, 23, and 25.

After the meeting yesterday, Education Minister Mohibul Hassan Chowdhoury told reporters that the situation was not conducive to reopening universities.

Completing the HSC and equivalent examinations is the priority, he said.

Participants at the meeting talked about the judicial commission formed to probe the killings on 16 July during the quota-reform protests. The government would wait for the commission, led by High Court Judge Khondker Diliruzzaman, to file a report, and then take action.

"The government will bring those responsible for the killings to book, no matter who they are," a minister told The Daily Star, requesting anonymity.

The participants agreed that curfew should be lifted in all places, except the aforesaid districts, unless there is an unless an untoward incident. Dusk-to-dawn curfew may remain in the four districts.

Even if daytime curfew is lifted, there will be strong surveillance on Dhaka's Shonir Akhra, Demra, Rayerbagh, Mohammadpur, Mirpur-10, Savar and Uttara because these places witnessed fierce clashes which resulted in high number of causalities.

capital yesterday. Neither of them mentioned who took them.

Rifat wrote on Facebook that he "narrowly escaped" from being a victim of "enforced disappearance".

He said he was picked up from Mahanagar residential area of Hatirjheel around 11:00pm on July 19. He was asked to announce a suspension of the protests. When he refused to comply, he was given an injection that made him lose consciousness.

Whenever he woke up over the last few days, he was given another injection, he wrote, adding that he was left blindfolded at the place from where he was taken.

He mentioned that his family admitted him to a hospital and he would talk to the coordinators after getting better.

Baker wrote on Facebook around 6:00pm yesterday that he was picked up from Dhanmondi in the evening on July 19. He was locked in a dark room and asked to announce that the movement should stop.

"I am safe with my family now. I will tell you everything in details after receiving first aid," he wrote.

At half past seven, Rifat wrote on Facebook, "I am alive, not dead."

As per the decision of other coordinators, he had spent days hiding in homes of different people, he said, adding that his phone had been tracked.

On Friday, another coordinator named Nahid Islam was picked up from Nandipara in the capital. He said he was left in Purbachal area after nearly 24 hours of physical and mental torture.

7-HR CURFEW BREAK

Gridlock returns to Dhaka streets

HELEMUL ALAM

Traffic congestions in different parts of Dhaka meant the capital returned to its usual self yesterday after almost a week of violence, along with curfew and a three-day general holiday.

City dwellers thronged banks, government and private offices to complete pending tasks during the seven-hour curfew break window.

However, they faced immense sufferings due to traffic jams at different points, as numerous vehicles hit the streets at once.

The suspension of metro rail and elevated expressway operations since Thursday, following large-scale damages during recent violence, added to the sufferings.

A shortage of public transport, particularly buses, forced commuters to wait for hours or walk miles to reach their destinations.

Long queues were observed at banks, while people rushed to government and other offices, which were open for four hours from 11:00am.

Major thoroughfares, including Kazi Nazrul Islam Avenue, Mirpur Road, Airport Road, and Begum Rokeya Sarani, as well as key intersections like Mohakhali, Banani, Shahbagh, Tejgaon, Gulshan, and Kalyanpur, were crammed with vehicles.

Polas Miah, a resident of Mirpur-12, who usually commutes to his office in Dilkusha via metro rail daily, said he spent more than three hours on the road by bus for what used to be a 30-minute journey on the metro rail.

"The metro rail made our lives very easy, but its suspension has put us in serious trouble again," he said.

Anwara Begum's ordeal was different. She not only waited on the road for hours but also had to walk miles due to severe traffic congestion.

"It took four and a half hours to reach the court area in Old Dhaka from Kalyanpur due to severe traffic congestion at different points," she said.

Anwara left her CNG-run three-wheeler at Shahbagh after being stuck for half an hour and then walked to Gulistan, from where she hired a rickshaw to reach her destination.

Jhilan, a driver of a CNG-run three-wheeler, earned Tk 1,000 by yesterday evening despite starting his day at 8:00am due to traffic congestion in Uttara and Gulistan.

"I left Uttara with passengers at 8:00am

All kinds of BRTA services, including the issuance of vehicle registrations and driving licences, are suspended across the country after the entire electricity system of BRTA headquarters was damaged during the recent unrest.

The headquarters of Bangladesh Road Transport Authority in the capital's Banani area, which housed the data server necessary to provide these services, was torched and vandalised by miscreants on July 18.

Scenes of despair at CMM court

Family members throng its premises to find their arrested loved ones

EMRUL HASAN BAPPI

Bristy Begum went to the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court in the old part of the city from Manik Nagar in Jatrabari to catch a glimpse of her husband Fazlur Rahman.

Fazlur, 40, who used to work as a manager at a courier service, was arrested by police early yesterday.

"Police arrested my husband from near our residence around 1:00am. I came to the court to see my husband. I am sitting here for over six hours, but could not find him," Bristy told The Daily Star yesterday afternoon.

When this correspondent met her, a seemingly distressed Bristy, 30, along with her child Fariha, 5, and two relatives, was waiting in front of the CMM court.

Failing to meet Fazlur, the only earning member of the four-member family, she returned home after 5:30pm.

"My husband is innocent. He did not engage in any violent activities, yet police arrested him," she said.

One of her relatives said, "Police checked Fazlur's cell phone and found a video clip of the clashes. This is why they arrested him."

Later in the day, Fazlur was sent to jail after police produced him before the court in a violence case filed with Jatrabari Police Station.

Fazlur was among the 413 arrestees produced

DNCC resumes household waste collection: mayor

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Dhaka North City Corporation has removed around 10,000 tonnes of garbage, generated during the recent violence on different city roads in DNCC areas.

An official of DNCC said they started clearing up the garbage, including bricks, felled trees, and grilles of medians on Monday night and completed it by Tuesday noon.

DNCC has collected garbage from different roads in the Pragati Sarani, Badda, Rampura, Mohakhali, Banani, Kazipara, Shewrapara, Mirpur, Uttara, and Mohammadpur areas.

A total of 67 DNCC vehicles have been damaged. Of these, 29 garbage-carrying vehicles were completely charred, alongside 21 jeeps used by officers.

He said they also resumed collecting regular household garbage.

Meanwhile, DNCC Mayor Md Atiqul Islam and LGRD Minister Md Tazul Islam yesterday visited the DNCC Zone-10 office at Mirpur-10 to witness the damaged vehicles.

Markets open, but mostly deserted

SUKANTA HALDER

Shopping malls and markets in the capital opened yesterday, after being closed for four consecutive days, but the presence of buyers was very low.

The shops and malls were open from 10:00am to 3:00pm, as there was a break in the curfew during those hours.

Businessmen said due to the unrest over the last week, panic still persists among the buyers. So, many customers chose not to visit the shops.

Very few customers, who were in urgent need of certain products, visited the stores. It will likely take a few more days for the situation to completely return to normal, they added.

At least 150 people died in clashes between agitators and law enforcers and ruling party activists till Wednesday during the quota reform protest.

Ashraf Ali, manager of a retail shop at Noorjahan Super Market of the capital's New Market, said, "There is still a kind of panic among the people. As a result, even after opening the outlet on Wednesday, four days later, the number of customers is very low."

"Usually, products worth around Tk 10,000 are sold between 10:00am and 1:00pm on a regular day. However, yesterday we sold only Tk 3,000 worth of products. Hopefully, when the situation returns to normal, buyers will also increase," he said.

Khalid Mahmood Khan, co-founder of Kay Kraft, said some of their outlets were opened, and some were not. Not all outlets that were opened had visitors, he added.

However, most outlets sold some products, albeit very little, he said, adding that at least customers knew

Publish actual number of casualties

Demands Garment Sramik Sanghati

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh Garment Sramik Sanghati and Mahila Parishad have expressed concern over the current situation in the country.

In a statement, Taslima Akhter, president of Garment Sramik Sanghati; and Anjan Das, vice-president, condemned the killings, violence, arrests, and harassment.

Referring to media reports, they said approximately 197 people have been shot dead, 2,657 arrested, and numerous cases filed. They also criticised the government for shutting down the internet, which has restricted the public's right to information.

They demanded immediate publication of the actual number of casualties.

In a separate statement, Mahila Parishad condemned the elimination of female quota.

Normalcy returning gradually

STAR REPORT

Normalcy started to return across the country as the ongoing curfew was relaxed for several hours yesterday.

In Chattogram, a good number of vehicles were seen plying the city roads while people thronged the kitchen markets to buy essentials.

"Unlike the past few days, most vegetable items were available in the market today [yesterday], but the prices are still high," said Abul Bashar, who came to Kazir Dewri Kitchen Market for grocery shopping.

In Narayanganj, garment factories reopened yesterday after four days of closure, with hundreds of workers joining their work.

However, it has not been possible to communicate with foreign buyers as the internet connectivity is not smooth, said Mohammad Hatem, executive president of Bangladesh Knitwear Manufacturers and Exporters Association.

"We were all stuck at home amid uncertainty. We are glad the factory reopened," said Farzana Begum, an RMG worker.

A man unloads vegetables from a truck amid the curfew break in Sylhet city yesterday.

Different banks in Pirojpur saw a lot of activity upon reopening.

"Our bank opened at 11:00am, but people started thronging our premises by 10:30am," said Mohammad Sanaullah, manager of Rupali Bank Ltd in Pirojpur's Bhandaria branch.

Golam Mawla Nokib, general secretary of Pirojpur District Businessmen Association, said, "Traders faced huge losses in last one week. We hope normalcy will return soon."

In Sylhet, thousands rushed to recharge their prepaid electricity and gas meters.

"We had a hard time in past few days. As the banks reopened, I rushed early to recharge prepaid electricity and gas meters," said Abu Ahmed Showkat, a resident of the Majortila area.

Although many shopping malls and other shops reopened, there were not many customers.

"Only around 15 customers came in the whole day," said Anwar Chowdhury, owner of a cloth store in Zindabazar area.

Long-haul bus services also resumed and many people, who were stuck due to curfew, finally were able to travel long distances.

In Rangpur, banks, public offices and court activities resumed, while law enforcers and armed forces continued patrolling the thoroughfares in the city. Vehicular movement was also seen significantly more compared to the past few days.

A similar scenario was observed in Khulna.

In Lalmonirhat, import-export activities at Burimari Land Port in Patgram upazila resumed yesterday.

"At least 55 trucks carrying imported goods from India and Bhutan arrived and 60 trucks carrying exported goods from Bangladesh left for India by 5:00pm," said Mehedi Hasan, assistant director of Bangladesh Land Port Authority at Burimari Land Port.

Movement won't end without political solution: Fakhrul

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday said the ongoing movement will not end unless there is a political solution to the persisting political crisis in the country.

Speaking at a press conference, he said the common people joined the student protests in an outburst of their pent-up anger.

He said the government could stop the protests temporarily by resorting to repression and using law enforcers and deploying the army. "But it'll never end if the problem is not resolved politically."

When asked what he meant by the political solution, Fakhrul said, "The political solution is that the government must resign and an impartial election has to be arranged under a neutral administration."

The BNP leader said the ordinary people and even teenagers took to the streets during the student protests as the government has failed to run the country, ensure job for people and control the growing hikes in essential commodities.

He said the government's statements involving BNP and other opposition parties with the violence are "baseless, misleading and politically motivated".

He claimed that at least 2,000 opposition leaders and activists were arrested across the country following the violence centring quota protests.

All BRTA services remain halted

Gautam Chandra Pal told The Daily Star yesterday.

He could not tell when the services can be resumed.

BRTA provides over 50 types of services, mostly online, from its 70 circle offices across the country, officials said.

Meanwhile, officials of BRTA, Bangladesh Bridge Authority (BBA) and Bridges Division yesterday carried out some activities at makeshift offices built under tents.

Miscreants torched and vandalised the Setu Bhaban, which housed the office of BBA and Bridges Division, beside the BRTA headquarters, on July 18.

Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader visited both offices yesterday and talked to the officials there.

The BRTA chairman said apart from the damages to vehicles and other things, miscreants have entirely damaged the electricity system of the building.

"So, we have built a makeshift office using two tents on the office premises to carry out some urgent works. The committee formed to assess the damages also carried out their works from there," he said.

A similar scenario was found on the Setu Bhaban premises. Officials were seen sitting under the tents, with two banners -- one in English and another in Bangla -- which read "Temporary office of Bridges Division and Bangladesh Bridge Authority."

According to the ministry officials, miscreants burnt down at least 55 vehicles on the premises of Setu Bhaban, of which 32 were SUVs, nine pickups, one coaster, seven microbuses, and five motorcycles. One ambulance was burnt down outside its premises.

Almost everything, including computers and many important documents, on the ground and the first floors of the building was burnt down, said an official. Meanwhile, 12 vehicles were burnt down at BRTA headquarters. Miscreants also set fire to one to fifth floors of the building, he said.

They have damaged the water supply line of the building and AC and generator in the control room, alongside computers and other equipment, the official added.

before the CMM court yesterday in cases filed centring the recent violence in the city.

Yesterday, the court premises were full of relatives of the arrestees.

One of them was 21-year-old Joly.

Carrying her son Osman, she came to the court from Kunipara to find her husband Tuhin around noon.

She said Tuhin drives an auto-rickshaw for a living.

"Police arrested him from our residence on Tuesday noon. He did not participate in any movement," Joly claimed.

"My 18-month-old son is ill. He is coughing now. Despite this, I rushed to the court to see my husband," she said.

Meanwhile, Joy, 23, was the only son of Jhorna Begum, 40. He was picked up by police from their Kunipara residence.

"Police barged in without knocking. Joy was taking a shower at the time. They didn't even give him enough time before taking him away," Jhorna claimed.

She said she waited for four hours in a police station to see if her son was there. From there, she came to the court after someone told him she might find Joy there.

Even after waiting for hours, she could not trace her son.

Also, rickshaw-puller Baset was arrested by Jatrabari police early yesterday when he was just returning to his residence after parking his three-wheeler at a garage.

His wife Aklima Begum said, "At 10:00am, I arrived at the court to find my husband. It's almost 5:00pm, I still could not find him. I spoke to a lawyer and he said my husband may be released before sunset as he was not arrested in any violence cases."

"With my husband's meagre income, we cannot even manage one square meal a day at times. And now we don't even have that," said the mother of three children.

facilities of DNCC aiming to make DNCC unable to provide services to the people of the city, he said.

"A total of 67 DNCC vehicles have been damaged. Of these, 29 garbage-carrying vehicles were completely charred, alongside 21 SUVs used by officers," he said.

As per the instruction of the prime minister they have increased working hours, and increased car trips to remove all the garbage, said Atiqul.

Meanwhile, Tazul said, "Already severe traffic jams have taken place today [yesterday] due to an arson attack on the metro rail. Those who carried out such sabotage will be brought to justice."

Govt playing double standard over quota issue: GM Quader

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Opposition leader and Jatiyo Party chairman GM Quader yesterday brought allegation of double standard against the government in realising the demands made by students seeking quota reformation.

"On one hand, the government is saying that all the logical demands of students have been accepted and the safety of students has been ensured. On the other, some students are still missing while many have been arrested in cases, which is nothing but the government's double standard," he said.

He demanded release of the arrested students, an end to harassment of general students, and immediate withdrawal of cases filed against them.

that the outlets were open.

Mohammad Habib Ullah, branch cashier of retail clothing outlet Gentle Park at Bashundhara City shopping mall, said after being closed for four days, they opened the shop yesterday morning.

"There were very few customers after opening. However, as the day progressed, the number of customers increased, he said, adding that from 11:00am to 1:30pm, 10 buyers visited their store.

"After opening the outlet, we only had two buyers till 2:00pm yesterday," said Jackson Dio, manager of Easy Fashion Limited of the same shopping mall.

Mohammad Nurul Islam, a retailer of children's clothes at Muktijoddha Super Market at Mirpur-1, said after opening the shop yesterday, only one customer visited the branch till 1:00pm.

Usually, products worth Tk 3,000 to Tk 4,000 are sold during this period, he said.

"Fear still persists among buyers about the situation created a few days ago. As a result, there are fewer buyers in the market," he added.

and reached Gulistan at 11:00am. I have to pay Tk 1,200 to the owner and need Tk 300 more for gas, but I could earn only Tk 1,000," he said.

Masudul Mazid, an official at a buying office in Baridhara, had to change two modes of transport to reach his destination.

"I walked from Dhanmondi to Farmgate as I couldn't find a three-wheeler in Dhanmondi. The situation at Farmgate was worse, and after waiting for an hour, I found a Cantonment-bound bus and hired a bike from there to reach my destination," he said.

J&K FIREFIGHTS

Indian soldier, suspected militant killed

AFP, Srinagar

Separate firefights in India's Jammu and Kashmir killed a soldier and a suspected militant near the disputed territory's militarised unofficial frontier with Pakistan, India's military said yesterday.

Kashmir has been divided between India and Pakistan since their independence from British rule in 1947, and each side claims it in full.

The soldier was the 10th killed in the area this month following several deadly militant attacks on a southern Hindu-dominated part of the otherwise Muslim-majority region.

He died after a clash with a group of militants attempting to cross over the Line of Control from the Pakistan side at Poonch early on Tuesday morning, the Indian military's White Knight Corps said in a post on social media platform X.

The army offered its "deepest condolences" to the slain soldier's family.

SOUTHERN PAKISTAN

Over 100,000 schools remain closed due to extreme heat

AFP, Karachi

School summer holidays will be extended by two weeks in southern Pakistan because of high temperatures, affecting more than 100,000 schools, an education official said Tuesday.

Pakistan is increasingly vulnerable to extreme weather conditions resulting from climate change, including heatwaves that are hotter and more frequent and monsoons that are heavier and longer.

"We decided to close schools for an additional 14 days for the children's well-being," Atif Vighio, a spokesperson at the education department in Sindh province, told AFP.

Planned power cuts, also known as load-shedding, happen frequently in Pakistan due to an ongoing power supply crisis.

The load-shedding varies from city to city, but in rural areas of Sindh they can last for more than 12 hours a day, leaving schools without fans.

Israel carries out new raids in Gaza

55 more Palestinians killed; thousands forced to head west of Khan Younis to seek shelter

REUTERS, Gaza

Israeli forces carried out new raids in the Gaza Strip yesterday, hours before Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu was due to address the US Congress.

The latest Israeli attacks destroyed homes in towns east of Khan Younis in southern Gaza and thousands of people were forced to head west to seek shelter, residents said.

The Palestinian Civil Emergency Service said it had received distress calls from residents trapped in their homes in Bani Suhaila, east of Khan Younis, but were unable to reach the town.

Israel's military, which is trying to eradicate the Hamas, said it had been operating in areas from which fighters had been able to fire rockets into Israel and attack Israeli troops.

Gaza health officials said Israeli military strikes in the past 24 hours had killed at least 55 people, the latest casualties in an offensive that health authorities in the enclave say has killed at least 39,145 Palestinians.

"Where should we go? Shall we cross into the sea?" said Ghada, who has been displaced with her family six times during the offensive, said from Hamas City in northwestern Khan Younis.

"We are exhausted, starved, and want the offensive to end now, now not an hour later. Every day means more families are wiped off the registration book," she told Reuters via a chat app.

Local residents said they had been ordered to head west towards a designated humanitarian area, but that the area was now unsafe.

Israeli forces also carried out airstrikes on several areas of central and northern Gaza Strip, killing and wounding several Palestinians, health officials said.

Residents of Rafah, near the border with Egypt, said Israeli forces had blown up several houses in the west of the city.

Some Palestinians who gathered at a hospital in Khan Younis before funerals criticised the US for welcoming Netanyahu.

The Israel leader was due to address Congress later yesterday and to meet President Joe Biden at White House today. Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump said he would meet Netanyahu in Florida tomorrow.

Asean seeks to tackle Myanmar crisis

REUTERS

The Southeast Asian bloc Asean met in Laos yesterday as it seeks to advance a stalled bid to resolve a crisis in Myanmar and cool tensions in the South China Sea, days ahead of a gathering of top diplomats from the world's biggest powers.

The meeting of the foreign ministers from the Association of Southeast Asian Nations will be followed by two summits in Laos on Saturday set to address key global issues that will be attended by officials from the US, EU, Japan, China, Russia and more.

Asean's foreign ministers will discuss so far fruitless efforts to end a conflict that has morphed into a civil war in Myanmar.

including a metro rail station in Mirpur, Setu Bhaban, Sarak Bhaban, health directorate building, and BTV Bhaban, that were vandalised or torched during the last week's violence centring the quota reform protests.

Representatives from the 49 foreign missions in Dhaka, including 23 ambassadors, visited the sites. The foreign minister led them.

Hasan said arrests were also made in some Middle Eastern countries, including in Saudi Arabia, over demonstrations.

Asked if Bangladesh would raise the issue before the UAE or Saudi Arabia, the minister said the expatriates were punished under their domestic law.

He said some Bangladeshis held protest rallies in front of Bangladeshi missions abroad and Pakistani citizens were also involved in those programmes.

"We have specific information on this."

About the diplomats' visit to the affected sites, the foreign minister said the envoys were shocked at the level of destruction. "They said they are with us."

"We had a plan to take them to some other places like the Data Centre. But due to traffic congestion and rain, we could not go there."

He said that many who were involved in arson attacks in 2014-15 were punished, but some others came out of jail due to legal loopholes.

"This time we are very tough. The prime minister said it. There are video clips of all those who attacked the BTV Bhaban. We are committed to take action against each of them."

Asked if there was any failure on the part of the law enforcers and intelligence agencies and if the government would probe the failure, Hasan said the army and law enforcement agencies are working and peace is being established now.

"When I went to the BTV, I asked them how it happened. They said police had no permission to open fire that day...."

"If the police had the permission to shoot, the BTV Bhaban would not have been damaged. There are a few other factors."

On the UN's concerns of using UN-marked vehicles by the law enforcers during the violence last week, the minister said those vehicles belonged to Bangladesh and were rented out to the UN missions.

"However, the UN logos were not erased mistakenly. Those have been erased now," he said.

unidentified person of torching two BRTC buses on Saturday night.

After scrutinising the CCTV footage of the area, police first held Sohel Rana on Monday. After his confessionduring primary interrogation, police arrested Didar the same day. The duo was presented before the court on Tuesday evening.

Speaking to The Daily Star on Tuesday, Anwar Hossain, officer-in-charge of Hathazari Model Police Station, said, "Didar, the Sramik League president in Baizid Bostami thana, took the opportunity during the countrywide unrest triggered by the quota reform movement, and ordered his aide Sohel to torch the buses inside the depot."

In his confessional statement, Sohel said Didar offered to pay him Tk 4 lakh if he torched five buses and had given him an advance payment of Tk 500.

Sohel added that he was able to set two buses on fire as the security guards sensed his presence before he could torch the rest.

Hathazari police Sub-Inspector Rahmat Ullah, also the investigating officer of the case, told The Daily Star, "Sohel admitted to his crime before the magistrate saying Didar paid him Tk 500 advance money to torch the vehicles ... We will place a remand prayer before the court for Didar in this regard today."

Police and BRTC sources said Didar used to rent BRTC buses on contract from the depot. However, due to some incidents of irregularities, BRTC cancelled his contract and stopped supplying the vehicles to him, which infuriated him.

According to OC Anwar, Didar was accused in a murder case in 2022.

Court sources said the case is now under trial and according to the charge sheet, the victim Abdul Halim Rubel was stabbed to death by Didar and others over a feud over the appointment of BRTC bus officials.

"Social media platforms, especially Facebook and YouTube, haven't been complying with Bangladesh's laws. They're also not taking into account the situation on the ground, violating their policy guidelines... Amid this, who will take the risk [of opening the social media platforms]?"

He said the government will send letters to the platforms seeking explanations as to why they are not complying with orders. These platforms' reopening will be considered once they promise to comply, he added.

While the government and the BTRC claimed that the internet shutdown occurred due to an attack on the data centres in the capital's Mohakhali, the sources said the outage was ordered by the government.

The Daily Star has visited the data centres in question and found no sign of damage to the building that housed them. Officials of these data centres also confirmed that the fire did not reach their offices.

However, they said the fire that partially burnt the adjacent building of the Department of Disaster Management (DDM) damaged several overhead cables connected to the centres.

On July 17, after the government ordered the shutdown of mobile internet, Palak had said the decision was made in light of the current unrest in the country and to stop the spread of fake news on social media.

On July 18, Grameenphone said the government had temporarily stopped the mobile internet services in the country due to the unrest.

"We're dependent on the authorities to restart the mobile internet services. We're in constant communication with the authorities in this regard," said a statement.

The same day, the fire at the Mohakhali's Department of Disaster Management occurred.

Around 8:00pm, officials of the Internet Service Providers Association of Bangladesh, said the fire may cut 30-40 percent of bandwidth supply, leaving some users disconnected and many with slow internet.

But around 9:00pm on July 18, entire Bangladesh was without internet.

How it all unfolded

Outside, around 15 motorcycles and private vehicles were set on fire.

Nazimur Rahman, the guard of the jail building's main gate, said, "When the main gate was being broken down with hammers, we tried to block it with sacks and tables but we failed. No one was helping us. We couldn't prepare the weapons we had to use in time and each of their lockers were locked. The miscreants looted them after breaking in."

Md Abul Kalam Azad, a jail superintendent who was suspended after the incident, said, "There are only 104 personnel working in three shifts. We repeatedly sought the police's help but they arrived at the scene around 10:00pm. If they had assisted us in time, this situation might not have been created."

Narsingdi District Commissioner Dr Badiul Alam told The Daily Star, "Jail super Abul Kamal Azad and Jailer Kamrul Islam have been temporarily suspended for negligence. Such a heinous incident has never occurred in the subcontinent before. Those responsible will be brought to book."

Meanwhile, 348 inmates, who had escaped or were forced to, surrendered to a court and police since the incident. Of them 155 surrendered yesterday.

"The escapee inmates who surrendered are being housed in various district jails. We are trying to repair the damages in the district jail to rehabilitate them."

Narsingdi Superintendent of Police Mohammad Mostafizur Rahman said, "102 people [suspected to be linked to the incident] have been arrested, while 39 out of 85 weapons, and 1,085 rounds of ammunition have been recovered. Efforts are on to arrest the rest.

"Four separate cases have been filed for obstructing government work, attempting to kill police officers, attacking the jail to free inmates, and looting weapons."

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan Kamal, Army Chief Waker-Uz-Zaman, and Inspector General of Police Chowdhury Abdullah Al-Mamun, along with other senior officials, have already visited the district jail.

and killings before and after the 2014 general election. Hundreds of people were killed and thousands injured at that time.

"I did not want to see any incident that might lead to an unwanted situation in the country. Their target was to destroy the country's economy."

She questioned the understanding of those people who supported the recent mayhem.

Hasina, also the Awami League president, said that the only aim of the vested quarter is to harm the country's independence and halt the continuation of democracy.

She said that she never wanted to deploy army personnel. "We called in the army after they [students] declared that they were not involved in subversive activities."

The PM also said she did not want to impose curfew as the country has been seeing a democratic environment for 15 years.

She requested the people to resist those who have caused harm to the country.

"They have destroyed all the structures built to ensure the welfare of the people .... Who will be the worst sufferer? Of course the mass people. Now it is the responsibility of the mass people to resist terrorism and militancy."

Hasina said that the targets of the recent violence were the AL, freedom fighters, and pro-liberation forces.

She questioned why the students gave the scope to the militants for carrying out heinous activities even though all their demands were met.

Speaking at the meeting, editors and senior journalists demanded the perpetrators of the recent violence be punished.

They wondered whether there was any failure in executing the intelligence report to thwart the mayhem unleashed by the BNP-Jamaat in the name of the quota-reform movement by students.

They stressed the need for strengthening the AL, evaluating the activities of the public representatives alongside and taking effective measures to attract more meritorious students to Chhatra League.

PM's Press Secretary M Nayeemul Islam Khan moderated the programme.

Editors' Guild President Mozammel Babu, senior journalist Abed Khan, Bangladesh Pratidin Editor Nayeem Nizam, DBC TV CEO Monzurul Islam, Bhorer Kagoj Editor Shymol Dutta, Jugantor Editor Saiful Alam, Jatiya Press Club President Farida Yasmin, Dhaka Journal Chief Editor Syed Istiaque Reza, Head of News of Nagorik TV Dip Azad, Amader Somoy Editor Mainul Alam, Bangladesh Journal Editor Shajahan Sarder, DBC News Editor Zayedul Ahsan Pintu, Ashish Saikat of Independent TV, Bangla Tribune Editor Zulfiquer Russell, Ekattor TV Head of News Shakil Ahmed, Editor of Energy and Power Mollah Amzad, Head of News of Kings News Nazmul Huq Saikat and Mamunur Rahman Khan of RTV were present.

'Mockery of justice'

the fairness of the judicial proceedings and amounts to an unfair trial, said the New York-based global rights watchdog.

"There is no way defendants can receive a fair trial when the investigation was launched and completed, trial commenced, and verdict rendered in less than 48 hours. These sentences make a mockery of justice and Emirati authorities should immediately release all those sentenced for peacefully protesting in solidarity," said Joey Shea, UAE researcher at the HRW.

Human Rights Watch verified six videos of the protests posted to TikTok and X (formerly known as Twitter) on July 19 or the days following. The videos, filmed in the evening, show peaceful protesters chanting and marching down streets across the UAE, including Abu Dhabi, Ajman and in two areas in Dubai: Al Satwa and Downtown Dubai.

From these videos and the others analysed by HRW, none of the protesters were engaging in violent acts or using language to incite violence in their chants.

The Bangladeshi authorities, especially the mission in the UAE, should call on the Emirati authorities to release the 57 detained, HRW said.

The UAE-based migrant workers from climate-vulnerable countries like Bangladesh are exposed to escalating climate risks, especially when working in the UAE's extreme heat without adequate protection.

Workers -- who are unable to protest these horrific labour conditions due to the abusive kafala system, the ban on trade unions and restricted freedom of speech and assembly -- are being convicted unfairly for peacefully protesting for a cause unrelated to the UAE, HRW added.

Protests and demonstrations are fully prohibited in the UAE.

commission] was issued. Till now, the issues of the six people have been stated [in the terms of reference]," he said.

Responding to a query about the inquiry into other deaths, Justice Diliruzzaman said legal steps will certainly be taken in this regard.

According to The Daily Star reports, at least 154 people have died across the country in violence since July 16.

Justice Diliruzzaman said the commission's first meeting was held yesterday and hoped that it could complete the probe within the stipulated time (30 working days).

How celebrities spent their time amid internet shutdown

With social media activity at a standstill and the curfew ongoing, many are left wondering how celebrities are coping without the internet. Although broadband internet resumed on Tuesday night in a few regions, Facebook remains inaccessible, leaving many feeling disconnected.

We reached out to some of our favourite celebrities to see how they are handling this digital hiatus.

Dhallywood's glamorous actress Puja Chery feels completely lost without the internet. She shared, "Did anyone imagine that we, in 2024, would be left without internet? All our communication is now internet-based, and now we have to live without it. On top of that, there's a curfew, so we can't go out anywhere. What else can I do? I'm spending time watching TV, trying to understand the country's situation by watching the news. I'm also reading books. But still, it feels like something is missing."

The stunning diva Eamin Haque Bobby is feeling restless staying at home, yearning to spend her time shooting on set. "Everything feels so unfamiliar. It all seems so empty. All kinds of shooting are halted, and I'm spending my days sitting at home. What else can I do but watch TV to learn about the current situation? There's nothing else to do but wait for everything to get back to normal."

Musfiq R Farhan, one of the most popular faces on television, is struggling with the lack of connection. "It's a strange time without the internet and social media. During the pandemic, at least we could communicate with everyone. But now, everything feels so unfamiliar. We have to rely on television to grasp the ongoing condition of the country. All kinds of shooting are halted. I hope everything gets back to normal soon. Most young people now depend on the internet, so it's important to ensure its quick restoration."

Melodious singer Konal is trying to find comfort in books. "I never imagined we would find ourselves in such a situation. Everything feels so different and strange, with an eerie feeling of not knowing what might happen. I am keeping my eyes glued to the television to see whether the country's situation changes. There's nothing else we can do right now. I've tried reading several books. Other than that, there's nothing much we can do."

As the uncertainty about the curfew's end continues, celebrities, including singers, actors, and directors, are eagerly awaiting the chance to resume their work and bring joy to audiences once the country recovers from this massive challenge.

Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie to reunite at Venice Film Festival

Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie are set to make a grand return to the Venice International Film Festival, showcasing their latest films at the 81st edition of the prestigious event. The festival, which will run from August 28 to September 7 in Italy, revealed its star-studded lineup on Tuesday, including Pitt's Wolfs and Jolie's Maria.

Pitt reunites with George Clooney in Jon Watts's directoial Wolfs, marking their first on-screen collaboration since 2008's Burn After Reading. The film also stars Amy Ryan, Austin Abrams, and Richard Kind.

Jolie stars as the legendary opera singer Maria Callas in Maria, directed by Pablo Larraín. The drama also features Kodi Smit-McPhee, Pierfrancesco Favino, Alba Rohrwacher, and Haluk Bilginer.

Other highly anticipated premieres at the festival include Joker: Folie à Deux with Joaquin Phoenix and Lady Gaga, Beetlejuice Beetlejuice, starring Michael Keaton and Jenna Ortega, and Nicole Kidman's Babygirl.

Tanjin Tisha mourns assistant's death

Actress Tanjin Tisha's assistant, Alamin, reportedly died due to gunshot wounds, inflicted during violent clashes following the quota reform protest last week. Tisha confirmed the heartbreaking news on her social media, stating, "I don't know how to begin writing. You might all know him as my assistant. But he wasn't just my assistant; he was like my little brother. For the past four years, he lived with me and my family."

The actress further added that she had great plans for his future.

Notably, Tisha has not provided specific details about how, where, or when Alamin was shot. Additionally, despite the nationwide internet outage, it's unclear how she got internet access to post this update on July 23.

ROHIT SHETTY promises to make all-women cop universe

After the success of Singham, its director Rohit Shetty is set to return with Singham Again, which will be released on November 1. The film features major stars like Ajay Devgn, Ranveer Singh, and Akshay Kumar and introduces Tiger Shroff and Arjun Kapoor into the universe.

This time, Deepika Padukone enters into the cop universe, which already created stir among the audience after the film's first look was revealed. The director has announced that he is developing an all-women cop universe.

In addition to its male characters, the Rohit Shetty Cop Universe is committed to enhancing female representation. Deepika will appear as Lady Singham in the upcoming film, and Kareena Kapoor Khan is set to play a significant role as well.

Singham Again is the third instalment in the Ajay Devgn-led Singham franchise and the fifth film in Rohit Shetty's Cop Universe. The original Singham, released in 2011, became one of Bollywood's most beloved films of the past decade. In 2014, a sequel, titled Singham Returns, was released, featuring Ajay Devgn, alongside Kareena Kapoor Khan.

CELINE DION set for comeback performance at Paris Olympics

Celine Dion is poised for a comeback at the Olympic Games, with speculation suggesting she will perform during the opening ceremony this Friday. This will be the pop icon's first appearance since she paused her touring and withdrew from the public eye following her Stiff Person Syndrome diagnosis in December 2022.

Dion arrived in Paris on Monday and checked into the Royal Monceau hotel, where Lady Gaga, another rumoured opening ceremony headliner, is also staying.

The opening ceremony, held outdoors for the first time, will feature a nautical parade along the Seine, ending near the Trocadero with views of the Eiffel Tower, and includes 3,500 performers.

Banks face cash withdrawal pressure

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

As banks reopened after three days of general holidays, most lenders had to contend with cash withdrawal pressure while some faced disruptions in conducting foreign transactions.

All over Dhaka, people were seen queuing in front of branches and automated teller machine (ATM) booths to withdraw cash.

Branches in Motijheel were crowded since the beginning of the day.

Even around 12:00pm, a large queue could be seen at the local office of Islami Bank Bangladesh in Motijheel. The number of customers only began to decrease in the afternoon.

Bank officials said withdrawals outpaced deposits the day after reopening following the general holidays amidst a nationwide curfew and internet blackout.

ATM Shahidul Haque, executive vice-president and head of Islami Bank's Motijheel office, said their banking activities were being conducted on a limited scale and would gradually be expanded.

Mainly, the bank was providing withdrawal and deposit services yesterday, he said, adding that foreign transactions for export and import activities also started on a limited scale.

Md Shafiqul Islam, general manager of Sonali Bank's Motijheel office, told The Daily Star they faced little pressure of customers.

Islam said foreign transactions for export-import activities and other foreign payments were disrupted as a key system was unavailable.

Although the internet was being gradually restored since the night of July 23, some banks could not access the Society for Worldwide Interbank Financial Telecommunication (SWIFT), which provides the main messaging network through which international payments are initiated, due to slow internet connection.

Agrani Bank was providing services through half of its branches. Its Managing Director Murshedul Kabir said all types of transactions, including foreign transactions, went smoothly.

Most garment and textile factories reopened yesterday after being kept shut for four days due to violence centring the quota reform movement and the imposition of a nationwide curfew. The units are now racing to meet the strict lead times set by international buyers. The photo was taken at a garment factory in the capital's Jurain yesterday.

Garment sector reeling from shutdown

DBL Group, a leading garment exporter, usually ships apparel worth around $50 million each month.

But this month, their shipment will fall by at least 30 percent since production had to be halted following a spell of violence centring the quota reform movement and the government's imposition of a nationwide curfew.

Being a large group, DBL has its own production facilities, including spinning and dyeing units alongside factories for production of garments and accessories.

However, all their units were shut because of the violence over the past four days. At the same time, a few goods-laden trucks were waiting at the Chattogram port to unload export cargo.

"So, the losses are enormous," said DBL Group Managing Director MA Jabbar, adding that the biggest blow was the dent to the confidence of international clothing retailers and brands.

DBL Group is not alone.

As production remained halted for four days, all small, medium and large garment exporters faced similar challenges.

Moreover, business owners could not contact international business partners because of an internet blackout since July 18. However, as broadband internet services gradually began to come back online since Tuesday night, the situation has been improving.

The impacts of the shutdown were felt more acutely by small and medium factories, which cannot afford big losses given their comparatively weaker financial strength.

A factory owner in Rupganj, who ships T-shirts and polo shirts worth $6 million each month to American and Canadian retailers, could not timely receive raw materials, sourced from both at home and abroad.

The unit needs at least $3 million worth of raw materials each month, including yarn, which accounts for 70 percent of the total raw material requirement, chemicals and fabrics.

Although the factory owner placed orders with a few local spinners and millers for yarn and fabrics, they could not supply the raw materials as transport operators stayed off the roads fearing violence.

Effectively, the shutdown put factory owners in a double bind because they could neither contact buyers nor continue production.

This is the peak time to confirm prices for goods to be shipped next summer and spring, but the owner could not send quotes online due to the internet blackout.

Now, more money will have to be spent since employees will have to work overtime in order to adhere to the strict lead time set by international buyers, the owner said, asking not to be named.

There were hopes that business would regain momentum from July onwards compared to previous seasons, when the impacts of the Covid-19 pandemic, Russia-Ukraine war, and high inflationary pressures took a toll on business. Instead, a new disruption has shaken up the sector, the owner added.

Syed M Tanvir, managing director of Pacific Jeans, a leading denim exporter based in Chattogram, shared a similar experience.

Tanvir declined to comment on details regarding losses, only stating that they were huge. He said their factories have been closed since Saturday, adding that the supply chain was also severely disrupted.

The lull in production at garment units has also adversely impacted those involved in the primary textile sector, including the main suppliers of yarn, fabrics and other raw materials.

Hundreds of tonnes of unsold yarn have piled up in mills due to the shutdown, transport operators' reluctance to carry goods and a fall in demand.

Fazlul Haque, managing director of Israq Spinning Mills, said he usually sells 100 tonnes of yarn each day. But unsold yarn began piling up before the beginning of the shutdown. At present, the situation has been exacerbated and there is a stockpile of over 2,000 tonnes of yarn at his factory.

Mohammad Ali Khokon, president of the Bangladesh Textile Mills Association (BTMA), said huge losses were incurred, adding that an assessment was ongoing. The BTMA called a meeting of the mill owners today to get more information about losses from owners, he said.

However, the Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA) has already completed its primary assessment of losses, saying that they amounted to Tk 6,400 crore over the past four days.

BGMEA President SM Mannan Kochi said that garment factories would have to pay around Tk 1,000 crore to workers despite no work being done over the past four days.

The amount of losses in the garments accessories sector is also high, he added.

According to the BGMEA, nearly 950 trucks with exportable garment items were waiting at the Chattogram port to be unloaded.

Garment and textile mills resumed operations yesterday, with workers and officials using their official identity cards as curfew passes.

Stocks dip amid jitters

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Stocks plunged yesterday amid a sell-off, reflecting a downbeat investor sentiment as the market reopened after three days following the recent violence stemming from the quota reform movement.

The DSEX, the benchmark index of the Dhaka Stock Exchange (DSE), went down 95 points or 1.76 percent to finish at 5,350.

The trend was the same at Chittagong Stock Exchange. The CASPI, the general index of the CSE, dropped 145 points, or 0.93 percent.

Trading at the country's stock exchanges remained closed for the last three days of the week due to the internet blackout.

Stock market analysts are saying that the recent turmoil centring the quota reform movement prompted many general investors to go for selling shares.

The stock market index fell as institutional investors too did not buy shares.

Investors' participation was thin as most of them could not monitor stock trading through their mobile phones because of the absence of mobile internet, said a stock market broker.

Stock trading may improve with the restoration of internet countrywide, he hoped.

A top official of a leading stock brokerage firm, preferring anonymity, said there are many reasons for the depletion of confidence among investors although political instability was absent for many years.

Now, the violence has led to apprehensions that any type of small outburst may lead to large protests. So, investors will be cautious about their investments in the stock market, he said.

Frequent policy changes, presence of only a handful of listed companies with a good performance record, a lack of accountability and rampant manipulation are the main causative factors behind the apprehensions, he said.

Usually, political tension becomes a headache once in every five years during the national elections. But this movement showed that violence can erupt any time in Bangladesh and it can spook investors, he said.

The Shariah-based companies' stock index, the DSES, fell 21 points, or 1.83 percent, yesterday to 1,169.

At the same time, the DS-30, the index for blue-chip stocks, plummeted 37 points, or 1.91 percent, to 1,908. Some Tk 159 crore worth of shares changed hands, which was the lowest turnover since January 3, 2023.

Of the issues undergoing trade, 13 advanced, 352 declined and 14 remained unchanged.

KEY POINTS

- DSE's key index plunged 1.76%
  CSE's major index dropped 0.93%
- Investors' participation was thin due to a lack of mobile internet
- Recent unrest prompted many investors to sell shares
- Restoration of internet may improve trading
- Prospect of future protests spooks investors

Banks, NBFIs asked not to impose late fees

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Banks and non-bank financial institutions (NBFIs) have been asked to refrain from imposing fees or interest on delayed repayment of loan and saving scheme instalments and credit card bills between July 18 and July 25.

The central bank made the call by issuing two separate notices on Wednesday saying that clients might have missed such payments due to unrest in the country.

Banks and NBFIs have been instructed not to impose fees or interest if the clients clear their dues incurred from July 18 to July 25 by the end of this month, as per one central bank notice.

Stating that banks and NBFIs will not be able to cancel deposit schemes, the BB also asked them not to provide lower profits or interest than the rates declared earlier if clients fail to pay instalments.

The instruction, which was to come into effect immediately, will be applicable for all credit card customers, general loan borrowers and savers.

Amidst the internet shutdown and nationwide curfew, people have been unable to conduct online banking since July 18. A lot of ATM booths have been kept shut while others have run out of cash.

A good number of banks already have decided not to impose any interest or fees on clients for delayed payment of loan instalments, including that against credit cards, amidst a nationwide curfew and internet blackout.

Deliveries from port, ICDs gain momentum

DWAIPAYAN BARUA and

Delivery of import containers from the Chattogram port's yards and transfer of containers from the port to private inland container depots (ICDs) gained momentum since Tuesday evening.

This was due to the partial resumption of data transfers over broadband internet which enabled assessment and clearance of good.

Some 1,286 TEUs (twenty-foot equivalent units) of import cargo was received by consignees at the port yards in the 24 hours till 8:00am yesterday, according to Chittagong Port Authority (CPA).

It was possible due to the recommencement of online assessments by customs following the resumption of broadband internet services on Tuesday evening, said CPA Secretary Md Omar Faruk.

Meanwhile, 583 TEUs of import containers were transferred to export processing zones and 1,007 TEUs to private ICDs.

There were 41,459 TEUs of containers at the port yards as of 8:00am yesterday, whereas 41,620 TEUs a day ago.

The CPA secretary hoped the congestion would ease in the next couple of days.

Chattogram Custom House Joint Commissioner Tarek Hasan confirmed that they could get access to the Asycuda software on the server of the National Board of Revenue after partial resumption of broadband internet since Tuesday afternoon.

The Automated System for Customs Data (Asycuda) is a computerised customs management system that covers most foreign trade procedures. It handles manifests and customs declarations, along with accounting, transit and suspense procedures.

Clearing and forwarding (C&F) agents usually submit import and export documents with the NBR server from their respective offices.

Since internet services was yet to be available to individual users, the customs authority gave server connectivity to four computers at a room inside the custom house's office to allow the C&F agents to submit these documents since Tuesday afternoon.

Bangladesh Inland Container Depots Association Secretary Ruhul Amin Sikder informed that transport of export-laden containers from the private ICDs to the port had declined over the last couple of days.

This was due to a low number of trucks carrying export cargo arriving at the ICDs from Dhaka and elsewhere as factories had remained closed, he said.

ADB lowers growth forecast for Bangladesh

Inflation to creep up further, it says

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Asian Development Bank (ADB) has revised down the economic growth projection for Bangladesh but said inflation might creep up further during the current fiscal year of 2024-25.

According to Asian Development Outlook July 2024 published last week, Bangladesh's economy might grow 6.5 percent in this fiscal year, which is lower than its forecast in April of 6.6 percent, owing to sluggish growth of the industrial sector.

The Manila-based lender's projection is lower than the government's 6.75 percent growth target for the economy.

The ADB's forecast came just before the country witnessed five days of severe disruptions in economic activities amidst an internet outage, violence centring a movement for reforming quota at public jobs and subsequent curfew to control the situation.

The multilateral lender said monthly inflation rates in Bangladesh continued to be near double digits in the first 11 months of FY2024 and may persist due to high domestic food prices.

Dhaka hospitals need urgent support

They are struggling to provide optimal care to patients

The updates coming from several government hospitals in Dhaka in the aftermath of recent violent clashes are quite concerning. These hospitals, treating people injured during the unrest centring the quota reform movement, are struggling to provide optimal care due to the sheer number of incoming patients, as per a report in this daily. Clearly, these and other public hospitals in major cities need proper support from the authorities.

According to our report, the hospitals in Dhaka, especially the Dhaka Medical College Hospital (DMCH), have been stretched thin since July 18, when violent attacks spread out across the city. People were injured with shotgun bullets or pellets as police and Border Guard Bangladesh (BGB) troops shot at protesters and alleged infiltrators. At the DMCH, some 1,071 people wounded by sharp weapons, bullets and/or pellets sought treatment between July 15 and 22. Most of these victims—ranging from teenagers to middle-aged individuals—said they were merely bystanders or commuters and not associated with the protests or clashes. All the patients currently admitted at the DMCH were injured critically and had to undergo surgery. Overwhelmed by the surge, the hospital had to prematurely discharge those who had come in before the start of the violence to make room. The situation is similar at Shaheed Suhrawardy Medical College Hospital (SSMCH), NITOR, and the National Institute of Ophthalmology.

Healthcare services in general have been facing a massive disruption due to the ongoing situation. Due to the nationwide internet shutdown, which came into effect on July 18 night, private medical colleges, hospitals and diagnostic centres have been unable to provide services, according to another report in this daily. All online healthcare services have been out of reach as well. These facilities and services cater to a significantly large number of people in Bangladesh.

Given the unprecedented levels of violence, deaths and destruction seen over the past week, it is understandable that hospitals would get overwhelmed to some extent. However, as we have said numerous times before, an emergency service sector like healthcare must always have contingency plans anticipating all kinds of crisis. We urge the government to urgently mobilise all resources needed for the DMCH and other hospitals so that they can provide the best possible treatment to patients. The medical professionals who worked tirelessly in such a high-stress situation deserve some compensations as well.

The limited restoration of internet services is a positive turn of events; this means private healthcare facilities and online services can get back to doing their job. We expect the authorities to extend the necessary logistical and technical support to all healthcare service providers so they can help people without disruption.

Gaza faces threat of disease outbreaks

World leaders must prevent killing and displacement of Palestinians

The increasing deaths and displacement of Palestinians as well as outbreaks of diseases in Gaza demand a much greater pressure from the international community to bring Israel's genocidal campaign to an end. According to a report in this daily, a top World Health Organization (WHO) official recently said he was "extremely worried" over possible outbreaks in Gaza after poliovirus was detected in the sewage, warning that communicable diseases could cause more deaths than injuries. The WHO's head of health emergencies in the occupied Palestinian territories also said that the number of people now needing to be evacuated from Gaza for medical care may have risen to 14,000.

Meanwhile, the death toll in the ongoing war has risen to 39,090 since October 7, as Khan Younis suffered one of its bloodiest days on Tuesday, with at least 89 Palestinians being killed. Thousands of people fled southern areas of the territory following the Israeli army's temporary evacuation order for parts of Khan Yunis, including the Al-Mawasi humanitarian zone. The order came days after the health ministry in Gaza said that 92 people were killed in a strike on Al-Mawasi, when Israel claimed it was targeting a Hamas commander. Such mass casualties, under the guise of Israel targeting Hamas militants, has tragically become the norm in Gaza.

The evacuation order for Al-Mawasi comes just two months after the Israeli military directed Palestinians to go there for their own safety. As a result, thousands of Palestinians, who were in Khan Younis after being displaced multiple times already, are having to flee the area in panic, carrying whatever little belongings they have left. These endless deaths, displacement and injuries to Palestinians can only be brought to an end by the international community putting enough pressure on Israel. Worryingly, however, there has been little response from the former so far, despite a number of directives and rulings from the International Court of Justice, which, as recently as Friday, came down hard against Israel by calling its occupation of Palestinian territories illegal, and likening its laws in the occupied territories to "the crime of apartheid". This is deeply concerning.

It has been nearly 10 months since Israeli forces mounted the war against innocent Palestinians in Gaza. The population of the strip has already been through starvation; immeasurable amounts of violence has been inflicted upon them; and now with the threat of possible outbreaks hanging over them, we hope the international community will finally recognise the urgency with which it must act.

The irresponsible remarks of our responsible persons

THE OVERTON WINDOW

ERESH OMAR JAMAL

The events of the past week have jolted the nation. What started off with students of public universities peacefully protesting for the reformation of the quota system in public jobs, ended up with hundreds of people getting killed, thousands severely injured, and immeasurable damage being done to public properties.

When public university students first started taking to the streets, they repeated time and again that they had only one demand: for the executive branch of the government to reform the quota system—which it could have done in 2018 but refused to do—which even the High Court said it could do if it felt it was necessary. The students further said that as soon as the government agreed to their one demand, they would withdraw from the streets.

Law enforcement agencies were only properly deployed once the students managed to drive BCL back. And once deployed, the students alleged and there is evidence to suggest that they continued the attempt to silence the protesters using unnecessary force.

How did we get from there, to where we are now, with nearly five days of internet shutdown and a nationwide curfew?

Lest we forget, the issue of Razakars came up during a press conference held by the prime minister. That night, the students took to the streets and chanted various slogans. Among them, one slogan we found objectionable. But there were other slogans which indicated the students' clear disdain for Razakars.

Nevertheless, the next day, the Awami League general secretary, amidst a situation that was seemingly turning tense, said that Chhatra League would give these protesters a fitting reply. The first question that should automatically be raised is, why Chhatra League? Where does it say in any of the documents pertaining to the functioning of our state that Chhatra League has any role to play in such matters? Why could the responsible minister himself not give a direct reply to the protesters in regards to their demands?

The answer to why he referred to the BCL became evident the next day, when the student wing of the ruling party unleashed a shocking stream of violence upon the students, resulting in over 300 injuries, mostly to the protesters. It was that irresponsible comment that first gave rise to the violence.

Before BCL took to the streets to once again quell peaceful protests using force—which had become the go-to tactic of this government as evident from previous instances of mass protests—the home minister told the media that law enforcers would take a hardline approach if the student protesters stepped out of line. But when the BCL unleashed its rampage, we saw law enforcers again stand by and watch idly. The students themselves called out law enforcement personnel for not stepping in to protect them.

Where was the home minister then? Is he not responsible for protecting the country's law and order? If so, when BCL members came out in droves with weapons in their hands, was the country's law and order not threatened? When they attacked the students, was the country's laws not broken?

Instead of admitting what was there for all to see, that the police did not protect the students nor oppose BCL's rampage, he hinted that the violence that took place was a result of disagreements among students. It was that failure to take responsibility to protect the students that led to a larger student movement the next day, when private university students also got involved. And the demand that the students added at that point—to investigate who was responsible for the attacks on them by BCL cadres, and to hold them to account—was also extremely reasonable.

Why was that so difficult? Why, instead, did the BCL take to the streets again the next day armed with weapons, to try and foil the demonstrations of the students? And why were law enforcers either unresponsive or joining in on the side of the BCL?

Law enforcement agencies were only properly deployed once the students managed to drive BCL back. And once deployed, the students alleged and there is evidence to suggest that they continued the attempt to silence the protesters using unnecessary force. And that's when things really started to take an ugly turn, leading to the deaths of six people on July 16, including the unarmed Abu Sayed.

VISUAL: BIPLOB CHAKROBORTY

In recent statements, several ministers said that while the students were waging a peaceful movement, BNP- and Jamaat-led forces took advantage of the tense situation and used violence to wage a parallel movement. Are the responsible ministers uninformed of how tensions initially escalated? Does the responsible ministers not know that the violence was started by the BCL, which gave rise to the volatile situation in which, undoubtedly, outside forces tried to add further fuel. Where were they when the "peaceful student protesters" that they themselves described, were being attacked?

Why did none of the responsible persons in the higher echelons of the government not condemn the attacks on students by BCL and law enforcers? When the coordinators of the quota-reform protests alleged on July 16 that state-sponsored attacks were being carried out against them across the country, why did none of them come forward to talk to them and provide them with protection?

On the next day, when the students had already been beaten and battered, and clearly afraid for their own security, why did the government decide to forcibly throw them out of their university campuses, without the least bit of consideration as to how they were going to get home safely? It was only after they were made to vacate their campuses, and the loss of more lives and thousands of injuries, that violence erupted across the country in all direction, bringing the total death toll to more than 170. But why did we have to get to such a point in the first place?

Are the irresponsible comments made by various responsible officials of our government, not in any way to blame for this? Despite various ministers now promising to carry out investigations into the incidents of violence, which they are blaming solely on the BNP and Jamaat, no mention of BCL's role, or the irresponsible comments that were made from within their own ranks, have been mentioned by any of them. Given the extremities that the entire nation has gone through in the last few days, is that the responsible thing to do?

The damage to public property that has been done, to businesses, the psychological toll this entire ordeal has placed on the old and the young, and most tragically, the huge loss of lives—mostly of students—and the terrible injuries that have been caused to people, whose lives have been changed forever as a result, deserved a more prudent reaction from the government. Because, what unfolded over the past week, did not just happen in a vacuum.

History and ordinary people in general will remember very well what happened over the last week or so. For the government to now try and avoid any responsibility for the tragedies that unfolded, and act with the same sense of irresponsibility that, at the very least, helped create the environment for these tragedies to occur, will not lead to the people or the nation getting any closure. And that, unfortunately, may only delay this horrific chapter of our history from ending.

I will not call them protesters

Naziba Basher
is a journalist at The Daily Star.

NAZIBA BASHER

Starting with Bangladesh Chhatra League's mindless attack on the peaceful movement by student protesters at Dhaka University on July 15, clashes took place almost every day the following week, not just on campuses but throughout the country.

At first, it was devastating to see the sheer brutality law enforcers and ruling party activists unleashed upon young students of Dhaka University, Jahangirnagar University, Rajshahi University, Barishal University, Begum Rokeya University, Brac University, and several other educational institutions. At one point, however, it was visually apparent that there were hardly any students involved in the mayhem.

When government establishments, like the Setu Bhaban and the Department of Disaster Management building, adjacent to which was a crucial data centre, were tactically burned down, it was again evident that the peaceful protesters who were demanding their rights did not carry out those arson attacks.

One could easily tell that the incendiarism involved long-term planning and supply of materials including gunpowder and other flammables. When the Narsingdi jail vandalism occurred, resulting in the jailbreak of over 800 convicts and the looting of hundreds of weapons, it was further proof that outside elements infiltrated the initial peaceful movement for equality.

The word protester, to me, is a powerful one. Every triumph of a nation came from rigorous and logical protests by humans asking for their rights. It was the protesters who ensured our right to speak in our mother language; it was them who led the country to its liberation. It was protesters of garment factories who asked for better wages. It was protesters who demanded road safety. It was protesters who asked for reform in the discriminatory quota system.

The infiltrators were handed the opportunity on a silver platter the moment BCL ensured that violence took over the movement.

I have since then been refusing to use the term "protester" whenever clashes occurred between groups of cops or ruling party men and, what can only be called, "rioters".

Myriad rumours are flying about—those involved in the current unrest are "Jamaat-Shibir men", they are "people of low-income groups that were hired as vandals and goons", they are "BNP men", they are this and they are that. Perhaps one of those rumours may even be true.

However, what they are not is "protesters".

Abu Sayed was a protester.

The lone breadwinner of a poor family, with aging parents and a younger sister, he took to the streets as a student at Rangpur's Begum Rokeya University for his right to a fair chance in getting a government job. He faced the police, who attacked the students indiscriminately and was shot for it, armed with nothing but sheer courage.

He was a true protester.

The girls and boys who were beaten mercilessly on the DU campus for protesting with no intent of violence, stopped only by BCL's "befitting reply", are true protesters.

The many, many who died in police firing and ruthless attacks just for having a voice, just for wanting a chance at equality—they are the true protesters.

The word protester, to me, is a powerful one. Every triumph of a nation came from rigorous and logical protests by humans asking for their rights. It was the protesters who ensured our right to speak in our mother language; it was them who led the country to its liberation. It was protesters of garment factories who asked for better wages. It was protesters who demanded road safety. It was protesters who asked for reform in the discriminatory quota system. And if we use that word so callously on the wrong kind of people, we undermine every protest and every triumph they brought.

Since the first quota reform movement and the road safety protest, which was organised mostly by middle and high school children, in 2018, the words "student" and "protester" have become almost synonymous for people of this generation, not unlike back in 1952.

In 2018 too, the road safety movement was foiled first by Chhatra League men, and then "vested quarters" who infiltrated the movement for their own separate agenda. Notice the trend?

The infiltrators then were also, at times, termed "andolonkari (protesters)", like they are now.

To me, being a protester comes with a responsibility towards the future of a country, but if you are hellbent on ruining that country, you are anything but a protester demanding rights. You are then only a rioter, a criminal, a saboteur.

I refuse to call these people—the rioters, the infiltrators that shamelessly take advantage of logical movements—protesters.

I shall not give them the same respect that is given to Abu Sayed.

The economic losses of a man-made disaster

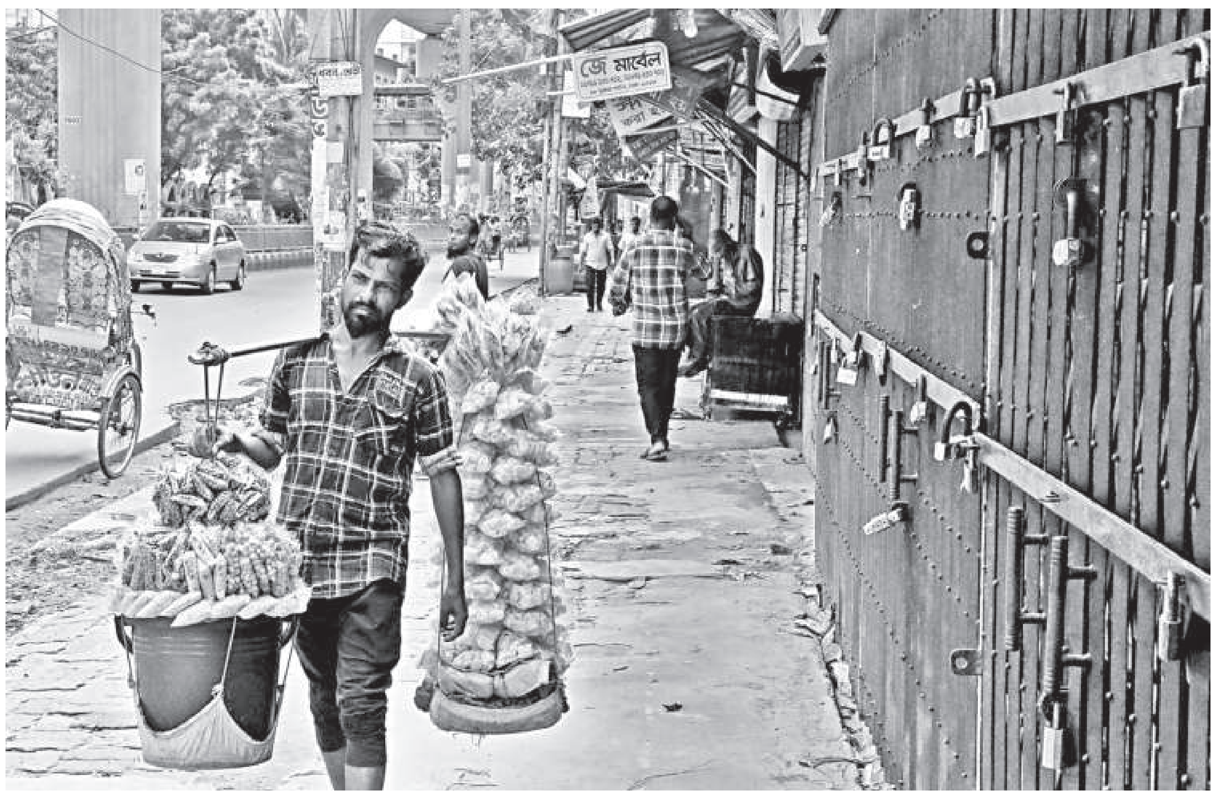
Dr Khondaker Golam Moazzem is research director at the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD)

KHONDAKER GOLAM MOAZZEM

Bangladesh has once again experienced a major crisis, which has apparently ended with the announcement of a major reform in the quota system for public jobs. The whole country was locked down for almost two weeks—first with the “Bangla Blockade” and the “Complete Shutdown” movements of students which were later joined in by others, including political activists and extremists, and second, the country-wide curfew with the support of the army to counter the vandalism inflicted across the country. Although the government tried to defend that the quota reform is a legal issue to be resolved in the High Court and the Appellate Division, students had little confidence in this process. In fact, the crisis revealed several new realities regarding emerging popular demands (e.g. policy reforms), such as people's—particularly young people's—way of uniting and raising their voices, silent intrusion of different political and extremist elements in the movement, limitations of political methods of handing people's demands, weakness of the parliamentary system to address such major reform issues, and an increasingly low level of trust on the prevailing system to address policy related concerns. Unfortunately, in the backdrop of all these new realities, the economy has once again experienced a ‘man-made’ disaster which caused a lot of losses to the economy and the society.



The loss of income of people who work and earn on a daily basis in various jobs in the informal sector is an example of micro level losses in the economy. PHOTO: PALASH KHAN

The economy has experienced three types of losses: (a) “micro level” losses (at individual and organisation levels); (b) “messo level” losses (at sectoral and cross-sectoral levels) and (c) “macro level” losses (across the economy). While the micro and messo levels of losses are immediate and short term, macro level losses would be medium to long term. Hence, a clear accounting of all these losses is immediately needed to undertake necessary initiatives to reduce the damages caused by the crisis.

At the micro level, the country experienced at least 10 different types of losses. First and foremost, the loss of lives—a total of at least 146 people died, many of them students. This is not only a major loss, but also ruined future economic prospect of these families. Second, the loss of public property due to arson and vandalism at different public offices, vehicles, leading to the damage of important documents and other related assets. Different primary estimates indicate that the losses will be in the range of several thousand crore taka. For example, the Power Division indicated a loss of Tk 1000 crore; the ICT ministry a loss of Tk 500 crore; Dhaka North City Corporation (DNCC) a loss of Tk 205 crore, and Bangladesh Council of Scientific and Industrial Research (BCSIR) a loss of Tk 5 crore.

Third, loss of properties of private companies because of arson on motorcycles, buses, trucks and cars in Dhaka, Narayanganj, Madaripur, Gazipur, Chittagong and other districts. Fourth is the loss of income of people who work and earn on a daily basis in various jobs in informal sector including day labourers, transport workers, rickshaw pullers, small vendors, self-employed, SMEs and shop owners and other service providers. Fifth, loss of income in large and medium scale enterprises which are mostly export-oriented enterprises including RMG, textiles, food processing, light engineering, pharmaceuticals, leather and footwear and other industries.

Sixth, loss of income of large-scale service-oriented enterprises including transport, banking, entertainment, and healthcare, etc. Seventh, loss of income of internet-based service providers especially freelancers. According to BASIS (Bangladesh Association of Software and Information Services), the loss of their member companies is approximately Tk 400 crore in five days. Eighth, loss of income of the tourism sector mainly in major tourist spots located in Cox's Bazar, Sylhet, Kuakata, and other places. Ninth, risks in loss of jobs of overseas migrant workers if they could not return to their workplace on time due to the shutdown. And finally, tenth, the farmers and rural agro-based farming households were affected due to the collapse of the domestic supply chain of perishable products including vegetables and fruits.

At the messo level, the losses are mostly sectoral and intersectoral in nature. The collapse of internet-based communications within and outside the country caused major damage to the confidence of the buyers of goods and services. Such complete failure to provide even minimum online communication with the outside world may damage future business deals. This may happen in case of freelancing, online-based businesses, and exporters of different types of goods. Other than that, the damages to the data centre under the DPDC as well as the collapse of internet services have caused major troubles for internet-based public utility services including pre-paid bill payment system of electricity and gas.

Even banking and financial transactions through ATMs and MFS were hindered because of the shutdown of internet services. However, the government has tried to restore the internet-based communications and services by taking measures to repair the system. On the trade side, the collapse of the economy for over a week has damaged major supply chains based in export and import of different goods. Similar collapse of supply chains happened in case of domestic goods mainly those of perishable goods including vegetables, fruits, and other food items.

At the macro level, the losses may or may not be exposed immediately. Due to collapse of the supply chains, supply of goods in retail markets have reduced, which resulted in a price hike of goods. The inflationary pressure would further rise given the situation. On the other hand, the recovery of different public and private properties requires the import of valuable machineries and equipment which needs allocation of foreign exchanges on an urgent basis. Allocating foreign exchanges for such import will put the dwindling forex reserve into further pressure.

On top of that, the upcoming months may experience slow-down in inward flow of remittances due to adverse effect on export and workers outflow, which would put the forex reserve in further pressure. A consequent adverse impact is the further weakening of exchange rate of the Bangladeshi taka against the US dollar, which would make imports costly. Such political unrest may weaken the confidence of foreign investors to invest in the country as well. Finally, unless the economy returns to normalcy immediately and if there is tension that prevails among business communities, such a situation would have an adverse impact on overall macroeconomic performance.

The restoration of the economy from such a crisis, which is man-made in nature, depends not only on providing financial support, economic incentives and benefits, or identifying and taking actions against extremists involved in the arson and vandalism of public and private properties, but more on healing the wounds that were caused in the process of addressing people's demands.

Several weaknesses were revealed in discussions and decision-making processes regarding the core issue of quota-reform. In fact, the quota reform movement highlights the needs for many other reforms in public policies, plans, acts and operations which have been long due. These include banking reform, capital market reform, regulatory reform, reform in public services, reform in state-owned enterprises, reform in public procurement system, and institutional reform of public entities, etc. These reforms are either being done partially or by-passed by the incumbent government in successive regimes.

In the absence of such reforms, deprivation, inequality, discrimination and disparity have been widening in the society. Given the dynamic nature of the economy and the changing society with a more open and globalised outlook, Bangladesh's future journey would be faltered and may face similar types of crises unless necessary reforms are undertaken over the next few years.

The incumbent government needs soul-searching to address the crisis. It needs major reform measures to upgrade the economic system into a competitive, inclusive, transparent and market-oriented structure. An open mechanism of discussion and debate both within the parliament and outside the parliament is needed regrading various reform-related issues. A trust-worthy legal, judicial and administrative mechanism needs to be established where disputes and grievances of the people can be solved. Such a mechanism would work as a shield against any type of extremist activities. An effective operation of such a system will build confidence among local and overseas investors, large, medium, and small enterprises, self-employed, employers and employee of formal and informal sector, local and foreign buyers of goods and services, bankers, financiers, multinational development banks, local and international commercial banks. It is expected that the government during its current regime will be able to establish such a system in the country.

Government should take responsibility for its mistakes

Sharmeen Murshid
is a freedom fighter.

SHARMEEN MURSHID

On Friday, July 19, as I was trying to return home from Dhanmondi, I was stopped at Jahangir Gate and was not allowed to pass through the cantonment. On my right, Mohakhali was on fire and gun shots had people running helter-skelter. In that situation, I, an elderly citizen, was roughly denied access through the cantonment. Annoyed, I refrained from giving names. I decided to walk towards Mohakhali. Halfway on my journey, a low flying helicopter suddenly started firing and gassing the place. Frightened, we all pressed ourselves against the side wall. Within minutes of that, a white car zoomed by, randomly spraying gunshots at pedestrians through its windows. I could barely read the words “Metropolitan Police” spelled out on the car as it flew off. So, who was firing? The police. If they fired through the left window, we surely would have been hit. Stunned, I stood there dazed. My god! My city has turned into a battle field. But who were they fighting? Where was the enemy?

There was a young lad sitting on the sidewalk, hit by splinters that barely missed his eyes. His friends were helping him. After a moment of sympathy, I moved on, when a middle-aged man stopped me saying, “Madame, I know you. Please don't go that way. Three young people were shot dead. A young lad of 14 years was killed two minutes ago by the police, who was kicking him to check whether he was alive.”

The man almost broke down in tears. He said “Who are these people who have no compassion for us? Why are they shooting us?”

Will my government please explain on whose orders such horrific crimes were committed by our police? What I saw on the streets was beyond description.

On that one Friday, July 19, 66 people, that this paper could independently confirm, were killed all over the country—the highest in one day.

It was Thursday, July 18. Notun Bazar, Badda, Rampura, Banasree, and adjacent areas were some of the hotspots of violence. I live nearby. I go out every day like an observer to see if our children need help. I find them battling armed police and cadres with stones and sticks. On Thursday, they were thirsty and tired and asked for water and saline. Five people were killed, including one policeman, so said the young protesters. When I went towards Mohakhali, we found a policeman who took refuge on the rooftop of a building when hundreds of people, young and old, were guarding the place so that he could not escape. An older figure tried to calm the angry group of students and locals and requested them to let him go. A young girl shouted, “We don't want any police. They have been killing us. We won't let him go.”

I left the place deeply disturbed with the knowledge that people now perceive the police as their enemy.

Police, Chhatra league and the BGB will all have to come to terms with the fact that they have children, younger brothers and sisters, who are now fighting them.

Till date, reports from various sources say that over 2,500 people have been arrested, 146 have been killed, and thousands injured. Observers say that the number of casualties may rise even further.

A student protest over a legitimate demand has been blown out of all proportions. A peaceful gathering, a demand for right to equal opportunity, a demand for reforms in a quota policy has been ruthlessly and brutally repressed—turning a small issue-specific student movement into a bizarre national crisis. The utter lack of empathy and sensitivity to the needs of our children is shocking. This catastrophe could have been avoided at many levels.

Leaders in the government could have come down from their high horses and heard the children out. Not one minister, not one neta (leader), not even a local neta, met with the children. Instead, they unleashed armed cadres into the campus, who carried out a mayhem before our very eyes and before the eyes of our government. The university administration sat back and cowardly watched the mayhem. This was betrayal. From then on, things went out of control.

The government could have solved the quota issue without involving the court. The court clearly stated that this could have been resolved through the executive powers of the government. The government wasted time while the violence continued.

It could have called a halt to the police-BGB actions while seeking to negotiate concessions. It pretended to negotiate on Thursday, July 18, while killings reached a peak on Friday, July 19. What they achieved on Sunday, July 21, should have been followed by withdrawal of all armed forces and cadres from the field and from campuses, and withdrawal of the curfew so that children could return to their schools safely. The lives of these children will never be the same again.

The government should take responsibility for its mistakes. It needs to withdraw and ban all political cadres from the campus, whether they are Chhatra League, Dal or Shibir, and immediately call back home Chhatra League and bring them under disciplinary actions. A section of them have been dehumanised.

6 books that shed light on student movements in Bangladesh

OLYMPIC DAY

As we attempt to grapple with the unprecedented turmoil Bangladesh experienced over the last few days, and particularly as we spend time away from digital devices, here's a list of books that might allow us to comprehend the inner mechanisms of movements, revolutions, and activism at large.

SADMAN AHMED SIAM,
AMREETA LETHE, NAZIA MANZOOR

Bangladesher Gono Obhyuthhan
SELINA HOSSAIN
Chandrabati, 2016

One of the movements which helped accelerate the Liberation War of Bangladesh was the Mass Uprising of 1969. Initiated by students, it gathered rapid popular support; not long after, people from all walks of life joined the protesting students. Enriched by the experiences of previous movements, the Mass Uprising had shaken the establishment of the time to its core, and the ruling regimen was forced to organise a general election for the first time in the country's (then East Pakistan) history. Selina Hossain chronicles the movement in her brilliant prose and takes readers back to those tumultuous times.

Bangladesher Obhudhyoy
BADRUDDIN UMAR
Baatighar, 2023

Badruddin Umar, a noted historian, has written multiple books analysing the movements of East Pakistan from a Marxist perspective, through the lens of workers and peasants from various regions. His book, *Bangladesher Obhudhyoy*is a scholarly work on several movements from this angle. Written in two parts, the first volume documents the struggles between 1947 to 1958 and the second covers the period between 1958 and 1971. The second volume covers a number of notable movements, including the Education Movement of 1962, the 6-Point Movement of 1966, and the Mass Uprising of 1969.

Umar's research shows how these movements were not limited to a specific section of society, but had truly transformed into mass movements as a result of the participation of all classes of people.

Bangladesher Chhatro Andolon Er Itihash, Ershader Shomoykal
DR MUHAMMAD HANNAN
Agamee Prokashoni, 2017

Students have always been the first to rise against dictatorships, whether in pre- or post-Liberation War Bangladesh. The mass movement against then-president Hussain Muhammad Ershad during the 1980s is a testament to that fact; students were the first to protest against his autocratic rule and many even gave their lives for the cause. Dr Muhammad Hannan is a prominent writer and has written extensively on the topic of student rebellions from different periods of Bangladesh's history. His experiences are highlighted in this book, where he not only documents the resistance movement against Ershad, but also covers the developments in Ershad's autocratic rule from its inception to its demise.

Arek Falgun
ZAHIR RAIHAN
Anupam Prokashoni, 1969

Set in the spring of 1955, three years since the Language Movement, Arek Falgun tells the stories of several people—primarily university students—as they navigate the tumultuous political scene in Dhaka in the movement's aftermath. The book broadly follows the students' attempts to organise and mourn those martyred in 1952 as the Pakistani regime continuously attempts to quash any and all signs of resistance. Mere acts of mourning, such as raising black flags, wearing black badges, and raising monuments to the martyred, are viewed by the ruling regime as dangerous and incendiary, but perhaps more importantly, as a sign of disobedience.

Arek Falgun ends on the often-quoted line, "Ashchhe Falgune, amra kintu digun hobo" ("Come next Spring, we will be twice as many"), which—although sometimes misquoted as a romantic gesture—is in actuality, a jab aimed at the deputy jailer who cannot find enough space in his prison to accommodate all the students arrested after a protest. It is a taunt that rings true as a beacon of hope, and both an assurance and a vow that, come what may, resistance will continue unimpeded.

Zahir Raihan's narrative unfolds almost as slice of life, following the personal and political lives of not only student organisers and protesters, but also those of the Pakistani law enforcement, collaborators, and people who remained apolitical. The stories of growing resistance that are intimately tied to and deeply impacted by the lives of their characters, are at once timeless and painfully human. Nearly 70 years on, readers might find resemblances between the occurrences of the book and current events incredibly striking.

Freedom Is A Constant Struggle
ANGELA Y DAVIS
Haymarket Books, 2016

Compared to most other entries on this list that focus on Bangladesh-centric movements, Freedom Is A Constant Struggle provides a more international and transnational look into movement building and collective organising. It touches primarily on the issues of Ferguson, Charleston, and Palestine. The book is a collection that features a number of interviews Frank Barat, its editor, conducted with Angela Davis over the course of several years, and speeches she, the thinker, delivered at various universities around the world.

Davis' accounts are meaningful and informed by her decades of work and activism in the field, for which she was not only stripped of her academic position at the University of California (on account of being a member of the Communist Party) during Ronald Reagan's governorship, but was also incarcerated after being put on the FBI's most wanted list. As such, her experiences in radical collective organising and activism, as well as her incarceration, lend significant weight to one of the strongest black feminist and Marxist voices writing on anti-colonial resistance, prison abolishment, and the prison industrial complex, relevant even today.

The book also speaks to the discouraging nature of an endless uphill battle: For those currently in the thick of social and political activism, the struggle against capitalism, colonialism, and corporate rule often proves to be overwhelming and seemingly unwinnable. However, rather than admitting defeat or dismissing the issue altogether, the book accepts the often demoralising nature of the struggle and attempts to build from there on. Its hopeful approach is reflected not only in the conversations present in the book itself, but also Davis' oeuvre and scholarship.

Complaint!
SARA AHMED
Duke University Press, 2021

Centered primarily around academia, Ahmed's Complaint takes a critical look at the conceptual apparatuses around the task of "complaining" at an institutional level. She points first to the marking of the complaint itself as a problem, and next to the ways in which the person making the complaint is marked as the problem. Referencing some of her earlier thoughts, particularly how negative affects stick to bodies and identities that are unwelcome or are considered extraneous, or even act as blockages to the smooth functioning of a system, Ahmed remarks how those that make complaints become the problem, instead of the problem they were complaining about in the first place. Getting stuck with such a marker prevents legitimate complaints from being registered. An astutely observed work detailing the inner mechanisms of institutionalised methods of silencing dissent, criticism, and mere disagreement, Complaint is a must-read for those feeling stifled by such processes.

BOOK REVIEW: FICTION

Otherness and invisible identities

Review of 'The Hippo Girl and Other Stories' (Hachette India, 2024)

NABILAH KHAN

Shah Tazrian Ashrafi doesn't shy away from telling it like it is. His debut short story collection, The Hippo Girl and Other Stories, holds up a mirror to a society that judges and ridicules those that do not adhere to its shortsighted vision of a homogenised culture.

Ashrafi's characters are defiant, unruly, nonconformist. They revel in their obvious differences, bravely holding themselves firm and unrepentant in a society that values conformity. They are an accepted nuisance, yet they are complacent in that societal viewpoint. Ashrafi's stories grip you by the shoulders and transport you through the grubby, seedy, and ruthless mohollahs of Dhaka, through pre- and post-Liberation War Bangladesh, and sometimes to serene and peaceful landscapes of remote villages as well.

The Hippo Girl* is narrated by a group of students who are classmates of the protagonist. The storytelling using the collective point of view as opposed to the singular is clever and effective. It confirms the narrowmindedness of a hypocritical society and a gradual rise in egotism.

Set mostly in Bangladesh, the stories are distinctly Bangali. They focus on otherness, on those who are ignored, neglected, and forgotten although they cohabit the very same space as the 'respectable' class; whose identities don't matter, who are shoved aside, under grass and hard earth and life, so much so that they tend to become invisible.

If "Brother", the first story of the collection is aggressive and uncomfortable, "Lucky", the second, is strangely entertaining, humorous, tragic, and shocking. One is dark, the other is darkly humorous. In the titular story, "The Hippo Girl", the protagonist Jhonaki's acceptance of her parents' death and her subsequent obsession with hippos is beautifully captured in a brief sentence, "It was as if grief didn't want to enter her body, so it gently stepped aside and made way for the obsession to settle instead."

Death is a constant in most of the stories. Deaths resulting from desolation and destitution—shocking, disturbing, bloody. Deaths of humans and animals alike. It almost appears as if the protagonists of Ashrafi's stories are stoic, indifferent, even apathetic. But delve a little deeper and there is a hidden, desperate plea. The following lines depict the apathy only too well: "We realized Jhonaki wasn't okay when relatives and friends of the two were simmering with sorrow but not a single tear rolled out of her eyes. Instead, she emptily stared at the bodies lying in pools of dark blood on the earthen floor, walked towards the big mound of hay beneath the neem tree where the one-eared hippo was snoozing, settled herself cozily against its wet belly, and like a baby in its mother's embrace, fell asleep."

The Hippo Girl is narrated by a group of students who are classmates of the protagonist. The storytelling using the collective point of view as opposed to the singular is clever and effective. It confirms the narrowmindedness of a hypocritical society and a gradual rise in egotism.

While there is a distinct similarity between "Lucky" and "The Hippo Girl", both with young, orphaned, homeless girls with strange inclinations and an unusual kinship with animals, the latter is provided agency and succeeds in avenging the merciless murder of her animal 'friend'. Animal cruelty, especially humans' nefarious behaviour towards street animals, is a recurring theme. In "My Human", canine loyalty is challenged in the aftermath of the Liberation War of 1971. With this and the other stories, there is an underlying theme of violence throughout the short story collection with little reprieve. This, at times, especially at this time and given the atmosphere of violence spreading across the globe, contributes to an overwhelming reading experience.

In "Crescent Boat", a granddaughter tries to befriend her estranged grandfather to discover that had transpired between her mother and him to tragically drive them apart for life. Ashrafi utilises the second person narrative for "Indira Road" and "Unpleasant conditions", two disparate stories that pay homage to the motherland. In the former, the reader imagines themselves as the narrator travelling along the alleys and laneways of their old neighbourhood in search of their mother who was abducted by West Pakistani soldiers during a military raid in 1971. By far the most tragic and heartbreaking, the reader is taken into the mind of a young man grappling with a sense of unending loss. In the latter, readers are taken to Canada where a middle-aged woman challenges perceptions of motherhood through her own experiences as a single mother.

Ashrafi is a truly gifted writer and a promising addition to the South Asian literary scene.

Murshida leads 'attack from the beginning' mindset

Joty and Co set up Asia Cup semifinal clash with India

SPORTS REPORTER

For a while, Murshida Khatun had been on and off from the lineup of the Bangladesh women's cricket team. Even in Bangladesh's crucial Asia Cup opener against Sri Lanka, Murshida's name was missing from the lineup. However, she staked her claim as a resurgent opener this Asia Cup in their thumping 114-run win against Malaysia in Dambulla yesterday as Bangladesh ensured semifinal clash against India.

Her career-best 59-ball 80, continuing on from her fifty in the previous match against Thailand, paved the way for Bangladesh's second-highest total in T20Is as they scored 191 for two against Malaysia. The attacking approach shown illustrated the aggression the Tigresses were looking to produce with the bat for a while.

Dilara Akter and Murshida got Bangladesh off to a flyer, notching fifty in the Powerplay. Murshida would then gather wind and skipper Nigar Sultana Joty was able to take the opportunity to hit an unbeaten 37-ball 62.

Murshida said she was eager for an attacking start to set her own tempo, for in the previous game against Thailand, she needed 10 deliveries to open her account.

"I rectified the mistakes made in the previous game. From the beginning, I tried to carry the innings with singles. The start in the previous game was bad and I covered that later [with 50 off 55]. Today, the plan was to attack from the beginning," she said at the post-match press conference.

There were classy shots on offer and she reminded at the post-match ceremony that the cover drive was her favourite during the innings.

For Bangladesh and her, the biggest relief would be recovering from the continuous batting slump.

"It's good when batters return to runs in a stage like the Asia Cup. We will be trying now to put on a better performance [in semis] and recover from our lackings," she said.

The attacking intent from Murshida saw her smash 10 fours and a six, and although she regretted getting out on 80, the knock helped Bangladesh put on big partnerships on way to posting a mammoth total.

The essential piece of the puzzle for Murshida to make an impact on return was maintaining her process, also showcased in the recently-concluded Premier League in which she top-scored with 446 runs at an average of over 63.

"I tried to play the right way according to my process and I feel that's how it happened. Last six months, I worked really hard while playing the Premier League," she added.

Buoyed by the win, Joty and Co will be looking for something special in the semifinal against India.

"We're looking forward to playing good cricket, and executing game plans. I have belief in my team, I know how capable they are," skipper Joty sounded confident about their chances against a strong Indian side.

Cristian Medina bursts into celebration as he thought he scored a last-gasp equaliser in Argentina's opening match of the Olympics against Morocco at the Stade Geoffroy-Guichard in Saint Etienne on Wednesday. The goal was disallowed as Argentina eventually lost the match 2-1. The goal was under review by VAR when the decision was taken to suspend the match initially with a message on the screen, addressing the crowd in the ground, saying "your session has been suspended, please leave the stadium" before the match was eventually listed as "finished" by the organisers.

Sagor to start Bangladesh's Olympic campaign

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh's Paris Olympics 2024 campaign will begin today with archer Sagor Islam set to fight for his fate in the ranking round.

The curtains of the Olympics will be raised tomorrow but several disciplines, including football have already begun.

Sagor, who earned direct qualification to the event, will have the opportunity to navigate through favourable paths in the knockout rounds if he can manage a spot in the top 20 in the ranking round as such a finish will allow him to avoid the top seeds in the competition.

"It is true that good scores in the ranking rounds allow you to avoid the top players but you have to remember that 64 players will be taking part and they are all strong. So, I'm not really thinking about that and preparing myself for the knockout rounds," Sagor said yesterday.

Bangladesh shooter Robiul Islam will take part in the qualification round of the 10m Air Rifle single's event on July 28. Two days later, swimmer Samiul Islam Rafi will participate in the 100m Freestyle Heat and on August 3, swimmer Sonia Khatun will get to test her progress in the 50m Freestyle Heat. On the same day, Bangladesh's fastest man, Imranur Rahman will fight it out in the preliminary round of the 100m Sprint event.

Seeking personal bests a step towards 'dreaming big'

SAMSUL AREFIN KHAN

The year 2024 marks the 40th anniversary of Bangladesh's maiden Olympic participation in Los Angeles and its 11th successive appearance in the 'Greatest Show on Earth'.

The recurring theme for Bangladesh since its first outing in the Olympics has been the athletes returning home empty-handed.

Golfer Siddikur Rahman and archers Ruman Sana and Sagor Islam's direct qualification to the Olympics is still considered the highest achievement for Bangladesh in the Games' history, as other athletes have only participated through wildcards or quota places.

During a recent interview with The Daily Star, swimmer Sonia Khatun acknowledged that their participation in the Olympics is akin to "token participation," as they are happy just to get the opportunity to feature in the global event alongside top athletes of the world.

This year, a total of five athletes from Bangladesh will take part in four disciplines -- archery, athletics, shooting, and swimming -- at the Paris Olympics, and among them, Sagor qualified directly on his merit, while the remaining four -- shooter Robiul Islam, swimmers Samiul Islam Rafi and Sonia Khatun, and sprinter Imranur Rahman -- were handed wildcard entries.

Former Olympian and current BKSP shooting coach Asif Hossain Khan admitted the harsh reality of Bangladesh's chances in the Olympics, but he was hopeful that if these athletes can deliver their best individual performance in the meet, they can count their participation differently.

"To be honest, we are far behind other athletes from different countries. It's difficult to overcome the difference within a short time," said Asif, who won a gold medal in the 10m Air Rifle individual event in the 2002 Commonwealth Games and also participated in the Athens Olympics in 2004.

"I hope they deliver their best individual performance in Paris, so that they get the self-satisfaction of achieving what they previously had done," said Asif, whose opponent in the Manchester Commonwealth -- India's shooting legend Abhinav Bindra -- went on to win the first individual gold medal for his country in the Beijing Olympics 2008.

Asif added that it's a failure of the whole process that Bangladesh is unable to clinch a medal in the Olympics till date.

"I would say it's an overall failure. We need to dream big. And then comes the execution after four years... I think we need a big collaboration between our athletes, officials, BOA, and sponsors, so that we can have a long-term plan for the Olympics and get a good result there.

"We are currently stuck in the middle of dreaming and helping others dream. I think there is a gap between these two for which we can't go ahead."

However, Asif was optimistic that someday they will scale the heights that India has achieved regularly of late, a country where "everything is managed locally" and without reliance on foreign coaches.

"There is a saying that a person gets mature at the age of 40. Our country is still unripe for the Olympics. I think it will take time. But I am hopeful that we can achieve something here as we did in other games like the Commonwealth, SA Games, and Asian Games."

Nadal, Alcaraz play down expectations

AFP, Paris

Rafael Nadal and Carlos Alcaraz know they won't win anything on reputation alone playing together at the Paris Olympics but vowed on Wednesday to do everything in their power to overcome a lack of preparation.

Nadal, the 2008 singles gold medallist, will pair up with Alcaraz in a tennis dream team at Roland Garros, looking to also add to the doubles title he won with close friend Marc Lopez at Rio in 2016.

The 22-time Grand Slam champion was keen to play down expectations though ahead of his final Olympics, with Nadal and Alcaraz teaming up for the first time.

"I understand the fascination, the hope of seeing us play together, (but) let's not think that this translates into success, I think that's a mistake," said the 38-year-old Nadal.

"At the end of the day, Carlos hasn't played much doubles and I haven't played much in either doubles or singles," he said at a Spanish team press conference in the Olympic Village.

Both Nadal and Alcaraz will also compete in the singles at Roland Garros, where Nadal has won the French Open a record 14 times. Alcaraz captured the title in Paris for the first time last month.

"We're going to give our all to try and at least leave with the peace of mind of having done everything possible," added Nadal.

Alcaraz said it was "a dream" to be able to make his Olympic debut in doubles alongside Nadal.

He too sounded a note of caution and insisted their star power was no guarantee of a medal.

"What I can say is that we're going to do give the best of ourselves... with great enthusiasm, let's hope we can enjoy it and play well," said Alcaraz, who beat Novak Djokovic again in this year's Wimbledon final.

Sagorika hattrick saves Bangladesh's blushes

SPORTS REPORTER

Young forward Mosammat Sagorika came off the bench and scored a hattrick as Bangladesh women's football team came back from a goal down to beat Bhutan 5-1 in the first of two FIFA friendly matches in Thimphu last night.

The best player and top scorer of the SAFF Women's U-19 Championship, which was held in Dhaka in February this year, scored the equaliser early in the second half before adding two more goals late in the game as Bangladesh avoided a potential banana skin at the Changlimthang Stadium in Bhutan's capital.

It was the first victory under British coach Peter Butler, who saw his side suffer 4-0 and a 1-0 defeats against Chinese Taipei at home in his first assignment in May-June.

Buttler was full of praise of the young forward as she changed the game on its head after Bangladesh had conceded a sloppy girl in the first half and failed to mount a challenge against a side 23 places below them in FIFA ranking.

"Sagorika is a special talent. We've been warming her in the wings. The style of football that we want to play really suits her because she's very quick over 5-10-15 metres," Butler said at the post-match press conference.

Bangladesh conceded their first ever goal against the South Asian minnows – having gone 20-0 in the previous four matches -- in the 13th minute of the game when Bhutan captain Pema Tshering profited from some disastrous communication error between Bangladesh goalkeeper Rupna Chakma and the defence.

"We made a few sloppy errors, mistakes – self-inflicted. I think at times we tried to play in areas where there wasn't really on to play," the coach said, adding that he made some tactical changes in the second half after "a bit of prompting from the team management."

While Bangladesh turned things around in the second half with veteran skipper Sabina Khatun and winger Ritu Porna Chakma also getting on the scoresheet, they also wasted a few more chances late in the game.

Butler felt his side 'lacked cutting edge in the first half' and could not gauge the opposition's style of play.

"I think we misunderstood a team who play very different to what we play. They're big and strong and they play very direct. We work on more passing movement pattern," Butler said.

The British coach, however, was pleased with the result.

"Pleased with the outcome. It's one game down but we've got one more game and it could possibly be a completely different team. A younger team for the second game," said Butler.

The second match will be held at the same venue on July 27.

Bangladesh wicket-keeper batter Mushfiqur Rahim plays volleyball with teammates yesterday during the national team's practice camp at the Zahur Ahmed Chowdhury Stadium in Chattogram ahead of the Tigers' Pakistan tour. Mushfiqur arrived three hours before the scheduled starting time of the training session and trained for six hours. The 37-year-old will feature in a two-day practice match, starting today at the same venue.

UAE did not impose restrictions on visas

Foreign minister says UN logos were not erased from vehicles by mistake

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The United Arab Emirates has not imposed any visa restrictions on Bangladeshi migrants, Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud confirmed yesterday.

"We saw news in the media that the UAE has restricted visas for Bangladeshis. This is absolutely incorrect. Those who broadcast the news did not do the right thing. They should have verified the information before broadcasting the news because the issue is very sensitive," he said.

Some media outlets on Tuesday reported that the UAE restricted visas for Bangladeshis over the protest by a group of Bangladeshi expatriates in the UAE.

He said 57 Bangladeshi expatriates were handed lengthy prison sentences for demonstration that is banned in the Gulf country.

The minister was briefing reporters at the State Guesthouse Padma on the diplomats' visit to the state properties,

'Mockery of justice'

Says HRW about punishment of 57 Bangladeshi protesters in UAE

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Human Rights Watch yesterday condemned the harsh punishment meted out to the 57 Bangladeshis by the UAE following peaceful demonstrations.

On July 19, groups of mostly Bangladeshi nationals who live in the UAE carried out peaceful protests in multiple locations across the country in solidarity with the student protesters in Bangladesh.

The following day, the UAE's attorney general announced an investigation into the protests and just a day later, the Abu Dhabi Federal Court of Appeal gave life-term prison sentences to three Bangladeshi nationals.

It sentenced one Bangladeshi national to 11 years in prison and 53 to 10 years, according to the Emirates News Agency.

The court ordered the defendants to be deported upon completing their terms and their electronic devices seized.

The egregiously long sentences appear to have come after only one court session and within 24 hours, the HRW said.

The speed with which dozens of defendants were investigated, tried and convicted raises serious concerns about

Sramik League leader 'offered' driver money to torch buses

Arrested driver tells court

FM MIZANUR RAHMAN, Ctg

The president of Chattogram's Baizid Bostami thana Sramik League allegedly made a "verbal contract" with a human-hauler driver, promising him Tk 4 lakh if he could torch five buses inside the Bangladesh Road Transport Corporation depot in Hathazari upazila's Baluchara area.

Driver Sohel Rana said this in a confessional statement made to Chattogram Judicial Magistrate Awlad Mohammad Junaid on Tuesday.

The case was filed with Hathazari Police Station in connection with an arson case.

Police arrested Didarul Alam Didar, the Sramik League president, and Sohel Rana after BRTC Chattogram's manager Zulfikar filed the case on Sunday accusing an

NARSINGDI JAIL ATTACK

How it all unfolded

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narsingdi

It was around 3:30pm on July 19.

At least 3,000 people were gathered at Narsingdi's Velanagar intersection, a few yards from the district jail.

The day before (Thursday), two student protesters were killed in police firing in the same area.

Around 3:45pm on Friday, police lobbed teargas shells at the gathering from the main entrance of the jail. The agitators initially retreated slightly.

By 4:15pm, they chased away the police, who had to flee through the jail's southern entrance, giving the mob an opportunity to take control of the jail building.

Once they took control, they resorted to vandalism and arson inside, leading to the escape of all 836 prisoners.

The Daily Star spoke to five inmates who surrendered, nine witnesses and four jail guards.

A 26-year-old witness, who preferred anonymity, told this correspondent, "Around 2:00pm, the attackers first vandalised 7-8 CCTV cameras installed in the area. As time passed, the number of agitators grew. By 3:30-4:00pm, there were over 2,000 of them in the area as locals had joined in.

"Some cops threw teargas shells at them from the north gate or main entrance of the district jail. After retreating a little, around 4:15pm, they chased the police away. Taking advantage of this, they took control of the jail building and vandalised it. They also set motorcycles on fire."

Jibon Mia, a 25-year-old inmate from Alokbali Union, said, "Around 5:00-6:00pm, we heard sounds of gunfire and explosions. It was very hot and we were locked in our rooms. Then when hundreds of people came near our cells and began setting things on fire, a jail guard unlocked our doors. We then fled."

Several freed inmates said hundreds of crude bombs were detonated, adding that some of them were reluctant to leave but were forced out by the mob.

> Several freed inmates said hundreds of crude bombs were detonated, adding that some of them were reluctant to leave but were forced out by the mob.

Abdul Ahad, another prisoner from Karimpur area, said, "The attackers set our cell on fire. Some people broke the lock and forced us out by beating us, even though many of us didn't want to leave."

Khokon Chandra Sarkar, officer-in-charge of Narsingdi's Detective Branch of police, said, there were six Hiaces [microbuses] waiting in the Chinishpur area near the jail building. "We are suspecting those were stationed there to carry the escaped inmates away."

According to the Narsingdi's superintendent of police and the jail authorities, all of the 826 inmates either escaped or were forced to.

Meanwhile, 85 weapons, 9,000 bullets, and official documents were looted. Additionally, 15 spots on the jail premises, including offices and residences of the jail supers and the jailer, as well as the guards' quarters and vehicles used for jail operations, were set ablaze.

Judicial body to only probe deaths of 6

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Justice Khandaker Diliruzzaman-led judicial commission will only probe the deaths of six people during the quota protest on July 16.

The commission will visit the scenes once the situation becomes normal and will seek information from citizens about the deaths and violence that took place between July 5 and 16.

People will be able to provide the commission with information directly or by email and registered posts until August 6, Justice Diliruzzaman told journalists after a meeting with some executive and judicial officers at the Supreme Court auditorium yesterday afternoon.

"We [commission] will work in accordance with the terms of reference where the issues of six persons [deaths] have been mentioned. The following incidents [of deaths] took place after the gazette notification [forming the

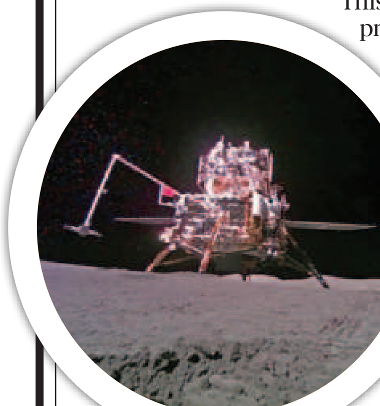
Chinese Moon probe finds water in soil samples

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

Chinese scientists have found a mineral "enriched" with water in lunar soil samples returned from the Moon by the Chang'e 5 mission.



This discovery "revealed the presence of trace water" from a "much higher latitude" than any previous missions and could power future missions to the Moon amid an ongoing "space race" between the US and China.

Researchers from the Chinese Academy of Sciences found that "water molecules can persist in sunlit areas of the Moon in the form of hydrated salts".

The findings, published recently in the journal Nature Astronomy, offer fresh clues about the chemical and physical form of Moon water, an advance that could shape how minerals are extracted for rocket fuel on the lunar surface.

While samples brought back by Apollo astronauts decades earlier suggested the Moon was likely completely dry, recent discoveries suggest the Earth's closest neighbour indeed has reservoirs of water.

HC rejects Prof Yunus' plea to scrap charge framing

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday summarily rejected a petition filed by Nobel laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus and six other officials of Grameen Telecom, challenging a Dhaka court's order on framing charges against them in a case.

The case was filed by the Anti-Corruption Commission on May 30 last year against Dr Yunus and 13 others on charges of misappropriating about Tk 25.22 crore of Grameen Telecom Workers' Profit Participation Fund and money laundering.

Yesterday, the HC also ordered the lower court concerned to finish the trial of the case in next one year.

Broadband restored on trial

Mobile internet still off, says Palak

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government yesterday restored broadband internet on a trial basis across the country.

However, mobile internet will remain suspended for now.

All internet services were shut down on July 18 amid widespread violence centring the quota reform protests. On Tuesday night, broadband internet services were partially restored in selected areas.

Zunaid Ahmed Palak, state minister for telecom and ICT, said efforts are on to restore mobile internet and they might be able to do so by Sunday or Monday. He said they would hold meetings with the Association of Mobile Telecom Operators of Bangladesh on Friday and Saturday.

He made the comments at a press conference at the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission in Dhaka yesterday. Before that, he held a meeting with International Internet Gateway operators.

Asked about people's complaints of slow internet since its partial restoration on Tuesday night, Palak blamed it on technical issues.

However, those involved in the restoration process, requesting anonymity, said the telecom regulatory body has instructed the IIG operators to block some social media platforms.

Besides, the government instructed the internet service providers to shut down their cache servers, which speed up frequently accessed data, they said, adding that it slowed down some key services.

Asked when people can access social media platforms, Palak said they are taking experts' advice on the issue.

Trauma, pain etched on their faces

Limbs of several injured had to be amputated after gunshot wounds

AHMED DEEPTO

Lying in a hospital bed, teary-eyed Md Rifat was staring at his right leg, rather where his right leg used to be. He could not look away.

The 10th grader of Badda Alatunnessa Higher Secondary School was shot around 10:00am on July 19 while he went out of his home to see what was going on in Rampura.

He had two surgeries. His leg was amputated from the knee.

"I don't know whether I will be able to go to school again," Rifat said softly at the Casualty Ward-2 of the National Institute of Traumatology and Orthopaedic Rehabilitation (Nitor).

He was struggling to hold back his tears as he recalled the life-changing incident.

"I just wanted to see what was going on in my neighbourhood. I didn't go there to protest ... I was having a sherbet near the Rampura U-loop, suddenly a bullet hit my right leg, and I fell to the ground."

In the same ward, Imran Sarkar, a fourth-year student of philosophy at Dhaka College, was without his left leg. He was shot during a clash between the demonstrators and police in Rayerbazar area on July 19 afternoon.

"I was returning home after offering Juma prayers ... All of a sudden, a bullet hit my left leg and I passed out," said Imran.

'Play your part to bring the culprits to justice'

PM urges people

UNB, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said the people of the country must come forward to make sure that the perpetrators of the recent violence face trial and punishment.

"They [people] have to try the culprits. I am seeking justice from them," she said after visiting the vandalised metro rail station at Mirpur-10 in the morning.

Hasina said everyone involved in metro rail construction is now in tears after witnessing such destruction.

"Why did they do this? I am working tirelessly to improve the living standard of the people and I have done this. No one can deny it now."

Andaleeve, David Hasanat arrested

At least 4,784 held in last 6 days

STAR REPORT

Police arrested Bangladesh Jatiya Party (Manju) Chairman Andaleeve Rahman Partho and top businessman KM Rezaul Hasanat David in a countrywide crackdown that saw the arrest of at least 4,784 over the last six days.

Besides, the BNP said Shahiduddin Chowdhury Anne, joint secretary general of the party, was picked up by the Detective Branch of police from Elephant Road area around 4:30pm.

David Hasanat

Detectives arrested Andaleeve at his Gulshan home around 1:00am, and a Dhaka court later placed him on a five-day remand.

He and David, founding chairman and CEO of major garment exporter Viyellatex Group, were accused in a case filed over an arson attack on Setu Bhaban in Dhaka on July 18.

According to the Viyellatex website, David is a well known businessman and his company has diversified businesses ranging from end-to-end apparel solution to tea, engineering and power generation. It employs over 300 management staff and over 15,000 workers.

Social media off-limits indefinitely

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladeshi social media users are unlikely to get uninterrupted access to the platforms anytime soon as the government has put in strict blocking mechanisms until the tech companies comply with its demands.

The international internet gateway (IIG) operators were instructed to block Facebook, the most popular app in the country with about 5.5 crore users, from the gateway devices by the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission, The Daily Star has learnt from people with knowledge of the matter.

Meta's other platforms such as Messenger and WhatsApp and ByteDance's TikTok -- the most popular social media and instant messaging apps -- are on top of the block list, they said.

Social media platforms, especially Facebook and YouTube, have not been complying with Bangladesh's laws, said Zunaid Ahmed Palak, the state minister for ICT, on Wednesday.

"They are also not taking into account the situation on the ground, violating their policy guidelines... Amid this, who

'End crackdown on protesters, lift all curbs'

Urge UN rights chief, Amnesty, US, Canada

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The UN and Amnesty International yesterday urged the Bangladesh government to respect the right to protest, end violent crackdown on protesters and immediately lift all communication restrictions.

In separate statements, they also called for impartial, independent and transparent investigations into all alleged human rights violations during the recent violence in the country.

In a statement released in Geneva, UN Human Rights chief Volker Türk called on the government to urgently disclose full details about last week's crackdown on protests amid growing accounts of horrific violence.

"The government must provide the details of those killed, injured, or detained for the benefit of their families," he said.

The rights chief also offered his office's support in probing the alleged human rights violations.

He also urged the government to ensure that all operations of law enforcement agencies are conducted strictly in line with international human rights norms and standards, particularly regarding the policing of protests.

"This is important to begin to rebuild gravely damaged public trust and create an environment conducive to public dialogue on the underlying concerns that led to this wave of violence," reads the statement.

Latest reports indicate that more than 170 people were killed and over a thousand injured -- some of whom were denied medical care

Akash

As the July 20 mayhem centring on quota protest escalated on Dhaka-Chattogram road in Narayanganj, Mohammad Akash, 19, pulled down the shutters and locked the glass doors of the sweetshop, where he worked, to save his life.

But law enforcers broke open the shutters and the glass door and shot him anyway from close range to his left knee, he told The Daily Star.

Akash, a storekeeper of Bikrampur Mishtanno Bhandar, will now be a cripple man for the rest of his life, as doctors had to amputate his left leg on Tuesday.

Akash worked at the shop for the last two and a half years, That Saturday he was in charge of safeguarding the establishment.

"Police forcibly entered the shop, breaking all the doors," says Akash.

They accused him of concealing his identity and being involved in violence. Akash says he repeatedly denied these allegations, but police mistook him as a troublemaker trying to hide in the shop.

Nine hour curfew break from 8:00am in Dhaka, 3 other dists

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government has decided that the ongoing nationwide curfew will continue until further notice.

Curfew will be imposed in Dhaka, Narsingdi, Narayanganj and Gazipur today and tomorrow with a nine-hour pause from 8:00am.

The decision on the curfew in other districts will be taken by the deputy commissioners concerned.

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan said this after a one-hour meeting with the law enforcement agencies at his residence in the capital yesterday.

He said they will make a decision tomorrow about continuing the curfew on Sunday.

The minister said their drives against those involved in vandalism, setting fire to state properties, and killing police personnel and the PS of former Gazipur city mayor Jahangir Alam will continue.

TK 187CR EMBEZZLEMENT CASE

Sonali Life Insurance's ex-chairman, family sued

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Corruption Commission (ACC) yesterday filed a case against eight people, including the former chairman of Sonali Life Insurance Mostafa Golam Quddus, six of his family members, and one relative, over the embezzlement of Tk 187 crore.

Apart from Quddus, his wife Fazlutun Nesa, two daughters Fauzia Kamrun Tania and Tasnia Kamrun Anika, son Mostafa Quamrus Sobhan, Sobhan's wife Safia Sobhan Chowdhury, and relative Noor-e-Hafza, all of whom were former members in the board of directors have been named as defendants in the case.

The other accused is Tania's husband Mir Rashed Bin Aman, former chief financial officer and chief executive officer of the company.

The case was filed under the Anti-Corruption Commission Act-2004, ACC Public Relations Officer Aktarul Islam told The Daily Star.

Raqibul Hayat, an assistant director at ACC, filed the case, he said.

According to the case statement, the accused illegally withdrew Tk 187 crore from Sonali Life Insurance using forged documents.

Later, the money was transferred to different companies and bank accounts owned by them.

The case was filed against them for committing crimes punishable under sections 409, 420, 467, 468, 471, and 109 of the Penal Code and section 4 (2) and (3) of the Money Laundering Prevention Act, 2012.

Russian drones attack Ukraine port for a second night

AFP, Kyiv

Russian drones attacked the southern Ukrainian port city of Izmail for a second straight night damaging infrastructure, Kyiv said yesterday, claiming several Russian attack drones entered Romanian airspace.

Moscow has repeatedly targeted ports in the southern Odesa region since it exited an accord last year brokered by the United Nations and Turkey allowing Ukraine to export grain via the Black Sea.

Local authorities in Izmail said "port infrastructure facilities were damaged" and two civilians were wounded.

The Ukrainian air force said Russia had launched 38 Iranian-designed attack drones and that air defence systems had downed 25.

"Another three Shaheds were lost after crossing the state border with Romania," it said.

The governor of the Odesa region, which borders EU and NATO member Romania, said the attack had damaged an administrative building.

Three people were wounded in a Russian attack one day earlier on Izmail, local authorities had said.

Romania conducted searches for "possible objects fallen" on its territory for a second day yesterday, the country's defence ministry said.

Eyewitnesses, including Raju Hossain, the storeowner, and others present corroborated Akash's version, confirming his occupation as a dedicated worker, not associated with any protests or unlawful activities.

But the police refused to accept these assurances and all of a sudden one of them just shot Akash in the left knee causing him to crumple to the floor. Profusely bleeding and in excruciating pain, Akash was rushed by his family from one hospital to the other, in a desperate attempt to save his leg.

According to Akash's father Dulal Miah, one private hospital agreed to take him in and took Tk 2 lakh to treat him, promising to save his leg. "But they couldn't and ultimately, Aksah was sent to NITOR [Pangu hospital] and the leg had to be amputated," he said.

Akash was all set to go to Saudi Arabia for work hoping to end his family's financial woes. A single gunshot ended that dream for good.

"Now, all financial resources intended for his future abroad are being drained because of the medical expenses for his treatment," says Akash's father.

The family has already spent Tk 3 lakh on medical bills, including Tk 35 thousand for blood transfusions, depleting their savings. The future looks bleak and uncertain for them.

Akash, lying helplessly in the hospital bed could not reconcile with the fact that he had become disabled for life. "What will I do now?" he asks, "Should I beg in the streets?"

He may even have to forgo his meagre salary of Tk 7,500 from the store as he struggles with the devastating physical and emotional toll of his ordeal.

As Akash's family seeks justice and financial aid for an artificial leg, the incident has ignited widespread condemnation in his community.

Trauma, pain etched on their faces

When he regained consciousness, he found himself in the hospital bed.

"How will I walk again?" he said before bursting into tears.

He had another surgery yesterday afternoon.

At Nitor, Rifat and Imran are among eight people who lost their limbs after being shot during the recent violence. Of them, six lost their legs while two lost arms.

According to the hospital authorities, 238 patients with gunshot wounds, sustained between July 18 and July 22, had treatment at the hospital. Some of them have been discharged.

Doctors there feared they may not be able to save the limbs of a number of patients under treatment.

Md Mamun, a trucker from Bhairab in Kishoreganj, was lying in a bed of Casualty Ward-1 on Wednesday.

The 30-year-old was brutally hacked when he was heading to Bhairab from Dhaka on July 19 afternoon.

"I was caught in the middle of a clash. There was gunfire all around me. As I got down from the truck for safety, some people got hold of me and attacked me with knives. I don't know them," he told this correspondent on Wednesday.

He had seven stitches on his left hand. However, his right hand bore several marks of stabs that became infected.

"The doctors told me there is no other option but to amputate my right hand. How will I drive without my right hand?" Mamun said.

Doctors yesterday had to amputate his right hand, his family members told this paper.

During a visit to the hospital on Wednesday, this correspondent found 34 patients with gunshot wounds still under treatment at Casualty Ward-2.

Seven of them were shot in their arms and 26 in their legs.

The air was heavy with the cries of patients and their relatives. Some were looking for certain types of blood.

Many of them said they were running out of money since they had spent a lot to travel to Dhaka and had been to multiple hospitals before getting to Nitor.

Kazi Shamim Uzzaman, director of Nitor, said all the patients admitted there underwent surgeries and some had multiple surgeries.

"Even after surgeries, some of them still have bullets in their bodies," the director said.

The country witnessed unprecedented violence centring the quota reform demonstration. The non-violent movement turned violent after Chhatra League men attacked agitating students at Dhaka University and some other universities on July 15.

The violence escalated further in the following days after several students were killed in clashes. The government eventually imposed a nationwide curfew and deployed the armed forces.

According to the count of The Daily Star, since July 16, at least 156 people, including three police personnel, were killed. Several thousand were wounded in clashes between agitators and law enforcers, who were aided allegedly by ruling party activists.

The death toll may rise as The Daily Star could not reach many hospitals in Dhaka and elsewhere where many critically injured were taken for treatment. Also, many friends and families reportedly took the bodies of their loved-ones from the scenes and this newspaper could not contact them. The Daily Star's count of the death toll is based solely on hospital and police sources.

Andaleeve, David Hasanat arrested

David, who is accused of financing the perpetrators, was also placed on a five-day remand by the court.

On Wednesday and yesterday, 1,367 were arrested in the country including 829 people in the capital; 254 of them were produced before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court, Dhaka in 72 cases.

According to data, 3,417 were arrested previously.

At least 302 people were arrested on Wednesday and Thursday in 18 districts in 164 cases in which 2,148 named and 73,520 unnamed people were accused.

Besides, Rab arrested 228 across the country including 55 in Dhaka on the same charges, Rab said.

DB Inspector Abu Sayeed Miah, who is investigating the case filed over arson attack on Setu Bhaban, wrote in the remand application that Andaleeve expressed solidarity with the students who protested for quota reform and he was involved in arson at Setu Bhaban.

David played an active role in financing the students' movement, added the officer.

Andaleeve told the court he was innocent while David's lawyer said his client was abroad from July 13 to July 23, but didn't show any document in support of the alibi.

Upon hearing both sides, the magistrate turned down the defence pleas and placed them on remand.

Yesterday, another Dhaka court placed seven BNP leaders, including Saiful Alam Nirob, on a five-day remand in the same case.

On July 18, nearly 250-300 unidentified people stormed the Setu Bhaban, vandalised many vehicles, motorbikes, and ransacked different sheds and rooms. They later set those on fire.

At a press briefing, DMP Additional Commissioner (DB) Harun-or-Rashid said an arrested Juba Dal leader of Gaibandha Nure Alam Siddique Piton received a message from "high-ups" in London that if they can kill a Chhatra League member, the killer would receive Tk 5,000 and to kill a policeman, he would receive Tk 10,000.

Harun claimed that Piton engaged his brother-in-law Abdul Aziz to make this plan successful. In this regard, the BNP-Jamaat-Shibir men carried out vandalism and arson in Uttara and Abdullahpur areas, the DMP DB chief claimed.

Another DMP official, wishing anonymity, said police are identifying those involved in the violence and sabotage by analysing intelligence information and CCTV footage.

Palak could not be reached for comment.

Meanwhile, internet speed improved yesterday as the BTRC instructed the IIG operators to open the majority of cache servers that host Google content, such as YouTube videos and Google search results.

Besides, users will not experience free flow internet as traffic is going through deep packet inspection (DPI) through the Department of Telecommunications equipment placed previously in the IIG's system, according to people informed with the proceedings.

The DPI works like a security guard checking the contents passing through a checkpoint.

While the government and the BTRC maintained that the internet shutdown occurred due to an attack on the data centres in the capital's Mohakhali, people with knowledge of the matter said the outage was ordered by the government.

The Daily Star has visited the data centres in question and found no sign of damage to the building that housed them.

Officials of the data centres also confirmed that there was no fire in the building. However, the Department of Disaster Management (DDM) opposite the building was torched and that fire partially damaged some overheard cables connected to the data centres.

On July 17, Palak ordered the shutdown of mobile internet "in light of the current unrest in the country and to stop the spread of fake news on social media".

The next day, the DDM building was torched.

Around 8:00pm, officials of the Internet Service Providers Association of Bangladesh said the fire might have cut 30-40 percent of the bandwidth supply, leaving some users disconnected and many with slow internet.

An hour later, the entire Bangladesh was without internet.

The government reopened broadband internet in selected areas on July 23 and restored connections on a trial basis nationwide the next day.

However, mobile internet, used by around 14 crore subscribers, continues to be offline.

She said the infrastructures that provided services, comfort, and convenience to the people have been destroyed.

The premier said the government had to overcome so many obstacles to construct the metro rail and the job was completed ahead of schedule.

The metrorail eased the suffering of the people who earlier had to spend hours in traffic jams, she said, adding that the metro rail and its services are of international standard.

"But what a grave scene of destruction I have seen here! It is unbelievable that people of this country can do this."

Hasina accused the BNP-Jamaat of taking the advantage of the students' quota reform protests to unleash destruction.

She said she has done everything over the last 15 years for the welfare and happiness of the people.

"Who are the beneficiaries of the development? It is the mass people of the country. Why is there so much anger about the metro rail? That is my question."

The premier said the government made highest efforts to convince the quota reform protesters that the matter was in court and the government was doing its best to get a result that would not disappoint them.

"But they did not agree to have patience till the delivery of the verdict by the apex court. They are pressing their demands still now. At first it was one-point demand but now it is eight-point demand."

Hasina said a situation was created to give the BNP-Jamaat the opportunity to carry out the mayhem.

"Who are the worst sufferers? I don't know how long it would take to restore the metro rail stations."

The PM inspected different parts of the station.

Senior officials of the Dhaka Mass Transit Company Limited (DMTCL) briefed Hasina about the destruction and the plan to reopen the Mirpur-10 and Kazipara stations.

Some unidentified people went on a rampage at the two metro stations on July 18 during demonstrations by students demanding reform of the quota system in government jobs.

Metro rail services were suspended that day.

End crackdown

-- and many are missing following protests by students and youth movements against government policies, the statement says.

The rights chief also urged the authorities to provide a guarantee that there would be no reprisals against those involved in the protests.

He emphasised longer-term, comprehensive security sector reform to prevent future abuses and safeguard the rights to freedom of expression, peaceful assembly and association.

He called on the government to restore full internet access to allow all people, including journalists and media outlets, to communicate freely and in line with international law.

He hoped the Supreme Court's decision on Sunday, which allowed 7 percent of quota in government jobs, would help to open a space for confidence-building, leading to meaningful and inclusive dialogues to address underlying issues and grievances.

He appealed to all political actors to avoid any statements or actions that could constitute incitement to violence or lead to a further crackdown on dissent.

Meanwhile, Deprose Muchena, a senior director at Amnesty International, yesterday urged the Bangladesh government to "lift shoot-on-sight orders, fully restore internet access across the country and end the use of army and paramilitary forces in the policing of protests".

The rights group released the second part of its evidence analysis series on Bangladesh's quota-reform protest yesterday.

The authorities must also guarantee that shoot-on-sight orders and internet shutdowns will not be used in the future to suppress protests, Muchena said.

He said these repressive measures are a deliberate attempt to crush both these protests and any future dissent.

Amnesty citing media reports said there have been at least 2,500 arrests, nearly 200 deaths and several thousand injuries since the protests turned deadly on July 16.

At least 61,000 people have been charged over the recent violence, said the rights group.

In its evidence analysis, Amnesty said Bangladesh authorities cracked down on protesters, deployed armed forces, declared a curfew and issued a shoot-on-sight order during a six-day communication curb period starting from July 18.

Amnesty said it has verified videos of three incidents of "unlawful use of lethal and less lethal weapons" by law enforcement agencies while policing the protests.

The rights group said a video clip circulating on social media since July 20 shows an officer firing an assault rifle.

The seven-second video verified by Amnesty International was filmed in front of a bank on DIT Road in Rampura of Dhaka.

It shows several officers from the Bangladesh Police and Border Guard Bangladesh standing alongside an APC.

"One of the officers points a Chinese type 56-1 assault rifle towards off-screen targets and fires two rounds," Amnesty said.

Firearms are not an appropriate tool for the policing of assemblies; they must only be used when strictly necessary to confront an imminent threat of death or serious injury, it added.

Muchena said an independent and impartial investigation into all human rights violations committed by security forces must urgently be conducted and all those found responsible must be held fully accountable.

"Victims of unlawful police use of force, including those who have been injured and family members of those who have been killed, must also receive full reparations from the state," he said.

Meanwhile, US State Department Spokesperson Matthew Miller said the US is exploring all options to ensure the safety of US personnel in Dhaka, including authorising voluntary departure of nonemergency personnel and family members at the US embassy.

In a briefing on Wednesday in Washington, he said they want the people of Bangladesh to be able to exercise their fundamental freedoms but condemn violence by any protester who has turned their peaceful exercises simply into an excuse for violence.

"We continue to urge both protesters, private citizens, and the government to refrain from violence."

Meanwhile, Canada called on the government to hold those responsible for the violence accountable.

"We will continue monitoring the situation in Bangladesh," said the Canadian High Commission in a statement yesterday.

'PM to take responsibility of their families'

Says Quader on people who died in recent unrest

BSS, Dhaka

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday said Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina will take responsibility of the families of the people killed in the recent nationwide unrest.

"A committee has been formed for investigation and every culprit will be brought to book," he said while addressing a coordination meeting with the ward leaders of AL Dhaka north unit at AL district office in the capital's Tejgaon.

The minister said BNP-Jamaat carried out the arson centring the quota reform movement.

He said AL will stand beside the families of the deceased and injured.

"The foreigners became astonished to see the nationwide destructive activities carried out by BNP-Jamaat. They carried out the vandalism after bringing their terrorists, like in 2014," he added.

GRAMEEN KALYAN

HC verdict on two petitions July 30

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday fixed July 30 for delivering verdicts on two separate writ petitions that challenged the NBR orders over the reassessment of around Tk 600 crore as income tax from Grameen Kalyan for different tax years.

Grameen Kalyan is a nonprofitable and charitable organisation founded by Nobel laureate Professor Muhammad Yunus.

Yesterday, the HC bench of Justice Muhammad Khurshid Alam Sarkar and Justice SM Maniruzzaman set July 30 as the date for delivering judgement after concluding the hearing on the matters.

Senior lawyer Sarder Jinnat Ali appeared for Grameen Kalyan while Assistant Attorney General Tahmina Poly argued for the state.

people, who died at point blank shooting or at their own home or rooftop, who were not in the protest be held accountable.

"On the other hand, the judicial commission will only investigate the six death incidents that happened on July 16. So, are the rest of the lives worthless? Should we accept dying by bullets at home and accept it as regular normal events?" TIB executive director added.

He also questioned the recent arrests and charges against the protesters and called upon the government not to turn it into a "festivity" of arrest and harassing people.

Citing media reports, TIB said the students who participated in the peaceful quota reformation protests are constantly under the fear of arrest, abduction, and physical-mental torture.

"The responsible ones of the government, including the ministers, have admitted that no student has been involved in any atrocities. Despite this, illegal abduction of the students by the law enforcement agencies is nothing but a total disregard for the constitutional right to civilian protest and movement," said Iftekharuzzaman.

The anti-corruption watchdog also called upon the government to immediately stop repressive measures against the students and announce acceptance of all the students' legitimate demands.

In addition, TIB called for holding a dialogue with the full group of coordinators of the student movement to develop a mutually agreed road map for enforcement of the government's commitments.

He also said the shutting down of internet to repress the movement is a suicidal decision. TIB urged the government to immediately resume the internet service of mobile and broadband in full swing to revive trade and commerce and ensure the free flow of information.

The organisation said the arson attacks, which took place at important government establishments, raised questions on the respective government institutions' capabilities, preparedness, and integrity in safeguarding those establishments.

The TIB called upon the government to take corrective lessons from the prevailing crisis.

patients at DMCH from July 19 to July 21.

Dr Rezwan, who worked with Rhythm Blood Centre at DMCH, said, "Bullet-hit patients experience acute blood loss due to external bleeding and internal hemorrhage. Even to this date, many patients are in need of blood transfusion at DMCH.

Due to excessive need of blood from July 19 to July 21, blood transfusion of previously admitted patients could not be done on time."

Now, blood transfusion of regular patients, which have been rescheduled, and those with bullet-injuries, who have recently gone through surgeries, are being done, said officials.

A long queue of blood donors and relatives of patients was seen in front of DMCH's blood bank and blood transfusion centre in the last couple of days. To tackle the crisis, the hospital authority has opened blood exchange provision for the patients in need of blood.

A notice in front of the blood transfusion centre reads, "To ensure availability of blood for all patients, according to the directives of the director of DMCH, we would like to inform that from 16/07/24, if you do not find donors that match your patient's blood group, you can collect blood for your patient from the blood bank by donating a bag of blood of any group."

A duty doctor at the transfusion centre said, "Thanks to the donors and volunteers, we don't have a blood crisis anymore. But we are going through an excessive workload. We are working day and night to serve our patients."

Madrasa teacher Mohammed Osman is one such victim.

A bullet hit him while he was seeking shelter in a warehouse to escape the violence around 6:30pm on Friday at Rowshan's boarding area in Chattogram. "Cops shot me while I was running away from them," Osman claimed.

He was on his way to a mosque from his house for prayers.

Mukleshur Rahman, deputy commissioner of Chattogram Metropolitan Police (north division), told The Daily Star that he was not aware of such an incident. "There was no instruction to open fire during clashes," he claimed.

Another injured victim, Mohammed Akash, was shot while he was going to work from his home after lunch on Friday, July 19.

The 17-year-old is still having difficulties speaking due to a bullet wound in his abdomen. "We are a low-income family and do not have enough money to bear the expenses of my son's treatment," his father, Mohammed Anam, said.

He claimed that he was not receiving all the necessary medicine from the hospital. "I have to buy medicine from a shop to treat my son," he added.

However, Brig Gen Taslim Uddin, director of CMCH, said they are providing all facilities, including medicine, to victims of quota reform protests as instructed by the health department.

His daughter Fatema said, "My father did not engage in any violent activities. During the clashes across the city, he stayed at home. We came to the court in the morning but failed to see him."

Fatema's aunt said, "The family has no money or food at home. How will they survive?"

Yesterday, like them, over a hundred relatives of those arrested in the ongoing police raids gathered before the CMM court as the curfew remained relaxed from 10:00am to 5:00pm.

Fakhrul demands international probe into deaths

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday demanded an international probe into the casualties centring the students' quota reform protests, saying that the judicial investigation formed by the government is an attempt to cover up the bloodshed.

In a statement, he also demanded proper compensation for the families of those who were killed, including members of the police and Ansar.

The statement was issued condemning the arrest of opposition leaders, including Bangladesh Jatiyo Party Chairman and former MP Andaleeve Rahman Partho. Fakhrul alleged that innocent BNP leaders and activists have been arrested, and their houses raided by law enforcers as part of the government's "evil efforts" to cover up state-sponsored terrorism and shift the blame onto BNP.

Fakhrul said a judicial inquiry committee was formed at the behest of the government solely to investigate the killings of six people.

"It's tantamount to concealing all the killings. So, the people demanded an international investigation into all the incidents of violence and murders," he added. He expressed grief over the killings of members of the policemen and Ansar and conveyed deep sympathy to their family members.

All saboteurs to be brought to book

Says home minister

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Dinajpur

Terming the nationwide arson and violence centring the quota reform protests shocking, Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan Kamal yesterday said every person behind the attacks will be identified and brought to book.

"It's a reminder of past tragedies in the country. The nation is stunned and surprised," he said, adding that all the attacks were carried out by a vested group in a pre-planned manner but law enforcers successfully thwarted their efforts.

The ongoing operation against the saboteurs will continue until all of them are identified, he said while addressing a meeting with law enforcement members and local representatives, arranged at Rangpur Shilpakala Academy.

The minister warned local Awami League leaders and activists to stay alert to foil any kind of anti-state activity.

He further pointed out the weakness of ruling party leaders and activists behind their failure to stop the anarchy and destruction carried out by miscreants.

27 Dhaka city AL units dissolved

Inactivity during quota reform protests blamed

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The committees of 27 units under Dhaka city (north) Awami League was dissolved yesterday following allegations of inactivity during the recent quota reform demonstrations.

These units are part of the Dhaka-13 constituency, which includes Mohammadpur, Adabor and parts of Sher-e-Bangla Nagar area.

The decision was made at a views-exchange meeting held at Mohammadpur Suchona Community Centre last night, sources said.

The meeting was attended by local AL lawmaker and Textiles and Jute Minister Jahangir Kabir Nanak, Dhaka city (north) AL president Sheikh Bazlur Rahman, organising secretary Azizul Haque Rana, and the presidents and general secretaries of the AL's thana and ward units, along with local councillors.

Participants at the meeting accused the activists of failing to take to the streets during the quota protests, despite directives from the AL to form a resistance.

This decision came at a time when senior leaders of the ruling party have publicly acknowledged the organisational weaknesses within the AL. The lack of presence by AL leaders, activists, and associate bodies in many parts of Dhaka city (north and south) during the quota protests highlighted these deficiencies.

According to an AL leader, this dissolution is only the beginning. More units and thana committees in Dhaka may face similar consequences.

Mahbubul Haque passes away

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

Prof Mahbubul Haque, a linguist, essayist, and researcher, passed away at the Dhaka Combined Military Hospital on Wednesday. He was 76.

Dr Haque had been suffering from heart and kidney complications.

A recipient of Ekushey Padak, he retired as a professor from the Bangla Department at Chittagong University.

He left behind his wife, a son, a daughter, and a host of well-wishers who mourn his death.

Dr Anwar Sayeed, a professor in the Bangla Department at CU, said Dr Mahbubul Haque was instrumental in writing textbooks for Bangla language and literature across primary, secondary, and higher secondary levels.

Haque's body will be brought to Chattogram today. His namaz-e-janaza will be held at Jamiatul Falah Mosque after the Juma prayers. Later, he will be laid to rest at the graveyard on the CU campus.

Born on November 3, 1948, in Modhukhali, Faridpur, Mahbubul grew up in Chattogram.

DMCH, volunteers step up to save lives

Hundreds of bullet-hit patients get blood transfusion

MD SHAHNAWAZ KHAN CHANDAN and SHAHEEN MOLLAH

Md Ismail was waiting for passengers in his battery-powered auto-rickshaw in Jatrabari's Kajla area on July 18.

A procession of students demanding quota reform was marching along the road.

Suddenly, police opened fire at the protesters.

Ismail could have just disembarked from his vehicle and run for his life. But he couldn't abandon his auto-rickshaw as he recently bought it using all of his savings.

So, he tried to turn the vehicle around and drive to safety.

But before he could do so, several bullets pierced through his chest, hand and left leg.

He was bleeding so profusely that many thought he had already died. However, when some CNG drivers saw signs of life in his body, they quickly took him to Dhaka Medical College Hospital (DMCH).

According to duty doctors, eight bags of A+ blood had to be collected within two hours to save Ismail's life.

Ismail was only one of hundreds of patients who had received blood transfusion due to bullet wounds during the height of the quota reform protests.

According to an employee of DMCH's blood bank, "From Thursday night [July 18], we started receiving patients with bullet wounds, who were in urgent need of blood transfusion. The influx of patients was so high that we did not have any empty beds left for blood transfusion. Besides, our stocks of transfusion equipment dried up within a few hours."

"We along with some of our workers and doctors made makeshift beds with whatever we had and placed them in the motorcycle garage in front of the Institute of Burn and Plastic Surgery and continued with blood transfusion," he added.

The DMCH authority started to make public announcements with megaphones so that volunteers step up and donate blood to incoming critical patients.

Thanks to the announcements, Sandhani Blood Bank, Rhythm Blood Centre and many people voluntarily came forward to donate blood.

According to Md Agibul Islam, an official of Sandhani Blood Bank stationed at DMCH, "The situation was simply unbelievable. We have seen hundreds of patients with bullet wounds. We have donated 115 bags of blood and donated numerous transfusion equipment. We could not even count the number of transfusion equipment we collected and donated."

"At one point, when we ran out of transfusion equipment at DMCH, we asked for help from common people. Many people purchased transfusion bags and equipment from wherever they could," he added.

Rhythm Blood Centre also donated 388 bags of blood to the

No train operations until 'situation improves'

Says rail minister

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh Railway (BR) will not resume operation of passenger and freight trains until the "situation improves," Railways Minister Zillul Hakim told The Daily Star yesterday.

He, however, could not tell when the situation will improve and railway operations could be resumed.

"...We cannot allow the so-called protesters to destroy our trains, coaches," he said, adding, "All trains will be made operational once the situation is improved."

Rail ministry Secretary Humanun Kabir told The Daily Star and other media on Wednesday that they would resume operation of passenger trains on a very limited scale from yesterday.

But railway authorities on Wednesday night backtracked from the plan and decided not to resume train services.

Asked about the matter, the minister said the secretary might have taken the decision to resume operations "without considering everything".

The minister and BR director general returned to Bangladesh Wednesday evening after a foreign tour.

Agonising wait to see loved ones

People continue to gather at CMM court for a glimpse of arrested family members

EMRUL HASAN BAPPI

Everyone was ready to celebrate Surjo's sixth birthday at his Gopibagh residence on Monday night.

To take part in it, his 20-year-old uncle, Sakib Al Hasan, headed out from his Mir Hazaribagh home early that night.

But the celebration turned into a matter of great distress when the family learned that Sakib, an eleventh grader, got arrested by Wari police while on his way to his sister's house.

Yesterday morning, five of his family members, including Surjo, rushed to the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court in the old part of the city to catch a glimpse of Sakib.

They could not see him till 5:00pm.

While crying for her son on the court premises, Sakib's mother Nur Nahar Begum lost her consciousness around 4:15pm. Ten minutes later, she regained her consciousness while being taken to a hospital.

"Where is my son?" she kept on screaming, "Police arrested my innocent son!"

"He did not do anything. Why was he arrested?" she continued.

Sakib's sister Rumi Akter told The Daily Star, "My brother is an intermediate first-year student in a college at Khilgaon. He did not join any protest. We feel so helpless."

Meanwhile, Sakib's elder brother Sakil, 24, desperately stared at the road in front of the court. Whenever a prison van left the court premises, he looked for Sakib in those.

Not just Sakib's family, many others who thronged the court premises faced a similar ordeal.

When this correspondent asked a sub-inspector working in the court, he said Sakib was sent to jail after police produced him before the court in a violence case filed with Wari Police Station.

He was among 260 arrestees produced before the CMM court yesterday in cases filed centring the recent violence in the city, according to the court record books.

Meanwhile, a seemingly distressed Fatema, 25, along with her two relatives, was waiting in front of the CMM court to see her father Mir Shahadat Hossain.

Stop repressive measures against the students: TIB

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Using force to suppress the recent quota reform protests and the unprecedented death and havoc exacerbated by the wrongdoings of the interested groups during the movement depict acute governance deficits, said Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB) yesterday.

"We have become the witness of a massive loss of lives and mayhem on the state's properties revolving around the movement that has been described as peaceful by the government itself and this situation manifested the acute lack of good governance and accountability," TIB Executive Director Dr Iftekharuzzaman said in a press release issued by the organisation.

TIB also emphasised that peaceful dissent and demonstrations to address demands are constitutional rights, not crimes.

It also mentioned that the peaceful movement with the logical demands suddenly turned into a violent and bloody one due the provocation of the high-level leadership of the government,

The anti-graft watchdog also raised the question whether the individuals responsible for the deaths of

ARITRY'S DEATH

Court orders PBI to probe further

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday ordered Police Bureau of Investigation to conduct further investigation into the case filed against two former teachers of Viqarunnisa Noon School and College for instigating the suicide of ninth-grader Aritry Adhikary in 2018.

The two are former acting principal of the school Nazneen Ferdous and former morning shift in-charge Zinat Akhtar.

Yesterday was the sixth time the court was scheduled to deliver verdict in the case.

Judge Abdullah Al Mamun of Dhaka 12th Additional Metropolitan Sessions Judge's Court issued the order, said the victim's father Dilip Adhikary.

Dilip told The Daily Star that he appeared before the court to hear the judgment but the bench assistant informed him about shifting the date for judgement in the case.

Later, he came to know the judge had ordered further investigation into the case.

"I don't know when I will get justice for the death of my daughter," said Dilip.

The two accused, now on bail, were present at the court during yesterday's hearing.

Aritry was found hanging from the ceiling in her house in the capital's Shantinagar on December 3, 2018, hours after she and her parents were allegedly insulted by some teachers at the school.

The next day, her father filed the case with Paltan Police Station, accusing three teachers of instigating Aritry's suicide.

PATIENTS WITH PELLET, BULLET WOUNDS AT CMCH

Injured, they now stare at bleak future

SIFAYET ULLAH

Mohammed Rubel, a mason by profession, is the sole earning member of his family.

Instead of working, he now lies groaning in severe pain at the casualty unit of Chattogram Medical College Hospital.

His body bore the mark of recent violence -- shotgun pellet wounds in his lower chest -- inflicted during the quota reform protests.

Rubel, a 27-year-old from Rangunia upazila, lives with his five-member family in the Chandgaon area of the port city.

On July 19, around 8:00pm, he found himself caught in a clash between law enforcers, Chhatra League, and protesters in the Bahaddarhat area of the port city. He wasn't involved in the protests, he claimed.

He went outside to pay some bills when he came in the line of fire, he said.

His mother Jasmin Khatun was sitting beside him.

"My son is my only hope. But will he ever return to a normal life? What will happen to us if he doesn't?" she asked.

Rubel's case is one among many.

Alauddin Talukder, sub-inspector of Chattogram district police attached to CMCH, reported that eight individuals, including Rubel, are currently undergoing treatment at the hospital with bullet and pellet wounds. "They are now out of danger," Talukder said.

On Friday alone, 72 people with bullet and pellet wounds sought treatment at CMCH.

Over 30 injured individuals were admitted on Thursday, and five more on Saturday, according to Talukder.

Richest 1pc gained $42tn in a decade

Says Oxfam

AFP, Paris

The world's richest one percent increased their fortunes by a total of $42 trillion over the past decade, Oxfam said yesterday, ahead of a G20 summit in Brazil where taxing the super-rich tops the agenda.

Despite this windfall, taxes on the rich had plummeted to "historic lows", the NGO added, warning of "obscene levels" of inequality with the rest of the world "left to scrap for crumbs".

Brazil has made international cooperation on taxing the super-rich a priority of its presidency of the G20.

At this week's summit in Rio de Janeiro, the group's finance ministers are expected to make progress on ways to raise levies on the ultra-wealthy and prevent billionaires from dodging tax systems.

Time to pass torch to 'new generation'

Says Biden in a historic Oval Office speech

REUTERS, Washington

President Joe Biden on Wednesday said abandoning his reelection campaign and endorsing his vice president, Kamala Harris, as the Democratic candidate was the best way to unite the country and save democracy, despite his ambition to win a second term.

Biden's announcement to end his presidential bid on Sunday followed a disastrous June debate with Donald Trump, which exacerbated questions about his ability to defeat the Republican candidate, or to serve another four years if he succeeded.

In his address to the nation from the Oval Office, the 81-year-old president said he believed he deserved to be reelected based on his record during his first term.

"But nothing, nothing can come in the way of saving our democracy. That includes personal ambition," he said. "So I decided the best way forward is to pass the torch to a new generation. That is the best way to unite our nation."

In a post on his Truth Social platform, Trump said the speech was "barely understandable and sooo bad!" Shortly before speech, Trump laid into Democratic rival Kamala Harris in his first rally since she replaced Biden atop the ticket, signaling a bare-knuckled campaign ahead of the election.

ALASKA ZONE

US, Canada jets intercept China, Russia planes

AFP, Washington

American and Canadian warplanes intercepted two Russian and two Chinese bombers in international airspace near the state of Alaska on Wednesday, the joint US-Canadian North American Aerospace Defense Command (NORAD) said.

"NORAD detected, tracked, and intercepted two Russian TU-95 and two PRC H-6 military aircraft operating in the Alaska Air Defense Identification Zone," it said.

The zone is a perimeter in which air traffic is monitored beyond the border of national airspace to provide additional reaction time in case of hostile actions.

Intercepts of Russian aircraft -- in which they are contacted visually by US or Canadian jets -- are relatively common in the area.

"Fighter jets from the United States and Canada conducted the intercept," NORAD said, adding that the bombers "remained in international airspace and did not enter American or Canadian sovereign airspace," and that their activity "is not seen as a threat."

ASEAN FMS' MEET IN LAOS

Russia, China FMs meet as talks get underway

AFP, Vientiane

The foreign ministers of Russia and China met yesterday on the sidelines of Association of Southeast Asian Nations (Asean) foreign ministers talks in Laos, Moscow and AFP journalists said.

The three-day meeting of the 10-member Asean bloc started in the capital Vientiane yesterday, with the South China Sea and the conflict in Myanmar high on the agenda.

Sergei Lavrov held talks with Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi on the sidelines of the meeting, Russia's foreign ministry said.

A schedule for yesterday's meeting seen by AFP showed that Lavrov was due to join Wang for a 40-minute "ministerial meeting". Lavrov left the venue at 7.15 pm local time (1215 GMT), without commenting on what the meeting had covered.

China is a close political and economic ally of Russia and Nato members have branded Beijing a "decisive enabler" of Moscow's war in Ukraine.

Their meeting came a day after Wang held talks in China with Ukraine's top diplomat Dmytro Kuleba.

Lavrov said before an earlier meeting with the foreign ministers of China and Laos that Asean was "one of the essential elements of a new, more just multipolar world order".

It must "ensure a stable and secure development, outside the blocs, of the Asia-Pacific region," he said.

IGN MINISTERS' MEETING AND RELATED
21-27 JULY 2024, VIENTIANE, LAO PDR

The foreign ministers of Canada, India and the United Kingdom arrived in Vientiane yesterday to attend the talks as dialogue partners, AFP journalists said.

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken is also expected to attend.

Asean ministers were thrashing out a common position on the civil war raging in member state Myanmar yesterday, a Southeast Asian diplomat at the talks said.

"Myanmar is not resolved yet but we're almost there," the source said, requesting anonymity in order to speak to the media.

A draft Asean communique seen by AFP said ministers "strongly condemned" the continued violence unleashed by the military's coup in 2021 that has plunged the country into turmoil.

The junta is struggling to crush armed opposition to its coup and has been barred from high-level Asean meetings over its crackdown on dissent.

It had previously refused to send "non-political representatives" to attend high-level Asean meetings but two senior bureaucrats are representing Myanmar at the talks in Vientiane.

The military's readiness to re-engage diplomatically was a sign of its "weakened position", the diplomatic source told AFP.

An ethnic minority armed group claimed yesterday that its fighters had captured a town and a military regional command in northern Shan state, although the junta denied the claim.

Typhoon Gaemi hits Chinese seaboard

Sinks freighter off Taiwan; 3 killed

REUTERS, Beijing

Typhoon Gaemi roared into southeastern China yesterday after sweeping across Taiwan, where it killed three people, triggered flooding and sank a freighter before barrelling west across the Taiwan Strait.

The typhoon, the biggest to hit China's eastern seaboard this year, made landfall at 7:50 pm (1150 GMT) in Fujian province, state broadcaster CCTV said.

The storm is forecast to unleash intense rainfall over much of China after fuelling severe weather from the Philippines to Japan's Okinawa islands with its giant cloud-bands which spanned most of the Western Pacific Ocean.

In Taiwan, the strongest typhoon to hit the island in eight years packed gusts of up to 227 kmph (141 mph) before weakening as it made its way across the island, according to the Central Weather Administration.

Some parts of southern Taiwan are expected to have recorded accumulated rainfall of 2,200 mm (87 inches) since Tuesday.

MYANMAR CONFLICT

Junta, rebels claim control of regional military HQ

AFP, Yangon

Myanmar's junta and an ethnic minority armed group both claimed yesterday they were in control of a town and regional military command in northern Shan state following days of clashes.

Fighting has rocked the town of Lashio, home to the military's northeastern command, since July 3 when an alliance of ethnic armed groups renewed an offensive against junta troops.

Local media run by the Myanmar National Democratic Alliance Army (MNDAA) reported the group "fully captured the headquarters of the Northeast Military command in Lashio" yesterday morning and also captured Lashio town, home to around 150,000 people.

MNDAA spokesman Li Jiawen said the group's fighters had captured Lashio, without giving further details. But junta spokesman Zaw Min Tun told reporters the claim was "not true".

"The insurgents infiltrated the outskirts of Lashio so (the security forces) have been following and clearing them," he said, without giving details.

The northeastern command is located in the north of Lashio. A video uploaded to social media with a caption saying it was shot in Lashio yesterday morning showed deserted streets with no soldiers in sight.

AFP reporters geolocated the video to a site in the town around two kilometres (1.2 miles) from the command. Northern Shan state has been rocked by fighting since late last month.

Tanker capsizes off Philippines

16 of 17 crew members rescued; authorities battle to contain oil spill

REUTERS, Manila

A marine tanker carrying industrial fuel sank in rough seas off the Philippines yesterday, causing a large oil spill as coast guard rescuers search for a missing crew member, officials said.

Sixteen of the 17 crew members of MT Terra Nova have been rescued, Transportation Secretary Jaime Bautista said, after the ship capsized off the coastal town of Limay in Bataan province. A search is underway for the missing sailor.

"There is already oil spill. Right now, we cannot dispatch our resources because of strong winds and high waves," Transportation Secretary Jaime Bautista told a situation briefing.

The ship was carrying 1,494 metric tonnes of industrial fuel, Bautista said. Based on accounts of the rescued crew, Balilo said they encountered rough seas before the ship capsized.

Philippine coast guard spokesperson Armando Balilo told a separate briefing a 97-metre coast guard vessel had been deployed to search for the missing crew and combat the oil spill. Smaller vessels are waiting for the weather to clear before they could sail.

An aerial survey by the coast guard showed an oil slick spreading roughly two nautical miles and being driven by strong waves.

"We are racing against time. We will do our best to contain the fuel," Balilo said. He added the waters where the ship sank is close to Manila and there is "big danger" the spill could reach the capital. "That's part of the contingencies that we are preparing for," Balilo said.

Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. had ordered the environment ministry to assess the damage and the country's environment ministry said its chief was on her way to Limay town.

An investigation is underway if the sinking is related to Typhoon Gaemi.

Boeing finalises 737 MAX guilty plea deal

REUTERS

Boeing finalised a guilty plea to a criminal fraud conspiracy charge and agreed to pay at least $243.6 million after breaching a 2021 agreement with the US Justice Department, according to a court filing on Wednesday.

The planemaker allowed potentially risky work at its factories and did not ensure key airplane record keeping was accurate or complete, the Justice Department said as it outlined why it believed the planemaker had violated the 2021 deferred prosecution agreement.

Boeing on July 7 agreed in principle to plead guilty to conspiring to defraud the Federal Aviation Administration after the government said the planemaker knowingly made false representations about key software for the 737 MAX.

Boeing confirmed on Wednesday it filed a detailed plea agreement with Justice Department.

Remittance collection disrupted

MD MEHEDI HASAN

The internet blackout for five days has affected remittance collection through banks and mobile financial services (MFS), which may put pressure on the country's foreign exchange reserves.

Bankers and officials of MFS providers said their remittance collection remained suspended from midnight of July 18, when the internet shutdown was imposed, to July 23, when broadband services were partially reinstated.

After the partial resumption of broadband internet services, overall remittance mobilisation by banks and MFS was lower than that on a regular day, they added.

Around $80 million to $100 million in remittances are sent to Bangladesh on a regular day, as per industry insiders.

The reserves stood at $21.78 billion as of June 30, according to calculations based on the International Monetary Fund's Balance of Payment Manual 6.

"We were unable to collect inward remittance for five days amid the internet shutdown but the remittance flow became normal when broadband internet was made available," said Selim RF Hussain, managing director of BRAC Bank.

Hussain, also the chairman of the Association of Bankers, Bangladesh, told The Daily Star that overall remittance collection of July was likely to be low due to the overall situation but a better understanding can be availed next week.

A chief executive officer of a private bank said that liaison offices of the banks and MFS providers received remittance but were unable to send it to the local banks due to the internet outage.

However, some banks failed to collect remittance for the availability of banking services on a limited scale following the partial resumption of broadband internet.

Mercantile Bank faced difficulties in collecting remittance despite the resumption of broadband internet.

Its additional managing director, Mati Ul Hasan, said the bank faced problems collecting remittance as it could not access SWIFT due to slow internet connections.

There was a thin presence of visitors around the sea beach of Cox's Bazar yesterday as most tourists cancelled their bookings amidst the ongoing curfew. The situation is no different in other popular tourist spots like Tanguar Haor, Kuakata and Jaflong, with service providers and operators incurring huge losses.

RMG exporters in a race against time to offset losses

REFAYET ULLAH MIRDHA

Local apparel exporters are in a frantic race to recover the losses they incurred during the latest spell of violence centring the quota reform movement and nationwide curfew, with international retailers and brands pressuring them to ensure timely delivery of goods.

Following the shutdown of factories and mills for four days, apparel exporters are planning to keep their production units open on Friday and pay overtime bills to meet lead times as they believe increasing productivity can offset a portion of losses.

Due to the situation over the past week, suppliers had to cancel hundreds of pre-scheduled meetings and factory inspections. They also could not communicate with foreign buyers due to an internet blackout, which began on July 18 and persisted until July 23.

The disruption in production, delivery and shipment took place at a time when the sector is struggling to recover its international trade.

Bangladesh's garment shipments fell 5.2 percent to $33.04 billion in the July-May period of the last fiscal year compared to the same period a year prior, according to data from the Bangladesh Bank.

International buyers are also piling pressure on apparel exporters to ship goods quickly as they have to fill their stores with new designs ahead of Christmas, the biggest retail sales extravaganza in the Western world.

The months of July, August and September are the peak time for the shipment of goods to be sold during Christmas.

"Buyers do not want to hear about any crisis. They want on-time delivery of goods," said a garment exporter who ships T-shirts and polo shirts to the US and Canada.

The global apparel supply chain has been struggling to recover from the severe fallout of the Covid-19 pandemic, the Russia-Ukraine war, and historic inflationary pressure on Western consumers.

It was dealt another blow this year in the form of the Red Sea crisis, which triggered commercial vessel operators to nearly double shipping charges.

The shipment of goods from Bangladesh to Europe is taking at least a month more than in previous times due to the crisis, which has forced commercial vessel operators to forgo the traditional route through the Suez Canal and navigate an additional 3,500 kilometres around the Cape of Good Hope in Africa.

As such, in many cases, international clothing retailers and brands are asking for expensive air shipments so goods can reach stores timely.

If a kilogramme of garment is sent to Europe through waterways, it costs around 10 cents or less. But if the same shipment is sent through air from Dhaka airport, it costs more than $4.

An apparel exporter, asking not to be named, said: "I have planned to keep my factory open on Friday so I can ship goods timely and avoid work order cancellations and expensive air shipment."

However, another exporter said it would be difficult to cater to the work orders because of a raw material shortage, which happened because goods could not be transported to factories over the past week.

Faruque Hassan, managing director of Giant Group, said his American buyers could not place work orders during the past week. So, he sent two of his officers to the US so that he does not lose business.

It will take more than one month to overcome the losses of one week, he lamented, adding that port, customs and transport services should be expedited so the business can run smoothly.

"My buyers are yet to seek discounts or cancel orders, but I am sure that I have to make a lot of air shipments to meet deadlines," said another major exporter, seeking anonymity.

Overtime is the main measure to recover losses, he said, adding that customers are not willing to accept any delays in shipment as they need goods quickly to prepare for Christmas.

Mohammad Ali Khokon, president of Bangladesh Textile Mills Association, said the primary textile sector, which includes spinning, weaving, dyeing and finishing activities, lost $58.8 million over the last six days because of shutdown and internet blackout, which is about $9.8 million per day.

Although buyers are not cancelling work orders or seeking discounts, they are putting a pause on work orders or delaying them, which is creating a stockpile of yarn and fabrics in mills.

Khokon also sought a government waiver from extra port charges during the shutdown.

SM Mannan Kochi, president of the Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association, said he would sit in a meeting in a day or two with the international buyers and request them to not cancel work orders or seek discounts.

Tourism jolted by curfew

JAGARAN CHAKMA, MOKAMMEL SHUVO and SOHRAB HOSSAIN

Zahra Mayeesha, a 26-year-old private job holder, was preparing to return to Dhaka from a two-day vacation to Sreemangal with her husband on July 16.

However, due to the violence stemming from the quota reform protests, the couple decided to delay their journey back to Dhaka, hoping to leave after another day or two.

Those plans also fell through after the government imposed a nationwide curfew on July 20.

They had budgeted around Tk 18,000 for the two-day stay. As they were unable to return, their costs for hotel fare and food skyrocketed.

Further adding to their woes was the internet blackout starting on July 18, which forced the couple to go all over town hunting down an ATM that would dispense cash.

In the end, Zahra and her husband managed to book a flight to Dhaka on July 24.

The trip cost them around four times what they had estimated, with total expenses ultimately reaching around Tk 75,000.

The newlyweds were among a plethora of tourists who had found themselves stranded in various parts of Bangladesh over the past week.

Furthermore, most trips that had been planned by tourists over the past week were cancelled due to the volatile situation.

A view of Kuakata sea beach in Patuakhali.

"Neither tour operators nor tourists were prepared for the recent situation, which occurred suddenly," said Taufiq Uddin Ahmed, former president of the Tour Operators Association of Bangladesh.

He added that the unprecedented business shock had served as a bitter experience for tour operators, tourists, and tourism-centric businesses, but hoped the impact would not be felt for long.

Imranul Alam, owner of Tour Group BD, which operates houseboat services in Tanguar Haor in Sylhet, said July to August is the peak season for tourism in the region.

The natural beauty of Tanguar Haor as well as the tea gardens of Sreemangal and the waterfalls of Jaflong attracts many visitors during the period, he added. However, no tourists visited these spots over the past week after most bookings were cancelled.

According to Alam, there are at least 200 houseboats in Tanguar Haor, of which around 80 percent remain booked during the rainy season.

But all the houseboats are currently sitting idle, he said.

Alam said a houseboat brings in between Tk 3 lakh to Tk 5 lakh per week depending on size and facilities, estimating that houseboat operators and other service providers would miss out on at least Tk 2 crore in revenue.

Subrata Chakma, manager of Khasrang Hill Resort in Sajek, said around 200 tourists were stranded in the valley for three days after the government imposed a curfew and bus services from Khagrachhari to Dhaka were shut down.

However, law enforcement agencies helped the tourists leave by providing transport.

He said the tourists did not face any food shortages, but were worried as they could not contact family and relatives due to the internet blackout. Chakma added that there was no sign of nervousness among the tourists, who instead treated the situation as part of an adventure.

Businessmen in Kuakata lost around Tk 50 crore in revenue over the last seven days, estimated Rumman Imtiaze Tushar, president of the Tour Operators' Association of Kuakata.

Current account deficit narrows

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Bangladesh's current account deficit dropped by half year-on-year to stand at $5.98 billion in the 11 months till the end of May of fiscal year 2023-24 as imports fell in tune with Bangladesh Bank's (BB) measures amidst a US dollar crisis.

Data made public by the central bank showed that the current account deficit was $12.02 billion during the same period a year ago.

The current account records a nation's transactions with the rest of the world—specifically net trade in goods and services, net earnings on cross-border investments, and net transfer payments, reads investopedia.com.

The current account may be positive (a surplus) or negative (a deficit); positive means the country is a net exporter and negative means it is a net importer of goods and services, it adds.

The downturn in exports continued in May and overall earnings declined 5.9 percent year-on-year to $37.34 billion in the July-May period of fiscal year (FY) 2023-24.

Meanwhile, import payments declined 12.6 percent year-on-year to $57.56 billion.

As a result, the overall trade deficit stood at $20.2 billion.

Bangladesh's current account turned negative in April of FY24 after the BB corrected export data and published new figures which showed that shipments had dropped instead of rising.

Zahid Hussain, a former lead economist at the World Bank's Dhaka office, said the deficit in current account increased further in May. It means that there is pressure on the country's external account, he said.

In July-May of FY24, Bangladesh suffered a $5.88 billion deficit in its balance of payments (BoP), down from $8.80 billion during the same period a year ago.

Hussain said the latest data indicates that there would be no relief in the upcoming days even though the financial account turned positive following corrections to the export data.

The BB data showed that the financial account stood at $2.08 billion during the July-May period of FY24, down from $5.51 billion in the same period of last fiscal year.

Hussain said Bangladesh received a good amount of foreign aid recently. As a result, the financial account showed a surplus.

"This might not continue in the upcoming days," he said.

"There is a lot of uncertainty regarding the economic situation in the coming days. This may adversely impact the country's exports and imports," he added.

Stocks bounce back after a dip

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Stocks in Bangladesh bounced back yesterday after falling by a large margin on the previous day.

The major index of Dhaka Stock Exchange (DSE), the DSEX, rose 1.17 percent from that on the day prior to settle at 5,413.64.

The market had been on a losing streak and it plunged another 95 points or 1.75 percent on Wednesday, when the bourse opened after an additional three days of general holidays.

The other two indexes of the DSE showcased a similar trend, with the Shariah-based DSES edging up 1.18 percent to 1,183.37 while the blue-chip DS30 growing 1.27 percent to 1,932.

Chittagong Stock Exchange also saw a rising trend as the Caspi, the main index of the premier bourse of the port city, went up 56.34 points, or 0.37 percent, to close at 15,415.37.

It is really tough to pinpoint the factors responsible for any day's rise, because such fluctuations are a part of the inner workings of the stock market, said an investor based in Dhaka.

After days of curfew and internet blackout, normalcy is gradually returning to the market with the restoration of broadband internet services, which helped investors regain confidence, he said.

The day's turnover, meaning the total value of shares changing hands at the DSE, stood at Tk 497 crore, a 212 percent rise from the previous day.

Block trades, meaning high volume transactions of privately negotiated securities outside the open market, contributed 4.4 percent to the overall turnover.

Port storage rent may be waived for unrest

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

The government may consider waiving storage rent incurred for imported goods which could not be received and subsequently had to be left at ports for the unrest and curfew in the last few days, assured State Minister for Shipping Khalid Mahmud Chowdhury yesterday.

The government had waived Tk 500 crore in similar charges during the pandemic shutdown, he said.

Importers need to submit proper documents to be eligible for the waiver, Chowdhury said, adding, "There is nothing to be worried about in this regard."

He made the comments at a ceremony organised by Chittagong Port Authority (CPA) making the distribution of food items among jetty workers and financially insolvent people at a jetty of the Chattogram port.

Cargo and container delivery from the port yards gradually came to a halt on July 17 for violence centring the quota reform movement, which was followed by an internet blackout and curfew.

A lack of facilities to conducts goods assessment in the absence of internet and the countrywide curfew created a container congestion at the port.

Legal actions must follow due process

Allegations of crackdowns must be addressed

We're alarmed by the reckless and selective manner in which law enforcement authorities are going about arrests and cases in response to the recent violent clashes. While we certainly support appropriate legal actions to ensure accountability for the violence—which killed at least 156 individuals as per this daily, and destroyed or damaged dozens of public infrastructures and installations—it is absolutely essential that the accountability process remains unbiased and above board from start to finish. Otherwise, it may again slide into the kind of witch-hunt we saw after some of the protests and clashes in recent years.

According to a report by this daily, at least 3,425 people have been arrested in the five days between July 20 and 24 in connection with the clashes, attacks, vandalism, and arson witnessed in different parts of the country. Of them, 1,380 have been arrested in 154 cases filed in Dhaka, while at least 75 cases were filed in six other districts. A Prothom Alo report, which presents a more comprehensive picture of the cases and arrests over eight days across the country, says many of the arrestees were BNP-Jamaat men. This seems to align with the government's declared position, even before any investigation, that BNP was responsible for orchestrating the violence—an accusation that it denies, claiming that this is but a cover for the government to crack down on dissent. The truth of the matter will only be determined through fair and unbiased investigations.

The question is, will that at all be possible? Why are old cases against BNP-Jamaat men being revived? On what basis are the police and Rab preparing their lists of culprits? And why is so much of the investigative focus on vandalism in public properties? What about the indiscriminate police shootings that led to so many tragic deaths? In today's charged atmosphere, ensuring that all legal actions are conducted transparently and impartially is crucial to maintain public order and trust in the justice process. This will be harder to achieve if the present trends hold. Despite the government's admission that students participating in the quota reform protests were not involved with the vandalism and arson attacks—and its subsequent assurance that no legal action would be taken against them—a number of cases have been filed by police and even BCL leaders against students. This directly contradicts with the government's promise, and may further exacerbate prevailing tensions.

In all likelihood, many factors and elements may have been responsible for the unprecedented violence that has ensued since July 18, not excluding an outburst of popular anger over growing economic hardships, governance deficits and lack of democratic space in the country. Against this backdrop, it is paramount that the authorities do not indulge in mass arrests and cases targeting certain groups. Every arrest or prosecution must be grounded in solid evidence, and the judicial process must be transparent and free from political influence.

Jailed abroad for protesting

We urge UAE, our government to resolve the matter

The decision by the Abu Dhabi Federal Court of Appeal to sentence 57 Bangladeshi nationals to long prison terms is regrettable. The court gave life-term prison sentences to three Bangladeshis, 11 years' imprisonment to one, and 10 years' imprisonment to 53 others for protesting in public—which is prohibited in the UAE. While we do not condone the breaking of any law in foreign countries, we feel the context behind the actions of these Bangladeshis should be considered when deciding on their punishments.

Reportedly, on July 19, groups of mostly Bangladeshi nationals who live in the UAE carried out peaceful protests in multiple locations across the country in solidarity with the student protesters in Bangladesh. At that time, students on the streets of Bangladesh were being met with significant violence. Due to restrictions on the flow of information, these individuals were concerned about the plight of their fellow countrymen. Their own loved ones might have been put in harm's way. And so, their decision to peacefully protest was purely motivated by their own conscience.

The Human Rights Watch (HRW) verified six videos of the protests. From these videos and others analysed by HRW, none of the protesters were found engaging in any violent acts or using language to incite violence. So, to grant them such long prison terms would be unreasonable. And as the HRW argued, the long prison sentences which appear to have come after only one court session and within 24 hours raises concerns about the fairness of the judicial proceedings.

The UAE court also ordered that the defendants should be deported upon the completion of their prison terms. While we accept that these Bangladeshis broke UAE's laws, we believe that deportation itself is punishment enough. For simply acting upon their conscience—and for demonstrating love for their countrymen—they should not have to spend the rest of their lives, or any significant portion of it, away from their own country and loved ones. So, from a human rights point of view, we request the UAE authorities to consider sending them back without imprisonment.

In that regard, we also urge Bangladesh authorities to immediately engage with UAE officials. In 2022, UAE became Bangladesh's third biggest migrant destination. In the first 10 months of the last fiscal year, Bangladesh received the highest remittance from the country. Migrants working in UAE have massively contributed in providing significant buffer to our economy at a time of serious crisis. Therefore, it is incumbent upon our government to not abandon them during their time of need. We hope this matter is urgently resolved through diplomacy.

Are we going to learn from our mistakes or keep repeating them?

At the outset, we want to express our unambiguous condemnation of the mayhem created by ideologically and politically motivated groups whose aim was to destabilise our country, use the general discontent to instigate violence, and try to "topple the government"—as claimed by some ministers and which, if true, we vigorously denounce. This has made us realise that our country faces internal enemies opposed to our development and overall success. The destruction of public property and the setting of fire to essential government offices, transport facilities and part of internet infrastructure that greatly crippled trade, manufacturing and the daily life of citizens need to be highly condemned, and the perpetrators exposed and punished within the law. We in the media will assist the government in unearthing this move against Bangladesh. Those who opposed our birth in 1971 must be resisted, defeated and destroyed.

However, there is something else that concerns us. What we are witnessing right now is a classic struggle to control the narrative. The battle is on to direct the "truth" with all the state machinery at play to establish it. The regime beneficiaries are joining the parade to justify the charade. George Orwell, welcome to Bangladesh. Sorry you have been here many times before.

Slowly but surely, the story of the student movement for quota reform is fading from the official narrative and that of the BNP-Jamaat conspiracy to destabilise the country is gaining currency. In our view, both stories merit coverage and in-depth analyses. Why one is fading and the other is becoming bigger is because one suits those in power and the other embarrasses them. The blame game is on; demonising the other is in full swing. According to the new narrative, the students were mere "pawns" from the start and the whole episode was a part of an elaborate plan to destroy the economy and even "topple the government."

We are back to our old habit of never analysing events that shake us all and learn from our mistakes. How can we not immediately investigate how more than 150 people could be killed within a few days? We will perhaps never ask how the peaceful student movement went out of hand; why the government did not take steps in time to resolve the crisis; what triggered the students' anger; if there were any mistakes in handling the situation; why there were so many deaths; if the police made any attempt to control the crowd; if they had to shoot students when they did and if the shooting had to be so brutal; if bringing the "Razakar" issue was at all relevant; if anyone asked the students not to give that anti-liberation slogan (which they stopped the moment they realised their mistake); why with the deployment of BGB the death toll shoot up; if the BGB were given wrong instructions or if they turned out to be "trigger happy." On the political front, couldn't the Awami League—a party with such a long history and experience—have reached out to the students, instead of unleashing the Chhatra League to "take care of them"? Was the call to shoot at sight necessary, and did the police firing not inflame the situation further? Why were helicopters used to fire upon demonstrators? There are many more such questions that must be asked and answered through impartial investigation. Otherwise, we will never learn from our mistakes and keep on repeating them.

So much blood, such mindless brutality, such indiscriminate beating of students demanding quota reform, such twisting of narratives and dangerous and fallacious tagging of general students as "Razakars," attacking students in hospitals when they were receiving urgent medical assistance, such reckless shooting of demonstrators, and the ongoing indiscriminate arrest have created such ill feelings and deep suspicion that to expect an outright acceptance of the government's offer is unrealistic. Students' trust must be regained. A difficult task, but it must be attempted with sincerity and earnestness.

Simply put, there are two distinct phases of the story of the student movement for quota reform that we have been seeing till date. The first phase started on June 5, when the High Court set aside the government decision to abolish the quota system completely through a government circular, and lasted till July 19. The second phase started on July 19, when the BCL started violently attacking the demonstrating students that triggered violence, which spread throughout the country resulting in large-scale killings by the law enforcement agencies.

What distinguishes the two phases is violence: there was none in the first and tragically plenty in the second. The first was totally peaceful and in the hands of the students, and the second highly violent with political elements having entered the movement, especially members of Jamaat and Shibir (the student front of Jamaat) as emerging evidence indicates.

The government's attempt to totally ignore the first phase and put all its focus on the second is, we think, not reflective of what is uppermost in the public mind and, as such, not the most judicious of decisions. While attempt to unearth the deep conspiracy in the second phase must continue with utmost vigour—which we in the media will support and promote as long as it is evidence-based—ignoring the mistakes made in the first phase and not investigating how such a large number of deaths, injuries and physical assault on students occurred and not punishing those responsible will be a blunder of enormous proportions.

When the movement started, it was only about quota reform. By the time it ended, many issues became added due to the government's incompetent and harsh handling of the situation. When there was not a single death, not a single instance of violence, when thousands of students were holding peaceful demonstrations on their respective campuses throughout the country, when students were inviting quota reform talks—that was the time when any government would have reached out to the demonstrating students. Ours did not.

Instead, we saw more than 150 deaths, including that of demonstrating students, BCL cadres, police and the general public,in less than a week—highest ever in the history of independent Bangladesh—more than 3,000 injured (both highly conservative figures), and widespread beating of students and demonstrators under one guise or another. The government and the ruling party should not underestimate the depth of this feeling of the students of having been seriously wronged.

Our reporters and photographers met so many parents, relatives and guardians who have lost their dear ones. Their stories bring out the deepest sense of anguish and disgust at the needlessness of it all. So many of the students have such vivid memories of friends and fellow demonstrators being killed or severely beaten up and injured by BCL and law enforcement members; that emotional and psychological wound cannot be expected to be healed overnight. That healing will occur only if the subsequent attitude of the authorities is one of genuine understanding, concern and care backed by a credible commitment of total exoneration of the students from legal harassment. This needs to be so because many quota demonstrators of 2018 had to face police investigation, court appearances and bail formalities for years, at significant legal expenses that many could not afford. Students know it and remember it, and fear its repetition.

That anti-state elements riding on the shoulder of only a two-week-old student movement can destabilise us raises concerns as to how this could happen under a government that has been in continuous and unquestioned authority for the last 15-plus years. That a pro-liberation government, enjoying supreme power for a decade and a half, suddenly finds that anti-liberation forces have become such a threat that it needs the army to save itself—police, Rab and BGB having all failed—worries us immeasurably and raises the question as to whether the ruling party and the government need to revisit their policies and actions of the last 15-plus years, whether or not its own high-, mid- and lower-level leaders have served the party well, and whether cronyism and corruption inside the party needs a thorough looking into.

This period needs to be assessed as much for the sake of the people as for the ruling party itself. In our view, it was during this period that the greatest party in the history of Pakistan and Bangladesh combined, and the one that lay at the heart of all democratic movements here, lost its way and became a money-making machine whose stature at the grassroots level is a pale shadow of its glorious past; whose leaders frankly admit that their survival is guaranteed only by muscle power and no moral power of ethics, honesty, patriotism, and values of our freedom struggle.

It was during the same period that saw greatest harm being done to the most pivotal institution of democracy: free and fair elections. The last three elections—2014, 2018, and 2024 (the last one was a bit more competitive as AL dissenters were allowed to participate)—were mere rituals where voters were the least important elements, far outweighed by police, bureaucracy and money, and muscle power of the ruling party cadres. The "shooting in the foot" policy of BNP to boycott elections made election manipulation easier by the rulers.

The obvious result of controlled elections was a controlled parliament that never saw any lively debate on any of the vital challenges that the country faces.

As power consolidated and elections became largely predictable, the bureaucracy, police, intelligence community and all other state institutions—in fact, everyone holding government jobs—knew which side of the bread was buttered and acted accordingly. Favouritism and cronyism in business led to Bangladesh's corruption index hitting the roof and the rich-poor gap widening as never before. We saw the gradual but alarming erosion of accountability of state institutions, transparency of administrative processes, and politicisation of institutions of the state that crippled good governance.

None of the above crucial questions will be asked and the business-as-usual attitude of the "enemy" doing it all will dominate our thoughts and narrative. The only way the situation will be handled will be more arrests of the same clang and repetition of what we have heard over the years.

At this crucial moment, we must understand that "what got us here will not take us there" (borrowing from the title of Marshall Goldsmith's book), meaning to the higher level of development. We must change the way we think, act, and engage with people, especially with the younger generation. They are smarter, more knowledgeable, more tech-savvy, and far more confident than we ever were. They are citizens of the 21st century and will live and compete in the world of artificial intelligence. Our prime minister wants to build a "Smart Bangladesh." We all support her in that effort. But is killing, torturing, injuring, threatening and making students live in fear any way of making them proud participants of that "Smart Bangladesh"? We must be among the biggest fools in the world to think that we can beat them, torture them and frighten them into submission. We have to win their hearts and minds and not bang their heads. The way we have handled the student protesters of the quota reform movement will greatly exacerbate brain drain. The AI world will make a global village of talents and no oppressive measure can hold them back.

Focusing on the narrative of "conspiracy" and ignoring the one that involves students and the many lives lost may give some respite, but it is no way of creating confidence among the students about our future here. We really need to change our mindset. Otherwise, we will keep on repeating our mistakes. And given the fast-moving and competitive world, we are not likely to get too many chances.

The shifting political field and the price of permanent war

It has been a week in almost complete shutdown. Once again, a reasonable and peaceful student movement has ended in grotesque violence. This time, however, it seems that everyone bit off more than they could chew. The landmark verdict is now out: a 5 percent freedom fighters' quota, 1 percent for indigenous communities, and 1 percent for people with disabilities and those identifying as third gender. It has come at a hefty price; media reports suggest close to 200 deaths nation-wide, many of them students. The campus attacks, raids, beatings, and shootings definitively turned the tide against the government, and a dangerous section was clearly ready to seize the moment. The ensuing chaos has left thousands injured, massive destruction of public property and infrastructure, and over 4,000 arrests.

Many (including the BCL) expressed their solidarity with the movement just before the verdict. Many veteran political leaders and cultural activists who had become ensnared by the misconceived and unfortunate "Razakar" rhetoric and deemed it an anti-state, anti-Liberation War movement just days ago have now declared the verdict a victory for all. How fast the tables have turned! Such a dramatic reversal should make us wary for two reasons: one, our senior leadership's repeated inability to read the political field; and two, the foreclosure of any serious conversation about the issue of quota reform itself.

We are a nation with selective amnesia. The students taking to the streets today have known nothing but one-party rule. They have not seen the fight against autocracy or the AL-BNP cycle, and 1971 is in the distant past. But they did grow up with Shahbagh, no-VAT, quota-reform, and the fight for road safety. A new form of student politics has taken shape over this cascade of movements that explicitly rejects the party/student politics of old, which for them represent only campus violence and corruption; this is a generational shift that our leaders are still failing to grasp. Each of these movements has built on the last, producing leaders and carrying visceral memories. They remember being crushed and met with sheer indignity every time, left alone to fend for themselves in the face of repression, being tagged as pawns of enemy forces, and the repeated hijacking of their causes. Above all, they have learned to trust no one.

What did our students demand? The chance to have a dignified and secure life. What did they receive? The same delaying tactics, the inevitable othering and the wrath of the foot-soldiers. Only those with permanent blinders could see nothing but "BNP-Jamaat" when looking at the thousands of committed students; they could not see that it is the ruling party's intransigence and trigger-happiness that always provides an opening for their enemies. This regime has been in power for 15 consecutive years. No other party can claim as much experience in parliament and on the streets. Is it not enough time to start relying on consent over coercion? Is it not easier to defeat your enemies in parliament than to be permanently on the warpath against some shapeshifting enemy?

The people, state and civil society form an integral triad, and each node must understand their position within the shifting political field. Gone are the days of ideologically-led political movements. For over two decades, we have been witnessing a global wave of populist mobilisations, from the Arab Spring to our own Shahbagh uprising. These movements reflect a loosely-organised, issue-based transversal politics, often embodying majoritarian sentiments. Articulated as contests between "the people" and some "power elite," such sentiments can sway from left to right at any time and are just as amenable for absorption by the forces of "un-civil" society. State and civil-society institutions must be prepared to confront such sentiments with care or risk their weaponisation into the kind of all-out war we witnessed on Friday. Middle-class desperation has now been displaced by a "lumpen" class angst against a state/regime that many feel permanently excluded from, and who care nothing for mega structures. What allows such a rage against the machine and how it is being moulded are structural questions we need to address.

In all this madness, we have forgotten to take the significance of the quota-reform debate seriously. It is heartbreaking to see our students ready to die for the chance to be part of the same state apparatus that sees them as disposable, to join the same civil service whose corruption and incompetence we endlessly vilify. Quota or not, thousands of our graduates will not get government jobs; what will they do? Will our public universities be factories for producing clerks, still committed to the colonial ideal of the wage-earning middle class running the state? When will we dream of becoming scientists, artists, even industrialists?

It is also unfortunate to see a whole generation believe in the neoliberal magic of "meritocracy." From the beginning, misogynistic, majoritarian attacks on quotas for women and minorities had slipped in alongside the demand for reform. The fetishisation of "merit" allows those who lose out among the middle classes and dominant/majority groups to blame their misfortunes on the apparent preferential treatment of others. This is a convenient fantasy. "Merit" depends at least as much on environment and opportunity as hard work and talent, and the former are not distributed equally. Only 2 percent quotas for the structurally disadvantaged is not a fitting end for a "movement against discrimination." Based on what data did we dismiss the quota for women? Since when do all districts offer the same opportunities? Should such decisions be so amenable to popular pressure?

That is a fight for another day and by other means. This movement-repression cycle cannot be our only recourse, letting the space for democratic dialogue shrink even further. Toppling a government cannot be our ultimate yardstick for success. The state must learn to negotiate without unleashing its forces or cowering to majoritarian sentiment. All the millions invested in intelligence and surveillance technology could not prevent these deaths and the destruction of public property. Perhaps now this regime will understand that they cannot claim a monopoly over the nation-state, that their history and demonstrations of development do not automatically entitle them to reign.

Most of us are neither in positions of power nor capable of swindling banks to build a second home elsewhere. Some of us are sticking around, trying to build institutions and communities instead of giving in to despair. Those who claim to govern must realise that their power is on lease, no matter how long the terms. There are tectonic shifts happening beneath us. Many of our citizens are desperate and at the tipping point. They have no regard for their personal safety and are ready to unleash with the slightest instigation. Their collective agency is up for grabs for a favourable ideology or for the highest bidder. All of us need to wisen up while we still can. Many of us still believe in the People's Republic of Bangladesh. We have only one nation and only one lifetime to fix it.

IMF's assessment and the real risks for Bangladesh's economy is an economist and former special adviser to the Employment Sector, International Labour Office, Geneva.

Dr Rizwanul Islam

RIZWANUL ISLAM

The International Monetary Fund (IMF) occasionally makes headlines in Bangladesh, the most recent being in June this year. But that already seems to have been long ago. And this is simply because the work they did at that time appears to have been overshadowed—to some extent, at least—by recent events.

It may be recalled that against the backdrop of multiple challenges (viz., balance-of-payment deficit, depletion of foreign exchange reserves, depreciation of the taka, and rising inflation) faced by the economy, the government went for the easy solution of a loan from the IMF. And a credit programme for $4.7 billion was agreed upon in January 2023. The loan, whose duration is 42 months, is to be disbursed in seven instalments—subject to satisfactory review by the agency. In June this year, the second review was successfully completed and the third tranche of $1.15 billion was released.

The loan, of course, came with conditionalities that include attaining a certain level of foreign exchange reserves (four months' imports), raising tax revenues, periodic adjustments in the prices of petroleum products and electricity, scrapping of the fixed interest rate regime, moving to market-determined exchange rate, etc.

As part of the second review of the credit programme, the IMF came up with a risk assessment for the economy in which nine risk factors, local and international, have been identified. Such assessments are useful even under normal circumstances. And when the going gets tough, it is more so. The assessment, therefore, is welcome.

However, given the multifarious challenges, the complexity of the situation, and expectations from a partner like the IMF, a few questions arise. What, for example, is the value of the exercise? Does it remain focused on the key issues and attach priority to them? How well do they address the key challenges faced by the economy? More importantly, have the real risks been identified and ways of addressing them explored? While some of such risks are structural (to be discussed presently), some come as unforeseen shocks—like the current situation—whose roots are also structural.

Interestingly, risk assessments of the kind done by the IMF are not usually done by the government, although it would have been desirable to have a homegrown exercise reflecting the national context and priorities more closely.

To be useful, a review of challenges and risks faced by the economy would have to be cast against their genesis and evolution. It is by now well-known that wrong policies were pursued for several years in the areas of exchange rate determination and interest rates. They helped keep imports as well as capital cheap. Exporters were compensated in various ways. Credit at a low rate of interest encouraged capital flight. Uncertainty in the business environment led exporters to park their export earnings abroad.

Not only were wrong policies pursued, necessary corrective measures—and some half-hearted—were adopted with considerable delays. Even now, the uncertainty in the policy environment has not been overcome completely.

The situation was compounded by political economy forces and interests of influential groups. Valuable time was lost in 2023 in the run-up to the national election. Even after that, concrete steps to reform exchange rate determination were taken only in May 2024. The real risk for the economy lies in such policy inertia of the government and continuation of protection for its cronies. Add to that the possibility of sudden shocks from unforeseen events.

FILE VISUAL: SALMAN SAKIB SHAHRYAR

For the economy to come out of the current abyss and for growth to turn around, the crisis of confidence will need to be overcome and basic conditions for growth restored urgently. And for that to happen, the foreign exchange reserves will have to start rising, which, in turn, would depend critically on not just export flows but also on prompt and full return of the export proceeds and normal flow of remittances. Only then will the regime of import compression give way to normal business and growth. That is also needed to fight inflation, which is an issue of immense concern.

The rate of inflation has been rising steadily since 2021, and the annual inflation rate has been hovering near a double digit figure for some time. Inflation can be caused by a variety of factors operating from demand and supply sides, and Bangladesh is no exception. In fact, the recent IMF review of the economy (June 2024) acknowledges this and estimates that half of the recent price increases can be attributed to the "pass through" effect of exchange rate depreciation. And yet, the organisation recommends monetary tightening as the measure needed for fighting inflation.

The Bangladesh Bank has abandoned the policy of fixed interest rates—even though the decision came later than warranted. It started a policy of monetary tightening in 2023 and is continuing that stance. But that does not seem to be producing the desired effect on the inflation rate. The proponents of this approach are mentioning the delay in the adoption of this policy as a reason for its ineffectiveness, and are suggesting further tightening. Under the loud chorus produced by this group of policy analysts and the international backers of the approach, voices for pragmatic solutions to the problem are getting drowned. We are forgetting that even economists like Olivier Blanchard and Ben Bernanke are attributing inflation to both demand and supply side factors.

In Bangladesh, it has of late become customary to cite other countries and say that they have succeeded in containing inflation by raising the policy rate and Bangladesh has not because of not using the instrument at the right time. While doing so, we forget that one size does not fit all. Among the major developed countries, for example, the success the US has achieved is not matched by countries of Europe and the UK. Also, the latter have not been able to avoid slowdown in their economies and recession in the process. Even in the case of the US, the extent to which monetary policy has contributed to the success in fighting inflation is being debated by researchers. In India, although the policy rate has been raised substantially in 2022 and 2023, it did not have an adverse effect on credit growth because of a variety of factors.

While dealing with macroeconomic issues of immediate importance, major structural issues like employment—especially jobs for the youth and first-time job-seekers, and livelihoods of the low-income people have either been ignored or relegated to the category of "also." The potential risk from such a narrow focus has been ignored by the external agencies as well as by the government. And when issues come to a fore, the usual response is to bury them under the refrain of "destructive forces." The danger of doing so is illustrated by the shock inflicted on the economy by the current situation.

Unfortunately, the Bangladesh government has never come up with a clear thinking on either the macroeconomic issues like inflation, or on jobs and livelihoods of the poor and low-income people and approaches to fighting such evils. The real risks here are continued dependence on (or adoption of) "policy advice" from outside, adoption of half-hearted and one-sided measures, ignoring the potential shocks arising out of deeper discontent, and the lack of a clear and coherent approach on the part of the government.

For the economy to come out of the current abyss and for growth to turn around, the crisis of confidence will need to be overcome and basic conditions for growth restored urgently. And for that to happen, the foreign exchange reserves will have to start rising, which, in turn, would depend critically on not just export flows but also on prompt and full return of the export proceeds and normal flow of remittances. Only then will the regime of import compression give way to normal business and growth.

Bangla music loses its REBELLIOUS ICON

The iconic musician passed away at 6:50am on Thursday from a massive heart attack and multiple organ failure. The 63-year-old was undergoing treatment at a hospital in Virginia, where he was supposed to perform at a show.

"I cannot believe that we are seeing scenes like this on the streets of Bangladesh, our own people being treated like this, unbelievable," wrote Shafin Ahmed four days ago on his Facebook profile. Little did he know that this would be the last visual he would have of his beloved motherland. All his life, Shafin had raised his voice against whatever he perceived as injustice– which also led him to leave the band he helped make legendary, Miles.

The iconic musician passed away at 6:50am on Thursday from a massive heart attack and multiple organ failure. The 63-year-old was undergoing treatment at a hospital in Virginia, where he was supposed to perform at a show. However, right before the show, he fell ill and at one point, becoming unconscious in front of the organisers. According to his brother, Hamin Ahmed, Shafin had been battling heart issues for the past 15 years, overcoming multiple cardiac-related incidents.

The news of Shafin Ahmed's demise came as a total shock to Bangladesh's cultural sector. "I still cannot believe this," said Runa Laila to The Daily Star. "He was a musician of the highest level and was extremely popular among the youth. Owing to his parents, he had an unmatched musical pedigree and could sing Nazrul Sangeet as well as his own band compositions."

Miles keyboardist Manam Ahmed, who shared the stage with Shafin for decades, said, "I am lost for words. The memories of the good times that we spent together are all rushing back to me," he said, sharing that some of Manam's greatest compositions were given life by Shafin Ahmed. "Dhiki Dhiki, Chaad Tara and Jala Jala were only a few of the songs that we collaborated on. May he rest in peace."

Fahmida Nabi told The Daily Star that she was supposed to collaborate with Shafin for a song in the coming days. "He was different, he had a swagger unique to only him. He was instantly recognisable to the people of Bangladesh, and had qualities of both Kamal Dasgupta and Firoza Begum in his voice."

Lyricist Latiful Islam Shibli believes that Shafin Ahmed's demise is the biggest blow to Bangla rock music since the death of Ayub Bachchu. "Besides being one of the best musicians in Bangladesh, he was a fashion inspiration for millions of young people, including me when I was growing up. His aviator shades, iconic hat and panache-filled shirts are fashion statements that only he could pull off."

"I can talk about hours about his groovy bass-playing, and how difficult it actually is to do that and sing at the same time," said Fuad Almuqtadir. "Sting sang and played bass, but his bass line was not nearly as complicated as when Shafin bhai did it, it was like listening to two people performing at the same time, I will miss him so much."

Musicians all around the country poured their tributes through limited internet access in the country yesterday, including James, Arnob, Rafa, Jon Kabir, Sharmin Sultana Sumi and Artcell, among others.

Born in Kolkata's Anthony Bagan Lane to legendary cultural duo of Kamal Dasgupta and Firoza Begum, Shafin started his musical journey at the age of nine. While he was trained in classical and Nazrul sangeet by his parents, Shafin, along with his elder brother Hamin, became exposed to Western music while studying in the UK, which led to the formation of Miles.

On his near four-decade stint in Miles, Shafin composed and sang evergreen hits like Phiriye Dao, Dhiki Dhiki, Jala Jala, Chand Tara Shurjo, among numerous others. He was also successful as a solo act, producing and voicing songs like Aj Jonmodin Tomar, Harano Shukhand Legend.

Shafin had left Miles on three separate occasions, the last of which was in 2021 due to disputes with his brother, Hamin Ahmed. He had continued performing as "Shafin Ahmed– Voice of Miles"– for the remainder of his career. Despite said disputes, Shafin performed and collaborated on every album of the band, starting with Miles (1982) and progressing to A Step Farther (1986), Protisruti (1991), Prottasha (1993), Prottoy (1996), Proyash (1997), Probaho (2000), Protiddhoni (2006), Proticchobi (2015), and Proborton (2016). Besides being a musician, he was an adept cricketer in his youth. He also forayed into politics, being elected as the vice chairman of Jatiya Party in 2021.

Shafin Ahmed's name will be synonymous with Bangla rock music as an instantly recognisable icon, who never shied away from speaking his mind.

Indian union govt sole authority

External affairs ministry spokesman Randhir Jaiswal told a weekly media briefing, "I can confirm that we have received a diplomatic note, a communication from the Bangladesh side protesting the comments made by the West Bengal CM. It is essentially on the lines described in the reports you must have seen today."

He cited the Indian constitution to point out that the union government has the sole authority regarding foreign affairs.

Asked about India's stance on the quota reforms agitation and the violence, Jaiswal said India considers the situation as "an internal development of that country".

Asked about anti-India slogans raised during the protests, he said, "Our ties with Bangladesh are very strong and warm ... we are hopeful that the situation in Bangladesh will return to normal very soon."

Jaiswal said that over 6,700 Indian students returned from Bangladesh since the violence erupted and mentioned the "excellent cooperation from the Bangladesh government" in repatriating them safely.

Mamata in a post on X also said, "Hundreds of students and others are returning to West Bengal/ India, from the trouble-torn Bangladesh. I have asked our state administration to render all help and assistance to the returnees ..."

"I cannot make any comments on the situation in Bangladesh as it is another country and only the Indian government has the right to speak about it. But if helpless people (from Bangladesh) knock on Bengal's doors, we will give them shelter," she said.

organisers and announce a programme, Asif said.

Asif told The Daily Star in the afternoon that they will announce a fresh programme after a meeting with other leaders of the protests.

Around 7:15pm, Asif said he and Nahid were cornered by the law enforcement agencies, adding that they would hold a press briefing between around 8:00pm to 9:00pm.

This correspondent saw a policeman in uniform at the entry to the hospital around 9:00pm.

On the third and seventh floors, at least seven men introducing themselves as detectives did not let this correspondent talk to them.

The men were in front of the two cabins, where Nahid and Asif were being treated.

Wishing for anonymity, one of the men said, "We have strict instructions from higher authority to restrict the entry of anyone in these cabins.

Abdul Hannan Masud, a coordinator of the protests, said on the phone that he and others were also stopped by the men.

"We left the hospital without meeting with Nahid and Asif," he said.

On Saturday, Nahid was picked up allegedly by law enforcers from a house in the capital's Sabujbagh. He was found the next day with injuries.

Asif earlier said he was abducted and kept in confinement for five days.

The Detective Branch of Dhaka Metropolitan Police said they were not involved in the matter.

Mohibullah Khandakar, a doctor at the hospital, said policemen in plain clothes had been at the hospital's waiting room since morning.

He denied that the internet had been disconnected.

Putin meets Syria's Assad amid calls to defuse tensions with Turkey

AFP, Moscow

President Vladimir Putin held talks with Syrian counterpart Bashar al-Assad in Moscow amid calls for Russian mediation to cool tensions between Turkey and Syria.

Wednesday's talks between the pair -- the first since since March 2023 -- come after Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan flagged the potential of a three-way meeting to discuss normalising ties between Ankara and Damascus.

Putin highlighted his concerns over the situation in the Middle East, which he said was "tending to escalate," in opening remarks between the pair which were aired on state television yesterday.

Moscow is Syria's most important ally, having effectively saved Assad's government through its military intervention in 2015 during a civil war.

"I am very interested in your opinion on how the situation in the region as a whole is developing. Unfortunately, it is tending to escalate, we see this. This concerns Syria directly," Putin said.

Assad said his visit to Moscow was a "very important" opportunity to discuss "events that are taking place today in the world as a whole and in the Eurasian region", according to a translation into Russian.

ensuring the safety of the ceremony and events throughout Paris.

Against the backdrop of the War in Ukraine, athletes from Russia and Belarus will compete as neutrals. Furthermore, the ongoing conflict in Gaza, coupled with France's significant Muslim and Jewish populations, has led Israel to implement unprecedented security measures for its teams.

While the essence of any Games is that it brings many nations to a focal point, promising several records and milestones, this edition of the Olympics in Paris could be a bit more than just that.

The Argentina-Morocco game in Saint Etienne in the men's football tournament, which began two days before the opening ceremony, had already seen chaotic interruption from the crowd which led to the game being suspended for about two hours before Morocco were declared eventual winners.

Meanwhile, claims of a spying scandal using drones have been made by the New Zealand women's football authorities, accusing unauthorised surveillance during a training session from their Canadian rivals. Both these incidents are now being investigated by the relevant authorities.

Meanwhile, New Zealand women's football has accused their Canadian rivals of unauthorized drone surveillance during a training session. Both this incident and the disruption of the Argentina-Morocco match are currently under investigation by the relevant authorities.

The logistical and security challenges reflect a world grappling with uncertainty and conflict. Yet, as Paris stands on the brink of hosting the 33rd Summer Olympic Games, the famed city promises a spectacle unlike any other.

ACC fails to estimate value

According to the progress report, the ACC could not determine the value of some assets found during the investigation. Their records will be collected, and the value will be measured by engineers or experts if necessary.

Of the assets, Benazir has 25 acres of leased land in Sualak Mouza of Bandarban Sadar upazila, two plots of 14 kathas in the name of Jissan Mirza in Dosarpara of Munshiganj's Sirajdikhan and Dhaleshwari Cooperative Society of Baluchar Mouza of the upazila, a seven-storey building on 3 kathas in Bailjuri Mouza of Uttara in Dhaka and six flats in PC Culture Housing of Adabor in the name of Jissan.

"If the value of these properties is fixed, the amount of Benazir family's wealth will increase further. There is a possibility that they have assets abroad. The ACC will collect the information in phases," said an ACC official, seeking anonymity.

According to the progress report, Benazir has movable and immovable properties worth Tk 9.25 crore, Jissan Mirza worth Tk 21.34 crore, Farheen worth Tk 6.10 crore, and Tahseen worth Tk 4.75 crore. The value mentioned in the deeds of immovable assets has been taken into consideration, the report said.

Responding to three petitions of the anti-graft body, a Dhaka court had ordered the authorities concerned to seize and freeze the movable and immovable assets worth Tk 63.46 crore in their names in three phases.

Diplomatic efforts by Arab mediators, backed by the United States, to conclude a ceasefire deal, seemed to be on hold, as Israel was expected to send a delegation for more talks next week.

In northern Gaza, an Israeli air strike on a house in the Sheikh Radwan suburb killed four people, medics said, while seven Palestinians arrived at a hospital in central Gaza who had been detained by Israeli forces and released in an area close to the border.

Flash floods, landslides kill seven in Vietnam

AFP, Hanoi

Flash floods and landslides triggered by heavy rain have killed seven people in northern Vietnam and swept away homes, disaster officials and state media said yesterday.

Five people died in Son La and two others were killed in Dien Bien following the downpours.

Rescue workers are also searching for 10 others reported missing in the mountainous provinces, officials added.

According to Tuoi Tre newspaper, flash floods early yesterday swept away 10 houses and damaged eight homes in Muong Pon commune of Dien Bien province.

Let there be heaps of sporting spirit

The long-awaited quadrennial sports extravaganza is here at last. From the opening ceremony—set to start today at 11:30 pm (Bangladesh time)—to its conclusion on August 11, around 10,000 elite athletes and an estimated 10 million visitors will gather in Paris for the 33rd Summer Olympic Games, marking the first time in 100 years that the City of Light has hosted the world's grandest spectacle. The primary athletics events will take place at the Stade de France, the nation's largest stadium, located on the northern outskirts of Paris. Additionally, there will be 15 Olympic and 11 Paralympic venues scattered throughout the city in existing buildings.

In a historic first, the opening ceremony will be held outside the stadium, with the River Seine also hosting the marathon swimming event and the swimming leg of the triathlon, a century after it held events during the first Paris Games in 1900. Swimming had been banned in the Seine from 1923 until recently due to water-quality issues, but Paris organizers assure that the water will be clean enough for Olympic events.

The official mascot is the Olympic Phryge, a traditional hat once worn by French revolutionaries, representing freedom and highlighting important historical figures of the French Republic.

KEY FIXTURES

There are a dizzying number of medal events—329 in total—with 49 and 48 medals reserved for aquatics and athletics, respectively. The first medal is expected in shooting on July 27, and the last in women's basketball on August 11. The following are the fixtures for 14 of the 32 disciplines likely to capture the interest of Bangladesh audiences:

- ARCHERY: July 25 to August 4
- ATHLETICS: August 1-11 (The men's 100m sprint final is slated for August 4, a day after the women's corresponding event lights up Paris.)
- BADMINTON: July 27 to August 5
- BASKETBALL: July 27 to August 11
- BOXING: July 27 to August 10
- FOOTBALL: July 24 to August 10
- HANDBALL: July 25 to August 11
- HOCKEY: July 27 to August 9
- SHOOTING: July 27 to August 5
- SWIMMING: July 27 to August 4
- TABLE TENNIS: July 27 to August 10
- TENNIS: July 27 to August 4
- VOLLEYBALL: July 27 to August 11
- WEIGHTLIFTING: August 7-11.

WORLD RECORDS WAITING TO BE BROKEN

Athletics: All eyes are on Jamaican sprinter Shericka Jackson, who has the potential to break the women's 200 meters world record set 36 years ago by American legend Florence Griffith Joyner.

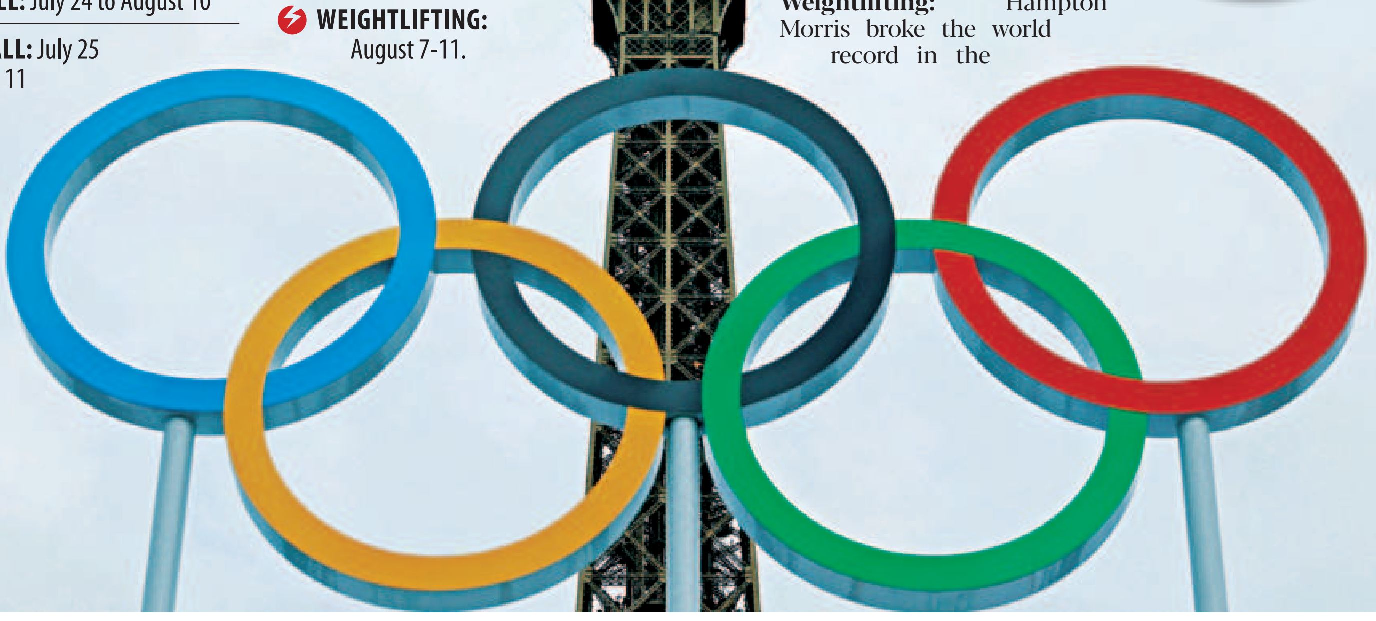
Shericka Jackson

Swimming: Backstroke queen Kaylee McKeown shattered all three backstroke world records in 2023, but the Aussie will be wary of USA's three-time Olympic medalist Regan Smith, who claimed the 100-meter backstroke record this year.

Weightlifting: Hampton Morris broke the world record in the clean and jerk in the 61kg weight class by lifting 176 kilograms at a World Cup in Thailand. The 20-year-old American, coached by his father, is primed for further milestones.

Pole Vault: Swedish pole vaulter Armand Duplantis has broken the world record eight times, and Paris might witness the ninth instance.

Climbing: Sam Watson, only 18, made his mark by breaking the speed climbing world record twice in a single tournament this year. The American teenager is poised to set new benchmarks in this newly added Olympic sport.



TRANSCENDING TRADITIONS

The 2024 Olympics will be the first in history to feature an equal number of male and female athletes, with 5,250 men and 5,250 women participating in the same number of sports and events.

Paris will showcase 32 sports disciplines, including four non-traditional sports: surfing, climbing, skateboarding, and breaking -- a competitive form of breakdancing which originated in New York in the 1970s -- with the latter set to make its Olympic debut, while the other three will make a second appearance after the 2020 Tokyo edition.

A litmus test awaits Tigresses

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh women's side are set to take on in-form India in the semifinals of the 2024 T20 Asia Cup in Dambulla today. Despite making the semis with two back-to-back wins over Thailand and Malaysia, concerns over the batting unit are far from being removed with India bowlers expected to provide a steeper challenge.

The two teams have met 22 times in the shortest format and India have gone from strength to strength, winning 19 of those games. The gargantuan nature of Bangladesh's task is not only highlighted by Bangladesh's batting inconsistencies but also by the prospect of facing a side that won the Asia Cup seven times and are the defending champions.

Bangladesh have beaten India just thrice in 22 T20Is and two of those wins came in the Asia Cup during the 2018 campaign when the Tigresses won the trophy by beating India in the final.

In fact, if the last home series against India which the visitors swept 5-0 in Sylhet is anything to go by, Bangladesh would have to bring out their A-game to grind out a positive result.

Only skipper Nigar Sultana Joty and openers Dilara Akter and Murshida Khatun could make some decent contributions in that series, but even they averaged below 20 in that five-match series.

Bangladesh put on 191 for two in the last game against Malaysia, their second-highest score in the format. It came as a sweet relief when Murshida put on a show with a career-best 59-ball 80 while Joty struck a quickfire 62. Plenty of dropped catches from Malaysian players, however, had aided the Tigresses, who would need more vigilance in their batting plan to cause an upset today.

The Tigresses, however, could take heart from the recent performances of Joty and Murshida. Joty averaged 48 in her last five innings while Murshida's willow has smiled in this Asia Cup with back-to-back fifties that ensured two crucial wins. India's Deepti Sharma is the highest wicket-taker in the tournament so far and Bangladesh would look to both Joty and Murshida to thwart the off-spinner.

Going up against India, who have remained unbeaten so far and cruised to the semifinal after being group champions, Bangladesh will most certainly face a litmus test as the Tigresses lost their only encounter against a top opponent -- their opener against Sri Lanka.

However, Joty sounded optimistic ahead of the crucial semifinal, trying to take inspiration from their triumphant 2018 Asia Cup campaign in which they beat India to lift the trophy for the first time.

"All of us will be looking forward to making it into the final. The last time we played and won the final in 2018, it sort of revolutionised women's cricket in our country," Joty said.

Lim Si-hyeon delivered an emphatic statement yesterday that she is the woman to beat at the Paris Olympics as the 21-year-old shot a world and Olympic record 694 in women's individual ranking round at the stunning Esplanade des Invalides venue, breaking the previous mark of 692 held by compatriot and 2020 Olympic champion Sang Chae-young.

Nayeem, Mushfiqur star on Day 1 of practice game

SPORTS REPORTER

Off-spinner Nayeem Hasan and pacer Khaled Ahmed starred with the ball while veteran batter Mushfiqur Rahim hit a half-century in the opening day of the two-day practice match between BCB Green and BCB Red at the Zahur Ahmed Chowdhury Stadium in Chattogram on Thursday.

Nayeem claimed 4-40 while Khaled finished with 3-30 as BCB Green dismissed BCB Red for a mere 131 in 45.2 overs in their first innings.

Mushfiqur was the top scorer for BCB Red with 50 off 84 balls but he eventually fell to a Khaled delivery after completing his fifty, with his side reduced to 101-9.

Shafiqul Islam, who came to bat at number 10, then hit a brisk 30 off 38 balls with three sixes and a four, providing some late entertainment.

In reply, BCB Green's Mominul Haque made an unbeaten 47 while Naim Sheikh scored 34 as they finished the day on 146-4, with a slight 15-run lead over their opponents.

Pacer Shafiqul was the most successful bowler for BCB Green with two scalps while Nahid Rana and Miraz took one wicket each.

Bangladesh archer Sagor Islam finished 45th out of 64 participants in the ranking round of the men's individual event of the Paris Olympics 2024 after scoring 652 yesterday. Olympic gold medallist Kim Woo-jin of South Korea topped the ranking round, scoring 686. "I actually started well today [Thursday] but due to the weather condition, I made a mistake with an arrow. Overall, I'm satisfied with today's performance," Sagor, whose career best score is 671, said after yesterday's event. PHOTO:PRABIR DAS

Afghan cyclist sisters defy Taliban to fulfil Olympic dream

The Hashimi siblings are the first cyclists - male or female - to represent Afghanistan at the Games. The Taliban government does not recognise the female athletes – the Hashimi sisters and sprinter Kimia Yousofi. Although the Hashimis are the first cyclists to represent their country, they are not the first Afghan women cyclists to compete in the Games. That distinction goes to Masomah Ali Zada who raced in the Tokyo Olympics in 2021 as a member of the Olympic refugee team.

Sri Lanka suffer injury blows ahead of India T20Is

Sri Lanka's fast bowlers Dushmantha Chameera and Nuwan Thushara will miss their home T20I series against India due to illness and injury. Thushara has been ruled out of the T20I series against India after sustaining a fractured thumb on his left hand during a fielding session on Wednesday while SLC confirmed that Chameera is recovering from bronchitis and respiratory infection.

HSC exams postponed till Aug 1

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The HSC and equivalent exams under all education boards scheduled for July 28, 29, 31, and August 1 have been postponed.

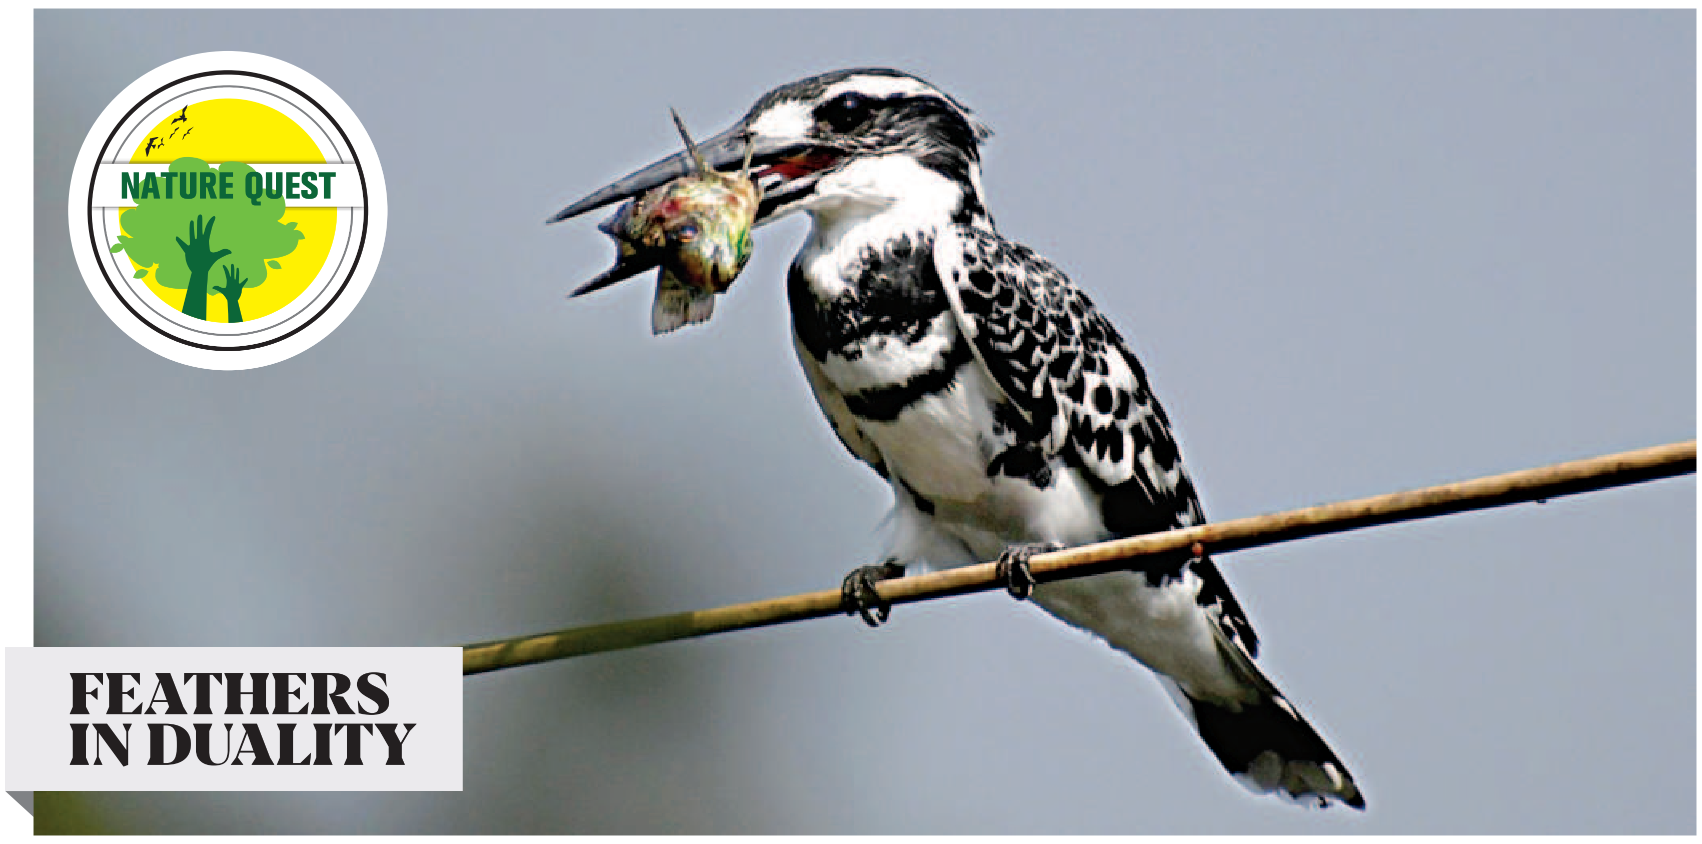
Mohammad Abul Khair, the public relations officer of the education ministry, confirmed the matter to The Daily Star yesterday.

Earlier, the authorities postponed the Higher Secondary Certificate (HSC) and equivalent exams of all education boards scheduled for July 18, 21, 23, and 25.

These newly postponed exams will be scheduled after the previously postponed exams are held, said Prof Tapan Kumar Sarkar, chairman of the Bangladesh Inter-Education Board Coordination Committee and the chairman of Dhaka Education Board.

Earlier, all public and private universities had been declared closed due to the violence surrounding the quota movement.

Additionally, all secondary and higher secondary level educational institutions (schools, colleges, madrasas, and technical institutions) under the Ministry of Education, polytechnic institutes, and all primary schools in city corporation areas were been declared closed until further notice.



FEATHERS IN DUALITY

A male pied kingfisher with his catch of the day, spotted recently in Gaibandha's Gobindaganj upazila. The only black-and-white species of kingfishers are widely distributed across Africa and Asia. The males have two black stripes on the breast, while the females have one single broken line. What further distinguishes them further other kingfishers is their habit of hovering over clear lakes and rivers before diving for fish, which they usually swallow mid-flight. However, they also prey on frogs, insects and even snakes sometimes. They are fast-moving (flying at speeds up to 50kmph) and also have specialised vision systems to detect movement. They are able to see in wide angle views and can also see into the ultraviolet range due to their excellent colour vision. They are sociable and tame birds and prefer staying in groups.

Remembering rock legend Shafin Ahmed

Bangladesh's music industry is reeling from the sudden loss of Shafin Ahmed, the iconic bassist and vocalist of the renowned band Miles. The rebellious rock star passed away at 63 in Virginia, USA. A musical prodigy born to legendary artistes Kamal Dasgupta and Firoza Begum, Shafin's journey from classical roots to rock stardom captivated generations. His untimely death has left fans and fellow musicians in shock, with tributes pouring in from across the country. As Bangladesh grapples with this significant loss, Shafin's enduring legacy continues to shine.

ACC fails to estimate value of some assets

Plans to collect info on their properties abroad

DIPAN NANDY

The Anti-Corruption Commission could not determine the value of some of the properties amassed by former inspector general of police Benazir Ahmed, his wife, and two daughters.

It is planning to collect information about their assets outside the country.

The commission has mentioned this in the progress report prepared for submission before the High Court. The report was supposed to be submitted last week, but it could not be done due to the ongoing nationwide curfew and general holidays.

A senior ACC official told The Daily Star that the progress report is likely to be submitted next week.

ACC lawyer Khurshid Alam Khan told this correspondent yesterday, "I have received the progress report prepared by the ACC. It will be submitted if the High Court sets a date."

According to the report, an investigation began on April 22 against Benazir and her family members following allegations of amassing wealth beyond known sources of income. Benazir, his wife Jissan Mirza, eldest daughter Farheen Rishta Binte Benazir and second daughter Tahseen Raisa Binte Benazir have amassed illegal properties worth Tk 43.46 crore. It has been determined by the government value of land, houses, flats registered, and other assets.

Quota reform protesters yesterday said they would pray at mosques and temples for those killed in recent violence.

They will also form emergency health forces to ensure proper treatments to around 15,000 protesters who were injured across the country, said a press release sent around 12:15am today by Abdul Hannan Masud, a coordinator of the protesters.

The fresh programme was supposed to be announced yesterday, at the end of the protesters' four-day ultimatum.

Two key organisers, Nahid Islam and Asif Mahmud, were supposed to make the announcement at a hospital where they are admitted.

The internet and telephone connections to the hospital were snapped by law enforcement agencies, making it impossible for the two to contact other

Israeli forces advance in southern Gaza

Tanks active in Rafah; 30 more Palestinians killed in airstrikes, shelling

REUTERS, Cairo

Israeli forces advanced deeper into some towns on the eastern side of Khan Younis in southern Gaza yesterday and tanks advanced in central Rafah, with airstrikes and shelling killing 30 Palestinians over the past day, health officials said.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, who told US lawmakers on Wednesday he was actively engaged in bringing hostages home, was expected to meet US President Joe Biden and Vice-President Kamala Harris later yesterday.

Fighting in recent days has centred around the eastern towns of Bani Suaila, Al-Zanna, and Al-Karara, where the army said on Wednesday it had found the bodies of five Israelis.

Later yesterday, Gaza's health ministry said Israeli military strikes on areas in eastern Khan Younis had killed 14 people, taking the death toll across Gaza over the past 24 hours to 30 people with 146 injured. At least 39,175 Palestinians have been killed since the Israeli offensive began on October 7.

Several were wounded in the eastern towns during Israeli tank and aerial shelling, while an airstrike east of Khan Younis killed four people, Palestinian health officials said.

Israeli bombardment intensified in several areas in Rafah, near the border with Egypt, as tanks operated north, west and in the town centre, residents and medics said. Several Palestinians were also wounded in Israeli fire earlier yesterday.

In a speech to the US Congress, Netanyahu said his government was actively involved in seeking the release of remaining hostages and was confident they would succeed.

- Netanyahu says working for a hostage release deal
- Hamas describes comments by Netanyahu as "pure lies"
- Gaza death toll rises to 39,175

Hamas described the comments by Netanyahu as "pure lies" accusing him of thwarting efforts to end the offensive.

Netanyahu's comments also disappointed many displaced Palestinians who had hoped for a clearer signal of an imminent end to the fighting, which has laid the overcrowded enclave to waste and created a humanitarian crisis.

"It was depressing, he didn't even mention ceasefire at all, not even once," said Tamer Al-Burai, a resident of Gaza City, now displaced in Deir Al-Balah in the central Gaza Strip.

"People awaited some surprise, a ceasefire announcement by Netanyahu as a gift to (US President Joe) Biden, but they slept with much disappointment, as Netanyahu said he was determined to pursue offensive," Burai told

QUOTA PROTESTS

2 more hurt in previous clashes die at DMCH

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Two more people, who suffered bullet wounds during the recent clashes centring the quota protests, died at Dhaka Medical College Hospital yesterday.

The deceased are Zaman Mia, 19, a garment worker in Narshingdi, and Zakir Hossain, 29, an employee of a tailor shop in Dhaka's Rayerbagh area, according to the DMCH death register and the victims' family members.

Zaman suffered bullet wounds in his abdomen on the afternoon of July 21. He was rushed to DMCH and admitted to the High Dependency Unit, where he died around 6:00am, said his brother Raihan Mia.

Zakir was shot during the clashes in Rayerbagh area on July 19. Pedestrians rushed him to DMCH where he succumbed to his injuries around 12:30am, his brother Monir Hossain said.

With the two deaths, at least 156 lives have been lost since July 16, when six people were killed in clashes between agitators on one side, and law enforcers, Border Guard Bangladesh, and ruling party activists on the other.

Thirty people died on Thursday, 66 on Friday, 25 on Saturday, 14 on Sunday, six on Monday, three on Tuesday, and four on Wednesday.

The overall death toll from the violence may be higher as The Daily Star could not reach many hospitals where dozens of critically injured patients were taken.

Indian union govt the sole authority on foreign affairs

Says spokesman after Delhi gets Dhaka's note protesting Mamata's comments

OUR CORRESPONDENT, New Delhi

The union government of India has the sole prerogative when it comes to matters of foreign affairs, said a spokesperson of its external affairs ministry acknowledging Dhaka's note issued after Mamata Banerjee's remarks.

West Bengal Chief Minister Mamata on Sunday said her state government would provide shelter to people from violence-hit Bangladesh "if they come knocking on our doors".

Following this, Dhaka issued a diplomatic note to Delhi.

India confirmed that it received the note from Bangladesh which protested Mamata's remarks on Bangladeshi students' quota protest and ticked Mamata off by suggesting that she remains within her state government's jurisdiction.

Arrives a show like no other

AGENCIES

In the midst of its own political upheaval and rising global tensions, France is set to host an unprecedented Olympic showcase, marking a significant departure from traditional stadium settings for the first time since the Summer Olympics began in 1896.

As athletes and visitors converge on Paris, the City of Light aims to shine through its storied past and ambitious present, hoping to leave an indelible mark on Olympic history.

In the presence of 300,000 invited guests, a staggering 10,500 athletes will parade along a six-kilometre stretch of the Seine -- set to host several swimming events after the ban to swim there since 1923 was lifted recently -- concluding in front of the Trocadero, opposite the Eiffel Tower, in an opening ceremony laden with security concerns.

France will deploy its largest post-war security operation for today's opening ceremony. A stringent security perimeter has been established along the Seine, with up to 45,000 police officers, thousands of soldiers, and private security guards

ABU SAYED'S DEATH IN POLICE FIRING

Cops' FIR runs counter to known facts

Says the Rangpur student was killed in firing, throwing of bricks by protesters

SHARIFUL ISLAM and MOHIUDDIN ALAMGIR

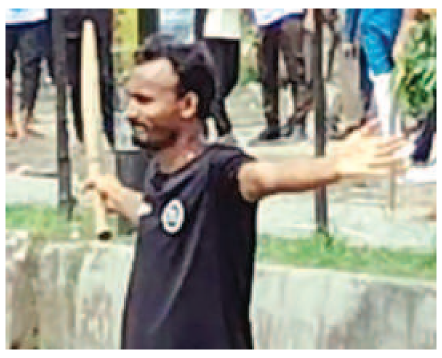
Video footage shows police shooting at Begum Rokeya University student Abu Sayed, who posed no physical threat to the law enforcers, during the quota reform protest near the campus on July 16. He died soon afterwards.

But contradicting what is evident, the First Information Report (FIR) filed by police says Sayed was not a victim of police firing.

"The protesters fired weapons and threw chunks of bricks from different directions, and at one stage, a student was seen falling to the ground," reads the report, adding that classmates took Sayed, 23, to Rangpur Medical College Hospital where doctors pronounced him dead.

Sub-inspector Bibhuti Bhushan Roy, in-charge of the campus police camp, wrote the report.

In the FIR filed with Tajhat police station on July 16, the SI accused 2,000-3,000 unidentified people, including BNP and Jamaat-Shibir activists, of the killing.



When SI Bibhuti was contacted and asked about the footage, he said, "I have just filed the case. The officer carrying out the investigation will verify it."

In two video clips, verified by the Amnesty International, at least two police officers fired 12-gauge shotguns directly at him from across the street. Sayed clutched his chest on impact, and the officers fired at least two more times.

Amnesty International used satellite images to geolocate the positions of Sayed and the police officers and found that they were at a distance of about 15

'Loss of so many lives very painful'

Says PM as she visits the injured at DMCH

UNB, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said appropriate punishment should be meted out for the recent violence across the country to stop the criminals from playing with the lives of the people.

"The situation is very painful. So many people have been killed and injured," she said in an emotion-choked voice while visiting the Dhaka Medical College Hospital in the afternoon.

Hasina went to the hospital around 4:30pm to see the injured who came under attack during the recent violence. She visited the emergency unit of the DMCH and inquiredabout the health of the injured.

The premier reiterated her call to the people to find the culprits behind such heinous acts.

She said she never wanted to see anyone lose their dear ones.

DB picks up three organisers from hospital

Says they 'sought security' from cops

Nahid Islam, Asif Mahmud and Abu Baker Majumder

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Police yesterday afternoon picked up Nahid Islam, Asif Mahmud and Abu Baker Majumder, three key organisers of the quota reform protests, from a city hospital where Nahid and Asif were undergoing treatment.

Junaed Alam Sharker, additional deputy commissioner of the Detective Brach of Dhaka Metropolitan Police, said the three were taken into DB custody as they sought security.

"We will interrogate them about the incidents that took place in the last two days," he told The Daily Star around 12:15 today.

Over 5,500 held in one week

Arrestees include many BNP, Jamaat activists

STAR REPORT

At least 738 more people were arrested in the capital and several other districts in 36 hours till 6:00pm yesterday in connection with the recent violence across the country.

As of yesterday, over 5,522 people, including many BNP and Jamaat leaders, were held in different parts of the country over the last seven days.

So far, the Dhaka Metropolitan Police arrested 2,357 people in 209 cases filed with different police stations over violence, vandalism, and arson at government establishments and other places, said sources in DMP.

Of them, 148 were held yesterday.

According to court documents, 211 people, including several BNP and Jamaat leaders, were produced before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court, Dhaka, in 67 cases yesterday.

A total of 4,784 people were arrested earlier in Dhaka and other districts.

Police held 324 people in 12 districts in 36 hours between 6:00am Thursday and 6:00pm yesterday.

Of them, 154 were arrested in Rajshahi, 64 in Narayanganj, 41 in Chattogram, 1 in Patuakhali, three in Gazipur, seven in Mymensingh, 15 in Kishoreganj, seven in Sylhet, eight in Bogura, two in Gaibandha, 15 in Savar, and seven in Manikganj.

As of Thursday, 173 cases were filed in 18 districts, including eight in Narayanganj and one in Chattogram. Nine of them were lodged on Thursday.

Rab yesterday morning said they arrested 266 people across the country, including 63 in Dhaka, in connection with the violence.

Meanwhile, a Dhaka court yesterday sent former Ducsu VP Nurul Haque Nur to jail after his five-day remand in a case lodged over vandalising and setting fire to Setu Bhaban on July 18.

In a press release yesterday, Gono Odhikar Parishad alleged that Nur, also the president of the organisation, was tortured during remand.

BNP calls for 'national unity' with one-point demand

Urges democratic parties, social and cultural orgs to unite for ousting govt

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday called for national unity among all democratic political parties and socio-cultural organisations to press home a one-point demand -- resignation of the government.

At this critical moment of the nation, the aim of the unity will be restoration of democracy and voting rights, Fakhrul said in a statement sent to the media last night.

"We call for national unity among the parties and alliances involved in the simultaneous movement under BNP's leadership; left and right-wing political parties; Jamaat-e-Islami and other Islamist political parties and organisations."

This announcement on national unity will expedite the movement for people's freedom, he said.

'End crackdown, restore full access to internet'

UN experts urge Bangladesh govt

STAR REPORT

UN experts on Thursday called upon Bangladesh government to immediately ensure accountability for human rights violations, end the violent crackdown against protesters and political opponents, and to fully restore people's access to the internet and social media.

In a statement on the website of the Office of the United Nations' High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), the experts said, "We have been alarmed by the large number of unlawful killings, possible enforced disappearances, torture and the detention of thousands of people.

"We are deeply concerned by reports of targeted attacks, threats, intimidation and retaliation by the authorities and government-aligned groups against protest leaders, political activists, human rights defenders and journalists."

Citing local media in Bangladesh, the statement said at least 170 people, including police personnel, were confirmed dead in the violence centring the quota reform movement, with the actual death toll likely to be much higher. At least two journalists have been killed and several others injured. There are also

BID FOR US PRESIDENT

Barack, Michelle Obama endorse Kamala Harris

REUTERS

Former US president Barack Obama and his wife Michelle endorsed Kamala Harris' bid for president yesterday in a roughly one-minute long video that captured a private phone call between the couple and the current vice president.

"We called to say Michelle and I couldn't be prouder to endorse you and to do everything we can to get you through this election and into the Oval Office," Obama told Harris.

"I am proud of you. This is going to be historic," the former first lady told Harris. Talking into a cell phone and cracking a few smiles, Harris expressed her gratitude for the endorsement and their long friendship.

"Thank you both. It means so much. And we're gonna have some fun with this too," Harris said. The campaign said the video was the actual call, not a reenactment.

Harris's surprise bid against Republican rival Donald Trump continues to gain steam from supporters, donors and politicians less than a week after President Joe Biden bowed out of the race amid slumping poll numbers.

Take steps to restore people's faith in political system

ICG urges govt

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The Awami League government should take steps to restore people's confidence in the political system in Bangladesh after widespread violence rocked the country, said a report by the International Crisis Group (ICG).

The ruling party's 15-year rule has made the country ripe for political upheaval, the ICG report added.

"It should lift martial law, restore internet access and ensure that those responsible for the killings during the protests are held accountable. It also needs to manage the peaceful reopening of universities and free the scores of students arrested over the last week," it said.

Pierre Prakash, programme director of the ICG Asia division, said the biggest challenge the Awami League government faces is how it handles the situation after the party's heavy-handed response to the protest.

"After fifteen years in office, Prime Minister Hasina is facing her most

VANDALISM AT METRO STATION

Journo, five others placed on remand

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday placed six people, including a journalist, on a five-day remand for interrogation in connection with a case filed over the vandalism of the Kazipara Metro Station in the city's Mirpur.

The six are Hafiz Al Asad, Sanaul Haque Niru, Alamgir, Mohiuddin Ahmed Bhuiyan, Abdul Aziz Sultan, and Mayeen.

Hafiz, alias, Saeed Khan, is the organising secretary of a faction of the Dhaka Union of Journalists (DUJ).

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Arobia Khanam passed the order after case investigating officer Asaduzzaman Munshi, an inspector of the Detective Branch (DB) of police, produced the arrestees before her court with a 10-day remand prayer.

The magistrate also rejected a bail petition filed for Saeed Khan, said a sub-inspector working in the court.

According to the case documents, some 5,000-6,000 people attacked the Kazipara Metro Rail Station in Mirpur between 4:30pm and 7:30pm on July 19.

Armed with local weapons, they broke into the Kazipara Metro Rail Station. They vandalised the station, looted valuable machinery and equipment, and torched the place, the investigator said in the police forwarding report submitted before the court.

According to the report, the damages to this metro rail station are estimated to be Tk 100 crore.

95 Libyans detained at suspected military camp

AFP, Johannesburg

South Africa authorities rounded up 95 Libyans in a raid yesterday at a farm that appeared to have been converted into a military training base, police said.

The early morning raid was near the town of White River in the northeastern province of Mpumalanga, about 360 kilometres (220 miles) east of Johannesburg, they said.

"The place, which was initially designated as a training site, appears to have been converted into an illegal military training base," police said in a statement.

"The 95 individuals taken into custody are all Libyan nationals and are currently being questioned by the relevant authorities."

Four more die

Rampura Police Station.

Doctors of the forensic medicine department at DMCH conducted autopsies on the four bodies yesterday, said sources at the mortuary.

With these four deaths, at least 160 lives have been lost since July 16, when six people were killed in clashes between agitators on one side, and law enforcers, Border Guard Bangladesh, and ruling party activists on the other.

Thirty people died on July 18, 66 on July 19, 25 on July 20, 14 on July 21, six on July 22, three on July 23, four on July 24, and two on July 25.

The overall death toll from the violence may be higher, as The Daily Star could not reach many hospitals where dozens of critically injured patients were taken. Also, many families reportedly collected the bodies of their loved ones from the scene, and this newspaper could not contact those families.

The Daily Star's count of the victims is based solely on hospital sources.

Obama has lent his support to Biden during big-money fundraisers, which were among some of the biggest blockbuster events of his campaign.

The endorsement could help activate and sustain energy and fundraising for Harris' campaign and it signals he is likely to get on the campaign trail for Harris once she is officially the presumptive nominee.

Obama initially withheld his endorsement even as Biden, his former vice president, anointed her as his heir apparent. Obama reportedly did not want to put his thumb on the scale as the party worked through the process of determining its nominee.

Cops' FIR runs counter to known facts metres during the shooting. Also, Sayed posed no apparent physical threat to the police, Amnesty International said in a statement on July 18, adding that the police's attack on Sayed was reckless and unprovoked.

Sayed's death certificate said he was "brought dead" to the hospital.

Tuhin Wadud, a teacher of the university who saw Sayed's body at the hospital, said there were shotgun pellet wounds all over the body.

Razibul Islam, head of the forensic medicine department at Rangpur Medical College Hospital, said he died of internal haemorrhage caused by the pellets.

He said an autopsy report will be prepared soon but declined to give details.

Asked about the FIR, Deputy Commissioner (Crime) of Rangpur Metropolitan Police Abu Maruf Hossain said many non-students, including Jamaat-Shibir and BNP men, reportedly used firearms during the protests. The matter will be clear once the investigation concludes.

WHAT IS IN THE FOOTAGE?

Sayed had his arms wide open with a stick in his right hand. He appears to dodge a brick chip. Gunshots were heard. A man, possibly the one filming, shouted, "He got shot."

Sayed again stretched his arms, and a second later, he took a few steps back and sat on the ground.

A man rushed to him and helped him stand up. There were blood stains on his neck, nose and other parts of the body.

Three more protesters then joined and carried him away.

Sayed's killing sparked widespread outrage, with many questioning the justification of police's use of lethal weapons on unarmed protesters.

In the following days, at least 156 people were killed and several thousand wounded in deadly clashes across the country.

The government enforced curfew to tackle the situation, and on July 23 issued a circular, taking merit-based recruitment in civil service to 93 percent from 44 percent. The remaining seven percent will be reserved.

Talking to this newspaper yesterday, rights activist Nur Khan Liton said police's account in the FIR was unacceptable because the shooting took place in broad daylight and it was a cold-blooded killing.

He said police should warn first and then can only shoot aiming at the legs when they have no other option to protect lives, properties and firearms. "The problem is the government party men who get jobs in the police force do not care about the rule of law," he told The Daily Star.

WHO SHOT HIM?

A source in the police said an officer named Yunus Ali fired a weapon at Sayed during a protest on July 16 without authorisation from higher officials. No details could be known.

DC Maruf said that no action has yet been taken against any policeman involved in the shooting.

He only mentioned that police used shotguns, adding that expert opinions would be sought, and actions would follow if rules were violated.

Meanwhile, a four-member committee, led by Additional Commissioner Saifuzzaman Faruki of Rangpur Metropolitan Police, has been formed to investigate the incident. The committee was asked to file its report in two weeks.

Sayed, the youngest of nine siblings, was a student of English. His grieving father and brother said he dreamt of joining the civil service and changing his family's fate.

A day before his death, he wrote on Facebook that he was ready to sacrifice his life for the cause.

His brother Ramzan said he tried to collect the autopsy report from the hospital on Thursday but was asked to obtain it from the court. The family has not filed any case.

disturbing reports of journalists being threatened by authorities for their news reporting.

"Prompt, thorough, independent and impartial investigations in line with internationally recognised standards must be carried out into all human rights violations."

Saying that the government has a history of broken promises with regards to human rights and that there is a lack of public trust in the judiciary, the experts urged the government to initiate a credible accountability process with the support of the UN. The experts offered their assistance in this regard.

"We call on the authorities to immediately release all peaceful protesters and ensure due process for those charged and prosecuted in connection with their role in the violence," they said.

Since the start of July, university students and job seekers have been protesting the reinstatement of the quota system in government jobs, and demanding reforms to the system. On June 5, the High Court effectively reinstated the quota system by declaring illegal a 2018 government circular that abolished it.

The Supreme Court on July 10 issued a status quo on the HC verdict.

According to the statement on the OHCHR website, the violence centring the quota reform movement erupted on July 15, after "inflammatory public statements by Government officials and attacks by Government-aligned youth groups on the peaceful protesters. Law enforcement authorities reportedly rushed in to support government-aligned groups and used excessive force, including live bullets, against unarmed protesters."

It said some of the protesters retaliated, destroying and burning public property and vehicles.

Early on July 18, mobile data was shut off and later that night, the entire country was plunged into digital darkness as broadband internet across the country became unavailable.

The government called a nationwide curfew on the night of July 19, and called in the army.

The statement said the army was given shoot-on-sight orders.

On July 21, the Supreme Court decided to keep seven percent government jobs reserved and open the rest to competition. On July 23, the government issued a circular taking merit-based recruitment in civil service to 93 percent from the previous 44 percent.

According to the OHCHR statement, the authorities in Bangladesh had shut down broadband and mobile internet, preventing access to websites, social media and web-based mobile phone communications.

However, the government and the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission (BTRC) have said the internet shutdown occurred due to an attack on the data centres in the capital's Mohakhali. Broadband internet is slowly being restored since the evening of July 23, while mobile data is yet to be restored. Access to social media has been limited.

The experts said, "The government needs to fully restore the internet and access to social media immediately and ensure that local and foreign media are granted full access to report on the developments without being attacked, threatened or pressured.

"The state must uphold people's right to information. Total transparency and accuracy on the numbers of those detained, forcibly disappeared, killed or subjected to other human rights violations, as well as careful preservation of evidence is essential to ensuring accountability and restoring public trust."

They warned that while a recent decision by the courts to scale back the controversial quota system was an important step in the right direction, it will not be sufficient to restore the people's trust and confidence in the government.

"To regain public trust, the Government needs to take responsibility and ensure a credible process of investigation and accountability to hold perpetrators to account."

They are in contact with the Government of Bangladesh on this matter, the statement said.

The UN experts are Cecilia Bailliet, independent expert on human rights and international solidarity; George Katrougalos, independent expert on the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order; Morris Tidball-Binz, special rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions; Margaret Satterthwaite, special rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers; Irene Khan, special rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression; Surya Deva, special rapporteur on the right to development; Farida Shaheed, special rapporteur on the right to education; Gina Romero, special rapporteur on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association; Mary Lawlor, special rapporteur on the situation of human rights defenders; Alice Edwards, special rapporteur on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; Matthew Gillett (chair); Ganna Yudkivska (vice-chair on communications); Priya Gopalan (vice-chair on follow-up); Miriam Estrada-Castillo and Mumba Malila, Working Group on Arbitrary Detention; Aua Baldé (chair-rapporteur); Gabriella Citroni (vice-chair); Grażyna Baranowska and Ana Lorena Delgadillo Pérez, Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances.

Hasina said her government has taken all necessary steps to improve the socio-economic condition of the people and ensure better life for them.

"My question is what they have gained from it [violence]. So many people have lost their lives, so many families have been affected."

The premier prayed for the salvation of the departed souls of the dead and wished quick recovery of the injured.

"We will do whatever is needed for the treatment of the injured. There is no lack of treatment," she said.

Hasina said physicians, the health minister, and the state minister for health have been visiting the injured and ensuring their proper treatment.

She said she would visit more hospitals to see the injured.

The premier said Jamaat-Shibir, the BNP and Chhatra Dal have been carrying out destructive activities taking an advantage of the quota reform protests.

"They have no sense of humanity, no love and affection for the country, no sense of responsibility towards the country. They do not consider human beings as human beings."

Hasina asked the countrymen to be united against such heinous incidents.

"We have fulfilled all the demands [made by the students]. Then why more [movement]?" she said.

The PM thanked the physicians for giving treatment to the injured.

Health Minister Samanta Lal Sen, State Minister for Health Rokeya Sultana and local lawmaker AFM Bahauddin Nasim, among others, were present.

DB picks up three organisers from hospital

In the evening yesterday, families of the three and hospital staffers said a group of people in plainclothes went to the Gonoshasthaya Nagar Hospital in the capital's Dhanmondi at 3:30pm and forcibly took them out to an undisclosed place.

The plainclothes men picked up Nahid from his cabin on the sixth floor of the hospital. They then went to Asif's cabin on the second floor. They also picked up Baker while he was bringing food for Asif.

They took away the mobile phones of Nahid, his sister Fatima Tasnim, Asif and Baker.

Fatima said her brother is not involved in any anti-government activities. "They are not affiliated with any political parties. We urge all to ensure our safety."

This is the second time the trio -- all students of Dhaka University -- have been picked up in just a week.

Nahid was picked up in the early hours of July 20 allegedly by law enforcers from a house in the capital's Sabujbagh. He alleged that he was tortured physically until he lost unconsciousness. When he gained consciousness, he found himself under a bridge in Purbachal. He went to his home by a CNG-run auto rickshaw.

Both Asif and Bakar were picked up on July 19. The two wrote on Facebook that they were blindfolded and left in Hatirjheel and Dhanmondi areas on July 24. Neither of them mentioned who picked them up.

This paper could not reach the family members of the three early today for comments as their phones were switched off.

As per an earlier announcement, the coordinators of the anti-quota protests were scheduled to brief the media about the overall situation at a press briefing in front of the Shaheed Suhrawardy Medical College Hospital yesterdayevening.

Abdul Hannan Masud, coordinator of the Anti-discrimination Student Movement, told journalists that they would hold the briefing at 7:30pm.

Journalists from different media outlets waited at the hospital, but the coordinators did not appear until 8:30pm.

Contacted, Masud told The Daily Star at 8:35pm that they were under "huge pressure" and doubtful about holding the press briefing.

The anti-quota quota protesters could not hold the briefing as of 9:30pm.

In another development, a Dhaka court yesterday sent six leaders of BNP and Jamaat, including BNP Publicity Affairs Secretary Sultan Salauddin Tuku, to jail, after completion of five-day remand in a case lodged over vandalising the BTV Bhaban in Rampura.

The five other accused are BNP leaders Qazi Sayedul Alam Babul, Aminul Haque, MA Salam, Mahmudus Salehin, and Jamaat Secretary General Miah Golam Parwar.

At a press briefing yesterday, Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner (Detective Branch) of DMP, said they arrested six people, including Demra thana unit Chhatra Dal convener Masud Rana, in different parts of the capital over the killings of two policemen in Jatrabari and Shanir Akhra.

The five others are Irfan, Abu Bakar, Rabiul Islam, Sourav Mia, and Tarek.

They were arrested after analysing footage, said police.

Harun said a group of 25-30 people, including the arrestees, stayed in Jatrabari's Rayerbagh on July 19 to take part in the quota reform protest.

"The killings and destruction were carried out in a planned way in the name of quota protest. The BNP-Jamaat tried many times to oust the democratic government."

Harun said those who killed police personnel, ordinary people, and vandalised government establishments will not be spared.

‘We demand UN probe into the killings’

Protesting the deaths during the countrywide violence centring the recent quota reform protests, as well as false cases and indiscriminate arrests, cultural and social organisations yesterday demanded fair and impartial investigations under the United Nations.

Under the banner of “Protesting Cultural and Social Organisation”, they organised a rally in front of the Jatiya Press Club around 11:00am.

“We witnessed the Joj Miah drama during the previous judicial probe. Therefore, we want fair and impartial investigations under the United Nations,” she demanded.

Mentioning that critically injured people were rushed from hospital to hospital after sustaining injuries from police firing, she said, “The hospitals refused to provide them with treatment. We condemn such a health system.”

She demanded the resignation of the ministers responsible for the killings, an end to “dirty politics” on campuses, and the immediate reopening of educational institutions after ensuring safety of the students.

Addressing the rally, Daily Samakal Advisory Editor Abu Sayeed Khan said the quota reform protest was a just one.

Anti-mosquito drives slow down due to unrest

Experts fear dengue cases may rise as a result

HELEMUL ALAM

Anti-mosquito drives have either remained completely suspended in some areas or been slowed down since the recent unrest in the country centring the quota reform protests.

This may result in a rapid increase in dengue cases, fear experts. They said if not addressed quickly, the situation may become alarming.

According to the Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS), dengue cases in July have nearly doubled from June, rising from 798 to 1,747.

The total number of cases until July 26 stands at 5,398, with 60.9 percent male and 39.1 percent female patients. The death toll has reached 51, with females accounting for 52.9 percent of the fatalities.

Entomologist GM Saifur Rahman said while the reduced rainfall is somewhat positive, the anti-mosquito drives have become irregular, and in some instances, non-existent, due to the recent violence.

He said anti-mosquito drives should resume in all places as the upcoming days will be challenging due to the potential emergence of Den-2 variant.

Last year, the country faced approximately 3,21,179 dengue cases, primarily caused by the Den-2 variant.

Entomologist Kabirul Basar warned that dengue cases are expected to rise significantly next month due to the early July rains.

The slowdown in anti-mosquito activities has likely contributed to mosquito breeding, necessitating immediate action.

Public health expert Mushtaq Hossain emphasised the importance of proper solid waste management to combat Aedes mosquitoes.

He advocated for a nationwide cleaning drive to address dengue and other health issues, adding that dengue is no longer confined to urban areas.

Mushtaq stressed the need for integrated efforts to control Aedes mosquitoes, with community engagement and government leadership.

He also called for a reformed healthcare management system to reduce dengue fatalities, proposing a three-tiered approach: primary, secondary, and hospital care.

He explained that primary healthcare should involve local facilities in every city ward for early diagnosis and treatment, easing the burden on hospitals. Secondary healthcare should cater to at-risk patients, such as pregnant women, the elderly, and children, reducing the strain on major hospitals and critical care units.

Mushtaq said the lack of manpower, medicines, and diagnostic facilities at village and upazila levels hampers early detection and treatment of dengue.

The year 2023 was marked by the worst outbreak of dengue since the disease’s first official appearance in 2000. As of December 31, 2023, DGHS reported 321,179 hospitalisations and 1,705 deaths due to the dengue outbreak.

In 2000, the nation experienced 93 deaths and 5,551 cases, with the highest recorded death toll before 2023 being 281 in 2022. The highest number of cases before 2023 was 101,354 in 2019.

In 2023, dengue fatalities saw 970 female and 735 male victims, while in terms of cases, 60 percent were male and 40 percent female.

‘Punish those involved with the killings’

Shujan calls for commission to probe each death

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Shushashoner Jonno Nagorik (Shujan) yesterday demanded the formation of a commission comprising neutral persons and experts to investigate each killing during the countrywide violence centring the quota reform movement.

Shujan, a civil society platform, in a statement signed by its President M Hafizuddin Khan and Secretary Badiul Alam Majumdar, also demanded the punishment of those involved in these incidents.

“We are deeply concerned by the ongoing deadlock caused by the students’ protest to reform the quota system. The number of deaths from violence is escalating daily... We believe that these numerous deaths are attributable to provocative government statements, instigation by vested quarters, and the excessive use of force by law enforcement agencies,” said the statement.

“It is unacceptable for any independent and democratic country to suffer such a loss of life in the pursuit of rights. We believe that every life is precious. These lives cannot be replaced,” it added.

The organisation asserted that violence perpetrated in the name of a movement, as well as attacks, vandalism, and arson targeting government establishments, are completely unjustified.

It demanded that those responsible for damaging state property be brought to justice.

Fifty academicians, under the banner of Bangladeshi Communication Scholars in North America (BCSNA), have expressed deep concern over the “government’s crackdown on student protesters in Bangladesh”.

In a statement yesterday, they expressed solidarity with students protesting against the discriminatory quota system in government jobs and demanded justice for the deaths of unarmed civilians.

They also called for a cessation of ongoing legal harassment.

BCSNA supports the student community’s calls for broader political reforms and holding perpetrators accountable, the statement reads.

Although the Supreme Court ruled in favour of the students’ demands, its implementation is pending. The protesters, who began their peaceful advocacy in mid-July, faced severe repression from the government, the platform said.

According to a BBC report, police responded with “shotgun fire, tear gas, and sound grenades,” resulting in nearly 200 student deaths and thousands of injuries, they claimed.

Mahbubul Haque laid to rest

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Chattogram

Renowned linguist Mahbubul Haque was laid to rest in the central graveyard of Chittagong University yesterday.

Before the burial, his body was taken to a mosque in the port city, where his namaz-e-janaza was held after the Juma prayers.

He was also given a "guard of honour" there, and then his body was taken to the university campus.

After the Asr prayers, another namaz-e-janaza was held at the university central mosque.

Earlier, a tribute programme was organised at Shilpakala Academy at 10:30am, where his body was kept till 12:00pm for people to pay their respects.

People from all walks of life, including educationists, writers, artists, journalists and political figures, paid their respects during the programme.

With the death of Mahbubul Haque, Bangladesh has lost a highly accomplished researcher, said speakers at the tribute programme.

Fuel transport starts amid tight security

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

Four oil carrier wagons left Chattogram for Dhaka, Sylhet and Dohazari and Hathazri upazilas yesterday amid tight security. Two more are waiting at Patenga depot in Chattogram to leave for Rangpur and Sreemangal.

Border Guard Bangladesh (BGB) members escorted the fuel carrier trains from Chattogram.

According to the information of the control room of the railway transport department, a train with 24 oil carrier wagons left for Dhaka at around 5:30am on Friday. Besides, another train with 16 oil carrier wagons left for Sylhet at 6:30am.

Meanwhile, a train with 12 fuel carrier wagons left Chattogram for Dohazari Power Station at 10:00am, while another train with 12 fuel carrier wagons left Chattogram for Hathazari upazila at 11:00am.

A press release signed by Chattogram-8 BGB Commander Lt Col Shahed Minhaj Siddiqui informed that a platoon member of BGB was on security duty in each fuel carrier train.

British MP Rupa Huq questions situation in Bangladesh

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh-origin British MP Rupa Huq has raised a question in the UK parliament on the current situation in Bangladesh.

Addressing the parliament on Thursday, she wanted to know the UK government's stand on the Bangladesh situation from Leader of the House of Commons Lucy Powell, given the recent protests and violence centring quota in government jobs.

She said the deaths of students and protesters ran three figures. Due to the countrywide internet shutdown, she said they could not know much about what is going on in the country.

She sought an urgent government statement on UK's position about Bangladesh's situation saying, "We have a historic unique role in this situation."

In response, Lucy Powell said the UK is deeply concerned about the violence in Bangladesh in recent days and said the loss of life is unacceptable.

"The right to protest must be restored and access to the internet should also be restored. We urge all sides to have restraint in this regard," she said.

She said the foreign secretary and foreign office ministers would update the House.

'We will take steps against attackers, but won't harass students'

Hasan Mahmud says govt has proof of Tarique's involvement

UNB, Dhaka

Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud yesterday said every incident of recent attacks and sabotage will be investigated to deliver justice but genuine students will not be harassed.

"Those who killed PS of Gazipur ex-mayor Jahangir and policeman in Dhaka, those who hanged their bodies, threw BCL activists from a six-storey building in Chattogram, and burned public and private properties will not be spared. I have seen the footage of vandalism and arson on the BTV building. Those who carried out these attacks will not be spared from legal action," he said.

Speaking at a discussion at Jatiya Press Club, the minister said many people were prosecuted after the sabotage in 2013-14, some escaped through the loopholes of the law. "That won't happen this time. Every attacker will be brought to justice," said Hasan Mahmud.

He said attacks on the state were ordered by BNP's Tarique Rahman, adding that a voice record of Tarique has come into the hands of the government. "If you carry out a big attack, get a big post. Break the curfew; if not, leave the post," the minister quoted Tarique as saying.

The platform condemned the imposition of curfew and internet shutdowns–which they believe resulted in a total communication blackout.

BCSNA highlighted the historical significance of student movements in Bangladesh, noting students' role in the 1952 Language Movement and the 1971 War for Liberation.

The current protests continue this legacy, now focusing on broader issues of autocratic oppression, corruption, and social injustices, BCSNA said.

The BCSNA strongly criticised the government's handling of the protests and urged the international community to pressure the Bangladeshi government to stop the violence. They called for the resignation of responsible officials and demanded justice for the student protesters.

The signatories include Anis Rahman, faculty at the department of communication in University of Washington; Khairul Islam, faculty at communication studies in State University of New York; Fahmidul Haq, faculty at Bard NYC Bard College; Najifa Farhat, PhD researcher/Graduate student at journalism department in University of Montana; and Priyanka Kundu, PhD researcher/Graduate student at Communication department in University of Illinois Chicago, among others.

He asked the government to resign immediately by handing over power to a non-partisan, neutral government to hold an impartial election and ensure the safety of people's lives and property.

He alleged that the AL regime has become desperate to arrest BNP leaders, activists and students by unleashing all the state forces and ruling party cadres.

As per the government's statistics, Fakhrul said at least 3,000 people were arrested in connection with the student movement.

He said the opposition leaders are being produced before the court four to five days after being picked up and repressed, which is a gross violation of law and human rights.

Fakhrul also called for the withdrawal of the "false" cases filed against all the arrested opposition leaders and their immediate unconditional release.

of August 21 are the same perpetrators even in 2024. They are BNP and Jamaat."

He said BNP and Jamaat do not trust the country or its people. "Now that their terrorist character has been exposed, they are seeking foreign intervention to escape responsibility."

The minister continued, "The destructive actions carried out domestically and internationally under the guise of the movement will not be tolerated by the people. The situation in the country will return to normal soon."

Quader said the "radical lefts and foreign conspirators" are assisting the BNP-Jamaat axis.

The statement called for increased capacity and preparedness within relevant government institutions to safeguard the state's critical infrastructure.

The organisation urged the government to prevent future harassment of students related to this movement and to ensure the safety of students on university campuses.

It also demanded an end to dirty politics on campuses and the regular holding of university student union elections to foster student leadership.

The civil society platform urged the immediate resolution of all deadlocks through dialogue with leaders of the anti-discrimination student movement by accepting their logical demands.

movement, resulting in numerous deaths. Even after such a large number of deaths, the government shows no regret," he added.

Expressing solidarity with the protests, BLAST Honorary Executive Director Barrister Sara Hossain said they are not getting the actual number of deaths.

"We have the right to know the actual number of deaths... Going through the government's statements, it seems they are more concerned about property than lives. Are properties more valuable than lives?" she added.

Dhaka University Professor Samina Lutfa said the country was now under "autocratic rule".

"Thousands of people were injured in firings of the law enforcement agencies. More than 200 were killed. The government must take responsibility for these killings," she said, demanding justice for the victims.

A total of 31 cultural and social organisations participated in the programme. In the gap between speeches, cultural organisations sang songs and recited poems protesting the killings.

She inspected different parts of the BTV Bhaban, which was set on fire by a mob during the student protests for reformation of the quota system in public service.

Hasina said BNP and Jamaat-Shibir activists, gathering from across the country, carried out these attacks in the capital.

"They carried out these attacks using the anti-quota demonstration," she said.

State Minister for Information and Broadcasting Mohammad Ali Arafat and BTV senior officials including its Director General Md Jahangir Alam, briefed the prime minister about the damages of the state-owned television centre.

Pakistan using 'proxy war' to stay relevant

Says Modi

REUTERS, New Delhi

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi said yesterday that Pakistan is trying to stay relevant through "terrorism" and "proxy war" but its "unholy plans" will never succeed.

The nuclear-armed neighbours share an uneasy relationship and India has, for decades, accused Pakistan of backing Islamist militants fighting its rule in Kashmir, the Himalayan region both claim in full but rule only in part.

Pakistan denies the accusations, saying it only provides diplomatic and moral support to Kashmiris seeking self-determination in the Muslim-majority region. Modi's comments came at an event to mark the 25th anniversary of India's short military conflict with Pakistan in Kargil.

Regional security chiefs arrive in Myanmar for talks

AFP, Bangkok

National security chiefs from six South and Southeast Asian countries have arrived in Myanmar for regional talks, state media reported yesterday, in a rare visit for the isolated and embattled junta.

National security chiefs from Bangladesh, Bhutan, India, Nepal, Thailand and Sri Lanka arrived on Thursday, the Global New Light of Myanmar reported.

The six countries, plus Myanmar, make up the Bay of Bengal Initiative for Multi-Sectoral Technical and Economic Cooperation (BIMSTEC) group, loosely focused on trade.

Junta chief Min Aung Hlaing met BIMSTEC officials ahead of the talks which began yesterday.

They discussed "peace and stability... cooperation among member states in drug eradication, combatting terrorism, anti-human trafficking," the newspaper said.

AFP has contacted the embassies of the six countries for comment.

Myanmar has been in turmoil since the military seized power in 2021 and launched a sweeping crackdown on dissent.

It is now battling established ethnic minority armed groups and newer "People's Defence Forces" that are fighting its rule, and together have seized swathes of territory.

Rights groups accuse the military of massive human rights abuses as it struggles to crush its opponents.

IRAQ, SYRIA

Rockets launched at bases hosting US troops

AFP, Baghdad

Several rockets were launched Thursday and yesterday against bases hosting troops from the US-led anti-jihadist coalition in Iraq and Syria, security officials and a war monitor said.

Such attacks were frequent early in the war between Israel and Hamas Palestinian militants in Gaza but since then have largely halted.

"Four rockets fell in the vicinity" of Ain al-Assad base in Anbar province, an Iraqi security source said.

Another security official said an attack occurred with "a drone and three rockets" that fell close to the base perimeter.

A United States official said initial reports indicated that projectiles landed outside the base without causing injuries or damage to the base.

All sources spoke on condition of anonymity because they are not authorised to speak to the media.

At least one rocket also fell near a base of the coalition in the Conoco gas field in Deir Ezzor province of eastern Syria, according to the Britain-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights war monitor.

WEEKS OF ISRAELI BOMBARDMENT

Gaza civilians shelter in former prison

REUTERS, Gaza

After weeks of Israeli bombardment left them with nowhere else to go, hundreds of Palestinians have ended up in a former Gaza prison built to hold murderers and thieves.

Yasmeen al-Dardasi said she and her family passed wounded people they were unable to help as they evacuated from a district in the southern city of Khan Younis towards its Central Correction and Rehabilitation Facility.

They spent a day under a tree before moving on to the former prison, where they now live in a prayer room. It offers protection from the blistering sun, but not much else.

Dardasi's husband has a damaged kidney and just one lung, but no mattress or blanket.

"We are not settled here either," said Dardasi, who like many Palestinians fears she will be uprooted once again.

Palestinians, many of whom have been displaced several times, say nowhere is free of Israeli bombardment, which has reduced much of Gaza to rubble.

An Israeli air strike killed at least 90 Palestinians in a designated humanitarian zone in the Al-Mawasi area on July 13, the territory's health ministry said, in an attack that Israel said targeted Hamas' elusive military chief Mohammed Deif.

On Thursday, Gaza's health ministry said Israeli military strikes on areas in eastern Khan Younis had killed 14 people.

Entire neighbourhoods have been flattened in one of the most densely populated places in the world, where poverty and unemployment have long been widespread.

According to the United Nations, nine in ten people across Gaza are now internally displaced.

Israeli soldiers told Saria Abu Mustafa and her family that they should flee for safety as tanks were on their way, she said. The family had no time to change so they left in their prayer clothes.

After sleeping outside on sandy ground, they too found refuge in the prison, among piles of rubble and gaping holes in buildings from the battles which were fought there. Inmates had been released long before Israel attacked.

"We didn't take anything with us. We came here on foot, with children walking with us," she said, adding that many of the women had five or six children with them and that water was hard to find.

She held her niece, who was born during the conflict, which has killed her father and brothers.

More than 39,000 Palestinians have been killed in the air and ground offensive, Palestinian health officials said.

Hana Al-Sayed Abu Mustafa arrived at the prison after being displaced six times.

'I will not be silent'

Says US VP Harris after tough talks with Netanyahu on Gaza ceasefire deal

REUTERS, Washington

US Vice President Kamala Harris pressured Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu on Thursday evening to help reach a Gaza ceasefire deal that would ease the suffering of Palestinian civilians, striking a tougher tone than President Joe Biden.

"It is time for this war to end," Harris said in a televised statement after she held face-to-face talks with Netanyahu.

Harris, the likely Democratic presidential nominee after Biden dropped out of the election race on Sunday, did not mince words about the humanitarian crisis gripping Gaza after nine months of Israeli offensive.

"We cannot allow ourselves to be numb to the suffering and I will not be silent," she said.

Harris' remarks were sharp and serious in tone and raised the question of whether she would be more aggressive in dealing with Netanyahu if elected president on November 5.

But analysts do not expect there would be a major shift in US policy toward Israel, Washington's closest ally in the Middle East.

SOUTHEAST ASIA

China, Russia vow to counter 'extra-regional forces'

AFP, Vientiane

China and Russia's foreign ministers met their Southeast Asian counterparts yesterday after vowing to counter "extra-regional forces", a day before Washington's top diplomat was due to arrive.

Wang Yi and Sergei Lavrov were attending a three-day meeting of the 10-member Association of Southeast Asian Nations (Asean) bloc in the Laos capital Vientiane.

Both held talks with counterparts from the bloc, while Wang also met with new British Foreign Secretary David Lammy.

On Thursday Wang and Lavrov agreed to work together in "countering any attempts by extra-regional forces to interfere in Southeast Asian affairs", according to Moscow's foreign ministry.

They also discussed implementing "a new security architecture" in Eurasia, Lavrov said in a statement, without elaborating.

According to a readout from Chinese state news agency Xinhua, Wang said Beijing was "ready to work with Russia to... firmly support each other, safeguard each other's core interests".

China is a close political and economic ally of Russia, and Nato members have branded Beijing a "decisive enabler" of Moscow's war in Ukraine.

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken is expected to arrive in Vientiane this morning for talks with Asean foreign ministers.

Blinken has made Washington's alliances in Asia a top foreign policy priority, with the aim of "advancing a free and open" Indo-Pacific -- a veiled way of criticizing China and its ambitions.

OIL SPILL FROM TANKER

Philippines races to avoid 'catastrophe'

AFP, Limay

The Philippine Coast Guard yesterday raced to offload 1.4 million litres of industrial fuel oil from a sunken tanker and prevent an "environmental catastrophe" in Manila Bay.

One crew member died when the MT Terra Nova sank in rough seas nearly seven kilometres (4.3 miles) off Limay municipality early Thursday after setting out for the central city of Iloilo.

An oil slick stretching several kilometres was detected in the waterway, which thousands of fishermen and tourism operators rely on for their livelihoods.

Coast guard spokesman Rear Admiral Armando Balilo said yesterday the spill was "minimal" and that it appeared to be diesel fuel used to power the tanker and not the industrial fuel oil cargo. "No oil has been leaking from the tank itself, so we're racing against time to siphon the oil so we can avoid the environmental catastrophe," Balilo said.

The coast guard has set a target of seven days to offload the cargo and prevent what Balilo warned would be the worst oil spill in Philippine history if it were to leak.

AFP journalists at the Port of Limay in Bataan province watched coast guard personnel load oil dispersant and a suction skimmer onto a boat to be used against the slick.

Balilo said oil spill containment booms had also been deployed in preparation "for the worst case scenario" of the industrial fuel oil leaking before it could be offloaded.

Once the weather improved, coast guard divers would inspect the position of the tanker so the "siphoning operation" could get under way, he said.

The coast guard met with representatives of the MT Terra Nova's owner and a contracted salvage company yesterday to discuss the timeline.

Plan to tax super-rich divides at G20 meet in Rio

AFP, Rio De Janeiro

Brazil's vision for a global deal to tax the ultra-rich sparked divisions Thursday at a meeting of G20 finance ministers in Rio de Janeiro, where the US dismissed the need for an international accord on the matter.

The initiative, discussed at an afternoon meeting, is a key priority for Brazil's leftist president Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva, who this year heads the G20 grouping of the world's major economies, the European Union and the African Union.

Even before talks began, US Treasury Secretary Janet Yellen dampened the mood by saying there was no need for a global agreement on taxing billionaires.

"Tax policy is very difficult to coordinate globally," she told journalists. "We think that all countries should make sure that their taxation systems are fair and progressive."

Television thrives amidst internet outage
CAN IT KEEP ITS VIEWERS?

ILLUSTRATION: DOWEL BISWAS

"After almost five years, our family came together to watch television during the internet outage. It was fun, and reminded us of the old times when we used to watch cable TV together," said Parul, who works as a nurse at a private hospital.

RAKSHANDA RAHMAN MISHA

This sentiment resonated across the country as people left their mobile phones to watch their TV screens for a change.

My brain, accustomed to surfing the internet all day, found peace in switching channels with my trusty old friend, the remote control. After watching piles of excruciating news about the rampage and ruins of our country, I found an escape in funny serials and old Bangla movies on TV.

Amid the chaos, I found solace in Deepto TV's popular drama Bokulpur and Gaan Bangla's musical programme Wind of Change. Then it struck me—what had happened to television? Why did it lose its charm? Will it be able to sustain the sudden rise in TV ratings with quality content?

Curious, I asked my Gen-Z cousin for her take on television content. "I think I'm going to lose my mind if I have to stay without the internet. I can't stand those cringe Bangla movies and slapstick comedies anymore," said Zaira.

ILLUSTRATION: SALMAN SAKIB SHAHRYAR

"Television channel owners should have considered people's tastes and taken digital media as a strong competitor to produce quality programmes. Unfortunately, they failed to meet expectations, leading to a decline in viewership," said Ibn Hasan Khan, director of Sales and Marketing at Channel i.

Alfred Kokhon, head of programs at NTV, shared a similar sentiment. He stated, "We have both television and an OTT platform. However, we always air the latest episodes first on our channel. But since the audience has options, viewership gets distributed. When there was no online option, everything was centralised on TV. If television starts producing quality content that caters to our local audiences' tastes, viewers will surely watch it."

To be fair, television channels could not have predicted the situation and instantly formulated a plan to keep its sudden viewership. "We are going through a crisis period right now, and sticking with scheduled content for the time being. However, we are hopeful that once we get through this, we will come up with ideas to draw audiences back to television," said Ibn Hasan.

While the internet was down, TV ratings skyrocketed. Most TV channels have confirmed that their ratings have doubled, although they couldn't provide actual figures as data couldn't be gathered physically. How did they assume their content was reaching the audience? The answer lies in the constant stream of advertisement breaks.

"The viewership of our series is also increasing. Many people are watching our series Ghorer Shotru Bivishon and Jonakir Alo. Increased viewership means more advertisements for NTV. With online platforms still temporarily off, people are turning to television. When sponsors are eager to place ads on our content, it confirms that viewers are watching it more," said Alfred Kokhon.

While other channels are airing old series and reruns of previous episodes, Deepto TV is committed to highlighting new episodes for their viewers.

"We could have showcased repeats of old episodes of our popular series, but we didn't. We don't want to bank episodes; instead, we aim to show fresh episodes to our viewers. If we run out of episodes, we have decided to ensure pick-and-drop service for our artistes so that they can film safely. This initiative is our effort to retain our audience. We are confident that this approach will help retain a small percentage of our viewers," said COO Subarna Parvin of Deepto TV.

Deepto TV, known for its series-based content, saw a significant increase in viewership during the internet outage. Their dramas "Mashrafe Junior," "Bokulpur," and "Dena Pawna" have a massive fanbase that grew even larger during this period.

Recently, Channel i's tele-fiction "Tithidor" has been praised for raising awareness about depression in adults. The channel also enjoys a dedicated fanbase with its "Punorjonmo" series. Ibn Hasan Khan of Channel i is confident that the popularity of television will sustain in the long run against OTT platforms.

"Although the popularity of this medium is increasing, it still hasn't fully taken away the charm of television. The reason is that only a certain sector of people is connected to digital media, while a large number of people still watch television. Television still has a significant scope to attract an audience by offering good content," added Ibn Hasan.

While it's true that the popularity of OTT.

Lady Gaga alters breathing technique to sing in 'Joker 2'

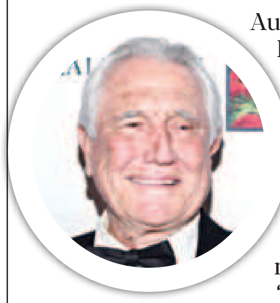
Lady Gaga is all set to feature a different vocal style, for her rendition of the DC character Harley "Lee" Quinn in the Todd Phillips directorial film Joker: Folie à Deux, also starring Joaquin Phoenix.

The Grammy and Oscar-winning artiste told Empire magazine that her portrayal of the iconic character from Batman: The Animated Series will showcase a new talent in the musical.

She explained, "I focused intensely on changing my usual breathing techniques to sing in a way that comes from Lee, rather than from the artiste people know me as."

"There are quite a few off-key moments in my singing as Lee because she wouldn't know that as a classically trained vocalist, I control my breathing to stay on pitch and maintain rhythm. For Lee, I let go of these technical elements, setting aside my training to fully embrace the character."

'James Bond' star George Lazenby announces retirement



Australian actor George Lazenby, renowned for his portrayal of James Bond in the 1969 classic On Her Majesty's Secret Service, has officially retired from acting. Lazenby shared his decision on the social media platform X, as reported by Variety.

"This hasn't been an easy decision, but it's time to announce my retirement from work. Therefore, I won't be doing any more acting or making public appearances, doing any more interviews, or signing any more autographs as of today," Lazenby posted.

The actor expressed heartfelt gratitude to his fans for their unwavering support over the years. Lazenby's tenure as the world's most famous secret agent was the shortest, starring in only one James Bond film. Despite this, his role left a lasting impression on the franchise.

Beyond James Bond, Lazenby appeared in other notable projects, such as The Man from Hong Kong (1975) and Never Too Young to Die (1986).

The disease is climate inaction," he stressed, calling in particular on G20 countries to take action.

While 2023 was the hottest year on record, and 2024 could set a new record, temperatures well above 40C (104F) are increasingly common.

In the space of a year, the 50C threshold has even been exceeded in at least 10 places, from Death Valley in the United States (53.9C on July 7) to Agadir in Morocco, and also in China and India.

The intense heat, often less visible than other devastating impacts of climate change such as storms or floods, is nonetheless more deadly.

This "silent killer" is responsible for around 489,000 deaths per year between 2000 and 2019, compared with 16,000 deaths per year from cyclones, according to the UN's "Call to Action" document published on Thursday.

Extremely high temperatures also have an economic impact, with the UN estimating economic losses from heat stress at work will reach $2.4 trillion in 2030.

According to a report by the International Labor Organization published on Thursday, more than 70 percent of workers were exposed to excessive heat in 2020, 8.8 percent more than in 2000.

"The good news is that we can save lives and we can limit its impact," Guterres said Thursday.

The UN has called for the world community to first act to protect "the most vulnerable" -- including young children, the elderly and also humanity's poorest.

In this context, early warning systems should include extreme heat, warning populations of the arrival of heat waves and informing them of the precautions to take, the document says.

The call to action also recommends an "increase (to) equitable access to and scale up (of) low-carbon cooling."

This would involve investing in passive cooling systems -- which include climate-sensitive urban design measures, reflective surfaces and natural cooling systems -- and the phase-out of climate-warming gases that are used in many cooling systems.

It said Bangladesh authorities imposed an internet shutdown and severely disrupted mobile data services on July 18. Broadband internet was partially restored in limited areas on Tuesday evening, but mobile services and social media remained blocked as of July 26.

CPJ also said it has confirmed attacks on 14 journalists and was continuing to investigate reports that dozens more have been assaulted either by police, protesters, or supporters of Bangladesh Chhatra League.

Of the 14, several required hospital treatment for injuries, including head wounds, it added.

Referring to various sources, including media reports, CPJ said Mehedi, a reporter for Dhaka Times, was fatally shot on July 18 while covering clashes in Jatrabari. Hossain, a correspondent for Daily Bhorer Awaj newspaper, was also killed on July 18 while reporting in Gazipur. Turab, a reporter for the Daily Jalalabad and Daily Naya Diganta, was killed when police allegedly fired on a procession of the BNP in northeast Sylhet city on July 19.

serious crisis yet," said the Brussels-based global think tank.

The report details the origin of the quota reforms protest, corruption in the job sector, lack of political freedom and the authorities' heavy-handed approach to protesters.

"The Awami League government has the coercive tools to hold onto power and the past week's events have shown that it is willing to go to great lengths to crush challenges to its authority," it said.

"But if it survives through brute force alone, its legitimacy will be greatly diminished, particularly among the students who led the demonstrations."

Bangladesh risks losing RMG orders to competitors elsewhere in the region due to political instability, said Pierre Prakash, adding that the impact of the protests will place further stress on the country's ailing economy.

Once the immediate crisis is resolved, the government should assume the hard work of political reform, the ICG said.

"It should take steps to restore the multi-party system that it has undermined over the past fifteen years. The Awami League's dominance of the political landscape has helped create the conditions for a popular upheaval," it said.

It also suggested dialogues with opposition groups, including the BNP.

The report suggested that a unity government or even a new national election are potential means of helping restore confidence in the political system.

"State and party leaders should encourage the emergence of new political forces that could channel the demands of younger generations; many in the student movement see the current opposition as little better than the Awami League."

"The rise of anti-quota protests has illustrated just how fragile one-party rule is in Bangladesh."

Prakash said foreign partners should urge the government to restore respect for civil rights immediately and pursue talks with those leading the anti-quota movement.

India, a staunch supporter of Hasina's government, should also use its leverage to help Bangladesh back on a path to stability by restoring multi-party democracy, good governance and respect for civil rights, ICG said.

"Doubling down on authoritarian methods to quell demonstrations without serious efforts at dialogue and political reform is unlikely to bring more than temporary calm," it added.

'Sabotage' hits French trains suspicions fell on leftist militants or environmental activists, but they said there was not yet any evidence.

The Paris prosecutor's office said the probe would be overseen by its organised crime office, with the anti-terrorist sub-directorate (SDAT), a branch of the judicial police that typically monitors hard-left, extreme-right and radical environmental groups, coordinating investigations.

Prime Minister Gabriel Attal declined to speculate about the possibility of such groups being behind the sabotage.

"What we know, what we see, is that this operation was prepared, coordinated, that nerve centres were targeted, which shows a certain knowledge of the network to know where to strike," he said.

The coordinated strikes on the rail network will feed into a sense of apprehension ahead of the Olympics opening ceremony in the heart of Paris later on Friday. Operations at the Basel-Mulhouse airport on France's border with Switzerland were briefly suspended due to a bomb alert.

International Olympic Committee President Thomas Bach said he had full confidence in the French authorities.

"I don't have concerns," he told reporters at the Olympic Village.

More than 300,000 spectators are expected to line the banks of the River Seine when the athletes parade through the heart of Paris on a flotilla of barges and riverboats, part of an extravagant show that will be watched by billions.

France has deployed 45,000 police, 10,000 soldiers and 2,000 private security agents to secure the Games' opening ceremony. Snipers will be on rooftops, and drones in the air.

But while the capital is locked down for the opening ceremony, security elsewhere in the country is lighter.

The TGV high-speed rail attacks left hundreds of thousands of people stranded at stations.

Eurostar's high-speed services linking London and Paris were forced onto slower lines while Germany's Deutsche Bahn warned of disruption to long-distance services.

The SNCF urged all travelers to postpone their journeys. Repairs were underway but traffic would be severely disrupted until at least the end of the weekend.

At the Gare de L'Est, Xavier Hiegel, 39, said he was just trying to get home for the weekend and could not believe that people would want to harm the Olympics.

"The Games bring jobs so this really is nonsense. I hope the people responsible will be found and punished," he said.

The attacks hit signalling installations on the Atlantic, Northern and Eastern high-speed lines with fires set off by explosive devices, the SNCF said.

SNCF chief Jean-Pierre Farandou said some 800,000 customers had been impacted ahead of a busy weekend for French holidaymakers. Thousands of rail staff had been deployed to repair the damage.

"This attack is not a coincidence, it's an effort to destabilise France," Valerie Pecresse, president of the Paris region, told reporters.

Paris 2024 said it was working closely with the SNCF to assess the situation. The attacks will make it tougher for people travelling to Paris from other areas of France.

"It's a disaster," said Parisian Brigitte Dupont. "Today is the opening of the Olympic Games, a huge event that was supposed to be magnificent, and this is spoiling people's joy."

cannot continue," it said.

Iran's government said yesterday the recent meeting of Hamas and Fatah in the Chinese capital is a valuable step in the direction of national reconciliation for Palestine, reports Al Jazeera Online.

Nasser Kanaani, the foreign ministry spokesperson, said on X that the Iranian government backs the Palestinian groups "in confronting the occupation of the apartheid regime of Israel and their collective movement in the direction of exercising the fundamental right to self-determination".

Peace Now Israel, a group pushing for a two-state solution in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, said since the offensive on Gaza began, Israel has established at least "25 outposts, most of them agricultural outposts", in the occupied West Bank.

"The cabinet approved the establishment of five new settlements: Evyatar, Givat Assaf, Sde Ephraim, Adorayim, and Nachal Haletz, all illegal outposts intended to become official settlements," the report said.

In the eastern area of Nablus, north of the occupied West Bank, Israeli forces detained seven Palestinians during a raid, according to the Wafa news agency.

Palestinian security and local sources told Wafa that several Israeli military vehicles stormed the area with tear gas and stun grenades near the Askar refugee camp.

20 students sued for attack on police

Sher-e-Bangla Nagar Police Station, also the case's investigating officer, told The Daily Star yesterday.

According to recent statements by some government high-ups, students would not be harassed for participating in the quota reform protests unless they were involved in attacks on government establishments.

This year's quota protests started on July 1 and were held peacefully till July 15, when Chhatra League activists attacked quota protesters on the Dhaka University campus. The attack led to fierce clashes on the campus, leaving scores injured -- mostly protesters, including female students.

Is Islamic finance facing headwinds?

Islamic finance began its journey in the country in the early 1980s and evolved into a significant sector within Bangladesh's financial landscape due to the Islamic perspective of risk sharing and ethical investment.

AM JAHID and MD MEHEDI HASAN

Rabiul Islam, a practising Muslim who works at a private organisation, refrained from conventional banking services for many years as both paying and receiving interest are against his religious principles.

Although he had to maintain a mandatory salary account with a private bank, he did not utilise additional services like loans.

Out of concern about where to safekeep his savings around 10 years ago, he sought advice from an Islamic scholar or Imam and opened an account with Islami Bank Bangladesh Ltd (IBBL).

"I opened the account after getting assurances that all banking activities through Islamic finance are conducted in accordance with religious principles," he explained.

Like Islam, millions of Bangladeshi Muslims have turned to Islamic finance, regardless of financial literacy, boosting its popularity.

Islamic finance began its journey in the country in the early 1980s and evolved into a significant sector within Bangladesh's financial landscape due to the Islamic perspective of risk sharing and ethical investment.

IBBL, the first Islamic bank of the country, was formed in 1983. It offered products like profit-sharing investment accounts (Mudarabah) and financing facilities (Musharakah).

By the early 2000s, IBBL's success had paved the way for the formation of other Islamic banks like Al-Arafah Islami Bank, Social Islami Bank, and Shahjalal Islami Bank.

"Most Bangladeshis are religious. Even those who do not practise actively want to adhere to Islamic principles. Islamic banks are capitalising on this sentiment," said Mohammed Nurul Amin, a former chairman of the Association of Bankers Bangladesh.

The seasoned banker said many people prefer interest-free banking because of religious beliefs.

Another reason for the popularity of Islamic banks is the favourable policy support extended to them from the Bangladesh Bank, which has made the sector more profitable than the conventional banks.

The Islamic finance sector enjoys a lower statutory liquidity ratio (SLR) and higher investment-deposit ratio (IDR) than conventional banks. The SLR is the minimum percentage of deposits that a commercial bank has to maintain in the form of liquid cash, gold or other securities.

As per the central bank rules, traditional banks must maintain 13 percent of their deposits as SLR while Islamic banks must maintain only 5.5 percent, a major regulatory benefit that means Islamic banks have more investible funds than commercial banks.

At the same time, conventional banks have to maintain an ADR (advance to deposit ratio) of 87 percent while Shariah-based banks have to maintain 92 percent.

This means conventional banks can lend Tk 87 against a deposit of Tk 100, while Shariah-based banks can lend Tk 92 against the same.

Amin, also a former managing director of Meghna Bank, said investors and shareholders are very eager to form Shariah-based banks due to such regulatory benefits.

Industry insiders added that the beneficial policy support motivated a growing number of commercial banks to turn into Islamic banks.

For instance, Standard Bank and NRB Global Bank, both commercial banks, transformed into Shariah-based lenders in 2021.

Including those two, there are 10 full-fledged Islamic banks in the country. The others are IBBL, Shahjalal Islami Bank, Social Islami Bank, Global Islami Bank, Al-Arafah Islami Bank, First Security Islami Bank, Union Bank and ICB Islamic Bank.

These banks have around 1,700 branches in the country.

However, the central bank has been selective in approving the introduction of Islamic financing windows in most conventional banks.

Besides, many commercial banks have introduced Islamic windows and branches. This has enabled them to reach customers who otherwise wouldn't have availed their services.

A total of 15 commercial banks have opened 30 Islamic banking branches while 16 banks are running 624 Islamic banking windows to provide services.

Also, some non-bank financial institutions and insurance companies are also providing Islamic finance services like Islamic bonds (sukuk), Islamic insurance (takaful), and Islamic microfinance.

Sukuk has become an alternative avenue for raising funds for infrastructure and development projects, while takaful offers a Shariah-compliant insurance solution to individuals and businesses.

Islamic microfinance institutions have played a crucial role in providing financial services to the unbanked and underbanked population, contributing to financial inclusion and poverty alleviation.

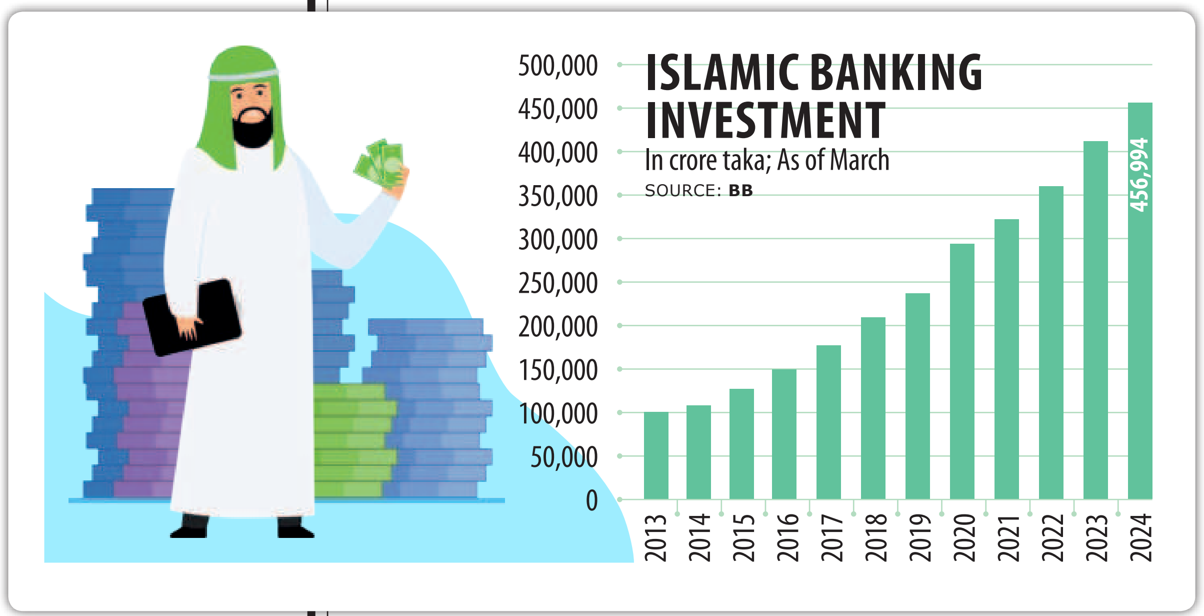
The wide adoption of Islamic banking has contributed to phenomenal growth and expansion in the sector until 2022.

At the end of September 2022, total deposits in this system reached Tk 421,375 crore and investment stood at Tk 386,221 crore. Besides, the IDR stood at 0.92 while excess liquidity reached Tk 17,525 crore.

However, total deposits at the Islamic banking industry rose to Tk 439,465 crore till March of this year and total investment stood at Tk 456,994 crore, as per the latest data from the central bank.

As of 2023, Islamic banking assets accounted for over 25 percent of the overall banking sector's assets in Bangladesh.

Islamic microfinance institutions have played a crucial role in providing financial services to the unbanked and underbanked population, contributing to financial inclusion and poverty alleviation. The wide adoption of Islamic banking has contributed to phenomenal growth and expansion in the sector until 2022.



RECENT CRISIS

However, despite the impressive growth and potential, the sector has been facing a significant crisis since the middle of 2022 due to loan irregularities, scams and a lack of good governance in some Shariah-based banks.

At the end of 2022, the Islamic banking sector faced some headwinds as the asset quality of a dozen Shariah-based banks deteriorated and a number of loan irregularities came to light, impacting the growth and liquidity indicators of the sector.

The deposit growth of Islamic banks dropped to 2.9 percent year-on-year in 2022 from 20.1 percent a year ago, according to the central bank's Financial Stability Report 2022.

Presently, six Shariah-based banks are facing a huge liquidity crisis as depositors have withdrawn their funds, adversely affecting the whole sector.

Recently, Fitch Ratings said that Bangladesh's Islamic banking sector was still being affected by a liquidity shortage as it is more vulnerable than the conventional banking sector.

The American credit rating agency added that Bangladesh's Islamic banking sector has been stagnant for the past two years despite having a sizable market share.

The liquidity crisis has been so severe that the ICB Islamic Bank, one of the affected banks, recently failed to repay depositors' money.

Excess liquidity in the sector plummeted to Tk 1,518 crore at the end of March this year, a 91.3 percent drop compared to September of 2022.

Amin accused those who were involved in loans irregularities and scams of forming Islamic banks solely to make profits instead of for ideological reasons. "If ideology was the driving force, then how come one person can own six to eight Shariah-based banks?" he questioned.

STRUCTURAL ISSUES

There are some structural issues in the sector, such as the lower number of Shariah-compliant instruments that allow banks to borrow money from the call money market, which has worsened the liquidity crisis, according to industry insiders.

Besides, except for a set of guidelines issued by the central bank, there is no specific law or policy framework for the Islamic finance sector in Bangladesh despite the fact that countries with dedicated frameworks have seen the sector grow substantially.

The central bank recently revised its Shariah banking guideline, but is yet to publish it.

Mustafa K Mujeri, a former chief economist of the central bank, recently told The Daily Star that simply revising the guidelines would not be enough. Strict action must be taken in case of violations, he said.

Mujeri, also an executive director of the Institute for Inclusive Finance and Development, said most Islamic banks are worse off than before as the rules are not being followed.

Industry insiders emphasised forming supervisory committees in banks with people who are efficient in both banking and Islamic law. In most cases, bankers lack knowledge about Islamic jurisprudence while Islamic scholars have limited to no practical banking knowledge.

Hence, strict monitoring by the central bank is mandatory in order to bring discipline to the sector.

WAY FORWARD

Good governance and accountability are key to navigating the current crisis and ensuring sustainable growth, according to experts.

This requires the implementation of internal controls, independent audits, and transparent reporting mechanisms as well as strengthening the role and independence of Shariah boards in overseeing compliance with Islamic principles.

The central bank should review some Shariah-based banks and, if needed, the board of directors of those banks should be reformed, Ahsan H Mansur, executive director of the Policy Research Institute of Bangladesh, told The Daily Star.

A chief executive of a Shariah-based bank, seeking anonymity, said there is a need for a concentrated effort from regulators, banks, and stakeholders to enhance governance, better manage risks, and restore public confidence.

An Islamic banking law is needed to ensure compliance as the sector can play a vital role in the country's economic development and financial inclusion once it overcomes the current crisis, he added.

How smart is shutting down social media?

It will severely curtail people's fundamental freedoms

After a prolonged internet shutdown that all but brought the "Digital Bangladesh" to a standstill, broadband internet has finally been restored across the country. However, mobile internet is still suspended. More worryingly still, sources say that the government is unlikely to provide uninterrupted access to social media platforms anytime soon—at least until tech companies comply with its demands. State Minister for ICT Zunaid Ahmed Palak stated on Wednesday that social media platforms, particularly Facebook and YouTube, have not been complying with Bangladesh's laws; as such, Facebook, along with Meta's other popular platforms such as Messenger and WhatsApp—and ByteDance's TikTok—will remain blocked indefinitely.

The internet was shut down at the height of the protests around 9pm on July 18, with the government offering conflicting accounts of why it occurred from the very beginning. While it claims that the shutdown occurred due to an attack on the data centres in the capital's Mohakhali area, The Daily Star, upon visiting the centres, found no sign of damage to the building that housed them—to say nothing of the fact that it's a technical impossibility for an entire country's internet to be disrupted simply because of a localised disruption.

We are disturbed that the government ordered such a shutdown, which lasted for over five days—which, as highlighted by UN experts, represent a dramatic means of limiting fundamental freedoms and contravene international law. But that it did so under false pretext can only add to people's growing mistrust of the government at a time when the latter needs to assure the former of its commitment to democratic norms and human rights. The government's decision to prolong the ban on social media will only confirm the public's suspicion that it is doing so to control the free flow of information about the severity of the atrocities conducted during the protests. During such a vacuum, it is natural for misinformation and rumours to spread among a population starved of information.

We have observed with increasing alarm the government's stringent measures to curtail digital freedoms over the decade, from arbitrarily arresting people under the draconian Digital Security Act (now the Cyber Security Act) for their social media posts, to the surveillance of private data of citizens, to demanding that tech companies block certain users or content or provide their personal details. We have seen such measures being intensified in the aftermath of mass protests. We urge the government to realise that blocking social media indefinitely will only fuel panic and resentment and further alienate it from the public.

Putting aside the obvious violations of our digital rights and freedoms of speech and expression, what is to happen to the numerous businesses that are now dependent on social media for their very survival? How is the government to commensurate its grandiloquent claims of building a "Smart Bangladesh," while taking increasingly unsmart measures to restrict people's access to digital platforms and in the process jeopardising their livelihoods? Cutting off Bangladesh from the world at large is a great disservice to the people of this country when the government would have us believe that we are riding the waves of digitisation.

Enhance prison security measures

Narsingdi jailbreak exposes security lapses in prisons

The July 19 Narsingdi jailbreak, amid a breakdown of law and order that followed violent clashes in different parts of the country, sends out a chilling message. This was the first time such an incident occurred in Bangladesh, in which outsiders attacked a jail and aided the escape of all 826 inmates of the prison. Some were reportedly even forced to flee.

The way the incident unfolded raises questions about police intelligence, preparedness, and timely action, and the overall security lapses in our prisons. According to media reports, there were violent clashes, which left two students dead, in the areas adjacent to the prison on July 18. However, on July 19, at around 1:30pm, our correspondent saw rioters picketing, but there was no major police patrol in the area. A few police personnel initially tried to defend the prison when rioters stormed the establishment at around 4pm. The jail superintendent, too, alleged that police did not arrive at the scene before 10pm. Why extra security forces were not deployed around the prison area where deadly clashes had taken place just the day before is puzzling.

The attackers used local weapons and crude bombs, and detectives suspect that six microbuses were used to carry the fleeing inmates. Such descriptions raise the question if the attack was preplanned. It was certainly well-organised. How did our intelligence wings remain in the dark about this? Considering that the prison housed nine inmates belonging to militant outfits like the JMB and Ansarullah Bangla Team, the prison authorities should have been extra careful anyway.

We have often called attention to the security lapses in our prisons which allow extremists to mobilise within the confined, overcrowded walls. The media has reported about mobile phones being smuggled into the prisons many times. Reportedly, about 300 of the inmates who fled have surrendered to court so far. But their successful escape, especially that of the militants, does put a serious question mark on our security apparatuses. We hope that law enforcers will promptly track down the remaining escapees, bring them to book, and recover the stolen arms and ammunition. As we reflect on the violence that shook the country last week, we need to take note of our security lapses so that this kind of incident is not repeated.

How can the rulers erase so much bloodstain?

As of Thursday, at least 156 people have died in six days' of violence, per the tally recorded by this daily. The exact number of deaths is unknown; there is no certainty if it will ever come to light. One state minister said, "If law enforcement agencies come under attack, they will return fire. It is only natural that there would be some casualties."

On July 16, we saw the cold-blooded killing of Abu Sayed, student of Begum Rokeya University in Rangpur and a coordinators of the quota reform movement, at the hands of police. A viral video of his final moments showed he was quite far from law enforcement. He posed no threat, yet the police member shot him. This does not match the government's narrative.

Within such a short period of time, an unprecedented level of bloodshed took place. This exceeded even the number of deaths during the nine years' of movement against Ershad's autocratic regime, the biggest movement in independent Bangladesh. That movement was violent too; it saw arson and vandalism, too.

Now, the main question is: why did the situation escalate last week, resulting in so many deaths and injuries?

The quota system had been abolished following the quota reform movement in 2018. During a press conference on July 14 this year, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina said she had been "utterly dismayed" and had "abolished the quotas" at that time. A circular was issued accordingly. Challenging that circular, some freedom fighters' children filed a writ, responding to which the High Court annulled it on June 5 this year, effectively reinstating the quota system. The government appealed against this decision on July 6. Not relying on the government, students of public universities began their movement again, and it was completely peaceful. On July 9, two students filed a petition, which led to the court issuing a stay order against the earlier verdict. In spite of the stay order, protests continued. The Appellate Division set the hearing date for July 21. In the meantime, several ministers made comments about the movement, such as the protesters were not following the law, they are defying the constitution, the issue must be resolved through court, the government will not bypass the court, etc. Some of those comments were condescending towards the protesters. Still, they remained peaceful.

How, then, did the protest take such a violent turn?

On July 14, the protesters submitted a memorandum to the president, saying they would launch an all-out protest if their demands were not met within the next 24 hours.

During the press conference on the same day, the PM asked, "If the freedom fighters' grandchildren won't get quotas, should the grandchildren of Razakars [Pakistani collaborators] get quotas?"

In response, DU students brought out processions that night. They chanted loudly, "Who are you, who am I? Razakar, Razakar," which naturally caused an uproar. However, the students claim that the full version of the slogan was, "Who are you, who am I? Razakar, Razakar. Says who? Says who? Shoirachar, Shoirachar (autocrat)."

On July 15, AL General Secretary and Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader said Bangladesh Chhatra League (BCL) would give a "fitting reply" to the student protesters who had "labelled themselves as Razakars and showed arrogance." BCL President Saddam Hussain said, "BCL is prepared to tackle this (quota reform movement) through political means."

That afternoon, BCL launched its attack on the protesters.

On July 16, the protesters and BCL both called for a rally in front of DU's Raju Memorial at 12pm and 3pm, respectively. When the unarmed general students started gathering near Raju Memorial, BCL activists attacked them with metal rods, sticks, hockey sticks and guns. Many students were injured, and eventually, the protesters were dispersed.

At night, BCL members, aided by the police, searched for and found the protesters in DU, RU and JU's residential halls and beat them up. Many were driven out of the halls.

This provoked the protesters further. On July 17, the DU coordinators of the quota reform movement asked the students to gather at Shaheed Minar with sticks. This is the first time that the protesters took up a weapon in this movement. The same situation arose in JU and RU. Police, along with armed BCL members, conducted waves of assaults against the protesters in all three campuses.

The protesters managed to put up a strong resistance as they were bigger as a group. By that night, the members and leaders—even the female ones—of BCL, a student organisation that is disconnected from the general students, were all driven out of the residential halls and the campuses of DU, JU and RU.

A major reason why a peaceful movement became violent is the attempt to quash it using BCL's muscle power and police-BGB's mindless shooting. BCL's "Helmet Bahini" indiscriminately used sticks and hockey sticks on the protesters. Who are the armed individuals, who were photographed along with the BCL men, assaulting the students? Are they BCL members? It is assumed that they may have been outsiders, whose machete attacks injured many students, which further enraged the protesters.

Police and BGB fired lethal and non-lethal bullets at the students, as evidenced by published videos and photos in newspapers. This is not the conventional way of dispersing a protest. It seems it was not the police or BGB's goal to fire shots in order to scare the protesters and disperse them; it seemed they meant to shoot at the protesters.

Throughout the protest, the government repeatedly mentioned a "third party." Some intelligence high-ups mentioned that certain elements had "infiltrated" the movement.

The quota reform movement was led by anti-discrimination students' movement. This apolitical movement gained popular support from the entire student community. Undoubtedly, certain members of Chhatra Dal, Shibir and leftists, along with BCL members also joined the cause. More than 50 BCL leaders resigned from their posts and aligned themselves with this movement. But the leadership and majority participation came from general students. Chhatra Dal and Shibir never came close to assuming the leadership.

Yet, the government tried to contain the movement with a hardline and brutal approach, which raised casualties.

Why did AL leader Obaidul Quader, who is a former journalist and veteran politician with roots in student politics, want to use BCL to deal with such a widely supported movement? Now he can never escape the blame for what happened; his part in this mayhem will be revisited time and time again.

Even Law Minister Anisul Huq, who is an experienced lawyer, failed to show prudence. By the time he asked to sit with the students and announced intent to expedite the appeal hearing date, the situation had already spiralled out of control. Had the government sat with the students for a discussion beforehand, the situation could have unfolded differently.

This reminds me of Pablo Neruda's poem "I'm explaining a few things":

Come and see the blood in the streets.
Come and see the blood in the streets.
Come and see the blood in the streets!

Since independence, we have not seen so much blood being spilt during a movement. On whose hands is this blood? Can the rulers answer this question?

We are all biomass

Slavoj Žižek,
professor of philosophy at the European Graduate School, is international director of the Birkbeck Institute for the Humanities at the University of London.

SLAVOJ ZIZEK

In a recent commentary, philosopher Michael Marder looks beyond the immediate horror of what is taking place in Gaza to consider the ontological implications of what we see in the long-distance drone shots of the ruins. Allow me to quote him at length:

"... Gaza is rapidly transformed into a dump, where high-rise buildings and human bodies, ecosystems ... and orchards are mutilated beyond recognition and reduced to organic-inorganic rubble. A solidarity with dumpified lives, places, and worlds requires something other than compassion. So what could that be?"

Marder's answer is to propose "another kind of solidarity based on the shared condition of biomass." To say, "I am biomass" is to "identify with a vanishing life," to see Gaza as "a condensed and particularly blunt version of a planetary tendency." The rendering of all life into mere biomass—chaotic heaps of organic and inorganic matter—can be found everywhere, but it has been "accelerated in Gaza at the cutting edge of the most recent technologies of devastation. Rather than compassion, then, what is required is the solidarity of the dumped, who dare assert, 'We are biomass.'"

This notion of biomass echoes an insight from philosopher Levi Bryant, "In an age where we are faced with the looming threat of monumental climate change, it is irresponsible to draw our distinctions in such a way as to exclude nonhuman actors." And yet, in today's capitalist societies, efforts to mobilise a large majority of people in the name of our shared ecological condition consistently fail. We all know that we are part of nature and fully dependent on it for our survival, yet this recognition does not translate into action. The problem is that our choices and outlook are influenced by many other forces, such as biased media reporting, economic pressures on workers, material limitations, and so forth.

In her 2010 book Vibrant Matter, philosopher Jane Bennett has us picture a polluted trash site, where not only humans but also rotting trash, worms, insects, abandoned machines, chemical poisons, and so on each play some active role. This scene of biomass exists on the same spectrum as the situation in Gaza, though the latter is an extreme case. Around the world, there are numerous large physical spaces, especially outside the developed West, where "digital waste" is dumped, and thousands work separating glass, metals, plastic, mobile phones, and other man-made materials from the chaotic heaps. One such slum, Agbogbloshie, near the centre of Accra (the capital of Ghana), is known as "Sodom and Gomorrah."

What makes the exploitation of biomass different from the capitalist logic is that it accepts a chaotic wasteland as our basic predicament. Though this condition can be partly exploited, it can never be abolished.

Life in these environments is a horror show, and the communities that live in them are strictly hierarchically organised, with children forced to do the most dangerous work, under extremely hazardous conditions. Yet, because this exploitation of biomass appears ecologically attractive (under the banner of "recycling"), it responds perfectly to the demands of modern technology: "In the technological age," writes philosopher Mark Wrathall, "what matters to us most is getting the 'greatest possible use' out of everything."

After all, the whole point of using resources sparingly, of recycling, and so forth is to maximise the use of everything. The ultimate products of capitalism are piles of trash—useless computers, cars, TVs, VCRs, and the hundreds of planes that have found a final "resting place" in the Mojave Desert. The idea of total recycling (in which every remainder is used again) is the ultimate capitalist dream, even—or especially—when it is presented as a means of retaining Earth's natural balance. It is yet another testament to capitalism's capacity to appropriate ideologies that seem to oppose it.

However, what makes the exploitation of biomass different from the capitalist logic is that it accepts a chaotic wasteland as our basic predicament. Though this condition can be partly exploited, it can never be abolished. As Marder puts it, biomass is our new home; we are biomass. It is a fantasy to think that such environments can be left behind and replaced by life in some idyllic "natural," ecologically sustainable environment. That easy way out has been irretrievably lost to us. We should accept our only home and work within its confines, perhaps discovering a new harmony beneath what appears to be a chaotic heap.

This will require us to be open to the objective beauty of different levels of reality (humans, animals, ruins, decaying buildings), and to reject a hierarchic ordering of aesthetic experiences. Are we ready to do this? If not, we are truly lost.

A generation's fight in the shadows of quota

BLOWIN' IN THE WIND

Dr Shamsad Mortuza
is professor of English at Dhaka University.

SHAMSAD MORTUZA

Once the curfew lifted, driving on the familiar roads seemed unfamiliar. The oleanders and allamandas on the airport road were in perfect bloom. During the imposed hiatus, the rain and shine had done them good. Maybe the lack of air pollution had given them some extra lustre. I drove through the link road to attend a meeting near a spot that had witnessed one of the bloodiest pitched battles between protesters, police, and their auxiliary forces. As I took the U-loop to get to Hatirjheel Drive, the charred walls of the national television centre came into sight. On that day, I encountered additional signs of destruction: the eerie toll booth at the entrance of the elevated expressway, the towering BRTA and Bridge Authority buildings adorned with burnt feet, the metallic apparitions of numerous ashen vehicles, and the vandalised metro rail stations—all emblematic of the development discourse. However, the streets hold no remembrance of the fallen and injured. To do so, you'll probably have to visit hospitals, graveyards, grieving families or turn to social media. While the broken infrastructure can be fixed, the lives lost can never be regained.

During the state-sponsored lull, the internet shutdown revived an almost forgotten device: the unsmart TV that only speaks. Unlike your mobile phone, it does not listen. The TV channels used sanitised rhetoric to cite official numbers and figures. Life without the internet, the long lines for prepaid utility services, and the spiked prices of daily essentials became unbearable as we craved for normalcy. Memories of anomalous deaths were pushed aside.

The army was brought in to restore peace. Meanwhile, we heard the movement was no longer about quotas; it was about justice. Students fighting for an end to positive discrimination have won their initial battle. The government claims it agreed with the demand from the start. The government was the one who appealed against the court ruling that resurrected the dead quota system. It also patiently allowed the peaceful Bangla Blockade to continue, allowing the legal system to run its full course.

On July 14, a taunt from above was audible. The insinuation that the protesters were the descendants of the 1971 collaborators sparked a spontaneous reaction. "We demanded our rights and got branded as collaborators," the students chanted. Their ironic slogan, "Who am I? Who are you? Razakar, Razakar!" was lost in translation. The movement that maintained a career agenda for all potential job-seekers suddenly became ideological. Skirmishes turned ugly. Violence erupted on the Dhaka University campus. The general secretary of Awami League boasted that his party's student wing was enough to quash the storm. Images of attacks started pouring in. Students turned against each other. Helmet-clad gangs did not even spare female students, causing the movement to spread to other regions. The next day, while we were watching TV, in Rangpur, they shot Abu Sayed, a student of English literature. In a Facebook post, he had echoed Wordsworth's sonnet "London 1802" to conjure the spirit of Dr Mohammad Shamsuzzoha, the proctor of Rajshahi University who, on the onset of the 1969 Mass Uprising, famously told law enforcement personnel, "Your bullets will pierce my heart first before they hit my students." Sayed died with his arms wide open as a policeman shot him. Sayed's mother's cry—"You didn't have to give my son a job if you couldn't; why did you kill him?" (translation ours)—reverberated through the grieving hearts. At least six people died that day.

The University Grants Commission (UGC) intervened, closing all public and private universities indefinitely. The fulcrum shifted. The students discovered unexpected allies in the "general mob," who started fighting by their side. Their agenda was many and unclear. The police used extreme measures, inciting further violence. By that time, the death toll had escalated, while thousands sustained injuries, and thousands found themselves in custody. The government summoned the army to restore calm. It expedited the judicial process, and on July 21, the Appellate Division heard the opinions of the amicus curiae, who reminded the court that the decision was an executive one. Everyone across the aisles seemed to be in agreement. What took the parties so long to come to a consensus on the disproportionate quota system, which was a no-brainer from the start? Who will own up to the madness and carnage? The healing process can only begin with a thorough survey of these questions.

Our political leaders have failed to see that these young people fighting for their rights don't want to be trapped in any identity binary.

The verdict, however, is already out. We hear that dark forces have taken control of the movement and turned it into arson. It appears that the ship for dialogue has sailed. When the students went to the president, he could have just given them his sympathetic ears. When the government decided to scrap the quota, they could have communicated in a non-sarcastic manner. A healing strategy was necessary when students suffered physical and emotional harm. Sending stick-wielding students to beat up the injured inside the hospital was never a solution. The internet abruptly shut down whenever the need to establish a communication channel arose, blaming the fire on the data centre and the fibre cables.

Businessmen showed concern over losing buyers as e-commerce collapsed. Fixing the economy became the priority. The black banners by the elevated expressway serve as a reminder of the time it will take to transform the once hard-earned road into a functional one. The prime minister wept at the vandalism that brought the coveted life in the metro rail to a halt. The home minister has visited the injured policemen. However, no one is present to support the injured and deceased students or ordinary citizens. The tears of grieving parents and kin are spinning in cyber reels.

Meanwhile, the protest has moved to a different level. And our political leaders, blinded by their egos, have failed to see that these young people fighting for their rights don't want to be trapped in any identity binary. They are citizens of the world. They sang "Bella Ciao," hacked into government websites, and mobilised international support. Their idealism has the freshness that defies the stink of old politics. Even the government isolated the arrest of the "BNP-Jamaat" axis from the activities of the students. The sooner the government understands that a student faction or increased military presence cannot destroy the student movement in five minutes, the better for the country. Giving the movement a political colour can create a long-term rift that the country cannot afford. We need to bring the killers and arsonists to justice, but we also need empathy and open-minded leadership.

As a teacher, I want to go back to my class and embrace all my students as one. We will begin the healing process by creating space for one another to share and grow in the true spirit of the Liberation War.

Can we expect some accountability from the government?

Last week's political violence in Bangladesh was by far the worst I have seen since I first visited and fell in love with this country 15 years ago. Some media outlets report that around 150 lives have been lost, others say 170. Among those who lost their lives are young adults, uninvolved bystanders, and law enforcement personnel. Once the dust settles and a careful tabulation is done, the actual number of deaths could be far higher than the numbers circulating at the moment. In addition, thousands were injured, many of whom have a long road to recovery ahead, and some of whom may never fully recover.

What we saw was nothing short of disturbing and, tragically, seems it could have been largely avoidable. The protesters' initial demand for a reform of the quota system in government job recruitment, whether you agree with it or not, was surely not unreasonable, and should have been addressed through political dialogue. Instead, armed Chhatra League members entered the University of Dhaka campus on July 15, and attempted to quell the protests by assaulting protesters. The situation only escalated from there.

What was the process and legal basis for the government's decision to shut off mobile data as well as broadband internet on July 18? Was civil society given the opportunity to request a judicial review of that decision? Considering the devastating impact of the decision to impose a curfew and shut off the internet for millions of people in terms of education, commerce, healthcare, and personal relationships, was that decision proportionate to the purpose it was meant to achieve?

Now, as Bangladesh slowly edges towards a semblance of normalcy, all eyes must be on the government: will it choose accountability, or more of the cronyism and selective application of the law that got the nation into this trouble in the first place? As I write this column, I am looking at a bunch of national dailies and I see reports of more than three thousand arrests and many more cases filed in connection with the recent violence. BNP and Jamaat are mentioned over and over again, and the prime minster herself said that this time she "will not spare them." Insofar those arrested have in fact been engaged in violence and the destruction of public infrastructure and private property, and it is expected that they will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

I then searched for any reports of legal proceedings of any kind against the Chhatra League and law enforcers, but it was in vain. True accountability requires the equitable prosecution of everyone who broke the law, regardless of political or professional affiliation, as well as a transparent and independent inquiry into the government's response to the protests.

Hard questions, such as the following, must be addressed promptly, honestly, and transparently. The extent to which that will happen will show how sincere the government is in its commitment to democracy.

With the Chhatra League being the youth organisation of the ruling party, why did party leaders not call them off on July 15 to prevent the escalation of violence? Will there be a credible investigation of that failure, and will those who are found to be responsible be held accountable? Have security forces been analysing video footage to identify Chhatra League members who committed violence, and if so, have criminal proceedings been initiated against any of those identified?

On July 16, the Chhatra League and quota reform protesters gathered in Dhaka and across the rest of the country, carrying metal rods, sticks, stones, other weapons, and helmets. Yet, in many places, including in front of Dhaka College, there were clashes despite police presence. What was the rationale for letting violence unfold unopposed by law enforcement?

A day later, videos of a member of police shooting unarmed protester Abu Sayed point blank were widely shared on social media. He later died in a hospital. Has a formal investigation been launched, and has the officer involved in the shooting been suspended pending its outcome?

Are those responsible for the deaths of Dhaka Residential Model College student Farhan Faiyaaz and countless other protesters across Bangladesh being held accountable? Has an independent commission to investigate these deaths been formed? Who authorised the use of lethal force against protesters? What structural steps are the security forces taking to prevent the use of excessive force in the future?

What was the process and legal basis for the government's decision to shut off mobile data as well as broadband internet on July 18? Was civil society given the opportunity to request a judicial review of that decision? Considering the devastating impact of the decision to impose a curfew and shut off the internet for millions of people in terms of education, commerce, healthcare, and personal relationships, was that decision proportionate to the purpose it was meant to achieve? Were there no less disruptive means available to the government to achieve the same purpose?

With no opposition worth the name in parliament, who will do the necessary political work of reviewing the manner in which the total internet blackout unfolded and was justified by the government? Who will ask the government the questions that need to be answered to determine if it has overstepped its authority? The people of Bangladesh deserve timely answers to these and many other questions they are certain to have, and the government will be measured by the quality of the answers it provides. It has an opportunity to stake out a positive path forward. If that opportunity is missed, then who knows what awaits the country in the future.

REFLECTIONS

In both form and content: A political (un)reality

I was particularly enraptured by Life and Political Reality's usage of the device of memory—both individual and collective—and how it helps construct the narrative of the war and its consequences. Memory is a silenced device in the novella, particularly the memories that address gendered and sexual violence. Memory is also unreliable and open to distortion and damage.

POLITICAL Reality
Shahidul Zahir

Over the last two semesters, my course on South Asian writing at both the undergraduate and graduate level begins with Shahidul Zahir's Jibon O Rajnoitik Bastobata (Life and Political Reality, translated by V Ramaswamy and Shahroza Nahreen). As anyone who has ever had to design syllabi for survey courses—courses that survey a period, a genre, or an entire body of work representing various peoples, languages, and political history—knows, a lot of complex thinking goes into the process. Issues of representation, language, length, complexity, diversity, readability, and even pleasure haunt an educator's thinking as he finalises the texts for the semester. As I spent the last week away from my classroom, and as the nation erupted all around us revisiting old, foundational questions about what it means to be a patriot and indeed, a Bangladeshi, I recalled the discussions we had on 1971 in my classroom, especially while reading Zahir together.

Published in 1988, Shahidul Zahir's first novella is a tale of two days, set 15 years apart and written in one long, breathless paragraph, examining 1971 and its aftermath. The story is centered primarily around Abdul Mojid, a young man from Dhaka's old parts and his affective ties with his traumatic past and grotesque present. The slim novella opens with the sound of Abdul Majid's sandal's straps going "phot", a mundane sound that is magnified by its significance as he hears the voice of Moulana Bodu's son Abul Khair address the inhabitants of his moholla or neighborhood as "brothers". Bodu, an accessory to the Pakistani forces during the terrible nine months of 1971, was the man behind the rape and murder of Mojid's sister, Momena. The novella's opening is breathtaking—Zahir draws the reader in with unparalleled urgency and plunges those that have only heard of 1971 anecdotally from family members, or read about dispassionately in mandatory school textbooks, straight into the narrative.

At an allegorical level, Life and Political Reality is about Bangladesh itself and the inexorable ways in which a small community in Dhaka's Lakshmibazar bears witness to the nation's history. While Bodu's 1971 actions of violence and his later rehabilitation form the central narrative tension of the novella, it is Mojid's final decision to sell his ancestral home that stages the ultimate rupture in the narrative—with Mojid abandoning his home, the nation too, snaps, mimicking the muted explosion of the sandal's snap, but this time on a much grander scale.

Often a restrained, poignant study of the inequalities of life experienced by the ordinary subjects of the state, Zahir's fiction almost always captures the haunting of Bangladesh's political past with an urgency that is hard to ignore. A bureaucrat by profession, Zahir is generally considered to be one of the most influential and unique voices to have emerged in independent Bangladesh's literary landscape.

I was particularly enraptured by Life and Political Reality's usage of the device of memory—both individual and collective—and how it helps construct the narrative of the war and its consequences. Memory is a silenced device in the novella, particularly the memories that address gendered and sexual violence. Memory is also unreliable and open to distortion and damage. Rituparna Mukherjee notes that characters like Bodu "alter the memory narrative to suit their own needs". Yet some memories linger. After Khayer addresses the moholla as brothers, and upon realising that the horrors of the past are acutely, profoundly present in the current moment, a devastated Mojid sobs into his wife's shoulder. As he touches her bony shoulder and remembers the exact spot where Momena was pierced by a bayonet, Mojid bears witness to the trauma of a nation's collective gendered and sexual past while also confronting his own limitations as a masculine subject of a liberated state. Feeling weak and emasculated by the reappearance and reclamation of power by the forces that made those nine months a traumatic experience for oppressed subjects such as himself and his sister, Mojid's devastation is made palpable with agonising clarity.

Memory further uncovers the link between communal (dis)harmony and the West Pakistani regime's commitment to rid the "Hinduani" from the East and marking them as minoritised, Hindu-ised Muslims whose lives are expendable. Mojid's memory recalls how Momena is the only Muslim girl in the Lakshmibazar area who sings in a choir with the Christian Bashanti Gomes, establishing a moment of quiet communal camaraderie. That the singing leads to Bodu cursing Momena out and an ontological enmity being formed between the teenage Mojid and Bodu reestablishes Zahir's flair for marrying the personal with the political. As the current unrest continues to unfold with dizzying speed all around us, I wonder how our memory will recall this July. How this story will be written. What conversations we will have about it.

Much has been said by critics about Zahir's writing, its uniqueness, and its carefully chaotic, breathless brilliance. Hasan Azizul Huq argues that there is "extreme disinterestedness" in Zahir's "narration or writing style...severing the roots of emotionality, waving logic aside, taking unexpected turns, creating unanticipated relations through the threads of sentences". For Sarker Hasan Al Zayed however, that disinterestedness Huq speaks of is revealed in the "form of sudden interjections and subtle innuendoes" in the text. "It is, as if, partial exposure is the mode through which this novel has chosen to explore the truly traumatic memories and political failures of the nation," he adds. The collective narratorial voice and the specificities of the lived realities of characters give the novel a poetic joie de vivre. In the days prior to the pogrom of March 25, for instance, when Jamir Baypari and Abdul Majid's mother show up to Bodu's house and Bodu slaps Jamir Baypari, the moholla's collective audience "looked on in a dazed astonishment, like how entranced spectators gaze at a magician's inexplicable acts and try to figure it out". This collective inability to comprehend the meanings of such action signifies the inexplicable violence of '71, as well as testifies to the incomprehensibility of genocidal violence at large. Ironic then, that a similar sense of incomprehensibility haunts a lot of our collective thinking now, especially as we too, look on in "dazed astonishment" as events continue to unravel around us.

Finally, it is not only the urban underclass human who testifies to the trauma of the past but the nonhuman other that participates in narrating the unsayable in the novella. From the crows that eat the flesh of the enemy, to the Tulsi tree that bears witness to communal harmony as well as antagonism—the ecology opposes as well as reproduces the regime of terror set in motion during and after the war. When Bodu's young son Abul Bashar (a hermaphrodite who dies under mysterious circumstances) is permitted to mourn the death of his beloved dog but the moholla is unable to mourn their seven dead neighbors during '71, the text stages a collapsing of the binaries separating the human from its nonhuman other and with it, raises complex questions about the quality of life as well as death under conditions of extreme political unrest.

Last semester, as our course drew to its conclusion, a student mentioned how this is now the book she makes everyone read—her parents, her friends, her peers. For generation Z, 1971 is more relevant than ever, as evidenced by this July. Throughout this slim novella, Zahir helps sketch the unadorned horror of the return and rehabilitation of noted war criminals as political leaders, problematises the forgiveness granted to those perpetrators by former leaders of the liberation movement, and examines Mojid's relationship with his memories, his neighborhood, and eventually the nation. If there's one thing our troubled political history has taught us, it is that our literature has steadfastly engaged with the complexities and nuances of our political landscape and today, if we are to step away from the binarism of us vs. them, Zahir's work can be our guiding light.

WHAT WE'RE READING THIS WEEK

Brutalism

ACHILLE MBEMBE

Duke University Press, 2024

One of the most influential cultural and political thinkers of our time, Mbembe's latest book is a careful study of politicised acts of "brutalism", a concept he studies, analyses, and investigates by invoking architectural aesthetics. A careful study of demolition and production on a planetary scale, the book interrogates capitalism's brutal assault against all spheres of human, nonhuman, and environmental realms. He offers that "the many practices of demolition had nothing accidental about them". The book also cautions against the blurring of the natural and the artificial in this age of unprecedented technological advancements while remaining unabashedly optimistic about a futurity that will offer a renewed sense of community.

Ghostly tenants

WAZIHA AZIZ

My father speaks in a dismantled language that goes up in smoke.
He leaves broken edges of questions wedged into corners of empty rooms he walks past.
Enter smoke churning, pervading, answering.
In my house we sit at the table with ghosts.
We offer tea and biscuits.
They accept, soundlessly.
These temporary tenants shatter the glass in my mirror
to tell tales of towns of timbre on fire.
Through kaleidoscopic images.
The words that fell out of burning bodies my father fled.
Fires bellowing, a little boy running. Wind curdling like dissipating smoke.
Running, from nothing to nothing.
What goes around comes around and rests—
The country, silent
Because quiet men don't whisper, but haunt.
Haunting, rumbling, smoke rising from chimneys of a million homes.
Pieces of ballot paper in flames flowing turbulent smoke
The looters, afire. Screaming.
Begins again.
I'm sorry, my poetry is only a stream of apologies I inherit from my father. In his burden I share. His vow:
To remember.
So together we house the ghosts that fought for no home.
Together we house the smoke.

Tigresses 'couldn't understand what they wanted'

SPORTS REPORTER

Familiar batting woes returned for Bangladesh in a disheartening 10-wicket loss in the 2024 Women's Asia Cup semifinal against India in Dambulla yesterday, with skipper Nigar Sultana Joty mentioning that she had no clue about what they wanted to achieve in a shambolic batting effort.

"We couldn't understand what we wanted," Joty, at the post-match presentation ceremony, reflected on the huge-margin loss as India restricted the Tigresses to a meagre 80 for eight before chasing it down with ease in just 11 overs.

When opener Dilara Akter flicked Renuka Singh for six over deep square leg in the very first over, it appeared the batting unit had the resolve to challenge an in-form Indian outfit, who had romped to the semifinal unbeaten.

However, Dilara was dismissed in the very next delivery, holing out to deep midwicket while trying to play a similar shot. The Tigresses went on to lose three wickets in the Powerplay, the last of those of in-form opener Murshida Khatun, who had hit a career-best 59-ball 80 against Malaysia in the previous game, as Bangladesh slumped to three for 21 in 4.5 overs.

"Losing too many wickets in the Powerplay hurt. When top order is not making runs, it is difficult for teams to come up with runs," Joty rued that phase of play.

Unable to recover, Bangladesh slumped further to 44 for six and were eventually restricted to a low total.

Renuka, who was named player of the match, was the pick of the bowlers for India with all three of her wickets coming in the Powerplay. That set the tone for another batting mishap as apart from Joty's 51-ball 32 and a cameo 18-ball 19 from Shorna, no other batter was able to reach double figures.

Joty also praised Shorna for the type of character she showed down the order.

"Shorna has a job to do in the five-six overs, unlucky today as she did not get much strike. She is showing her capability, she came from the Under-19s and is showing character," Joty said.

India, unscathed, cruised to the target as Smriti Mandhana, who came out to open the innings, hit a 39-ball 55 while her opening partner Shefali Verma remained unbeaten on 26.

For Bangladesh, it was another quizzical batting effort.

Bar the 191 for two that the Tigresses posted in the Group B game against Malaysia, the batting effort showed no signs of improvement as of late. Oftentimes, Bangladesh batters went into their shell, and against India, they failed to apply themselves against some tight bowling.

Ahead of the T20 World Cup at home in October, questions remain as to how the batting unit can thwart such disasters.

"It is about mentality. They are capable of playing shots, but against India, they played differently. We need to work on our batting, we are losing games because of it. Before the World Cup, we will try and rectify our mistakes," Joty added.

Joy, Aich strike fifties against Pak Shaheens

SPORTS REPORTER

Skipper Mahmudul Hasan Joy and Aich Mollah struck fifties before Bangladesh High Performance Unit were bowled out for 258 in their first innings on the opening day of second four-day match against Pakistan Shaheens at the DXC Arena in Darwin on Friday.

Joy scored 69 off 90 balls with eight fours and a six while Aich scored 55 runs as the pair shared a 54-run stand for the fifth wicket after Bangladesh were reduced to 104-4 at one stage.

Bangladesh lost both the batters in quick succession to be left reeling at 188-7 before Mahidul Hasan Ankon (31), Rejaur Rehman Raja (28) and Ripon Mondol (17) made some vital contributions to help the team cross the 250-run mark before being all out in 67.3 overs.

Shaheens pacers Khurram Shahzad finished with 3-69 which included the wickets of opener Parvez Hossain Emon (30), Amite Hasan (seven) and Ankon while Kashif Ali, Faisal Akram and Kamran Ghulam bagged two wickets each.

Pacer Ripon then struck twice as he removed both the Shaheens openers Sahibzada Farhan (4) and Haseebullah (18) to leave their opponents at 39-2 at stumps.

Mohammad Ali (one not out), who was sent in as night-watchman, will be at the crease with Omair Bin Yousuf (seven not out) at the start of play on second day.

Rony's quest for a comeback

SAMSUL AREFIN KHAN

Pacer Abu Hider Rony sees his call up to the High Performance Unit for the tour to Australia as a lifeline for his international career and believes it can open a path for him to make a comeback to the Bangladesh side after a lengthy gap.

The 28-year-old was a surprise inclusion in both the one-day and T20 squads of the HP unit, which will leave for Australia tonight, for their forthcoming white-ball series against Pakistan Shaheens and Big Bash teams.

Rony, who played two ODIs and 13 T20Is between 2016 and 2018, has been a consistent performer in the domestic circuit for years but has hardly been considered for the senior side or for other developmental teams in years.

The left-arm pacer last toured with the national team during a three-match T20I series against India in 2019 and since then, has been in the wilderness when it comes to playing for the Tigers in any format.

"It's an incredible opportunity for me. I think the opportunity arrived because I have consistently performed well in the domestic circuit," Rony told The Daily Star recently.

"If I can do well there, I can hope to make a comeback to the senior side. I will try my best to utilise the opportunity," said Rony, who previously toured Australia twice – first during the Under-19 World Cup in 2012 and then in 2018 with the HP Unit.

The fact that the national side already has two left-arm pacers in Mustafizur Rahman and Shoriful Islam in the mix works against Rony's chances of making a comeback.

To overcome this hurdle, Rony has been working on sharpening his batting skills as he believes that can help him stand out among his peers. His performances with the willow in recent domestic matches also show that this extra emphasis has not gone to waste.

During the 2023-24 season of the Dhaka Premier Division Cricket League, Rony, who emerged as the highest wicket-taker in the List A competition with 31 wickets in 16 matches, made 250 runs at a strike rate of 121.9 and scored two fifties for eventual runners-up Mohammedan Sporting Club.

"From the beginning of my career, I had a good command over batting. Earlier, I never put too much effort into it. But now, I have been trying to do well in this department alongside my bowling. It's very difficult right now to survive in Bangladesh cricket with only bowling," he said.

"In order to make a comeback to the national side, I think my batting is very important. I'm still working to improve my batting alongside my bowling. If I can do well in both departments, I can contribute much more for the team. I really enjoy the dual role and I think I need to hone this skill further.

"It has definitely become really tough to make a comeback to the national side. Our pacers have been doing very well. I think there is a healthy competition between the pacers which is good for the team. Those of us who are trying to break into the national team need to perform exceptionally well. We are enjoying this competition," he concluded.

'Raw meat'

AFP, Paris

France may be the home of haute cuisine but the British team have been less than impressed about the food on offer at the Paris Olympic village, especially "raw meat".

Britain have brought in an extra chef as a result and complained about a shortage of the right food at the village, and the quality of what's on offer.

Some British competitors have headed off to Team GB's base elsewhere in the city to get fed and pick up packed meals to take back for dinner.

"There are not enough of certain foods: eggs, chicken, certain carbohydrates," Andy Anson, the British Olympic Association chief executive, said of the apparently disappointing offering at the village.

"And then there is the quality of the food, with raw meat being served to athletes." Anson called the food problem "the biggest issue at the moment".

Paolini hunting medals, and Rafa selfie

REUTERS, Paris

Italian Jasmine Paolini's breakout year could be about to get even better as she prepares for the Paris Olympics with strong medal prospects in singles and doubles and the chance to grab a selfie with French Open king Rafa Nadal.

The 28-year-old Tuscan returns to Roland Garros just weeks after reaching the French Open final -- a feat she repeated at Wimbledon where she also ended as runner-up.

Those stunning runs have elevated Paolini to fifth in the WTA rankings and she will be one of the players expected to have a deep run in her second Olympics where she is seed fourth.

Paolini will be busy on Saturday as she plays Ana Bogdan of Romania in the singles and will also team up with veteran Sara Errani in the doubles against New Zealand pairing Erin Routliffe, the world number one, and Lulu Sun.

"My goal for these Olympics is to ask Rafa for a selfie," she joked. "I have one with Roger (Federer) and one with Novak (Djokovic) from the previous Olympics, so my goal is to ask for one with Rafa."

Brazil great Zico robbed

AFP, Paris

The Brazilian former footballer Zico filed a complaint with French police on Friday after having his bag stolen which contained cash, watches, and diamond jewellery.

The 71-year-old, who appeared in three World Cups, was in transit at the time of the theft and had left his car window open.

The Parisien daily reported the goods Zico lost to be worth 500,000 euros ($542,000) while a source close to the matter told AFP this sum was highly exaggerated. The Selecao legend is in Paris as a guest of the Brazilian Olympic team as the 2024 Games get underway this weekend.

Sagorika wants to build on impressive debut

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh women's football's latest sensation Mosammat Sagorika said she would like to build on her debut hattrick as the women in red and green take on Bhutan in the second of their two FIFA international friendlies in Thimphu today.

The 19-year-old forward came off the bench in the second half of the first match and hauled Bangladesh from a goal down to lead them to a convincing 5-1 win against the South Asian minnows.

Bangladesh had gone to Bhutan without a few of their key players, yet trailing by a goal for 48 minutes against a side that Bangladesh had thrashed 8-0 in their previous meeting was beyond anyone's imagination.

Sagorika, however, eased the pressure of the visitors with a fine hattrick and now she is looking for more goals.

"Scoring on debut is a big thing, and I scored three. It was beyond my imagination. I would want to score more goals so that we get a bigger margin of victory in the second match," Sagorika said ahead of the second match, which will kick off at the Changlimithang Stadium at 6:00 pm today.

Sagorika may get a chance in the starting eleven today as coach Peter Butler said he would change personnel and try to give most players game-time, with an eye on October's SAFF Women's Championship.

"I will keep the system but the personnel will change. We'll give quite a few number of players (the chance) to share the workload. I think the most important thing is we try and mix the game up," said the Englishman, adding that it would be foolish to expect Bangladesh to roll over an ever-improving Bhutan side.

Captain Sabina Khatun, who scored a goal in the first match, said they would try to rectify the mistakes from the first match. "If you followed the first match, you would've realised that Bhutan are in a much better position than they were during the SAFF Championship. But we tried to play our natural game which is why we got the result. We want to rectify the small mistakes from that match and want to win it too."

Mominul hits ton in drawn practice game

SPORTS REPORTER

Mominul Haque hit a century in the drawn two-day practice game between BCB Red and BCB Green at the Zahur Ahmed Chowdhury Stadium in Chattogram yesterday.

Carrying on from an overnight score of 47, BCB Red's Mominul hit 123, laced with 15 fours and a six, before perishing to Nasum Ahmed, out caught and bowled.

BCB Red declared on 274 for 9 in their first innings with a 143-run lead. Mehedi Hasan Miraz was the pick of the bowlers for BCB Green, picking up three wickets for 64 runs while Nasum and Shafiqul Islam picked up two wickets each.

Mushfiqur Rahim, who got 50 in the first innings, struck 48 for BCB Green as they reached 147 for 6 at stumps on a rain-interrupted day to draw the practice game.

Ahrar Amin and Habibur Rahman remained unbeaten on 31 and 15 respectively while Taijul Islam bagged two wickets for BCB Red. Earlier BCB Green were skittled out for 131 in their first innings on the first day.

The second practice match, slated to be a three-day game, is scheduled to begin on July 29 in Chattogram.

SKY ready to take India forward 'in own style'

AFP, Delhi

India's Suryakumar Yadav said Friday he was not going to repeat the mistakes of his domestic captaincy ahead of his first trial as Twenty20 skipper against Sri Lanka.

Suryakumar, 33, this month picked up the baton from much-loved predecessor Rohit Sharma, who announced his retirement from the 20-over format after India's World Cup victory in June.

He pipped all-rounder Hardik Pandya to the post after concerns over the latter's frequent injury absences.

But his previous captaincy of state team Mumbai had aroused concerns over his leadership style, after complaints from teammates prompted his 2015 sacking.

"Lot of things have changed since then. I am a different person now," the batsman told reporters in Kandy ahead of Saturday's series opener.

"I have got married and I have learned a lot from other captains. I will take the team forward in my own style," he added.

"Our brand of cricket remains the same. What the captaincy has done is it has given me new responsibility and I am looking forward to the challenge."

Star batter Virat Kohli also retired after the T20 World Cup and India's 15-man squad will give Suryakumar the opportunity to experiment with the top order, anchored on openers Shubman Gill and Yashasvi Jaiswal.

Sri Lanka also have a new short-format captain after a humiliating first-round World Cup knockout prompted Wanindu Hasaranga's resignation just six months after his appointment.

His replacement Charith Asalanka captained Jaffna Kings on Sunday to a title win in the island's 20-over Lanka Premier League tournament.

"It's a huge challenge for us to play the world champions. We are ready for the challenge as we prepared well for this series," Asalanka said.

"Bit disappointed that we are not at full strength," he added, saying that injury and illness had hurt the team's pace strength.

Fast bowler Nuwan Thushara was ruled out of the series with a fractured thumb while Dushmantha Chameera is unwell.

Sri Lanka have brought in right-arm seamer Asitha Fernando and left-arm quick Dilshan Madushanka as replacements.

The three-match series concludes Tuesday in Kandy before a three-match ODI series begins in Colombo on Friday.

CLASHES OVER QUOTA

Four more die from gunshot wounds

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Four more people, who suffered bullet wounds during the recent clashes centring the quota protests, died at different hospitals in Dhaka in the last 48 hours.

The deceased are Imtiaz Ahmed Dalim, 20, a student of Southeast University; Mainuddin, 25, a madrasa student; Sohel Rana, 20, and Yeasin, 17.

Imtiaz's father, Nawsher Ali, said his son was shot in Rampura on July 19. Imtiaz died at Dhaka Medical College Hospital around 4:00am yesterday.

Mainuddin was shot in Rayerbagh on July 21. He also died at DMCH around 2:00am yesterday, said his mother, Mahfuza Begum.

Yasin was shot in Jatrabari on July 21 and was admitted to Mugda Medical College Hospital. He died undergoing treatment around 11:00pm on Thursday, said his cousin Babul.

Sohel was shot in Rampura on July 19. He was admitted to the Intensive Care Unit at Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical University, where doctors declared him dead on Thursday evening, said Manik Saha, a sub-inspector of Saboteurs struck France's TGV high-speed train network yesterday in a series of pre-dawn attacks across the country, causing travel chaos and exposing security gaps ahead of the Paris Olympics opening ceremony later in the day.

The coordinated sabotage took place as France mounted a massive security operation involving tens of thousands of police and soldiers to safeguard the capital for the sporting extravaganza, sucking in security resources from across the country.

SNCF, the state-owned railway operator, said vandals had damaged signal substations and cables along the lines connecting Paris with cities such as Lille in the north, Bordeaux in the west and Strasbourg in the east. Another attack on the Paris-Marseille line was foiled.

20 students sued for attack on police

Twenty students of Sher-e-Bangla Agricultural University, along with many unnamed others, were sued on charges of demonstrating unlawfully in front of the campus and assaulting police.

Sub-Inspector Akhtaruzzaman of Sher-e-Bangla Nagar Police Station filed the case on July 21, ten days after the incident.

The students who have been named in the case as accused are Tawhid Ahmed Ashique, Ahmedul Kabir Taposh, Md Raihan, Sourav, Shahriar, Mohaiminul, Ahsan Habib, Anas, Sagar, Imran, Ahsan Habib, Wasiul Islam, Mujahidul Islam Shuvo, Altaf, Selim Reza, Nur Islam, Asif, Rifat, Shakib, and Mridul.

According to the case statement, students demanding reform to the quota system in government jobs blocked the road in front of Gate-2 of the university on July 11.

When police went to the spot to control the situation, students allegedly started throwing brickbats at them. At that time, several police personnel were injured. At one stage, police chased the protesters and dispersed them, it added.

Wave of Israeli strikes hit Gaza's north, south

21 more Palestinians killed; WHO sends over 1m polio vaccines to enclave to protect children

AGENCIES

A new wave of air strikes by Israeli fighter jets yesterday targeted the Gaza Strip, including Khan Younis in the south, the Bureij refugee camp in the centre, and Gaza City in the north of the enclave.

Gaza health officials said Israeli military forces fired live rounds at an ambulance evacuating a wounded person in southern Khan Younis, where a deadly ground invasion by Israeli forces is expanding.

The armed wing of Palestinian Islamic Jihad said its fighters bombarded Israeli soldiers and vehicles stationed around the Rafah crossing in southern Gaza with mortar shells.

The group also said it engaged in fierce clashes with Israeli forces since Thursday night in the east of Khan Younis, using machine guns and anti-tank shells.

According to Gaza health officials, Israeli military strikes in the past 24 hours had killed at least 21 people, the latest casualties in an offensive that health authorities in the enclave say has killed at least 39,196 Palestinians.

The World Food Programme (WFP) has been forced to reduce rations for families in Gaza to ensure broader coverage for newly displaced people, it said yesterday.

"Food stocks and humanitarian supplies in central and southern Gaza are very limited and barely any commercial supplies are going in," WFP added in a post on social media platform X.

The World Health Organization is sending more than one million polio vaccines to Gaza to be administered over the coming weeks to prevent children being infected after the virus was detected in sewage samples, its chief said yesterday.

Meanwhile, Australia, Canada, New Zealand urged Israel to protect civilians in Gaza. The three governments have issued a statement on the need for an urgent ceasefire in the Gaza Strip, saying "the situation in Gaza is catastrophic".

Humanity suffers from 'extreme heat epidemic'

Warns UN chief, calls for action to limit impacts of heat waves

AFP, United Nations

Humanity is suffering from an "extreme heat epidemic," UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres warned Thursday, calling for action to limit the impacts of heat waves intensified by climate change.

Antonio Guterres

"Billions of people are facing an extreme heat epidemic -- wilting under increasingly deadly heat waves, with temperatures topping 50 degrees Celsius around the world," he said. "That's 122 degrees Fahrenheit. And halfway to boiling."

According to the European Copernicus network, July 21, 22 and 23 were the three hottest days ever recorded worldwide, with July 22 holding the absolute record of 17.16 degrees Celsius (62.9 degrees Fahrenheit).

Guterres repeated his call for humanity to fight its "addiction" to fossil fuels.

"Today, our focus is on the impact of extreme heat. But let's not forget that there are many other devastating symptoms of the climate crisis: ever-more fierce hurricanes. Floods. Droughts. Wildfires. Rising sea levels. And the list goes on," he said.

"To tackle all these symptoms, we need to fight the disease. And the disease is the madness of incinerating our only home. The disease is the addiction to fossil fuels.

The Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ) yesterday called on Bangladesh authorities to investigate the killings of three journalists and other attacks on reporters covering deadly nationwide protests over government job quotas.

"CPJ is deeply disturbed by the killing of journalists Hasan Mehedi, Md Shakil Hossain, and Abu Taher Md Turab while they were reporting on the quota protests in Bangladesh," said CPJ Asia Programme Coordinator Beh Lih Yi, according to a report on its website.

"The Bangladesh government must hold to account those responsible for all assaults on journalists and fully restore internet and phone services to allow the free flow of information needed to cover matters of public interest," Yi added.

Lanka to hold presidential polls Sept 21

REUTERS, Colombo

Sri Lanka will hold presidential elections on September 21, a government notice said yesterday, setting the date for a crucial vote expected to determine the future of reforms in the South Asian nation weathering its worst financial crisis in decades.

Nominations for the election have to be submitted on August 15, with incumbent President Ranil Wickremesinghe becoming the first candidate to do so by paying a non-refundable deposit to the election commission, his office said.

Wickremesinghe, 75, took office in July 2022 after widespread protests caused by the debilitating financial crisis forced his predecessor Gotabaya Rajapaksa to flee the country and later resign.

Parliament elected Wickremesinghe to serve out the rest of the five year-term vacated by Rajapaksa who was elected in November 2019.

Ancient secrets unearthed in vast Turkish cave city

AFP, Midyat

Through a basement door in southeastern Turkey lies a sprawling underground city -- perhaps the country's largest -- which one historian believes dates back to the ninth century before Jesus Christ.

Archaeologists stumbled upon the city-under-a-city "almost by chance" after an excavation of house cellars in Midyat, near the Syrian border, led to the discovery of a vast labyrinth of caves in 2020.

Workers have already cleared more than 50 subterranean rooms, all connected by 120 metres of tunnel carved out of the rock.

But that is only a fraction of the site's estimated 900,000-square-metre area, which would make it the largest underground city in Turkey's southern Anatolia region.

Block raids unnerve city residents

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

City residents, still reeling from the shocks of deaths and destructions over the quota protests, are now feeling a fresh wave of fear.

Almost every day, a column of vehicles carrying law enforcers reaches some neighbourhoods, in some cases after sundown. Members of different forces jump off their vehicles, quickly cordon off the area and take position at different points. In some cases, their left hands grip the gun barrels with the right hand index fingers placed on the triggers.

An announcement through a megaphone hits the building walls and reverberates through the area: Go inside your home, don't try to come out.

Panicked, locals do as they are told – a block raid begins.

Soon, internet connections at targeted homes get snapped and street lights go off one by one. Only the searchlights mounted on the law enforcers' vehicles light parts of the area. In the next one to two hours, additional forces are called in, who then split into different groups and start raiding different houses.

This is how residents of at least eight areas in the capital shared their experience to The Daily Star.

> "Before conducting a drive, we collect the digital footprint and information provided by local sources including the ruling party men to identify the troublemakers and trace their whereabouts."

> A police officer, requesting anonymity.

The raids are creating further worries among the residents whose trauma is still fresh from the deaths of at least 162 people (according to this newspaper's count; actual figure could be much higher) in recent violence centring the quota protest.

The eight areas that saw such raids are Matuail, Shanir Akhra, Jatrabari, Kajla, Bashundhara, Shahinbagh, Mirpur DOHS, ECB Chhattar and Matikata.

During the raid, law enforcers knock on the door, get inside and arrest anyone suspected to have been involved in violence or were in contact with any troublemakers, police and locals said.

Joint forces have been conducting the block raids in different areas of the capital and other parts of the country to arrest those suspected to have been involved in the violence centring the quota protests.

STUDENTS ARE TOP TARGET

Till yesterday police confirmed 2,536 arrests while Rab arrested 71 in the capital alone.

UPDF member shot dead in Khagrachhari

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Rangamati

A member of the United People's Democratic Front (UPDF) was shot dead by unidentified assailants at Santi Bikash Karbaripara in Khagrachhari's Dighinala upazila early yesterday.

The deceased, identified as Junel Chakma, 31, was an organiser of the Tarabunia unit of UPDF (Prasit Group) from Amtoli village in the upazila.

According to Nurul Haque, officer-in-charge of Dighinala Police Station, some three to four unidentified armed assailants broke into the house of Master Lalit Chakma in the Kangarima Chara area early in the morning, where Junel was staying, and killed him.

Upon receiving the information, police recovered the body and sent it to Khagrachari Sadar Hospital for an autopsy.

"It was not immediately clear who were the persons involved in the killing," said the police official.

Meanwhile, Angya Marma, district organiser of UPDF, accused the reformist Jana Samhati Samity (JSS-MN Larma) and UPDF (Democratic) of being responsible for the killing and demanded justice.

However, both groups refuted the allegation and denied their involvement in the incident.

Junel had recently joined the UPDF from the Democratic Jubo Forum, reports UNB.

With the nine-hour curfew break ending soon, people who've just got off work are in a hurry to return home before the curfew is back on. The result is standstill traffic on the streets, with many opting to go on foot. The photo was taken around 5:00pm in the capital's Panthapath area yesterday.

Rain likely across the country: BMD

UNB, Dhaka

The Met office yesterday predicted light to moderate rain across the country in 24 hours till 9:00am today.

"Light to moderate rain or thunder showers accompanied by temporary gusty wind is likely at many places over Khulna, Barishal, Chattogram, and Sylhet divisions; at a few places over Rangpur and Mymensingh divisions and at one or two places over Rajshahi and Dhaka divisions with moderately heavy to heavy falls at places over Khulna, Barishal and Chattogram divisions," said a bulletin issued by Bangladesh Meteorological Department (BMD).

A mild heat wave is sweeping over Rajshahi and Rangpur divisions, as well as over Tangail, Sylhet, and Chuadanga districts. It may abate is some areas.

The day and night temperatures may remain nearly unchanged over the country.

Air quality 'moderate' in Dhaka for past few days

UNB, Dhaka

Dhaka ranked 63rd on the list of cities worldwide with the worst air quality with an AQI score of 51 at 09:08am yesterday.

The air quality was classified as "moderate". Dhaka's air quality remained in the moderate zone for the past few days, indicating an improvement.

The AQI, an index for reporting daily air quality, informs people how clean or polluted the air of a certain city is and what associated health effects might be a concern for them.

The AQI in Bangladesh is based on five pollutants: particulate matter (PM10 and PM2.5), NO2, CO, SO2, and ozone.

Dhaka has long been grappling with air pollution issues. Its air quality usually turns unhealthy in winter and improves during the monsoon.

to identify the troublemakers and trace their whereabouts," an officer said, requesting anonymity.

Law enforcers say these raids are meant to arrest four types of suspects -- those who ordered violence, provided funds, supplied firearms and those who took part in the violence.

But locals who witnessed such raids say law enforcers usually look for students, and if they find any, they check their phones, which is a breach of privacy.

"On Friday night, numerous police loaded in five trucks and many police vans and other vehicles cordoned off our area. They ordered students from many buildings to go on to the streets and stand in a single file. The street lights were off, but the headlights of their vehicles were directed at us. They said they would not arrest us this time, but we must leave Dhaka in three days," a student of a top public university said.

As the students said they offered private tuitions to support their education and so they cannot leave Dhaka now, some officers hit them and asked them to "shut up," the student said.

The Daily Star is not naming the student and the area where the raid took place for his safety.

Locals also saw helicopters flying low during these raids in some cases.

'AUXILIARY FORCES'

On Wednesday night, police arrested Fazlur Rahman, a manager at a courier service, from Manik Nagar during such a raid.

"Police checked Fazlur's cell phone and found a video clip of the clashes. This is why they arrested him," said one of his relatives, on condition of anonymity fearing reprisal.

Biplob Kumar Sarkar, joint commissioner (operation) of the DMP, said they will make sure that no troublemaker can leave Dhaka.

"The miscreants have gone into hiding, but we have been conducting block raids. Besides, police drives are underway day and night in Dhaka. No matter where they flee, we will arrest them," Biplob told a media briefing.

Sources in law enforcement said they already identified several thousand people who joined violence at different points in Dhaka.

A top DMP official said the plan to conduct violence was hatched at least a month ago by opposition party leaders and activists.

For the block raids, areas like Mohakhali, Mohammadpur, Jatrabari, and Uttara are on top of the list as some of the fiercest clashes took place in these areas.

Left Democratic Alliance (LDA), a platform of eight left-leaning parties; Anti-Fascist Leftist Association, a platform of six parties; and Bangladesh Jasod yesterday said the mass arrest of innocent students and people by flashing searchlights from helicopters during block raids joined in by Chhatra League-Jubo League activists to track down the protesting students and other people brings to mind the activities of Razakar, Al badr and other collaborators who aided the Pakistani army as auxiliary forces to identify the houses of freedom fighters.

A statement of the platforms demanded "an immediate end to repression, torture and mass arrests, withdrawal of curfew, return of army personnel to barracks and ensure normal environment."

PANIC ALL AROUND

The block raids have created a sense of fear among students and their families in many parts of Dhaka. Many of these families have already left their homes and seeking every opportunity to leave Dhaka, said witnesses.

"Before searching every room, police at first took photos of our rooms and houses and asked us not to talk to anyone about the raids," said Toufiq (not his real name), a university student form Shanir Akhra of Jatrabari.

He said police searched a six-storey building where he lives and vandalised some apartments before leaving the place late on Friday night.

"Many of our neighbours turned off the lights in their rooms so that police believe those flats were vacant," he said.

At one point, police started kicking at the main gate of their building. As the security guard and the houseowner opened the gate, police said they came for two men named Shahjahan and Rezwan, who allegedly attacked cops.

When the houseowner said there were no such people living in the building, several police officers in plainclothes started beating them and hurled abusive language.

"We know you have given them shelter. Tell us where?"

Around 50-60 armed police personnel, some in plainclothes and some wearing DB vests, were there, he said.

"From our balcony we saw some policemen beat up two people for several minutes, forced them to do sit-ups and made them say they will never participate in protest again," he said.

FEAR OF HELICOPTERS AGAIN

Many families in Jatrabari shared almost similar accounts.

"The local Chhatra League activists also joined the police during the raid and helped them identify houses where protesters live or the houses that provided food and water to them," said a witness to a block raid in Matuail.

A large number of law enforcers carried out raids on different houses in Mirpur 12 DOHS. Many students of different universities located near DOHS live there.

They said that during the raids, they looked for students and police checked their phones.

Witnesses from areas adjacent to ECB Chattar and Matikata area also said law enforcers carried out block raids in their areas too.

Late on Thursday night, a joint operation was conducted in Shaheen Bagh area of the capital. At that time, locals saw helicopters flying low and using searchlights.

"Use of searchlights from helicopters was terrifying," said a witness, recalling the memories of such choppers opening fire on the protesters.

'THIS IS NOT FAIR'

Locals from Bashundhara residential area said law enforcers conducted raids in the posh neighbourhood on Thursday night. Before the raids, police announced that no one should remain out of the house after 5:00pm. As the evening wore on, the presence of law enforcers increased.

A video footage shows members of the law enforcers firing when someone tries to capture the raid from top a building. The video went viral on social media.

In Mohakhali, electricity connection was snapped before a block raid.

Panicked, many families left their homes and took shelter elsewhere for safety.

In Jatrabari for example, The Daily Star found several homes empty.

"Among 22 families living in our building, there are only eight now. All other families have left Dhaka. Those who could not leave are thinking of shifting to someplace else," said a resident in Jatrabari.

"Police are making the common people extremely nervous. This is not fair, and it will not help improve the situation," he said.

It was a plot to cripple the economy arson attacks in 2001, in 2013-2015 and after that in 2023.

Referring to the killings of AL activists and police personnel during the recent mayhem, the premier asked what kind of politics is this.

Briefly describing various steps taken by her government regarding the quotas in government jobs, Hasina questioned the motive of the student movement.

She said the agitating students declared a "complete shutdown" that led to the destruction of state properties and killing of a number of people.

"My question to the people of this country is, what was my fault? I am working for the welfare of the people to upgrade their lives and livelihoods. Is that my fault?"

The PM said she repeatedly requested the agitating students to have patience as their wishes will be fulfilled by the apex court and the government is also in favour of them.

She questioned why the "complete shutdown" continued after the apex court issued status-quo on the quota issue making no quota in the government jobs.

"I don't know why their shutdown was not stopped despite meeting all of their demands."

Hasina urged the people to stand against violence and support the government's efforts to maintain peace and progress.

"I do not want to see mothers losing their children like this. I have lost my parents; I know the pain. I seek cooperation from all to prevent such tragedies," she said referring to the deaths.

The premier reiterated that her government would do everything to ensure proper treatment of the injured.

She said the government will provide artificial limbs to those who need them.

During her visit to the Pangu hospital, the PM enquired about the treatment of the injured people.

Nitor Director Kazi Shamim Uzzaman apprised the PM of treatment of the injured.

Health Minister Samanta Lal Sen and State Minister for Health Rokeya Sultana, and former health minister AFM Ruhal Haque were present.

PM VISITS SETU BHABAN

Later in the day, Hasina visited Setu Bhaban to witness the damage caused by the recent violence.

She inspected the vandalised floors and the premises of the building.

Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader and other senior ministry officials were present.

They briefed the premier about the vandalism and arson attacks that took place on July 18.

Default loans to soar

However, the actual volume of bad loans is at least three times the central bank figure, according to industry insiders.

Inflation may also increase in the coming days, Bijoy said.

Average inflation overshot the government's target of 7.5 percent in fiscal 2023-24; it stood at 9.73 percent.

"Not only was infrastructure damaged due to the unrest, but it also damaged the country's image -- the country will face a confidence crisis with investors," Bijoy said, adding that the priority now should be to bring the situation back to normal.

The bad loans will increase further as some business people have lost their capacity to repay the bank loans, said Anis A Khan, the former chairman of the Association of Bankers, Bangladesh Ltd (ABB), a platform of banks' chief executive officers and managing directors.

Already, some export orders of the garment sector have been cancelled amid the weeklong unrest, he said.

Banks' profitability will be impact adversely when they will have to keep higher provisioning for the higher bad loans, said Khan, also the former MD of Mutual Trust Bank.

There will be multiple effects on the banking sector and the overall economy because of the ongoing unrest, he said, adding that foreign investors will lose their trust in the country.

"It will be very difficult to rebuild the trust of foreign investors."

The country's economic capacity will be reduced because of infrastructural damage.

"There will be a need for incentive packages for business people but the government is facing a cash crisis of its own. So the overall economic situation is not so good," Khan added.

Borrowers failed to repay the bank loans and other payments amid the internet blackout and curfew, which will adversely affect the banking sector alongside the bank's profitability, said Mohammad Ali, managing director of Pubali Bank.

Last week, Bangladesh Bank instructed banks and non-bank financial institutions (NBFIS) to refrain from imposing fees or interest on delayed repayment of loan and saving scheme instalments and credit card bills between July 18 and July 25 if they clear their dues by the end of this month.

Banking services were stopped from 9 pm on July 18 for the countrywide internet blackout. From July 24, banking services were resumed on a limited scale, with many banks unable to conduct foreign transactions because of the slow internet.

"There is a lot of uncertainty regarding the economic situation in the coming days because of the recent unrest," said Zahid Hussain, a former lead economist of the World Bank's Dhaka office.

There will be a double blow to the economy compared with the Covid-19 pandemic period.

"One will be for the internet shutdown and the other will be for the nationwide curfew. This may adversely impact the country's exports and imports," he added.

2 more in DB custody 'for their security' about recent incidents".

This newspaper, however, could not know when and from where the two were picked up.

Earlier on Friday night, Nahid Islam, Asif Mahmud and Abu Baker Majumder -- three key organisers of the quota reform movement -- were picked up by police from a city hospital, where Nahid and Asif were undergoing treatment.

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan Kamal yesterday claimed they were taken into custody "to find out who were threatening to attack them".

"When we got the news [that they were being threatened] on social media, we took them into custody. We're questioning them to know who were trying to attack them. After questioning, we'll take a decision about them," he told a press briefing at the office of Narayanganj superintendent of police, after visiting the government and private establishments that were set on fire.

About these three also, ADC Junaed said they were taken into custody as "they sought security".

Meanwhile, Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner of DB, yesterday said Nahid, Asif and Abu Baker will be interrogated.

"We've interrogated Nur [former Ducsu vice president Nurul Haque Nur] and some other leaders after taking them on remand. They told us they had talks with Nahid and other coordinators. We need to know what they talked about," he told reporters at the DB office on the capital's Minto Road on Saturday.

"They [the coordinators] spoke on social media about feeling insecure. One of their fathers too expressed similar feelings. We think it's our responsibility as law enforcers to provide safety and security to those who say they're feeling insecure."

Meanwhile, a delegation of 12 teachers of the University Teachers Networks yesterday went to the DB office to enquire about the three coordinators, but the DB chief did not meet them as "he was busy".

They went there at 4:00pm and waited for around 20 minutes. They left after being told the DB chief was leaving the office.

Speaking to reporters, Professor Gitiara Nasreen of DU's journalism department, said, "When we came here, the head of the office was inside and was also informed. But he didn't meet us. We were asked by others in the office to stop his car when he was leaving and talk to him ... We're university teachers and also the guardians of these students ... Why should we stop someone's car to ask if our students are okay?

"It's very natural [to expect] that the entire process will be transparent and we'll be told what happened and why. But he didn't speak to us."

She added they went there out of concern for their students after learning from the media that they were picked up from the hospital "for extra security".

Saimum Reza Talukder, a teacher of Brac University's law department, said, "They were picked up on grounds of security issues. But the question is – why should they be in DB's custody? Why were they not returned to their families? A person's safest place is with their family.

"If security is to be provided, then it should be provided around their house and to their families as well."

He added, "We teachers have the right to know where they are now. It's also a matter of accountability to the public. So, the government should open up."

Responding to a question, Samina Lutfa, associate professor of DU's sociology department, said they were concerned about how the students are being treated and their safety.

"If there was a lack of security, they [the students] could've been handed to us."

About the DB chief not meeting them, she said, "I think it was very rude of him. Twelve teachers were standing and waiting but he didn't get the time. He didn't even tell us himself ... It wasn't right."

FRESH PROGRAMMES

After the five organisers were taken into police custody, three others last night announced fresh protest programmes, including drawing graffiti on walls across the country today.

Coordinators Abdul Hannan Masud, Mahin Sarker and assistant coordinator Rifat Rashid made the announcement in a virtual conference around 9:00pm last night.

They demanded the release of the five organisers currently in DB custody and the withdrawal of the false cases filed against students across the country.

Another demand was "visible action" against those – from ministers to constables – involved in the attacks on students.

They also said a "health force" should be formed in every educational institution at district, upazila and city levels, which will prepare a list of the injured and dead. They must also provide psychological and financial support to the injured and their families.

A legal force should also be formed, they added, to document the many false cases filed across the country and provide legal assistance to those in need.

"If our demands are not met, the anti-discrimination movement [Baishamya Birodhi Andolan] will be compelled to announce a tougher programmes from tomorrow," said Abdul Hannan Masud.

Two more die of dengue

BSS, Dhaka

Two more dengue patients died and 98 were hospitalised in the last 24 hours till yesterday morning, according to the Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS).

During the period, 74 dengue patients were hospitalised in Dhaka.

This year, the total number of cases rose to 5,496 while 53 deaths from dengue were reported.

In the past 24 hours, 68 dengue patients were discharged from different hospitals.

Among the total cases, 4,910 patients have already been released, the DGHS statement added.

Last year, the country recorded 1,705 dengue-related deaths and a total of 3,21,179 dengue cases.

Meanwhile, anti-mosquito drives have either remained completely suspended in some areas or been slowed down since the recent unrest in the country centring the quota reform protests.

Release quota organisers immediately

Demands HRFB; urges authorities to refrain from picking up students

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Human Rights Forum Bangladesh (HRFB) yesterday condemned and expressed deep concern over the picking up of three organisers of the quota reform protests by detectives and demanded their immediate release and security.

The forum also urged to ensure safety of all students and maintain highest caution so that no students face any harassment.

It also demanded compensation for the affected students, their rehabilitation and proper treatment to prevent any kind of potential disabilities.

Signed by 23 members of the forum, HRFB in a statement also demanded fair and impartial investigation into the recent violence to ensure justice.

HRFB, referring to media reports, said around 200 people were killed and over 1,000 injured in the violence that spread across the country, centring the quota reform protests. The

Ask speakers at women's rally

Women at a protest rally yesterday wanted to know under which law the law-enforcement agencies fired bullets at students and the masses during the quota reform protests.

They also demanded the resignation of Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina.

Under the banner of "Chhatra Janatar Pashey Nari Samaj," women from all walks of life organised the rally at the capital's Purana Paltan around noon, condemning the arbitrary killings, assaults, cases, and arrests by the police against students.

"I don't know why the forces opened fire on the students and masses. Was there a national emergency that necessitated the use of live ammunition by law enforcement agencies?" asked Sadia Arman, a senior lawyer at the Supreme Court.

Twenty three-year-old Md Yasin, a pickup van helper, was struck by a bullet on July 19, when he went to a nearby grocery store in an alley close to his house.

Fired from a distance, with tremendous force and speed, the bullet first pierced his wallet, then his hip and finally exited through his stomach.

He is now fighting for his life at Suhrawardy Medical College Hospital in the capital.

On that evening, there was a clash going on between quota reform protesters and law enforcement agencies in the Rayerbazar area, near the Martyred Intellectuals Memorial.

'They're enemies of the country'

Raushan on those who destroyed state resources

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Raushan Ershad, chairman of a faction of Jatiyo Party, yesterday demanded justice for the victims of recent anti-quota movement violence across the country.

She also called on the government to provide proper compensation to the families of the victims and ensure adequate medical treatment for the injured.

The former opposition leader made these remarks while speaking to reporters after visiting various damaged government establishments, including "Setu Bhaban", in the capital during the anti-quota demonstrations.

Accompanied by senior party leaders, Raushan condemned the destruction caused by armed criminals.

Those responsible for such extensive damage need to be tried under sedition laws through proper investigation, she said. "Citizens of any country cannot destroy state resources like this. Those who did are enemies of the country."

She acknowledged the valid demands of the young students and supported their cause, which she said had been addressed by the Supreme Court.

However, she added that the movement turned violent due to conspirators, resulting in the loss of many lives, including students, civilians, and law enforcement personnel.

3 sent to jail over rape of schoolgirl

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Benapole

A Jashore court yesterday sent three persons to jail in a case filed for allegedly raping a sixth grader and filming the incident in Jashore's Monirampur upazila.

The accused are Ashraful Islam, 20, and his two friends -- Pranto Biswas, 22, and Shaon Hossain, 19.

Police arrested the three after the victim's grandmother filed a case with Manirampur Police Station, said ABM Mehdi Masud, officer-in-charge of the police station.

The three accused were sent to jail by a court.

According to the case statement, Ashraful recently returned home from Malaysia.

Around 8:00pm on Friday, Ashraful and two friends picked up the victim and raped her.

ATAI RIVER IN JASHORE

3 villages inundated as dam breaks

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Benapole

The dam on Atai river in Abhaynagar upazila of Jashore broke on Thursday, inundating three villages under Siddhipasha union.

Since then, hundreds of families in Shantipur, Chandrapur and Ramnagar villages have been going through immense sufferings.

The villagers urged the authorities concerned to repair the broken dam quickly, and demanded a permanent solution to the issue.

The river's water started entering through Rishipara section of the dam in Shantipur village after a 300-metre stretch of the embankment collapsed early on July 26 due to rise in tidal water, said locals.

Soon, areas across Shantipur, Chandrapur and Ramnagar villages became waterlogged, causing sufferings to the residents, said Akbar Khan, a local union parishad member. The upazila administration has been informed in this regard, he added.

"Around 2,000 people in the three villages have been affected while numerous houses, animal sheds, fish enclosures and rural roads across the area have been waterlogged for the last three days," said A Kamal Hasan, chairman of Siddhipasha Union Parishad and a resident of Chandrapur village.

Contacted, KM Abu Nawshad, UNO of Abhaynagar upazila, said the officials concerned of Bangladesh Water Development Board have been informed about the collapsed dam.

"BWDB officials gave assurance of repairing the collapsed dam within a week. Meanwhile, upazila administration has taken some steps to repair the damaged roads," he added.

She is shedding 'crocodile tears'

Says Fakhrul on PM's hospital visit

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday criticised Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina for what he called a deceptive display of "crocodile tears" during her hospital visits to see the injured protesters of the quota reform movement.

In a statement, Fakhrul condemned the Detective Branch for detaining three coordinators of the quota reform movement from a hospital, warning that such actions would deepen the crisis.

He accused the premier of deceiving people with her hospital visits.

Fakhrul urged the government to step down, taking responsibility for the recent violence.

He also accused it of shutting down communication systems and imposing curfews to cling onto power. He highlighted the economic hardships faced by the public and called for a political solution.

Fakhrul demanded an impartial international probe into the killings during the quota protests and accused the government of spreading misinformation about BNP acting chairman Tarique Rahman.

BNP, Jamaat are inseparable

Says Quader

BSS, Dhaka

The relationship between BNP and Jamaat is inseparable, as demonstrated in the BNP's call for unity that includes Jamaat, said Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday.

"Anti-liberation forces are collaborators of BNP," he said in a statement to the media.

Quader criticised the call for national unity by BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir, labelling it as a union of anti-state forces against the spirit of the Liberation War.

He said this call poses a threat to the country's independence and sovereignty. Quader urged pro-liberation forces to resist BNP-Jamaat.

He alleged that BNP-Jamaat activists conducted widespread destruction using lethal weapons.

Quader assured that law enforcers are actively pursuing the culprits, with a judicial probe committee and police investigations underway.

Rejecting BNP's allegations, he said innocent people will not be harassed, and no criminals will be spared.

forum also feared many of the injured may lose their vision and limbs.

Besides, various government establishments were damaged due to the violence, it said.

The forum condemned the violence vehemently and demanded legal action through fair and impartial investigation against those involved. They also urged that students are not harassed in the process.

HRFB said it was known that when allegations rose of men in plainclothes picking up three organisers of Anti-discrimination Student Movement -- Asif Mahmud, Nahid Islam and Abu Baker Majumder -- on July 26 evening, the Detective Branch claimed that they were taken into custody "on security grounds".

Meanwhile, there was an allegation that plainclothes DB men picked up Nahid Islam from his friend's residence on July 19 and later he was dumped on a road after being physically and mentally tortured, it said.

The forum expressed deep concern over the allegations of picking up the organisers of the student protests time and again by men in plainclothes and demanded a clear statement from the authorities concerned in this regard.

"Such incidents will definitely create panic among general students and their family members," it said, adding that such indiscriminate detention is a clear violation of the articles 27 and 31 of the constitution.

"So, the forum demanded release and security of all organisers, including Nahid Islam, Asif Mahmud and Abu Baker Majumder, and urged [the authorities] to refrain from picking them up by plainclothes men, intimidating them and exercising illegal force," reads the statement.

The forum demanded that the 2016 Supreme Court directives regarding the arrest without warrant and remand be followed.

It said police action were not coherent with the public statement of several ministers, who said the students were not involved in any violence or subversive activities. Rather, police action are creating obstacle to freedom of expression and holding peaceful protest guaranteed by the constitution.

Such activities by the law enforcement agencies are exposing their misuse of power and questioning their professional integrity, it said.

Overall, this is contradictory to the laws of Bangladesh and its international commitments, which will create mistrust among people about the rule of law, the forum added.

The signatories include HRFB experts Hameeda Hossain, Sultana Kamal and Raja Devasish Roy; HRFB convener Faruq Faisel, also executive director of Ain o Salish Kendra; HRFB steering committee members Shaheen Anam, executive director of Manusher Jonno Foundation; Zakir Hossain, chief executive of Nagarik Uddyog; Sara Hossain, honorary executive director of Bangladesh Legal Aid and Services Trust; Ranjan Karmakar, executive director of Steps Towards Development; Shale Ahmed, executive director of Bandhu Social Welfare Society; and Sanjib Drang, general secretary of Bangladesh Adivasi Forum.

The other signatories are HRFB members Iftekharuzzaman, executive director of Transparency International Bangladesh; Fauzia Moslem, president of Bangladesh Mahila Parishad; Shamsul Huda, executive director of Association for Land Reform and Development; Khushi Kabir, coordinator of Nijera Kori; Sarder Jahangir Hossain, executive director of Acid Survivors Foundation; Moni Rani Das, chairperson of Bangladesh Dalit and Excluded Rights Society; Syed Sultan Uddin Ahmmed, executive director of Bangladesh Institute of Labour Studies; Dewan Zaman, executive director of FAIR; Pallab Chakma, executive director of Kapaeeng Foundation; Rokeya Rafique Baby, executive director of Karmojibi Nari; Tasnim Azim, president of Naripokkho; Abdus Sattar Dulal of National Alliance of Disabled People's Organisations; and Ashrafun Nahar Misti, executive director of Women with Disabilities Development Foundation.

Bystanders quickly took him to Suhrawardy hospital, where doctors performed a two-and-a-half-hour colostomy surgery.

He is now on a colostomy bag to manage his bodily waste, the duty doctor told The Daily Star.

He required four bags of blood during the operation.

Yasin, the youngest of three siblings, is being accompanied by his father, Rouf Shikder, and his brother, Md Mizan.

"My son has been very anxious since the incident and keeps asking when he will recover. Every time he wakes up, he cries out in pain," said his father, who came all the way from Nazirpur upazila of Pirojpur.

Yasin's brother Mizan mentioned that despite promises of free treatment, they have already spent Tk 1 lakh, borrowed from others.

"We are very poor, and our family relies on our income, which is currently halted. We don't know if things will improve," said Mizan.

Failing to find elder

"We had an apprehension that our eldest brother might be arrested for his association with opposition political party. But why police arrested my innocent youngest brother?" asked Sagor, a fish trader.

Golam Mostafa Russell, Narayanganj superintendent of police, said, "Those who have carried out mass destruction are mostly involved with BNP or Jamaat. It is not possible to identify everyone instantly. If we find any involvement of the boy after verification, then he will be made accused in the case; otherwise, he will be released."

such extreme measures, how could they [law enforcement agencies] open fire? I want to know the answers," she added.

Jahangirnagar University teacher Snigda Rizwana criticised the PM for visiting the metro rail first rather than visiting the family members of the deceased and injured victims.

"To her [Sheikh Hasina], the metro rail is more important than lives," she said.

"You [PM] said that you poured water from a helicopter to extinguish the fire. Then who killed the child playing on the rooftop? Who killed the child staring outside from her window? Did your conscience not tell you to visit the ill-fated family members first? Are they also Razakars or militants to you?" she asked.

The teacher said the Awami League does not care about the lives of people, as the party did not come to power with the people's mandate.

"That is why you [PM] used all your forces to suppress the students' protests," she said.

Speaking at the rally, Jakia Shishir, grandmother of Mir Mugdho, who was killed during the student protest, said her grandson distributed water among the protesters during the movement.

"He was seen shouting 'water, water'. He asked the protesters if they needed water to drink. He served water to the protesters to quench their thirst, but he was killed within minutes," she said.

"You [PM] have killed numerous children like Mugdho... History says no one can remain in power by force," she added.

Amena Aktar, joint convener of Biplobi Nari Forum, asked the prime minister to step down from office for killing numerous people by using force.

Among others, women from different left-leaning political parties and cultural and social organisations spoke at the rally.

After the rally ended, they brought out a procession that concluded in front of the foreign ministry's office.

Almost all low-income people in Khulna city have found themselves in dire straits amid the ongoing situation for over a week.

Shafiq Mandal, 65, who works as a porter and ticket broker at Sonadanga Bus Terminal in Khulna city, was seen sorting some rusted iron rods and bars at an abandoned car garage near the terminal on Friday noon.

Amid nationwide curfew over the past few days, he found no work to make ends meet and has been compelled to collect discarded metal pieces to sell as scraps.

"The terminal hardly had any passengers in the past few days due to curfew, so I had no work. Yesterday, I earned Tk 140 by selling scrap metal, but today [Friday], I won't probably be able to make more than Tk 80-90," he said.

Like him, almost all low-income people in Khulna city, including day labourers, hawkers, cobblers, rickshaw-pullers and vendors, have found themselves in dire straits amid the ongoing situation for over a week and are passing their days with frustration and struggling to stay afloat.

> Like other times, day labourers were seen waiting at the city's Sat Rasta and Moilapota intersections on Friday and Saturday in the morning, looking for clients to hire them for work. However, even after waiting for more than four hours, less than half of them got any work.

Like other times, day labourers were seen waiting at the city's Sat Rasta and Moilapota intersections on Friday and Saturday in the morning, looking for clients to hire them for work.

However, even after waiting for more than four hours, less than half of them got any work.

Homeowners are reluctant to engage in any kind of construction work amid the prevailing situation, said the workers.

Many workers and marginalised people were also seen at Khulna Rail Station and BIWTA Terminal sitting idle.

"After finding no work for a week, I resorted to borrowing some money to buy essentials for my family of five and some lemons, which I have been selling in the Bastuhara kitchen market for the last three days. However, there are not many buyers on the market. So how am I going to earn anything in this situation?" lamented Rabiul Alam, a day labourer.

Hanif Gazi, 33, a construction worker from Haldar Para in Khalishpur, said he had to borrow Tk 1,300 from a relative to put food on the plate for his family of four as the construction work he was employed in has been suspended amid the curfew.

"How long can you survive with Tk 1,300? I need to find some work, but no one is hiring workers amid the curfew," he added.

Al Amin Sheikh, 55, a rickshaw puller from Nayabati area, said he could not even earn a quarter of his usual daily income by pulling a rickshaw during the few hours when curfew gets relaxed.

Numerous other low-income and marginalised people shared similar plights with this correspondent.

Contacted, Kazi Aminul Haque, president of Khulna Chamber of Commerce and Industry, said daily wage earners have been the most adversely affected amid the ongoing situation.

He called upon the government as well as affluent members of society to come forward and help those affected.

Failing to find elder brother, police pick up HSC examinee

STAR REPORT

Police picked up an HSC examinee after failing to find his elder brother during an early morning raid in Narayanganj on July 22.

Eighteen-year-old Abu Raihan, a student of Reboti Mohan Pilot School and College, is now in Narayanganj jail, said his family members.

They alleged that law enforcers in plainclothes raided their Atigram home under Siddhirganj upazila around 3:00am to arrest Raihan's elder brother Abdul Kader Jilani, who is the Siddhirganj Thana Jatiyatabadi Chhatra Dal president.

Abu Raihan

"The law enforcers came to our house in search of our brother Jilani who usually stays away from home for his involvement in politics. Failing to find him, police picked up Raihan despite our mother telling them that he has been appearing in the HSC exam," Sagor, the second of three siblings, told The Daily Star.

Raihan, a student of science department, secured GPA 5 in the 2022 SSC exam, said Sagor, adding that his younger was not involved in politics.

Sagor said he was in another room when police were whisking away Raihan, saying that it would help them arrest Jilani.

The law enforcers told the single mother of three to appear at the Siddirganj Police Station with Raihan's exam admit card.

"We appeared at the police station with Raihan's admit card around 4:00am and stayed there till 11:00am before police told us that Raihan has been sent to the court. He was shown arrested under section 54," said Sagor.

He said they rushed to the court and appealed for Raihan's release through a lawyer. However, the court sent Raihan to jail the same day.

Security beefed up at Khulna jail

UNB, Khulna

Security has been tightened at Khulna District Jail considering the current situation in the country, including the recent attacks in Narsingdi jail.

"Surveillance has been increased in and around the jail while the leaves of all jail staffers have been cancelled," said Jail Superintendent Md Rafiqul Kader yesterday.

However, the jail authorities also suspended the visits of the relatives of the jail inmates, he said.

"Everyone is performing their duties continuously. Additional police have been deployed at the main gate of the jail," he said.

Security has been beefed up inside the jail and law enforcement agencies have been kept on alert, he added.

Currently, there are 1,421 prison inmates in the jail, against its capacity of accommodating 676 inmates.

Guarantee easy accessibility to climate finance

Says environment minister

UNB, Dhaka

Environment Minister Saber Hossain Chowdhury has called for the implementation of mechanisms that guarantee easy accessibility to climate finance for developing nations.

He highlighted the need for increased transparency in the allocation and distribution of these funds to ensure they effectively support the intended climate actions.

The minister said this while delivering a speech on the opening day of the two-day Head of Delegation retreat programme held in Shamakhi, Azerbaijan, on Friday.

The event, which brings together key international leaders, is focused on shaping the New Collective Quantified Goal on Climate Finance.

Furthermore, the minister underscored the importance of considering the unique needs of Least Developed Countries (LDCs) and Small Island Developing States (SIDS) in the formulation of the New Collective Quantified Goal on Climate Finance (NCQG).

He stressed the necessity of finalising a clear definition of climate finance, ensuring that it comprehensively covers adaptation, mitigation, and loss and damage.

The Head of Delegation programme commenced with an in-depth discussion on setting the scene for the NCQG, which is poised to replace the current USD 100 billion climate finance goal set by developed countries for developing nations after 2025.

COASTS IN BAGERHAT

Solar power brings light, resilience

PARTHA CHAKRABORTTY,
Bagerhat

In the coastal areas of Bagerhat's Kachua upazila, solar power has emerged as a boon for the people, especially amid natural disasters and routine power outages.

The renewable energy source has not only brightened homes in the villages of Sangdia, Afra, Sreerampur, Kalmibuniya, Mosni, and Bikul but also enabled residents to stay connected and maintain their daily activities without disruption.

"I purchased a solar panel and battery for Tk 20,000. During natural disasters, solar power helps us light our homes, recharge our mobile phones, torches, and even power banks. These devices are crucial for communication and safety in such critical times," said Mehedi Hasan Khan from Afra.

Echoing him, Bappi Debnath from Sreerampur noted that the use of solar power in these villages is not only a response to emergency situations but also a practical solution to daily challenges.

"Load-shedding is a common issue faced by rural people in summer. During power outages, the scorching heat is unbearable. Solar panels generate electricity harnessing energy from the sun, allowing us to run fans and lights during power cuts. At night, the charged batteries provide us with the necessary power to keep our homes lit and comfortable," he said.

Embracing the use of solar power has transformed the lives of many in Kachua upazila towards enhanced sustainability.

Ashim Chakrabortty from Sangdia said, "I received a solar panel from the government and later bought another for Tk 16,000. Solar power has revolutionised our lives. It's a cost-effective and eco-friendly solution to ensure that we are never left in the dark. The investment is worth every penny, given the long-term benefits."

Contacted, Rakhi Banerjee, upazila nirbahi officer of Kachua upazila, said, "At times of natural calamities, such as cyclones and storms, when conventional power grids are often the first to be affected, solar power systems remain largely unaffected, providing a steady source of energy."

The solar street lights in rural areas have also been incredibly useful, she added.

The UNO, however, expressed the need for renewed government support to distribute more solar power units in the coastal areas.

FAO gives silo, cattle feed to 15,110 families

UNB, Dhaka

The Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) of the United Nations has distributed silos and cattle feed to families across five districts of Jamuna River basin to mitigate the impacts of monsoon floods.

The project aims to safeguard livelihoods, reducing the adverse effects of climate-related disasters.

As part of the project FAO, with the budget of nearly USD 600,000, is distributing silos for the safe storage of food grains, seeds, clean water and other valuable assets during the monsoon flood and 50 kilogrammes of ruminant concentrated feed to 15,110 vulnerable farming households engaged in livestock production.

China warns Philippines of 'resolute' response

AFP, Vientiane

China will "respond resolutely" to any violation by the Philippines of a recent deal to calm tensions between the two countries in the South China Sea, its top diplomat told his Filipino counterpart, Beijing said yesterday.

Manila is locked in a longstanding territorial row with Beijing over parts of the strategic waterway through which trillions of dollars worth of trade passes annually.

Last week, the two sides agreed to a "provisional arrangement" for resupply missions to Filipino troops stationed at Second Thomas Shoal, which has been the focus of violent clashes in recent months.

Wang Yi called on the Philippines to "honour its commitments" under the deal rather than "backtracking or creating complications", according to a readout of his meeting with Philippine foreign secretary Enrique Manalo at an Asean gathering in Laos.

"Otherwise, China will definitely respond resolutely," he said.

Wang also warned the Philippines against deploying a US missile defense system.

"If the Philippines introduces the US intermediate-range missile defense system, it will create tension and confrontation in the region and trigger an arms race," he said.

Speaking to reporters late Friday, Manalo said he hoped Beijing would keep its side of the bargain.

"If the parties implement, and we hope China implements the agreement, then we'll be able to resupply our military personnel on the ship without any obstruction," he said.

Fire crews work to put out hotspots in the Maligne Lodge in Jasper, Alberta, Canada on Friday. Severe wildfire seasons are increasingly hurting western Canada's lucrative tourism industry, with some visitors beginning to avoid the busy late-summer months due to concerns about uncontrolled blazes, smoke-filled skies and road closures.

Kyiv's statements on peace talks contradictory

Says Russia; Ukraine downs 4 Russian drones

AFP, Vientiane

Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov said yesterday he "does not listen" to what he called Ukraine's contradictory statements on peace talks.

Lavrov spoke after Ukrainian Foreign Minister Dmytro Kuleba visited China for talks this week. President Volodymyr Zelensky then said Beijing sent a "clear signal" it supported Ukraine's territorial integrity.

Answering questions from Russian journalists on the sidelines of a meeting of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (Asean) in the Laos capital, Lavrov referred dismissively to Zelensky and Kuleba's comments.

Kuleba, in an interview with Ukraine's TSN channel Friday about his visit to Beijing, said Kyiv could not be forced to negotiate and that China, which has sought to paint itself as a mediator after Russia's invasion, respected Ukraine's territorial integrity.

Kuleba "is saying this not for the first time and has sometimes said completely opposite things," Lavrov said.

Meanwhile, Ukraine's air defences shot down four attack drones and one missile fired by Russia in an overnight attack yesterday, the Ukrainian air force said.

Start peace process

Asean urges Myanmar, condemns violence against civilians

REUTERS

Foreign ministers of the Southeast Asian regional bloc Asean yesterday condemned violence against civilians in the military-ruled Myanmar and urged all parties to end hostilities and follow an agreed peace plan.

In a joint communique issued two days after their closed-doors retreat in Laos, the Association of Southeast Asian Nations also welcomed unspecified practical measures to reduce tension in the South China Sea and prevent accidents and miscalculations.

It described North Korea's missile tests as worrisome developments and urged peaceful resolutions to the conflicts in Ukraine, as well as Gaza, expressing concern over the dire humanitarian situation and "alarming casualties" there.

Earlier in the day, Australia's Foreign Minister Penny Wong called on Myanmar's junta to "take a different path" from its bloody crackdown on dissent, saying the situation in the war-torn country is "not sustainable".

"Myanmar is deeply concerning, we see it in the economy, instability, insecurity, deaths," Wong told journalists at a press conference.

"The message I want to send to the military regime is 'this is not sustainable for you and your people'."

"We urge them to take a different path and reflect the five-point consensus."

The junta has been barred from high-level Asean meetings over its crackdown on dissent.

It had previously refused to send "non-political representatives" but two senior bureaucrats are representing the country at the talks in Vientiane.

A Southeast Asian diplomat told AFP on condition of anonymity earlier this week that the military's readiness to re-engage diplomatically was a sign of its "weakened position".

In recent weeks, ethnic minority armed groups have renewed an offensive against the military in northern Shan state, seizing territory along a vital highway to China.

Indian soldier, intruder killed in J&K

AFP, New Delhi

A gunfight in Kashmir killed the eleventh Indian soldier to die in the restive Himalayan territory this month, India's military said yesterday.

The military said an armed intruder from bordering Pakistan was also killed in the exchange of fire.

India's military said a group of two or three people crossed the de facto frontier dividing the territory and fired at an army post in Kupwara district "from close proximity". An Indian army soldier succumbed to his injuries during treatment, while another was injured but in stable condition.

Mobile internet

People with knowledge of the matter said the outage was ordered by the government.

The Daily Star has visited the data centres in question and found no sign of damage to the building that housed them.

Officials of the data centres also confirmed that there was no fire in the building. However, the Department of Disaster Management (DDM) building was torched and that fire partially damaged some overhead cables connected to the data centres located nearby buildings.

On July 17, the government shut down mobile internet. Palak said it was "in light of the current crisis in the country and to stop the spread of fake news on social media."

The next day, the DDM building was torched.

Around 8:00pm, officials of the Internet Service Providers Association of Bangladesh said the fire might have cut 30-40 percent of the bandwidth supply, leaving some users disconnected and many with slow internet.

However, officials of internet service providers said this would disrupt partial internet traffic. An hour later, the entire Bangladesh was without internet.

The government reopened broadband internet in selected areas on July 23 and restored connections on a trial basis nationwide the next day.

Human Rights chief.

The signatories include luminaries such as writer Amitav Ghosh, philosophers such as Étienne Balibar and Sandra Laugier, and leaders in humanities and social sciences such as Didier Fassin, Diana Eck, and Ash Amin.

The petition, which has drawn support from universities around the world, speaks to global concerns about preserving academic freedom, and democratic rights.

Many academics and civil rights organisations have faced intimidation from the authorities in Bangladesh and now fear for the safety of their families if they join our efforts to seek immediate action on behalf of the victims, the letter said.

"We urge you that this is a moment of urgent action," says the letter, expressing grave concern about the violent clashes that left over 150 dead.

The letter said that due to the continuing blockade on news, there is very little information on the brutal violence that has been unleashed on students, teachers, journalists, and others.

"Still, from what we can gather from our colleagues in Bangladesh, we understand that the police have killed protestors in the hundreds and injured them in the thousands."

Draconian measures such as arbitrary arrests and detention without show cause notice, denial of the right to be represented by a lawyer, infliction of injuries, and torture on the arrested call for immediate action to stop these blatant violations of human rights by the present government in Bangladesh, the letter reads.

"Given the atmosphere of intimidation and repression, we urge you, as the High Commissioner of Human Rights, to press for an independent inquiry into these grievous events that would fix responsibility for the lethal violence against protesters and the blockade on news and communication."

The letter said Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina has lost all moral and legal legitimacy in allowing these grave violations and must answer for the loss of so many lives.

Some other scholars signing the letter include David Ludden, professor of history, New York University; Sheldon Pollock, Arvind Raghunathan professor emeritus of South Asian studies, Columbia University; Etienne Balibar, emeritus professor, University of Paris-Nanterre; Partha Chatterjee, professor emeritus of anthropology, Columbia University; Naomi Hossain, global research professor, SOAS; Diana Eck, Frederic Wertham, Professor of Law and Psychiatry in Society, Harvard University; Andrew Brandel, associate instructional professor, University of Chicago; Piergiorgio Donatelli, professor and chair of philosophy, Sapienza University, Rome; Ashutosh Varshney, director, Saxena Center for Contemporary South Asia; Sol Goldman, professor of international studies and the social sciences, Brown University; Faisal Devji, professor of Indian history, University of Oxford; Akeel Bilgrami, Sidney Morgenbesser, professor of philosophy, Columbia University; Sandra Laugier, professor of philosophy, University of Paris 1 - Panthéon-Sorbonne; Gyan Prakash, Dayton-Stockton professor of history, Princeton University; Iftikhar Dadi, John H Burris, professor, Cornell University; Prasenjit Duara, Oscar Tang, professor of East Asian studies, Duke University; Shruti Kapila, Professor of history and politics, Cambridge University; Joya Misra, distinguished professor, University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Meanwhile, Mary Lawlor, UN Special Rapporteur on Human Rights Defenders, yesterday said she was deeply disturbed by reports from Bangladesh that three leaders of the Students Against Discrimination movement have been forcibly taken from hospital by police.

"They were reportedly in hospital in the first place due to police torture. This madness must stop," she said in a post on social media platform X.

people were arrested in 35 districts.

Of them, six were arrested in Thakurgaon; one in Madaripur; one in Dinajpur; 17 in Rangpur; six in Feni; 34 in Gazipur; four in Sylhet; 10 in Tangail; 29 in Rajshahi; 16 in Bogura; 50 in Narsingdi; three in Gaibandha; four in Barguna; 51 in Narayanganj; nine in Joypurhat; seven in Khulna; two in Jamalpur; 33 in Pabna; five in Kushtia; eight in Mymensingh; 15 in Kishoreganj; seven in Netrokona; one in Satkhira; six in Cox's Bazar; 12 in Naogaon; 17 in Cumilla; five in Natore; two in Panchagarh; 61 in Chattogram; 14 in Chandpur; one in Chuadanga; three in Meherpur; three in Jhenaidah; 10 in Savar and 13 in Barishal.

Rab yesterday morning said they have so far arrested 290 people across the country, including 71 in Dhaka, since July 18 in connection with the violence.

Meanwhile, Chattogram Metropolitan and the district police arrested 847 people, including BNP-Jamaat men, till yesterday, according to police.

In Narayanganj, two new cases of violence, vandalism and arson were filed yesterday.

With these, the total number of cases in five police stations of the district stands at 24 and the number of arrestees has reached 487.

In Gazipur, at least 396 people were arrested over the same 36-hour period.

Meanwhile, a Dhaka court yesterday placed three people, including BNP's Publicity Secretary Shahid Uddin Chowdhury Annie on a seven-day remand each in a case filed over vandalising and setting fire to the Bangladesh Television centre in Rampura on July 18.

Mohammad Yasin Shikder, an inspector of the Detective Branch of police and the case's investigating officer, produced them before the court with a 10-day remand prayer.

Five others were remanded in connection with a case over the vandalism carried out at the Mirpur-10 Metro Rail Station. According to the case documents, some 5,000-6,000 people attacked the station between 4:30pm and 7:30pm on July 19, resulting in damages worth Tk 500 crore.

STUDENTS BEING ARRESTED

Despite government officials' saying that students will not be harassed during the crackdown on perpetrators of the recent violence and sabotage centring the quota reform movement, hundreds of students have been implicated in separated cases filed across the country.

As of yesterday, at least 62 students in seven districts have been arrested, with dozens of others also accused in the cases.

In Narsingdi, at least 34 students were arrested over the last week.

Among them, 19 are madrasa students, and 15 are students from different schools, colleges, and universities. The students' lawyer Advocate Suman Ahmed, confirmed the arrest of the 15.

From July 18-26, police filed 11 cases on various charges: assault, vandalism, looting of weapons, obstruction of government work, attempted murder of police officials, possession of firearms and explosives, and causing public disturbance in the Narsingdi district jail.

Around 2,000 people were listed as "unidentified accused" in the cases.

Of them, police arrested 182 individuals from July 18-26, said Mohammad Mostafizur Rahman, superintendent of Narsingdi police.

In Khulna, at least two students were arrested in three cases under the Special Powers Act, filed with three police stations.

The arrestees are Al Amin Sheikh, a student of North Western University and the central organising secretary of the Bangladesh Students Federation; and Md Nazim Uddin Shamim, convener of the Azam Khan Government Commerce College Chhatra Dal.

Md Ahsan Habib, additional deputy commissioner (media) of Khulna Metropolitan Police, told The Daily Star that a total of 100 people were arrested from July 17-27 on charges of violent agitation and engaging in sabotage under the guise of the quota reform protesters.

In Satkhira, at least 98, including 16 students, have so far been arrested. On July 19, the 16 were sent to jail by a court order, said Mohidul Islam, officer-in-charge of Satkhira Police Station.

They are: Imran Hossain, Arman Hossain, Kazi Nur Siam, Shahrukuzzaman, Loinul Islam, Kazi Sakib Hasan, Tanvir Hossain, Ibrahim Hossain, Fahim, Zahid Hossain, Asadullah, Oliur Rahman, Tasin Farhan, Mahi Rahman, Rakibul Islam, and Nafizul Islam.

On the night of July 18, Bajra Kishore Pal of Satkhira Sadar Police Station filed the case against 30 named and 250-300 unnamed individuals, accusing them of breaking into the police station and attacking officers.

In Magura, five students were arrested in a sabotage case, according to Md Kalimullah, additional superintendent of police in the district.

In Natore, some 97 people, including four students, were arrested in eight different cases, police sources said.

In Narayanganj's Siddhirganj area, plainclothes men detained a student named Abu Raihan, an HSC examinee, on the night of July 22 after they could not locate his elder brother Abdul Kader Jilani, is the president of the Siddhirganj thana Chhatra Dal.

Raihan was later sent to jail by a court order.

In Patuakhali, a case was filed at Dumki Police Station against 25 named and 30 unnamed persons on July 19. At least 20 students were made accused, said Ahmad Mainul Hasan, additional superintendent of police (administration) in Patuakhali.

Earlier, Law Minister Anisul Huq had said that no common students will be accused or harassed for their involvement in the quota reform movement and that cases will be filed only against those involved in the vandalism of government establishments.

Hold law enforcers accountable minister on Wednesday was issued by the missions of the US, the UK, France, Germany, Italy, Spain, the Netherlands, Canada, Switzerland, Sweden, Denmark, Norway, Australia and the European Union.

At least 162 people were killed in the recent violence in Dhaka and other parts of the country, according to the count of this paper. The actual death toll may be much higher.

Police have so far arrested over 8,000 people in a nationwide crackdown.

"The letter said that it is crucial to ensure due legal process for the people arrested," a source said.

The letter also said it is important to preserve the right to free speech and the right to peaceful assembly.

The foreign missions said all parties concerned need to find a sustainable solution to the ongoing crisis and avoid further casualties.

They requested that the authorities ensure that the law enforcers do not use excessive force and that they are held accountable for any wrongdoings.

The foreign missions have also requested full restoration of internet services, saying that the curfew declared on July 19 and the restrictions on internet services have far-reaching impact on the people.

They said the economy of the country as well as the communication between the foreign missions and the government have been heavily affected in the absence of full internet services.

On July 21, Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud held a diplomatic briefing with more than 80 representatives of the foreign missions, UN agencies, and other international aid agencies.

There, the foreign ministry screened a documentary on the massive destruction of public properties. Later, the ministry also arranged a tour of the foreign diplomats to the sites of the destruction.

MASSIVE SABOTAGE

French train services still disrupted

AFP, Paris

Traffic on three major French high-speed train lines remained disrupted yesterday, a day after saboteurs paralysed much of the rail network ahead of the Olympic Games opening ceremony in Paris.

Seven out of 10 trains ran yesterday on the three key routes with delays averaging one to two hours, the state railroad SNCF said.

Kathleen Cuvellier, speaking in the northern city of Lille, said her journey to Avignon in the south was going to be "hell" now.

Cuvellier, travelling with her two-year-old son, said she now had to take a slower train to Paris to take another one for Avignon, adding: "The travel time was four hours and now it's going to be seven".

Cecile Bonnefond, whose train from Lille to the western city of Nantes was cancelled, added: "One doesn't have any choice".

Trump tells supporters they won't have to vote in the future

REUTERS, Washington

Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump told Christians on Friday that if they vote for him this November, "in four years, you don't have to vote again. We'll have it fixed so good, you're not gonna have to vote."

It was not clear what the former president meant by his remarks, in an election campaign where his Democratic opponents accuse him of being a threat to democracy, and after his attempt to overturn his 2020 defeat to President Joe Biden, an effort that led to the deadly insurrection at the US Capitol on January 6, 2021.

The Trump campaign did not immediately respond to a request for clarification of his comments. Trump was speaking at an event organized by the conservative group Turning Point Action in West Palm Beach, Florida. Trump said: "Christians, get out and vote, just this time. "You won't have to do it anymore. Four more years, you know what, it will be fixed, it will be fine, you won't have to vote anymore, my beautiful Christians."

He added: "I love you Christians. I'm a Christian. I love you, get out, you gotta get out and vote. In four years, you don't have to vote again, we'll have it fixed so good you're not going to have to vote," Trump said. In an interview with Fox News in December, Trump said that if he won the November 5 election he would be a dictator, but only on "day one", to close the southern border with Mexico and expand oil drilling.

Concern grows as Venezuela blocks polls observers

AFP, Caracas

Concerns grew Friday over the fairness of Venezuela's presidential elections as Caracas was accused of blocking international observers from arriving for today's vote, including a delegation of ex-presidents.

In the latest blow to an already fraught election run-up, Panama said authorities had prevented a flight carrying former Latin American leaders -- all critics of President Nicolas Maduro -- from leaving its international airport.

Colombian officials reported being denied entry at Caracas airport, as did conservative Spanish MPs and Chilean senators.

Socialist Maduro, 61, will seek reelection today to a third six-year term amid accusations of opposition harassment by an authoritarian regime.

His government agreed with the opposition last year to hold free and fair elections in 2024, with international observers present -- winning a temporary easing of sanctions from the United States.

But he since reneged on some of the conditions, and loyalist institutions barred opposition leader Maria Corina Machado from running against him.

INTENSE FIGHTING IN KHAN YOUNIS

More than 180,000 Gaza civilians displaced: UN

AFP, Khan Younis

More than 180,000 Palestinians have fled fierce fighting around the southern Gaza city of Khan Younis in four days, the United Nations said Friday, after an Israeli operation to extract captives' bodies from the area.

Recent "intensified hostilities" in the Khan Younis area, more than nine months into the Israeli offensive in the Gaza Strip, have fuelled "new waves of internal displacement across Gaza", said the UN humanitarian agency, OCHA.

The vast majority of Gaza's 2.4 million people have been displaced at least once by fighting: UN

It said "about 182,000 people" have been displaced from central and eastern Khan Younis between Monday and Thursday, and hundreds are "stranded in eastern Khan Younis".

The Israeli military on Monday ordered the evacuation of parts of the southern city, announcing its forces would "forcefully operate" there, including in an area previously declared a safe humanitarian zone.

Yesterday, the Israeli military told Palestinians to temporarily evacuate southern neighbourhoods of Khan Younis region.

On Wednesday, Israel said five bodies of captives seized. Israel's military said on Friday that its forces had "eliminated approximately 100 terrorists" in the city this week.

Israel's military chief, Lieutenant General Herzi Halevi said the captives' bodies were pulled from underground tunnels and walls in "a hidden place".

Troops "were near those fallen bodies in the past, we did not know how to reach them" until this week, Halevi said in a statement.

Witnesses and rescuers said heavy battles continued around eastern Khan Yunis on Friday. The Nasser Hospital said 26 bodies were brought to the medical site.

According to UN figures, the vast majority of Gaza's 2.4 million people have been displaced at least once by the fighting.

In a separate development, an Israeli military commander said Friday that troops in the country's north were preparing for "a decisive offensive" against Lebanon's Hezbollah after months of deadly cross-border exchanges.

Israeli forces have traded near-daily fire with Hamas ally Hezbollah.

Major General Ori Gordin, Israel's commanding officer in the north, told troops that "we have already eliminated more than 500 terrorists in Lebanon, the great majority of them from Hezbollah", an army statement said.

According to an AFP tally, more than nine months of violence have killed at least 523 people in Lebanon.

Most of them, 342 people, have been confirmed to be Hezbollah militants but the tally also includes 104 civilians. Gordin did not mention civilian casualties.

In northern Israel, at least 18 Israeli soldiers and 13 civilians have been killed, according to the military.

S AFRICA SCHOOL

Video shows 'auction' of black pupils

AFP, Cape Town

A Cape Town school is investigating allegations of racist bullying after a video emerged that appears to show pupils pretending to auction off their black classmates, the education department said Friday.

The video shared on WhatsApp and leaked to the media shows at least two male black pupils behind a gate in a fenced-off area as several mixed-race "coloured" students appear to be shouting bids for them.

The video, entitled "Slavery at school is crazy", was "deeply disturbing and hurtful", Western Cape Education Department spokesperson Bronagh Hammond said.

The school has opened a disciplinary investigation into allegations of racist bullying, she said.

News24 cited a parent as saying that a group of boys had tried to force her son into a cage but he escaped.

"They were picking up black boys and putting them in the cage," the unidentified woman was quoted as saying.

Although a minority nationally, mixed-race South Africans who identify themselves as "coloured" mostly live in Western Cape province, of which Cape Town is the capital.

SOUTH AFRICAN DROUGHT

Worst yet to come in once-in-a-century: WFP

AFP, Johannesburg

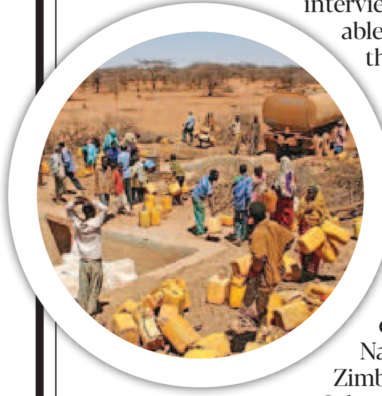
A record drought that has devastated crops across southern Africa, causing millions of people to go hungry and pushing five countries to declare a national disaster, is entering its worst stage, the UN warned.

The UN's World Food Programme said it expected the number of people struggling to put enough food on the table to increase as the lean season, the period between harvests when food is scarcest, gets underway. "The worst period comes now," WFP's acting regional director for southern Africa, Lola Castro, told AFP in an interview. "People haven't been able to pick anything and the problem is the next harvest is only in April 2025."



The small kingdom of Lesotho became two weeks ago the latest country to declare a state of national disaster over the El Nino-induced dry spell, after Malawi, Namibia, Zambia, and Zimbabwe.

Other countries, like Angola and Mozambique, might follow soon or signal a gap between the food they have and the food they need, said Castro. According to some estimates, the drought is the worst to hit the region in 100 years, she said.

At least 27 million people have been affected in a region where many rely on agriculture to survive, Castro said, speaking from Johannesburg on Friday. The drought has wiped out 70 percent of the harvest in Zambia and 80 percent in Zimbabwe, severely reducing supply and pushing up food prices, she said. "When you go now to rural productive areas of Southern Africa, what you see is a devastated scenario," she said.

SOUTHEASTERN SERBIA

30 Afghan, Nepali migrants hurt as van overturns

AFP, Belgrade

Thirty Afghan and Nepali migrants were injured when a van transporting them overturned in southeastern Serbia, the RTS state-run television reported yesterday.

Three migrants remained in a hospital while the others received medical care and were placed at a reception centre run by the country's commissariat for refugees, RTS said.

The migrants are men from Nepal and Afghanistan, the broadcaster reported citing the commissariat.

The accident occurred on Friday on a highway near the town Bela Palanka when the van, transporting nearly 50 migrants, slipped off the road.

Serbia lies along the so-called Balkans route used by migrants heading towards the European Union.

In 2023, nearly 100,000 migrants used the route, according to the bloc's border surveillance agency Frontex.

Migrants take perilous journey every year to reach Europe.

A boat with at least 45 refugees has capsized off the coast of Yemen's Taiz on Wednesday night, and there are only four survivors, the UN refugee agency in Yemen said on Thursday.

The boat capsized because of strong winds and overloading, the agency added. It said it was working with the International Organization for Migration (IOM) to assist the survivors and provide protection.

No further details were provided about the rest of the refugees. In June, at least 49 migrants died and 140 went missing after their vessel, which departed from Somalia carrying 260 migrants, capsized of the Yemeni coast.

A bulldozer is used to put out flames off Highway 32 near Forest Ranch, California, US on Friday night. A huge, fast-moving and rapidly growing wildfire in northern California has forced more than 4,000 people to evacuate as firefighters battle gusty winds and perilously dry conditions, authorities said.

US defends law forcing sale of TikTok app

AFP, San Francisco

TikTok's collection of user data makes it a national security threat, the US Justice Department said Friday in response to a civil suit by the Chinese-owned firm aimed at preventing the forced sale of the app.

TikTok's suit in a Washington federal court argues that a law, which forces the video platform to be sold next year or face a US ban, violates First Amendment rights of free speech.

"Given TikTok's broad reach within the United States, the capacity for China to use TikTok's features to achieve its overarching objective to undermine American interests creates a national-security threat of immense depth and scale," the Justice Department wrote in its filing.

Govt may miss IMF's revenue collection target

REJAUL KARIM BYRON and AM JAHID

Bangladesh is unlikely to fulfil the revenue collection target set by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) as part of its conditions for the fourth tranche of a $4.7 billion loan programme.

The target is measured through the performance of both revenue collection by the National Board of Revenue (NBR) and non-NBR taxes.

As per the IMF target, the government was supposed to collect Tk 394,530 crore in taxes in fiscal year 2023-24.

According to the NBR's provisional data, the tax administrator collected Tk 371,842 crore in FY24 against a collection target of Tk 410,000 crore in the revised budget.

On the other hand, the collection target for non-NBR taxes was Tk 19,000 crore in the revised budget.

Although data for non-NBR tax was not available for the entire fiscal year, finance ministry statistics showed that only Tk 5,109 crore was collected as non-NBR taxes in the first eight months of the last fiscal year.

This means that even if the target set in the revised budget is met, it will still not be possible to meet the revenue collection target set by the IMF.

In FY23, only Tk 7,978 crore was collected as non-NBR taxes.

Finance ministry officials said the country may fail to meet the target for revenue collection but it had already met the target for forex reserves.

Bangladesh was tasked with keeping net international reserves (NIR) of $14.79 billion on June 30. On that date, Bangladesh had an NIR of $16.7 billion.

> According to the NBR's provisional data, the tax administrator collected Tk 371,842 crore in FY24 against a collection target of Tk 410,000 crore in the revised budget.

Prior to that, the country had failed to fulfil the NIR target ahead of each instalment of the loan.

The country could achieve the target for the first time after record budgetary assistance from global creditors as several bilateral and multilateral lenders approved $4.8 billion in June alone.

The IMF approved the $4.7 billion in January last year.

In its first review, Bangladesh failed to fulfil the conditions for both revenue collection and NIR.

As a result, Bangladesh sought a waiver from the global lender's board against the two key conditions.

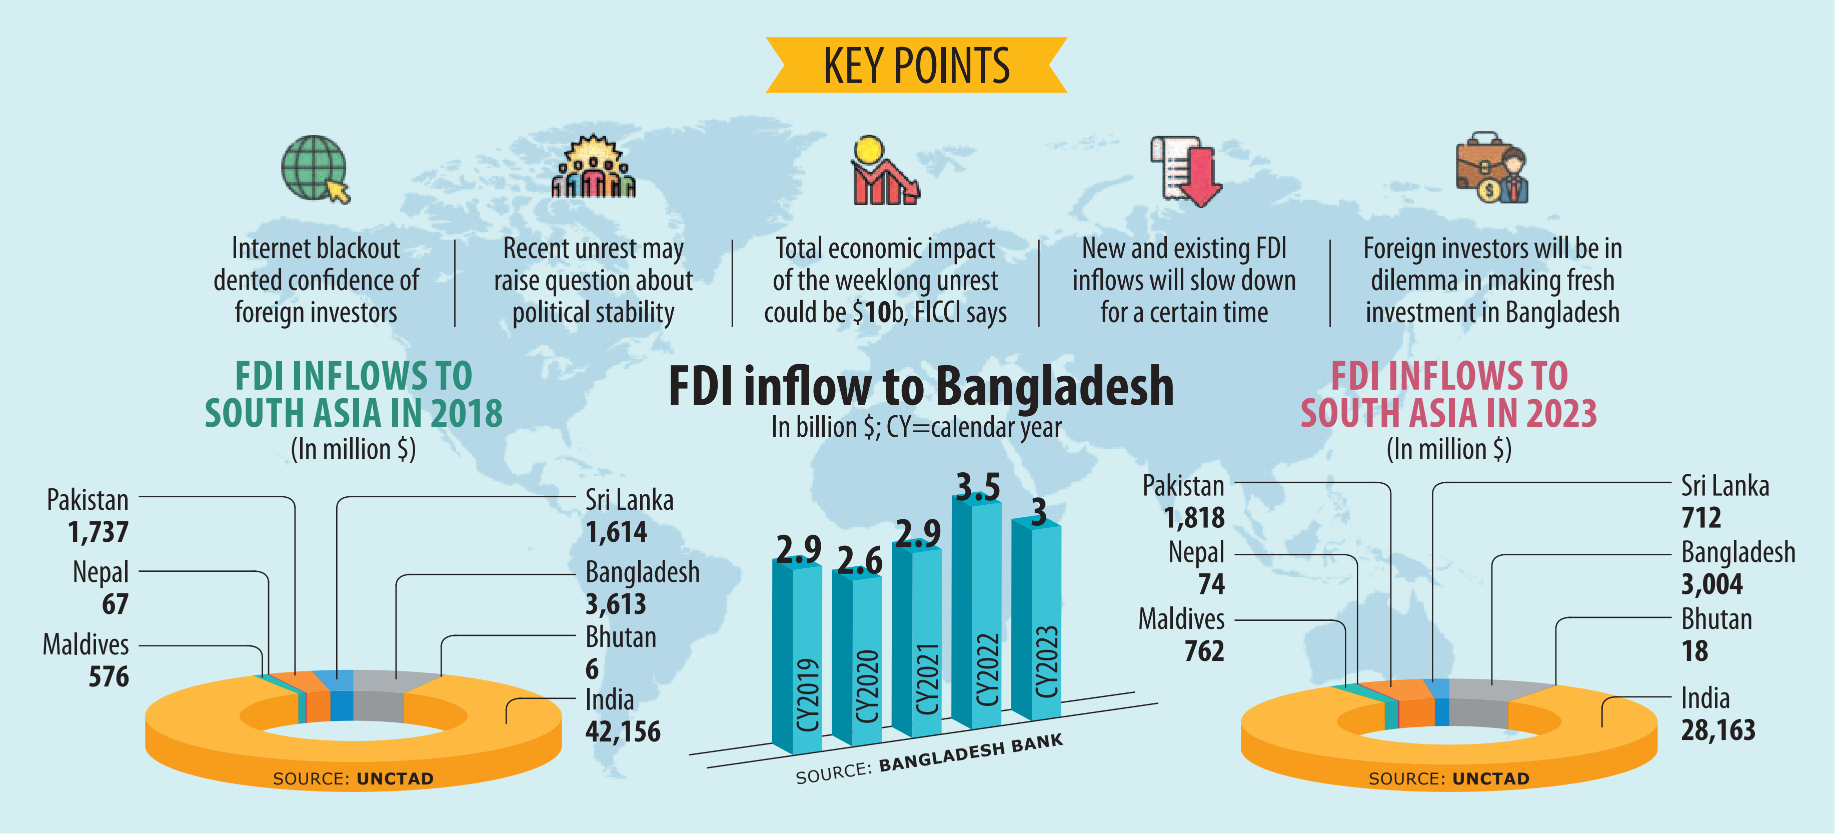
In the IMF's second review, which was based on the performance of December last year, Bangladesh successfully fulfilled both targets as the NIR target was revised down to $14.78 billion from $20.10 billion.

In May this year, Bangladesh also requested the IMF to revise down the revenue collection target but the lender did not do it.

An IMF mission is likely to visit Bangladesh to review the conditions by the end of this year. The fourth tranche is expected in December this year.

Internet outage, curfew leave foreign investors in a bind

Future FDI inflow may be affected, say experts



KEY POINTS

- Internet blackout dented confidence of foreign investors
- Recent unrest may raise question about political stability
- Total economic impact of the weeklong unrest could be $10b, FICCI says
- New and existing FDI inflows will slow down for a certain time
- Foreign investors will be in dilemma in making fresh investment in Bangladesh

JAGARAN CHAKMA

Violence centring the quota reform movement as well as a five-day internet blackout and the ongoing curfew has shaken foreign investors' confidence in Bangladesh, tarnishing the country's image as a reliable investment destination.

This is likely to affect the inflow of foreign direct investment (FDI) at a time when Bangladesh is in desperate need of foreign funds to diversify its manufacturing bases, enable technology transfer, and attain its goal of becoming a developed economy by 2041.

The country needs to annually attract FDI equivalent to 1.66 percent of its GDP, which was around $459 billion in FY24, to become an advanced economy by 2041.

In regards to luring investors, a country's reputation as a reliable investment destination is vital. In that sense, the damage done in the recent week was severe.

"Beyond financial impacts, the image issue that the country is facing cannot be quantified as the reputation has been severely damaged in the past few weeks," said Zaved Akhtar, president of the Foreign Investors' Chamber of Commerce and Industry (FICCI).

"The credibility of Bangladesh as a reliable investment destination is in question. It is not just important but crucial that we work on rebuilding Bangladesh's reputation as a stable nation and resilient economy, capable of delivering results regardless of circumstances. Rebuilding the confidence of existing investors by smoothening operations and improving the ease of doing business is also critical," he added.

His comments came following an internet outage in the aftermath of the violence centring the quota reform movement, which claimed at least 161 lives, left thousands injured and led to the vandalism of public and private properties.

The FICCI president said the recent shutdown had an economic impact of over $10 billion on Bangladesh in the last seven days.

The fast-moving consumer goods industry faced a setback of over $100 million during the past week as supply lines and operations were significantly impacted, Zaved added.

The recent upheaval affected export-oriented industries, e-commerce, freelancing, ride-hailing, software development, and many micro, small and medium enterprises that rely on social commerce.

"While the country is slowly recovering with limited online and physical connectivity, full operations are yet to revive. We are at best meeting 50 percent of our economic potential," he said.

He added that industries require full broadband and mobile connectivity to operate to their full potential.

Furthermore, businesses are facing challenges related to the release of goods from ports and accumulating demurrage because of the recent inactivity.

"Numerous existing investors are currently in uncertainty as their teams aim to resume regular operations. Challenges and inefficiencies in terms of goods release, running operations and physical reach are driving up the cost of business," he said.

Bangladesh Bank data shows that net FDI inflow fell to $3.8 billion in the July-May period of FY24, down 6.5 percent from $4 billion during the same period the year prior.

Yuji Ando, country representative of the Japan External Trade Organisation (JETRO), said there would be a tremendous negative impact on FDI as Bangladesh failed to ensure internet connectivity, which hindered business operations significantly.

He said Japanese companies in Bangladesh could only resume operations on July 24 after the curfew was relaxed and the internet was restored.

This is because around 20 percent of Japanese companies work remotely, he said. Moreover, some Japanese companies have evacuated their employees due to safety concerns.

According to Ando, at this moment, two major factors are needed to grow FDI inflow. The most fundamental one is to ensure safety. Secondly, internet facilities must be provided without restriction.

M Masrur Reaz, chairman of Policy Exchange of Bangladesh, said: "The economic impacts of last week's incidents can be grim... some foreign investors are nervous about a potential repetition of what occurred over the past week and what it means for their investment on the ground."

According to him, one common concern among investors was that they were almost completely cut off from communications with foreign buyers due to the lack of internet, which is quite rare in today's world where uninterrupted business communication is considered an essential feature of any trade and investment destination.

Reaz added that foreign investors with a stake in the export sector are anticipating losses and increased expenses due to overtime bills as workers will be required to make up for production loss over the past six days.

RMG factories resort to weekend production to minimise loss

REFAYET ULLAH MIRDHA

The garment and textile millers kept factories open on last Friday in an effort to meet the sharp deadline set by their international retailers, as the latest weeklong countrywide violence ate up four vital days of their peak production season.

Amid the perennial inadequate supply of gas and power outages, last week's internet shutdown came as a major challenge for the manufacturers, as they failed to send the inspection reports to their buyers online, which they have to do regularly.

The local garment manufacturers are frantically trying to cover up the losses as July, August and September are the peak months for shipping goods to the western buyers, which they will sell in the upcoming Christmas, the biggest retail sales season in the western world.

Many owners are also running their factories for additional hours, using overtime to adhere to the strict lead time in an effort to avoid going for expensive air shipments, giving big discounts or cancellation of work orders from the buyers.

The violence centring the quota reform movement eroded the foreign retailers' confidence in Bangladesh to a great extent, as many of the local garment suppliers have received 30 percent to 40 percent fewer work orders than usual as the buyers are following a go-slow policy.

Consequently, the international retailers and brands did not place fresh work orders and also did not confirm the price level for the goods meant for the next summer and spring, which they were supposed to do last week, the exporters said.

"I have been running my unit even on Friday as I have counted a huge loss because of the four-day factory shutdowns following the violence," said a garment exporter asking not to be named.

However, the exporter could not run the factory on Friday in full swing because of long power cuts.

"I am worried about how I will pay the workers' July salary as I made a loss this month and I failed to confirm goods' prices due to the internet disruption," the exporter said.

Shaif Ullah Mansur, managing director of Chattogram-based Mellow Fashions Ltd, said he used to run night shifts in his factory in peak production seasons when pressure from the buyers increases.

But this year he preferred not going for night shifts amid fears of being affected by violence although the work pressure is immense now.

Garment makers are desperately trying to meet deadlines as July, August and September are the peak season for shipping goods to buyers.

Mansur said the monthly income from his 800-worker factory is Tk 5 crore and he lost Tk 1 crore of his monthly income because of the weeklong violence.

"My American buyers are now asking me whether I am capable of supplying the goods in time if new work orders are placed."

Mohammad Zaber, managing director of Noman Group, the single largest textile and garment exporter of Bangladesh, said his company lost 40 percent of the monthly work orders because of the factory and mill shutdown and internet suspension.

This is the peak season for Zaber's company for the confirmation of work orders for the next summer and spring seasons.

He said his company has been communicating with the buyers for a time extension for shipment. Moreover, the shipment time extension does not end the problem, he said.

The commercial shipping vessels, which carry the export goods, have to follow a tight global schedule to meet the increased competitiveness since the beginning of the Covid-19 pandemic, the Russia-Ukraine war and the Red Sea crisis, he said.

Instant communication is very important in garment trade and both the buyers and suppliers use WhatsApp now, but the sad part is the service is down now, he added.

Two garment exporters said they lost one million pieces of garment production each during the last weeklong violence and now he is working day and night to cover up the losses and ship goods timely.

Mohammad Hatem, executive president of Bangladesh Knitwear Manufacturers and Exporters Association, said many factory managements ran their units on Friday but still many of them will have to face air shipment.

Piled-up containers in the Chattogram port are slowing down goods' discharge from vessels, increasing their stay time, officials said.

Ctg port still reeling from container congestion

DWAIPAYAN BARUA, Ctg

Chattogram port is still suffering from container congestion although delivery of imported goods gained significant pace in the last three days after the relaxation of curfew and resumption of broadband internet.

Delivery from yards came almost to a halt for countrywide unrest for five days to July 22, when the port was choked with 42,150 TEUs (twenty-foot equivalent units) of containers, occupying over 79 percent of its storage capacity of 53,118 TEUs.

The situation started improving from the next day and on July 25 around 5,500 TEUs got delivered, bringing the number of stored containers to below 40,000 TEUs.

Although 3,500 TEUs were released on Friday, the port's struggle for release of containers and cargoes intensified when an increased number of vehicles of importers and prime movers crowded the yard to take delivery of their goods.

Piled-up containers are slowing down goods' discharge from vessels, which is also raising the ships' stay time, said Nazmul Haque, executive director of Saif Powertec, the berth operator of the New Mooring Container Terminal (NCT), the biggest of the three terminals of Chattogram port.

The containers are usually kept in three to at best four layers in the yards, but the last week's crisis pushed the operators to stake them in five layers in most areas, he said.

The problem arises when one comes to take out a container from the bottom layer, the official said.

The operator has to lift all the four upper containers at first to bring out the lowest one and then place the top four to their earlier spot again, which is completely an unproductive and time-killing work, he said.

The yard's functioning equipment like rubber-tyred gantry cranes and others are also taking extra pressure and many are breaking down, he said.

The release of goods is slow now, as Klarion Designs could take delivery of some 90 TEUs out of their 120 TEUs, which reached the port last week, said Ataullah Siddique, managing director of the Chattogram-based garment factory.

Moreover, the covered van owners are charging higher fares amid a shortage of goods-carrying vehicles, he said.

Container congestion is causing longer than usual stay time and delayed sailing of the ships, said an importer.

SITCL Qiuming, a vessel, berthed at a jetty of the NCT on July 23 carrying around 1,500 TEUs of import containers, said an official of the berth operating firm.

It took a day and a half for the vessel to get go-ahead from the customs and port to unload goods due to the lack of smooth internet, the official said.

The vessel, which was scheduled to sail out yesterday, needs one more day to complete the unloading and loading of around 1,500 TEUs of export and empty containers, he said.

Another vessel, MV Increase, berthed at another jetty of the NCT on July 22.

Usually, vessels like MV Increase leave within 48 hours after completing unloading and loading, but this time it took five days and it left yesterday.

Nazmul Haque of Saif Powertec assumes it would take one or two more weeks to get rid of the huge pile of containers.

The port officials are working hard to keep the port running and the situation would improve in a few days if container delivery keeps going at the present pace, said Md Omar Faruk, secretary of the Chittagong Port Authority.

Food delivery hit hard by internet disruption

MAHMUDUL HASAN

Bangladesh's burgeoning online food delivery sector has been severely hit by the internet disruptions, bringing operations of the platforms to a near halt.

This affected the livelihoods of delivery riders, small and medium restaurants and home-based chefs.

Although broadband internet has been reinstated, the absence of mobile internet, essential for riders to receive orders, has been a major impediment to the services becoming fully operational.

The platforms were closed for six days, from July 18 to July 23, when Bangladesh experienced a complete internet blackout. On reopening, the businesses operated for limited hours due to a curfew.

Insiders said the sector is facing significant revenue losses every day.

According to Fahim Ahmed, chief executive officer of Pathao, a food delivery platform, the sector's daily transactions amount to Tk 6 crore on an average day.

"Despite resuming operations, restaurants are operating for fewer hours, and certain establishments remain closed," Ahmed said.

"As mobile internet is still unavailable to delivery personnel, we are working with restaurants to ensure that their broadband networks are accessible," he said.

So far, more than 50 percent of restaurants onboarded with Pathao are still closed and 65 percent of the riders have not returned to work as of last Friday.

On Friday, despite it being a weekend, the volume of orders recovered by less than 50 percent.

Industry experts said mobile internet is essential for smooth food delivery as it enables real-time order placement, tracking, and communication between customers, delivery riders and restaurants.

It ensures efficient route navigation, timely updates and quick problem resolution, enhancing overall service reliability and customer satisfaction.

Without mobile internet, food delivery platforms relying solely on broadband would face delays, limited rider mobility, and communication issues, leading to inefficiencies.

Following widespread protest over quota reforms in public jobs, the government shut down mobile internet on July 18.

Since then, delivery personnel have been left out of their means of an income. Many left Dhaka for their hometowns.

A Hussain, a rider for foodpanda Bangladesh, said he left for his hometown in Dinajpur a week earlier.

"I am facing financial issues as it was a significant part of my income," said Hussain, a part-time delivery person.

Those who relied on food delivery as a full-time income were more severely hit.

Mojibur Rahman, who works full-time delivering processed and frozen food for an F-commerce page, said his family has fallen into a financial crisis since the internet blackout started.

"My daily average income was Tk 900 to Tk 1,000. One week without the internet has left me without money," he said.

"On Friday, my wife was sick, and I had only Tk 10 in my pocket. I had to borrow Tk 1,400 to take her to the doctor," he said.

On Saturday, he earned some money delivering only three orders.

Like any other internet and app-based service provider, foodpanda Bangladesh, the top delivery platform garnering the highest demand, has also seen its business being impacted due to the nationwide internet shutdown for almost a week.

As broadband connectivity has been restored, foodpanda Bangladesh has gradually resumed its food and grocery delivery services in some areas.

"Now we have been running our operations partially. Unless mobile data is back, it would be very difficult to run operations smoothly," said Zubair Siddiky, managing director at foodpanda Bangladesh.

"We hope that the internet service will be restored soon," he added.

Diesel sales jump as curfew eases

MD NAZRUL ISLAM, Chattogram

As traffic movement on highways resumed following the relaxation of the nationwide curfew imposed by the government, fuel transportation from depots to filling stations started in full swing on Wednesday.

Although fuel sales decreased 89.3 percent in the first four days of the past week, sales of diesel jumped to almost twice the usual daily demand on Wednesday and Thursday.

Of all the fuel used in Bangladesh, around 70 percent of the requirement is met by diesel.

However, sales of fuel returned to a normal level on Saturday, said officials concerned.

According to leaders of the Bangladesh Petrol Pump Owners Association (BPPOA), owners of filling stations faced several problems due to a delay in submitting pay orders because of shortened banking hours during the curfew.

Many were unable to collect fuel as they were unable to deposit money, they said.

Additionally, traders were also worried about the safe passage of fuel-laden tankers from depots to filling stations.

According to Bangladesh Petroleum Corporation (BPC) officials, there is a sufficient stock of fuel in depots.

As per BPC data, Bangladesh has a daily demand of 15,000 tonnes of diesel on average while the daily demand for octane and petrol is around 4,000 tonnes each.

Due to the volatile situation across the country and the announcement of general holidays from July 20-24, the activities of 27 depots under the control of BPC were halted. Consequently, fuel sales reduced by about 89.3 percent.

However, since Wednesday, fuel sales have recovered, with sales of diesel witnessing a significant increase.

BPC officials said about 30,000 tonnes of diesel, 3,000 tonnes of petrol, and 1,900 tonnes of octane were sold across the country on Wednesday.

Similarly, 29,500 tonnes of diesel, 2,200 tonnes of octane, 2,900 tonnes of petrol, 7,000 tonnes of furnace oil and 1,200 tonnes of jet fuel were sold on Thursday.

It is mentionable that the daily demand for furnace oil on a usual day is around 2,500 tonnes.

BPC Chairman Aminul Ahsan told The Daily Star that the supply of jet fuel to the four airports of the country was normal during the curfew.

On the other hand, BPPOA Secretary General Nazmul Haque claimed that the highways were not yet safe for fuel transportation.

He told The Daily Star that as fuel is extremely flammable, there are safety concerns regarding the transportation of fuel.

"I have demanded the BPC authority to deploy security personnel for the transportation of fuel tankers, similar to that of railway wagons," he said.

Shop owners will need a lot of time to recover from losses

Says president of the owners' association

WEEKLY INTERVIEW

SUKANTA HALDER

The students' movement for reforming the quota system in public jobs and the subsequent violence and curfew have adversely affected businesses, said Helal Uddin, president of Bangladesh Shop Owners Association.

It will take businesses a lot of time to recover, he said during an interview with The Daily Star over the phone yesterday.

Shops and shopping centres reopened on July 24 after four days of curfew but they hardly saw any sales, he said.

People have been suffering from high inflationary pressure for a long time and the present situation compounded their woes, said Helal.

The scenario necessitates people to give a lot of thought when making any purchase and limit themselves to availing just the bare necessities, he added.

Annual average inflation in Bangladesh surged to its highest level in 12 years in the just-concluded fiscal year despite easing in June, reflecting persistent erosion of real income and deterioration of living standards of low-income groups.

Annual inflation rose to 9.73 percent in fiscal year 2023-24, the highest since fiscal year 2011-12 when it was 10.62 percent, overshooting the government's target of limiting it to 7.5 percent, according to the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics.

Although there were breaks for a couple of hours every day during the curfew, people are not leaving their homes if it is not absolutely necessary, said Helal.

"There was no business for 10-12 days. Many businesses will struggle to pay shop rent and staff salaries at the end of this month," he said.

The president of the shop owners' association said the government relaxed the curfew so that businesses could run their trade at least from morning till afternoon but there were barely any shoppers.

"As a result, there is growing concern among traders over how they would be able to run their businesses. If they end up being forced to take loans from banks, how will they repay the loans?" he asked.

Students launched the quota reform movement on July 1 citing that it discriminated against general students seeking to secure public jobs.

The demonstrators started to stage sit-ins on the roads at different areas blocking traffic since July 15 and law enforcers later tried to disperse them by force, causing the movement to turn chaotic and violent.

The government imposed the curfew for an indefinite period from midnight of July 19 and deployed the armed forces to contain violence.

The curfew was relaxed every day – for two hours on Saturday and Sunday, three hours on Monday and four hours on Tuesday. During this time, only shops selling essential food commodities stayed open. The curfew was relaxed for seven hours starting 10:00am on Wednesday and all types of shops opened for business in the morning.

It has been tough doing business over the past six months and it was even tougher for the traders to survive, said Helal.

"Our backs are against the wall. We demanded that the government take appropriate measures to bring relief to the lives of common people as soon as possible," he added.

"Because people are still gripped by a kind of fear. Shops and shopping centres will not return to normalcy until this is addressed," he said.

The intersection of osteoarthritis, physical activity, and mental health

Osteoarthritis (OA) is a prevalent chronic condition affecting millions globally, leading to significant pain and disability. Beyond its physical toll, OA is frequently associated with high rates of depression, exacerbating the overall burden on individuals. While managing the physical symptoms of OA remains a primary focus, addressing the associated mental health issues is equally crucial. One promising avenue in this regard is physical activity.

Physical activity has long been recognised for its myriad health benefits, including enhancing mood and reducing symptoms of depression. However, its specific impact on individuals with OA, particularly concerning how pain levels influence this relationship, is not fully understood. This gap in knowledge is critical, given the high prevalence of both OA and depression.

A recent study published in PLOS Global Public Health sought to unravel this complex relationship. Researchers recruited individuals with OA awaiting orthopaedic consultation at a public hospital in Melbourne, Australia. They collected data on participants' pain levels, physical activity engagement, and depression symptoms.

The findings revealed that the relationship between physical activity and depression was influenced by pain levels. Specifically, the benefits of physical activity on reducing depression symptoms were more pronounced in individuals experiencing higher levels of pain. Additionally, engaging in physical activity helped reduce pain, which in turn led to a decrease in depression symptoms.

These results underscore the importance of physical activity, particularly for individuals with greater OA-related pain, as it offers significant mental health benefits. Encouraging physical activity could be a vital strategy in managing depression among OA patients, providing a holistic approach to their care and well-being.

Munich AIDS conference unveils new HIV cure case and bold global projections

STAR HEALTH DESK

The 25th International AIDS Conference, held in Munich, Germany, from July 22-26, 2024, brought together thousands of scientists, policymakers, and advocates to discuss the latest advancements in HIV research. This year's conference, hosted by the International AIDS Society (IAS), was marked by groundbreaking developments, including a unique HIV cure case, new global HIV projections, and promising advancements in HIV and STI prevention strategies.

One of the most notable highlights was the announcement of the "next Berlin Patient," the seventh person in the world to be cured of HIV following a stem cell transplant. This case was particularly significant because, for the first time, the donor had a single CCR5-delta32 mutation rather than the double mutation seen in previous cases. This finding could have profound implications for future research into scalable HIV cure strategies.

The "next Berlin Patient," an adult male who had both leukaemia and HIV, received a stem cell transplant for leukaemia in late 2015. In late 2018, he stopped taking antiretroviral treatment for HIV, and over five-and-a-half years later, he remained in HIV remission. The patient's donor had inherited just one copy of the CCR5-delta32 mutation, known as heterozygous, which allows individuals to acquire HIV but generally causes the virus to progress slowly without antiretroviral treatment.

This contrasts with previous cases where donors had two copies of the mutation, making them essentially immune to HIV. This new finding suggested that effective HIV remission could be achieved with a broader pool of donors, which holds promise for future gene therapy-based HIV cure strategies.

In addition to this groundbreaking case, the conference also unveiled new projections from UNAIDS, highlighting the urgent need for bold action in the global HIV response. The projections indicated that without significant efforts, there could be nearly 35 million new HIV acquisitions and nearly 18 million AIDS-related deaths between 2021 and 2050. The analysis emphasised the critical importance of achieving the "95-95-95" targets, where 95% of people living with HIV know their status, 95% of those who know their status are on treatment, and 95% of those on treatment are virally suppressed. Failing to meet these targets would result in significant human and economic costs, with the study estimating an average cost of inaction per capita of USD 670 in low- and middle-income countries by 2050.

Promising advancements in HIV and STI prevention were also highlighted. Two studies presented at the conference suggested that doxycycline pre-exposure prophylaxis (DoxyPrEP) could be a highly effective strategy for preventing sexually transmitted infections (STIs). One study involving female sex workers in Tokyo found that DoxyPrEP significantly reduced the incidence of STIs with high adherence and minimal adverse effects reported. These findings supported the potential of DoxyPrEP as a valuable prevention strategy for populations at high risk of STIs.

Another key study from the Netherlands explored the potential benefits of reducing the frequency of monitoring visits for HIV pre-exposure prophylaxis (PrEP) users. The study found that screening PrEP users for STIs every six months instead of the standard three months could reduce the burden on users and cut costs without increasing STI rates.

The conference also included the presentation of late-breaking full results from the PURPOSE 1 trial of long-acting injectable lenacapavir for HIV prevention, which demonstrated 100% efficacy in cisgender women. This marked another significant advancement in the ongoing effort to develop effective HIV prevention strategies.

BIRTH DEFECTS

Re-evaluating paternal metformin use

In recent years, concerns have emerged regarding the potential impact of paternal use of metformin, a common diabetes medication, on the risk of birth defects in offspring.

A provocative Danish study published in 2022 in the Annals of Internal Medicine suggested that men who took metformin shortly before conception had an increased risk of fathering children with birth defects. This study hypothesised that metformin could adversely affect spermatogenesis, a mechanism observed in some animal studies.

A new study, published in the Annals of Internal Medicine, has now investigated this issue in a different population. Researchers analysed data from 1,730 fathers with diabetes in an Israeli health system database who were on metformin during the 90 days before conception. Their findings provide a more nuanced perspective on the potential risks associated with metformin use by prospective fathers.

The study adjusted for various potential confounders, including demographic, cardiometabolic, and maternal factors. The results indicated that metformin monotherapy was not linked to an increased risk of major congenital malformations when compared to the offspring of 380,000 control fathers who had no exposure to diabetes medications. However, the offspring of men who took metformin in combination with other diabetes medications showed a slightly higher incidence of malformations, though this finding was only of borderline statistical significance.

These findings offer some reassurance for men with diabetes who require metformin therapy but also underscore the importance of further research to fully understand the potential reproductive implications of diabetes medications.

Occupational therapy for Parkinson's disease

RABEYA FERDOUS

Parkinson's disease is a very common disorder in our country. According to the latest World Health Organisation (WHO) data published in 2020, Parkinson's disease deaths in Bangladesh reached 3,782 or 0.53% of total deaths. In Bangladesh, death rank is 125 among the world.

Parkinson's disease is a neurodegenerative disorder that leads to shaking, stiffness, and difficulty with walking, balance, and coordination.

Symptoms may vary from mild to severe. Some common symptoms are given below:

- Bradykinesia or slowness of movement
- Tremor
- Postural imbalance
- Speech difficulty
- Writing problem
- Dementia
- Emotional changes
- Memory training

Occupation means activity. An occupational therapist helps to make their life independent in their daily activities. Regular exercises may increase the thinking power. It can increase patients's cognitive skills.

According to the patient's condition, the occupational therapist provides the following therapy:

- Functional gait retraining
- Functional balancing exercises
- Practice bilateral hand activity
- Practice fine motor skills
- ADL's training like dressing, eating, grooming, etc.
- Practice writing
- Falling intervention by modifying their home. e.g., bathroom/kitchen/bedroom modification
- Educate patients about energy conservation techniques
- In the late stage, educate the patient and their carer about appropriate transferring techniques
- Engaging the patients in leisure activities to refresh their minds, like gardening, watching movies, or visiting their relatives house or other places

- Moderate to Strong evidence for targeted physical activity training that addressed motor performance, postural stability, and balance

An occupational therapist helps to search for the right equipment to help with difficulties.

Though Parkinson's disease is a degenerative neurological condition, research has consistently found certain types of interventions improve function. Additionally, continuation of services is crucial to maintaining therapeutic gains.

Interventions for individuals with Parkinson's disease consistently fall into three categories:

(1) exercise or physical activity,

(2) environmental cues, stimuli, and objects, and

(3) self-management and cognitive behavioural strategies.

Clinical application points to the provision of intervention that focuses on targeted physical activity to address specific functional outcomes.

When you have patients with Parkinson's disease, then contact a qualified occupational therapist. S/he can help your patient become independent in day-to-day activities.

The writer is an occupational therapist at the Department of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation at the National Institute of Neurosciences and Hospitals (NINS&H). Email: rabeya1988@gmail.com

Machine learning models predict disability progression in multiple sclerosis

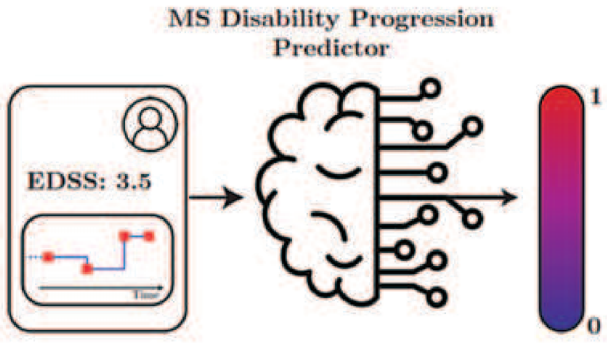
STAR HEALTH REPORT

A recent study has demonstrated that machine learning models can effectively predict how multiple sclerosis (MS) will progress in patients, offering new hope for improved disease management. The research, led by Edward De Brouwer from KU Leuven in Belgium, was published this week in PLOS Digital Health.

Multiple sclerosis is a chronic and progressive disease where the immune system attacks the protective sheath around nerves, leading to worsening disability over time. With the global prevalence of MS rising by more than 30% over the past decade, predicting its progression has become increasingly important. Accurate forecasts can help patients plan their lives better and allow doctors to tailor treatments more effectively.

The study analysed data from 15,240 adults with at least three years of MS history. These patients were treated at 146 MS centres across 40 countries, providing a comprehensive dataset. Researchers used this data to train sophisticated machine learning models to predict the likelihood of disease progression over the next few months and years.

The results were promising. The models showed an average predictive accuracy score of 0.71 out of 1. This score, known as the area under the receiver operating characteristic curve (ROC-AUC), reflects how well the models can predict future disability progression. Higher scores indicate better performance. Importantly, the study found that a patient's past disability progression was a stronger predictor of future progression than their treatment or relapse history.



Edward De Brouwer highlighted the significance of the study, stating, "Using the clinical history of more than 15,000 people with multiple sclerosis, we trained a machine learning model capable of reliably predicting the probability of disability progression in the next two years. The model only uses routinely collected clinical variables, which makes it widely applicable."

These findings suggest that machine learning models could greatly enhance how MS is managed. By providing accurate predictions, these models can help doctors make better treatment decisions and assist patients in planning for their future. Since the models use standard clinical data, they could be easily integrated into everyday clinical practice.

The researchers believe their models have significant potential to improve the quality of life for MS patients. They recommend further studies to test the models' effectiveness in real-world settings. The advancements in machine learning represent a major step forward in understanding and managing complex diseases like multiple sclerosis.

This study highlights how technology can provide valuable insights and support better healthcare decisions, offering new hope for patients dealing with chronic and progressive conditions.

Physiotherapy approaches for functional neurologic disorders

Functional neurologic disorders (FNDs), previously known as conversion or psychogenic disorders, are characterised by neurological symptoms that lack an obvious physical cause on standard diagnostic tests. These disorders are believed to stem from disruptions in brain network function rather than structural abnormalities. The effectiveness of specialised physiotherapy in treating these conditions remains unclear.

A recent trial published in The Lancet Neurology sought to address this gap by comparing the clinical effectiveness of specialised physiotherapy versus usual physiotherapy in managing functional motor disorders.

The study highlights that while both physiotherapy approaches led to improvements in physical functioning, further research is needed to determine the optimal timing, components, and intensity of physiotherapy for FND.

Future trials should also focus on identifying which patients are most likely to benefit from such interventions.

Three successful TAVR performed in one day at United Hospital

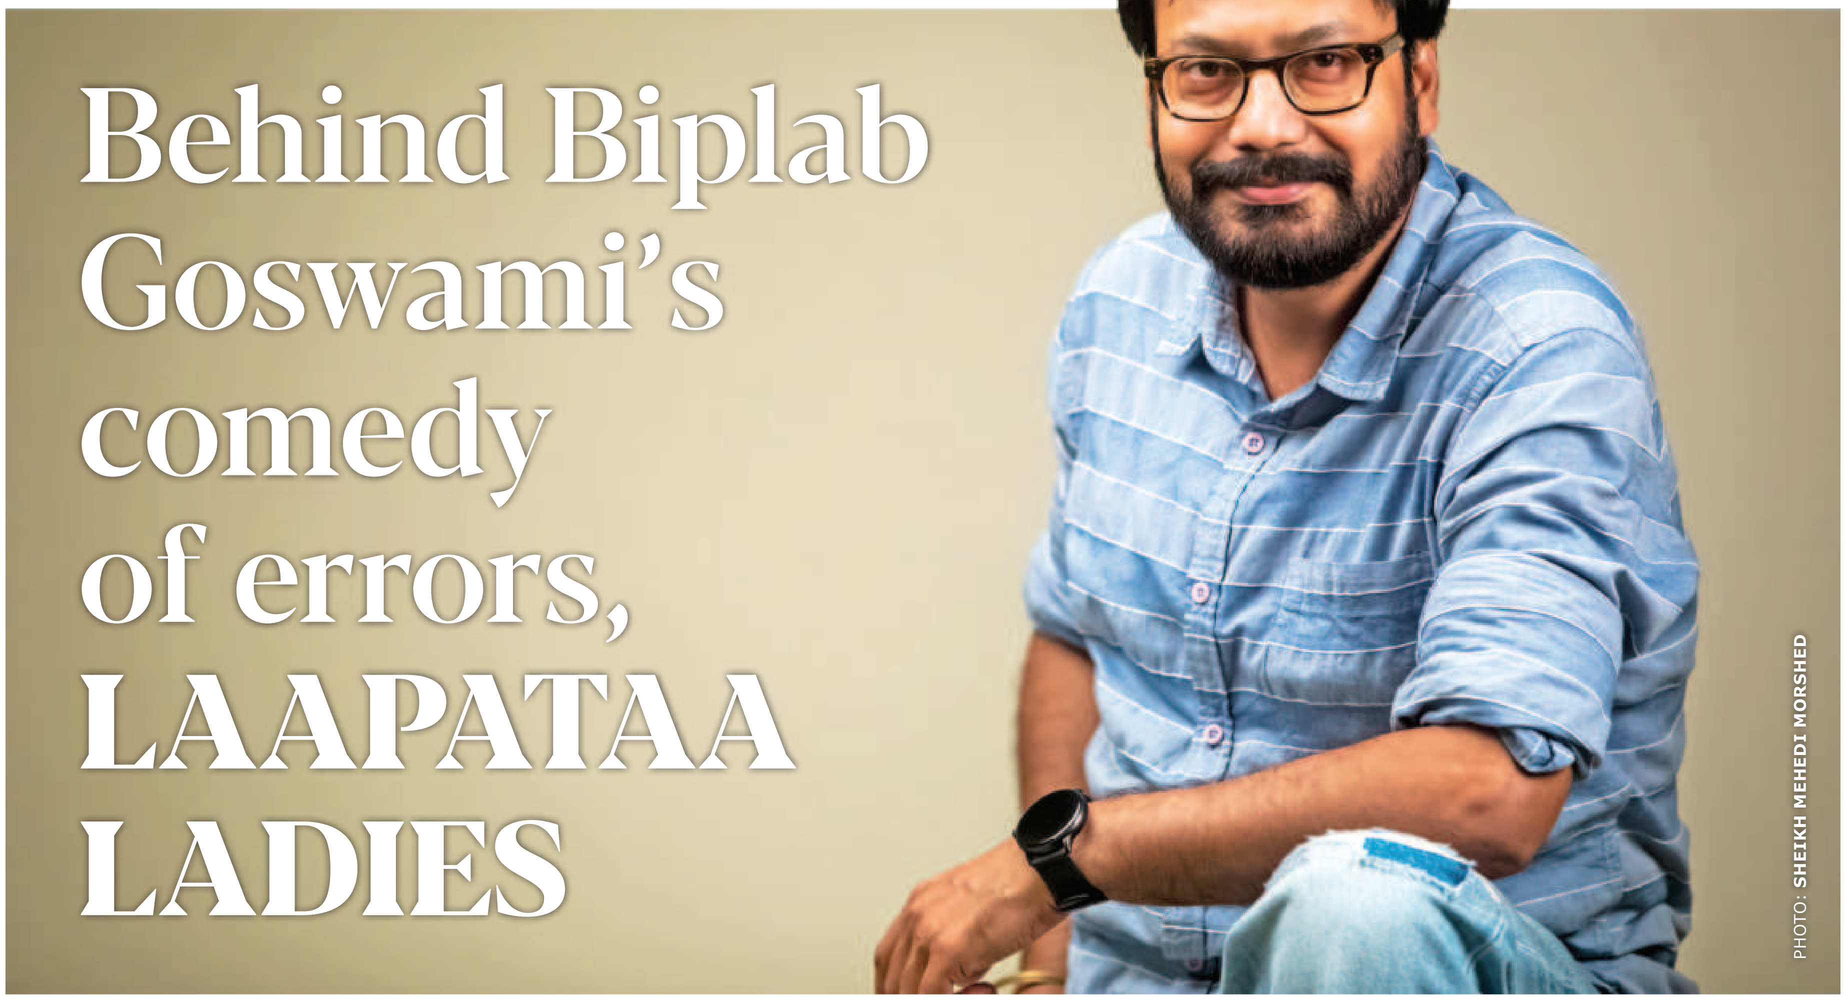
At United Hospital in the capital, three patients underwent successful artificial aortic valve replacement without cardiac surgery on the same day, which is a breakthrough in heart disease treatment in Bangladesh, says a press release.

For the first time in Bangladesh, one of the TAVR cases was successfully performed, protecting the main blood vessels of the heart.

Renowned cardiologist Dr NAM Momenuzzaman and Professor Afzalur Rahman performed the procedures.

Aortic valve stenosis or damage to the heart requires treatment with an artificial valve replacement. Valve replacement is usually done surgically. However, in developed countries, valve replacement is now an accepted treatment method for elderly or over 65-year-old and complex patients, known as TAVR.

Early in 2017, NAM Momenuzzaman and his team performed the first TAVR in Bangladesh at United Hospital. It is highly recommended that the main blood vessel of the heart be protected (coronary protection) during valve replacement for aged patients with narrow blood vessels or aortas. This complex procedure is now being successfully performed in Bangladesh.



Behind Biplab Goswami's comedy of errors, LAAPATAA LADIES

To make a film is to tell a story, and when it's a cumulation of collective consciousness, to find a common social ground, values, ordinary yet telltale stories that creates the base of development of human thought and psyche is a perfect example of a much needed social and cultural commentary.

DOWEL BISWAS

Creating a visual story, with an intention to attract and aware people from all walks of life is difficult. However, to persist on this thread of storytelling in a varied cultural landscape like India, where poverty, social injustice, cultural stigma and gender discrimination looms over, it's more than challenging.

With Kiran Rao on her first directorial chair, critically and commercially acclaimed comedy drama film Laapataa Ladies does it all. What is more intriguing is the mind of Bengali screenwriter Biplab Goswami, who had put a story known to all on a Bihar landscape with subtle nuances and weights put on two distinguishably different women in a patriarchal backdrop.

"If you are a film critic, cinema enthusiast or a socially-aware person, Laapataa Ladies will seem like satire to you. If you want to have a good time watching a film, it is a comedy. If you are in for making people aware through entertainment and the magic of cinema, you are like me," said the mild-mannered screenwriter Biplab in an exclusive interview at The Daily Star office.

Biplab, who considers himself a sociological observer of time, art, and culture, drew inspiration from his early life in Agartala and his fascination with trains, which symbolize communication and connection. These elements add depth and authenticity to his narratives. His father, Karunamoy Goswami, had a deep appreciation for arts and culture, which influenced Biplab's career choice.

"Although in urban areas, gender disparity has somewhat become tolerable in terms of professional, sociological, and educational sectors, it is still prevalent in rural areas. This thought always prompted me to do something, even if it doesn't make an immediate impact," said the mild-natured Biplab with a polite grin on his face.

After studying at the Satyajit Ray Film and Television Institute in Kolkata, Biplab worked on various projects in Mumbai, including editing films, producing documentaries, and eventually focusing on writing and directing.

The story of Laapataa Ladies began nearly ten years ago when Biplab wrote an outline that deeply resonated with him. He entered a prestigious screenplay competition in Mumbai, judged by industry stalwarts like Aamir Khan and Rajkumar Hirani. His screenplay, initially titled Two Brides, won second place out of nearly four thousand entries, catching the attention of Kiran Rao, who decided to direct the film, and Aamir Khan, who joined as a producer.

"The concept for Laapataa Ladies emerged from my lifelong observations of gender discrimination, starkly evident from childhood and increasingly pronounced in adulthood. This issue persists in the 21st century. A vivid memory from a village visit years ago, where I saw a girl alone in fields, veiled despite no one around, struck me deeply. This image epitomized the gender disparities prevalent in our society," Biplab said while explaining his process of narrating a story that resonates with the mass.

Laapataa Ladies is a personal endeavor to illuminate the challenges women face in a manner that doesn't hurt anyone's sentiments, whether they are patriarchal agents of society or feminists. Biplab sees everyone as part of society and aims to explore society's resilience amid pervasive inequality across varied landscapes—cities, villages, and hills. He considers himself a feminist but opposes stereotyping, as he believes it excludes a significant part of society.

"I never thought of making a fiction-only formula film. I wanted my script to be closer to life, corresponding to a truthful social commentary while being entertaining to people from all spheres," he said.

With this idea in mind, Biplab framed the story of Laapataa Ladies as a humorous social commentary that can be both entertaining and commercially successful. He believes the film is more of a satire of the current sociological structure.

"The story is about societal complexities, but the complexity itself was the path for the characters to attain their respective independence and empowerment," he explained. "Patriarchal 'male ego' or self-righteousness not only harms women but also harms men, as they fall prey to their own schemes. It's not about patriarchy or feminism; equality is a prerequisite to making a society that is equal and free."

Biplab emphasised that he did not want to make a direct statement through the film but rather to show where the problem lies through ease, simplicity, humour, comedy, and the strength of cinema from a neutral standpoint. This approach allows audiences from all spheres to enjoy the film and make their own judgments without feeling any ideas being forced upon them.

The success of Laapataa Ladies has opened doors for Biplab, bringing offers from the Mumbai, Telugu, Tamil, and Bangladeshi film industries. Despite this newfound recognition, he remains focused on creating films that reflect his vision and storytelling style. Passionate about making films in Bengali, he dreams of collaborating with artists from both sides of the Bengal border.

NACHIKETA
Insistent on Dhaka concert

Nachiketa Chakraborty's eagerly awaited performance at the Krishibid Institute in the capital, initially set for Friday (July 26), has been postponed to a later date by the event organising body, Ajob Karkhana. They have recently unveiled the new official date to the media. The organisation has now set a new date for the concert, stating that if conditions improve, it will take place on September 6.

The decision came preemptively amid the ongoing turmoil in Bangladesh, where violent clashes resulting from the quota reform movement protests have led to widespread unrest. As the situation begins to become subdued, the organisers have now announced the new date for the concert.

Nachiketa, showing remarkable determination, insisted on performing in Dhaka despite unrest and advice from West Bengal's CM Mamata Banerjee to cancel. Ultimately, the organisers decided to reschedule the concert.

They also assured ticket holders that their existing tickets will remain valid for the rescheduled concert date.

Babita recovers from COVID

On July 18, the iconic actress Babita tested positive for the coronavirus. The news was confirmed to the media by her younger sister actress Champa.

On Saturday, July 27, Champa announced that after four days of treatment at a private hospital in Dhaka, Babita tested negative for COVID-19. Following the doctor's advice, she returned home but continued to experience physical weakness.

Champa shared, "Apa had been feeling body aches for several days. Though there was no fever, she felt unwell. After getting tested, we learned she was COVID-19 positive. Without any delay, I admitted her to the hospital on July 18."

Champa also mentioned, "The situation in the country was quite concerning at the time. Amidst all this, the news of Apa contracting COVID-19 came as a shock to us. Alone, I felt uncertain about how to proceed. Then, after discussing with our elder sister, actress Shuchanda, we decided to get her admitted to the hospital promptly. After four days of continuous care, she returned home free from the virus. We are relieved for now."

This wasn't the first time Babita had been infected with Coronavirus.

Could have been my daughter: Iresh Zaker

Six-year-old Riya Gope made headlines nationwide, after being killed by a stray bullet while playing on her rooftop in Narayanganj, during confrontations between agitators, law enforcement, and ruling party supporters. Her death has saddened the country, with condolences shared on social media.

Reflecting upon the current situatio, actor and producer Iresh Zaker wrote on Facebook, "Our five-year-old daughter Meha could have been playing on the roof. I wouldn't have stopped her if she were in university and wanted to protest."

During the quota reform movement, many protesting students were injured or killed in violent incidents. Iresh wrote, "If Meha hadn't returned from those clashes, my life would have been destroyed, but I would have been proud. I would have wanted the state to honour her as a hero and bring her killers to justice."

Iresh Zaker and Mim Rashid's daughter, Meha, was born on August 7, 2019, and is now almost five. Her grandparents are Aly Zaker and Sara Zaker.

No sane person can support such destruction: Tareen Jahan

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

Following the triumph of her initial film debut in West Bengal, Tareen Jahan is now poised to embark on her second feature film project in Kolkata.

She is all set to be featured in Manasi Sinha's second directorial venture 5 Number Swapnamoy Lane. The shooting for the project will commence in the first week of August in Kolkata, as confirmed by Tareen.

"My debut film in Tollywood was also the director's first directorial film, she earned praise for the previous one. I am sure that she will be appreciated for this second project of hers as well," shared the actress.

It was her birthday on July 26, but this year's one was especially grim. She mentioned that after her father's demise, she never lavishly celebrated her birthday. Also, the country is going through a critical phase, and this is not a time for celebration. "Despite everything, many well-wishers and fans have reached out to me, and I am grateful to them," she said.

Tareen was a child artiste in Bangladesh Television (BTV) and was the winner of Notun Kuri in 1985. She expressed her grief after learning about the attack on the television station during the violence. "I am an enlisted artiste of the channel; I grew up working for the channel. I never imagined that I would have had to witness such a horrific incident. Those who have attacked the channel are the enemies of the country."

Tareen also remarked, "After many hurdles, we have brought our country this far, and those who are attacking the developmental progress of the country are traitors."

In further explanation of her remark, she said, "Those who have tried to harm the country in various curses are unforgivable. They should be punished by the law. No sane person can support such destruction."

As she concluded the chat she left a message for the readers, "The love for our country comes first. Let's love our country and our people. Violence can never really be a solution to any problem."

Denial, intimidation won't solve the crisis

Ensuring students' safety should be a key priority

We are dismayed at the steps the government is taking which, in an already volatile situation ensuing from the brutal crackdown on protesters, can only serve to intensify public distrust and fear. Let's focus on the way students are being dealt with, leaving aside the violence and destruction caused by groups taking advantage of the situation. According to reports in the media, including our paper, police have picked up three key organisers of the quota reform protests—Nahid Islam, Asif Mahmud, and Abu Baker Majumder—from a city hospital before taking them into the custody of the Detective Branch. Nahid and Asif were still undergoing treatment after being picked up and tortured earlier.

Meanwhile, police have filed a First Information Report (FIR) regarding the death of university student Abu Sayed which completely contradicts the widely circulated video footage of him being shot by police within a short distance. The FIR accuses 2,000-3,000 unidentified men, including BNP and Jamaat-Shibir activists, of the killing. It is incredible what lengths are being taken to distort the facts. The Amnesty International has independently verified the video footage using satellite images to geolocate the positions of Sayed and responsible police officers, and found that they were about 15 metres apart during the shooting. As seen in the video, Sayed posed no threat to the police. Yet they repeatedly shot him, leading to his death.

In addition to these repressive measures, we have heard of various cases being filed against university students along with the arrests of thousands of other people suspected to be members of BNP, Jamaat and Shibir. For example, on July 21, according to a report by this daily, police sued 20 students of Sher-e-Bangla Agricultural University, along with many unnamed people, for demonstrating unlawfully and assaulting police.

If the government is trying to "normalise" the situation through such legal actions, it is the wrong way to do it. No matter what kind of counter-versions it creates, the government cannot ignore the concerns of the public regarding the unprecedented number of deaths centring on the quota reform movement. Instead of trying to mitigate the severe deficit of trust, of the students in particular, the government has decided to take the hardline once again. Picking up student organisers while they are undergoing medical treatment is illegal, and will only serve to further corrode students' faith in its sincerity to solve the crisis and harm any prospect of dialogue with them in the future. Similarly, denying the role of law enforcement and other security forces in the deaths of students and other people and arresting student protesters will further add fuel to the fire.

This is not the time to try to control the situation with fear, intimidation, and distortion of facts. The government must immediately release the three student organisers and allow them to get treatment. It must ensure their safety and that of all other students, put a stop to legal harassment, and discard the FIR in question (and others that may follow) that deliberately falsifies truths. It must own up to the fatal mistakes it has made and sincerely try to heal the deep wounds inflicted on the students and the public as a whole.

Restoring confidence among expats is vital

Recent events, if unaddressed, may impact remittance inflow

We are concerned about the growing effects of the recent violence and subsequent disturbances through curfew and internet shutdown on our economy, which was already grappling with consistently high inflation, falling exports, and a dollar crisis. Over the past few days, the media has highlighted the risks and losses in various sectors owing to the unrest and forced closures. One key sector where a similar impact could be expected is remittance from migrant workers. After a return to growth over the months since March, which saw the lowest remittances sent in 2024, the country, according to a report, could again be in for a rough ride thanks to a campaign by a section of migrant workers to halt remittances through formal channels.

Many migrants, disturbed by the brutal crackdown on protesters amid a total internet blackout, which largely cut off communications with their families back home, organised rallies and protests in various countries including in Europe, Asia, Middle East, and the UK and USA. Some of these rallies even called for a "shutdown" of remittances in solidarity with the quota reform protesters' call for a "complete shutdown" since July 18. In the UAE, the Abu Dhabi Federal Court of Appeal already sentenced 57 Bangladeshi nationals to long prison terms after they carried out protests in multiple locations. Protests in some other countries, especially in Middle East, were more muted because of local restrictions. The government has already sent letters to our missions in foreign countries asking about those involved in such protests and the reasons for their agitation.

In all likelihood, the fallout of recent events may rumble on unless the government takes steps to restore confidence among our migrant workers. A Bangladesh Bank official, while acknowledging the campaign to boycott formal channels and use informal channels like hundi to send remittances, has expressed hope that migrants will not respond to such calls. It is understandable that remittances were down during the recent bank and internet closures, but since many expatriates receive their salaries at the end or beginning of a month, the true effect of the resistance against formal transactions, which crucially add to our foreign exchange reserves, can be determined over the next week or so.

These developments come at a time when the government's initiatives to encourage formal transactions and investments by Bangladeshi nationals living aboard are being criticised for being inadequate. Even though the government hopes that recent events will not discourage foreign direct investment, the fact is, such concerns go long back thanks to preexisting issues like corruption, systemic barriers, anti-competitive environment, etc. It is crucial that our expatriates and foreign investors do not turn away from us at this critical economic juncture. To restore confidence among migrants perturbed by recent violence and internet shutdown, we urge the government to do everything necessary, including ensuring uninterrupted communications, ensuring those who have been jailed abroad for protesting are released, listening to migrants' other grievances, and addressing the root causes of recent unrest with complete transparency and accountability.

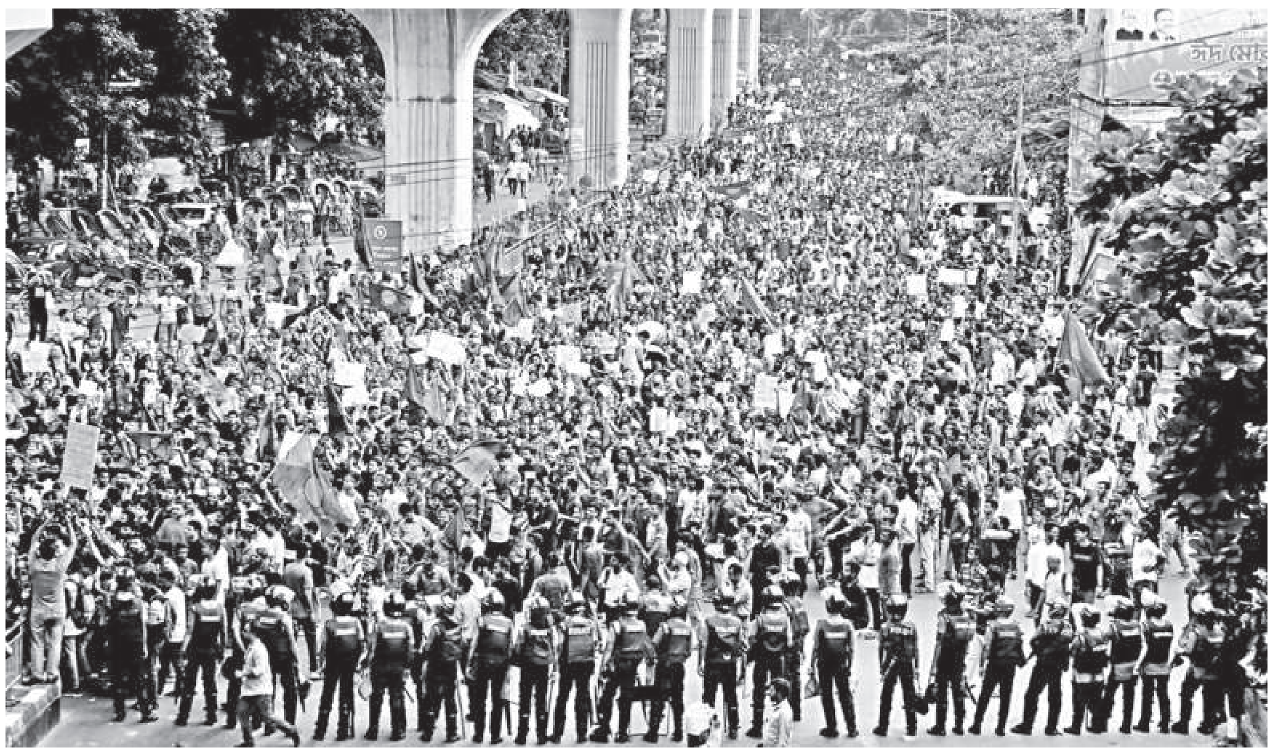
It began as a simple protest: reform the government job quota system—a basic demand arising from a fundamental problem. Young people in Bangladesh are facing unprecedented levels of unemployment, while reports from February indicated that more than a quarter of the 1.9 million government job seats remained vacant. Adding fuel to the fire was a controversial high court verdict to restore the highly unpopular 56 percent job reservation system. Thus, you have the recipe for a massive nationwide student mobilisation demanding a solution to a broken system.



The government has so far solved all its problems through force.

The answer to this growing unrest was simple. The government is no stranger to angry students on the streets. Whether that be the earlier road safety movement, the movement opposing VAT on private universities, or the previous movements against the quota, the answer was always the same—clear and non-antagonistic channels for dialogue. Who could have guessed that the government could fumble the ball so hard? Who would have imagined that such a simple demand would end up with the blood of hundreds on the streets?

After the internet ban was partially lifted, the images of horror that filled social media feed seemed to be straight out of some war movie. Helicopters performing strafing runs, shooting sound grenades at crowds of people. Tanks rolling past burnt-out remains of vehicles. Security forces clearly using lethal weapons against unarmed protesters. And scores and scores of other atrocities, too numerous to list. Accounts and websites have been created solely to document and preserve these recorded atrocities. These resources are a mere Google search away for anyone who needs a quick, sobering dose of reality. At the time of writing, the number of dead is over 200, according to what some media outlets could verify. Who knows what the real count will turn out to be. But that is not all. Nearly five thousand have been arrested in over a week. Mothers and fathers helplessly roaming hospitals to find their missing children. Emotional eulogies of brothers and sisters who have been martyred in the violence. These are the images that will be burnt into the collective psyche of our nation. There will be no cover-up. We will not forget.

This monumental failure of the government to control the situation cannot simply be analysed as a monolith. If we peel back the surface of this failure, we see the incompetence, arrogance, and ineptitude unfurl like some kind of rotten onion. The first fumble was a remark by the prime minister, indirectly implicating all students asking for quota reforms as having some link with "razakar". The second fumble was the letting loose of the goons of student and youth wing of the ruling party, who then proceeded to turn a non-violent movement into one of needless violence. And the final fumble was the complete shutdown of the internet in Bangladesh, decimating Bangladesh's already faltering economy, as if to cut off the nose to spite the face.

There are many more layers to this chain of failures. Using tanks, vehicles, and helicopters—few of which were clearly marked with the UN logo—to subjugate the incensed masses. A complete failure to protect the nation's key point installations, such as the BTV building, metro rail station, and BRTA headquarters, etc. A comically weak attempt to convince the population that the internet shutdown was not a clear government overreaction. And a continuous and embarrassing disregard of our leaders for the bloody elephant in the room, which is the pile of dead bodies of our children, our best and brightest, who had to give their lives simply to earn the opportunity for a possible government job.

You know, I know, they know. This was a total and utter mess of an affair. Words simply fall short of describing its magnitude. It is such a mess that perhaps the government might even feel ashamed to admit it. Enemies are being invented out of thin air to justify using the military to quell the unrest. Perhaps if they try hard enough, they might even start to believe the narrative they are spewing. Whatever progressive image the ruling party had tried to build for itself over the last decade or so has been severely fractured. And once the layers of failure are peeled off to expose the rotten core, we are only left with two options: reckless ineptitude or malicious intent. These are the only two cards the government has to play.

There has been an ongoing trend of both the ruling party and the opposition to regard the government as some kind of omnipotent political entity capable of exercising incredible amounts of control over its population with the aid of foreign surveillance technology. Clearly, this has not worked. All it took to shut down Bangladesh's digital infrastructure was one building fire in the capital and a cut wire. Or perhaps the true mechanism of control was never sophisticated intelligence apparatus or assistance from foreign powers. The government has so far solved all its problems through force. Either through official institutions, the student political wing, or security forces in plain clothes, time after time, they have resorted to force their way out of all political hurdles.

However, the key strategic takeaway for the government from all of this should be to take a good, hard look at the means by which they have been ruling so far. Times are changing, and they may realise that the foundation of their rule is not as solid as they might have fooled themselves into believing so far. A closer inspection might reveal the true nature of their political entity. And this entity is now showing serious cracks.

The toddlers of the current generation are called the "reels-generation", as they cannot be fed without a screen in front of them showing them seconds-long reels on social media websites. From little kids to adults, all are now addicted to scrolling through these short videos. They also tend to lose interest if they cannot find something newer and more interesting in every scroll. So, the race of being on trend has become a real competition for the social media influencers.

It probably started with the game "Guess the Goat" and continued with Argentina's victory in the Copa America final. In between we experienced some significant movements like the university teachers' strike over the new pension scheme, and the beginning of the quota reform movement by students. Within a week, those movements lost their position on the list when news of question leaks in Bangladesh Civil Service exams, along with the tale of the millionaire driver, came out. When it seemed that we would almost start to forget that those issues are real and not reels, our young generation made sure that this time they are not leaving the streets until their demands are fulfilled. People around the world witnessed Bangladeshi students suffering on the streets for days in order to ensure reformation of the quota system. And then, we lost our internet connections, at a time when many of those young protestors were being brutally killed on the streets.

I remember when we didn't have cable connection; we used to wait eagerly for Friday afternoons to watch a movie on BTV or a drama in the evening. Nowadays, entertainment channels are so abundant that the excitement has left us. We are buying subscriptions for Netflix, HBO and other streaming platforms. Similarly, our national issues are so numerous at this time that it has become difficult to pay attention to a single one. Without reaching the resolution of a single issue, we are asked to wait for a bit longer so that we get bored of the news that is starting to get stale and start looking for something newer and more exciting. As the internet has been restored in a limited capacity across the country recently, we are eagerly awaiting for things to get back to normal even at a time such as this, forgetting what abnormality we experienced a few days ago. Will the martyred young minds be forgotten as they are not drawing enough attention anymore?

And then, we lost our internet connections, at a time when many of those young protestors were being brutally killed on the streets.

Even though we don't want to admit it, we must come to terms with the fact that we have thickened our skin over the years and now we have almost become numb to the blows we get from the news. We did not speak when lower income people had to stop buying meat and fish due to unbearable price hikes. We did not look for any resolution when we got to know about people who loaded their bags with black money and ran away. We were not loud enough when another group of people were on the same streets asking for their rights. We kept scrolling further down for "trending" issues as we ignored our duties.

Even now, our respected crisis resolvers are waiting for us to "get tired of it" till we find something new to get busy with. With our collective inability to pay attention, it is not unlikely that we will forget this too, as soon as we scroll down to the latest Ambani wedding videos.

This country is now desperately in need of optimistic and creative minds . This time, people must not forget the past. Showing respect to the lost lives, we should hope for better future leaders among today's unbeatable young blood who won't say "it is what it is" and move on, who won't get tired of waiting for the rights they deserve, and whose voices cannot be silenced because "it does not concern them", and who won't let us get too comfortable with our numbness.

The (reformed) quota scheme, our state, and the marginalised

Psymhe Wadud

PSYMHE WADUD

The quota reform movement took a rather avoidable violent turn, particularly agitating and disconcerting teachers of law, who research and lecture university students on rights, justice, and constitutionalism.

The movement tabled for us the logical demand to reform the quota scheme in public service. Indeed, the quota scheme needed substantive reform. By substantive, I refer to reform that goes beyond specifying the percentages. In the face of the overwhelming loss of lives, disproportionate and careless use of force, condemnable violence against police personnel, jailbreaks, and mindless destructions caused by "vested quarters" to public properties and national establishments, it was understandably not possible to go into the substance of quota reform. But while we heave a sigh of relief, it is important to also reflect on how different things could have been, had the state taken a dialogic approach with the protesting students early on. Even with regard to the strategic mayhem apparently planned and perpetrated by third-party political and/or extremist elements, we cannot understate the accountability of the state mechanism on account of their share of omissions to make sure that the student movement does not slide into violence and is not taken "advantage" of (for example, failing to collate and build required security intelligence or not strategising/deploying preventive and countering measures early on).

One may say that I am imposing too daunting of a burden on the state and that in fact the students should have shown "maturity" and framed their demands the right way. Interestingly, for instance, it is argued by state officials that the protesting students, including women, did not want quotas for women. However, we ought to be mindful to the legal, normative, and epistemic authority that the state has over us—the governed.

This piece may seem rather pedantic at this point. However, as a feminist who deeply cares about substantive equality, I cannot help emphasising that had things panned out differently, the quota percentages could also have been specified based on data-driven grassroots evidence on substantive inequalities and statistical analyses on the marginalised communities. As it transpires, we (the state as a whole) lost the righteous high ground to negotiate with the protesting students.

There are many ways to justify quotas. First, they further the cause of substantive equality. Quotas offer support to the otherwise marginalised to compete on equal terms with those who are not. A second justification for quotas is they work as "recognition" for past intentional discrimination, oppression, or harms. A third justification is that quotas tend to contribute to diversity. However, the diversity argument reduces humans to group identities—to something of use—something that adds value to a setting. In a way, it views humans as instruments and not as beings having intrinsic value. Nonetheless, diversity is a valid argument to justify quotas.

Clearly, quotas are not an exception to equality—as per the tenets of anti-discrimination law jurisprudence. Courts across jurisdictions have observed on multiple occasions how affirmative actions are an intrinsic part of formal equality, and not an exception to it. However, for quotas to work as an intrinsic element of formal equality and to further the cause of substantive equality, they need to be implemented with an overarching vision. For quotas to be beneficial, it is important that they take a "prioritarian" approach and do not generalise or essentialise groups or categories that they target. In other words, to further the cause of substantive equality, it is crucial that quotas do not compromise with qualification in the longer run, do not perpetuate stereotypes, and are not over- or under-inclusive. Quotas, at the end of the day, are remedial, they are not supposed to treat the structural barriers or systemic causes of substantive inequalities. However, with vision of an egalitarian society, it is important that quotas are utilised as a "plus" to treating the root causes of inequality, discrimination, and marginalisation, and not as a tokenistic scheme to mask inequalities that lurk underneath formal equality or as means to engender further discrimination or inequalities. Evidently, the state lacked a vision: it never knew what it wanted quotas to do. Alternatively, the state failed to meaningfully communicate a vision to the protesting students.

While upholding a race conscious admission policy by the University of Michigan, the US Supreme Court observed that a quota policy must be sufficiently flexible to ensure that each applicant is evaluated as an individual and not in a manner that makes ethnicity or race the defining feature of an application. Thus, race or ethnicity may be considered only as a "plus" to a particular applicant's profile. In other words, when there is one position and two equally qualified persons, then the balance shall tilt in favour of the one who has a quota in their favour. Indeed, this is one of the ways quotas can do their job and still not compromise with qualification. Another way is to choose a quota-candidate over a non-quota candidate (both equally qualified) unless there are additional factors favouring the case of the latter. What we have in our country are automatic quotas, meaning that when quotas come in play, they do not work as a "plus" to the applicants' profile, rather become the defining factor of their applications. Hence, instead of unmindfully retaining or reducing automatic quota provisions, it was (and still is) important to craft a plan on transitioning from automatic quotas to a more nuanced application of quota provisions based on certain benchmarks (for example, obtaining critical mass).

The answer to the question of over-inclusivity lies with a prioritarian approach to executing quotas. India is illustrative in this regard for sub-dividing marginalised groups. Indeed, sub-dividing beneficiary groups and prioritising the most marginalised within a specific group, if perfectly executed, is one way through which quotas can really do the job they are supposed to do. This is where excluding the "creamy layer" or otherwise socioeconomically advanced section within specific groups comes into play. In order to prevent under-inclusivity, quotas need to be regularly monitored and revised based on disaggregated data and evidence on marginalisation and intersectional harms sustained by members of specific groups.

History shows how the "woman question", "indigenous question", "transgender question", and "disabled question" get subsumed in the midst of dominant voices and how marginalised voices get deliberately silenced amid battling causes and agendas. The quota reform movement, the state's initial nonchalance, and the mayhem befalling the country afterwards serves as a case study for such subsuming and silencing. Indeed, the reformed scheme does a great disservice to women by entirely foregoing quotas for them. It's true that for a privileged class of mostly urban women, quotas are no longer needed. However, they do not represent all women—particularly those who sustain harms on multiple intersecting grounds. In order to recognise the historical wrongs perpetrated against women in general and to cater to the needs of the vast majority of women with no access to basic goods and services, quotas are a necessity and will continue to be so for quite a while. One per cent quota for the indigenous population is certainly not backed by evidence either. Amid all, specifying quota for the "third gender" individuals is commendable. However, the clubbing of persons with disabilities with "third gender" individuals (with one per cent quota) do not add value to the cause of equality since the two are different categories, sustain distinct harms, and have varied needs. Unmindful to the majoritarian backlash against transgender people, the new scheme also reifies the regressive agenda of distinguishing "third gender" individuals from non-cisgender people in general and thereby hierarchising gender identities. Does it also reinforce the regressive stigma attached to non-cisgender people to the effect that they are persons with (gendered) disabilities? I do not know.

At the end of the day, what we have with the new quota scheme are "subaltern" lives and lived experiences, that will remain, perhaps indefinitely, almost unaccounted for within the public employment sector—due to the political-apolitical 'sensitivity' now attached to the scheme in general.

Above all, we have the burden of the lost lives to account for.

Drivers of bank run in Bangladesh

MD MAIN UDDIN

Banks are in the business of borrowing short from surplus units and lending long to deficit units. This creates the problem of maturity mismatch and consequently banks face liquidity problem. Banks are largely dependent on trust which can be broken when they fail to honour the cheques of their depositors.

If depositors are gripped by collective distrust and decide to withdraw their deposits all at the same time in a short period, banks are unable to satisfy these withdrawals as their assets are mostly illiquid. This gives rise to "bank run". If run on a bank is not handled carefully, it may lead to bank failure—a situation where a bank is unable to meet its obligations to its depositors or other creditors because it has become insolvent.

Poor liquidity management or even rumours about a bank may lead to bank run. Notably, a run can occur whether the bank is insolvent or not—that is, the fear of a run may be enough to produce one. Therefore, the perceptions of depositors are clearly related with bank run.

Previous research discovered that the fear of losing one's savings is positively connected with individuals' behaviour during a bank run scenario. Studies showed that when depositors can be assured that banks are not facing a liquidity crisis, rather mismanagement of liquidity prevails in the banking system, they may postpone their withdrawal. In other words, postponement of deposit withdrawal will take place when depositors know that the banking system as a whole does not face any liquidity crisis. Deposit insurance reduces the probability of bank run as it guarantees depositors' savings in the banks. Although a full coverage by deposit insurance certainly eliminates bank run, partial deposit insurance cannot. Generally, deposit insurance reduces depositors' incentive to make a run on the bank.

At present, there are 61 banks in Bangladesh. There are six state-owned commercial banks (SCB), three specialised banks (SB), 43 private commercial banks (PCB) and nine foreign commercial banks (FCB). Among the private commercial banks, 33 are conventional and 10 Islami Shariah based. The country is overbanked which creates an unhealthy competition among banks. The banking sector of Bangladesh is engulfed with many problems that can initiate bank run. Yet no such research has been carried out that could provide a better understanding of the factors which cause bank run. It is essential to know the factors related to bank run, otherwise a major gap in risk management process will remain unexplored.

A recent study was carried out to discover the factors that may cause bank run in Bangladesh. It attempts to identify the factors that drive depositors' perceptions toward bank run. Personal interviews using closed-ended questions were used to collect data between July and October 2023 from 400 respondents of which 77 percent were from PCB and 23 percent from SCB.

More than half of the respondents (61 percent) were male and more than 57 percent had business education. A whopping 83 percent of the depositors were knowledgeable about the problems in the banking sector, including loan scams, high non-performing assets, shortage of capital deficiency and liquidity problems. A mere 36 percent of customers were familiar with deposit insurance scheme—a scheme of Bangladesh Bank (BB) which gives protection to deposits up to Tk 100,000 against each account.

The study found a significant relationship between category of education and bank run. Depositors with non-business education are 1.76 times more likely to run for cash withdrawal than depositors with business education because the former do not understand why banks face crises, the magnitude of crises and how they affect banks. Thus, they tend to run on deposits.

The research discovered an important connection between depositors' awareness of liquidity problem and bank run. The depositors who are not aware about liquidity problem are 1.74 times more likely to rush for cash withdrawal than those who understand the issue. Liquidity problem arises from maturity mismatch, high non-performing loans, mismanagement of funds and inability to obtain financing. Some are easily manageable while others are not. Hence, it is quite natural that the depositors, who are not familiar with the causes of liquidity problem, are more inclined to rush for cash withdrawal.

There is strong evidence that knowledge about banking sector problems and bank run are well associated. Depositors who know about banking sector's problems are 2.36 times more likely to rush for cash withdrawal than those who are not aware of the issues. Knowledge about banking sector problems make them more panicked, so they are more likely to make a run on the bank.

Finally, the research identified that bank run is affected by knowledge about deposit insurance scheme. Depositors who are unfamiliar with this system are 4.32 times more likely to run on deposits than people who know about the insurance scheme. A large number of depositors do not have any knowledge about this scheme, let alone its operational procedures.

The results have implications for bank regulations and financial crisis literature. Bank run as this research indicates can occur in Bangladesh and it is affected by some factors. In recent years, for example, some banks, that faced liquidity constrains, had to borrow from money markets at abnormally high interest rates. Other times they resorted to Bangladesh Bank (BB) finding no other alternatives.

For about the last five years, BB had to extend special credit support to some banks to help them overcome their liquidity problem. The central bank also requested people not to be panicked while several banks were in serious liquidity problem. BB had to assure people that no bank will fail in the country. All these initiatives were taken to avoid potential bank run. If those banks were not supported by BB, they would have faced bank run. Some of them might have failed too.

If several banks face losses simultaneously due to bank run, the government may fail to save them and rescuing them could be expensive. Thus, banks need to be efficient and resilient to avoid bank run. If run on deposits cannot be prevented ex ante it may create havoc in the entire economy ex post. People must also be educated and made aware about banking sector issues so that they are not driven by irrational behaviour that can cause bank run.

Butler blames defence after labouring win

SPORTS REPORTER

Coach Peter Butler blamed his defence after Bangladesh women's team laboured to a 4-2 win against Bhutan in the second match of the two FIFA friendly matches at the Changlimithang Stadium in Thimphu on Saturday.

The charges of Butler had fought back from a goal down to win the first match 5-1 on Wednesday, but the performance in the second match was much worse from the reigning SAFF women's champions as they went two goals down before finding their feet and edging past the home side.

The coach had made six changes to his starting eleven, including drafting in last match's hattrick hero Mosammat Sagorika as well as Mile Akter in goal. However, the women in red and green made a terrible start, conceding a 15th minute lead when a defender failed to clear a long ball from midfield, with Deki Lhazom chesting the ball home following a cross from skipper Pema Tshering.

It was only the second goal that Bangladesh had conceded against their South Asian counterparts in six meetings, but things would go from bad to worse for the visitors as Lhazom doubled the home side's lead seven minutes later, smashing home from the centre of the box with Mile failing to stop the straightforward attempt.

Butler, who was highly critical of his team's critics following the first match, said the physical inferiority of his side and the style of play of the opposition caught them off-guard.

"I thought we defended very very poorly," Butler said after the match. "Even though we dominated possession -- we probably had 75-80 percent possession but with the way they play (which is) very very direct and with us not being of big size, anything over the top causes a few problems."

The coach made an early change, bringing on reliable midfielder Maria Manda in place of Sapna Rani as Bangladesh slowly took control of the midfield. But it was captain Sabina Khatun who reduced the margin in the 35th minute with a clever finish following a long-ball from Masura Parvin before Sagorika equalised with a fine chip following some clever play inside the box by Sabina and Matsushima Sumaya five minutes later.

Sagorika then wasted two glorious chances early in the second half before substitute Ritu Porna Chakma's deflected shot handed the visitors a fortuitous lead in the 62nd minute. The left-winer ensured Bangladesh's victory with her second goal 24 minutes later, finding the net from a goalmouth melee as Bangladesh maintained their 100 percent win record against Bhutan.

Despite the lacklustre performance, Butler felt it was more of a case of the opposition improving than his charges regressing.

"I think you have to give credit where its due. They've improved," Butler said. "They don't have a real methodology in terms of how they play. If you don't defend stoutly and strongly and resolutely, you're going to get found out."

Rejaur, Mondol earn HP lead over Pak Shaheens

SPORTS REPORTER

Pacers Ripon Mondol and Rejaur Rahman Raja starred as Bangladesh Cricket Board High Performance (HP) Unit bowled out Pakistan Shaheens for 179 in their first innings on Day 2 of their four-day match at the Marrara Oval in Darwin yesterday.

Ripon claimed 4-71 while Rejaur took 3-33, helping the HP Unit to a 79-run first innings lead.

The HP team then reached 84-3 at stumps on Day 2, with Skipper Mahmudul Hasan Joy and Aich Mollah unbeaten on 39 and eight respectively, extending the lead to 163.

Earlier, Pakistan Shaheens resumed the day's play on 39-2, in reply to HP unit's first innings tally of 258.

Rejaur struck on the second over of the day, getting Omair Yousuf caught for seven.

The Shaheens lost two more wickets in quick succession and were stuttering on 69-5 before Kamran Ghulam and Tayyab Tahir formed a 78-run partnership for the sixth wicket to steady the innings.

Rejaur broke the stand by getting Kamran caught behind for 48. His departure initiated another collapse as Pakistan Shaheens lost their remaining four wickets for just 32 runs.

Jessy to officiate in Women's Asia Cup final

SPORTS REPORTER

Even though Bangladesh crashed out of the Women's Asia Cup with a crushing defeat to India in the semifinal, there will be some Bangladeshi representation in the final between India and Sri Lanka in Dambulla today in the form of umpire Shathira Jakir Jessy.

Jessy, who is officiating in the Asia Cup for the first time, confirmed The Daily Star yesterday that she has been chosen as one of the three umpires for the all-important match and will be working as an on-field umpire.

The former Bangladesh cricketer, who has officiated in five matches in the tournament -- three as an on-field umpire and two as a TV umpire -- explained that she was chosen for the final as one of the best umpires in the tournament and not as a neutral umpire.

"They selected me on the basis of performance. They have ranked the umpires on the basis of their performance in the Asia Cup and I was amongst the top three," Jessy said.

"Earlier, they would only chose neutral umpires. But this time they have changed their policy, now they are giving it to the best performers. Even if Bangladesh had qualified for the final, I would've been chosen," she added.

'There is every possibility of bigger humiliations'

SAMSUL AREFIN KHAN

Bangladesh's lacklustre Women's Asia Cup mission ended on Friday with a humiliating 10-wicket defeat to India in the semifinal, a drubbing that could be the precursor to more such embarrassments in the forthcoming ICC Women's T20 World Cup at home.

The Tigresses have been struggling since the start of the year and went into the regional competition after conceding back-to-back series defeats to Australia and India on home soil.

The players then featured in the Dhaka Premier Division Women's Cricket League and also had a two-week training camp at the BKSP ahead of the meet, but could hardly put up a fight against hosts Sri Lanka in their opening game, which they lost by seven wickets.

Bangladesh went on the win against Thailand and Malaysia to book a place in the last four, where they came across seven-time champions India, against whom they had conceded a 5-0 defeat in a five-match series recently.

In the semifinal, the difference in quality of the two sides came to the fore as the Tigresses got mauled by their Indian counterparts in all three departments.

As Bangladesh are bracketed with tough opponents like England, the West Indies and South Africa in the T20 World Cup, which is set to start on October 3, things aren't looking great for the hosts at the moment.

"There is every possibility of bigger humiliations in the upcoming World Cup," Nazmul Abedeen Fahim, who mentored the women's team during their 2018 Asia Cup success in Malaysia, told The Daily Star yesterday.

"It wouldn't be surprising if we don't do well. There will be more criticism and I don't think they [players] would be able to handle that. I think it would be even more difficult for them.

"There was a time when we gave tough fight to India while Pakistan and Sri Lanka were similar to us. But now the latter teams have reached a new level while we are going backwards and becoming like Thailand and the UAE," he added.

Fahim was critical of the quality of women's domestic cricket in Bangladesh while he lambasted the team management for their continuous failure.

"The quality of our domestic cricket is so poor that we can't actually think of getting players for international level from there. Our domestic cricket is little better than Thailand and the UAE and because of that, we feel comfortable playing against them.

"There was an attempt to develop women's cricket [after Asia Cup win]. But I don't know how things have gradually regressed in the last two to three years. I think we lack a competitive culture in our cricket. We should have been in the place behind India but above Pakistan, Sri Lanka. But we failed to maintain the continuity. I think it's not clear to many for what objectives and purpose we play cricket.

"I don't think the current management of the women's team can bring better results. This management has been working with the team for quite a long time. If they could've gotten better results, they would have done it by now. I fear that things can go worse," he concluded.

Emotional Endrick realises Madrid 'dream'

AGENCIES

A visibly emotional Endrick was presented as a Real Madrid player in front of a packed Santiago Bernabeu on Saturday, with the Brazilian teenage sensation revealing that he had long dreamt of becoming a Real Madrid player.

Madrid agreed a deal to sign forward Endrick from Palmeiras in December 2022, but the prospect could not formally join the club until his 18th birthday on July 21, 2024.

"This is crazy," Endrick said. "I am so happy, since I was a kid I have always been a Madrid fan and now I am going to play for Madrid.

"I am here, I am going to play, I am so happy, my family are as well. I don't have words to describe what I am feeling. I always wanted to be here. I wanted to play for Madrid. It was a dream. Today it is a reality."

The stadium was packed, with only just over 200 tickets left available to the general public on the morning of the event, as fans turned out. In particular, there was a strong Brazilian contingent to the crowd, wearing shirts of their country, Palmeiras, and various Real Madrid legends.

Also in attendance were Endrick's parents, girlfriend, wider family and entourage.

Endrick will compete for a place in the Real Madrid attack alongside Brazil teammates Vinícius Junior and Rodrygo, and another new arrival, Kylian Mbappe.

The Brazilian teenager underwent a medical and put pen to paper on his contract at Valdebebas yesterday morning, before heading to Chamartín at midday to be officially presented in front of fans.

It was also confirmed that he would don the number 16 jersey during his first season at the club. The number had been vacant, having last been worn by Alvaro Odriozola before his return to Real Sociedad last summer.

Endrick is now expected to travel to the U.S. on Sunday for the club's pre-season tour, where he will arrive ahead of his Brazil teammates who were also at the Copa América and who are not expected to arrive until late next week.

That means that the teenager will work alongside Carlo Ancelotti and his teammates with the hope of featuring in some of their upcoming friendly fixtures against AC Milan, Barcelona, and Chelsea, ahead of the European Super Cup where the Champions League winners will play Europa League winners Atalanta in Warsaw, on August 14.

England batter Joe Root celebrates after reaching his 63rd Test half-century on Day 2 of the third test against the West Indies at Edgbaston yesterday. Root rescued England after they slumped to 54 for five in response to West Indies' first innings total of 282 as the right-handed batter put away seven fours for his 87 and put together a 115-run stand with skipper Ben Stokes. He also reached another milestone as he became the seventh player to score 12,000 runs in the format and leapfrogged Brain Lara into seventh place in the list of all-time leading run-getters.

FRENCH FLAIR FLAUNTED in Olympics opening

AFP, Paris

A historic boat parade down the River Seine launched the Paris Olympics with spectacular French flair Friday, as the City of Light welcomed the world's greatest athletes for a sporting extravaganza.

A show-stopping performance by Celine Dion, a flaming Olympic cauldron lifted into the night sky by hot-air balloon, and a dazzling Eiffel Tower light show brought the curtain down on a four-hour celebration of French culture, history and art.

Braving torrential rain, some 300,000 people had lined the river banks to cheer on the armada carrying competitors past the city's iconic sights: the Eiffel Tower bearing the five Olympic rings, the Louvre and Notre Dame Cathedral.

The wildly ambitious display was the first time the Olympic opening ceremony has been staged outside the main stadium, making it the biggest-ever launch for the "Greatest Show on Earth".

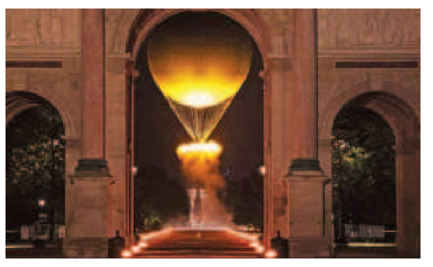
But that gamble also made the ceremony hostage to the weather, with spectators, VIPs, and athletes alike drenched or huddling in transparent ponchos.

In the City of Love, the ceremony stressed togetherness and unity in a world that has suffered wars, massacres, and political upheaval since the Covid-delayed Tokyo Olympics.

For just over a fortnight, organisers hope the superhuman performances of stars like gymnast Simone Biles, tennis champion Novak Djokovic or sprinter Noah Lyles will provide the world with much-needed distraction.

Beach volleyball at the Eiffel Tower, breakdancing in Place de la Concorde, equestrian sport at the Palace of Versailles: 100 years since Paris last staged the Olympics, the city will provide a stunning backdrop to the sport.

"I declare open the Games of Paris celebrating the 33rd Olympiad of the modern era," said President Emmanuel Macron. In a symbol of the Games' message of gender parity, French track legend Marie-Jose Perec and three-time Olympic judo champion Teddy Riner lit the Olympic cauldron together.



Dion closed the show from the first level of the Eiffel Tower, with her first public performance since revealing she was suffering from a rare illness.

Paris 2024 organiser Tony Estanguet had said the opening ceremony needed to "push the limits as far as possible", showing from the start France's ambition for the Games.

And from Moulin Rouge performers doing the cancan to a video showing dancers on the scaffolding of fire-damaged Notre Dame, it was a colourful festival of all things French.

Led out by Greece through jets of water cascading from a bridge, accompanied by an accordion player, around 7,000 athletes cruised down a six-kilometre (four-mile) stretch of the Seine to the Eiffel Tower on 85 boats.

In a city where memories of the November 2015 terrorist attacks are still raw, the unprecedented ceremony sparked a colossal security operation: Snipers, specialist frogmen, and AI-augmented cameras were deployed, with airspace closed and the area around the Seine virtually locked down.

To everyone's relief, the ceremony passed off without major incident.

Sporting royalty mingled with celebrities and world leaders on and off the Seine, which will host triathlon and the swimming marathon after a historic clean-up to make it swimmable.

The ceremony kicked off with a video of French football legend Zinedine Zidane, who took the torch on an offbeat journey through the Metro, and the Paris catacombs.

Basketball icon LeBron James and tennis player Coco Gauff carried the flag for Team USA, which has topped the medal table at every Olympics since Beijing in 2008.

True to its slogan "Games Wide Open", the Paris Olympics can boast gender equality for the first time ever -- for Paris 1924, the last time the Olympics took place in the city, four percent of athletes were women.

But the ceremony did not shy away from the chaos in the world -- to the strains of John Lennon's "Imagine", the city was plunged into darkness in an invitation to reflect.

But with the Games now open, the stars are aligned for sporting brilliance as the stage is set for the 10,500 athletes to fulfil their dreams and turn in the performance of their lives.

'I couldn't imagine a better place': Tamberi after losing wedding ring in Seine

REUTERS, Paris

High jumper Gianmarco Tamberi issued a profuse apology to his wife on Saturday after his wedding ring slipped off his finger while he was serving as Italy's flag bearer on a boat in the Seine River during the opening ceremony of the Paris Olympics.

"Too much water, too many kilos lost in the last few months or maybe the irrepressible enthusiasm of what we were doing," Tamberi, who won gold at the Tokyo Games, wrote on Instagram in a post directed at his wife, Chiara Bontempi Tamberi.

"Probably all three things, the fact remains that I felt it (my ring) slip away, I saw it fly.... I followed it with my gaze until I saw it bounce inside the boat."

Tamberi said that his wedding ring then bounced into the waters of the Seine in what he described as "a few moments that lasted forever."

"But if it really had to happen, if I really had to lose it, I couldn't imagine a better place," Tamberi added. "It will remain forever in the riverbed of the City of Love."

"May it be a good omen to return home with an even bigger gold!" he wrote.

IOC apologises to South Korea over opening ceremony gaffe

REUTERS, Paris

The International Olympic Committee apologised to South Korea on Saturday after its delegation of athletes were introduced as from rival North Korea at theParis Olympics opening ceremony.

South Korea's vice minister for sports and culture, Jang Mi-ran, who was in Paris, said IOC President Thomas Bach planned to speak with South Korean President Yoon Suk Yeol to convey an apology.

"It was clearly deeply regrettable and we apologise wholeheartedly," IOC spokesperson Mark Adams told a press conference on Saturday.

South Korea's National Olympic Committee immediately referred the incident to the Games' organisers and requested that the error will not be repeated.

South Korea's delegation includes 143 athletes competing in 21 events. North Korea, which is returning to the Games for the first time since Rio 2016, has sent 16 athletes.

China's teen duo grabs FIRST GOLD

REUTERS, Chateauroux

Social media-savvy teenaged duo Huang Yuting and Sheng Lihao upheld a Chinese shooting tradition as they won the first gold of the Paris Olympics in the 10 metres air rifle mixed team event on Saturday.

Chinese shooters have claimed their country's first gold of the Games more times than athletes in any other sport and that trend continued with Huang and Sheng triumphing at the Chateauroux Shooting Centre.

Their 16-12 win, quelling a late challenge from the South Korean pair of Keum Ji-hyeon and Park Ha-jun, ensured China remain the only country to win the gold in the mixed team event introduced in Tokyo three years ago.

Three years after China's Yang Qian and Yang Haoran won the gold in Tokyo, reigning world champions Huang and Sheng topped the qualifying round ahead of their Korean rivals to signal their intent.

The gold medal contest was not really a cakewalk though despite them racing to a 14-8 lead after the 11th round.

Keum and Park staged a late comeback to reduce the gap at 14-12 but the Chinese pair prevailed in the end.

Huang said she was jittery when the Koreans started breathing down their neck.

"I was quite tense to be honest," said the 17-year-old, whose puppy hair-clips are quite popular among her social media fans back home.

Huang and Sheng will be gunning for a second gold in Paris but said the team event result would have no bearing on their individual rifle competitions.

Argentina's Ezequiel Fernandez celebrates with teammates after putting the game to bed in the 84th minute in a 3-1 win against Iraq in a Group B fixture at the Lyon Stadium in Decines-Charpieu yesterday. The victory helped Argentina men's team bounce back from the emotional blow suffered in a defeat against Morocco under controversial circumstances in their 2024 Paris Olympics campaign opener.

POST-VIOLENCE CRACKDOWN

Over 8,000 held in 10 days

726 arrested in 36hrs; students detained despite promise of not being harassed

STAR REPORT

At least 726 more people were arrested in the capital and elsewhere in the 36 hours till 6:00pm yesterday as the nationwide crackdown against protesters and opposition parties continues.

They were arrested in cases filed over the recent violence across the country.

Over 8,000 people, including many BNP and Jamaat leaders, were arrested in 553 cases in 42 districts, including Dhaka, over the last 10 days.

Of them, 5,514 people were held outside the capital.

So far, the Dhaka Metropolitan Police has arrested 2,536 people in 207 cases filed with different police stations over violence, vandalism, and arson, said said KN Roy Niyati, additional deputy commissioner (media) of DMP.

Of them, 252 were arrested yesterday, he added.

According to court documents, 153 people, including several BNP and Jamaat leaders, were produced before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court in Dhaka, in 51 cases yesterday.

Office time 9 to 3, curfew pause 7am to 6pm

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government yesterday extended curfew pauses and office hours for three days from today.

Public and private offices will be open for six hours from 9:00am to 3:00pm, which was 11:00am to 3:00pm last week.

However, banks will open at 10:00am and transactions will conclude at 3:00pm. The banks will stay open till 3:30pm.

The curfew pauses in Dhaka, Narayanganj, Gazipur, and Narsingdi will be for 11 hours from 7:00am.

After Tuesday, the office schedule will be fixed again.

Following the quota reform protests that later turned violent, the government imposed curfew and deployed armed forces on July 19 night.

Government offices reopened on a limited scale on Wednesday after a three-day (Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday) general holiday.

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan Kamal last night said district magistrates and police commissioners will fix the curfew time of the districts under their jurisdictions.

Webb discovers 'super-Jupiter' exoplanet

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

A "super-Jupiter" giant exoplanet has been discovered orbiting a nearby star.

The observed exoplanet – a planet outside the solar system – is very bright and cold, with a mass more than six times that of Jupiter.

The detection is unusual in several ways, including that it shows the first exoplanet imaged with the James Webb Space Telescope (JWST) that had not already been imaged from the ground.

It is also much colder than the gas planets JWST has studied so far.

The planet, named Eps Ind Ab, revolves around the main component of the nearby triple star system Epsilon Indi, or Eps Ind for short, which is only 12 light years from Earth. It needs around 200 years to orbit its star.

Elisabeth Matthews, a researcher at the Max Planck Institute for Astronomy in Heidelberg, Germany, one of the authors of the paper, said: "We were excited when we realised we had imaged this new planet.

"To our surprise, the bright spot that appeared in our MIRI (Mid-Infrared Instrument) images did not match the position we were expecting for the planet.

"Previous studies had correctly identified a planet in this system but underestimated this super-Jupiter gas giant's mass and orbital separation."

Vacate southern Khan Younis areas

Israeli military tells Gaza civilians ahead of new ops; 30 Palestinians killed in strike on school

REUTERS, Jerusalem

The Israeli military yesterday told Palestinians to temporarily evacuate southern neighbourhoods of Gaza's Khan Younis region so it could "forcefully operate" there, telling them to relocate to a humanitarian area in Al-Mawasi.

The fighting underlined the difficulty the Israeli Defence Forces (IDF) has in eliminating fighters of the Hamas group amid continued resistance.

On Friday, the military said troops battled Palestinian fighters in Khan Younis, a city in the south of the enclave, and destroyed tunnels and other infrastructure, as they sought to suppress small Hamas units that have continued to hit troops with mortar fire.

Palestinian official media said that at least 14 Palestinians were killed by Israeli attacks in Khan Younis since dawn yesterday and that their bodies were brought to Nasser Medical Complex.

In the west of Gaza's Deir al-Balah, at least 30 Palestinians were killed in an Israeli attack on a school housing displaced people, Gaza's Civil Defence service said.

More than 39,258 Palestinians have been killed by Israeli strikes in the enclave, according to Gaza health authorities, who do not distinguish between fighters and non-combatants. The toll includes 83 deaths in 48 hours.

The military said yesterday its calls to evacuate were communicated to the population via several mediums in order to mitigate danger to civilians.

- Heavy battles continue around Khan Younis areas
- CIA chief to meet Israeli, Qatari, Egyptian officials for talks
- Death toll in enclave now 39,258

UN and humanitarian officials accuse Israel of using disproportionate force in the offensive, which it denies.

CIA Director William Burns will meet this weekend in Rome with his Israeli and Egyptian counterparts and Qatar's prime minister for talks on a ceasefire and the release of hostages by Hamas, a source familiar with the matter said on Friday.

The source, who requested anonymity, said Burns would meet Qatari Prime Minister Sheikh Mohammed bin Abdulrahman Al Thani and the Egyptian and Israeli intelligence chiefs today.

The CIA declined to comment. The meeting was first reported by Axios.

It comes as Israel seeks changes to a plan for a truce in Gaza and the release of hostages by Hamas, complicating a final deal to halt more than nine months of offensive that has devastated the enclave, according to a Western official, a Palestinian and two Egyptian sources.

In a separate development, US President Joe Biden and Jordan's King Abdullah discussed efforts to secure a ceasefire and hostage deal in Gaza during a call on Friday, the two sides said.

In a statement, the White House said Biden briefed Abdullah on "preparations for a surge in humanitarian assistance during a ceasefire period."

They also discussed reforms to the Palestinian Authority in the Israeli-occupied West Bank, and ensuring it has access to revenue, the White House said.

Jordan's royal palace said the two men discussed what it described as the "dangerous developments in Gaza".

Ensure inquiry into killings

140 scholars, writers, intellectuals urge UN rights chief on recent violence

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

More than 140 scholars, writers, and public intellectuals from across the world have urged the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Volker Türk to press for an independent inquiry into the brutal killing and injuring of students and other protesters in Bangladesh.

> Draconian measures such as arbitrary arrests and detention without show cause notice, denial of the right to be represented by a lawyer, infliction of injuries, and torture on the arrested call for immediate action to stop these blatant violations of human rights.

"As a group of scholars affiliated with universities and other educational institutions around the world, we write to express our grave concern about the brutal killing and injuring of students and others taking part in public protests, which not only violates the fundamental right to protest in a democracy but also makes a mockery of the right to life guaranteed under Article 32 of Constitution of Bangladesh," they said in the open letter.

Indian writer Amitav Ghosh put the letter up on his X account yesterday, saying they are signing the letter in view of the fact that the government appears to be paying no heed to the various appeals against continuing repression, including the strong appeal made by the UN

RECENT VIOLENCE

Two more injured die

Death toll now 162

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Two people, who were injured during the recent clashes between agitators and law enforcers, have died.

Yeamin Chowdhury, a 19-year-old garment worker, died in Dhaka Medical College Hospital and Abdul Majeed, 20-year-old transport worker, died at Chattogram Medical College Hospital (CMCH).

With their deaths, at least 162 lives have been lost in the violence since July 16.

Yeamin, of Kishoreganj, who sustained bullet wounds in the capital's Badda on July 19, died around 11:00am yesterday at the DMCH, according to hospital records.

Majeed, who suffered shotgun pellet injuries during clashes related to the quota reform protests in Chandpur district, died on Thursday noon at the CMCH, confirmed the hospital's Director Brigadier General Taslim Uddin to The Daily Star.

Majeed of Khagrachhari was shot on July 18. He had been undergoing treatment at the Intensive Care of Unit of the CMCH since July 20.

Mobile internet may be restored by tomorrow

Says Palak

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Government officials and mobile network operators will meet today to discuss restoring mobile internet, which has been switched off by the government for almost 10 days now.

"After discussing with the operators, we are trying to reopen the mobile 4G network by tomorrow [Sunday] or the day after," said Zunaid Ahmed Palak, the state minister for telecom and ICT, yesterday.

The government can resume mobile internet within hours if it wants, according to industry insiders who spoke to The Daily Star on the condition of anonymity due to the sensitivity of the matter.

The telecom sector has suffered physical damage amounting to Tk 500 crore and an additional Tk 500 crore in lost revenue due to the ongoing unrest, Palak said.

He was delivering a speech during the inauguration of the 'Trees for Peace' programme, in which 100,000 tree saplings will be planted to celebrate the birthday of Sajeeb Wazed, information and communication technology affairs adviser to the Prime Minister.

"The government hasn't shut down the internet. The shutdown was due to the optical fibre cable connecting Dhaka-Chattogram being torched by miscreants and fire that made the data centres non-operational," he added.

CASES AFTER VIOLENCE

Over 2 lakh accused in Dhaka city

EMRUL HASAN BAPPI and TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

Over 2.13 lakh people, most of them unnamed, are accused in around 200 cases filed with police stations in the capital over the recent violence centring the quota reform movement.

Almost all the cases were filed by police, and in at least 16 of them, between 5,000 and 10,000 people have been accused, records show.

Law enforcers have arrested over 2,500 people, including political leaders, activists and students, in the last 12 days in different parts of the city, according to the court documents.

However, the actual numbers of cases and arrests could be much higher and are likely to rise further as law enforcers continue to raid different neighbourhoods in the capital.

The country witnessed violence on an unprecedented scale over the last week. The peaceful demonstrations turned deadly on July 15 when Chhatra League attacked the protesting students on different university campuses.

In the following days, violence escalated in Dhaka and elsewhere, leaving at least 162 dead as per The Daily Star data. However, the death toll from the violence between agitators, law enforcers, Border Guard Bangladesh members, and ruling party activists, could be much higher as this newspaper could not reach many hospitals, where dozens of critically injured patients were taken.

- 229 cases filed so far in Dhaka city alone
- 2.13 lakh accused in 178 cases
- Most of the accused are unnamed
- 2,506 arrestees produced before court

Also, many families reportedly took the bodies of their loved ones from the scene, and this newspaper could not contact those families.

The Daily Star's count of the victims is based solely on hospital and police sources.

According to Prothom Alo, at least 210 people were confirmed dead as of yesterday.

The government is trying to bring the situation under its control by imposing night-time curfews, deploying army across the country, and carrying out raids.

Meanwhile, rights activists, family members of those arrested or injured, and political parties are decrying law enforcers' high-handedness and misuse of power. The government maintains that the cases are based on specific evidence.

CASES FILED IN CAPITAL

Dhaka Metropolitan Police filed 229 cases with 50 police stations as of yesterday.

This newspaper has so far been able to get documents related to 178 cases filed since July 17. The number of accused in these cases is 2,13,834. Of them, only 1,310 were named.

It is not known how many people are accused in the remaining 51 cases.

The unnamed accused leaves room for the law enforcers to arrest anyone they want.

Police had not mentioned any name or number of accused in 60 cases, and in at least two, 10,000 unnamed people were accused.

One of the two cases was filed with Badda Police Station on July 18 over violence near Brac University in Merul Badda area.

The other one was filed with Lalbagh Police Station on July 21 over violence in Azimpur. The accused are unnamed BNP-Jamaat activists.

The Metro rail authorities filed a case against 9,000 unnamed people in connection with vandalism at Mirpur-10 metro station on July 19.

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday vowed to bring those responsible for the recent violence during the quota reform protest to book.

"My effort will be to find those involved in these murders. They must be punished," she said.

The premier made the remarks while handing over financial assistance to the families of 34 victims, including Rangpur's Begum Rokeya University student Abu Sayeed, who lost their lives in the violence, at the Gono Bhaban.

Hasina, also chief of the ruling Awami League, sought help of people in identifying the perpetrators. "I need [your] help too. If you know anything, please tell us."

From 'DB office', 6 organisers lift protest programme

One more organiser 'picked up by DB'

Six organisers of the quota reform protest, who are in custody of the Detective Branch of police, yesterday announced the withdrawal of their protest programmes apparently from the DB office on Minto Road in the capital.

Nahid Islam, one of the key organisers, along with five other coordinators made the announcement via video message, which was distributed to media outlets from the DB office.

Nahid was seen reading out a statement last night, minutes after a photo posted by Harun or Rashid, chief of the DMP's detective branch, on Facebook that showed them having food with Harun in a room apparently at the DB office.

The Daily Star could not reach Nahid despite repeated calls to his phone.

Detention by DB unconstitutional

Say legal experts, academician

The Detective Branch's picking up of key coordinators of the quota reform protest "for the sake of security" is unconstitutional, said two legal experts and an academician.

They heavily criticised the move while talking to The Daily Star. However, a Supreme Court lawyer said such move could be made "considering the prevailing situation".

The DB picked up six coordinators of quota reform protest, including Nahid Islam and Asif Mahmud, over the last three days.

At a press briefing at the DB headquarters yesterday, its chief Harun-or-Rashid said they took the coordinators into their custody "to prevent any harm to students or the protest", reports UNB.

ZI Khan Panna, a Supreme Court lawyer, said according to the Appellate Division's guidelines in detention and remand-related cases, if anybody is detained or arrested, he or she must be informed about the reason within three hours of detention.

Their nominated lawyers and parents must be allowed to meet them and be produced before the nearby magistrate's court within 24 hours after the detention, he said.

"The law enforcers kept protesting students detained in violation of the Supreme Court guidelines and the relevant provisions of the law and constitution," said Panna, also a human rights activist.

Jyotirmoy Barua, another SC lawyer, said there are no laws in the country under which anyone can be arbitrarily picked up.

"There is no terminology for picking up someone to provide security. Picking up someone is abduction, and abduction is a criminal offence. If they [police] want to arrest anyone, they have to comply with the directives of the Supreme Court."

As he took a few steps, the 16-year-old saw a group of protesters rushing inside the colony and scatter.

Puzzled, Khalid stood there for a few moments in his attempt to figure out what was going on.

But police personnel appeared out of nowhere and started firing indiscriminately.

Khalid along with three to four others was shot. Khalid died instantly. His body had at least 70 shotgun pellet wounds in the tummy and chest.

Govt puts death toll at 147 so far

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

At least 147 people have so far lost their lives in the recent violence over the quota reform protests, said Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan.

The victims include students, people from various professions, police personnel, Awami League leaders and activists, said the home minister during a press meet at the secretariat while revealing the first official death toll.

"We have a list of those who lost their lives in the violence. Our investigation is on. If we get news of one or two more, we will include them [in the list]," said Asaduzzaman Khan.

The home minister said they are putting the death toll forward to quash any confusion.

According to The Daily Star database, at least 162 lives have been lost in the violence since July 16.

However, the overall death toll from the violence between agitators, law enforcers, Border Guard Bangladesh members, and ruling party activists, could be much higher as The Daily Star could not reach many hospitals, where dozens of critically injured patients were taken.

Also, many families reportedly collected the bodies of their loved ones from the scene, and this newspaper could not contact those families.

Dhaka eateries crying out for customers

SUKANTA HALDER

Eateries in Dhaka are seeing a substantial drop in takings because of the ongoing unrest and the nationwide curfew.

After a four-day closure, the 25,000-odd eateries in Dhaka started to reopen their shutters and kitchens with the relaxation of the curfew from July 24 and yet, the turnout of customers remains sparse.

Some operators said they are seeing just 10 percent of their usual turnout.

"There is still panic among people -- this is why customer footfall has plummeted," said Shamim Islam Mridha, manager of Yellow Knife Restaurant at the Zoo Road in the capital's Mirpur-1.

The restaurant was empty when the correspondent walked in at 12:20 pm yesterday. Usually, the restaurant has 7 to 10 tables occupied at this hour of the day.

In the same area, an official of a chain restaurant on condition of anonymity said they reopened the outlet on July 25. But receipts have been one-fourth their usual.

Over at Satmasjid Road in Dhanmondi, KOI Thé, an outlet serving bubble tea, had only two customers in the afternoon, when it is usually packed with university students.

Criminals to be tried following due process

Foreign ministry assures int'l community; says innocents won't face harassment

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The government has assured the international community that law enforcement agencies will bring individuals responsible for the recent violence to justice using evidence, without any form of reprisal or harassment against protesting students or innocent civilians.

The law enforcement agencies have been given clear instructions to this end, said the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MoFA) in a statement yesterday.

The government is ensuring that due process is followed in guaranteeing accountability and justice for reported terrorist acts and that law enforcement agencies avoid excessive use of force under any circumstances, it stated.

The statement comes after the United Nations (UN), western countries, and global rights bodies condemned the recent violence, encouraged a durable solution to the present crisis, and stressed due process in the justice system and upholding fundamental human rights.

As per the home ministry, the death toll in last week's violence reached 147, while according to independent media reports, it was close to 200.

55 police officers get postings, transfers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

In a major move, the government yesterday transferred and posted 55 police officers including two additional Inspector Generals of Police (additional IGP) and five Additional Deputy Inspector Generals (Additional DIG).

The list also includes 48 officers of the rank of Superintendent of Police (SP).

These transfers and postings were announced through four separate circulars by the Public Security Division of the Ministry of Home Affairs.

All of these officials got the promotion to supernumerary (officials who hold the same position and perform the same duties after their elevation) a year back. And now, they finally got the regular posting, according to officials of the Police Headquarters.

Among the two additional IGPs, Deputy Inspector General of Police Telecom (promoted to the post of Supernumerary Additional IGP) AKM Shahidur Rahman has been posted as the Additional IGP in the PHQ, and Another case was filed against 8,000, two cases against 7,000, seven against 6,000, and three against 5,000.

Most of the accused face charges of gathering illegally, rioting, assaulting law enforcers, and damaging properties.

ARRESTS IN DHAKA

Police produced 2,506, including 98 yesterday, before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court in at least 158 cases between July 17 and July 28.

In 15 cases filed with Jatrabari Police Station, 335 people were arrested. The area saw continuous violence for almost a week starting on July 17.

Mirpur police arrested 168 people under 10 cases while Uttara (east) arrested 164 under 10 cases, Paltan police arrested 145 under eight cases, and Badda police arrested 130 people under four cases.

Mirpur, Uttara, Badda and Paltan areas too witnessed fierce clashes.

Five cases were filed over killing policemen, a student and a police informant. One was filed under Cyber Security Act.

"The police could have shot my son in the leg. If they did so, he would have lived, even as a cripple. My son was intentionally killed by police," Kamrul Hasan told The Daily Star as tears rolled down his cheeks.

He said as the situation, stemming from the quota protest, was deteriorating, he had asked his son not to go outside.

Khalid would only go out for prayers, he said.

"My son was a threat to no one. He was not involved in the protest. The police unjustly shot my innocent son," said Kamrul, a teacher at a madrasa in Lalbagh.

A witness, who also suffered shotgun pellet injuries close to his eye, said, "Everything happened so fast that we could not fathom what was going on. We were getting out of the colony when the protesters ran inside. Before we could understand anything, a policeman pointed his gun at us and fired."

Some people later took Khalid and him to the Dhaka Medical College Hospital, he said, wishing anonymity fearing reprisal.

Hearing the news, Kamrul went to the DMCH. "I saw my son lying on a bed and blood oozing out of his mouth and nose. My innocent son was dead."

The family's ordeal didn't end there. He said they faced immense difficulties in getting Khalid's body from the hospital morgue.

"At 2:30am on July 20, I went to the Lalbagh Police Station for clearance, without which the hospital authorities would not release the body. The police questioned me and told me to come back at 9:00am," Kamrul told The Daily Star.

"I went again but they did not cooperate. Two days later, they finally gave the clearance, and I received my son's body. During this time, I visited the police station four to five times a day."

Around 4:30pm on July 21, Kamrul received his son's body. Khalid was buried at their family graveyard in Bhadashon village in Faridpur's Bhanga.

Kamrul said, "We had a hope that Khalid [his eldest son] would become a lawyer. Our family is poor, and he wanted to contribute tot he family. Who will I ask for justice now?"

Khalid's mother gave to this correspondent just one line: "They did not let my son live."

Those involved in the killings

She emphasised that the government would not allow anyone to jeopardise the future of Bangladesh and its people. "We will not allow anyone to play with the fate of Bangladesh, so I need all-out cooperation and assistance from you."

Hasina expressed her determination to prevent such criminal activities from recurring in the country. "I don't know how to console you. But I can understand your pain," she said, addressing the grieving families.

Questioning the motives of the attackers, she asked, "What was the fault of general public? Why they were killed and had to face immense suffering? Killing people to topple the government? How it is possible?"

While trying to console the victims' families, Hasina shared her own losses. "... I am like you: an orphan who has lost parents and brothers. I understand your pain. I will be by your side."

Condemning the brutality of the attacks, she remarked, "Burning down everything is never acceptable. It is unthinkably brutal to hang a person after killing them. How can a Muslim hang the body of another Muslim? Those who are involved in these crimes will surely face trial."

She stressed the need for bringing the culprits to book to ensure the safety of the people. "People cannot be protected unless they are tried."

She urged the victims' families to remain patient. "I am with you as long as I live."

PM VISITS BSMMU, POLICE HOSPITALS

Later in the day, Hasina visited Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical University (BSMMU) and Central Police hospitals to see those who were injured in the violence.

She went to the Central Police Hospital around 5:00pm after visiting BSMMU. She enquired about the health of those undergoing treatment there.

The premier gave necessary instructions to the hospital authorities to ensure their proper treatment.

During her visit to BSMMU in Shahbagh, VC Prof Deen Mohd Noorul Huq and BSMMU Hospital Director Brig Gen Md Rezaur Rahman briefed the prime minister on the treatment measures taken for the injured.

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan and Inspector General of Police Chowdhury Abdullah Al Mamun were among the officials present during her visit to the Central Police Hospital in Rajarbagh.

As many as 39 police members are now undergoing treatment at the Central Police Hospital. Three police personnel were killed, and 1,131 others injured in the mayhem.

Hasina also visited Dhaka Medical College Hospital on Friday and the National Institute of Traumatology & Orthopaedic Rehabilitation on Saturday to see the victims of the violence.

reform movement and the situation that arose in its wake. Moreover, there were many incidents of violence, including torching of government buildings. We strongly condemn all these untoward incidents and demand speedy justice through fair investigation," said the statement.

"Our main demand was logical quota reform which has already been fulfilled by the government. Now we strongly urge the government to open educational institutions to ensure a fair environment for education. In the interest of all, we are withdrawing our programmes right now," he said.

On Friday night, Nahid, Asif Mahmud, and Abu Baker Majumder -- three key organisers of the quota reform movement -- were picked up by the DB from a city hospital, where Nahid and Asif were receiving treatment.

The DB on Saturday took two more protest organisers -- Sarjis Alam and Hasnat Abdullah -- into their custody, saying the move was "to ensure their security and to get information about recent incidents".

Protest organiser Nusrat Tabassum, a student of political science at Dhaka University, was picked up from her cousin's home in Mirpur early yesterday.

She was seen in the photo posted by Harun and also alongside Nahid in the video message.

Meanwhile, rejecting the statement of the six coordinators, Abdul Kader, another coordinator of Quota reform protest, announced protest rallies across the country today.

Kader via WhatsApp said he strongly condemns the scripted statement of the coordinators made "at the DB office at gunpoint".

Arif

Nusrat

He said they were determined and will remain firm on their demands.

In the meantime, a seventh organiser was also picked up allegedly by DB officers.

Some eight to 10 men in plain clothes, identifying themselves as DB officials, picked up protest organiser Arif Sohel, a student of international relations at Jahangirnagar University, from his home near the campus around 4:00am, said Arif's younger sister Umme Khair Hridi.

"At 3:50am, the group of DB men gathered in front of the house and asked us to open the gate. When my father wanted to know their identities, they said they were DB police and showed their IDs. As we didn't want to open the gate, they threatened to break the gate down. Later we opened it, and they entered and took everyone's phones," Hridi told our Savar correspondent.

"They took some pictures from Arif's computer and then took Arif and my elder brother. They said they would take them to the Ashulia Police Station.

"Later, my elder brother was released in Genda area. But we have not been able to find Arif," she said.

Asked, Riaz Uddin Ahmed Biplab, officer-in-charge of Dhaka district North DB Police, told The Daily Star that no JU leader of quota reform protest was picked up.

Besides, men in plain clothes posing as detectives also detained Asif Mahtab, a former teacher of BRAC University, at his Uttara home early yesterday, his family said.

Shahabur Rahman, father of Asif, went to the DB office on Minto Road yesterday to know the whereabouts of his son.

He said his son was picked up from their Uttara home by a group of people identifying themselves as DB officials early yesterday.

"I want to know where he is. I want to know whether he is still alive," he said.

Detention by DB unconstitutional

"Only police can arrest someone who is specifically accused in any case or has a warrant or anyone who is a deserter from any force, or is on the run in any case, or an accused of any criminal charges. Except for police, no force has the legal jurisdiction to arrest anyone in any way," he said.

He said there is no law to keep anyone confined to a jail for over 24 hours.

In 2009, the High Court said section 54 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is contradictory to fundamental rights and amended it with 15 directives, mentioning that if police want to arrest anyone on suspicion, they must explain the reason in writing, said the legal expert.

"When police go for any arrest, they will tell the family members from which police station they have come and ask them if they want to talk to any lawyers," Jyotirmoy said.

Plainclothes police now pick up anyone and subsequently deny family members from any contact with them, he added.

"We never heard that people were picked up to provide them with security. This is a kind of fallacy. This is a criminal offence."

Veteran SC lawyer and former law minister Shafique Ahmed said the reasons behind such confinement must be known specifically and the protesters could go to the High Court for necessary remedy if they are not satisfied with the reason.

However, senior SC lawyer Khurshid Alam Khan said the protesters have reportedly been taken into safe custody amid the prevailing situation, which is not illegal or unconstitutional.

"They were not detained or arrested in any case and therefore, there is no need to produce them before any magistrate," he said.

Rushad Faridi, an assistant professor of Dhaka University's economics department, found the DB's rationale for picking them up ridiculous.

"One, who needs security, and his family will decide where he or she will stay for their safety. No force can decide it. What type of security is it to pick up someone who is undergoing treatment at a hospital without the permission of the person and their family?"

"They [government] want to create a reign of terror. It indicates that the authorities will no longer tolerate any such protest in future."

Dhaka eateries crying out for customers

by 90 percent since it reopened on July 24, said Mohammad Rashedul Islam, team leader of the branch, which was shut from July 18 to July 23.

"A number of our food items have expired due to the six-day closure. As a result, we incurred losses," he added.

Bipu Chowdhury, chief executive officer of Nawabi Voj, which runs four branches in the capital, said the recent unrest could not come at a worse time.

"We have just returned to business after the fire incident on Bailey Road. Business was almost back to normal. Once again, I am counting a big loss," he said.

Customer turnout at Nawabi Voj's four branches started declining on July 15, when the students' quota reform movement picked up pace. The company had to keep its restaurants shut from July 19 to July 25.

After reopening, the chain is seeing just 30 percent of its usual turnout.

"It appears that there is a kind of fear among people," Chowdhury said.

The internet blackout for five days has also robbed them of online sales as the food delivery platforms were off-grid.

Parcel delivery has started by the end of last week as broadband internet service resumed, but business has not been good, he added.

After opening the restaurant on July 25, customer turnout is gradually increasing but it was far from normal, said Sabikoon Nahar, manager of the Saudi Arabian fast food chain Herfy.

Imran Hassan, secretary general of the Bangladesh Restaurant Owners' Association (BROA), demanded the government ensure low-cost loans to help restaurant owners recoup losses and stay afloat.

This is the second big hit to the eateries in Dhaka in 2024 after the government agencies indiscriminately shut down establishments on health and safety grounds following a fire incident in the capital's Bailey Road in February that caused the loss of 46 lives.

The hit to the restaurant business also comes when establishments are struggling with the persistently high inflation for the best part of two years.

Hassan urged the authorities to extend the curfew relaxation period so that the eateries can remain open for longer.

Currently, Bangladesh has 4.81 lakh restaurants, employing 30 lakh people. Overall, two crore people are reliant on the sector, directly and indirectly, according to the BROA.

of America and we are so proud and excited for them. Let's go USA."

And Biles did not disappoint as she made a stunning return to Olympic competition, powering through left calf pain to get her multiple-medal bid off to a rousing start.

The US superstar, aiming to add to the four gold medals she won in Rio de Janeiro in 2016, tweaked her left calf warming up for her second apparatus, the floor exercise.

It didn't stop her from soaring through her signature Yurchenko double pike vault -- now known as the Biles II -- which even with a big step back on landing earned a 9.4 for execution for a massive total of 15.800 points.

She had another step back landing her second vault, but laughed as she crawled back towards her teammates on her hands and knees.

That was all it took for Biles's coach Cecile Landi to know that for Biles "It's on. It's OK."

Landi, who said Biles aggravated a minor injury she'd been dealing with for a couple of weeks, said there was never any question the superstar gymnast would not continue.

"Never in her mind, no, no. Just no," Landi said, adding that she was also confident Biles would be ready to go for the team final on Tuesday and the individual events to follow.

Landi said Biles was already feeling better by the time she closed out her day by sticking the landing on her uneven bars routine -- receiving another huge ovation and beaming as she shared a dance with teammate Jordan Chiles.

With two of the five qualifying sessions complete Biles topped the all-around standings with 59.566 points.

"It was pretty amazing, 59.5," Landi said. "Not perfect, so she still can improve ... just really good."

Govt puts death toll at 147 so far

The Daily Star's count of the victims is based solely on hospital and police sources.

According to the Prothom Alo, at least 210 people were confirmed dead as of yesterday.

In response to a query, Asaduzzaman stated that the police exhibited maximum restraint and only resorted to using firearms when absolutely necessary.

Asked about the mass arrests over the attacks on government establishments during the violence, he said that "no innocent person" was being arrested.

"The accused are being arrested based on video evidence. We will definitely identify those responsible and bring them to book. We will not spare anyone," he said.

Asked about arrests of children in block raids, the minister, "Did children take to the street for violence? There is information about using teen gangs in exchange for money in this work (violence)," he said.

Our society needs radical change: HC

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday said a radical change needs to be brought to the society as unexpected incidents are taking place.

"State properties are being damaged mindlessly. A policeman was killed and kept hanging. Can you imagine how brutal it is? On the other hand, police reportedly did not hesitate to shoot a person even when he was dying. The people of this country do not respect the police like that in the past."

"Our teachers are divided on party lines. Teachers motivate students while politicians incite... Who will they learn from? We have to make drastic changes in our society," said the HC bench of Justice KM Kamrul Kader and Justice Khizir Hayat Lizu.

The court made the comments while hearing a petition filed by Supreme Court lawyer JR Khan

Jamaat-Shibir intruded into quota protests

PM tells Spanish envoy

UNB, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said "Jamaat-Shibir terrorists" initially kept a low profile within the quota reform protests and later emerged on the frontlines dangerously.

She made the remarks during a meeting with Spanish Ambassador to Bangladesh Gabriel Maria Sistiaga Ochoa de Chinchetru at Gono Bhaban.

PM's Press Secretary M Nayeemul Islam Khan briefed reporters after the meeting.

The prime minister accused them of attacking structures symbolising the government's achievements.

"All of our development symbols, which gave comfort and convenience to the masses, became their targets of destruction," she said.

Regarding the army's role in handling the situation, Hasina praised their patience and restraint.

She also mentioned that 21 Awami League members were killed in the unrest. Irrespective of party affiliation, the PM said she is helping all who

More than just NUMBERS

A 14-year-old boy shot and killed in Savar. A 22-year-old Chittagong University student died from bullet wounds at DMCH. A 27-year-old car driver fatally shot in Dhaka. At least 162 lives (the actual number could be much higher) were lost when law enforcers opened fire on protesters during the recent unrest. But these victims are not just statistics; they are sons, husbands, and friends. In this report, we try to know the stories of three such names among these tragic numbers.

How will I raise our son alone?

ANWARUL HAIDER and NILIMA JAHAN

The air in the home of 27-year-old private car driver Mamun Hossain is thick with grief following his tragic death on July 19.

He left behind his grieving parents, his wife Sultana Rahman, and their three-and-a-half-year-old son Musab Hasan.

Mamun, from Jalial village in Noakhali's Binodpur, was fatally shot on the Mohakhali flyover while heading back to his home from his aunt's residence in Shaheenbag, Dhaka.

The bullet hit his back and pierced through his stomach, leaving him unconscious and bleeding profusely.

Locals rushed him to a nearby hospital, which then referred him to Dhaka Medical College Hospital.

As DMCH was filled to the brim with other bullet-hit patients, they had to take him to another hospital in Mohakhali. He died around 3:30am the next day.

Mamun's father, Abdul Mateen, is a driver by profession, as are three of his four sons, who live in the Mohakhali area of the capital.

"My son was innocent, a hardworking man trying to support his family. He was walking home because he couldn't find any transport on the road. But he was shot down like an animal. We demand justice and support for his son's future."

Says father of Saad who was killed in Savar

ZAHANGIR SHAH, Manikganj

It was around 6:30pm on July 20 when 14-year old Saad Mahmud was fatally shot during a clash between the law enforcers and quota reform protesters.

Saad was playing with his cousin on the roof of a rented house in the Shahibagh area in Savar.

From the rooftop, he noticed smoke on nearby Chapain Road.

Driven by curiosity, he went to the New Market side of the road, where he was caught in police firing and sustained serious injuries, as per witnesses.

He succumbed to his wounds on the way to Enam Medical College Hospital.

With tears in his eyes, Saad's father, Bahadur Khan, recalled the incident at their village home in Manikganj's Singair yesterday afternoon.

"No one's son should die from police firing like mine. I will never get my child back," he said, tears streaming down his face.

Originally from Dhalla Khanpara village in Singair upazila, Manikganj, Bahadur had moved to Savar for his children's education.

Dreams dashed by a bullet

CU student Hridoy dies of bullet wounds at DMCH

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, Patuakhali

Hridoy Chandra Taruya, a 22-year-old student from Chittagong University, dreamed of becoming a BCS cadre after completing his education.

He joined the recent protests with hopes of eradicating what he has perceived as the discriminatory quota system in the civil service entrance exam.

However, Hridoy's life was tragically cut short on July 18 after a bullet pierced through his back during clashes between protesters, law enforcers, and Chhatra League.

He was taken to Chittagong Medical College Hospital first, then to a local private hospital and finally to Dhaka Medical College Hospital after his condition kept deteriorating.

Then, he succumbed to his injuries at DMCH on July 23, five days after being shot during the protest in Chattogram.

His untimely death has devastated his family, who had pinned their hopes on him leading the family after securing a good job.

On Tuesday night, July 26, Hridoy's body was cremated at his village in Patuakhali.

There was conspiracy to occupy Gono Bhaban

Says Quader

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Miscreants had a plan to occupy the Gono Bhaban like protesters occupied the Sri Lankan prime minister's office in 2022, said Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday.

However, the curfew announcement derailed their plan, he added.

Quader made the remarks while addressing a programme held at the Dhaka district Awami League office in Tejgaon.

He also said the government needed to verify whether certain individuals, including Nobel Laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus, had any connection with the quota reform protests and the recent violence.

Who can provide more security than the family?

Questions Nahid's mother

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Momtaz Nahar, mother of Nahid Islam, one of the key coordinators of quota reform protests, yesterday questioned the move by authorities of picking up the organisers one by one on the grounds of "providing security".

"Who can provide more security than the family?" she said replying to a query of a journalist at Minto Road when Nahid's family went to the DB office to see him. However, they were not allowed to meet him, she said.

A day before, detectives picked up three organisers, including Nahid, from a city hospital and yesterday DB took more two organisers into their custody "to ensure their security".

"We came [here] to meet my son. But we were not allowed. DB did not allow us to enter the office. Not only us, even Nahid's teachers were not allowed to meet him. I want to see my son. He must be returned to me safely," Nahid's mother said.

"I have not been able to contact Nahid since he was picked up. He was picked up for a second time... This time from a hospital. Nahid's physical condition is not good. I want the release of all [quota protest coordinators], who have been detained, including my child," Momtaz said.

Ensure justice for all deaths

Demands Sector Commanders Forum

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Sector Commanders Forum, Liberation War '71 yesterday demanded justice for every murder and damage to government properties through an acceptable investigation.

In a statement, they called for the reopening of all educational institutions as soon as possible.

They also urged the students to provide all-out support to the government to ensure normalcy at educational institutions, as the government has already met their original demand.

They said the damaged government properties do not belong to any party or government; rather, they are the property of the country's people.

Students' protest for quota reform has caused major changes in the country, which was spontaneous and, at the same time, a wake-up call for the future, the statement says.

"A huge number of people, including freedom fighters, realised the fairness of the movement. But the most unfortunate thing is that the movement turned violent due to the involvement of anti-government groups, especially anti-Liberation War people," said the statement.

"This is why the movement moved away from its real character and resorted to serious violence, which was very unfortunate," it added.

On one side, a large number of people died and got injured, and on the other side, huge government properties have been damaged, it said.

"It should be remembered that the freedom fighters did not sacrifice their lives for any quota or their own interests. The freedom fighters are the architects of the national flags that protesters carried," the statement added.

"Freedom fighters fought against Pakistani soldiers and their collaborators. So, the situation became complicated when religious fundamentalist groups got involved in the movement," it also said.

The statement was signed by Sector Commanders Forum's Executive President Md Nurul Alam, Vice Presidents M Hamid and AKM Sahidul Haq, Secretary General Harun Habib, Joint Secretary General Abdul Mabud, Organising Secretary Ansar Ali Khan, alongside freedom fighters Shahjahan Mridha Benu, Dr Amzad Hossain, and Maj Gen (retd) Mohammad Ali Shikdar.

Addressing the demands of the quota reform protesters, she pointed out that the quota system was not in effect at the height of the protests due to a Supreme Court status quo. "What would be the logical basis of their demand at that time?" she questioned.

The prime minister assured that the government is taking effective steps to support the families of those killed and injured, including financial assistance and free medical treatment.

Ambassador Chinchetru appreciated the military deployment and curfew imposed to maintain peace and prosperity. "Everything is gradually improving now," he noted, according to PM's press secretary.

Boatmen in Barishal are counting losses as their engine-driven trawlers remain anchored on the bank of the Kirtankhola river amid the ongoing curfew. However, with the curfew being relaxed for longer hours, things are slowly returning to normal. The photo was taken yesterday.

Soaring veggie prices leave people in a pickle

MINTU DESHWARA, Moulvibazar

Prices of vegetables have surged sharply over the past one week in markets across Moulvibazar due to a shortage of vehicles for transporting the produce amid the ongoing nationwide curfew, as well as potential price manipulation by traders.

For instance, price of potato has gone up by Tk 60-65 per kilogramme from around Tk 50 per kg last week.

Visiting the Moulvibazar TCB market and Paschimbazar kitchen market yesterday, this correspondent observed that even though different vegetables are in adequate supply, the prices are significantly higher compared to the previous week.

At the markets, the prices per kg for vegetables were as follows: green chilli Tk 400-450, carrot Tk 150-180, tomato Tk 180-200, brinjal Tk 80-100, potato Tk 100-120, coriander Tk 200-300, bitter gourd Tk 100-150, cucumber Tk 100-120, taro roots Tk 100-120, and yard bean Tk 120-140.

Also, gourds were being sold at Tk 100-120 each, and pumpkin at Tk 80-100 per kg.

"After eight days of unrest and curfew, I returned to work yesterday and earned Tk 700. Earlier, I had to borrow money to put food on the plate for my family. Now with this meager Tk 700, do I pay back the loan or buy vegetables? How are we, marginalied people, going to survive if the scenario continues like this?" said Kutub Uddin, 45, a mason from Chandni-Ghat area.

Sohodeb Biswas, a shopper, alleged that traders are hiking prices to take advantage of the ongoing situation in the country, and called for intervention from the authorities concerned.

"We are being compelled to either purchase vegetables at the inflated prices, or return home empty handed," said Shamsul Haque, another shopper.

Traders like Sajjadul Hasan and Anwar Hossain cited logistical issues, such as a lack of vehicles, and prevailing market conditions as reasons for the high prices.

Contacted, Md Abdul Haque, additional deputy commissioner of Moulvibazar, said the administration will launch market monitoring drives to ensure price stability and prevent unjustified hike.

Bamboo fish traps in high demand

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Faridpur

Nearly 50 families at Bokali village in Faridpur Sadar upazila have been earning their livelihood by making "polo", a bamboo-made traditional fishing traps, for years.

Usually, the demand for bamboo-made traps peaks during monsoon.

During a recent visit to Bokali, a village locally known as Pologram, which is located 6 kilometres from Faridpur town, this correspondent saw people from different age groups, including children, were busy making polos with slits on their courtyards.

Of them, some were seen slicing bamboo, some were peeling those while others were engaged in making polos of different sizes.

Crafted with locally sourced bamboo, this trap is an ingenious and sustainable tool used in traditional fishing practice.

Unlike fishing nets which catch fish indiscriminately, the "polo" allows small and juvenile fish to escape its perforations, while leaving only larger, matured fish to be caught inside the trap. As such, it does not adversely affect fish populations in the waterbodies.

One of the elderly residents of the village Sheikh Asgor said, "My father Seikh Lalu was one of the pioneers in the village, who took polo making as profession."

Sheikh Idris makes fishing tools with bamboo strips at his Bokali village home in Faridpur Sadar upazila.

"Earlier, I used to pull rickshaw-van. But I started making polo nearly 25 years ago for a better living as I was struggling to maintain my family with the poor income," he added.

Homamaker Rabeya Khatun said, "I came to this village about 45 years ago and since then I have been witnessing that most of the villagers are involved in polo making."

"Gradually, I learnt the method from my mother-in-law and now I am earning Tk 10,000 to Tk 12,000 by selling polo each month," Rabeya said.

Another polo artisan, Sheikh Habi of the village said, "You will hardly find anyone at the village who is not involved in this job."

Jasim Sheikh, a polo vendor at Faridpur town, said he has been buying polos from Bokali village for the last five years as the quality of the item is very good.

"I buy at least 800 to 1,000 pieces of the traditional fishing tool from the village every month," Jasim said.

Garda Union Parishad Chairman MR Haque said polo making has become a heritage of Bokali village and locals feel proud as people from different areas visit the village to buy polos.

The family's only son, Hridoy, leaves behind his father Ratan Chandra Tarua, mother Archana Rani, and elder sister Mitu Rani.

"My son was studying very hard. I had many dreams about him. After completing his education, he was supposed to get a good job and take care of our family. But that dream ended with one shot. All hope was burned to ashes in the cremation fire," said his father Ratan.

Hridoy's mother, Archana Rani, devastated by the news, demanded justice and capital punishment for her son's killers.

"Why and who killed my son? I want proper justice for this killing."

Friends described Hridoy as a talented student, having achieved GPA-5 in both secondary and higher secondary examinations. He was a third-year student of History at Chittagong University.

His sister, Mitu Rani, recalled Hridoy's last visit home before Pahela Baishakh.

"He asked our parents to trust him and promised to support us with a good job. We had many dreams about my only brother, but he is gone," said Mitu.

Meanwhile, Sultana, his wife, said, "Mamun called to check on us that afternoon and said he would call back again. I never imagined those would be his last words. How will I raise our son alone?" she asked, recalling the last conversation with her husband.

Fatema Begum, Mamun's mother, is equally grief-stricken. "Why was my innocent son killed? Who will take responsibility of my grandson?" she cried.

"Looking at this little boy breaks my heart. Who will he call father now?"

An expatriate in South Africa, he rented a house in Shahibagh.

Saad was the only son among three children. His eldest daughter, Taslima Khanam Nazneen, 20, is a second-year honors student in the Pharmacy Department at Savar's Gonoshasthaya University.

His youngest daughter, Afroza Khanam Nusrat, 8, and Saad were both students at Jabale Noor Dakhil Madrasa in Shahibagh.

When entering their village home around 1:00pm yesterday, Saad's father was seen sitting on a chair in the yard. Saad's grandfather, Amjad Hossain Khan, 85, a former president of the upazila Krishak League, sat next to him.

Bahadur recounted the tragic events, saying, "I went to the road without seeing my son on the rooftop. I saw his favourite shoes on the road and rushed to the hospital, where I found him dead. There was a large bullet hole in his left thigh. My son had committed no crime. Why did the police shoot my child, he was only 14?"

Saad's mother, Halima Akhter, fell ill from grief and could not speak. She remained silent and bedridden.

Relatives reported that Saad's body was brought to their village home that day. He was buried in the central cemetery in Dhalla village the following morning.

Benazir, family amassed illegal assets worth Tk 43.46cr

Says ACC report to HC

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Corruption Commission yesterday submitted a preliminary inquiry report to the High Court, saying former IGP Benazir Ahmed, his wife, and two daughters amassed properties worth Tk 43.46 crore beyond known sources of income and had unusual and suspicious bank transactions.

"From records and information received so far, Benazir Ahmed has movable and immovable assets worth Tk 9.25 crore, his wife Jissan Mirza Tk 21.34 crore, their eldest daughter Farheen Rishta Binte Benazir Tk 8.11 crore, and their second daughter Tahseen Raisa Binte Tk 4.76 crore worth of assets," the report said.

The value of land, houses, flats registered, and other assets have been determined by the government.

Apart from the information on the assets obtained in the initial probe, there is a possibility of having more movable and immovable assets in their names at home and abroad, the ACC report said.

Advocate Khurshid Alam Khan placed the preliminary report before the HC bench of Justice Md Nazrul Islam Talukder and Justice Kazi Ebadoth Hossain during the hearing of a writ petition.

The bench may pass an order on this matter today, Khurshid Alam Khan told The Daily Star yesterday.

Following a writ petition filed by Supreme Court lawyer Md Salahuddin Reagan, the HC bench on April 23 directed the ACC to submit a progress report on the inquiry into reported allegations of corruption against Benazir Ahmed.

3 workers missing after boat capsizes

UNB, Gaibandha

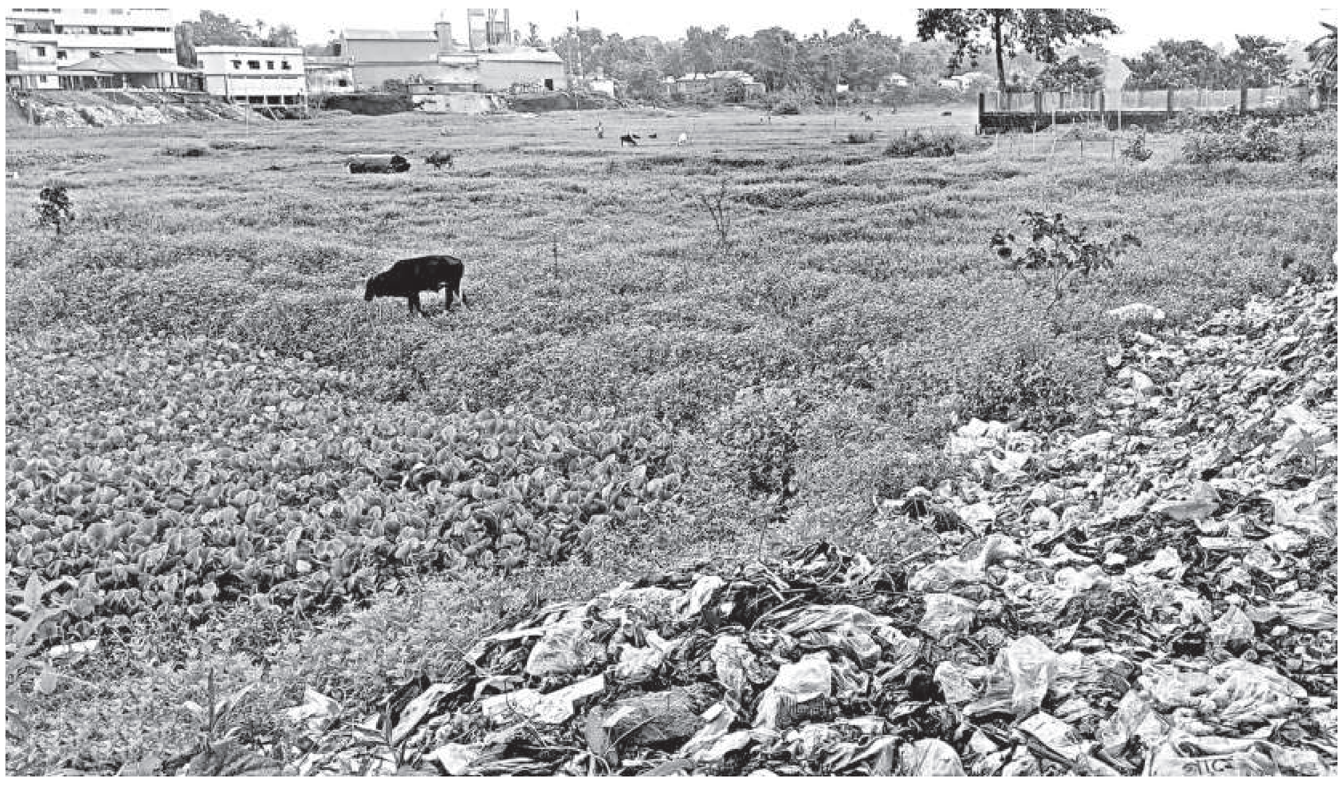
Three workers -- who went missing in the Teesta river after a boat capsized in Gaibandha's Sundarganj on Saturday afternoon -- were not found as of yesterday morning.

Workers Atwar, Raju and Rashid went missing while dumping cement blocks to prevent river bank erosion on Saturday afternoon.

They remained traceless despite the divers' efforts, said Sundarganj Upazila Nirbahi Officer Md Tariqul Islam.

Eleven other workers, who suffered injuries in the boat capsize incident, were admitted to Gaibandha General Hospital. District Water Development Board Executive Engineer Md Hafizur Haq said at least 30 workers were engaged in dumping blocks to prevent river erosion in the Sreepur area on Saturday afternoon, when the boat capsized.



It's almost impossible to realise this vast field is actually Kharia river. Over the past 20 years, Kharia has become a victim of encroachment and pollution. Due to indifference of the authorities concerned, the river also lost its navigability and remains filled with water hyacinths.

KHARIA RIVER IN MYMENSINGH

No let-up in grabbing, pollution in 20yrs

OUR CORRESPONDENT,
Mymensingh

There has been no step taken to save Mymensingh's Kharia river from unabated pollution and encroachment even in 20 years due to indifference of the authorities concerned.

The 25km river is a tributary of Old Brahmaputra, flowing through Phulpur upazila of the district to join Kongsho river in Netrakona, while also connecting to several large local waterbodies including Chitolia Beel, Buiddyar Beel and Kurhar Doba.

"It is frustrating to see the river, once a great source of fish as well as water for irrigation, in such a sorry state. Over the past 20 years, Kharia has become narrow due to illegal grabbing, overgrown with water hyacinths, and filled up with garbage," said ATM Robiul Karim, a local journalist.

Visiting the river recently, this correspondent observed a huge amount of garbage being dumped on the river bank adjacent to Dak Banaglow area near Amuakanda Bazar.

Locals alleged people have been dumping their household garbage, as well as waste from kitchen market on the river bank for past two decades while the municipal authorities turned a blind eye to this menace.

Butchers from Amuakanda Bazar have also been slaughtering animals on the river bank and throwing the animal waste into the river, they also alleged.

Shamu Mia, a butcher at the market, admitted the matter.

As this correspondent inquired more, he came to know that the Phulpur municipality has yet to develop a proper waste management system for its 40,000 residents in the past 23 years since it was established in 2001.

Only a few waste-bins were seen across the municipality area including one adjacent to Phulpur Upazila Health Complex, where medical wastes are being dumped daily and left in the open.

Contacted, Shashadar Sen, mayor of Phulpur municipality, said they are working to contain dumping of wastes on the river bank and into its water.

Regarding allegations of encroachment, the mayor claimed many have taken lease of the river's land from the government.

Dr Md Nazrul Islam, civil surgeon in Mymensingh, said dumping wastes into a river can have serious impact on the environment as well as public health.

Md Habibur Rahman, chairman of Phulpur upazila parishad, said the menace must be stopped immediately to save the river's ecosystem.

Contacted, ABM Ariful Islam, UNO of Phulpur upazila, said several structures from the riverbanks have been removed recently while steps are on to restore the river's natural flow.

Necessary steps would be taken soon against polluters and grabbers, he added.

MORRELGANJ TERMINAL

People suffer as tidal water inundates road

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bagerhat

Even though the situation seems normal most of the time at Morrelganj Ferry Terminal in Bagerhat, during the hours of high tide, the connecting road to the pontoon on its eastern side gets submerged by the rising water of Panguchi river.

As such, passengers and transport workers have been facing difficulties in reaching the ferry to cross the river.

Residents and vehicle drivers have called for immediate steps to elevate the connecting road to alleviate their distress.

"For two-three hours during high tide over the last four days, the connecting road to the terminal's pontoon has been getting inundated, making it difficult for vehicles to board the ferry," said Bhola Das, a pick-up driver.

Kalu Sheikh, a local, said, "Crossing the ferry has become very distressing for us. This needs to be fixed immediately."

According to Abdur Rasid, a local businessman, this is a recurring issue every monsoon but the authorities are yet to address it.

Contacted, Mohammad Farid Uddin, executive engineer of Roads and Highways Department in Bagerhat, said elevating the road will not be an effective solution as the water level of the river fluctuates across the year.

"If the connecting road is raised too high, it will create problems for vehicles and pedestrians to board the ferry during low tide. We have to consider both high and low tide scenarios to construct the connecting road and pontoon," he also said.

"However, we will take the necessary steps to alleviate people's sufferings, keeping the technical aspects into consideration," he added.

Robin, seeking its order on the government to appoint sufficient doctors in prisons.

The HC bench said, "They [doctors] are apparently getting lessons from an ancient period. As a result, they are prescribing antibiotics whenever patients go to them."

The HC directed the DGHS director general to appoint doctors to 20 vacant posts in jails out of 141 within the next one month.

Advocate Tirtha Salil Pal, a lawyer for the DG of the DGHS, told the court that doctors in prisons do not get proper training opportunities. Meanwhile, advocate Shafiqul Islam, who appeared for the inspector general of prisons, said prison doctors face problems in promotion and higher education.

Keya climbs the ranks on television

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

Within just six years of her career, small screen actress Keya Payel has become a household name. To date, she has appeared in over a hundred tele-fictions. Her on-screen chemistry with actors like Apurba, Farhan Ahmed Jovan, and Musfiq Farhan is liked by the audience.

Due to the ongoing violence created during the quota protests, many television and film shootings were halted. Three projects featuring Keya Payel were also postponed. In a conversation with The Daily Star, she shared when she will join the shoots, upcoming ventures, and more.

Due to the ongoing turmoil, shoots were halted. When are you planning to rejoin the shoots?
Three of my projects were disrupted due to the ongoing turmoil in the country. I will join the shoots from July 31, starting with Vicky Zahed's projects and another will be directed by Mohon Ahmed. Both of the shoots will take place outside Dhaka.

In your entire career, you were not seen in more than one television series, why is that?
I was featured in only one television series, Joint Family. Although I got offers for serials, I wanted to focus more on tele-fictions and telefilms only. Working in both serial and one-hour fiction gets tough, thus I prefer to choose one-hour fiction over serials.

You did not appear in OTTs either.
Not that I didn't get offers, however, till now I haven't got a role that has intrigued me. I am waiting for such a story and character – since it really matters how you present yourself on your first outing in a platform. Thus, I am waiting for the perfect opportunity for an OTT debut.

Do you wish to work on the silver screens?
Which actress doesn't? Just a few days ago, I was offered a government-funded film, but the script wasn't up to par. For now, I will keep doing what's going well for me, and look to transition when I have the chance.

You've acted opposite the best that the television industry has to offer. Do you have a favourite co-star?
Funny you should ask, I recently calculated that since I debuted in 2018, I participated in more than 50 tele-fictions with Jovan. I was also in dozens of projects with Apurba bhai, Musfiq Farhan, Yash Rohan and Khairul Basar. To be honest, I enjoyed working with all of them, so I don't have a preference!

Do you watch your own tele-fictions?
I do. I try to watch them whenever I have free time. However, I am very critical of my own self, to a fault! I often feel like I can do better, and I try to do that in my projects thereafter.

How do you like to spend your free time?
I love travelling! Whenever I get the opportunity, I pack my bags and go on a trip with the family. Going around the world and meeting new people really opens your eyes to a lot of things, and also tends to give inspiration for new portrayals or characters.

"I try to watch my work whenever I get time. However, I am very critical of my own self, to a fault! I often feel like I can do better, and I try to do that in my projects thereafter."

Shafin Ahmed's burial scheduled for July 30

Shafin Ahmed's first janaza (funeral prayer) was held at Dar al Noor Islamic Community Mosque in Virginia, on Saturday at 1:00pm (local time).

According to family sources, his body will arrive in Bangladesh today afternoon. His second janaza will be held tomorrow after Zuhr prayers at Gulshan Azad Mosque. He will then be buried at Banani Graveyard.

The musician passed away due to a massive heart attack in a hospital in Virginia, United States, shortly after 6:00am last Thursday (July 25).

Earlier, on July 20, Shafin Ahmed was set to perform at a concert in Virginia, but the event was canceled due to his sudden illness. Later, he was placed on life support and passed away while receiving treatment.

Totini to make web-series debut

Tanjim Saiyara Totini is set to make her web-series debut with the OTT platform Binge.

Confirmed by the actress to Daily Prothom Alo last Friday afternoon, the series is yet to receive a title. However, it will be directed by Sunny Sanwar.

The actress previously ventured into the OTT platform with Kolpona, an episode in the Chorki anthology film Ei Muhurte, which comprises three short films.

The shooting for the series is scheduled to begin on August 5. However, due to ongoing political unrest across the country, this might be postponed.

Nationwide crackdown, arrests go on

Rab yesterday morning said they have so far arrested 305 people across the country, including 78 in Dhaka, since July 18 in connection with the violence.

MORE ON REMAND

Eight more people, including former Ducsu vice-president Nurul Haque Nur and BNP Senior Joint Secretary General Ruhul Kabir Rizvi Ahmed, were placed on a five-day remand each after in a case filed over the vandalism of the Kazipara Metro Station in the city's Mirpur on July 19.

The other accused are Jamaat Secretary General Miah Golam Parwar, BNP Organising Secretary Qazi Sayedul Alam Babul, its Dhaka North City unit Member Secretary Aminul Haque, Publicity Secretary Sultan Salauddin Tuku, Bagerhat district BNP Convener MA Salam and its activist Mahmudus Salehin.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Md Mainul Islam passed the order after investigating officer Asaduzzaman Munshi, an inspector of the Detective Branch (DB) of police, produced them before it with a 10-day remand prayer.

In the forwarding report, the IO said the accused planned and committed such offences as per the direction of Nur and others with an intention to topple the government. So, they need to be interrogated to find out vital clues about the incident, it added.

The court granted the accused 5-day remand each after cancelling their bail petitions along with the petitions to cancel the remand prayer on grounds they were implicated in the case as part of a conspiracy to harass them over political rivalry.

Claiming innocence, Nur told the court that he had earlier been tortured mentally and physically while he was on a five-day remand in Setu Bhaban arson attack case.

He told the court that he had a blood clot on his right hand and that he was placed on remand again, his life would be at risk.

BNP leader Tuku told the court that he was also tortured earlier and that if he was to be on remand again, he wanted to receive treatment first.

Jamaat leader Golam Parwar demanded justice from the court, while his lawyer applied to grant him first-class status in jail. The court registered the application.

Meanwhile, another Dhaka court yesterday placed three people, including the former president of Islami Chhatra Shibir Rashedul Islam Rashed on a seven-day remand in an Explosives Act case.

The two others are -- Jamaat-e-Islami Treasurer Khandaker Mizanur Rahman and Executive Committee Member Mohammad Abdur Rashid.

On July 27, Counter Terrorism and Transnational Crime claimed to have arrested them from an office in Dhanmondi along with cocktails and other explosive substances.

Mobile internet back without social media

Awami League have been blocked, he said.

He asked why the content of the Bangladesh National Party or convicted Tarique Rahman has not been blocked from YouTube and Facebook.

After hearing the explanations of the officials from the social media platforms, the decision on opening social media platforms will be taken, Palak said.

The government has not fully blocked any apps, he said, adding that some important infrastructures were connected to the internet during the shutdown.

Mobile internet was temporarily made unavailable on July 17 and 18 in some areas upon the recommendation of the law enforcement agencies with the technology support of BTRC and the National Telecommunication Monitoring Centre, Palak said.

On July 18, due to a fire in the Department of Disaster Management (DDM) caused by a group of miscreants, two data centres became non-operational, and hundreds of kilometres of ISP cables and the fibre optic cable from Dhaka to Chattogram were set on fire, making the internet temporarily unavailable, he added.

However, industry experts said that since most of the country's bandwidth comes from India through Benapole and the second submarine cable from Kuakata via Barishal, even if the first submarine cable's bandwidth is disconnected, at least 75 percent of the bandwidth should be supplied smoothly, keeping the country mostly connected.

Even if hundreds of kilometres of ISP cable were burnt, the internet outages should be limited since ISPs have deployed cables spanning hundreds of thousands of kilometres to provide internet to homes and businesses throughout the country, they said.

People with knowledge of the matter said the outage was ordered by the government.

The Daily Star has visited the data centres in question and found no sign of damage to the building that housed them.

Officials of the data centres also confirmed that there was no fire in the building. However, the DDM opposite the building was torched and that fire partially damaged some overhead cables connected to the data centres.

Around 8:00pm on July 18, officials of the Internet Service Providers Association of Bangladesh said the fire might have cut 30-40 percent of the bandwidth supply, leaving some users disconnected and many with slow internet.

An hour later, the entire Bangladesh was without internet.

The government reopened broadband internet in selected areas on July 23 and restored connections on a trial basis nationwide the next day.

However, users are experiencing slow internet as traffic is going through deep packet inspection (DPI) through the Department of Telecommunications equipment placed previously in the IIG's system, according to people informed with the proceedings.

The DPI works like a security guard checking the contents passing through a checkpoint.

Broadband users are yet to be compensated for the disruption in service.

Criminals to be tried

Mentioning the formation of an inquiry commission, the MoFA said a number of departmental investigations were being conducted to find the reasons behind the killings and the violence, and whether there were any cases of negligence.

The statement went on to say that there has been no single case of "shoot-on-sight" by security forces deployed in the aftermath of terrorist acts, as well as no firing from helicopters during law enforcement operations.

"There was no ulterior motive behind the inadvertent deployment of a white armoured personnel carrier (APC) that still had the UN insignia visible through the colour coating used to cover it.

"While the APC in question was quickly pulled out of service, the other images of law enforcement transports using UN insignia were false."

MoFA said broadband and mobile internet connectivity have been restored with full functionality by now.

Hasnatul's remand order

remand order and sent the accused to the Children's Court, which sent him to a juvenile correction centre.

Earlier in the day, the HC asked the authorities to strictly follow the provisions of the Children Act in dealing with Hasnatul.

In response to a writ petition, the bench of Justice Muhammad Khurshid Alam Sarkar and Justice SM Maniruzzaman asked Additional Attorney General Sk Md Morshed to instruct the authorities, including the Jatrabari Police Station OC, to talk to the parents of Hasnatul in this regard.

Hasnatul's parents can submit an application with an undertaking and surrender his passport to the authorities so that he can be kept in their custody, said the HC judges.

Additional Attorney General Morshed told the court that Hasnatul will not be placed on remand and will be properly dealt with as a minor. The lower court placed him on remand as the documents in support of his being a minor were not produced before that court at that time, he said.

The HC judges said the arresting authority had to assess the age of Hasnatul during his arrest under the law.

The bench asked Additional Attorney General Morshed what he would do if his minor child had been arrested and placed on remand.

Morshed said relevant provisions of the Children Act will be strictly followed in treating Hasnatul and if his parents submit any application, it will be considered in accordance with the law.

The HC bench cited a photo of Hasnatul published on The Daily Star yesterday.

The photo captioned that "Hasnatul Islam Faiyaz, a first-year HSC student of Dhaka College, is tied with ropes as cops take him back to jail on a seven-day remand after he was produced before the CMM Court in the capital. Hasnatul was picked up from his Jatrabari home on Wednesday night in connection with a case filed over recent violence."

Yesterday, the HC bench also fixed today for further hearing of the petition filed as a public interest litigation by Supreme Court lawyer Shahdeen Malik challenging the legality of the lower court order that placed Hasnatul on remand.

Petitioner's lawyer Md Monjur Alam told this newspaper that under the Children Act, 2013, no child can be tied with rope, put on handcuffs and placed on remand.

The children cannot be sent to jail and kept with adult prisoners, he said, adding that the accused children have to be sent to juvenile correction centres.

Meanwhile, a law ministry press release yesterday said the Children's Court in Dhaka cancelled the remand of Hasnatul as a child and ordered the authorities to send him to a juvenile correction centre.

On July 27, Hasnatul was produced before the Chief Metropolitan Court of Dhaka, and the court placed him on a seven-day remand as the investigating officer of the case had sought.

Though the accused claimed that he is a child, the court granted the remand prayer as he failed to produce proof of his age.

Yesterday, accused Hasnatul submitted the relevant documents (SSC and birth certificates) in support of his age before the CMM court.

The court suspended his remand and sent the accused to the Children's Court for hearing and passing order determining his age.

After yesterday's hearing, the Children's Court ordered the authorities to send Hasnatul to a juvenile correction centre.

maritime connectivity among the BIMSTEC member countries. The details of the agreement will be shared once the member states sign the document, said Indra Mani Pandey, Secretary General of the BIMSTEC, at a recent briefing in Dhaka.

"I believe BIMSTEC has a bright future. All members are committed to make BIMSTEC a success story," he added.

BIMSTEC adapted its charter on May 20 this year, 27 years after the founding of the regional body. It has institutional mechanisms and policies but is lacking practical cooperation.

Indra Mani Pandey said the upcoming summit would add new vigour to regional cooperation within BIMSTEC. It will adopt Bangkok Vision 2030, which would give direction to the organisation, he hoped.

BIMSTEC wants to create an enabling environment for rapid economic development through identification and implementation of specific cooperation projects in the agreed areas of cooperation.

It also wants to accelerate economic growth and social progress through joint endeavours in the spirit of equality and partnership, Indra Mani said.

Among the five additional DIGs, who were transferred to different posts, Sakhawat Hossain, who was attached to the PHQ transferred to the Tourist Police, Akkas Uddin Bhuyan of the Sarda Police Academy transferred to the Anti-Terrorism Unit (ATU) of Dhaka, Asad Ullah Chowdhury of ATU has been transferred to the River Police, Enamul Kabir of the Sylhet Range Office has been transferred to the Armed Police Battalion and Specialized Training Center, Khagrachari, and Mir Modasser Hossain of the Armed Police Battalion and Specialized Training Center, Khagrachari has been transferred to the Highway Police.

Finally, in two other separate circulars, the ministry posted and transferred 48 SP rank officers to different police units in different districts of the country, most of whom had also got their promotions earlier.

15 killed, 6 hurt in China landslide

AFP, Shanghai

A landslide caused by flooding in central China's Hunan province destroyed a guesthouse and killed 15 people yesterday, state media reported.

Officials initially believed that 18 people had been buried by the landslide but rescuers have since found fifteen bodies and six injured survivors, the official Xinhua news agency said yesterday night.

The landslide was caused by flash flooding on a mountain, which destroyed the guesthouse, according to state broadcaster CCTV.

More than 300 emergency personnel were sent to the scene, according to Xinhua.

A video published by the state-run Beijing Youth Daily showed a swath of mud and debris cutting through a green hillside and an uprooted tree lying in front of a three-storey building.

An aerial video on Xinhua showed what appeared to be the ruined bottom half of a building at the top of the debris trail, as well as damaged buildings at the foot of the hill.

China has suffered a summer of extreme weather, with flash floods in the north and southwest killing at least 20 people this month.

A highway in southern China collapsed in May after days of rain, killing 48 people.

Extraordinary US election enters the homestretch

AFP, Washington

The 100-day sprint to the US election began yesterday, the final act in a campaign transformed by an assassination attempt and the stunning exit of President Joe Biden.

After weeks of infighting and despondency over Biden's candidacy, Democrats have largely consolidated behind Vice President Kamala Harris, radically reshaping a race that was fast becoming Republican nominee Donald Trump's to lose.

Republican strategist Matt Terrill said Harris's uniting of the Democrats had ensured a photo finish on November 5 -- a ballot that will largely be decided by around 100,000 swing voters in a handful of battleground states.

"It comes down to those independent, undecided voters. Inflation, immigration, the economy and crime -- those are the issues they care about," he told BBC News.

While American election campaigns typically last almost two years, the 2024 edition has effectively been reset, making it unofficially the shortest in modern history.

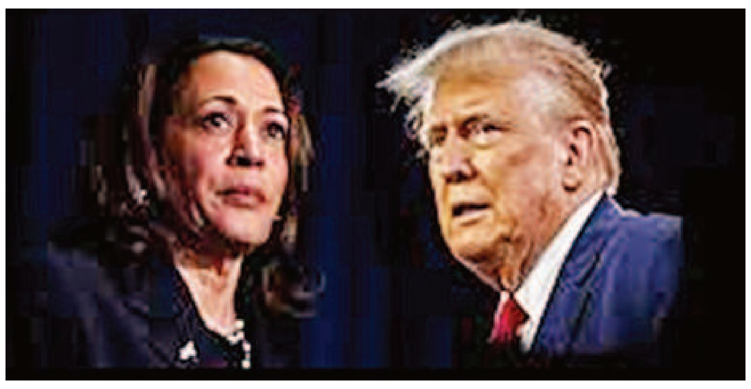
The Democratic convention in mid-August is expected to be a jubilant celebration of the party's new standard-bearer Harris, who is enjoying record fundraising, growing grassroots support and an early boost in polling.

It all looked so different just a month ago.

Dogged by voters' concerns about his age and mental acuity, the 81-year-old Biden was an outside bet at best, trailing his predecessor in the first presidential rematch since Dwight Eisenhower trounced Adlai Stevenson in 1956.

Biden's dismal June 27 debate showing ignited a five-alarm fire within his party.

The flames were fanned by a flawless show of unity behind 78-year-old Trump at the Republican national convention -- an event galvanized by the failed bid, just days earlier, to assassinate the former president at a rally in Pennsylvania.



After an initial show of defiance, Biden bowed to the inevitable and dropped out last weekend.

Harris, a generation younger at 59, threw her hat in the ring -- turning what had been a stale contest between two unpopular, aging, white male candidates into a dynamic and unpredictable showdown.

The former Biden-Harris ticket -- now just the Harris campaign -- held its biggest-ever rally Tuesday in Wisconsin and has raised more than $120 million in recent days, with disenchanted donors returning to the fold.

Trump's previous three-point nationwide lead in polling averages has been practically halved in a week, and the contest has become a margin-of-error tussle in most of the crucial swing states that decide elections.

But Democrats enjoying the sugar high of the last week have been cautioned by party elders to sober up, with Harris still facing an uphill battle to beat the oldest major party nominee in history.

Trump, who has seen his favorability ratings tick upward since the July 13 attempt on his life and the successful Republican convention, will rally this weekend in the traditionally Democratic state of Minnesota.

Harris, meanwhile, heads to Massachusetts for a fundraising event and will send her surrogates -- including some favorites in the contest to be her running mate -- out across battleground states.

America going bankrupt: Musk

AGENCIES

Rising national debt has long been a pressing issue in America, and it has caught the attention of Tesla CEO Elon Musk.

"America is going bankrupt btw," Musk wrote in a recent post on the social media platform X. He was responding to a post by Billy Markus, the creator of Dogecoin.

Markus' post included a screenshot of a headline reading, "Interest Payments on US National Debt Will Shatter $1,140,000,000,000 This Year – Eating 76% of All Income Taxes Collected: Report."

The headline originated from an article on The Daily Hodl, which featured an analysis by economist EJ Antoni. Antoni delved into the latest Monthly Treasury Statement from the Bureau of the Fiscal Service.

He pointed out a striking detail: in June 2024, the US government spent $140.238 billion on interest for Treasury debt securities. For context, the government collected $184.910 billion in individual income taxes that same month.

This means that an amount equivalent to 76 percent of June's individual income tax revenue was used solely for interest payments on the national debt, not including principal repayment.

35 killed in Pak sectarian clashes

AFP, Peshawar

A land feud between tribes in northwestern Pakistan has spilled over into days of sectarian fighting with machine guns and mortars, killing 35 people so far, officials said yesterday.

The Sunni Muslim Madagi and Shiite Mali Khel tribes have been fighting since Wednesday, when a gunman opened fire at a council negotiating a decades-long dispute over farmland, local police official Murtaza Hussain said

While no one was wounded in that attack, Hussain said it reignited longstanding religious tensions between the clans who live side-by-side in the Kurram district on Afghanistan border.

"Initially a land dispute, the issue has now escalated into sectarian violence," Hussain told AFP.

Inter-family feuds are common in Pakistan.

However, they can be particularly protracted and violent in the mountainous northwestern region of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, where communities abide by traditional tribal honour codes.

A senior government official from Kurram district, who asked to remain anonymous, also gave a death toll of 35 but said 151 more people had been wounded.

"The conflict, now in its fifth day, has escalated into a Shia-Sunni dispute," he said. "All attempts to resolve the conflict have failed."

A police source, who asked not to be identified, said both sides were using automatic weapons and mortars in fighting focused around the town of Parachinar, which had been blockaded by law enforcement.

Khamenei grants Masoud Pezeshkian presidential powers

AFP, Tehran

Iran's supreme leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei yesterday gave his official endorsement of Masoud Pezeshkian as the Islamic Republic's ninth president, following snap elections won by the reformist camp's candidate.

In a message read by the director of Khamenei's office, he said: "I endorse the vote (for) the wise, honest, popular and scholarly Mr Pezeshkian, and I am appointing him as the president of the Islamic Republic of Iran".

The new reformist president is due to be sworn in before parliament on Tuesday.

The endorsement ceremony was held in the capital Tehran in the presence of senior Iranian officials and foreign diplomats.

It took place as banks and most government offices were ordered shut nationwide on Sunday to tackle an extreme heatwave.

Following the event, acting president Mohammad Mokhber handed over official responsibilities to 69-year-old Pezeshkian.

Later Sunday, Pezeshkian appointed reformist Mohammad Reza Aref, 72, as his first vice president, according to an announcement carried by state TV.

Aref has represented Tehran in parliament and served as first vice president and communications minister under Iran's last reformist president Mohammad Khatami, who held office from 1997 to 2005.

Pezeshkian, a heart surgeon and parliament member for the northwestern city of Tabriz since 2008, was Khatami's health minister.

On July 5 the reformist candidate won a runoff race against the ultraconservative Saeed Jalili to replace Ebrahim Raisi who died in a helicopter crash in May.

US, Japan deepen ties, take swipe at China

AFP, Tokyo

The United States and Japan issued scathing verbal attacks on China and Russia yesterday after high-level discussions on enhancing already close defence collaboration between Tokyo and Washington in an increasingly unstable region.

A joint statement issued after "2+2" talks in Tokyo between US Secretary of State Antony Blinken, Defense Secretary Lloyd Austin and their Japanese counterparts said China's "foreign policy seeks to reshape the international order for its own benefit at the expense of others".

They also reiterated their "strong objections" to China's "unlawful maritime claims, militarization of reclaimed features, and threatening and provocative activities in the South China Sea".

The communique also criticised Russia's "growing and provocative strategic military cooperation" with China, as well as Moscow's procurement of ballistic missiles and other equipment from North Korea "for use against Ukraine". It also expressed alarm at China's "ongoing and rapid expansion of its nuclear weapons arsenal".

Blinken said US alliances were all "defensive in nature".

"They have no ambitions toward anyone else, and never have been or ever will be offensive in nature," he told a news conference.

"But at a time when unfortunately these threats are increasing, our alliances, our partnerships, they're getting deeper, they're getting stronger, they're getting more effective," he said.

Japanese Foreign Minister Yoko Kamikawa said: "We are at a historic turning point."

"Developments that shake the very foundation of a free and open international order based on the rule of law are continuing."

"We must deepen and develop the US-Japan alliance to safeguard the international order and enhance deterrence," she said.

China claims the South China Sea, through which trillions of dollars of trade passes annually, almost in its entirety, while Tokyo and Beijing are also at loggerheads over disputed Japan-controlled islands in the East China Sea.

The statement also confirmed US plans to establish in Japan a new Joint Force Headquarters, headed by a three-star US commander, for the 54,000 US military personnel stationed there.

It will serve as a counterpart to Japan's planned Joint Operations Command for all its armed forces, making the two militaries more nimble in the case of a crisis over Taiwan or the Korean peninsula.

Restore normal business conditions

Address the plight of low-income workers, entrepreneurs

A falling tide lowers all ships, so it is natural that the recent disruptions in the country would hit every economic sector, but there are some that have been hit harder than others. These units or groups, comprising low-income workers and entrepreneurs, belong to the lower strata of our economy and, as such, rarely feature in policy decisions even during critical times such as now. According to various reports, the nationwide curfew and internet shutdown, while aimed at restoring order after the unprecedented violence that erupted since July 18, have exacerbated the hardships faced by daily wage earners and small business owners, pushing many to the brink of financial ruin.

A report from our Khulna correspondent highlights the sufferings of low-income workers including hawkers, porters, cobblers, transport and construction workers whose earnings have plummeted. This is not just in one city, but across urban centres in the country. Day labourers, who typically find work at busy intersections, are having to wait for hours with little success. Homeowners are hesitant to resume construction works leading to a slump in employment. Many, as a result, are being forced to borrow to survive. Many are turning to alternative means of livelihood, earning a fraction of their usual daily income. Even the relaxation of curfew hours hasn't helped much, thanks to the climate of fear created by the block raids and mass arrests conducted by security forces which is causing further economic distress.

This dire situation in informal economy is being mirrored in the entrepreneurial sector as well. According to the 2013 economic census by Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS), there are over 78 lakh entrepreneurs in the cottage, micro, small, and medium enterprises (CMSMEs), a number that must have multiplied by now. The recent disruptions and disturbances have severely impacted production, sales, and marketing activities for most SMEs. Add to that preexisting challenges such as high inflation, rising interest rates, and increased costs for services like gas and electricity. Online-based entrepreneurs and workers have been hit particularly hard, thanks to the internet restrictions, which nearly halted their operations. The e-commerce and f-commerce sectors, including over four lakh businesses, rely heavily on internet to deliver over seven lakh products daily. Against this backdrop, the restoration of mobile internet yesterday, without granting access to key digital mediums like Facebook, TikTok, and WhatsApp, is unlikely to bring much relief.

All this paints a disturbing picture of the struggles of low-income workers, employees and entrepreneurs who are passing their days in hardship and uncertainty. They were already in trouble before the dual assaults of curfew and internet blackout, owing to the impacts of Covid and other external and internal problems, and the government's failure to handle the violent backlash from quota reform protests has only intensified it. It is, therefore, imperative to urgently restore normal business conditions, particularly by fully reopening internet services. Small businesses and low-income workers and employees are the backbone of our economy. The authorities must remove all barriers to their survival.

Ensure FDI inflow isn't badly hampered

Govt has a lot to do to recover business and investor confidence

Violence centring around the quota reform movement, a five-day total internet blackout, and the ongoing curfew have naturally shaken foreign investor's confidence in Bangladesh, which must be addressed. According to a report in this daily, the country needs to attract foreign direct investment (FDI) equal to 1.66 percent of its GDP annually to become an advanced economy by 2041. But in 2022, Bangladesh's FDI inflow amounted to only 0.75 percent of its GDP. Bangladesh Bank data shows that in 2023, net FDI inflow fell to $3 billion, a decrease of 14 percent from $3.5 billion in 2022. Against this backdrop, the confidence crisis caused by recent events becomes more concerning.

When it comes to attracting investors, a country's reputation as a reliable investment destination is vital. Investors already had a number of issues with Bangladesh in that regard. Problems like corruption, bureaucracy, anti-competitive procurement system, violation of intellectual property rights, and inconsistent policy shifts have all been previously identified as barriers to Bangladesh attracting higher FDI. With several international rights organisations and foreign countries having identified a number of human rights violations during the government's brutal crackdown on protesters recently, the country's image as an investment hub has surely taken a further hit. And this crisis cannot be quantified, as explained by the president of the Foreign Investors' Chamber of Commerce and Industry (FICCI).

The modern nature of business is such that all business activities around the world have become tremendously dependent on the use of the internet. The five-day total internet shutdown—along with the fact that internet services across the country are yet to be fully restored—has had a massive impact on all businesses. And although the country is slowly recovering with limited online and physical connectivity, full operations are yet to be revived.

On top of that, foreign investors with a stake in the export sector are anticipating losses and increased expenses due to overtime bills. Some of them will now have to go for costly air shipments to make up for lost time and meet their lead times. And the uncertainty that many businesses and investors faced during the internet outage have made them particularly antsy, with many foreign investors raising questions about the country's political stability.

Even though the government has remained confident about the country's ability to attract FDI despite recent turmoil, we believe there is a lot that can, and should, be done to regain investors' trust. First, the government must urgently restore full internet services, and reinstate normalcy by lowering tensions within society at large. It also needs to take all necessary steps to ensure a positive business environment that is conducive to attracting investment, and that can largely mitigate the losses businesses suffered.

The responsibility lies squarely with the government

ANU MUHAMMAD

Over the last few days, we went through an unexpected, uncertain, and cruel experience. It felt as though we were living in very disturbing times—the students and citizens on the one end and the government on the other. The problem that fuelled the frustration among people was avoidable. The government showed us how to take a solvable problem and make it complicated—how to increase people's anger and frustration.

The resistance was increasing on par with the viciousness of the attacks. We saw a multitude of student sections join in later as the attacks increased. First we saw it begin at public universities and public colleges. When these students came under attack, we saw the private universities join in. Then we saw the colleges and even many school students join in. As the attacks became more and more violent, the courage of the protesters continued to increase as well.

A member of police is seen opening fire during the unrest centring the quota reform movement in Dhanmondi, Dhaka on July 19, 2024.

> This level of bloodshed prompted the government to announce quota reforms, albeit belatedly. If they had acted a week earlier, this bloodshed and financial losses could have been avoided, and lives could have been saved. Our country's informal sector is vast, and everyone in it has been harmed either physically or financially.

The first action taken to stop the protests was vacating the student residential halls at the universities. Law enforcement members, along with Chhatra League and Jubo League, ran the operation to forcibly remove students from their halls and campuses. There is a good number of students in Bangladesh who live in rented homes near their educational institutions. Chhatra League and Jubo League activists even went to their homes and forced them to leave. Some students that I know, who study in Chattogram, were made to leave like this and when they tried to go back to their homes, the curfew had already started. So they were stranded on the roads with nowhere to go. These kinds of stories are abundant.

I taught at Jahangirnagar University for 40 years. The university campus is filled with lakes and trees. I am used to seeing students roaming around on their beautiful campus surrounded by nature. But on TV, I had to see the same campus streets filled with big police cars and armoured vehicles. I saw law enforcers firing tear shells and sound grenades. They were firing guns on that campus. The students were trying to hide in bushes! The teachers were also trying to save themselves from the attacks. The sound of birds chirping and students' conversations and laughter were replaced with the sounds of gunshots and sound grenades. This was painful for me to see as a teacher.

The closest we have witnessed to this event was 41 years ago. In 1983, at one point, the army cracked down on students, torturing them and forcing them out of the residential halls to sit in the fields. Even at that time, the scale of violence against students was not on the level we saw over the last few days.

The shootings went on in an uncontrolled manner. It was so out of control that innocent civilians who were perhaps pedestrians or shop-keepers, or maybe a woman who had simply gone out to buy medicines, got shot and even died in some cases. As the numbers of those injured and dead increased, even more people joined the protests.

Such indiscriminate violent attacks on students and civilians are unprecedented in Bangladesh's history. We have never seen such a high death toll in any protest in Bangladesh, even during the Pakistan regime, apart from the Liberation War. Conservative estimates suggest the death toll may exceed 200, with thousands injured. Those who survived with injuries are suffering silently; their plight is often overlooked. Simply being alive is not enough—they should be acknowledged and supported.

The way in which the situation deteriorated since July 16 was unimaginable. We saw students getting attacked in multiple ways. First we saw the ruling party's student body attack general students. News reports say the police joined in, then Rab, and then the BGB. And finally, the army and curfew were added to the mix, indicating the seriousness of the situation.

My study has a window where I find solace. While working, I look at the open sky to break the monotony. I had a horrifying experience these last few days, watching helicopters come and go, firing from the sky. I saw smoke emanating from the helicopters with deafening noise. Later, I learnt that they were firing sound grenades, tear gas, and possibly bullets, despite officials denying that. I witnessed these events with my own eyes. I read reports stating the victims ranged from three-year-olds to 70-year-olds.

This level of bloodshed prompted the government to announce quota reforms, albeit belatedly. If they had acted a week earlier, this bloodshed and financial losses could have been avoided, and lives could have been saved. Our country's informal sector is vast, and everyone in it has been harmed either physically or financially. Those who have been injured are burdened with the additional expense of their medical treatment. Their traumatic experiences will haunt them for life. None of this would have happened if the government had shown responsibility and heeded the legitimate demands of the protesters, rather than rigidly sticking to its ways.

Even the quota reforms announced by the government lack transparency. They did not consult the stakeholders and protesters. Decisions were made unilaterally, neglecting those deserving the quotas. The movement aimed not to deny the minority groups their quotas, but to ensure fair and sustainable distribution.

The government's failure to seek sustainable solutions in 2018 and its recent unilateral decision reflect insensitivity and exclusion, causing dissent among various groups. Despite claiming to have agreed to all demands, the government has failed to address the deaths and damages incurred over the past two weeks. It has not taken adequate steps to ensure justice or hold those responsible for the injustice accountable. There is no indication that it will take action in the future. The government's aggressive stance is evident even now with indiscriminate harassment and arrests of the people.

I believe the responsibility lies squarely with the government, which must stop harassing the youth and people in general. It should come out with the list of killed and injured people along with credible investigations to identify the list of responsible groups behind the loss of lives and damage to properties.

In fact, steps towards democratic transition and establishing people's authority should be brought to discussion. We don't want to live in a long-term state of civil unrest in Bangladesh, which is already showing dangerous signs. Indeed, democratic transformation in the real spirit of the Liberation War is the only viable path forward.

FIRST BUDGET OF MODI GOVT 3.0

Political exigencies and beyond

Pallab Bhattacharya
is a special correspondent for The Daily Star. He writes from New Delhi, India.

PALLAB BHATTACHARYA

India's annual budget is always as much an economic statement as it is political. And the first fully fledged annual budget of Prime Minister Narendra Modi's third successive term clearly reflected the changed political realities after the recent national elections saw the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) posting a below-par performance, missing the majority mark in the Lok Sabha and being forced to depend on the support of its allies for survival.

When Modi retained almost all the members of his second cabinet with the same portfolios in his third tenure, many analysts were tempted to wonder if he would be a changed man in his third term without a clear majority. But the July 23 budget proposal indicates change has begun to set in, taking a cue from the recent national election results.

Statistics don't always reveal the full reality. But they don't hide the reality either. The budget clearly reflects three major political realities that Modi-led BJP has come to terms with post-parliamentary elections. First, it lacks a majority on its own after having enjoyed the same for a decade since 2014. Secondly, as a logical consequence of the first, Modi is critically dependent on the support of his major allies, Telugu Desam Party (TDP) ruling Andhra Pradesh having 16 lawmakers and Janata Dal (United) governing Bihar with a dozen MPs. Thirdly, the budget has acknowledged what Modi and BJP are loath to accept in public: that unemployment, an issue forcefully brought up during the electioneering, is among the crucial factors responsible for pulling down the saffron party's numbers.

There is little doubt the FY2024-25 budget has kept in mind the reality of changed numbers in the 18th Lok Sabha. It is, therefore, no surprise that Finance Minister Nirmala Sitharaman loosened the purse strings for TDP and JDU with a surfeit of development schemes for Bihar and Andhra Pradesh. She announced funds for early completion of a key irrigation project, industrial development of Andhra Pradesh, infrastructure like water, power, railways and roads, and additional allocation towards capital investment for economic growth of the state and grants for backward regions. Bihar got support for capital investments in the development of road connectivity projects in the state at a cost of 26,000 crore rupees. Expressway over the Ganges River, a new 2,400MW power plant, new airports, medical colleges and sports infrastructure in the state are among the other promises made in the budget, reflecting BJP's political exigency. By keeping the two parties in good humour, Modi has underlined his intent for ensuring political and macroeconomic stability.

Implicit in the budgetary promise to pump in $24 billion to be spent in the next five years to create jobs is that the problem of joblessness has been staring at the economy. India's official unemployment rate in urban areas is 6.7 percent, but the Centre For Monitoring Indian Economy (CMIE) pegs it at 8.4 percent. The government's economic survey, presented in parliament a day before the budget, says the Indian economy needs to generate an average of nearly 78.5 lakh jobs annually until 2030 in the non-farm sector to cater to the rising workforce. The budget has sought to engineer a fine balance between supporting job creation and skilling, envisaging $32 billion for rural development this year alone and promoting agriculture, along with continued focus on infrastructure spending without sacrificing fiscal prudence.

Sitharaman announced three schemes for "employment linked incentive" as part of the prime minister's package. These will be based on enrolment in the provident fund with focus on recognition of first-time employees and support to employees and employers. The other budgetary measures aimed at boosting employment include incentives for companies to train staff as well as cheaper loans for higher education. There is also a substantial amount of welfare to be spent on women-led development and the agriculture sector covering a large part of the electorate. The government has ample resources to increase spending without jeopardising its fiscal deficit plans due to a significant windfall of $25.3 billion from the Reserve Bank of India and a surge in tax revenues powered by the economy's expected growth of over seven percent this fiscal year.

The budget is also providing for the MSME sector with the help of a credit guarantee scheme to help the manufacturing sector obtain loans to finance their purchases of machinery and equipment without collateral or a third-party guarantee. In doing this, the government is apparently mindful of a perception, right or wrong, that it is pro-big corporate houses. It is not coincidental that the economic survey points out that the corporate sector has not done its bit to help job creation despite the union government cutting taxes in September 2019 to facilitate capital formation. According to the survey, "... Between FY20 and FY23, the profit before taxes of the Indian corporate sector nearly quadrupled... hiring and compensation growth hardly kept up with it."

The opposition Congress has dubbed the budget as a "kursi bachao" exercise, an unstated reference to the budget pandering to the wish lists of TDP and JDU. But there is another important messaging in the Modi government's outreach to its two regional allies: that of signalling to other powerful regional parties which are outside the BJP-led alliance that they, too, can have a share in the federal government's much bigger power pie.

The prolonged internet shutdown sets a dangerous precedent

Mahiya Tabassum
is a journalist at The Daily Star.

MAHIYA TABASSUM

The recent nationwide internet blackout in Bangladesh, beginning on July 18 and lasting over 150 hours, represents a grave threat to democracy and human rights that demands urgent attention. This unprecedented act of digital repression not only violated the fundamental rights of 170 million Bangladeshis but also set a dangerous precedent for authoritarian control in the digital age.

The shutdown occurred against a backdrop of mounting student protests, though the government initially attempted to obfuscate its role in the blackout. Officials, including ICT Minister Zunaid Ahmed Palak, first attributed the outage to security concerns, then to an arson attack on the cables in Mohakhali at nearby data centres by miscreants. Palak even suggested that broadband internet would be restored within a day. However, this explanation, or rather excuse, quickly crumbled under scrutiny. The truth, as confirmed by international observers like Cloudflare and Telenor, was that it was a deliberate, government-ordered shutdown.

Cloudflare, one of the world's largest cloud service companies, used global internet traffic monitoring tools to confirm that the blackout was indeed government-ordered. Telenor, the parent company of Grameenphone, corroborated this assessment, stating that local authorities had mandated the shutdown of 3G and 4G networks. The extent of the blackout is particularly troubling given Bangladesh's multiple internet connectivity options. The country has access to submarine cables through Bangladesh Submarine Cable Limited, land fibre connections through India, IIG VSAT connectivity for limited data links, and 3G/4G mobile networks. Put simply, the diverse infrastructure makes it implausible that a single localised issue could cause such widespread disruption, further supporting the assertion that this was a calculated move by authorities.

VISUAL: ANWAR SOHEL

This calculated move to sever digital communications coincided with student protests, revealing the shutdown's true intent. By denying citizens access to social media platforms, messaging apps, and news websites, the government effectively silenced the nation and prevented the outside world from witnessing what was happening inside Bangladesh.

As internet access slowly returned after more than 150 hours, it came with draconian restrictions. Reportedly, the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission (BTRC) issued guidelines to International Internet Gateways (IIGs) that included mandatory deep packet inspection by the Department of Telecommunications, blocking of Facebook and related services, disabling caches, and limiting access to specific areas and institutions. This calculated move to sever digital communications coincided with student protests, revealing the shutdown's true intent. By denying citizens access to social media platforms, messaging apps, and news websites, the government effectively silenced the nation and prevented the outside world from witnessing what was happening inside Bangladesh.

When governments impose internet shutdowns and restrictions, particularly during protests, they hinder the flow of vital information to citizens. This includes preventing people from contacting emergency services like fire departments and healthcare providers. Moreover, these shutdowns impede international and local media outlets, as well as human rights organisations, from documenting potential human rights violations. Such violations may include killings or excessive use of force by law enforcement agencies. By cutting off communication channels, authorities effectively create an information blackout that compromises public safety and accountability.

Interestingly, amid the nationwide blackout, reports emerged that Augmedix, a US-based healthcare multinational corporation, maintained active internet access. This selective availability raises questions about the government's priorities and potential preferential treatment of certain entities.

The shutdown, however, is part of a disturbing global trend. In 2022, there were over 180 internet shutdowns across 35 countries worldwide. Governments increasingly deploy this tactic to cover up grave human rights violations, including state violence against peaceful protesters, electoral interference, extrajudicial killings of political dissidents, and arbitrary arrests and detentions.

The UN Human Rights Council, via establishing the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR), has unequivocally stated that internet shutdowns have "indiscriminate and disproportionate impacts on human rights." In today's interconnected world, internet access is essential for the realisation of numerous fundamental rights, including freedom of expression and access to information, the right to education, the right to health, the right to work, and freedom of assembly and association. By imposing this blackout, the Bangladesh government has effectively violated these rights for its entire population, contravening its obligations under international human rights law.

The shutdown's impact extends beyond civil liberties. In an increasingly digital economy, such disruptions can have severe economic consequences. Businesses relying on online transactions, e-commerce platforms, and digital communication tools suffer significant losses. The global nonprofit organisation NetBlocks estimates that the 150-hour shutdown could have cost Bangladesh's economy over USD 500 million, further burdening a nation already grappling with economic challenges.

Moreover, the blackout jeopardised public safety and health. During times of crisis, access to timely information can be a matter of life and death. Recounting my personal experience, doctors were not available to see outdoor patients at Birdem Hospital due to the ongoing nationwide curfew. However, online consultation and public health information also became inaccessible due to the internet shutdown. By cutting off internet access, the government potentially hindered emergency services, disrupted healthcare communications, and prevented citizens from accessing crucial public health information.

We and the world must respond accordingly to this flagrant violation of digital rights. The United Nations should launch an investigation into the shutdown and its human rights implications. International and development partners should insist on respect for digital rights and internet freedom. Tech companies and telecom providers operating in Bangladesh should publicly disclose any requests for government orders to shut down services. Civil society organisations should document the impact of the shutdown on human rights, the economy, and public services to build a case for accountability.

And lastly, the Bangladesh government must provide a full, transparent explanation for the shutdown, and implement legal safeguards to prevent future arbitrary internet restrictions.

The fight for internet freedom is synonymous with the struggle for human rights and democracy.

WOMEN'S ASIA CUP 2024

Bangladesh's semifinal defeat warrants some self-reflection

The Bangladesh women's cricket team made its debut in 2007 and gained One Day International (ODI) status in 2011. Their most impressive achievement came in 2018 when they won the Women's Asia Cup and remain the only team to have lifted the trophy other than India. On Friday, Bangladesh faced India in the semifinal of this year's Asia Cup looking to recreate some of that same magic but failed by a large margin. This does not however come as a surprise, since their only wins in their last 13 games came against Thailand and Malaysia in this Asia Cup.

While Bangladesh seemed to be going through a rough patch, they had established themselves as a regularly competitive side before this current phase. The semifinal match against India was an opportunity for them to carry the momentum from their previous two wins and reinforce the fact that they are still a side to be taken seriously. They failed to capitalise on their existing strengths and the manner in which they lost the match may warrant some self-reflection.

While Bangladesh seems to be going through a rough patch, they had established themselves as a regularly competitive side before this current phase. The semifinal match against India was an opportunity for them to carry the momentum from their previous two wins and reinforce the fact that they are still a side to be taken seriously. They failed to capitalise on their existing strengths and the manner in which they lost the match may warrant some self-reflection. The team will want to turn things around so that they can regain their self-confidence and emerge as a resilient team capable of going through difficult phases and overcoming them.

Bangladesh started the tournament by losing to the hosts, Sri Lanka. They were able to score only 111-8 in 20 overs which was not nearly a competitive score on the Dambulla ground and Sri Lanka cruised to a victory by seven wickets with 17 deliveries to spare. After that however, Bangladesh turned things around and ended their 10-match losing streak in T20Is (five of which came as recently as in April and May 2024 against India) against Thailand. It was a combined effort from the bowlers and the top order which led to a convincing victory for Bangladesh. They restricted Thailand to a total of 96/9 which Bangladesh chased down by scoring 100/3 in 17.3 overs. Bangladesh benefited from the leg spinner Rabeya Khan's 4-wicket haul and a half-century from the left-hand batting opener Murshida Khatun.

The Bangladesh women's cricket team played to their strengths in the match against Malaysia where they displayed their most impressive performance in the tournament, securing a spot in the semifinal. In their biggest victory in the 2024 Women's Asia Cup, the Bangladeshi batters exhibited their capabilities in making the most of a batting-friendly ground. Batting first, they posted their second highest T20I total of 191-2. Murshida Khatun and Nigar Sultana combined their firepower to score half-centuries with a high strike rate. This was particularly notable because Sultana has been criticised in the past for not increasing the run rate. But in this match, she remained not out with an impressive strike rate of above 167. In the second innings, a cohesive team performance saw six Bangladeshi bowlers chipping in to restrict Malaysia to 77/8 and completing a 114-run victory. Nahida Akter stood out as the star performer who took two wickets at an economy rate of 3.25. The two wickets brought Akter's tally of T20I wickets to 99. She would have looked to complete the historic achievement of the first woman to get 100 wickets in T20Is in the semifinal but is still yet to do so due to the crushing defeat that saw India winning the match with all 10 wickets to spare.

Since the Bangladesh team was not in its best form before the tournament, the fact they had qualified for the semifinals should have come as a welcome validation of their competitive abilities. However, it must be mentioned that there seems to exist a significant gap in the quality of cricket played by the top four teams—India, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Bangladesh—versus the rest of the teams. While India established their dominance in the game with a consistency that's awe-inspiring, Bangladesh should have backed themselves with their own strengths. They failed to make the most of their right-arm spinners (Rabeya Khan, Shorna Akter and Rumana Ahmed), as one of the only teams in the world to regularly play three such bowlers who are known to be some of the most attacking wicket takers globally. If they were to be a match for India, all players would have had to come together to amplify their strengths. Instead, the performance we saw in the semifinal conveyed a complete absence of conviction that the team considered themselves worthy of a spot in the final.

Batting first, Bangladesh managed to post a total of only 80/8 in 20 overs. Renuka Singh—whose form had come in question ahead of the tournament and had been left out in two of the three T20Is in the series against South Africa—took three wickets in three overs, leaving the Bangladesh batting lineup in shambles. Bangladesh's opener Dilara Akter was a player, who many would have hoped would give the Indian bowlers a run for their money. She scored a six off Renuka but succumbed to a fielder off deep square in the very next delivery. Some of the other batters' shot selections were also questionable. Only two Bangladeshi batters got to double digits which is a disappointing display of the team's batting abilities in a knock-out game. One of those two batters was the captain Nigar Sultana who scored 32 off 51 deliveries and is bound to once again raise questions about her scoring rate. Though she needed to build a partnership when Bangladesh fell to 21-3, 19 dot balls in the overs between six and nine simply did not seem justified. At that point, one wonders what is the objective with which the batters are playing, since to beat India a much fiercer brand of cricket needed to be played.

Ultimately, it seemed as though the memories of the previous crushing defeats to India earlier in the year still gnawed in the Bangladeshi players' minds and that they had already lost half the battle before they appeared on the field. In 2018, when Bangladesh lifted the Asia Cup, they did so after beating India twice—once in the group stages and again in the final. It is only likely that the team would have changed since then but the Bangladeshi fans will hope that the team can rebuild and position themselves once again as the top Asian team. After all, the most commendable teams in the world are not only those who remain at the top consistently but also the teams who climb up from the depths of challenges. Bangladesh will hope to chart a similar story for themselves.

A FORGOTTEN CHAPTER in the intellectual movement of Bengali Muslims

90 years after Anwarul Quadir's Amader Dukkho

Nazrul was inspired by the new association's activities and lauded Anwarul Quadir as a leading thinker within the group. With a hint of sarcasm, he called both himself and Quadir "Kafir" or "infidels" to underscore their challenge to traditional views.

Anwarul Quadir (1887-1948) was a key literary figure whose work significantly influenced the intellectual movement of Bengali Muslims in late colonial Bengal. He is best known for completing the novel Abdullah after the death of its original author, Kazi Imdadul Huq (1882-1926). Abdullah is recognized as a pioneering work in Bengali literature by Bengali Muslim writers, addressing several contentious social issues. Additionally, Quadir published his only essay collection, Amader Dukkho, in 1934, which compiled his writings from various periodicals. Now 90 years old, this seminal book addressed pressing issues of its time that remain relevant today.

Born in 1887 in Port Blair, Andaman Islands, as his father was posted there as a headmaster of a government school, Anwarul Quadir held the family title of Kazi, and their family originally hailed from the village of Paygram Kasba in Khulna. He completed his entrance exam at Jessore Zilla School and earned his BA from Presidency College. Quadir pursued a career in teaching and obtained his MA in English Literature in 1928. He also served as an assistant to Mr. Steplan, who was specially assigned to the proposed Dhaka University. Quadir passed away from cancer in 1948 at Presidency General Hospital in Calcutta. He was awarded the title of Khan Sahib for his lifelong service in education. Anisuzzaman noted that Quadir was an ideal figure among his students and colleagues, with his significant contributions to the formation and operation of the Muslim Sahitya Samaj being highly valued.

An invitation card for a lecture on Hindu-Muslim issues by Anwarul Quadir, organized by the Muslim Sahitya Samaj. The event was scheduled for December 26, 1926, but was postponed due to the killing of Hindu revivalist movement leader Swami Sraddhananda by a Muslim named Abdul Rashid. Courtesy: Purba, 2024.

Quadir argued that both communal Hindus and Muslims had failed to adopt Tagore's ideals of compassion and love, resulting in a lack of empathy and leaving the nation's problems unresolved.

Anwarul Quadir was the senior-most author among the seven key writers of the Muslim Sahitya Samaj, which is better known as Shikha Gosthi, with their publication Shikha, the leading progressive writers' association of Bengali Muslims in Dacca at the time. This association played a crucial role in awakening the newly educated minds among Bengali Muslims, injecting a fresh literary and intellectual spirit into the stagnant society of East Bengal's main city.

Mustafa Nur-Ul Islam described Dhaka during the emergence of the Shikha Gosthi and the free intellect movement, popularly known as the Buddhir Mukti Andolan:

> "At the top is the Nawab family of Dacca, an impregnable fortress of conservatism. Dacca, in that period, was far removed from the modernity of free liberal thought. A university was just being established on the outskirts of Ramna Green and the Dacca Inter area, and Jagannath College was located near Sadarghat in the main town. In this limited and often hostile environment, a small group of individuals championed the cause of 'free intellect,' founded institutions, and published periodicals. Remarkably, most of these young reformers were from outside Dacca and lacked significant local support or patronage."

Historians note that after C.R. Das's death in 1925, communal tensions intensified in Bengal, with Dhaka frequently witnessing Hindu-Muslim riots. Amid this volatile atmosphere, the group introduced a new vision in Dhaka. As the most senior writer in the group, Anwarul Quadir believed it was not just the responsibility of political leaders but also of writers and thinkers to guide the nation in the right direction.

Although poet Kazi Nazrul Islam was not directly involved with the Dhaka-based literary association, he was invited to its inaugural conference in 1927 due to his prominence among young Muslim intellectuals in Bengal. He traveled from Kolkata to open the conference and expressed his enthusiasm with these words:

> "Today, I am thrilled to make a joyous announcement at this conference. For the first time in a long while, I enjoyed a peaceful night's sleep. I see that a new movement among Muslims has begun here, and I intend to spread this message far and wide. Furthermore, I once thought I was the only heretic, but now I am convinced that virtuous individuals like Maulavi Anwarul Quadir are the true dissenters. My circle of supporters has expanded; beyond this solace, I seek nothing more."

Nazrul was inspired by the new association's activities and lauded Anwarul Quadir as a leading thinker within the group. With a hint of sarcasm, he called both himself and Quadir "Kafir" or "infidels" to underscore their challenge to traditional views.

As noted earlier, a significant contribution of Anwarul Quadir was completing the novel Abdullah. He wrote chapters 31 to 41 based on the original draft, and the complete version was published in 1932. Kazi Abdul Wadud remarked on their differing styles:

> "Kazi Imdadul Haque is primarily a painter, whereas Anwarul Quadir is more of a psychologist, a difference reflected in their writing styles. Notably, Quadir's contributions shine in two chapters: one depicting Saleha's death and the other describing Mir Sahib's final days. While Imdadul Haque portrays Saleha as nearly lifeless, overly constrained by her father's rigid principles, Quadir introduces a touch of compassion to her character and adds a hint of novelty and affection to Abdullah's otherwise mundane life."

Wadud notes that Anwarul Quadir brought a more dynamic and humanistic dimension to Saleha, the lead female character, who was largely passive in Kazi Imdadul Haque's original portrayal.

Anwarul Quadir's another major contribution is Amader Dukkho, an essay collection. Originally published in Calcutta, the prose work was reprinted twice, first in 1990 and again in 2010.

The title Amader Dukkho (Our Sorrows) underscores the urgent issues Anwarul Quadir critically examined during his time. This period was marked by intense and unresolved Hindu-Muslim conflicts, which eventually led to the Partition of Bengal. Quadir noted that leaders of these competing groups adopted narrow, self-serving views driven by religious biases, failing to unite for the nation's benefit. The government officials were more concerned with their own positions and perks, with their salaries rising while the common people's suffering worsened.

He presented a critical analysis of the socio-economic and political climate, which was increasingly polarized between Hindus and Muslims. This growing distrust approached a state of near-separation, with each side accusing the other of grievances. Quadir found Hindu accusations of Muslims destroying temples and desecrating idols to be largely exaggerated, just as he saw Muslim fears that Hindus would eliminate them after achieving independence as overstated.

Quadir argued that both Hindus and Muslims faced significant poverty and criticized inherent issues within each community. He found the Hindu caste system incompatible with modern democratic values and noted that Muslims were often more conservative and resistant to change, sometimes practicing their religion in a way that seemed bigoted and misaligned with Islam's core principles. Instead of focusing on religious differences, Quadir emphasized shared problems like severe poverty, food shortages, and inadequate clothing. He questioned whether the country's leaders would understand these issues or continue to follow antagonistic policies.

Anwarul Quadir's lecture, titled "Bangli Musalmaner Samajik Galad" ("The Social Faults of Bengali Muslims"), appeared in the first issue of Shikha and was later included in his book Amader Dukkho. In this lecture, Quadir explored the challenges and potential of Bengali Muslims. He emphasized, "Without the liberation of the mind, religion cannot be taught. Intelligence is essential for understanding and following religious principles. The true essence of Dharma has been lost due to a lack of intelligence, leading to a dominance of orthodoxy in our practice."

In the essay collection, Quadir also critiqued the thinking of influential educational and social leaders, such as the respected chemist and educationist Prafulla Chandra Ray (1861-1944). Ray remarked that the narrowness of the Hindu caste system had driven lower-caste people to seek refuge in the "kindheartedness of Islam," resulting in over 50 percent of Bengal's population becoming Muslim, which he perceived as a misfortune for India. Quadir questioned how a slight majority of Bengal seeking refuge in the "kindheartedness of Islam" led to the wreckage of the entire country. He believed Ray might have been trying to provoke Hindus into rejecting the caste system. However, Quadir doubted that divisions wouldn't have developed within Hinduism if people hadn't embraced Islam. He argued that the rise of Buddhism and many other sub-sects of Hinduism indicated that oppressed people would have embraced any other sect or religion, even if Islam had not arrived in this land.

আমাদের দুঃখ
আনোয়ারুল কাদির

Cover of the book Amader Dukkha (1990)

Quadir questioned how this shift towards Islam could be blamed for the country's problems, arguing that Ray might have been trying to provoke Hindus into reform but ultimately failed to address the deeper issues. He suggested that divisions within Hinduism would have arisen even without Islam's influence, as evidenced by the rise of Buddhism and various Hindu sects among oppressed people.

He dismissed Ray's conclusion as narrow-minded, arguing that such sectarian blame emerges under subjugation and reflects a form of subservience. He emphasized that if even a respected social leader like P.C. Ray, known for his liberal ideas and acceptance among Muslims, held such views, it would alienate Muslims and lead them to seek a fictitious identity elsewhere, neglecting their place in their own land. He suggested that overcoming such narrow-mindedness requires insight and a fresh perspective, avoiding stereotypical thinking in a colonized state.

Quadir did not accept that communal issues in India began with the colonial period but pointed to historical examples, such as the exile of 500 Brahmins during Harshabardhan's reign for causing unrest. He believed that widespread communal issues arose from rulers seeking personal benefits, with religion frequently manipulated for these purposes. He criticized the hypocrisy of showcasing religion, which obscured sincere and humble adherence to its practices.

During the final phase of colonial Bengal, the Hindu-Muslim feud intensified as economic opportunities dwindled. Zamindari became less profitable, agriculture stagnated, and competition between the two major religions centered on the limited number of government jobs. These rivalries extended beyond daily economic and social activities and even impacted Bengali literature, where communal biases influenced the portrayal of characters in religious terms. Quadir criticized this environment, claiming it was impossible to produce "honest literature" under such conditions, and expressed hope that literary figures would develop a more harmonious approach in their work.

Quadir emphasized Rabindranath Tagore's view on the Hindu-Muslim issue, noting Tagore's concern that the nation's identity had become mired in religious divisions, obstructing the path to unity. Quadir argued that both communal Hindus and Muslims had failed to adopt Tagore's ideals of compassion and love, resulting in a lack of empathy and leaving the nation's problems unresolved.

Tagore's predictions about the fallout from Hindu-Muslim rivalry are echoed in the account of scientist Muhammad Qudrat-i-Khuda (1900-1977). During a trip to Darjeeling in the late 1920s, the young Qudrat-i-Khuda met Tagore by chance. In their conversation about socio-political issues, Tagore voiced his concern that ongoing Hindu-Muslim conflicts would thwart any efforts at unity, ultimately leading to the creation of separate states for Hindus and Muslims.

Remarkably, Tagore appeared to anticipate the partition of Bengal as early as the late 1920s, noting the increasing tensions between the major communities. Quadir found parallels between Tagore's observations and his own insights. Furthermore, Tagore, after reading the novel Abdullah, expressed his pleasure, mentioning that it deepened his understanding of the inner lives of Muslims in Bengal and shed light on various social issues.

Although Quadir's discussions were framed within the context of undivided Bengal, the issues he highlighted have continued and frequently intensified into serious conflicts even after the formation of three separate states. The sorrow expressed in Amader Dukkho remains relevant in a subcontinent still grappling with communal divisions.

Sri Lanka break India's dominance

Sri Lanka batters Harshitha Samarawickrama and Kavisha Dilhari celebrate after the latter hit the winning runs in an eight-wicket thrashing of India in the final of the Women's Asia Cup final in Dambulla yesterday. The hosts won their maiden Asia Cup title which means that they and Bangladesh are the only two nations to have lifted the trophy other than seven-time winners India. After restricting reigning champions India to 165 for six, Sri Lanka captain Chamari Athapaththu and Samarawickrama smashed half-centuries, and the duo put together an 87-run stand for the second wicket to help the Lankans complete a comprehensive run chase with eight balls to spare. Samarawickrama, who struck six fours and two sixes for a 51-ball 69, was adjudged the player of the match, while Athapaththu who took her tournament tally to 304 runs with a 43-ball 61 - laced with two sixes and nine fours – was declared the player of the tournament. Paris 'sorry' over opening ceremony controversy

AFP, Paris

Organisers of the Paris Olympics said Sunday they were "really sorry" for any offence caused by their daring and quirky opening ceremony.

Some Catholic groups and French bishops have condemned what they saw as "scenes of derision and mockery of Christianity" in the parade on Friday.

"If people have taken any offence, we are of course really, really sorry," Paris 2024 spokeswoman Anne Descamps told reporters on Sunday.

Saudi hails first female Olympic swimmer

REUTERS, Paris

Saudi dignitaries on Sunday hailed the performance of Mashael Alayed, the first female swimmer from the kingdom to compete in an Olympics.

The 17-year-old is the only female swimmer in the delegation and smashed her personal best to come sixth of seven in her 200 metres freestyle heat.

Girls were banned from participating in sport at public schools until 2017 and women not allowed into sports stadiums until the following year in the Islamic state.

Princess Reema bint Bandar bint Sultan, an influential member of the Saudi Olympic committee and the kingdom's ambassador to Washington, wrote on X "Proud to cheer on this young woman! Breaking boundaries! Mashael Alayed."

Marchand fires up PARIS POOL

AFP, Paris

French hero Leon Marchand threw down the gauntlet with a storming 400m medley swim Sunday as Mollie O'Callaghan outgunned Ariarne Titmus to top the women's 200m freestyle heats.

Marchand is the Olympic hosts' big hope after last year demolishing Michael Phelps' 15-year-old world record in a phenomenal 4min 2.50sec.

The 22-year-old, trained by Phelps' old coach Bob Bowman, had not dipped under 4:10 this year as a number of his rivals did, piling on the pressure.

He rose to the occasion on day two at a packed La Defense Arena to touch in 4:08.30 as a raucous crowd went wild, more than a second clear of Britain's Max Lichfield and two seconds ahead of Japanese veteran Daiya Seto.

In an upset, American defending champion Chase Kalisz failed to reach the final, ending his bid to make the podium for a third time after also winning silver at Rio 2016.

"It was almost like a football stadium but in a pool. Everyone was chanting my name, it was crazy," said Marchand, who is gunning to end a 12-year French gold medal drought in the pool.

"I think I was prepared. I was able to stay in my performance. I had a very strong 250m and then I relaxed a little.

"If I can free myself as much as possible from my body, from my mind, it will be great. I think it'll be fun," he added of Sunday's evening final.

At the 2021 Olympics, France took home just one swimming medal, Florent Manaudou's silver from the 50m free. They haven't won gold since London in 2012, when they collected four.

Marchand will also swim the 200m medley and 200m butterfly.

Defending 200m champion Titmus was back in the pool a day after taking out the 400m title ahead of Summer McIntosh and Katie Ledecky.

She showed few signs of tiredness, easing into the semi-finals third fastest behind pace-setting teammate O'Callaghan (1:55.79).

Titmus shattered O'Callaghan's world record last month at the Australian trials to set a new best of 1:52.23.

O'Callaghan also went under her previous world record in coming second, making the pair overwhelming favourites for gold on Monday.

"Definitely hard to back up after last night, but I think I tried to stay as calm as I could last night and try and forget about what happened this morning really," said Titmus.

"On to another day, 400's done now, so 200's the focus."

'ICC understands that everything is all right'

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) president Nazmul Hassan Papon yesterday said that his presence at the International Cricket Council (ICC) Annual Conference satisfied the governing body's concerns regarding the unrest in the country and assured them that the forthcoming ICC Women's T20 World Cup in Bangladesh could go ahead as planned.

Cricket website Cricbuzz had earlier reported that the ICC were monitoring the situation in Bangladesh following unrest in the country.

However, Papon, who returned to Dhaka on Saturday after attending the ICC conference in Colombo, said there was no formal discussion on the matter and claimed that the ICC officials are no longer concerned about Bangladesh hosting the tournament, which is set to run on October 3-20.

"When I went there, the situation in the country was dire. There was no way to communicate outside Bangladesh. They [ICC] were concerned with the news they were getting," Papon said in a press conference yesterday.

"After seeing me, they understood that everything is all right. After that there was no discussion about this in the ICC meeting," he added.

The BCB president also informed that the next ICC board meeting will take place in Bangladesh, where the ICC election could also take place.

HP need six wickets to win against Pak Shaheens

SPORTS REPORTER

The four-day match between Bangladesh Cricket Board High Performance Unit and Pakistan Shaheens is set up for an exciting finish with the HP side needing six wickets and the Pakistanis requiring 160 runs on the final day to win the match at the Marrara Oval in Darwin yesterday.

The Pakistan Shaheens reached 136-4 at stumps on Day three, chasing 296, with Haseebullah Khan and Tayyab Tahir batting on 44 and four respectively.

BCB HP, who had resumed the day's play on 84-3, managed to reach 216 in their second innings before running out of wickets.

Overnight batters skipper Mahmudul Hasan Joy and Aich Mollah struck 65 and 58 respectively for HP while Pakistan Shaheens pacer Mohammad Ali claimed 6-63.

Pakistan Shaheens started their reply strongly, courtesy of skipper Sahibzada Farhan hitting a 70-ball 68 during a 96-run opening stand with Hasebullah.

Joy stopped Sahibzada's onslaught, sending him back in the 22nd over before HP gained a stronger foothold with pacer Rejaur Rahman Raja, who bagged three wickets in the first innings, getting two crucial wickets in successive overs.

Hasan Murad then got HP their fourth scalp before stumps were called.

Previously, the HP Unit had posted 258 in their first innings and bowled out Pakistan Shaheens for 179 to earn a 79-run lead.

McBrine shines as Ireland beat Zimbabwe

AFP, Belfast

Andy McBrine starred with both bat and ball as Ireland beat Zimbabwe by four wickets in a one-off Test in Belfast on Sunday after recovering from a dramatic top-order collapse.

Set just 158 to win in the shadow of Stormont Castle, Ireland had slumped to 33-5 at the close of Saturday's third day, with Zimbabwe left-arm quick Richard Ngarava doing the bulk of the damage in a sensational burst of 4-12 in four overs.

But in the first Test to be played in Northern Ireland, the home side lost just one more wicket on Sunday.

> Ireland's four-wicket win over Zimbabwe in the one-off Test in Belfast was their first home win in the format.

Lorcan Tucker (56) and McBrine, who completed a fine all-round match to be 55 not out, turned the tide after coming together when Ireland had collapsed to 21-5.

They added 96 for the sixth wicket before Tucker chopped on from Blessing Muzarabani with Ireland still 41 runs short of victory.

Mark Adair, however, who was born in nearby Holywood, settled quickly making 24 not out and hitting the winning boundary as Ireland finished on 158-6 to triumph with more than a day to spare.

Off-spinner McBrine was named player of the match after the 31-year-old took a combined 7-75 across Zimbabwe's two innings.

"McBrine is the guy you want to put in your cricket bag and take everywhere. Exceptionally skilful and deserved the award today," said Ireland captain Andy Balbirnie.

Victory gave Ireland, who lost their opening seven Tests, a first home win in the format and back-to-back successes after they had beaten Afghanistan for their Test first win in March.

"We did believe last night," said Balbirnie.

"We had our two best batters out (there). That partnership was special. It was fitting for Mark, hometown boy, to get us over the line."

Stormont became the second Test venue in Ireland after Malahide and the 123rd in the history of Test cricket.

"Probably didn't think growing up that there'd be a Test here," said McBrine, who comes from the Northern Ireland village of Donemana.

"We tried to be as positive as we can."

McBrine said he had been "working hard behind the scenes" on his bowling before paying tribute to Ireland's quicks.

"It was not an easy wicket to bowl on but the way they rotated allowed me to take wickets as well."

Zimbabwe captain Craig Ervine was left thinking of what might have been had they been able to continue on Saturday night when Ireland were on the ropes at 33-5.

"We'd have liked five, six more overs last night," he said. "Our games against have Ireland have always been competitive."

England pacer Mark Wood claimed five wickets in four overs -- three in a single over -- to skittle out West Indies for 175 in their second innings, making things easier for the batters as England had only 82 runs to chase down on the third day of the final Test in Edgbaston yesterday. England skipper Ben Stokes, who promoted himself to open the innings, then butchered the Windies bowling attack to lead England to a crushing 10-wicket win before tea and complete a 3-0 series whitewash with more than two days to spare. Stokes smashed an unbeaten 28-ball 57, getting to his fifty off just 24 balls -- fastest by any England batter in the format.

Nationwide crackdown, arrests go on

552 more held taking total number of arrestees to 8,914 in 11 days

STAR REPORT

At least 552 more people were arrested in the capital and elsewhere in the 36 hours till 6:00pm yesterday as the nationwide crackdown against protesters and opposition parties continues.

They were arrested in cases filed over the recent violence across the country.

Some 8,914 people, including many BNP and Jamaat leaders, have been arrested in 594 cases in 46 districts, including Dhaka, over the last 11 days since July 18.

Of them, 6,150 people were held outside the capital.

So far, the Dhaka Metropolitan Police has arrested 2,764 people in 229 cases filed with different police stations over violence, vandalism, and arson, said DMP sources.

Of them, 228 were arrested yesterday in 22 fresh cases, it added.

According to court documents, 95 people, including several BNP and Jamaat leaders, were produced before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court in Dhaka yesterday.

Between 6:00am Saturday and 6:00pm yesterday, police arrested 309 people in 34 districts.

Of them, 50 were arrested in Chattogram, 26 in Rangpur, 25 in Narayanganj, 24 in Pabna, 20 in Rajshahi,

Tom Cruise, Lady Gaga, John Legend, Ariana Grande, and Vogue editor-in-chief Anna Wintour were among the celebrities packed into Bercy Arena on Sunday to witness the return of Simone Biles to the Olympic gymnastics stage for the qualifying round.

Biles, the most decorated gymnast in history, is back for her third Games after withdrawing from most of her events at the Tokyo Games in 2021 with mental health issues.

"It's awesome," Cruise told Reuters in the stands at the Arena.

"Great stories, great athletes. It's incredible what they do."

Legend and wife Chrissy Teigen said there was nowhere they would rather be.

Users get 5GB data for three days as compensation

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Mobile internet, used by about 14 crore people, resumed yesterday after more than ten days but popular social media platforms Facebook, TikTok, WhatsApp and YouTube would be unavailable.

As compensation, subscribers would be given a 5GB data pack for three days, as per the decision taken at a meeting yesterday at the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission headquarters with the mobile operators.

Zunaid Ahmed Palak, the state minister for ICT and telecom, presided over the meeting, where officials of different government agencies were present.

Asked when Facebook and YouTube will be back, Palak said: "Letters have been sent to the social media companies Facebook, YouTube and TikTok and they have been asked to respond to person on July 31."

In the last month, the government asked the platforms to take down fake news, propaganda, and rumours, he said at a press briefing after the meeting.

"But the number of pieces of content they have taken down and the number of platforms they have blocked are very meagre -- this is not acceptable to us. We have asked them if they want to use cyberspace in accordance with the laws and constitution of Bangladesh, as well as their community standards."

Wider ME war fear grows after Golan strike

Tel Aviv vows to 'hit the enemy hard' after rocket from Lebanon kills 12 in the Israeli-occupied territory

AGENCIES

Israeli Defence Minister Yoav Gallant yesterday vowed to "hit the enemy hard" after rocket fire from Lebanon killed 12 young people in the Israeli-annexed Golan Heights and again raised fears that the war in Gaza will spread.

Iran warned Israel any new military "adventures" in Lebanon could lead to "unforeseen consequences". Western powers, including France and Germany, condemned the attack and appealed for calm.

The European Union called for an independent probe into what happened.

Israel's army called it "the deadliest attack on Israeli civilians" since the October 7 attack that began the war in Gaza and triggered regular exchanges of fire across the Lebanese border.

- Hezbollah movement denies involvement
- Iran warns Israel against Lebanon 'adventures'
- Israeli military hits targets "deep inside Lebanese territory'
- 66 more killed in Gaza

Israel blamed Lebanon's Hezbollah movement for firing a Falaq-1 Iranian rocket but the Iran-backed group -- which has regularly targeted Israeli military positions -- said it had "no connection" to the incident.

It said, however, that it had fired one such rocket on Saturday toward an Israeli military target in the Golan.

The rocket fire in Majdal Shams, whose population are Arabic-speaking Druze, prompted Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu to return early from the United States. Upon arrival he went immediately into a security cabinet meeting, his office said.

He said "Hezbollah will pay a heavy price" for the attack, "a price it has not paid before."

The Israeli foreign ministry said Hezbollah had "crossed all red lines".

Israel's military said it had hit Hezbollah targets "both deep inside Lebanese territory and in southern Lebanon".

An Israeli drone fired two missiles at Taraiyya village in eastern Lebanon destroying a hanger and a home without causing casualties, a Lebanese security source told AFP.

Hezbollah has said its cross-border fire is an act of support for Palestinian Islamists from Hamas who have been fighting Israel's military in Gaza since October 7.

PM to attend BIMSTEC summit in Thailand

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina is set to visit Thailand to participate in the BIMSTEC summit on September 4, diplomatic sources said.

Bangladesh will be the next chair of the BIMSTEC -- the Bay of Bengal Initiative for Multi-Sectoral Technical and Economic Cooperation -- comprised of Bangladesh, Bhutan, India, Myanmar, Nepal, Sri Lanka, and Thailand.

The official and ministerial meetings of the group will take place from September 1-3. The summit will be attended by heads of the member states, including Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi.

As the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (Saarc) remains largely inactive, India is more interested in regional cooperation through BIMSTEC, officials said.

Besides, the BIMSTEC Secretariat in Dhaka is also working to sign at least four agreements including maritime transport cooperation during the summit, according to foreign ministry sources.

The maritime transport agreement would include every aspect of Police recovered the bodies of all four members of a family from their house in Nabinagar upazila of Brahmanbaria yesterday.

The deceased were identified as Sohag Mia, 33, his wife Jannat Akhter, 25, and their daughters Faria Akhter, 4, and Fahima Akhter, 2.

All four were found hanging inside the home, said Nabinagar Circle Additional Superintendent of Police Md Sirajul Islam.

"Police recovered the bodies from their house in Bijoypara area around 10:30am after being informed by locals. The exact cause of their deaths could not be ascertained immediately."

Describing the deaths as mysterious, he said police are trying to find the reason behind the incident.

The bodies were sent to Brahmanbaria General Hospital mortuary for autopsy, he added.

Concentrated fruit juice may cause diabetes in boys

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

Drinking sugary beverages and concentrated fruit juices in childhood and adolescence may raise the risk of diabetes in boys, a new study has found.

The study of about 500 children in Massachusetts, United States, found that regular consumption of sugary drinks and concentrated fruit juices in childhood is tied to a higher risk of developing Type 2 diabetes among boys compared to girls.

These findings, presented at a recent American Heart Association conference, bolster evidence of a link between consumption of beverages with added sugar and the long-term risk of Type 2 diabetes in young people.

Healthcare professionals "should caution young patients and their parents about sugary drinks and fruit juices when discussing healthy eating habits", Soren Harnois-Leblanc, lead author of the study, said.

Two out of three children and adolescents in America consume at least one sugary drink like soda, lemonade or an energy drink every day.

Studies show that overconsuming sugary drinks can not only lead to weight gain and tooth decay but also raise the risk of developing heart disease, high blood pressure, and Type 2 diabetes.

Govt set to ban Jamaat-Shibir

14-party combine makes unanimous recommendation; gazette within two days

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Awami League-led 14-party alliance yesterday unanimously recommended that the government ban Jamaat-e-Islami and Islami Chhatra Shibir for their alleged involvement in anti-state activities.

The alliance made the recommendation at a meeting at the Gono Bhaban, presided over by AL President Sheikh Hasina.

Hasina, also the prime minister, assured that her government will act on the recommendation and issue a gazette notification in this regard within two days, said sources.

"For the sake of national interests, the 14-party members unanimously agreed to ban politics of Jamaat-Shibir to eliminate the anti-state element," Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader told reporters after the meeting, which started at 5:00pm and ended around 8.

Don't mock the nation

Says HC about DB's handling of 6 protest organisers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday expressed its displeasure at detective branch taking six coordinators of quota protests to its office and showing the media that they are having food there.

"Don't mock the nation," said the HC.

"Who told you to do this? Why did they do it? Whoever is taken there [DB office] is made to sit at the dining table," the HC bench of Justice Mustafa Zaman Islam and Justice SM Masud Hossain Dolon said during a hearing on a petition.

Supreme Court lawyers Aynunnahar Siddiqua and Manzur-Al-Matin yesterday filed the petition seeking orders to have the six protesters released immediately and to stop the use of bullets against protesters.

The bench set today for further hearing and passing orders on the petition.

Quota reform protest organisers Nahid Islam and Asif Mahmud were reportedly picked up on July 19.

Nahid was found on July 20 at Purbachal and Asif was found near Niketon on July 24.

Nahid and Asif, along with protest coordinator Abu Baker Majumder, were taken again from a city hospital on July 26.

6 protest organisers still in DB custody

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Six organisers of the quota reform protest were still in the custody of Detective Branch yesterday.

Their family members were allowed to meet the organisers around 2:00pm inside the DB office.

Detectives picked up the six -- Nahid Islam, Asif Mahmud, Abu Baker Majumder, Hasnat Abdullah, Sarjis Alam, and Nusrat Tabassum -- between Friday and Sunday. The DB kept them in its custody for what it claimed is "to ensure their security".

After the family members' meeting with the organisers, Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner (DB) of DMP, said the organisers would be freed soon.

"We are talking to them, their family members. We think that they will soon return to their families," he told reporters in front of the DB office on Minto Road, responding to a query on how long the organisers would be kept in custody.

Asked about the allegation of forcing the organisers to withdraw their protest programme, Harun termed the allegation "a rumour".

"I'm humbly requesting [you] not to spread rumours. The DB is a place of trust where no one was forcibly and Sarjis Alam were picked up on July 27 and Nusrat Tabassum on July 28.

In photos and footage provided by the DB on Sunday, they were seen having food inside a room at the DB office. The DB also distributed a video clip in which Nahid was seen calling off their protest programme.

During yesterday's hearing on the petition, lawyers ZI Khan Panna, Sara Hossain, Aneek R Haque and Manzur-Al-Matin placed arguments before the bench supporting the petition.

Additional attorneys general SM Munir Mohammad Mehedi Hassan Chowdhury and Sk Md Morshed opposed it.

The bench also heard arguments from senior lawyer Md Azahar Ullah Bhuiyan.

ZI Khan Panna told the court that what was taking place in the name of the spirit of the Liberation War cannot be acceptable at all.

He said the students cannot stay in the dorms and homes, their mobile phones are being seized and checked. They cannot go to their academic institutions safely and there is curfew at night. In which country in the world are these happening?

At that, Additional Attorney General SM Munir told ZI Khan Panna that he should make such arguments in the political arena.

Sara Hossain then told the HC that six protest coordinators have been kept detained in violation of the law and the constitution.

There is no provision in the law, the constitution, and the Appellate Division's guidelines that permit the law enforcers to detain any person in the name of providing safety, she said.

She urged the court to either order the authorities concerned to immediately release the six or produce them before a court.

Aneek R Haque told the HC bench that use of bullets against the students must be stopped.

"Those, who have been shot dead in the movement, are also the assets of the state. We don't want any deaths. There are many ways to control the students' movement," he argued.

Manzur-Al-Matin argued that the home minister has said 147 people died in the clashes and according to a Prothom Alo report more than 200 people have been killed.

The government has to take the responsibility, he said.

Foreign media, including Al Jazeera, has published reports on the firing on students.

According to Al Jazeera's footage, law enforcers have fired as close as 20 yards away from the protesters, he said, adding that firing on demonstrators from helicopters cannot be allowed.

The six coordinators were made to make a statement from the DB office, he said, adding that Nahid was beaten up.

Justice Mustafa Zaman Islam, presiding judge of the bench, said there were some political issues that should not be brought before the court.

The court also asked the lawyers not to make any arguments for which the court can be made controversial.

Additional Attorney General Mehedi Hassan Chowdhury said the petition was not acceptable as it urged HC directives to prohibit law enforcers from firing on demonstrations.

"Can the petitioners ensure that BTV Bhaban, Setu Bhaban, Metro rail stations, and hundreds of vehicles and establishments would not be vandalised and torched and the prisoners in jails will not escape?"

Mehedi argued the law enforcers have taken the six coordinators into custody to ensure their security and that they have not been detained or arrested.

But the petitioners said the six have been detained by the DB, he said, arguing that the petition had not been properly prepared.

The court then asked the petitioners to reword.

Additional Attorney General Sk Md Morshed also said the six were not detained or arrested.

The HC then asked if law enforcers could keep the six confined for days without detaining them.

Additional Attorney General Morshed said the family members of the six have not claimed they were detained or arrested and have not filed the petition.

Govt set to ban Jamaat-Shibir

officers and hanging [their] bodies. It is essential to root out this anti-national force."

In 2018, the Election Commission scrapped the registration of Jamaat as a political party,rendering it ineligible to contest elections.

Founded by the controversial Islamist scholar Abul Ala Moududi in 1941, Jamaat had been banned twice before, in 1959 and 1964 in Pakistan, for its communal role.

In 1971, the party had taken a stance against the nation's independence and massacred pro-Liberation activists.

At the beginning of yesterday's meeting, Hasina branded BNP-Chhatra Dal and Jamaat-Shibir as militants, saying they are out to stop the country's development journey, reports UNB.

"The incidents occurring now are not political; rather, they are the acts of militants bent on destroying Bangladesh."

She also dismissed the notion that the recent unrest was related to the quota reform movement and attributed it instead to malicious intent.

"Their ill motives were visible; the quota reform was not an issue at all."

According to sources, Workers Party President Rashed Khan Menon; Jatiya Samajtantrik Dal President Hasanul Haque Inu; Tariqat Federation Chairman Syed Nazibul Bashar Maizbhandari; Samyabadi Dal General Secretary Dilip Barua; and Jatiya Party (Manju) General Secretary Sheikh Shahidul Islam spoke for banning Jamaat.

Accepting the recommendation by the 14-party leaders, Hasina said her government will take measures to ban Jamaat-Shibir within two days, said sources.

According to meeting sources, some members of the 14-party combine said the government should not lift the ongoing curfew until the situation is normal again, and suggested the armed forces remain deployed for at least another month, even if the curfew is lifted.

Earlier on July 20, the government, on the alliance's recommendation, imposed the nationwide curfew and deployed armed forces to assist the civil administration in ensuring national security and protecting lives and properties following the unrest centring the quota reform movement.

JP General Secretary Sheikh Shahidul Islam yesterday urged the government to reopen educational institutions in phases, adding that the ongoing HSC examinations should be completed as soon as possible, meeting sources said.

Meanwhile, Rashed Khan Menon and Hasanul Haque Inu said the ruling party and the government high-ups should be careful while making public statements.

They mentioned Obaidul Quader's statement on Sunday that there was "a conspiracy to occupy the Gono Bhaban in a manner similar to the events in Sri Lanka, had the curfew not been imposed".

They opined that such remarks may erode people's confidence in the government. The prime minister endorsed their opinion.

Quader, who was at the meeting, claimed he did not say it in that manner and the media misquoted him.

Inu then said, "Sometimes a bishop, a knight, and even the queen has to be sacrificed to protect the king."

Referring to a photo of the six detained protest organisers eating at the DB office, Menon said such activities by a government official carries a wrong message to the people, and that a political crisis should be dealt with by the politicians.

People do not trust political solutions given by bureaucrats, and the statement made by the protesters from the DB office is nothing but a mockery, meeting sources quoted him as saying.

To this, the PM said she will take care of Additional Commissioner (DB) of DMP Harun Or Rashid, who is also at the helm of the Detective Branch.

Earlier at the meeting, Hasina said her government will not spare anyone involved in the mayhem centring the quota reform movement.

She asked the home minister to nab all those responsible for the vandalism.

She also directed him not to consider any criminal as a "protester".

Hasina asked the law minister to ensure that none of those arrested over vandalism can escape through "loopholes in the law".

students after breaking up a protest by some 100 students in Jamal Khan area yesterday afternoon.

Witnesses said university and college students gathered at Cheragi intersection around 3:00pm to hold a rally. A large number of police, BGB, APBn, and army personnel were deployed in the area.

Tension rose when 100-150 leaders and activists of the Jubo League and Chhatra League, led by Chattogram City Corporation ward-21 Councillor Saibal Das Sumon, reached the area and verbally abused the protesters.

At one stage, the Jubo League and Chhatra League men beat up two students and handed them over to police, who got them on to a prison van.

As some students attempted to free the detainees, police used truncheons.

Protesters then gathered near the Kadam Mubarak mosque and chanted slogans.

Around 4:00pm, police fired stun grenades and teargas canisters at them. Three cops and a journalist, videographer Abu Jabed of News 24 TV, were injured in the incident.

Another group of protesters threw brick chunks at police near Andarkilla Shahi Jame Masjid around 5:00pm, prompting law enforcers to fire rubber bullets and teargas at them.

Mostafizur Rahman, deputy commissioner (south) of Chattogram Metropolitan Police, said police took action as all gatherings and protests are banned during the pause in curfew.

In the capital, law enforcers yesterday detained at least 70 people from different areas.

Abdul Kader, a coordinator of the quota reform protest, on Sunday night announced on social media that they would stage demonstrations in eight locations in the capital -- Science Lab, Gate-8 of North South University, Jatiya Press Club, BNS Centre in Uttara, Mirpur-10, ECB Chattar in Mirpur, Rampura, and Mohakhali.

Witnesses said several hundred protesters gathered near the ECB Chattar around noon. Police chased them around 1:00pm when they started chanting slogans.

Law enforcers detained at least 18 demonstrators there.

Police detained at least 10 protesters from Mirpur-10 intersection, 10 from in front of Star Kabab in Dhanmondi, two from Purana Paltan, six from Badda, and 10 from Uttara.

Seeking anonymity, two security staffers of a private university in Bashundhara Residential Area said, "Students were standing in front of gates 1, 2 and 5 of the university since 10:00am. Police detained at least 15 of them and got them on to three police vans until 1:30pm."

Students at Jahangirnagar University held a protest demanding unconditional release of the coordinators of the quota reform protest and the other detainees.

Several JU teachers expressed solidarity with the protesters.

In Rajshahi, several hundred students of Rajshahi University blocked the Dhaka-Rajshahi highway from 12:20pm to 1:00pm protesting the detention of the six coordinators of the quota reform movement.

They chanted slogans demanding justice for the deaths of the fellow students and those responsible for the deaths be held accountable.

At Barishal University, Chhatra League activists allegedly attacked protesters near the university's administrative building around 2:00pm, leaving at least 15 students injured.

Sujoy Subho, one of the injured, said some 40-50 Chhatra League men, armed with sticks, attacked students when they were discussing their next course of action.

Students of Government Brojomohun (BM) College held a protest in Barisal city's Nathullabad Central Bus Terminal area.

In Noakhali, students blocked the Dhaka-Noakhali highway in front of Noakhali Zilla School from 2:00pm for three hours.

In Thakurgaon, over 200 students took out a procession with black flags demanding justice for the recent killings of students.

In Mymensingh, police broke up a demonstration by students in the city's Firoz-Jahangir Chattar in the afternoon.

In Cumilla, pro-Awami League men, armed with sticks and iron rods, obstructed around 60 Comilla University students from moving towards the Dhaka-Chattogram highway.

The students later staged demonstrations in front of the university around 3:00pm.

In Sylhet, a group of students of Shahjalal University of Science and Technology staged a protest at the main entrance to the university at 3:00pm. They later took out a procession.

Bangladesh Udichi Shilpigosthi, a cultural platform, could not hold a protest rally in front of the Jatiya Press Club yesterday afternoon as the area was cordoned off by law enforcers.

FRESH PROGRAMME

Some coordinators of the quota reform protest yesterday rejected the government's call for nationwide mourning today for those killed in the recent violence.

They urged the students of all educational institutions and the general people to cover their face with red clothes and upload their photos online today instead.

The coordinators made the call in a press release, signed by Mahin Sarker, a coordinator of the Anti-discriminatory Student Movement. Copies of the release were sent to the media around 9:30pm.

"We would like to tell the government that no movement in the history of Bengal could be suppressed by firing at students. Immediately accept our nine-point demand and bring stability to the country," said the statement.

Their demands include an apology from Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, and resignations of Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan, Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader, Education Minister Mohibul Hasan Chowdhoury, Law Minister Anisul Huq, State Minister for Information and Broadcasting Mohammad Ali Arafat, and State Minister for Post, Telecommunications, and Information Technology Zunaid Ahmed Palak.

As per the Saturday's decision by the government, the ongoing curfew in Dhaka, Narayanganj, Gazipur and Narsingdi will be relaxed from 7:00am to 6:00pm today.

Nationwide mourning today

All places of worship including mosques, temples, and churches were also asked to hold special prayers for the deceased.

Cabinet Secretary Mahbub Hossain confirmed the development at a press conference after a cabinet meeting at the Prime Minister's Office yesterday afternoon.

At the meeting, Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan placed a report saying that a total of 150 people were killed in the recent violence. Earlier, he said the death toll was 147.

According to The Daily Star database, at least 163 lives have been lost in the violence since July 16.

However, the death toll from the violence between agitators, law enforcers, Border Guard Bangladesh members, and ruling party activists could be much higher as The Daily Star could not reach many hospitals, where dozens of critically injured patients were taken.

Also, many families reportedly collected the bodies of their loved ones from the scene, and this newspaper could not contact those families.

The Daily Star's count of the victims is based solely on hospital and police sources.

According to the Prothom Alo, at least 210 people died in the violence as of Sunday.

protesters is a witch- hunt by the authorities to silence anyone who dares to challenge the government and is a tool to further perpetuate a climate of fear. Reports suggest that these arrests are entirely politically motivated, in retaliation for the exercise of human rights. It is essential that the Bangladeshi authorities respect people's rights to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly," reads the statement.

"The authorities must ensure that any arrests comply with due process safeguards and are fully in accordance with international human rights law and standards, including but not limited to the right to a free and fair trial, the right to be informed of the reasons for arrest and the place of detention, and the right to be brought promptly before a judge, and to have access both to legal counsel and to their family.

"The authorities should ensure that peaceful activists are not prosecuted on trumped-up charges as punishment for participating in protests. Peaceful protest is not a crime, and this witch-hunt must end," said the rights body.

It's a flagrant deception

Says TIB on making protesters read statement in DB custody

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Detaining quota reform protest coordinators as a "weapon to suppress" the movement and making them read a statement withdrawing their programme on video is "flagrant deception and unconstitutional", said Transparency International Bangladesh yesterday.

In a statement, the anti-graft watchdog condemned the act, terming it "hypocrisy and illegal".

"To justify human rights violations -- large-scale killings, detentions, and unjust actions -- carried out by law enforcement agencies and to suppress the movement, the government, ruling party, state-run institutions, and Detective Branch (DB) have employed false narratives that are "self-destructive, anti-people, and cruel

ASIFUR RAHMAN

Key organiser of the quota reform protest, Nahid Islam, a Dhaka University student, was allegedly picked up by law enforcers early on July 20, although law enforcers deny their involvement.

However, video footage obtained by The Daily Star shows that a vehicle of Rapid Action Battalion-3, one SUV, a microbus, and two motorcycles were present near the Sabujbagh residence from where Nahid was picked.

Nahid was found battered and unconscious in Purbachal over 24 hours later. He claimed he was physically tortured until he lost consciousness.

After regaining consciousness under a bridge, Nahid managed to reach home by auto-rickshaw and was subsequently hospitalised.

But he was picked up again while undergoing treatment at Gonoshasthaya Nagar Hospital on July 26. This time, the Detective Branch (DB) claimed to have taken him and other coordinators of the quota reform movement into custody for "their safety".

Before Nahid was picked up by the DB again, he told this newspaper that plainclothes men, numbering 25-30, detained him after 2:00am the night he was picked up for the first time.

They broke into his friend's house, dragged him out, and took him inside a microbus, he said.

Before they blindfolded him, he spotted a Rab vehicle, he said, which is consistent with the eye witness accounts and the video this newspaper saw.

WHAT WE SAW

The Daily Star reviewed footage from various CCTV cameras near the building where Nahid was picked up from his friend's residence.

The footage confirms that at least one Rab-3 vehicle was present at the scene between 1:51am and 2:12am on July 20.

Around 1:51am, two motorcycles, an SUV, a microbus, and a Rab van stopped in front of a camera near Nandipara Govt Primary School in Sabujbagh.

Nahid's friend's house, where he slept that night, was only 100-150 metres away from this location.

These vehicles came from the Nandipara intersection side and returned from the same side after around 20 minutes.

During this period, Nahid was picked up, according to witnesses and Nahid himself.

Notably, the nationwide curfew had already begun by then, and only ambulances and a few trucks were moving around the area, aside from the vehicles that arrived with the Rab-3 vehicle.

CCTV footage showed that both motorcycles had pillions and most of the car seats were occupied. The first microbus was closer to the house.

The SUV and the Rab-3 van waited for 10 minutes. Four to five men were seen waiting and talking on the phone behind the SUV.

'Don't harass innocents'

NHRC urges authorities to arrest saboteurs based on reliable information

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

National Human Rights Commission (NHRC) Bangladesh yesterday urged the authorities concerned to identify and try the saboteurs based on reliable and specific information in connection with the recent violence.

It also urged them not to make mass arrests and respect the human rights of the citizens.

Kamal Uddin Ahmed, chairman of the commission, said, "A number of lives were lost and national properties was destroyed in the violence, which is very unfortunate and a violation of human rights. No innocent person should be harassed while identifying and arresting the criminals."

More than just NUMBERS

A 17-year-old boy shot dead in Rampura. A 16-year-old boy died from bullet wounds in Jatrabari. A 32-year-old furniture shop employee fatally shot in Chattogram. At least 163 lives (the actual number could be much higher) were lost when law enforcers opened fire on protesters during the recent unrest. But these victims are not just statistics; they are children, husbands, and friends. In this report, we try to know the story of three such names among these tragic numbers.

'Ma don't worry, I'll be home in two minutes'

Samudra's mother recalls his last words after the 17-year-old died of bullet injuries

MASHFIQ MIZAN

On every Friday, Mostofa Zaman Samudra, a 17-year-old SSC graduate, goes to Juma prayers with his father, Tajul Kal.

They did the same on July 19.

After prayers, Tajul returned to their rented apartment in Rampura, Samudra did not. He told his father that he would meet his friends, promising him he'd return shortly.

But he did not.

Hours later, Samudra's lifeless, bullet-ridden body was brought home on a rickshaw-van after police and BGB opened fire at protesters in Rampura.

Samudra was supposed to get admitted to Siddheswari College just a day later; instead, his body returned to his village in Munshiganj, wrapped in a white shroud for burial.

A MOTHER'S WORST FEAR REALISED

As Samudra did not return home, his mother, Masuda Jaman, grew anxious. She immediately called him. "Ma don't worry, I'll be home in two minutes," he reassured her.

However, as minutes turned into hours and repeated calls went unanswered, her fears intensified.

By that time, horrors engulfed Rampura, Banasree, and Badda as bullets

I couldn't save my boy, three bullets had pierced his body

Says father of slain 16-year-old Akash

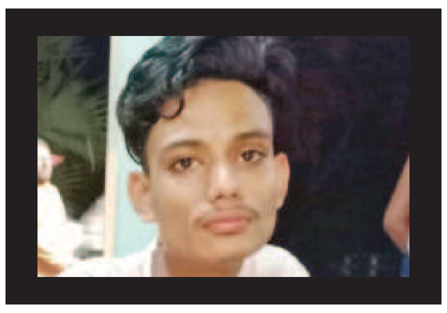
"We were going for breakfast when my son got shot. He died without even having something to eat."

Akram Hossain could not hold back his tears as he recounted the tragic incident on July 21, when his eldest son, Arafat Rahman Akash, 16, was fatally shot on Chittagong Road in Dhaka's Jatrabari area.

"Around 11:00am, after the curfew was relaxed, Akash and I went out to have breakfast near our home in Masjid Goli (alley). Suddenly there were shots fired, and people scattered and ran to wherever they could take shelter.

Akash was a few yards behind me, so I looked back to see if he was alright, and saw him lying on the ground," said Akram, a fruit vendor from Wasekpur village under Noakhali's Sonaimuri upazila.



"At first, I thought he was scared and had laid down to take cover. As I got closer, I found him in a pool of blood. He was murmuring, 'Father, save me... save me'. But I couldn't save my boy. Three bullets had pierced his body."

Faruk's family stares at a bleak future

MOHAMMAD SUMAN

Mohammad Faruk, 32, an employee at a furniture shop in Shulakbahar, Chattogram, was fatally shot as Jubo League and Chhatra League clashed with quota reform protesters on July 16.

He was returning to work from lunch in the Muradpur area.

Faruk's family, comprising his wife Sima Akhter, their eight-year-old son Fahim, and five-year-old daughter Fahima, now faces an uncertain future.

Faruk's father, Abdul Dulal, a van driver, said, "Faruk was crossing the road after having lunch at a hotel in Muradpur when he was shot around 3:00pm on July 16. He did not belong to any party or participate in the movement. Still, my son had to die," Abdul Dulal told The Daily Star.

Faruk, the second of four brothers and two sisters, was a pillar of support for his family.

He consistently sent money for his mother's medical treatment while managing his family's expenses. Despite their roots in Noakhali's Begumganj area, Faruk and his family had been living in Lalkhan Bazar, Chattogram, since his marriage to Sima Akhter 17 years ago.

Sima Akhter recounted their 17-year marriage and Faruk's eight years of work at the furniture store. "Faruk was always worried about the education of our children," she said.

On July 28, Abdul Dulal, accompanied by Sima and the children, visited the

CENTRAL POLICE HOSPITAL

At least 259 cops took treatment there

DIPAN NANDY

For over a week, three-year-old Namira and one-year-old Nadira have had their smiles wiped off their faces.

Their father Syed Masudur Rahman, a traffic police sergeant, was their only playmate at home.

After returning home from work, he would spend some quality time with them before dinner.

But now, he lies on a hospital bed after a mob attacked him with iron rods and pipes.

On July 18, Masud, a sergeant of the Wari Traffic Division under Dhaka Metropolitan Police, left his Aftabnagar home for his duty.

But even before he could make it, he was attacked right near his house.

"I was beaten indiscriminately with sticks. I tried to enter a bank for shelter but I failed. Then, I was attacked again," he told The Daily Star at the Central Police Hospital in the capital's Rajarbagh recently.

With injuries to his head, face, hands, and legs, Masud contacted his seniors after he was finally able to take shelter inside the bank.

"But they couldn't reach the spot. Then my wife came there and begged the attackers to let me go. They made me apologise too. Finally, I was let go."

Masud said his right hand had been broken. He had to get eight stitches on one finger and 10 on his head.

"I could tell from the nature of the attack on me and other policemen that the attackers weren't students. Instead, students tried to stop them."

At least 47 other cops are currently being treated at the hospital, with one of them in the Intensive Care Unit.

Speaking to this correspondent, many of them, like Masud, said the attacks were not carried out by students.

that we have to probe each and every death through independent inquiries. Those responsible must be brought to justice. There can be no extrajudicial killings. This has to be solved politically and through discussion with all the stakeholders."

Regarding the violence, he said the damages to properties can be restored but "can we ever get back the lives that have been lost?"

"Each life is worth more than crores. They're priceless."

He also called upon the authorities to refrain from arresting students.

"I also have a message for students... this is your country, you have to build it... it is your responsibility... Do not lose hope. Better days will come," he said.

Urging patience, he asked students to stay on the path of truth and keep raising their voices against injustice.

"Law enforcement agencies are conducting drives to arrest saboteurs and miscreants to ensure public safety. In this case, various media outlets have published information about mass arrests. Many are terrified by it," he added.

The commission believes that collective efforts by all will ensure public safety and restore normalcy as soon as possible.

At least 259 cops

The same day he was attacked, Constable Aminul Islam of Khilgaon Police Station was on duty near Bangladesh Television Centre in Rampura.

"Soon after my duty started at 10:00am, chases and counter-chases took place with agitators for around three hours. Suddenly, we were surrounded from three sides. When I tried to move towards Hatirjheel, I bumped into another policeman and fell to the ground. That's when attackers began beating me up.

"Some pedestrians rescued me and brought me to the hospital."

In Uttara, Md Mohiuddin, assistant sub-inspector of Uttara West Police Station, was attacked the same day.

"I was going towards Abdullahpur on a motorcycle and was stopped by a group of attackers in front of the Kuwait Bangladesh Friendship Hospital. They attacked me with rods and machetes."

I entered the kitchen of a house to save myself, but they broke down the door and attacked me again. They beat me for around 25 minutes."

He said a group of people then tried to take him to the Kuwait Bangladesh Friendship Hospital but the attackers vandalised the ambulance he was in.

"They even beat the nurses inside the hospital. I could not get any treatment for almost five hours. My wife came to the hospital and they also beat her... Around 1:00am, I was able to get on a CNG-run auto-rickshaw to head to the police hospital, but I was attacked once again at Mohakhali."

Constable Motaleb was attacked in Jatrabari.

"I was not in full uniform. But the moment the attackers in the area realised I was a policeman, they struck me on my head... I lost consciousness and don't remember anything after that."

Sheikh Md Rezaul Hayder, deputy inspector general and director of Central Police Hospital, said, "We've tried to provide treatment to all the injured policemen to the best of our abilities. We've already operated on around 30 critically injured patients.

"These treatments would cost up to Tk 2 crore, but we're providing them for free. A total of 259 police officials have been admitted to the hospital and three of them died."

Prime Minister's office. They received Tk 50,000 in cash and a check for Tk 10 lakh. "I will not get my son back now. I am more worried about the future of my grandchildren," said Abdul Dulal. "This money may be of temporary benefit, but I don't know what the future will be like. Allah knows best."

Who picked up Nahid first time?

They opened the trunk twice, at 1:54am and 2:00am.

On the first occasion, one man placed his helmet in the trunk and later retrieved tools, including a large cutter.

Around 2:02am, the SUV moved towards the residence Nahid was in, followed by the Rab van.

Multiple eyewitnesses had told The Daily Star that the plainclothes men broke the locks of the building gates to detain Nahid.

A night guard from a nearby building reported that four to five of the total 25-30 plainclothes men jumped over the boundary wall to pass through the main gate.

He said they broke the lock of the main gate with an iron rod first. "Then they brought a cutter from a car and cut two locks of a collapsible gate," he said.

The CCTV footage also showed all three cars and the two bikes leaving the area at 2:12 am. Throughout the entire period, none of the eight uniformed Rab officials, including the driver, were seen getting out of their car.

Only people in plainclothes, which came in the other vehicles alongside the Rab one, moved around.

The Daily Star identified the SUV's registration number as Dhaka Metro Gha 144385.

However, attempts to verify the registration number with the Bangladesh Road Transport Authority were unsuccessful as their server did not respond until filing of this report yesterday night.

Despite repeated attempts, Lt Col Kazi Zobayer Alam Shovon, Rab-3 commanding officer, did not pick up the call.

Lt Col Munim Ferdous, director, legal and media wing of Rab, said there was no involvement of Rab in picking up Nahid on July 20.

"Those were the early hours of curfew, and we had over 300 patrolling cars across the country. It might be a misunderstanding," he said.

Supreme Court advocate Shahdeen Malik said according to legal and constitutional provisions, law enforcement agencies must produce an arrested individual before the court within 24 hours.

He said since Nahid was not presented to the court within this timeframe, the actions of the law enforcers were illegal and beyond the law.

"It's an abduction case [picking up of Nahid] ... but as there is no accountability, no police station or magistrate will accept such a case against law enforcers," the eminent jurist added.

flew. On the scene, this reporter witnessed helicopters hovering low, firing teargas canisters and sound grenades, while police and BGB troops unleashed live rounds on the crowd.

Consequently, at least 13 bodies were counted in the nearby hospitals. One of them was Samudra's, lying in a pool of blood on the floor of Delta Hospital in Rampura.

When this newspaper saw Samudra's lifeless body, his phone continued to ring, displaying the name "Ma".

His mother was still calling. Eventually, a friend of Samudra answered and informed her, "Aunty, Samudra has been shot. He's at Delta Hospital. Please come quickly."

He couldn't tell the mother that her son had already died.

Tajul and Masuda rushed to the hospital amid the chaos on streets.

Upon arrival, they were told their son had died.

Masuda could not accept this. "The doctors said he was alive when brought in but died shortly after. But my Samudra's body was still warm. I felt his heart was still beating," she recounted tearfully.

In a desperate bid to find some trace of life, they took his body to Better Life Hospital. There, the doctors confirmed the inevitable.

A bullet had pierced his hand and lodged into his rib, causing severe blood loss and, ultimately, his death, confirmed the doctors.

Now the family is struggling to cope with the loss.

"Yes, he was shot. But I won't say who shot him. We don't know who did that. We don't want justice. My son is dead. I will not get him back. What's the point of asking for justice?" Masuda asked, breaking down in tears.

When our local correspondent visited Samudra's village in Munshiganj, he saw the obvious -- a family in shock.

His parents were sitting outside, surrounded by a few relatives.

They all spoke highly of Samudra. They said even at a young age, Samudra cared deeply for his friends and family.

He used to come to Munishganj every weekend and was the centre of attention among the local children. He also helped arrange sporting events in both Munshiganj and Rampura.

theatrics," which people have no reason to trust," said TIB.

According to media, in the capital alone, over 200 cases have been filed indiscriminately against over 2,13,000 people in connection with violence in the movement, it said, adding that mass arrests are going on by law enforcement agencies.

TIB Executive Director Iftekharuzzaman said it is unethical and an abhorrent crime to force the coordinators of the movement to read out a statement in a video message to give up protests while under detention, following "abductions" in the DB headquarters under the ridiculous pretext of "providing safety."

"From what we have seen in the media, there are sufficient grounds to be concerned that the coordinators were under duress after abduction and torture under detention," he added. Moreover, there is no legal basis for "abduction or detention for safety", he added.

"Abducting and detaining students for their role in a fully non-political and peaceful movement for genuine rights is a clear violation of Article 33 of the constitution. Similarly, coercing the coordinators to call off protests by reading out a statement is a violation of Article 35(4) of the constitution," he said.

I couldn't save

"As I screamed, some people rushed in and took us to two private hospitals nearby, but neither admitted my son for treatment. Then my nephew Pavel managed an ambulance to take us to Dhaka Medical College Hospital. By the time we reached the hospital, Akash had bled to death. My son asked me to save him, but I could not..."

Akram broke down as he recounted the events to this correspondent over phone. Akram, 45, his wife Laili Begum, 35, and their daughter Fahima Sultana Ankhi, a 10th grader, are struggling to cope with their loss.

Akash, the eldest of three siblings, had joined his father in selling fruits in Dhaka after failing his Secondary School Certificate test exams last year. His younger brother Adnan, 5, is a first grader at a local madrasa.

"The headteacher of Akash's school demanded Tk 10,000 to fill up his registration form for the SSC examination, but I could not manage the money. So, Akash left his studies and moved to Dhaka around six months ago to help me sell fruits," Akram said.

Since the boy's death, his mother has been in an unstable condition, fainting frequently and unable to eat or drink.

"My son was innocent. He would never leave the house without asking me. He did not even chat with others in the area. My husband is a poor man. We live in someone else's house; we don't have our own home," Laili said.

Akash's sister Fahima added, "My brother could not even appear in the SSC exam. There is no reason for him to join the anti-quota movement. I want justice for my brother's death."

Echoing her, Akram demanded, "I want those who shot my innocent son to be identified, brought to justice, and punished."

No decision on reopening edu institutes

Says minister; teachers to continue movement over pension scheme

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Education Minister Mohibul Hassan Chowdhoury yesterday said the current situation is not conducive to reopening educational institutions. He said this during a meeting with university teachers at the education ministry regarding pension issues, reports UNB.

When asked if there had been any discussion in the cabinet yesterday about reopening primary schools, he said, "I will not comment on this now. Discussions that take place in the cabinet are not meant to be discussed outside."

Meanwhile, Nizamul Hoque Bhuiyan, secretary general of Federation of Bangladesh University Teachers Association (FBUTA), told this correspondent, "In the meeting, the participants came to an in-principle decision that teachers would be excluded from the Prottoy scheme."

The summary of the discussion would be sent to the higher authorities, to make further decisions, he added.

"Until we see a final notification, our movement will continue."

Prof Abdur Rahim, joint secretary general of the FBUTA, said, "We had a positive discussion with almost all stakeholders concerning our demands. The respective authorities did not deny the rationality of our demands."

Chief of the standing committee of the education ministry, Nurul Islam Nahid, along with the finance ministry secretary and pension scheme authorities, also attended the meeting.

VIOLENCE CASES IN PORT CITY

Over 126 students arrested in a week

FM MIZANUR RAHAMAN, Ctg

On Sunday, Rezaul Karim Kusum Chowdhury was waiting at Chattogram's 6th Metropolitan Magistrate Court for a bail petition hearing for his nephew Talha Mahmood Chowdhury, who was arrested in a violence case over the quota reform protests.

Talha, a final-year student at East Delta University, was arrested from the Agrabad area in the port city on July 17 and was handed over to Khulshi Police Station on July 18, where he was shown arrested.

However, the court rejected his bail petition.

On the court premises, Rezaul, a freedom fighter, told The Daily Star, "Police picked Talha up without verifying his identity and sent him to court. We told them that he is not involved with any political parties or violence but they did not pay heed."

"We filed two petitions for his bail but the court rejected them. Talha has already been taken for remand," he said.

Many other students and their guardians were also seen on the court premises.

Over 126 students from different educational institutions, including Chittagong University, were arrested in the past week till Sunday, according to the court's GRO sections and prison sources.

Police officials said they are arresting the anarchists who were directly involved with the subversive activities.

So far, Chattogram Metropolitan Police has arrested 532 people, including leaders and activists of BNP and Jamaat, in connection with 20 cases filed over violence and subversive activities.

Ramjan Sheikh, a first-year CU student, was arrested on July 18 in a murder case filed by police with Panchlaish Police Station.

At the court premises, his father Mostafa Sheikh, a mason by profession, said his son is innocent and not involved with any kind of politics.

"We could not trace him until police sent him to the court on July 20," he added.

In front of the court's lockup, Ramjan said, "I took part in the protests in Muradpur on July 16. On July 18, a group of BCL men came to my house in Forest Research Institute area and took me to Parkview Hospital, where injured BCL men are undergoing treatment. Later, I was handed over to police."

"A local BCL man named Arif took me from my house," he added.

However, The Daily Star could not verify Ramjan's information independently.

Meanwhile, Lutfur Rahman, a student of Finance and Banking at CU, was arrested from his residence on July 17, said Prof Hasmat Ali of the department.

"On information, six teachers, including me, went to Panchlaish Police Station. Police showed him arrested in a violence case. The duty officer told us they found some photos and videos related to the protests on his cell phone," said Prof Hasmat.

Contacted, Mokhleshur Rahman, deputy commissioner of CMP's North Zone, said, " After looking at videos and CCTV footage, we are arresting those involved in clashes on July 16 and July 18."

Meanwhile, a BCL man filed another case accusing 50 persons and 30 to 35 unnamed persons with Panchlaish Police Station.

With this, a total of 20 cases have been filed in the port city, accusing over 200 named and 30,000 unnamed people.

Arif Hossen, AC of Panchlaish Zone, said, "Seven cases were lodged with Panchlaish Police Station, five of which were lodged by BCL men and their family members, while two were lodged by police."

'My conscience brought me here today'

Says Sohel Taj after failing to meet six quota leaders

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Former state minister for home Tanjim Ahmad Sohel Taj was not allowed to meet the six coordinators of the quota reform protests when he went to visit them in the DB custody yesterday.

He visited the DB office in the capital's Minto Road around 5:00pm and stayed there for around one and a half hours.

Talking to the media afterwards, he said he asked DB chief Harun Or Rashid why these coordinators were brought here, whether they were arrested, and when they would be released.

However, Harun did not give a satisfactory answer, he said.

Sohel Taj said he had three questions for the DB chief.

"My first question was: are they arrested or taken into safe custody? The second question was: if they have been arrested, I have nothing to say. But if they have been taken into safe custody, I want to meet them," he said.

And his third question was: when will they be released from safe custody?

The DB chief replied that they will be released once he gets order from the high-ups.

Explaining his reason for coming to the DB office, Sohel Taj said there was unrest in the country centring the quota protests. Over a hundred people, including children, students and general people, have been killed, he said.

"My conscience brought me here."

"I believe there is a need for resolution. To achieve

Tying Faiyaz with ropes was a mistake

Govt tells HC

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government yesterday told the High Court that taking Dhaka College student Hasnatul Islam Faiyaz on remand and tying him with ropes was a mistake and that it will take steps so that such mistakes are not repeated.

His (Faiyaz) remand has already been cancelled and he was sent to the Child Development Centre, Additional Attorney General SM Munir told the HC bench of Justice Muhammad Khurshid Alam Sarkar and Justice SM Maniruzzaman during the hearing of a writ petition.

Supreme Court lawyer Shahdeen Malik filed the petition with the HC on Sunday, challenging the legality of taking a 17-year-old boy on a seven-day remand in a case lodged with Jatrabari Police Station on charges of "clashes and vandalism".

Yesterday, the HC bench rejected the petition, considering that it was not presented before it as the matter has become infructuous (ineffective) after Faiyaz's remand has been cancelled.

Shahdeen Malik and Md Monjur Alam moved the petition while Additional Attorney General and Acting Attorney General SM Munir and Additional Attorney General Sk Md Morshed, who represented the state, opposed it.

On July 27, Faiyaz was produced before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate Court of Dhaka, and the court placed him on a seven-day remand as the investigating officer of the case had sought.

Though the accused claimed that he is a child, the court granted the remand prayer as he failed to produce proof of his age.

On Sunday, accused Faiyaz submitted the relevant documents (SSC and birth certificates) in support of his age before the CMM court.

The court suspended his remand and sent Faiyaz to the Children's Court for hearing and passing order determining his age.

540 dorm rooms, 25 offices of 9 univs damaged: UGC

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

At least 540 rooms and 25 offices of the dormitories of nine public universities were either vandalised or damaged during the recent spell of unrest that ensued during the quota reform protests.

University Grants Commission's statistics show that universities will need at least Tk 28.80 crore to repair the damages.

UGC officials compiled the data until Sunday, collecting information from the public universities which also shows that the vice chancellor's office and residence at Rangpur's Begum Rokeya University and VC's residence at Jahangirnagar University were vanadalised.

Dhaka University VC Prof ASM Maksud Kamal said around 300 rooms of different halls were vandalised.

The university authorities will repair the halls after getting financial allocation from UGC, he added.

"We complied the data as these damaged rooms and offices will need to be repaired. We will send a proposal to the government so that universities get funds for repair work," said UGC Secretary Ferdous Zaman.

According to UGC, 300 rooms from 13 halls in DU were vandalised, some were even set on fire. The university faced damages amounting to Tk 4.93 crore.

Similarly, offices in 10 halls of Rajshahi University were vandalised, with the university suffering damages totalling Tk 4.04 crore.

A total of 226 rooms across 10 halls of Jahangirnagar University were vandalised. The university has suffered damages amounting to Tk 1.5 crore.

Meanwhile, Rangpur University suffered damages worth Tk 3.19 crore.

Bagerhat grapples with dilapidated roads

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bagerhat

A significant portion of the Bagerhat municipality's 78.30-kilometre road network is in a dilapidated state and making transportation an ordeal for its 1.5 lakh residents.

Lack of repairs and maintenance for over a decade led to the present situation, affecting peoples' daily commute and business activities, said locals.

Visiting different areas across Bagerhat town, this correspondent found that most of the major thoroughfares, including the ones connecting between Noor Mosque and LGED Intersection, Rahat Intersection and Chanmari Bridge, as well as the road leading to Government Women's College, are in a deplorable condition.

Even the road along the central bus terminal, and those in residential areas like Kharadwar, Basabat, and Sahapara, are barely passable.

"We have to ply the roads through numerous potholes daily, amid discomfort to both passengers and ourselves, while bearing risk of frequent accidents," said Ajit Das, an easy-bike driver.

Zakir Sheikh, a local businessman, said, "Commuting daily through these dilapidated roads to workplace is a challenging task, even for pedestrians."

Badol Das, a bus driver, said their vehicles often sustain damages due to the poor condition of the roads, especially the one connecting the central bus terminal.

Residents, commuters, and transport workers urged the authorities concerned to repair and renovate the roads urgently to mitigate their sufferings.

Contacted, Mohammad Khaled Hossain, deputy commissioner of Bagerhat, acknowledged the issue.

"Work to repair 11 roads in the town has begun, while plans are on to initiate work on 11 more roads. Hopefully the situation will improve once the renovation works are completed," he said.

> Everything I have received in my artistic life is an achievement. However, the love of the people is the greatest achievement of an artist's life.

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

Today marks the 71st birthday of veteran actress Babita.Recently, she was diagnosed with COVID-19. She returned home after four days of treatment at a private hospital in the capital.

Babita began her journey in cinema 50 years ago. From romantic to social films, the actress is known for her mesmerising performance throughout her career. She has countless fans both at home and abroad.

The Daily Star caught up with her to learn about her health updates, her birthday plans, and more.

"Suddenly, I contracted the virus, however, I returned home after the tests came back negative. I am still feeling weak, and doctors also suggested to take plenty of rest," shared the actress.

As we spoke, she sighed that she was supposed to spend her birthday with her son in Canada. "I was so careful, yet, I got infected with COVID. Sadly, despite confirming my tickets I couldn't visit my son."

Babita elaborated that she doesn't have any plans for her birthday. "As soon as I return to normal health, I will fly to Canada. I wish to spend time with my son. Today, I am missing him a lot."

Babita is grateful to everyone who wished her on her birthday. "So many people reached out to me, and I am grateful to them. People still love me today, and this makes me feel that life is extremely beautiful."

When asked about her achievements during her entire career, the once sensational actress said, "Everything I have received in my artistic life is an achievement. However, the love of the people is the greatest achievement of an artist's life. People's love is the biggest achievement of an artist's life. There can be no greater reward than this."

Recalling a memory from a year ago, Babita said, "Last year, a significant event happened in my life. As I visited my son during my birthday, I went to Dallas from Canada. The mayor there honoured me with a lifetime achievement award. I will always remember the event."

When asked about her once favourite place, BFDC, the Asani Sanket actress said, "I haven't been to BFDC in a long time. I don't feel like going. As far as I know, the floors from our time are being demolished. There will be a multi-story building there."

She further said, "We have countless joyful memories surrounding BFDC. There are memories of shooting many movies there."

Badshah becomes first Asian rapper to hit 1b views

Indian rapper Badshah's popular rendition of Kala Chashma, featuring Katrina Kaif and Siddharth Malhotra from Baar Baar Dekho (2016) has surpassed 1 billion views on YouTube.

This is the first time an Indian rapper has reached such a milestone.

The original song was composed by Prem Hardeep and Kam Dhillon, while Badshah composed the remixed version. The film's song features the voices of Amar Arshi, Badshah, and Neha Kakkar.

Kala Chashma became an international sensation almost a year after its release when it got popular for dancing reels on TikTok.

Marzuk Russell reports fake Facebook profiles to police

Lyricist and actor Marzuk Russell has reported numerous fake Facebook accounts to the Detective Branch (DB) of Police. These impostor accounts, which post provocative statuses against government officials, have caused significant embarrassment for him, according to the actor.

On Sunday, Marzuk visited the DB office on the capital's Minto Road to seek redress.

Marzuk revealed there are over 50 fake accounts using his name and photo, some with more followers than his real account. He expressed deep embarrassment and noted the confusion these accounts cause among his family and fans.

He urged his followers to stay away from the fake profiles and has previously gone live to warn them.

However, the overall death toll from the violence between agitators, law enforcers, Border Guard Bangladesh members, and ruling party activists, could be much higher as The Daily Star could not reach many hospitals, where dozens of critically injured patients were taken.

Also, many families reportedly collected the bodies of their loved ones from the scene, and this newspaper could not contact those families.

The Daily Star's count of the victims is based solely on hospital and police sources.

Meanwhile, a government report presented to Cabinet yesterday by Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan put the death toll at 150.

Cabinet Secretary Mahbub Hossain informed journalists of the development at a press conference after the cabinet meeting held at the Prime Minister's Office (PMO) in the afternoon.

On Sunday, the home minister said at least 147 people died during the recent violence.

Yesterday's arrests across the country include two in Thakurgaon, eight in Madaripur, three in Dinajpur, 24 in Rangpur, seven in Feni, 69 in Gazipur, one in Sylhet, five in Tangail, 18 in Rajshahi, 19 in Bogura, three in Gaibandha, one in Barguna, 33 in Narsingdi, 51 in Narayanganj, six in Joypurhat, three in Khulna, 11 in Pabna, 20 in Kushtia, five in Mymensingh, 18 in Kishoreganj, five Netrokona, four in Satkhira, six in Naogoan, six in Cumilla, four in Natore, two in Panchagarh, 23 in Chattogram, one in Chandpur, two in Chuadanga, two in Manikganj, three in Savar, one in Bhola, one in Nilphamari, four in Brahmanbaria, two in Noakhali, three in Munshiganj, two in Laxmipur, seven in Sirajganj and one in Barishal.

Besides, Rab yesterday said they have so far arrested 334 people across the country, including 83 in Dhaka, since July 18 over the recent violence.

MORE ON REMAND

Two Dhaka courts yesterday placed nine more people, including a former Brac University teacher, a quota movement coordinator, and several BNP leaders, on remand in two cases filed over the recent violence.

Asif Mahtab, a former teacher of Brac University, and Arif Sohel, one of the coordinators of the quota reform movement and a student of Jahangirnagar University, were placed on a six-day remand each in a case filed over the attack on Setu Bhaban in the city on July 18.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Md Mainul Islam passed the order after investigating officer Abu Sayeed Miah, an inspector of the Detective Branch of Police, produced them before the court with a 10-day remand prayer.

Asif Mahtab was picked up from his Dhaka residence around 1:00am on Saturday, while Arif Sohel was picked up from his home near the JU around 4:00am on Sunday, according to family members.

Meanwhile, BNP chairperson's special assistant Shamsur Rahman Shimul Biswas and six others were placed on a four-day remand each in a case filed over vandalism at the Bangladesh Television (BTV) Bhaban in Rampura on July 18.

The six others are BNP's Dhaka North City unit President Saiful Alam Nirob, Dhaka South City unit President Rafiqul Alam Majnu, former BNP lawmaker M Rashiduzzaman Millat, Senior Joint Convenor of Jatiyatabadi Jubo Dal of Ward No-19 unit Mohiuddin Hridoy, Jatiya Samajtantrik Dal Chairman Syed Ehsanul Huda, and BNP leader Md Tariqul Islam.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Md Rashidul Alam passed the remand order after case investigating officer Mohammad Yasin Shikder, also a DB inspector, produced them before the court with a seven-day remand prayer.

Earlier in the day, all the accused were shown arrested in the case.

They were produced before the court upon completion of their five-day remand in a case filed over the attack on Setu Bhaban on July 18.

restoration of the overall educational environment.

Additionally, they asked the government to declare a period of national mourning to honour and respect those killed and seriously injured.

The citizens demanded the immediate disclosure of the actual number, names, and identities of the deceased, injured, and affected individuals. The government must provide adequate compensation to the families of the deceased, take full responsibility for the medical treatment of the injured, and ensure the rehabilitation of those who have lost their eyes and limbs, they said.

The eminent citizens strongly condemned the arbitrary arrests and detention of students and citizens based on fabricated charges and urged the government to cease these repressive activities, dismantle torture cells, and restore a conducive educational environment by addressing the students' demands.

Unlawful arrests, detentions, and harassment by police and Rab must cease immediately, the statement read.

Furthermore, they called for the lifting of the curfew and the withdrawal of all equipment used for repression and intimidation.

They also emphasised the need to ensure the free flow of information by ending the control over the internet and stopping the harassment of dissenters.

The statement also urged the people to rise above party and play an active and responsible role in this critical situation.

The statement was signed by prominent human rights activists Sultana Kamal, Dr Hameeda Hossain, Khushi Kabir, Rasheda K Choudhury, Dr Iftekharuzzaman, Dr Meghna Guhathakurta; economists, Dr Wahiduddin Mahmud, Dr Hossain Zillur Rahman, Professor Anu Muhammad, Dr Debapriya Bhattacharya; lawyers and constitutional experts Advocate ZI Khan Panna, Advocate Syeda Rizwana Hasan, Professor Dr Asif Nazrul, Dr Shahdeen Malik; women's rights activist Shirin Huq, and 59 others.

happens when a blow places more pressure on the bones than they can withstand.

In Mehedi's case, at least one bullet pierced through inches under his right knee.

A student of journalism at Stamford University Bangladesh, he was hit near Better Life Hospital in Rampura area around 4:00pm when he was standing on a footpath during violence centring on quota protests, according to family sources.

First, he was treated in a private hospital in the area, from where he was later taken to Holy Family.

His detailed medical records could not be obtained as four policemen stood guard around his bed yesterday noon. But five medical professionals of the hospital familiar with his condition said he was now out of danger, but under heavy medication to fight infections.

Utpal Barua, officer-in-charge of Ramna Police Station, confirmed that police personnel were guarding Mehedi in shifts round the clock.

"He is under arrest in two cases, including one filed over the attack on BTV centre," the OC told The Daily Star last night.

Police will take him to the police station or produce him before the court upon his discharge, hospital sources said, citing conversations among police officials that they overheard.

Mehedi's father Jamal Uddin cannot believe this.

An office assistant at a private company for 23 years, Jamal said he sacrificed way too much to support his son's education. For many years, his colleagues also offered financial assistance.

Over a year ago, Mehedi opened a shoe store in Malibagh with a friend to support his family as well as his education, said Jamal, who cannot even visit the hospital to see his son out of fear that he might get arrested and lose his job.

Now Jamal blames himself for ever sending his son to school in the first place.

"I will never again tell anyone to send their children to schools. Because when they grow up, students learn to protest. If my son were a rickshaw-puller, he would not have joined the quota protests. Then he would not have been in this predicament today. Is it not?" he said, and started sobbing.

systematic repression at educational institutions by pro-government student bodies and the anarchy in the state and at educational institutions over the past five decades since independence, said Prof Ferdous.

"We support every demand of the students," he said.

Referring to pre-liberation era history, Prof Abdul Hasib Chowdhury, former president of Buet Teachers' Association, said in February 1969, Prof Shamsuzzoha embraced martyrdom while protecting students and now they have gathered here as his successors.

"Our students, who are fighting for their rights and against inequality, are the successors of freedom fighters," he said.

Prof Kamrul Hassan Mamun, of Dhaka University's physics department, said a professor from the University of California, after watching foreign media, expressed concern over the situation in Bangladesh. "But where are the teachers of our country? Why so a few teachers are here?

Nasir Uddin Ahmed, associate professor of Jagannath University's English department, criticised police for filing cases against students and urged the authorities to stop such practices. He also demanded reopening of universities so that students can return to studies.

Dhaka University teacher Rushad Faridi, BRAC University teacher Saimum Reza Talukder, Khulna University Prof Abdullah Harun Chowdhury, and Jahangirnagar University Prof Masud Imran, among others, spoke at the rally.

Meanwhile, the Dhaka University authorities yesterday urged law enforcement agencies and other concerned to ensure no innocent student is harassed over the recent violence.

The university administration has instructed students to report to the Proctor's Office if they face any harassment, said a press release.

Students will be provided with necessary assistance in such cases, it added.

Noted citizens

Moreover, in cases filed by police, general students and public have been made responsible for the violence. This has raised questions in the minds of ordinary citizens about the entire investigation process. There is a demand to unveil the truth behind these incidents. Though newspapers reported at least 209 deaths in the violence, the official count is 147," the release reads.

Attempts have been made to control the students involved in the protests through various violent means, including torture, shootings, and mass arrests. There have been allegations of gross violations of the constitution, customary law, and human rights, it adds.

Therefore, uncovering the causes of these incidents, fair investigation and trial have become a necessity, it said.

The commission members are former justice of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court Md Abdul Matin, lawyer Sultana Kamal, senior lawyer ZI Khan Panna, senior journalist Abu Sayeed Khan, Prof Gitiara Nasrin, senior journalist Ashraf Kaiser, lawyer Anik R Haque, Prof Tanzimuddin Khan, and writer and researcher Maha Mirza.

Lawyer Tobarak Hossain, lawyer Sara Hossain, lawyer and teacher Shahdeen Malik, writer and educationist Prof Salimullah Khan, teacher Kazi Mahfuzul Haque Supan, lawyer Rashna Imam, lawyer Jyotirmoy Barua, and teacher Saimum Reza Talukder will serve as advisors to the commission.

The commission has urged people to send all information about various violent acts -- torture, killings, shootings, threats, cases, and human rights violations -- related to the students' protest since July 1 to it soon.

Any kind of information, including audio, video, photographs, and text can be sent, said the press release signed by Prof Tanzimuddin Khan and Maha Mirza, member secretaries of the commission.

French fibre optic cables hit by 'sabotage'

AFP, Paris

Fibre-optic cables in several parts of France have been "sabotaged", police said yesterday, three days after the rail system was hit by attacks that halted trains across the country.

Friday's disruption on the rail network came as Paris celebrated the opening of the Olympic Games, and wrecked the travel plans of hundreds of thousands of people.

Police said the cables of several telecoms operators had been sabotaged in six areas of France overnight from Sunday into yesterday but Paris was not affected.

AFP confirmed with major carriers including Free and SFR that they had been affected, although no major disruptions had yet been reported.

"It's vandalism," said Nicolas Chatin, spokesman for SFR, one of France's four biggest operators.

Palestinians gather to collect water amid shortages in Khan Younis in the southern Gaza Strip yesterday. Aid worker Tamer Al-Burai said water in Deir was becoming more difficult to get as more and more displaced people arrived, both from Khan Younis to the south and Bureij to the north.

Lanka President Ranil fails to get backing of largest party

REUTERS, Colombo

Sri Lanka's President Ranil Wickremesinghe yesterday failed to secure the backing of the biggest political party in parliament for his re-election bid, posing a major challenge to his prospects in the Sept.21vote.

Nearly 17 million of Sri Lanka's 22 million population is eligible to cast its ballots in the vote that is crucial to determine the future of reforms in the South Asian island nation weathering its worst financial crisis in decades.

Of the multiple candidates, Wickremesinghe, who took over the top job in July 2022 as the economy crumbled under a severe financial crisis triggered by a record shortfall of foreign exchange reserves, is seen as the most market- and reform-friendly option.

But with just one seat in parliament, he needs the support of the Sri Lanka Podujana Peramuna (SLPP), which holds a parliamentary majority and counts former President Mahinda Rajapaksa and his brother as key members, to be a stronger contender.

"The politburo decided by a significant majority that Sri Lanka Podujana Peramuna will present a candidate under the SLPP party symbol," SLPP General Secretary Salaga Kariyawasam told reporters after the party's politburo meeting.

VENEZUELA POLLS

Nicolas Maduro declared winner

Opposition, regional neighbours reject result citing fraud

AFP, Caracas

Nicolas Maduro was declared the winner of Venezuela's presidential election Sunday but the opposition and key regional neighbours immediately rejected the official results.

The opposition coalition itself claimed victory, after an election campaign tainted by claims of political intimidation and fears of fraud, and following predictions by pollsters that Maduro would lose but was unlikely to concede after more than a decade in power.

He won re-election with 51.2 percent of votes, while opposition candidate Edmundo Gonzalez Urrutia received 44.2 percent, according to the electoral council (CNE), which in its majority is loyal to the president.

Maduro, 61, addressed celebrating supporters at the presidential palace minutes after the announcement.

"I can say, before the people of Venezuela and the world, I am Nicolas Maduro Moros, the re-elected president of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela," Maduro said.

"There will be peace, stability and justice. Peace and respect for the law." But the opposition coalition insisted it had garnered 70 percent of the vote, rejecting the figures from the CNE.

"We want to say to all of Venezuela and the world that Venezuela has a new president-elect and it is (candidate) Edmundo Gonzalez Urrutia," opposition leader Maria Corina Machado told journalists, calling the official result "another fraud." Costa Rican President Rodrigo Chaves also denounced the official result as "fraudulent," while Chile's president described it as "hard to believe."

With 80 percent of the votes tallied, according to the CNE, Colombian Foreign Minister Luis Gilberto Murillo yesterday called for a total count and "independent audit" of ballots.

Quad decries dangerous South China Sea actions

Pledges to bolster maritime security in the region; Beijing says the bloc "artificially creating tension"

REUTERS, Tokyo

Foreign ministers from Australia, India, Japan and the United States said yesterday they were seriously concerned about intimidating and dangerous manoeuvres in the South China Sea and pledged to bolster maritime security in the region.

The joint statement came after talks between the so-called 'Quad' countries in Tokyo, attended by Australia's Penny Wong, India's Subrahmanyam Jaishankar, Japan's Yoko Kamikawa and Antony Blinken from the US.

In security talks between the US and Japan on Sunday, the two allies labelled China the "greatest strategic challenge" facing the region.

"We are seriously concerned about the situation in the East and South China Seas and reiterate our strong opposition to any unilateral actions that seek to change the status quo by force or coercion," the ministers said in the statement, which did not directly mention China.

They also expressed serious concern about the militarisation of disputed features and coercive and intimidating manoeuvres in the South China Sea, including dangerous use of coast guard and maritime militia vessels.

Asked about the statement at a regular news briefing yesterday, Chinese foreign ministry spokesperson Lin Jian said the Quad was "artificially creating tension, inciting confrontation and containing the development of other countries".

Chinese vessels have repeatedly clashed with Philippine ships seeking to resupply its troops on the disputed Second Thomas Shoal in recent months, although the two countries in July reached a provisional agreement that aims to ease tensions.

The Quad group said they were working on a series of initiatives to maintain "the free and open maritime order" including helping partners improve domain awareness via satellite data, training and capacity building. They also announced a plan to set up a new maritime legal dialogue.

"We are charting a course for a more secure and open Indo-Pacific and Indian Ocean region by bolstering maritime security," Blinken said in remarks to reporters after the meeting.

"In practical terms what does this mean? It means strengthening the capacity of partners across the region to know what's happening in their own waters," he added.

He said the US would continue to work with its partners to ensure freedom of navigation and the unimpeded flow of lawful maritime commerce.

The US announced plans on Sunday for a major revamp of its military command in Japan. It was among several measures announced by the allies to address what they said was an "evolving security environment", noting various threats from China including its muscular maritime activities.

"Uncertainty surrounding the international order as well as the international situation has been increasing with Russia continuing its aggression in Ukraine, attempts to unilaterally change the status quo by force in the East China Sea and South China Sea, and the launch of ballistic missiles by North Korea," Japan's Kamikawa said after the talks.

The Quad ministers also pledged to advance cooperation in cybersecurity to protect supply chains and critical infrastructure, including undersea cables.

After leaving Tokyo, Blinken and Austin will hold security talks with another Asian ally, the Philippines, as the Biden administration seeks to counter an increasingly bold China.

Biden unveils US top court reform plans

AFP, Washington

US President Joe Biden yesterday announced plans for urgent reforms to the conservative-dominated Supreme Court, in a bold but long-shot move as he seeks to make a mark in his last six months in power.

The 81-year-old Democrat is calling for a constitutional amendment to reverse the Supreme Court's recent ruling backing Donald Trump's claims of presidential immunity, according to the White House.

The Democrat is also calling for term limits for Supreme Court justices, who currently serve for life, following shock rulings such as the repeal of the nationwide right to abortion.

Biden, who was due to further unveil the plans in a speech in Austin, Texas later yesterday, will also seek an enforceable ethics code after a string of scandals. He had confirmed he would seek the reforms during an Oval Office address last week outlining his priorities after deciding to drop out of the 2024 election, though the plans have almost no hope of getting through a deeply divided Congress.

"This nation was founded on a simple yet profound principle: No one is above the law. Not the president of the United States. Not a justice on the Supreme Court of the United States. No one," Biden said in an opinion piece published yesterday.

"What is happening now is not normal, and it undermines the public's confidence in the court's decisions, including those impacting personal freedoms. We now stand in a breach."

2 dead, 100 hurt after train, truck collide

REUTERS, Moscow

At least two people were killed and up to 100 people injured yesterday when a passenger train carrying 800 people collided with a Kamaz truck, derailing eight carriages, Russian media outlets reported.

Some of the carriages lay twisted and battered beside the railway track, they said.

The train had been travelling from Kazan in Tatarstan to Adler on the Black Sea when it derailed in the southern Volgograd region near the Kotelnikovo station about 1,200 km (750 miles) south of Moscow, the emergencies ministry said.

Protesters kill soldier, injure 16 others: Pak army

REUTERS, Quetta

Pakistan's army said protesters taking part in a march in the southwestern city of Gwadar attacked security forces deployed to guard them yesterday, killing one soldier and injuring 16 others.

A nationalist ethnic Baloch movement has been demonstrating for the last two days in the port city, blocking a highway to press their demands for the release of members of their movement they allege were detained by security forces.

The army said protesters assaulted military personnel who had been deployed to guard them, killing a soldier. "The unprovoked assaults by the violent protesters have resulted in injuries to sixteen soldiers, including an officer."

There was no immediate reaction from the Baloch movement's officials. Pakistan's southwestern Balochistan province, where Gwadar is located, borders Iran and Afghanistan.

Iran seizes oil tanker in Gulf

Arrests nine crew

AFP, Tehran

Iran's Revolutionary Guards have seized a Togo-flagged oil tanker in the Gulf and arrested its nine-person crew over alleged fuel smuggling, the military force said yesterday on its Sepahnews website.

"On Friday morning, an oil tanker named Pearl G, carrying the flag of the African country of Togo... was seized by judicial order," said the Guards' statement.

The vessel is "owned by an Iraqi resident of Dubai, United Arab Emirates", and it was carrying 700,000 litres of fuel, the statement added.

The Guards' naval forces captured it near the Arash oil field, a disputed rig between Iran and Kuwait "while loading smuggled fuel from Iranian barges", it said.

"This oil tanker along with its nine crew members who are of Indian nationality have been transferred to Imam Khomeini harbour and are under surveillance."

6 protest organisers still in DB custody

taken into, tortured or forced to issue statements," Harun said, adding that the six organisers withdrew their protest as all their demands have already been met.

On Sunday night, Nahid Islam, one of the key organisers, along with five other coordinators, made the announcement via video message, which was distributed to media outlets from the DB office.

He was seen reading a statement, minutes after a photo posted by Harun on Facebook that showed them having food with Harun in a room apparently at the DB office.

Yesterday, two Supreme Court lawyers filed a writ petition with the High Court, seeking orders for the immediate release of the six. During the hearing on the petition, the HC expressed displeasure over the photo of the six organisers eating at the DB office and said, "Don't mock the nation."

"We waited for eleven hours at the DB office as we were told that Nahid and others will be released. But at midnight, DB officers said they will make decision about them [organisers] as per the court [High Court] order tomorrow [today] as a writ petition in this regard was pending," a guardian of an organiser told The Daily Star around 12:15am today, wishing anonymity.

"If we had been informed of the matter earlier, then we wouldn't have waited for this long time here. It is harassment."

This newspaper could not get DB's comments regarding the matter.

Follow SC guidelines for arrests, remand

Due process being ignored during ongoing nationwide crackdown

Amid nationwide crackdowns in response to the recent violence centring the quota reform movement, we are alarmed by the reckless disregard for Supreme Court guidelines on arrests and remands. Reports published over the last few days paint a disturbing picture of how arrestees have been treated. Between July 18 and 28, some 8,914 people, including students and BNP and Jamaat men, have been arrested in 46 districts. In Dhaka alone, 2,764 people have been arrested in 229 cases. But as claimed by relatives and lawyers, many of the suspects were picked up by plain-clothed officers who did not identify themselves, and in many cases, the accused were not produced before court within the stipulated 24-hour period. Families of many students were left in the dark as their children were picked up and only learnt of their whereabouts when they were produced before the court days later. Many on remand were also allegedly subjected to inhumane torture.

All these instances are blatant violations of the guidelines issued by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in 2016. According to the guidelines, law enforcement officials are obligated to identify themselves before arresting an individual and inform the next of kin within 12 hours. Moreover, arrests cannot be made in plainclothes, and the arrested must be allowed to contact their relatives and seek legal counsel.

It is worrying how due process is being flouted by the law enforcement personnel. Former Ducsu Vice-President Nurul Haque Nur's wife Maria Nur told Samakal that those who picked him up from their home in the early hours of July 19 did not identify themselves, and produced him before a court after 39 hours of detention. During that time, he was physically tortured to the point where he was unable to walk by himself, as he told the court. BNP leaders Aminul Haque and Sultan Salauddin Tuku also complained of being tortured in remand.

The detention of the six quota reform coordinators by the Detective Branch (DB) of DMP is another case in point. They were all picked up between Friday and Sunday—"for the sake of their security," according to the DB—in a manner that legal experts called "unconstitutional"; two of them were even undergoing treatment at the time. Then there is the case of a minor—17-year-old student Hasnatul Islam Faiyaz—who was taken to court tied with ropes and placed on a seven-day remand, which was later cancelled. We can also talk about how police falsified facts in the First Information Report (FIR) on slain university student Abu Sayed, which completely contradicts widely circulated video footages, in an apparent bid to absolve themselves of responsibility.

These are just some of the more prominent cases highlighted by the media. We understand that the law enforcement authorities are operating with a sense of urgency to restore order in these volatile times—when six days of violence took at least 163 lives across the country, not to mention the damage caused to key public infrastructures. But this is also precisely why they must operate strictly within the bounds of the law, with utmost accountability for their actions, as restoring order may not be possible without restoring confidence about their integrity. In any case, violating law and citizens' rights in the name of law enforcement is totally unacceptable.

The Supreme Court guidelines were issued to prevent police excesses and ensure accountability. There is no scope for even an iota of oversight or violation in their activities. We, therefore, urge the law enforcement authorities to look into this matter urgently and ensure that anyone accused or arrested in connection with the recent violence is treated as per court guidelines and constitutional obligations.

NBR must answer for repeated failure

It has made a mockery of the revenue target set every year

The National Board of Revenue (NBR) has, quite predictably, failed to meet its revenue target for the 12th consecutive year, prompting experts to call for the existing tax collection framework to be overhauled. In the fiscal year 2023-24, the tax authorities collected overall receipts of Tk 382,562—falling short of its revised target by Tk 27,438 crore. The government had initially aimed to collect taxes of Tk 430,000 crore in FY24 but ultimately brought down the target by Tk 20,000 crore.

As per provisional data, despite failing to reach the revised target, the NBR registered a 15 percent growth in collections in FY24 compared to a growth of 10 percent in FY23. Although this last part can be interpreted as the tax authorities making some progress, experts suggest that the entire tax administration remains in desperate need of reforms. The tax to GDP ratio in Bangladesh is among the lowest in the world, reaching an estimated 7.38 percent in FY23. The ratio has been limping along for years despite repeated calls for it to be increased. There have been plenty of instances of late where low revenue collection has hamstrung government responses in the face of emerging economic difficulties. Any desired progress in this regard has been stifled by corruption and inefficiencies in the tax administration. Recent revelations about Matiur Rahman, former president of the NBR's Customs, Excise and VAT Appellate Tribunal, who came under the scanner for allegedly amassing crores of taka via corruption, is a case in point.

This trend cannot be reversed without good governance and accountability. If the government really wants to enhance its revenue collection capacity, it should also ensure full automation of the NBR's services. Additionally, tax evasion—particularly by vested interest groups closely connected with the ruling establishment—must be stopped, while misguided attempts such as trying to boost revenue by allowing "whitening" black money should be abandoned.

The government has to address the lack of efficiency in the tax administration to increase its flexibility to intervene during critical times such as now. Otherwise, the country will continue to face crippling economic problems and limitations going forward. At the same time, it has to do a better job of setting realistic tax collection goals, and plan its expenses accordingly. As experts have pointed out, over the past 10 to 15 years, the government has been setting overambitious revenue collection targets that are completely detached from the ground realities. Repeated failure to meet the revenue collection target has spoiled the credibility of our fiscal framework, which the government needs to earn back through proper policy response.

Was it really for their security?

On Friday, plainclothes policemen forcibly took three key coordinators of the Students' Movement against Discrimination—Nahid Islam, Asif Mahmud and Abu Baker Majumdar—from a hospital in Dhaka city. Nahid and Asif were receiving treatment for injuries sustained after being picked up allegedly by law enforcers several days ago. Family sources have reported that that the trio was dragged to the vehicles and subsequently taken to an unknown destination. The plea of hospital authorities against apprehending two under-treatment patients fell on deaf years. Cell phones of all three detainees and of a sibling of theirs were seized. On that evening, the student activists were scheduled to brief the media about the ongoing movement.

COLLAGE: STAR

In response to the burgeoning criticism of the detention of the three activists, the Home Minister claimed that they were picked up "to find out who were threatening them". Further explaining the situation, the head of the detective branch (DB) said, "They (the coordinators) spoke on social media about feeling insecure... We think it's our responsibility as law enforcers to provide safety and security to those who say they're feeling insecure." He also said that the state would solicit clarification about telephone communication of the detainees with others.

> Did the activists explicitly state in their social media posts that they felt unsafe in the medical facility they were lodged in? If not, what made the authorities assume they would opt for state protection (in an unknown premise, possibly the DB office) over the security of their homes with their loved ones, or that of a hospital to recover from their bodily and mental wounds?

Two more protest organisers, Sarjis Alam and Hasnat Abdullah, were also taken to custody by the authorities in Dhaka on Saturday. The additional deputy commissioner of the DB of police said the move was to "to ensure their security and to get information about recent incidents."

The claims of the senior state functionaries tasked with law enforcement that the students were detained principally "for their safety" raises some important questions.

Firstly, at least two among those detained are on record claiming that they were subjected to involuntary disappearance and torture only days ago. In their posts, they made amply clear about the source of their insecurity. Have the police and other law enforcement agencies had any discussion with the activists about who inflicted such unlawful detention and torture on them? If so, people have a right to know what actions the authorities have taken to bring the perpetrators to account.

Secondly, did the activists explicitly state in their social media posts that they felt unsafe in the medical facility they were lodged in? If not, what made the authorities assume they would opt for state protection (in an unknown premise, possibly the DB office) over the security of their homes with their loved ones, or that of a hospital to recover from their bodily and mental wounds?

Thirdly, were those detained informed about the reason within three hours of detention, as per the Supreme Court guidelines? Was not the failure of the authorities to produce them before the nearby magistrate's court within 24 hours a violation of the law? Were the individuals acting on behalf of the state not obliged to produce their identity documents?

Fourthly, if indeed the intention was as benign as to grant the activists safety and security, why then would the activists be hauled to the vehicles against their wishes? And why were their next of kin not informed of the place they were being taken to? What precluded the DB authority to grant the group of university teachers a brief meeting with those being "provided protection" when the former went to the Minto Road office of the DB on Saturday?

And finally, Article 37 of the Constitution grants every Bangladeshi "the right to assemble and to participate in public meetings and processions peacefully and without arms...." Under Article 43, citizens also enjoy the right to privacy of correspondence and other means of communication. Does the current political leadership, particularly those responsible for law enforcement, not believe that those engaged in the quota reform movement enjoy the rights under granted under those articles? If so, why would they need to explain whom they have been in touch with to organise these events? Why do they have to explain the contents of such communication?

Under the law, abduction is a criminal offence, and no one can arbitrarily be picked up and detained. "If they (the police) want to arrest anyone, they have to comply with the directives of the Supreme Court," Barrister Jyotirmoy Barua was quoted saying in a report published in this paper. In this case, it is clear that there was a serious breach of the apex court's directives.

In addition to undermining the constitutionally guaranteed right to free expression and assembly, the state actions against the organisers of the quota reform movement also manifest uncanny transgression of the fundamental right to secure medical treatment by the wounded and the sanctity of a medical premise. Such tactless measures will only contribute to further deterioration of the already charged political environment. The government should immediately halt detaining and harassing the students for their role in the quota reform movement and instead take stern and visible action against those involved in wanton killing of hundreds of students, protestors, and bystanders.

Will the Democrats win after Biden's withdrawal?

Richard Haass,
president emeritus of the Council on Foreign Relations and a senior counsellor at Centerview Partners, previously served as director of policy planning for the US State Department (2001-03).

RICHARD HAASS

US President Joe Biden's decision to step aside as the Democratic Party's presidential candidate this fall has transformed American politics. It caps a historic July in the United States, one defined by far-reaching Supreme Court decisions and the attempted assassination of former President Donald Trump on the eve of the Republican Convention.

Biden's decision, urged by many Democratic Party officials and donors and favoured by many voters, was the right choice. In the wake of a debate widely viewed as a debacle for Biden, his age had made it all but impossible for him to make the case to the American people that he deserved another four years—and was making it impossible for him to make the case that Trump did not.

It is too soon to write about Biden's legacy, if for no other reason than that his presidency still has some six months left. But by stepping aside, he has gone a long way toward eliminating the potential critique that by staying in the race he paved the way for a successor who shared little of his commitment to American democracy and the country's role in the world. Indeed, had Trump defeated Biden in November, as polls were forecasting, this would have largely overshadowed Biden's accomplishments as president.

The odds are strong that Vice-President Kamala Harris will be the Democratic nominee. Biden's endorsement will help her. But it does not settle matters, because Biden only has the authority to release party delegates committed to him, not to require them to support someone else.

So, the Democratic Convention in Chicago this August will be an open one, and the four weeks between now and then could go a long way toward determining what happens there. Harris could essentially run for the nomination unopposed, or one or more challengers might emerge. Assuming she prevails, the latter scenario might actually be to her advantage, as the process would further hone her political skills, help her be seen as a winner, and allow her to get out from under the shadow of an unpopular president.

The process would also shine a spotlight on the Democratic Party at a time when it needs to reintroduce itself to the electorate. This is essential, as Trump and Senator J D Vance, his pick for vice-president, promise to be formidable campaigners. And even if Harris were to run and lose to them, polls suggest that she would outperform Biden, improving Democrats' chances of winning the House of Representatives (keeping control of the Senate appears out of reach) and thus preventing Republicans from controlling the entire federal government.

Trump is slightly ahead of Harris in polls, but she could well get a boost in the next month as she steps into the spotlight. Harris's prosecutorial skills, which she honed as a prosecutor and later as California's attorney general, would serve her well in a campaign. She is well-positioned to take on the extreme anti-abortion stance of this Supreme Court as well as Vance. And she would benefit from the absence of a woman or a minority on the Republican ticket.

One unavoidable challenge, however, is what might be described as the Hubert Humphrey dilemma. In 1968, Humphrey, who was vice-president at the time, won the Democratic nomination after the incumbent president, Lyndon Johnson, chose not to run for re-election. The words in Biden's withdrawal letter echoed many used by Johnson 56 years ago, the principal difference being that Biden put out his statement on X and Johnson appeared on national television.

The dilemma is this: how to appear loyal and take credit for what was popular about a presidency without being weighed down by policies that were unpopular. In 1968, it was the Vietnam War that complicated Humphrey's run, as he found it hard to distance himself from a policy that he had been associated with and from a boss who had little tolerance for disloyalty.

No single issue dominates public debate today, but there is still a need to differentiate the Democratic nominee from Biden, as incumbency has become a burden at a time when many seek change. Anyone doubting this only needs to look at recent election results in South Africa, India, the United Kingdom, and France.

This means that the Democratic nominee, whether Harris or someone else, would do well to embrace the Inflation Reduction Act and the CHIPS and Science Act, efforts to combat climate change and defend democracy, access to abortion and birth control, and military assistance to Ukraine. But it also suggests that the candidate might want to distance themselves from a Middle East policy seen by many Americans as too pro-Israel, and from policies on the border and crime viewed by many as too lax.

If Harris is the Democratic choice, her selection of a running mate will matter. Several Midwestern states are likely to be decisive in November's election, and there is a large pool of independent voters to be won over. Governors Gretchen Whitmer of Michigan, Josh Shapiro of Pennsylvania, Andy Beshear of Kentucky, and Roy Cooper of North Carolina would presumably be considered, as would several members of Biden's cabinet.

Perhaps the only thing that is certain is that less is certain after Biden's stunning announcement. One thing is clear, though: the outcome of the presidential election will matter enormously for the US and the rest of the world. This is not normally the case, as the candidates' similarities tend to outweigh their differences. Not so this time. The differences are profound, making it difficult to exaggerate just how much is at stake when Americans vote this November.

ARREST OF 17-YEAR-OLD

Juvenile justice must prevail

Hasnatul Islam Faiyaz, an eleventh-grade student at Dhaka College, was put on a seven-day remand in a case filed with Jatrabari Police Station, accusing him of killing a police constable on July 19 amid the violent clashes that erupted throughout the country. He was made the 16th accused among 17 in the case file, which erroneously listed his age as 19 years old. But since then, Faiyaz's remand has been cancelled, and he has been sent to a Child Development Centre in Gazipur. This is despite the High Court saying the government can consider keeping Faiyaz in his parents' custody. However, the government on Monday admitted that taking a 17-year-old college student on remand, and tying him with ropes, was a mistake, and that it will take steps so that such mistakes are not repeated.

However, the court proceedings that preceded these remedial steps had shockingly disregarded the legal and constitutional obligations meant to protect a minor, who is clearly 17 years old, as evidenced by his birth registration and SSC certificates. He had been treated as an adult, resulting in a series of legal errors and violations of his rights. This mistreatment of a minor was not only a gross violation of human rights; it also demonstrated a disregard for the legal protections afforded to juveniles in Bangladesh.

The court proceedings that preceded these remedial steps had shockingly disregarded the legal and constitutional obligations meant to protect a minor, who is clearly 17 years old, as evidenced by his birth registration and SSC certificates. He had been treated as an adult, resulting in a series of legal errors and violations of his rights. This mistreatment of a minor was not only a gross violation of human rights; it also demonstrated a disregard for the legal protections afforded to juveniles in Bangladesh.

The Children Act 2013 explicitly mandates that minors should be tried in juvenile courts, which are designed to consider their best interests and focus on rehabilitation rather than punishment. In Faiyaz's case, a petition had been filed for the transfer of the hearing to a juvenile court, but the lower court didn't respond to the plea and placed him on remand.

Furthermore, Faiyaz had been tied with a rope around his waist, just like other adult accused, when he was brought into the court. This conduct plainly violated the dignity, care, and respect that juveniles are entitled to get under the act, which prohibits such mistreatment. It also stipulates that juveniles should not be handcuffed or presented to court in such a disgraceful manner. There is no doubt about the fact that a minor, who is barely out of adolescence, being treated as an adult offender is a serious violation.

Faiyaz had been tied with a rope around his waist, just like other adult accused, when he was brought into the court. This conduct plainly violated the dignity, care, and respect that juveniles are entitled to get under the act, which prohibits such mistreatment. It also stipulates that juveniles should not be handcuffed or presented to court in such a disgraceful manner.

According to media reports, outside the courthouse on Saturday, Faiyaz's family members stated that he had been missing for four days and alleged, quoting Faiyaz, that he had been subjected to severe physical and mental torture during the days prior.

Despite some loopholes, Bangladesh has a moderate regime for birth registration, which is the cornerstone of the traditional age verification procedure in judicial proceedings. In cases where official documentation is unavailable or contested, courts frequently depend on the subjective standard of physical maturity, which is often unreliable but widely practiced. Even with adequate documentation of his age, Faiyaz's appearance—such as his lack of facial hair and overall childlike looks—should have been a strong indicator of his minority. In the past, courts have exercised discretion based on such visible signs of youthfulness.

While costly and time-consuming, forensic age assessment methods like dental analysis or bone ossification are more reliable and have been applied in past cases, such as the Oishi Rahman case (2013), where courts have ordered forensic assessments to resolve age disputes. The lower court's unwillingness to verify Faiyaz's age using such methods, despite these precedents, was a significant oversight. Moreover, ignoring the legal protections afforded to juveniles by failing to verify his age using reliable forensic methods or any other means represents a major weakness in the judicial process, as accurate age verification procedures are required to avoid such grave errors and ensure the lawful treatment of minors.

The question inevitably arises regarding the uniform manner in which the court should handle the determination of the minority status of any accused at the very first instance. The current system appears to rely substantially on the court's discretion, especially where the age is contested and before forensic assessments are directed. However, as Faiyaz's case shows, this procedure is not beyond the possibility of legal error. Therefore, a mechanism should be in place to order an initial age verification procedure before appearing in court, which involves reviewing birth certificates, academic records, and any other relevant documents. This should uphold a propositional burden on relevant stakeholders for securing justice for a certain juvenile group vulnerable to judicial proceedings. While writ petitions can protect against legal errors that result in violations of fundamental rights, there should also be direct avenues for appealing remand decisions in higher courts specifically designed to handle juvenile justice issues.

The Children Act offers children under the age of 18 particular safeguards. According to the act, a minor shall not be held in police custody or jail unless it is absolutely required, and a child arrested must appear before a Children's Court within 24 hours. The Constitution of Bangladesh, on the other hand, forbids torture and cruel, inhuman, or humiliating punishment, according to Article 35(5). The claims of extreme mental and physical suffering that Fayaz endured while in police custody constitute a clear violation of his constitutional rights.

Bangladesh is a party to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC), where Article 37 states that detention or imprisonment of children can be used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest amount of time that is appropriate. This convention also forbids torture and other cruel treatment.

In the country's current context when law enforcement is in overdrive, there may be attempts to disregard such principles and prohibitions, but it is absolutely essential that nothing of this sort is allowed to happen in the name of ensuring security or rule of law. The protection of juvenile rights should remain a non-negotiable aspect of maintaining the integrity of the legal system in Bangladesh. Ensuring that juvenile rights are upheld at all costs is not just a legal obligation but a moral imperative as well. The legal system must ensure that the age of the accused is accurately determined, and that their rights are fully served, regardless of the circumstances.

How news consumers were deprived during the internet blackout is digital features coordinator at The Daily Star.

Azmin Azran

AZMIN AZRAN

When internet connections went cold on the evening of Thursday, July 18, Bangladesh was suddenly and forcefully hurled back in time to an era when instant communication was not the norm. Without the internet, in the early 2000s and before that, the only notable and reliable sources of news were TV channels and print newspapers. As a consumer, you got the roundup of the daily news in the evening broadcast on TV along with hourly updates if something important was unfolding, followed by details on print newspapers the morning after. The media machine back then worked fine, and the public was used to this meandering speed of the news cycle.

The problem with being hurled back in time like this was that not everyone was prepared for time travel. Many people have stopped subscribing to print newspapers at their doorstep every morning, and cable connections at home have become increasingly rare. However, without the internet, these sources suddenly became the only place to get reliable information, especially TV channels as they have the ability to broadcast all day and all night.

In fact, given that the country had been embroiled in a remarkable level of violence at the time of the internet blackout, it could be argued that it was the responsibility of electronic media to make full use of the technology at their disposal, and keep people as up-to-date as possible. Lack of information, especially in a society that up until a minute ago was drowning in information, is a real crisis. It can lead to panic, bad decision-making, and suffering that is avoidable.

Throughout this terrible previous weekend, as people's phones kept ringing off the hook delivering devastating news, an unknown percentage of which were rumours, those with cable connections at home might have looked at TV news channels to corroborate or dispel what they were hearing. After getting home from work on Thursday evening having witnessed a city in turmoil, I found myself flipping through the channels on my TV to see if anyone had anything reliable to say about what I had just seen or the gunshots my friends were telling me they heard in their neighbourhood, but to no avail.

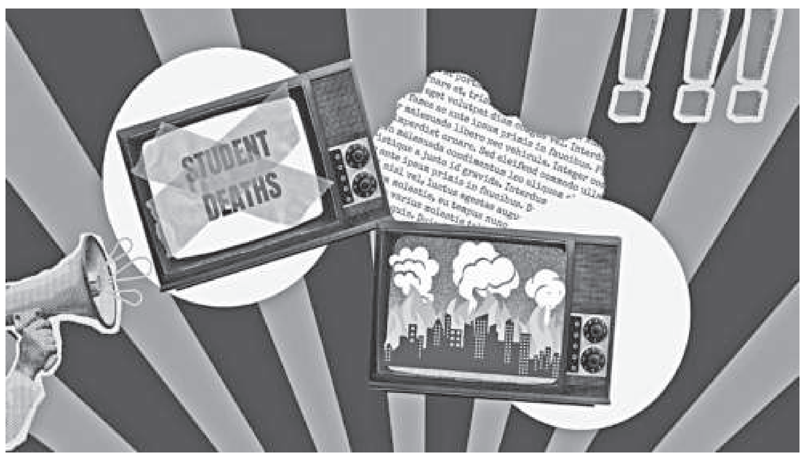
Of course, they did not fail to report on the cases of arson and vandalism at government establishments across the city. The comprehensive coverage provided to the data centre in a building adjacent to the Department of Disaster Management in Mohakhali deserves plaudits, as does the coverage of the devastating fires at BTV, Setu Bhaban, and toll plazas of Dhaka Elevated Expressway and Mayor Hanif Flyover. Yet, the dangerous events taking place across Dhaka that were killing and maiming people in scores did not seem to get the same spotlight.

The sudden disappearance of internet connectivity definitely hampered TV networks, and Thursday evening might have gone by with them simply trying to get a hang of the problem. It's understandable if they decided to divert resources from dangerous spots in the city from where it was getting increasingly difficult to collect reliable accounts, but during the day on Friday, by which time many newspapers had reported on the death toll and violence already, TV channels did not change their tune.

Friday saw the most violence in this whole sequence of events, and as terrified citizens were stuck at home, hearing the most bone-chilling accounts of what befell those unlucky enough to be on the streets, the lack of information put a final nail in the coffin in that day's dystopian reality. On TV, news scrolls appeared in some channels saying that clashes were going on in certain parts of Dhaka and the rest of the country, but the scale of it remained unuttered. This paper reported 66 deaths on Friday that it could independently confirm, taking place throughout the day at various locations. On TV, the death counts did not appear in scheduled broadcasts. The destruction that either precipitated or followed the deaths was given its due coverage, but for most people, it took until Saturday morning's papers to realise the extent of the horrors that people experienced. Those who didn't get newspapers on the first day of the curfew had to rely on whatever information they could gather from phone calls and text messages from friends and family.

As the curfew was enforced on Friday night, going into Saturday, many TV channels reported a relative normalisation of the situation. Reports of scattered clashes in various parts of Dhaka and the rest of the country appeared in news scrolls, but once more, details of the scale of the violence did not. I made the decision to leave my area and get to work, which falls under the category of essential services, through the Pragati Sarani road after watching a morning broadcast of the Notunbazar area where army and police checkposts seemed to have kept things calm. I turned back after starting once I received a couple of phone calls from friends in the area who reported hearing gunshots.

On Sunday morning as well, by which time TV panels were discussing how long it would take for things to get back to normal (while newspapers once again reported dozens of deaths on Saturday), I tried to exit the area I lived in through the Pragati Sarani road. This time, I found myself in a standoff between an unidentified group of individuals who had started a fire on the road, and armed police accompanied by an armoured vehicle. I stepped off the road with hundreds of others in fear of ensuing violence. By midday, violence ensued in the area I had assumed was safe in the morning.



VISUAL: STAR

If internet services had not been disrupted, hardly anyone would have looked to electronic media to get information about the safety conditions of the roads before going out during this weekend. As a society, we have learned to trust collective information gathering via the internet, and many of us have learned the skills to be able to differentiate between reliable accounts and rumours. These five days without the internet shows why people have made that decision. Traditional news sources like TV networks had the opportunity to step up to the plate and properly help the public at a time when they desperately needed it. The fact that they could not provide this service even at this desperate hour proves that it was futile to have this expectation in the first place. It is either a lack of ability or a lack of will that is at play here, and whatever the reason behind it, TV channels do not serve its viewers.

5 signs of toxic leadership in the workplace

A short guide on how to recognise toxic behaviour in your boss and how to advocate for change

> Toxic leaders are typically the least empathetic managers one could encounter. They often show little understanding or concern for their employees' personal circumstances, such as family emergencies or health issues. This lack of empathy can make employees feel undervalued and unsupported.

ZARIF FAIAZ

Effective leadership is crucial for the success and well-being of any organisation. A good leader fosters a positive work environment, drives innovation, and motivates employees to reach their full potential. However, not all leaders possess these qualities. Some exhibit toxic traits that can undermine morale, stifle creativity, and create a culture of fear and resentment. Understanding the signs of toxic leadership is the first step towards advocating for change.

Micromanagement and control

Toxic leaders often feel the need to control every aspect of their team's work. They micromanage tasks, leaving little room for employees to take initiative or make decisions. This can lead to a stifling environment where creativity and innovation are suppressed. Employees may feel undervalued and untrusted, decreasing job satisfaction and productivity. A work culture dominated by excessive control from the top can quickly become unproductive and demoralising.

Intimidation and fear tactics

Toxic leaders often use intimidation and fear to maintain control. They may belittle employees, threaten job security, or create a hostile work environment. This type of behaviour can lead to high levels of stress, anxiety, and a high turnover rate. By fostering a culture of fear, such leaders ensure that employees are more focused on avoiding punishment than on excelling in their roles.

Toxic leaders are also often boastful and arrogant, believing they are always right and expecting others to accept their word without question. They resent being corrected, especially by subordinates. This irritability can create a tense and oppressive work atmosphere, inhibiting creativity and discouraging employees from speaking up. This also creates an environment where collaboration and learning are stifled, as the leader's ego takes precedence over collective success. In contrast, effective leaders demonstrate humility and a willingness to learn from others.

Autocratic

A toxic boss often expects their directions to be followed without question, treating their own opinions as the only ones that matter. This autocratic style discourages input and feedback, leading to a disengaged and demoralised workforce. Employees under such leadership are often seen as mere tools to execute the leader's vision, rather than valued contributors with their own insights and ideas. Good leadership, however, values diverse perspectives and fosters an environment of open dialogue and collaboration.

Nepotism and favouritism

When a leader shows favouritism towards certain employees or hires friends and family members regardless of their qualifications, it can create a toxic work environment. This can lead to feelings of injustice and resentment among other employees, who may feel their hard work is not recognised or rewarded. An environment where merit is sidelined in favour of personal connections is detrimental to both morale and productivity.

Lack of transparency and openness

A toxic leader often operates in secrecy, withholding important information from their team. This lack of transparency can breed mistrust and suspicion among employees. When decisions are made behind closed doors without input or explanation, it can lead to confusion and frustration. An opaque approach to management can also create a disconnect between leadership and staff, exacerbating tensions and reducing overall organisational cohesion.

How to bring about change

Changing toxic leadership requires a collective effort from employees and a commitment to fostering a positive workplace culture. Document and communicate issues by keeping a record of specific instances of toxic behaviour. When communicating with higher management or HR, provide concrete examples to support your claims.

Building alliances with like-minded colleagues who share your concerns is essential. A united front is more likely to be heard and taken seriously by higher management. Highlight the benefits of change by presenting a clear case for how a change in leadership style can benefit the organisation. Use data and examples to show how a positive work environment can lead to increased productivity, employee satisfaction, and overall success.

Lastly, be patient and persistent. Change often takes time, especially when it involves deeply ingrained behaviours and attitudes. Stay persistent and continue to advocate for a healthier, more positive work environment.

A quick guide to employee activism

WHAT IS EMPLOYEE ACTIVISM?

EMPLOYEE ACTIVISM IS WHEN WORKERS ADVOCATE FOR SOCIAL, ENVIRONMENTAL, AND WORKPLACE REFORMS, INFLUENCING COMPANY POLICIES TOWARDS TRANSPARENCY AND ETHICAL PRACTICES. COMPANIES NOW SEE THE NEED TO ADDRESS THESE CONCERNS TO KEEP A MOTIVATED AND ENGAGED WORKFORCE.

HOW CAN LEADERS APPROACH EMPLOYEE ACTIVISM?

LEADERS SHOULD LISTEN TO EMPLOYEE CONCERNS, FOSTER OPEN DIALOGUE, AND SUPPORT INITIATIVES ALIGNED WITH ETHICAL VALUES. ENGAGING EMPLOYEES IN DECISION-MAKING AND IMPLEMENTING SHARED VALUES CAN BUILD TRUST AND LOYALTY.

Refocusing on work when nothing feels right

SHAMS RASHID TONMOY

In these uncertain times, staying updated on current events can lead to feelings of dread. This dread, if left unchecked, will eventually creep in on your daily tasks and leave you an empty husk. Amid an urge to return to normalcy, you wouldn't be shamed for feeling a bit overwhelmed. Unfortunately, whether we feel ready or not, we have to return to work. The bills don't pay themselves, after all.

While it may feel unjust to refocus on work amidst an ongoing national crisis, there are some steps you can take to ease this transition and make your return to work more manageable.

Treat your work as a digital detox

Staying glued to your screen and waiting for every update will slowly take a toll on your mental health. Consider treating your work as a distraction from the ongoing chaos. During work, look away from your phone screen. Engage in your work as such so you don't feel the constant urge to look up something that might upset or depress you. This will, at least for a brief moment, help you not over worry about the ongoing situation.

Of course, this doesn't mean you should be completely unaware of what's happening. Try to allocate specific times after work to catch up on the news. Furthermore, focusing on work during the day can help calm your mind and allow you to offer better support whenever it is needed.

ILLUSTRATION: ZARIF FAIAZ

Take control of your deadlines

The dread of knowing about all the chaos happening around you with the pre-existing fear of work-based deadlines creates a fatal combination. Getting back to work after a long break will mean you may easily lose track of your previous progress, and you will be expected to pick up the pace as soon as you return.

Instead of succumbing to the rush of deadlines, break your tasks into smaller ones and create a personalised schedule to maintain them. See if the deadlines of existing projects are flexible and, if you're managing a project, discuss possible extensions with your supervisor. Explain that prioritising quality over a rushed output is crucial, and most likely, they will understand and accommodate such a request.

Take small breaks to avoid getting overwhelmed

Work can be a lot to take in when you are back from a long break, especially when it is due to some crisis that has left you feeling powerless. To avoid getting overwhelmed while staying on top of your work, consider taking small breaks between tasks. During the pauses, focus on relaxation techniques like deep breathing, meditation, or simply stepping away from the desk for a few minutes. This mental reset can end up improving focus and productivity.

Don't be afraid to seek support

Despite your best efforts, you might still find it impossible to refocus on your work amidst the ongoing chaos. If such is the situation, simply seek support. In the workplace, sharing concerns with a coworker you're close with can create a more supportive work environment. Collaboration and open communication can make the return to work less daunting and more manageable, even if readjusting may seem impossible at first glance. Take things one step at a time, and fingers crossed, you will feel productive again soon.

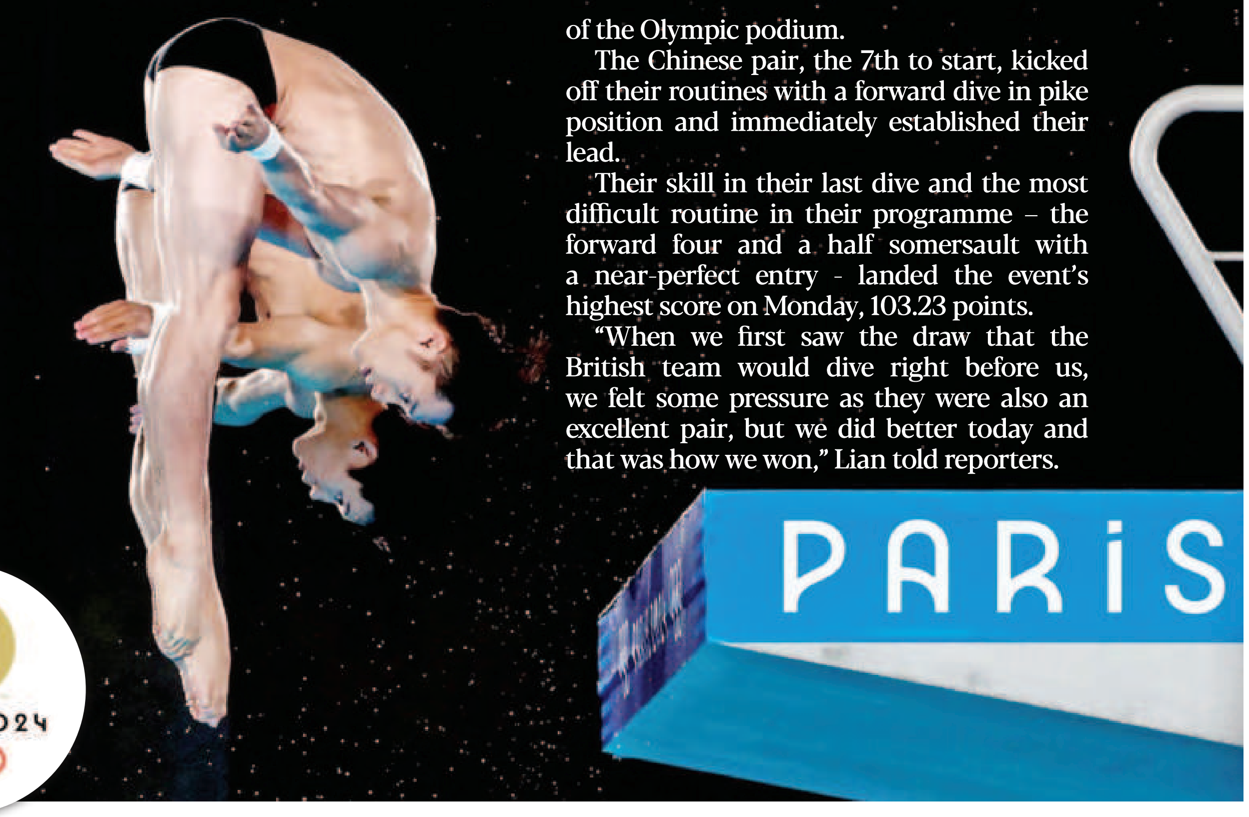
China's clean sweep dream in diving on track

AFP, PARIS



Yang Hao and Lian Junjie played their parts with aplomb in China's bid to take all eight diving golds on offer by winning the men's synchronised 10 metre platform event on Monday.

The pair led the event from the first round and finished on 490.35 points - becoming the second Chinese diving pair to top the podium so far at the Paris Olympics.

Britain's Tom Daley was dethroned as Olympic champion on Monday but took an emotional silver medal with partner Noah Williams with 463.44 points, followed by Canada's Ryan Wiens and Nathan Zsombor-Murray who won bronze.

Yang, 26, and 23-year-old Lian have dominated the world championships in the last three years in the event but it was their first time to stand on top of the Olympic podium.

The Chinese pair, the 7th to start, kicked off their routines with a forward dive in pike position and immediately established their lead.

Their skill in their last dive and the most difficult routine in their programme – the forward four and a half somersault with a near-perfect entry - landed the event's highest score on Monday, 103.23 points.

"When we first saw the draw that the British team would dive right before us, we felt some pressure as they were also an excellent pair, but we did better today and that was how we won," Lian told reporters.

Heat warning issued for Paris

France's meteorological agency has issued a weather warning for Paris and the surrounding areas with storms and highs of 35 degrees Celsius expected on Tuesday as the capital hosts the Olympic Games. The agency put in place a "yellow alert" -- the second of four levels – which advises people to "be attentive" to the impact of heat when playing sports or engaging in other physical activity.

Triathlon-Swimming training cancelled for second day over Seine pollution

Paris Olympics organisers cancelled the triathlon swimming training session in the Seine river for a second day on Monday, 24 hours before the men's race, after heavy rain late last week increased both pollution levels and the speed of the current. Fifty-five triathletes are scheduled to line up today on a floating pontoon and dive into the Seine, marking the first time athletes have competed in the river at an Olympics since 1900.

Biles back at practice after injury scare

Simone Biles is doing well and was back at practice on Monday, a day after the American made a triumphant return to the Olympic stage despite being hobbled by pain in her left calf, her mother Nellie told NBC's Today Show. The four-times Olympic champion left the competition area on Sunday after performing on her first apparatus. Despite the nagging pain, Biles was dominant, leading the U.S. to a huge win in team qualifying while also qualifying first in the all-around before an ecstatic, star-studded crowd at the Bercy Arena.

Dealing with popularity a challenge for Lyles

AFP, Paris

Noah Lyles says he is relishing the chance to perform before a packed stadium at the Paris Olympics three years after running in eerie silence at the pandemic-hit Tokyo Games.

But the US sprint king tipped to be one of the faces of the Paris Games said Monday that his growing fame has become a problem in the Olympic Village.

Lyles, the reigning world 100m and 200m champion, is aiming to emulate his idol Usain Bolt by completing a sprint double in Paris, following a bitterly disappointing campaign in Tokyo.

Yet the charismatic American revealed that his preparations for Saturday's opening rounds of the 100m have been disrupted by his increasing popularity, boosted recently by the Netflix documentary "Sprint".

"I've become kind of popular in the village and unfortunately that has come with its own set of challenges in being able to find my own space within the village, whether that's eating or training in the gym," Lyles told a press conference on Monday.

The 27-year-old, who has openly talked about his struggles with mental health and depression in recent years, said he has been forced to eat meals at unusual times in order to find peace and quiet.

For now, Lyles has no plans to quit the village but he hopes in future more can be done to provide quiet areas for athletes.

"I know some athletes like to leave the village and have their own hotels but I like to enjoy the whole Olympic event. But it has come with its own challenge of finding a safe place.

"It's been kind of hard for me to find that place. I don't want to leave but it's definitely something I feel like after this Olympics I'm going to have to have conversations higher up than me about it," he said.

"I want to enjoy the Olympics but just being able to find a safe place has been a little difficult these past few days as I'm trying to prepare and dive deep into my mental state."

Despite his apparent unease with life in the village, though, Lyles cannot wait to parade his talents before a packed house at the 69,000-capacity Stade de France -- a stark contrast to Tokyo, where Covid-19 restrictions meant athletes performed in an empty stadium.

"I'm an emotional person," Lyles said. "And when I got to the finals in Tokyo and we walked into that empty stadium, and we're all just standing behind the blocks. That's usually the moment in my head where I'm like 'It's showtime!'

"And I just remember thinking 'This is not it. This is not fun. This is not cool. This is not what I wanted.' And it sucked."

Lyles left Tokyo with only a bronze medal from the 200m and later broke down in tears talking to reporters when reflecting on his disappointing Olympic campaign.

BFF expects FIFA go-ahead on Centre of Excellence

SPORTS REPORTER

The Bangladesh Football Federation has said it expects a positive response from football's world governing body, FIFA, over its proposed Centre of Excellence in Cox's Bazar following completion of assessment over the project's environmental impact.

According to the federation's general secretary, Emran Hossain Tushar, the BFF received positive recommendations on the Environmental and Social Impact Assessment (ESIA) from the Department of Disaster Science and Climate Resilience of Dhaka University and send the same to FIFA earlier this month.

The BFF spokesperson said they would start construction work on the 20-acre land project in Ramu upazila of the coastal district once given the go-ahead by FIFA, expected by the end of next month.

The government had allocated the land in Khuniya Palong reserved forest to BFF in July 2022, much to the frustration and anger for environmentalists and wild life enthusiasts.

FIFA, after scrutinising media reports and through own assessment, asked the BFF to conduct an independent environmental assessment in February this year.

"We have received a positive assessment report," Tushar told reporters yesterday.

"The salient recommendations of the report are: We cannot build any infrastructure outside the designated 20-acre land; we will have to plant more trees than those that will be cut; we will have to create some vegetation for the elephants and create a water body for reptiles. We will also have to integrate the local populace with the project, either through creating employment opportunities for the adults or through giving sporting opportunities for their children.

"We have already sent the recommendations to FIFA in the beginning of the month and we expect an instruction from FIFA by the end of August," Tushar added.

The Centre of Excellence is supposed to be a residential training facility, under a FIFA project worth 3.6 million dollars, featuring two standard-sized football pitches apart from a four-storey dormitory and medical facilities, among other things.

Bijoy falls in nervous 90s in practice match

SPORTS REPORTER

BCB Green opener Anamul Haque Bijoy fell on nervous nineties while Yasir Ali and Mushfiqur Rahim scored fifties on Day One of the three-day practice match against BCB Red at the Zahur Ahmed Chowdhury Stadium in Chattogram on Monday.

Bijoy made 90 off 185 balls with seven fours and a six before he was trapped in front by pacer Tanzim Hasan Sakib just after the tea break.

The opening day's proceedings were interrupted by rain after the same over. BCB Green were 220 for five at that time and the day's play was called off two hours later due to bad light.

Despite losing two quick wickets to Sakib (3-35) after being sent into bat first, Bijoy steadied the ship by adding 95 runs for the third wicket with Yasir.

Yasir made 58 off 71 balls while Mushfiqur hit three fours and as many sixes for his 53-ball 51 before he became pacer Khaled Ahmed's first scalp in the innings.

Out of the box thinking earns HP win over Shaheens

SPORTS REPORTER

"All's well that ends well," said Bangladesh Cricket Board High Performance Unit's captain Mahmudul Hasan Joy, whose maiden five-wicket haul in first-class cricket earned his side a five-run win over Pakistan Shaheens in the second four-day game in Darwin, Australia yesterday.

The match swung in the balance throughout Day four, testing both teams resolve but in the end the HP were able to find a way, albeit a bit unconventional, to get the job done.

The HP Unit required six wickets to win while having 160 runs left to defend on the final day and expectations were that the pace trio of Ripon Mondol, Rejaur Rahman Raja and Maruf Mridha, who collectively claimed eight wickets in the first innings, will be leading the charge.

But on the day, it was the part-time off-spin of Joy that won the HP Unit the game.

Joy, who had broken a 96-run opening stand the previous day, first sent back two set batters in Tayyab Tahir (43) and Omair Yousuf (45).

Later, when tail-enders Khurram Shahzad and Mohammad Ali were running away with the game, having formed a 57-run stand for the eighth wicket, Joy turned the game around once again by removing both batters in consecutive overs.

Selector Hannan Sarkar, who is with the HP outfit in Australia, felt that Joy bowling his part-time of-spin with the second new ball won the HP Unit the match.

"We normally use pacers from both ends when we take the new ball [available after 80 overs]. But in this game the pacers didn't get the breakthroughs with the new ball, Joy did. The batters played for the turn but the new ball doesn't turn, it goes straight on so they missed the line of the ball," Hannan told The Daily Star yesterday.

With the win, HP Unit also drew the two-match series as they had lost the first match against the Shaheens by 149 runs.

But their gritty performance in the second game and their willingness to use an unconventional method to win brought a pleasing end to the red-ball part of their Australia tour.

Hathurusingha's 'different style' a problem for Tigers?

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) president Nazmul Hassan Papon all but laid bare the intricacies of the Tigers' dressing room and the inherent culture of the country's cricket during his press conference on Sunday, admitting that coaching style of head coach Chandika Hathurusingha was a mismatch in Bangladesh's circumstances as he did not give any preferential treatment to star players.

Hathurusingha in the past had differences with the likes of Mashrafe Bin Mortaza, Shakib Al Hasan, Mushfiqur Rahim, Mahmudullah Riyad in his first stint and his second stint has seen him falling out with Tamim Iqbal.

"I agree that his [Hathurusingha] man management style and communication is totally different. His biggest problem is his difficulty in adjusting to our country's culture," the BCB president said on Hathurusingha, whose contract will run till the 2025 ICC Champions Trophy.

"He doesn't give anyone special consideration, which is a big problem. In our country, you have to give some [special consideration]... especially for our more experienced players. But I didn't hear any complaint from the rest of the [T20] World Cup squad and most of them praised him," he said.

When the BCB appointed Hathurusingha for a second stint, despite the ungainly manner in which the Sri Lankan had left the Bangladesh job in 2017, they were hoping he would act as a strict disciplinary, like he had done in his first stint. However, now there appears to be mixed feelings following two failed World Cup campaigns.

"When he came [for the first time] and we interviewed him, I understood that he is a very strict person, like a strict principle. I felt it was important to bring discipline," Nazmul said on Hathurusingha's appointment in 2014 which was the precursor for his reappointment. "His analysis and planning were also brilliant. He would plan which ball we should use on what type of wicket against which opponent. We got success at that time and were happy with him," he added.

After falling back on proven methods, the BCB has now come to the realisation that cricket has moved onto a different plateau from 2014-2017 and the sluggish pitches used for short-term success at that time have directly contributed to current batting problems. But man management appears to be crux of the issue now and Papon said that players now have a different outlook on coaches after working under Steve Rhodes and Russell Domingo.

"Later when Hathurusingha arrived it was difficult for him to adjust and I am not denying it. I think the board should have been more involved and have more communication with the players and understand the players," he said, suggesting the BCB has a culture and management style issue to solve.

'I'll never again tell anyone to send their kids to schools'

Says father as his bullet-hit son being treated in cop custody

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The sense of fear among the medical professionals in the capital's Holy Family Hospital is palpable. No one would speak on the record, and those that would speak off the record would only do so in a hushed voice. It is as if someone is always watching them even when there is no one around.

At cabin number 207/A, an injured student is being treated in police custody, and the hospital staff has strict orders not to share any information about him with anyone.

Mehedi Hasan Zumman, 23, was admitted to the hospital at 9:50pm on Friday with gunshot wounds.

Doctors call the nature of his injuries as broken "tibia-fibula," a fracture in the lower leg that

74 eminent citizens call for probe under UN supervision

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Seventy-four eminent citizens, including human rights activists, lawyers, and academicians yesterday called for an independent UN-led investigation into all incidents of deaths, injuries, and torture of students and peaceful citizens caused by the excesses of police, Rab and other forces.

Their call included a five-point demand, emphasising the need for justice, transparency, and accountability.

The investigation, they insisted, should be conducted transparently and impartially under the supervision of a high-level UN team of experts, they said at a press conference.

The citizens also urged the UN to initiate this process and ensure that all those responsible, regardless of rank or political affiliation, face legal consequences.

They also called on the government for immediate action to ensure the safety of students, protection of their future, and

VIOLENCE CENTRING QUOTA PROTESTS

More than 10,000 arrested in 12 days

At least 473 more detained in police raids from Sunday morning to yesterday evening

STAR REPORT

At least 473 more people were arrested in the capital and elsewhere in 36 hours till 6:00pm yesterday as the nationwide crackdown on alleged saboteurs as well as protesters and opposition parties continues.

Of them 58 were arrested in the capital, and 386 in 39 districts by police.

Besides, Rab yesterday arrested 29 people across the country.

According to the latest count, at least 10,134 people, including students, BNP and Jamaat-Shibir leaders and activists, have been arrested in 872 cases filed in the capital and 51 districts over the last 12 days since July 18.

So far, the Dhaka Metropolitan Police have arrested 2,822 people in 243 cases, which include 14 fresh ones filed yesterday.

The Daily Star has so far acquired documents related to 178 cases filed since July 17. The number of accused in those cases is 2,13,834. Of them, only 1,310 were named.

Besides, police have so far arrested 6,978 people in 51 districts in 629 cases filed against some 2,849 named individuals and over 80,000 unnamed others.

The cases were filed, mostly by police, with different police stations over violence, vandalism, and arson, said DMP sources.

In the cases, police brought charges of gathering illegally, rioting, assaulting law enforcers, and damaging properties.

The country witnessed violence on an unprecedented scale after the peaceful demonstrations for quota reform turned deadly on July 15 when Chhatra League attacked the protesting students on different university campuses.

> Excluding the capital, police have so far arrested 6,978 people in 51 districts in 629 cases filed in connection with the recent violence.

In the following days, violence escalated in Dhaka and elsewhere, leaving at least 162 dead, as per The Daily Star data. The death toll from the violence between agitators, law enforcers, Border Guard Bangladesh members, and ruling party activists, could be much higher as this newspaper could not reach many hospitals, where dozens of critically injured patients were taken.

Meanwhile, the DMP stopped providing official data on arrests and cases from yesterday. Seeking anonymity, a DMP official claimed since they won't conduct

One more person, who suffered bullet wounds during the recent clashes centring the quota protests, died at Dhaka Medical College Hospital on Sunday night.

Babul Hawlader, 48, a painter from Munshiganj, suffered bullet wounds in the Rampura area on July 19. He passed away around 11:00pm at the Intensive Care Unit (ICU), according to the hospital's death register and family members.

Babul's son, Parvez Hawlader, said his father was not involved in the protest. He suffered bullets as he was returning to their Ulan road house after Jumma prayers that day.

With this death, at least 163 lives have been lost since July 16, when six people were killed in clashes between agitators and law enforcers, and ruling party activists

Thirty people died on July 18, 66 on July 19, 25 on July 20, 14 on July 21, six on July 22, three on July 23, four on July 24, two on July 25, four on July 26, and two on July 27.

DEADLY GOLAN STRIKE

Lebanon on alert as Israel vows 'severe' response

AGENCIES

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu yesterday vowed a "severe" response to a deadly strike that killed youths in the annexed Golan Heights, as diplomats raced to contain escalation between Israel and Hezbollah.

On a visit to the site of the rocket strike which killed 12 children in the town of Majdal Shams, Netanyahu said: "The State of Israel will not, and cannot, let this pass. Our response will come and it will be severe."

He was greeted by protests during his visit, which came after mourners gathered in the Druze Arab town for the burial of the last victim, 11-year-old Guevara Ibrahim.

Israel and the United States have blamed the strike on Lebanon's Iran-backed Hezbollah, which has traded near-daily fire with Israeli forces since the start of the Gaza war in early October.

Lebanese Foreign Minister Abdallah Bou Habib said a flurry of diplomatic activity has sought to contain the anticipated Israeli response.

"Israel will escalate in a limited way and Hezbollah will respond in a limited way... These are the assurances we've received," Bou Habib said in an interview with local broadcaster Al-Jadeed.

The United States, France and others were trying to contain the escalation, he added, while Lebanese Prime Minister Najib Mikati said that "talks are ongoing with international, European and Arab sides to protect Lebanon and ward off dangers".

Yesterday, White House National Security Council spokesman John Kirby said he was "confident" a broader war can be avoided.

VIOLENCE OVER QUOTA

Noted citizens form probe commission

Urges people to send proof of violations of laws, human rights

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Eminent citizens of the country yesterday formed a commission to investigate allegations of gross violations of laws and human rights in the recent violence, including the loss of lives and mass arrests, over the quota reform protests.

The nine-member body -- National Mass Inquiry Commission headed -- will be co-chaired by Justice Md Abdul Matin and Sultana Kamal, according to a press release.

It said the commission has been formed with eminent personalities of Bangladesh on behalf of the country's teachers, lawyers, cultural activists, and general guardians, and urged people to send it information which would help it to unearth the truth behind the violent incidents.

According to the press release, the violence started on July 16 when students of the Dhaka University were attacked and assaulted to suppress their anti-discrimination protests.

"Abu Sayeed was shot directly in the chest in Rangpur as students and common people across the country took to the streets to protest the violence [attacks on students at universities].

Djokovic eases past Nadal

AFP, Paris

Novak Djokovic crushed Rafael Nadal 6-1, 6-4 in their blockbuster Olympics clash on Monday as the two titans met for the 60th and possibly final time.

The showdown between the two most successful men's tennis players in history appeared to be fizzling out before a late fightback from Nadal enabled him to avoid his heaviest-ever defeat by Djokovic.

"I'm very relieved," said Djokovic. "Everything was going my way, I was 6-1, 4-0 up but I played a sloppy service game and gave him chances."

It was 24-time Grand Slam champion Djokovic's 31st win in a rivalry that began on the same Roland Garros clay courts in 2006.

The Serb added: "I never thought back in 2006 that we'd still be playing each other almost 20 years later."

Stop arrest, abduction of students

Over 100 univ teachers urge govt

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Over a hundred university teachers yesterday demanded that harassment of students by abduction and mass arrest be stopped, and they be released immediately.

Expressing solidarity with the protesting students' demands, they also called upon the authorities concerned to reopen all universities right away.

They observed a one-minute silence in remembrance of those killed in what they termed "July massacre".

University Teachers Network, a platform of public and private university teachers, made the demands from a "Anti-Repression Teachers' Rally" at the foot of Aparajeyo Bangla at Dhaka University.

Prof Saeed Ferdous, of Jahangirnagar University's anthropology department, who presided over the rally, said the government is showing its two faces.

During the day, they are expressing grief over the deaths and offering compensation to the victims' families to get sympathy, but at night they abduct people and force people to issue statements to the media.

The government should stop this, he said, calling for an end to the abductions and killings.

He said the government is considering students their opponents, but they took to the streets to overhaul the country.

QUOTA PROTESTS

All deaths unfortunate

Says HC

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday said the deaths in the violence over quota reform protests were unfortunate.

"These deaths are sad for all of us," the HC bench of Justice Mustafa Zaman Islam and Justice SM Masud Hossain Dolon said during a hearing on a writ petition.

Lawyer Aneek R Haque presented newspaper reports on the death of six-year-old Ria on the roof of a house in Narayanganj. "When a life is lost, there are no sides. A six-year-old child."

Justice Mustafa, presiding judge of the HC bench, said, "We will not address emotional issues in this court. We are deeply ashamed."

The petition was filed by Supreme Court lawyers Aynunnahar Siddiqua and Manzur-Al-Matin on Monday seeking HC orders for the immediate release of six coordinators of the quota reform protests

Govt largely to blame for huge loss of lives

Says eminent citizens' platform, gives govt 24hrs for releasing quota protest organisers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government is largely responsible for the huge loss of lives during the quota reform protest, said eminent citizens yesterday.

The level of violence and attacks on peaceful protesters has shocked and outraged the people of Bangladesh and the world, they said at a press conference under the banner of Aggrieved Citizen Society at the Dhaka Reporters Unity.

They said they were lost for words to condemn or protest such levels of brutal killings and violence.

The citizens also issued a 24-hour ultimatum for the unconditional release of the key organisers of the quota reform protest currently in the custody of the detective branch (DB) of police "for their security".

"Now, everyone is feeling insecure -- will [DB] provide safety to all by bringing them into their office?" said Iftekharuzzaman, executive director of Transparency International Bangladesh.

If the coordinators of the quota reform protest were not released unconditionally in the next 24 hours, tougher programmes will be announced, he said.

The citizens are concerned, shocked, and worried, he added.

Syeda Rizwana Hasan, chief executive of the Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association, read out an 11-point demand.

It includes proper and transparent probes and accurate trials of the members of the police, Rab, Ansar, BGB, activists of Chhatra League, Jubo League and everyone who fired shots during the quota reform protests.

They also demanded an independent, acceptable and credible probe under high-positioned specialists of the UN into every killing, law enforcers' use of weapons, and use of force.

They demanded immediate release of the arrested students and suspension of all drives to arrest students.

All educational institutions must be reopened and the politics of arms and influence have to be stopped.

The citizens demanded the immediate disclosure of

NARSINGDI JAILBREAK

All 68 prison guards suspended

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narsingdi

All 68 prison guards have been suspended in connection with the July 19 attack on Narsingdi District Jail, which resulted in the escape of a total of 826 prisoners, including nine militants, and the looting of around 85 arms and 9,000 bullets from the jail's weapon's cache.

They were suspended on Monday, confirmed Tajwar Akram Sakapi Ibne Sazzad, additional deputy commissioner of Narsingdi, quoting an order of the home ministry's Security Services Division.

Earlier, Narsingdi Jail Superintendent Md Abul Kalam Azad and Jailer Md Kamrul Islam were suspended.

At least, at least 272 people have so far been arrested over the jailbreak incident, and five out of nine escaped militants have been apprehended.

On July 21, the district administration made announcements on loudspeakers asking the escaped inmates to surrender before the court.

In response, a total of 575 inmates have surrendered in the last 11 days till yesterday. On the other hand, 51 out of 85 looted arms and 1,091 rounds of looted bullets were recovered.

Taiwan's President Lai calls for unity in face of China 'threat'

AFP, TAIPEI

Taiwan's President Lai Ching-te said yesterday "a threat from China to any country is a threat to the world", emphasizing to lawmakers of more than 20 countries that global democracies must unite against "authoritarian expansion".

China has in recent years stepped up military and political pressures on democratic Taiwan, which Beijing claims as part of its territory.

While Taipei officially only has a dozen diplomatic allies, it has strengthened partnerships with democracies around the world -- especially the United States, its largest weapons provider -- as Beijing ups the rhetoric of unification being "inevitable".

Yesterday, Lai attended a summit of the Inter-Parliamentary Alliance on China (IPAC) -- a group of parliamentarians hailing from Uruguay and Canada to Japan and Britain concerned about how democracies interact with Beijing.

Praising the 49 lawmakers from 23 countries and the European Parliament for making the journey to Taipei, Lai said the delegation demonstrates "the importance and support" that various countries have for Taiwan.

"They send a crucial message to democratic partners worldwide: democracy requires unity and protection," he said.

"I want to emphasize that a threat from China to any country is a threat to the world. Taiwan will do everything to join democratic partners to uphold the umbrella of democracy, (and) protect democratic nations from the threat of authoritarian expansion."

Teacher-student demo in several univs

On social media platforms, students, teachers, guardians and people of different ages and walks of life changed their profile pictures to solid red, expressing solidarity with the the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement's programme.

Rejecting the government-announced nationwide mourning in remembrance of those killed in the recent unrest, the organisers on Monday urged people to cover their faces with red cloths and upload the photos on their social media.

The online protests went on despite restrictions on several websites, including Facebook. Many users bypassed these restrictions using VPNs (Virtual Private Network).

Under the banner of "Jahangirnagar Against Oppression", teachers of different departments held a silent march with their mouths covered with red cloths. Students joined the march, expressing solidarity.

The procession began at the university's Shahid Minar around 12:30pm.

Anwarullah Bhuiyan, a philosophy professor, said, "We can see the full design and implementation of misrule and a dictatorial mentality ... When the students took to the streets with their logical demands, the state's forces attacked them. Now again, the government is arbitrarily arresting the students, jailing and torturing them."

Towhid Siam, a coordinator of JU student movement, said, "Our protests will continue until our demands are met. We now also demand the unconditional release of Arif Sohail, a coordinator of the JU movement."

At RU, over 200 teachers, under the banner of "RU Teachers Against Oppression", demonstrated with the same demands.

Their procession started from the Shaheed Intellectual Memorial at 11:30am and marched through the university roads before a rally at the university's main gate.

Physics Professor Saleh Hasan Naqib, speaking at the rally, said, "The government has failed to deal with the student movement. The students are still being harassed and tortured. The government has resorted to all kinds of dirty methods, including taking student leaders into DB custody and forcing them to give statements.

"We want an end to such torture and harassment. We want proper investigation into the indiscriminate killings, and fair justice."

Economics Professor Farid Uddin Khan said, "The government first directed Chhatra League to attack the students who had been demonstrating peacefully. Then, the state used the law enforcement agencies to suppress the students' movement and shoot them dead on the streets."

Marketing Professor Faridul Islam, Arabic Professor Iftikharul Alam Masud, and Finance Professor Amzad Hossain also spoke. The teachers announced they would hold a similar programme today at the same place and time.

In Khulna, hundreds of students demonstrated at the Shibbari intersection around 11:30am, protesting the police firing at quota protesters. Blocking the intersection for over three hours, they chanted "Shooting won't stop the movement" and "One point, one demand, step down Sheikh Hasina."

Many people joined the students in solidarity.

One of the protesters said, "Bullets bought with our fathers' tax money are being used against us. The police shot and killed students in the quota reform movement, we demand justice for these killings."

In Tangail, a group of quota reform protesters wearing red badges brought a procession on the Registrypara Road around noon, but the march was halted by police near the Girls' School Intersection.

FRESH PROTESTS

Organisers of the quota reform movement yesterday announced a "March For Justice" programme at all educational institutions, court premises and major roads today to press home their nine-point demand.

The announcement was made in a press release, signed by Abdul Hannan Masud, a coordinator of the Anti-Discriminations Student Movement. Copies of the release were sent to media houses around 8:30pm.

Students and people are expected to join the programme around 12:30pm.

Their demands include an apology from Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, and resignations of Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan Kamal, Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader, Education Minister Mohibul Hasan Chowdhury, Law Minister Anisul Huq, State Minister for Information and Broadcasting Mohammad Ali Arafat, and State Minister for Post, Telecommunication and Information Technology Zunaid Ahmed Palak.

Some other demands are: dismissal of police high-ups in the districts, including Dhaka, where students were killed by law enforcers; resignation of the vice chancellors and proctors of every university, including DU, Jagannath, JU, RU and CU, where peaceful protesters were attacked by law enforcers; immediate reopening of all educational institutions and halls, and lifting of the curfew and removal of the police, Rab, BGB, Swat and army personnel deployed across the country.

the actual number and identities of the deceased, injured, and affected individuals.

The government must provide adequate compensation to the families of the deceased, take full responsibility for the medical treatment of the injured, and ensure the rehabilitation of those who have lost their eyes and limbs.

"The sick mentality of suppressing protests by firing must be stopped. The government must move away from the culture of intimidation," she said.

They also demanded curfew and army withdrawal, stoppage of block raids, mass arrests, student-parent harassment, and "helicopter patrolling".

The wife and mother of Nahid Islam, a key organiser of the quota reform protest and now in DB custody, was supposed to join the press conference but they backed out at the last minute, said Shireen Huq, a rights activist.

"The quota reform protesters were undergoing treatment and were taken by intelligence. Were they unsafe at the hospital and have they ever said they were not safe there?" she added.

The first attack on freedom of speech came when the students uttered slogans, said Gitiara Nasreen, a professor at the DU Department of Mass Communication and Journalism.

"It is unfortunate that most of the teachers, proctors and vice-chancellors did not come forward to save the students... We get paid because of the students. Students will now distrust teachers because they didn't protect them," she added.

ALRD Executive Director Shamsul Haque said that they did not participate in the Liberation War to see such a Bangladesh.

"Bullets bought with the taxpayers' money were being fired at the students. We have gone past the moment of saying enough is enough," he added.

Students and youths are being harassed in the name of block raids, said Asif Nazrul, a professor of law at Dhaka University.

"Have the government declared war on the youths and students? Is it the Gaza Strip? Is it Kashmir?"

He said, "I don't see the government cry for those killed. But I see them crying for structures [that were vandalised]. Everyone knows the truth, but the police FIR is saying that Abu Sayed [slain student of Begum Rokeya University] died when a chunk of brick was thrown. Are you kidding us?"

There is no evidence of who carried out the atrocities and still thousands of unrelated people are being arrested, Nazrul added.

When the students were attacked in front of the vice-chancellor's house, he was on the second floor, said Mirza Taslima Sultana, a professor of anthropology at Jahangirnagar University.

"But he did not open the gate for the students," she said, adding that outsiders were brought in to carry out attacks on the students.

Samina Lutfha, an associate professor at Dhaka University's sociology department, said she feels guilty as they have failed to save the lives of students.

"History will not forgive us if we don't stand beside the students during this trying times," she said.

UN, EU call for thorough probe killings perpetrated in recent days by the authorities in Bangladesh.

They demanded a thorough investigation into the killings and holding accountable those responsible.

The government put the death toll in the violence at 150.

But according to The Daily Star's count, at least 163 people were killed.

The death toll from the violence between agitators, law enforcers, Border Guard Bangladesh members, and ruling party activists could be much higher as The Daily Star could not reach many hospitals, where dozens of critically injured patients were taken.

Also, many families reportedly collected the bodies of their loved ones from the scene, and this newspaper could not contact those families.

The Daily Star's count of the victims is based solely on hospital and police sources.

Besides, law enforcers have arrested over 10,000 people in connection with the violence and destruction of properties.

During a regular briefing in New York on Monday, UN secretary-general's Spokesman Stéphane Dujarric said Guterres reiterated his call for all acts of violence to be investigated promptly, transparently, and impartially, and for those responsible to be held to account.

The secretary-general remains deeply concerned about the situation in Bangladesh and notes reports of the resumption of student protests and reiterates his call for calm and restraint.

"The secretary-general is concerned about reported mass arrests of thousands of young people and political opposition in connection with the current student movement. He underscores the importance of due process and the right to freedom of expression and the right to peaceful assembly.

"We continue to raise our concerns about the situation in the country with relevant authorities, both in the capital, Dhaka, and here in New York, and we count on Bangladesh to respect and uphold human rights, including as a top troop contributing country to United Nations peacekeeping missions."

He said the UN took note of the statements by Bangladesh authorities that UN-marked vehicles are no longer being deployed within Bangladesh.

Following a UN statement on the use of UN-marked vehicles during the violence in Bangladesh, Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud had said such vehicles were mistakenly used. Later, the UN marks were erased.

Guterres said the equipment marked with UN insignia is used only when peacekeepers perform mandated tasks during peacekeeping operations.

Meanwhile, EU High Representative Joseph Borrell in a statement yesterday said that in the margins of the ASEAN Regional Forum Ministerial Meeting in Laos on July 27, he conveyed to the representative of Bangladesh and former foreign minister AK Abdul Momen his grave concern at the announcement of a "shoot-on-sight policy" and unlawful killings perpetrated in recent days by the authorities in Bangladesh.

"I'm also deeply concerned by the killings of law enforcement officers, violence, torture, mass arrests, and damage to property that have taken place."

He said these acts must be thoroughly investigated and those responsible brought to justice.

"There must be full accountability for the numerous instances of use of excessive and lethal force by the law enforcement authorities against protesters and others, including journalists and young children. The thousands arrested must receive due process.

"We will follow closely the actions of the authorities in the context of this crisis and ... expect all human rights to be fully respected," Borrell said.

The EU is Bangladesh's largest export destination, with about $30 billion a year. It has been providing duty-free access to Bangladesh as an LDC. However, as the country graduates from LDC bracket by 2026, the duty-free facility will not be abolished.

The country can enjoy similar privileges after 2026 under another scheme called GSP Plus, which will, however, require conditions on human rights, labour rights, democracy, and environment.

from law enforcers' custody and stopping the use of bullets on protesters.

The bench held hearing on the petition for the second consecutive day yesterday amid chaos and commotion in the packed courtroom.

The court will hold another hearing today and issue an order.

Lawyers Sara Hossain and Aneek represented the petitioners while additional attorneys general SM Munir, Sk Md Morshed and Mohammad Mehedi Hassan Chowdhury the state.

Reading excerpts from the Police Regulations Bengal and the Code of Criminal Procedure (CrPC) about law enforcers' use of bullets, Aneek said if the police have to shoot, they should aim at legs. If someone is committing a robbery at night, law enforcers can shoot directly in self-defence.

A loss for the nation should not only mean the damage to some buildings and structures, the loss of life is also a loss for the nation, the lawyer argued, adding that police used to spray hot water and pepper to suppress or disperse protests.

Justice Mustafa said teargas shells and rubber bullets can be used but before that warnings should be made through loudspeakers.

Lawyer Sara said six coordinators of the quota reform protests are in custody.

No one can be detained illegally, she said. "No action can be taken beyond legal capacity. It is being said that their family members were able to meet them. But there is no way to know who they [the coordinators] want to meet."

The court said detentions should be made in a legal process.

"Produce them before the court," the bench added.

Additional Attorney General Munir said law enforcers did not use excessive force and they abided by the Police Regulations Bengal.

The petitioners must prove whether the law enforcers used excessive force, he said, adding that the petitioners' lawyers had omitted that the family members of six organisers had met them and said they were well.

Justice Mustafa said, "We ourselves have said that the family members met them."

The court said the person, who was victimised, should talk about it.

SM Munir said the writ petition was unacceptable because it lacked grounds and it was devoid of facts.

Additional Attorney General Mehedi said the writ petitioners and their lawyers came to the court to protect personal interests.

"They formed a mass inquiry commission. All of those who have come here are members of this commission. They have an ulterior motive. The chairman of the commission is the father [Justice MA Matin, a retired judge of the Appellate Division] of one the petitioners [Manzur-Al-Matin]," he said.

Citing a UN charter on the principles on the use of forces and firearms by the law enforcement, of which Bangladesh is a signatory, he said law enforcers can open fire during a serious offence to lower the damage and save lives.

Lawyer Mehedi said at least three policemen were killed and around 1,200 others were injured.

Fifty-two police personnel were rescued by helicopters from the miscreants, he said, adding that the police have the right to self-defence.

Additional Attorney General Morshed said none of the six coordinators was detained or arrested. Rather, they are kept at the detective branch office for their security. Therefore, the question of bringing them before a court within 24 hours cannot arise.

The right to assembly and gathering is subject to some reasonable restrictions which cannot be challenged in the court, he said.

Sk Morshed said Justice MA Matin, who had issued restrictions on holding gatherings in the Supreme Court premises in 2005, has been chairman of the mass probe commission, although the government has constituted a judicial commission to conduct inquiry into the incidents of deaths in violence and the judicial commission has been working to this effect.

The writ petition is not acceptable, he added.

Senior lawyers Md Nurul Islam Sujan, Azahar Ullah Bhuiyan and Shah Monjurul Hoque told the court that the writ petition had been filed from a misconceived idea, and therefore it should be rejected.

Russia stages naval drills involving most of its fleet

AFP, Moscow

Russia yesterday began large-scale military drills involving every part of its navy not engaged in the Ukraine offensive, the defence ministry said.

Some 300 vessels, including submarines, and more than 20,000 personnel will be involved in the exercises, which are being staged in the Pacific and Arctic Oceans, as well as the Baltic and Caspian Seas.

The drills will involve "more than 300 combat exercises with the practical use of combat weapons", the ministry said.

"The main purposes of the exercises is to test the actions of the navy's military command at all levels, as well as the readiness of the ships' crews, naval aviation units and naval coastal troops," it continued.

Units from four of Russia's five navy divisions -- the Northern, Pacific and Baltic fleets, and the Caspian Flotilla -- will take part, each staging training exercises in its own "operational zones."

Russia's Black Sea Fleet, the fifth division, is engaged in the offensive on Ukraine, where it has sustained significant losses over more than two years of combat.

Ukraine claims to have damaged or destroyed a third of Russia's fleet in the Black Sea -- a notable military success for Kyiv as its troops struggle to hold ground on land.

Satellite images show Moscow has been forced to move most of Black Sea fleet away from its historic naval base at Sevastopol, on the annexed Crimean peninsula, to Novorossiysk, further east on the Russian mainland.

Guardians barred from staging sit-in at DMC

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Police barred a group of guardians from holding a sit-in under the banner of "Santaner Pashe Obhibhabok (Guardians beside children)" in front of Dhaka Medical College yesterday.

They announced the programme at the main entrance of DMC, demanding answers for the deaths of their children in clashes centring the quota reform protests.

Shima Dutta, a guardian, said they wanted to hold a silent sit-in to protest the killings of their children.

"We requested the police to permit us to hold the sit-in for just 10 minutes. But they refused. We have the right to stand anywhere to express ourselves. The constitution guarantees this," Shima told the media.

> We requested the police to permit us to hold the sit-in for just 10 minutes. But they refused. We have the right to stand anywhere to express ourselves.

Md Aktarul Islam, additional deputy commissioner (Ramna zone) of Dhaka Metropolitan Police, told The Daily Star that they were not allowing the demonstration because the guardians had not obtained permission from the DMP.

"Without permission, we cannot allow them to hold their programme here," he added.

Later, they visited injured students undergoing treatment at the Dhaka Medical College Hospital. The students suffered injuries in recent clashes with law enforcement agencies and pro-government groups during the protests.

More than just NUMBERS

A 28-year-old father shot and killed in Dhaka. A 35-year-old farmer died from bullet wounds in Mymensingh. A 25-year-old son fatally shot in Cox's Bazar. At least 162 lives (the actual number could be much higher) were lost when law enforcers opened fire on protesters. But these victims are not just statistics; they were children, husbands, and friends. In this report, we try to know the stories of three such names among these tragic numbers.

4-year-old daughter of Priyo, who was shot dead on July 19, keeps asking

MD ABBAS

On July 19, journalist Tahir Zaman Priyo, 28, was fatally shot in the head as law enforcers opened fire to disperse quota reform protesters in the capital's Science Lab area.

Priyo's friends, present at the protest, saw him fall as the shots rang out.

Despite trying to reach him several times, they were forced back by the police gunfire. Later, they watched as officers retrieved Priyo's body and took it away.

As the situation calmed, Priyo's friends searched from one police station to another for Priyo's body.

Their search met deadends as no station provided information about Priyo's whereabouts.

The next day, a lead took them to the morgue of Dhaka Medical College.

After obtaining the necessary police clearance, they entered the morgue, bracing for the worst. Their worst fears were realised as they found Priyo's body lying in the morgue among other victims.

THE CHILD WHO LOST HER FATHER

The bond between Sadira and Priyo was a cherished one, built through nightly video calls that kept them connected despite the physical distance.

Saiful's daughter still waits for his return

Tragedy strikes family twice as his grief-stricken grandfather dies from stroke

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

For the last couple of days, two year-old Sayma Akter holds a mango in her hand, hoping her father will return home so that they can share their favourite fruit together.

But her father, Md Saiful Islam, 35, will never return home. He was killed after a bullet pierced through him, when law enforcers opened fire at Amuakanda Bazar area in Phulpur municipality of Mymensingh on July 20.

However, this would not be the only death in their family that week.

"Hearing the news of Saiful's death, my grandfather Aftab Uddin, 80, cried out and suffered a stroke from the sorrow. He died on July 23, three days after Saiful," said Hafizul Islam, Saiful's younger brother.

Meanwhile, Sayma still firmly believes her father will return home with more mangoes.

We miss him every day

Says mother of 25-year-old Ahsan who died from bullet wounds

MOKAMMEL SHUVO, Cox's Bazar

Hasina Begum has become numb since her eldest son, Ahsan Habib, 25, died after being shot in the neck during a clash centring the quota reform protest on July 18.

"Who will I blame for the death of my child? I am leaving it up to the Almighty to deliver justice," she kept on saying.

"Not a day goes by that we don't think of him... We miss him every day," Hasina added.

Ahsan used to work as an office assistant at a cable service centre in Cox's Bazar town to support his family.

Besides studying in pass course at Chakaria Degree College with an aim to improve his life and support his family members better.

His father, Helal Uddin, a vegetable seller and resident of Fasiakhali village under Chakaria upazila, hardly earns enough to sustain his family of six.

As such, Ahsan's contribution to the family was significant, especially since he bore the cost of education for his two younger siblings.

All hopes of the family were dashed after a bullet took Ahsan's life early on July 19.

David Hasanat sent to jail

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday sent garment exporter KM Rezaul Hasanat David, chairman and CEO of Viyellatex Group, to jail on completion of his five-day remand in a case filed over vandalising and setting Setu Bhaban on fire on July 18.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Md Saifur Rahman passed the order after Shikder Mohitul Alam, an inspector of the Detective Branch of Police and also the investigation officer of the case, produced him before the court in the case.

David was accused of financing the perpetrators.

The court also directed the jail authorities to provide

Curfew relaxed from 7am to 8pm for four days

Normal office hours resumes today

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government has decided to relax the ongoing curfew for 13 hours for four days starting today.

The curfew will remain in force from 8:00pm to 7:00am till Saturday.

The decision will be effective for four districts -- Dhaka, Narayanganj, Gazipur, and Narsingdi. In other districts, the local administration will decide on the curfew.

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan made the disclosure yesterday around 6:45pm after a special meeting at the Secretariat.

At the same time, all public and private offices will run their operations as per their normal schedule -- 9:00am to 5:00pm -- from today.

The Ministry of Public Administration sent an SMS to the media in this regard yesterday.

From July 28, public and private offices were operating for six hours, from 9:00am to 3:00pm.

At the special meeting, the home minister said the violence did not stop even after accepting all the demands of the students during the quota movement.

"So, we were forced to impose a curfew. We discussed the peace and law-and-order situation across the country.

No journo should be in danger for doing their job

Says IPI, calls for probe into killings of 3 journos

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The International Press Institute (IPI) global network has called for a swift investigation into the deaths of three journalists, who were killed while covering the recent protests in Bangladesh, and ensuring a safe working environment for media.

Besides, around 30 journalists have sustained injuries while covering the protests demanding reforms to the quota system in government jobs, said IPI in a statement on Monday.

Hasan Mehedi, a journalist at Dhaka Times, was killed while covering clashes between protesters and police on July 18 in Dhaka. On the same day, Md Shakil Hossain, a correspondent for Daily Bhorer Awaj, was killed in Gazipur city, while on July 19, Abu Taher Md Turab, a correspondent for Daily Naya Diganta, was shot in Sylhet while covering the violent clashes.

"IPI strongly condemns the killings of Hasan Mehedi, Md Shakil Hossain, and Abu Taher Md Turab and calls for a thorough investigation into the circumstances of their deaths," said Amy Brouillette, director of advocacy at IPI. "No journalist should be in danger for doing their job."

"We once again renew our call on the government to take action to improve press freedom in the country and hold those responsible for crimes against journalists accountable," she also said.

Regarding injured journalists, some of them were caught up in the clashes, while others were attacked by the police or by the counter-protesters supporting BCL, according to Reporters Without Borders.

An IPI monitoring report from October 2022 to March 2023 indicates that journalists in Bangladesh operate in a hostile and difficult environment even when protests are not occurring.

> An IPI monitoring report from October 2022 to March 2023 indicates that journalists in Bangladesh operate in a hostile and difficult environment even when protests are not occurring.

They often face physical attacks, threats, and legal harassment, as well as censorship and surveillance.

In May 2023, IPI published an open letter calling on Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, expressing concerns about the state of media freedom in Bangladesh and demanding that the government take steps to protect press freedom.

Curfew

The curfew will be relaxed from 7:00am to 8:00pm from Wednesday to Saturday. Besides, the education minister will decide when the educational institutions will open. Considering the technical issues, the state minister for ICT will decide when the internet will be fully restored," he said.

The nearly three-and-a-half-hour-long meeting, attended by the seven ministers and state ministers, started around 3:20pm.

Meanwhile, Bangladesh Railway (BR) will resume operations of passenger trains on a limited scale from tomorrow, around two weeks after the service was suspended.

Some local, mail and commuter trains will be operated on the short-distance routes during the break of the ongoing curfew, Railways Minister Zillul Hakim said yesterday.

However, no decision regarding the intercity train service was taken, he told reporters after a meeting with the officials of his ministry and railway at Rail Bhaban.

Business picks up for boat makers

SUZIT DAS, Faridpur

The century-old Bhanga Boat Market in Faridpur's Bhanga municipality is going through a busy time amid rise in demand for boats in monsoon.

Every year since the British era, the famed market opens twice a week on Mondays and Fridays between June and September, in Chiladharchar area on the bank of Kumar river near Dhaka-Barishal Highway.

Hundreds of boat makers, sellers and buyers from Faridpur, Madaripur, Gopalganj and other neighbouring districts gather at the market to buy and sell boats for communication in riverine areas of the country's southern region, said Hafizul Mia, a leaseholder of the market.

Visiting the boat market recently, this correspondent saw at least 200 boats of different sizes were on sale.

Many people came to the market as visitors alongside buyers and sellers who were engaged in bargaining.

"I have made 30 boats with help of an assistant in last one month. Today, I brought three boats to this market, and sold two of those at Tk 5,000 each," said Goutam Mandol, 50, a boat-maker from Brahmapara village under Bhanga upazila.

Babul Mandol, 42, another boat-maker from the same area, said their boats are made from Raintree and Chambal wood at a cost of around Tk 4,000-4,200 each.

Jagadish Mandol, 69, of Azimnagar area, said, "I have been selling boats in this boat market for last 45 years. Even though the demand for boats is no longer like it was before, I continued to remain engaged in my ancestral profession."

Ratan Sheikh, 37, of Dangarpara village under Bhanga upazila, came to the market to zzbuy a boat. "I am a jute cultivator. I needed a boat to transport my jute from the cropland, and bought one for Tk 6,000," he said.

Amir Khan, 50, a boat trader in the market, said he purchases boats from Barishal and sells those in the market for Tk 5,500-7,500 each. He makes a profit of Tk 300-500 from each boat.

"The boat market becomes busy during monsoon, but not as much as it used to be in its heyday. Once I could sell 15-20 boats on a single day, but now it is tough to sell even half the number," he added.

BANNING JAMAAT-SHIBIR

Govt trying to distract people

Says Fakhrul

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government is bringing the issue of banning Jamaat-Shibir to distract people from the current situation, said BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday.

"Why did the government not ban Jamaat before? Why are they taking the decision now after so many years," he asked.

He said this in response to journalists' questions at a press conference yesterday afternoon at the BNP Chairperson's office in Gulshan.

"The government creates such issues to divert attention of people," he added.

Fakhrul said, "BNP believes in multi-party democracy. It is the responsibility of the people to decide whose politics they will accept and whose they won't. For this, a free, fair, and acceptable election is needed."

Referring to the ban on the Communist Party during Pakistan era, Fakhrul said, "Authoritarian regimes are the ones that resort to such decisions; they feel compelled to make such moves."

In response to a journalist's question about BNP's stance as an ally regarding the ban on Jamaat, Fakhrul stated, "This issue is not our concern; it is the government's decision."

Nirmul Committee and Gonojagoron Mancha welcome the decision

STAFF CORRESPONDEENT

The Ekattorer Ghatak Dalal Nirmul Committee and Gonojagoron Mancha have welcomed the government's move to ban Jamaat-e-Islami and Islami Chhatra Shibir.

The Nirmul Committee, following a joint meeting with advisory councils and central committee members, led by Shyamoli Nasrin Chowdhury, yesterday said they welcomed the move, although the government has delayed in making the decision.

They urged for these groups to be recognised as war criminal organisations through trials by the International Crimes Tribunal.

In a press release, they also called for a commission, including a Supreme Court judge, to investigate Jamaat and its affiliate parties for killing, torturing, and creating anarchy.

The committee emphasised the need to probe the financial, social, and cultural institutions controlled by war criminals and Jamaat-Shibir.

Gonojagoron Mancha similarly welcomed the government's decision.

"We have learned from media sources that the 14-party alliance unanimously decided to ban the politics of Jamaat-e-Islami and Islami Chhatra Shibir on July 29," said Imran H Sarkar, the platform's spokesperson.

"Banning Jamaat-Shibir's politics was one of the demands of Gonojagoron Mancha, which started on February 5, 2013," Sarkar added.

"I cannot bear the pain when Sayma says, 'abba ashbe, aam niye' (father will return with mangoes)," said Rahima Akter, Saiful's widow.

A father of three children, Saiful worked as a sharecropper to support his five-member family.

Hailing from the remote Chak Dhakirkanda village in Mymensingh's Phulpur upazila, he was unaware of the unrest gripping the country at the time.

On the day, Saiful along with his elder brother Shahidul Islam went to Amuakanda Bazar to sell their paddy.

After selling their crops, they sensed a commotion near the Amuakanda Bridge area. Before he could even figure out what was happening, Saiful was shot on the right side of his forehead.

Saiful was taken to Phulpur Upazila Health Complex, but doctors referred him to Mymensingh Medical College Hospital. On the way to the hospital, Saiful died, said Shahidul Islam.

Saiful was buried at their family graveyard.

"My children have lost their father. Who will take the responsibility of my three children?" asked Rahima, weeping.

"My brother has no connection with politics or the protest. Yet, he died by the bullets of police," said Hafizul.

"On July 18, a clash ensued in the evening between police and ruling Awami League activists on one side and protesters demanding quota reform on the other, near Ahsan's office in Cox's Bazar town," said his uncle Masud Siddique.

"At around 7:00pm, after hearing gunshots, Ahsan came out of his room in the office to an open space on the second floor of the building, when a bullet hit him in the neck. He was taken to Cox's Bazar General Hospital from where someone informed me over the phone," he added.

"I immediately went to the hospital, where doctors advised us to take him to Chattogram Medical College Hospital since his condition was critical. We hired an ambulance and were on the way to the hospital when he passed away around 1:00am," Masud said.

"It was a terrible blow to the family. Ahsan was not involved in any political or criminal activity. He was working hard, alongside continuing his studies, to support his family. His parents have become shell-shocked since they came to know of Ahsan's untimely demise," he added.

Contacted, Md Ziaur Rahman, deputy manager of BRB Cables in Cox's Bazar where Ahsan worked, said Ahsan was an office assistant of their organisation.

him with proper treatment as per the jail code after his lawyer submitted an application in this regard.

On July 25, another Dhaka court placed David on a five-day remand in the case.

In the forwarding report, the IO said David gave important information about the incident, which is being verified. The IO appealed to the court to confine him to jail until the investigation is completed.

David started his garment business in 1996 and over the last three decades, he diversified his business empire to power generation, tea estate, educational institution, agriculture, engineering and banking sector.

Viyellatex Group's garment section is known for its green garment initiative with the reuse of steam heat, reuse of water, harvesting the rainwater and planting trees for compensation to the carbon emission.

The group's export is more than $400 million apart from its local business conglomerate. According to the Viyellatex website, his company employs over 300 management staff and over 15,000 workers.

A relative of David, requesting anonymity, said they do not know exactly why he has been arrested as they think he was not involved with any such activities.

Like Munna, 11 others also collect wastes from around 2,500 families in the locality.

Ashiquazzaman Ashiq, former chairman of the local Jalma union parishad, said, "We do not have any dumping ground or STS (Secondary Transfer Station) in the area. So, local collectors dump those here. Shopkeepers of Gallamari kitchen market also do the same."

"We charge Tk 100 from each house for the salary of waste collectors and other maintenance. However, the city corporation should collect the wastes from the spot regularly,'' he added.

Sadhon Chandran Swarnokar, assistant professor of KU's environmental science department, stressed that such unchecked waste dumping adversely impacts the environment in numerous ways, including polluting soil and air, and potentially contaminating any nearby water sources.

"KCC must develop a well-managed waste management policy," he added.

Anwarul Kadir, a civil society member and educationist, echoed him.

Md Anisur Rahman, chief conservancy officer of KCC, said, "The dumping spot is located outside the city corporation area. However, we still collect wastes from there regularly. The local union parishad should construct a STS to solve the issue."

keeps asking her grandmother since July 19.

This question has left Priyo's mother, Shamsi Ara Zaman, grappling with an answer she could not bring herself to give.

"What should I tell this little child?" she asked.

Priyo and his wife had got divorced early, and Sadira lived with her father until he moved to Dhaka for work.

Since then, she has been staying with Priyo's mother in Rangpur.

When Priyo's body was brought home, Sadira asked visitors not to disturb him, saying, "Baba ghumacche, tomra disturb koro na (My father is sleeping, do not disturb him)."

The house was filled with mourners, a crowd that puzzled Sadira.

She asked her grandmother why so many people had gathered at their home.

UNFULFILLED DREAM

According to his mother, Priyo had a passion for cinematography and aspired to be a movie director. After passing the HSC examination, he moved to Dhaka to pursue his dream, enrolling at Pathshala South Asian Media Institute instead of university.

Priyo worked as a journalist for the online news portal thereport.live and was about to join another portal.

He actively participated in 2013 protests against war criminals, 2018 quota reform and road safety movements, said his mother.

During the recent clashes, Priyo's mother asked him not to participate due to the danger, but he insisted, saying, "This is a just movement, and I have the responsibility to join it."

Priyo's uncle, Alamgir Kabir, said Priyo had immense courage, reminiscent of his grandfather, a hero of the Language Movement.

Why did they shoot my boy?

Asks mother of Ziaul, 20, who sustained bullet wound

SIFAYET ULLAH, Ctg

"If my son had committed any crime, they (police) could have arrested him, but why did they shoot my boy?" said Khorsheda Begum while sitting beside her son Ziaul Hoque, 20, on his bed at the orthopedic ward of Chattogram Medical College Hospital yesterday.

Ziaul had sustained a bullet wound in his right leg while going to his brother's house in the port city's Bahaddarhat area during a clash involving law enforcers, Chhatra League activists, and protesters demanding reform to quota system in government jobs, on July 18.

The youth from Chakaria of Cox's Bazar, who works in a factory in the port city besides studying at Chittagong College, is now groaning with pain in his leg and in risk of becoming crippled for the rest of his life.

"The physicians removed the bullet surgically on Saturday, and told me that the condition of my son's leg isn't good. I am worried about his future," she added.

In the same ward, Yeash Sharif, 17, a college student, was also seen being treated. He was shot in his leg by unidentified people during a clash in Bahaddarhat area on July 18.

Just around a month back, Yeash's mother Ruby Akter passed away after suffering from several ailments. His father, Aziz Khan, who has been attending his son at the hospital, was found sleeping on the hospital floor.

"I did not approve of him joining the protest, but he did so nonetheless. My sons are the lone reason why I live," Aziz said later.

A total of six people died and five others are being treated at CMCH after being wounded in clashes at different areas in port city since July 16, said Alauddin Talukder, sub-inspector of Chattogram district police attached to the hospital.

"We are providing all facilities to those injured in the clashes as per instruction of the health directorate," said Brigadier General Taslim Uddin, director of CMCH.

Heaps of trash and food waste, collected from various areas, are dumped right next to the entrance of Khulna University, creating not only hindrance for students but also commuters. PHOTO: HABIBUR RAHMAN

Waste being dumped near KU's main entrance

DIPANKAR ROY, Khulna

In the vicinity of the main entrance of Khulna University, merely 200 metres from the four-lane Sher-e-Bangla Road, an important thoroughfare in Khulna stretching from Zero Point to Moilapota intersection, awaits an abominable sight -- a waste dumping ground.

According to locals, some of the neighbouring areas, including Mohammad Nagar, Sachibunia, Hanna Sarak, Zero Point, and Hall Road, fall outside the jurisdiction of Khulna City Corporation.

Over the past few years, household wastes from these areas, as well as wastes from the city's largest kitchen market located in Mohammad Nagar, have been collected by local waste collectors. They then discard those at the spot near the KU entrance.

Later, KCC collects the wastes from the spot once in a while and dumps those in Thikraband area.

Visiting the spot recently, this correspondent observed that around a 200-metre-stretch along the Sher-e-Bangla road in front of KU campus was full of waste, which got mixed with rainwater and spilled all over the place. Pedestrians and commuters were seen passing while covering their noses and holding their breath.

A dormitory for KU's male students is located just 40 metres from the spot, while the Sheikh Russel Children's Training and Rehabilitation Centre lies barely 20 metres away. Besides, an office of additional project director of Sustainable Marine Fisheries Project is just a yard away from the spot.

Abu Bakar, a local filling station staffer, informed that KCC did not collect wastes from the spot recently.

Addullah Al Mamun, a second-year student of KU's English department, said, "It is just unimaginable that a waste dumping spot can be found near the main entrance of a university. We cannot walk along the newly constructed footpath due to bad odour,"

Md Munna Sheikh, a waste collector, said, "I collect wastes from 150 houses and dump it on the spot near Khulna University as per instructions of the waste management committee of Mohammad Nagar."

Crops worth Tk 63cr damaged in Sirajganj flood

AHMED HUMAYUN KABIR TOPU, Pabna

Crops worth around Tk 63 crore have been damaged in the ongoing flood in Sirajganj district, according to the Department of Agricultural Extension.

The damaged crops are of different varieties including paddy, jute, pulses, vegetables, banana, and green chili, among others.

"The floodwaters inundated 6,525 hectares of cropland across the district's five upazilas since early this month. Even though water started receding since mid-July, crops on at least 3,185 hectares of land were completely damaged," said Babul Kumar Sutradhar, deputy director of DAE in Sirajganj.

"The estimated damage to crops is worth Tk 62.78 crore," he also said.

"I had cultivated pulses on 4 bighas of land, which was not ready for harvest when floodwaters inundated the cropland, and hence all of it was damaged," said Afsar Bhuiyan, a farmer of Bonnir Char (shoal) under Sirajganj Sadar upazila.

Mazeda Khatun of Kawakola village had cultivated jute on 10 bighas of land after taking a loan of Tk 20,000.

"All the jute saplings were damaged in the flood. I am now worried how to pay back the loan, and whether I will be able to cultivate the land again in Bangla 'Kartik' month after floodwaters recede completely," she said.

Many other farmers across the vast shoal areas in the district faced a similar plight.

Babul Kumar said they have listed the names of flood-affected farmers to provide them support including seeds in the upcoming crop season.

According to Bangladesh Water Development Board, Jamuna's water has been receding since July 14 and is now flowing below danger level.

"A total of 336 sq km area across 34 unions in five upazilas of Sirajganj has been submerged under floodwaters. Many shoal areas are still inundated and may remain so longer," said Md Nazmul Hossain, sub-divisional engineer of BWDB in Sirajganj.

Anti-Maduro protests spread

Venezuela opposition says he stole vote; four killed in police shooting

REUTERS, Caracas

Protests spread around Venezuela yesterday and police fired tear gas in the capital Caracas as the opposition said it had voting-tally proof it won a weekend election awarded to long-ruling socialist President Nicolas Maduro.

Demonstrations began after the election board, which critics say is in the pocket of a dictatorial government, declared on Monday that Maduro had won a third term with 51 percent of the vote, extending his "Chavista" movement's quarter-century rule.

But the opposition said the 73 percent of vote tallies to which it has access showed its candidate Edmundo Gonzalez had won by a landslide, with more than twice as many votes as Maduro.

Many Venezuelans staged "cacerolazos", a traditional Latin American protest where people bang pots and pans in anger. Some blocked roads, lit fires and threw petrol bombs at police. At least four people were killed as police fired tear gas and rubber bullets at protesters.

Demonstrators react when molotov cocktails hit the ground in front of security forces during protests against election results after Venezuela's President Nicolas Maduro and his opposition rival Edmundo Gonzalez claimed victory in presidential election, in Puerto La Cruz, Venezuela on Monday.

CHINESE ACTIONS IN DISPUTED WATERS

US pledges funds to boost Philippine defences

REUTERS, Manila

The United States yesterday pledged funding of $500 million for the Philippines' military and coast guard in a big show of support for Manila as it faces Chinese actions in disputed waters in the South China Sea.

Secretary of State Antony Blinken and Defense Secretary Lloyd Austin met their Philippine counterparts in Manila to reaffirm Washington's unwavering commitment to its oldest treaty ally in Asia.

"This level of funding is unprecedented, and it sends a clear message of support for the Philippines, from the Biden-Harris administration, the US Congress and the American people," Austin said in joint press conference following security talks.

Ahead of their meetings, Blinken and Austin met with President Ferdinand Marcos Jr who has moved the Philippines closer to Washington since he replaced Rodrigo Duterte, who was openly hostile to the Americans and pursued warmer ties with China during his six-year term.

"I'm always very happy that these communication lines are very open so that all the things that we are doing together... are continuously examined and re-examined so we are agile in terms of our responses," Marcos said.

The Philippines has competing claims with China in the waters to its west also known as the South China Sea. China claims 90 percent of the sea as its sovereign territory.

Violence broke out after a Filipino sailor lost a finger in a June 17 mission to resupply troops stationed at a contested shoal after what Manila described as "intentional-high speed ramming" by the Chinese coast guard.

Manila reached a provisional arrangement with China for resupply missions this month to ease tensions and manage differences, but the two sides appear at odds over the details of the deal, which has not been made public. Philippine foreign minister Enrique Manalo said in the same news conference his country agreed to an "exchange of information" under its arrangement with China.

Blinken said the US shares the Philippines' concerns about "escalatory" actions China has taken in the South China Sea.

Blinken also reaffirmed Washington's "ironclad" commitment to the defend the Philippines against an armed attack on its vessels, aircraft and soldiers in the waterway.

A 2016 ruling by the Permanent Court of Arbitration in The Hague found that China's claims had no basis under international law.

SOUTH CHINA SEA ROW

EU offers Vietnam security support

REUTERS, Hanoi

The European Union's foreign policy chief Josep Borrell said yesterday EU wanted to guarantee peace in South China Sea and told Vietnam the bloc could help boost its maritime security and cybersecurity capabilities.

The Southeast Asian country is at odds with China over its boundaries in the South China Sea, a crucial shipping waterway which Beijing claims almost in its entirety - a stance that has caused tensions with other countries in the region as well.

In a meeting with Vietnam's Foreign Minister Bui Thanh Son in Hanoi, Borrell, who is approaching the end of his five-year term as High Representative for EU Foreign Affairs, said the 27-country bloc had a "direct interest in maintaining peace and stability" in the South China Sea, where over a third of EU imports and more than 20% of its exports transit.

Lift curfew

"The high death toll is a shocking indictment of the absolute intolerance shown by the Bangladeshi authorities to protest and dissent. The unlawful use of force, including lethal force, against protesters shows the authorities' callous disregard for the right to life and an abject failure by law enforcement officials to uphold their obligations under domestic and international human rights law."

In the last 10 days, Amnesty has monitored and documented the grave human rights violations, the open letter said.

"Our findings point to unlawful use of birdshot against student protesters, dangerous use of teargas in enclosed student spaces and unrestrained use of lethal firearms, such as AK-pattern assault rifles, by security forces.

"At midnight on Friday, July 19, police in Bangladesh were granted 'shoot-on-sight' orders and a nationwide curfew was imposed. The arbitrary imposition of a total shutdown of the internet across the country, a blanket ban on protests in Dhaka followed by a shoot on sight curfew across the country marked an unprecedented clampdown on the rights to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly," it added.

Amnesty said such blanket restrictions violated Bangladesh's international obligations as a state party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Citing media reports, Amnesty said around 10,000 arrests have taken place, mostly targeting opposition leaders and activists and student leaders and protest participants.

"Additionally, over 213,000 people have been accused over the recent protest related violence in around 200 cases filed with police stations in the capital alone. Most of these accused individuals are unnamed. The tactic of not naming the accused in first information reports [FIRs] leaves room for law enforcers to arrest anyone they want, as has been previously documented by Amnesty International," the rights organisation said.

The mass arrest and arbitrary detention of student protesters has further perpetuated a climate of fear, it added.

Amnesty said several INGOs, including Amnesty International, and UN bodies have called for the Bangladesh government to uphold its obligations under international law to respect, protect and fulfil the rights to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly, but the government of Bangladesh has repeatedly shown an unwillingness to uphold international human rights obligations.

The rights watchdog urged Hasina to instruct law enforcement agencies to exercise restraint, not to use unnecessary or excessive force against demonstrators to prevent the recurrence of such incidents.

It also urged her to cooperate with the UN to conduct a thorough, effective, independent, and impartial investigation into the deaths and injuries during the crackdown. Those found responsible for the unlawful use of force must be held accountable, Amnesty said.

It called for providing full reparations, including adequate compensation and guarantees of non-repetition, to the victims and survivors of unlawful police violence, including those who have been injured and family members of those who have been killed.

It urged the government to guarantee the protection of the rights of peaceful assembly and freedom of expression in accordance with the constitution of Bangladesh and international human rights standards and repeal legislation which contravene these standards, including but not limited to the Cyber Security Act 2023 and Section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

The Daily Star
FOUNDER EDITOR: LATE S. M. ALI

State is yet to answer for so many deaths

Why the silence around security forces' role in quota protests?

The government seems to be in overdrive to identify those involved in the violence centring the quota protests, which would have been welcome had it included in its assessment of "violence" the role of its own security forces, especially in the deaths of over 165 people (as verified by this paper) that occurred during those violent clashes. In this connection, more than 10,000 people have been arrested in 12 days, and at least 473 more detained in police raids till July 29, according to our reports. Many of the arrests and detentions, as highlighted by a recent editorial in this daily, have been taking place without following due process of the law.

Unfortunately, despite the gravity of the violence against students and the general population, the government's sole focus seems to be catching those who carried out vandalism of public properties, or clashed with security forces and members of ruling party affiliated groups—totally disregarding the role played by the latter in terms of instigation, escalation, and even the commission of killings. It is not for nothing that the students are now asking if the damage and destruction caused to public establishments, which we must condemn, are worth more to the current regime than the loss of citizens' lives.

By the home ministry's own count, at least 150 people have so far lost their lives in the recent violence over the quota reform protests. Would the ministry please provide an answer for how these people died? Was there really a shoot-on-sight order? If so, who ordered it, and why? And if not, why did law enforcers go out of their way to indiscriminately open fire on protesters? It is beyond comprehension that law enforcement would react the way they did when there are many options available to riot police to dissipate protests in non-lethal manners. Verified videos, media reports, and eye-witness accounts have provided chilling evidence of the cruelty of the state apparatuses, which didn't even spare a four-year-old standing on his balcony.

Despite repeated calls for accountability and justice—not least from the students themselves who have lost their comrades—we have not seen any real attempt by the government to address the mass killings, even as it observed a nationwide mourning in remembrance of those killed in the recent violence. The judicial probe commission that was formed has confirmed that it will only investigate the six deaths that took place on July 16 for now. Who will answer for the blood that has since been spilled? And when?

As the government goes all out to quell the protests—by using the full force of the state—they seem to be missing the point altogether. Public anger and calls for accountability cannot be supressed by mass arrests and crackdown on social media. By refusing to acknowledge the complicity of state apparatuses in the deaths, it is trivialising the sanctity of the lives of citizens and in the process further eroding its own credibility in the public eye. We can observe a national mourning day, but without unearthing what caused so many deaths, it will lack any moral authority.

Politically-motivated lending must stop

Take measures to rein in NPLs and reduce banking sector vulnerabilities

The World Bank's (WB) recent observation about non-performing loans (NPLs) and its connection to politically motivated lending in Bangladesh does not come as a surprise. We have repeatedly warned about the risks of bending banking rules to lend to politically connected special interest groups, which has led to default loans soaring. Experts too have called attention to this issue over the years to no avail.

Consequently, there has been a 20.7 percent increase in NPLs from 2022 to 2023, amounting to a total NPL of Tk 145,633 crores in December 2023, with almost half belonging to state-owned banks. When the Awami League assumed office in 2009, the NPL figure was Tk 22,481 crore. Over the last one and a half decade, while private commercial banks mushroomed (from 30 in 2008-2009 to 43 in 2024), NPLs grew by more than six times. Loans were given out without proper credit risk management, lending and recovery rules were bent or relaxed, and the independence of regulatory bodies further compromised all to favour certain politically linked borrowers, many of whom later became defaulters. Meanwhile, no big defaulter has been brought to book.

As the WB report rightfully points out, honest borrowers and businesses are bearing the brunt of the NPL burden, as interest rates continue to rise and ailing banks face liquidity crisis. Despite repeated warnings, no effective measures have been taken to rectify the poor governance, weak market discipline and low capital buffers in the banking sector. Capital adequacy ratio in Bangladesh's banking sector is in fact one of the lowest in South Asia, which means that in the face of unexpected losses, many banks may not have adequate capital to meet their obligations to depositors and creditors.

Unfortunately, the effort spent to understate NPLs by using poor accounting and disclosure standards and regulatory forbearance, was absent in the government's initiative to properly address the vulnerabilities of the financial sector. Before we thrust ourselves to a point of no return, the government must heed expert advice and warnings by the WB and other international financial institutions and put an end to political consideration in lending and default loan recovery. Lastly, authorities must ensure the autonomy of the central bank, not only on paper but in actual terms, upgrade its supervisory and regulatory capacity to fix the problems of the banking sector, and ensure that banks in the country are strictly adhering to internationally accepted banking guidelines and standards.

Law enforcement forces of a civilised and democratic country can never use weapons on an indiscriminate, wholesale basis against their own people.

A recent example of what can happen if there is no minimum democratic and governance accountability in a country is the unprecedented brutality shown by the government and the killing of more than 200 people (according to Prothom Alo) during the quota reform movement this month. The agitation, which began following a High Court verdict on June 5 reinstating the quota system in government jobs, was limited to peaceful rallies. But the government did not give due importance to the students' demands and did not even try to negotiate with them, saying that it was a court matter.

The movement turned violent on July 15 when the ruling party's student wing, Bangladesh Chhatra League (BCL), attacked protesting students at several public universities, including Dhaka University. Even after the tragic killing of six youths on July 16 in attacks by police and BCL, the government did not budge. If it had removed the police and BCL men from the streets and had taken the initiative to negotiate with the protesters on their quota reform demand, the subsequent brutal killings could have been avoided.

Analysing 150 of the deaths, Prothom Alo found that students and workers were the majority of the victims of the fatal violence and clashes centring around the quota reform movement. As many as 113 victims (75 percent) were children, teenagers and young adults. Nineteen were children and adolescents including a four-year-old child. Ninety-four were 18-29 years old, 21 were 30-39 years old, and 16 were about 40 years old. At least 45 victims were students of different public and private universities, schools and colleges. Besides, a large number of the dead were labourers, petty traders, shopkeepers, drivers, and low-income earners. The analysis also revealed a horrifying reality: most of the dead bodies bore live bullet injuries, while marks of pellets, rubber bullets or other types of injuries were little.

Usually during a mass movement when thousands of people take to the streets, there is a belief among them that law enforcement agencies will not fire directly on them no matter what. If there is a large number of people in a protest march, there is no fear. One reason for this is the collective power of a large crowd. Another reason is the idea that no state force would open fire on large numbers of people. It is a red line that LEAs around the world would never cross—except those in countries that are ruled by military dictatorship or occupation armies. The LEAs and militaries of any modern state have a wide variety of weapons at their disposal—machine guns, tanks, fighter jets, helicopter gunships, etc—which can kill a large number of people in an instant. But law enforcement forces of any decent civilised and democratic country would never use these weapons on an indiscriminate, wholesale basis against their own people. They simply can't, because crossing this red line means breaking the people's contract with the state. The people give the exclusive power to use force to the state on the condition that this force would be used to protect the people, not to kill them.

That's why in the situation of mass unrest, LEAs use non-lethal weapons and tear gas, charge batons, use water cannons, etc and try their best to disperse people without causing fatal harm. In some extreme cases, if law enforcers are forced to shoot, they usually shoot at legs, and they don't fire indiscriminately in such a way that it might kill not only the demonstrators, but also the pedestrians, shopkeepers, rickshaw pullers, hawkers and even children standing on rooftops or balconies. No law enforcers of any democratic country would directly shoot at the chest, head or eyes of the common people, because they will be held accountable for every shot. Once this red line is crossed, a country's government loses its legitimacy and people's trust.

In Bangladesh, the ruling Awami League-led government has employed the country's law enforcement agencies against the people before. They have been accused of extrajudicial killings, enforced disappearances, and violent suppression of the political opposition's activities. These are also red lines that no democratic government should cross. But this time, the line crossed by the government while suppressing the quota reform movement with authoritarian aggression is completely different. It is one thing to unleash sudden violence on the rallies of opposition parties or commit targeted enforced disappearance or extrajudicial killings, but it is completely another to permit indiscriminate shooting on thousands of agitating protesters, including school, college and university students, who have taken to the streets across the country for several days.

Even after so many killings, there is no credible action on the government's part to admit the wrongdoings or bring the killers to justice. Not only that, cases have been filed against hundreds of thousands of people without proper investigation, and activists and opposition party members are being arrested at a wholesale rate in block raids. This is indicative of more oppressive government action in the coming days.

If the government cannot be pressured strongly and effectively from all quarters for impartial investigations, trials and accountability of these killings, and if the perpetrators get away with killing so many innocent people, including children, the danger will increase even more for the people of the country.

Are we failing our own future?

Students' protests against discrimination, law enforcers on university campuses, brutal crackdown by law enforcement personnel, shocking violence and rage against the citizens, complete internet blackout, and finally a nationwide curfew—this series of events have been overwhelming, to say the least, for the whole nation. The young generation of today is fighting and struggling, in countless ways and forms, in a free country. So, as we stand in 2024, after 53 years of independence, tagging those who hold a different opinion as "anti-state" and "anti-independence" has become an outdated and overused tactic. This tagging has caused widespread violence against students, leading to deaths and injuries.

Over the last decade, we have seen several student uprisings demanding some of the basic rights. Each time, a similar formula has been applied, starting with alleging their affiliation with other political entities and ending with a combined Bangladesh Chhatra League (BCL) and police brutality. However, the senseless brutality, mass arrests of students and social media blackouts that the nation has witnessed this time is unprecedented. This time, it is creating a prolonged state of fear. Law enforcement personnel are still roaming the streets. One of the most powerful slogans heard during the protests was "proshason jobab chai," which is basically asking to hold the authorities accountable for their inaction and hoping for proactive steps. But the very authorities that are accountable for protecting us have failed to do so—be it the university authorities, the police, or the government itself.

This brings forth a series of questions. Who is fighting against whom? Why did the vice-chancellors of most of the public universities essentially disown their students? Why did law enforcement personnel open fire against unarmed students? Why did the authorities use such force against the students who want but the bare minimum of equity?

The answers to all these questions go beyond the current movement. The students know the system is becoming increasingly rotten. Still, they want reforms to ensure a just system, even after knowing that it may not make much difference because many a job is now for sale. As the movement got momentum and the students felt they were being insulted, they understood it was time to continue fighting, not only for the reformation of the system but also to find their voices because, apparently, no one else has the courage to do so.

Bangladesh has a long history of student movements. The public universities, especially Dhaka University, have their pride in leading the successful and justified movements that have always shifted the course of history. So, why did a student movement that started with a demand to reform a discriminatory and unconstitutional system get so violent?

Many are now attempting to satisfy their own agendas. But in this age of technology, countless video footage showed BCL and law enforcement agencies' brutality against the protesters clearly. It should not be difficult for them to find out the people who killed so many people and were involved in the looting and destruction of public properties.

> Some ministers' comments during this crisis were neither responsible nor sensitive; rather they were provocative against students who were practising their democratic rights. During a crisis, the true face of both the people and the system comes out. This nationwide movement is not an exception, of course; it is rather doing an excellent job of revealing the failure of our institutions.

This leads to another question: can the students and the nation expect transparency and justice from these very agencies responsible for this violent crackdown?

Even before the nationwide complete shutdown on July 18, the whole country was shocked to see the degree of police brutality when Abu Sayed, a fourth-year university student in Rangpur, was shot dead. Some ministers' comments during this crisis were neither responsible nor sensitive; rather they were provocative against students who were practising their democratic rights. During a crisis, the true face of both the people and the system comes out. This nationwide movement is not an exception, of course; it is rather doing an excellent job of revealing the failure of our institutions. The damage is bigger than it appears on the surface. Will the students who saw the police beat up their friends, or who got stuck in a place and saw armed people, along with law enforcement members, waiting to attack them, or simply witnessed their friends getting shot and die, get over this trauma that their very own government agencies brought upon them? The mistrust created among general students and mass people will have a long-term implication.

Now, the final question: was the situation unavoidable? The authorities eventually admitted that the students' demands were logical, and reformed the quota system. But why did logic require these deaths to be considered and applied? The cruelty that some agencies showed against the country's future generation is upsetting and terrifying. Will they ever be able to recover from that? More importantly, do they want to at all?

There's a lot at stake for Bangladesh on the global stage

In light of Bangladesh's student protests and the government's response that has brought the nation to a standstill—with violence, mounting death toll, and a brutal crackdown—Michael Kugelman, the director of South Asia Institute at the Wilson Center, talks to Ramisa Rob of The Daily Star about the implications for the country on the international front.

Michael Kugelman.

As an observer from outside, but one specialising in South Asia, did you expect the student protests for quota reform to escalate to one of the biggest challenges that the Awami League government has faced?

It was surprising. There have been plenty of protests during Awami League's regime over the last 15 years, but nothing as large, long, and violent as this one. That's likely because there was a perfect storm this time around: an unpopular court decision, an especially ferocious government response—incendiary rhetoric along with violent actions of great scale—a deep repository of pent-up public anger and grievances against the state, and growing economic stress that accentuated the public's grievances.

Can you describe the international response towards the spiralling situation and particularly the government's handling of student protests from the beginning?

There have been expressions of concern from the UN, some lawmakers, and some leaders around the world, especially in the West. And there have of course been strong condemnations from the international media and human rights groups. But on the whole, the international response, especially from foreign governments, has been rather muted.

Some may find this relatively restrained international response to be puzzling, given the scale and egregiousness of the violence. There are several reasons for it. One is quite simple: the world is on fire, and with multiple major wars playing out, an internal crisis in Bangladesh won't register high on many radars. Another reason is very practical: many governments prefer to keep a low profile and say little publicly at such a dangerous and volatile moment in Bangladesh, to avoid any risks to their nationals and interests in the country.

But let's be clear: many governments, including in the US, are concerned. Bangladesh may not be a major power, but it's a consequential and strategically significant player, especially in an era of intense great power competition. It's also a top global economic player. From the international community's perspective, there's a lot at stake with Bangladesh, and when it's convulsed by unrest and uncertainty, that doesn't serve anyone's interests.

What do you make of the government's narrative that the protests were orchestrated by the opposition parties from the beginning, and is it of concern internationally?

I know this is the narrative the government is trying to project, but aside from the hardcore Awami League support base and certain constituencies in India, I don't think anyone is buying it. The protests were organised and spearheaded by members of the public, not political parties. They were led by students, not political partisans. This isn't to say opposition forces didn't exploit and infiltrate the protests—I'm sure they did, given the opportunity it provided. But these were public protests led by student leaders.

There've been plenty of protests against the Awami League government over the last 15 years, but nothing as large, long, and violent as this one.

It's a painful truth for the Awami League that there were mass displays of public anger against the government. That's a big reason why it has put out the narrative that it has: by blaming it all on the opposition, you try to hide the reality that many Bangladeshis—common people, not political partisans—seem to be fed up with the government.

In January, after the US deemed the election was not "free and fair," you had written that Bangladesh remains a "test case" for US value-based foreign policy in a world where realpolitik often prevails. Do you think the current situation will have an impact on the US approach?

This crisis will, I think, validate those in the US government that believe that rights and democracy should remain a focus of the policy towards Bangladesh. And it presents a challenge for those in Washington charged with focusing more on the interests-based part of the relationship—scaling up economic cooperation, furthering strategic collaborations, and so on. If the crisis recedes and instability subsides relatively soon, it will be easier to get back to that balance of values and interests that the Biden administration has sought to strike post-Bangladesh election, with the letter that was issued in February. But prolonged unrest and crisis will make that much tougher to pull off.

This crisis could have a big impact on one particular key US policy: sanctions on Rab. The US has said in recent weeks that it has no plans to remove those sanctions. But events of recent days, especially if the US concludes Rab was involved in the unlawful use of force during the protests, will make it even more unlikely that those sanctions will be removed anytime soon. Additionally, we've seen over the last year some US visa restrictions that targeted those that undermined the election process. So, we can't rule out additional visa restrictions that target those linked to the illegal uses of force during the protests.

What would you think are the general concerns of this ongoing unrest and instability for nations that have economic and political ties with Bangladesh?

Stability risks are a major problem for countries with both economic and political ties with Bangladesh. Countries and investors operating commercially in Bangladesh have already been spooked by the scale of the violence, and they'll be nervous about the possibility of additional flare-ups down the road. And the sense of uncertainty about what could be coming next will add to that sense of anxiety. This isn't good for Bangladesh, especially as it's already dealing with growing economic stress and badly needs course corrections that include more FDI flows.

Bangladesh's diplomatic ties could also be hampered, and especially in a worst case scenario where foreign governments scale down their diplomatic presence due to extended security concerns. That would make diplomatic relations more difficult. And that would be quite disappointing for a government—and a ruling party—that has long prided itself on its ability to conduct relations with countries across the board, and navigate fierce geopolitical competition, come what may. Let's be clear: it's hard to show "friendship to all, malice towards none" if many of your friends are taking a step back due to security concerns.

What do you believe are the geopolitical implications for Bangladesh's reputation from this current movement? Is there any way to turn back the clock at this stage?

Bangladesh's global reputation and image have taken serious hits. But I wouldn't overstate the geopolitical implications of this. The Chinas, Russias and Indias of the world, and much of the Global South, won't let the internal policies of the Bangladesh government—including and especially the use of repression—impact their relations with it. I envisage a fair degree of continuity in policy.

Whether Bangladesh's relations with the West will face any consequences remains to be seen. These relations will largely be impacted by how long this crisis plays out. A prolonged crisis, and especially one that involves more state repression, could pose a challenge to Dhaka's relations with the West—from its efforts to earn more trade privileges from the EU to prospects for arms sales with the US and others. At the end of the day, the West—including the US—won't be stopped from engaging with Bangladesh if strategic interests warrant that engagement. But this has been an especially serious crisis, with especially grave concerns about the actions of the Bangladesh government and state actors.

If the situation were to calm down, do you expect a major shift in the strategic significance of Bangladesh, especially in regard to the nation's position as a key battleground for great power competition?

That strategic significance will remain entrenched, regardless of whether and when the situation calms down. Bangladesh's location, size, economic status, and relations with great powers are constants that won't be impacted by prolonged instability.

But there's a cautionary tale here. India has been successful in leveraging its own strategic significance, ensuring that the West remains closely engaged with it despite concerns about its domestic policies. Bangladesh is also strategically significant, but not so much that the US was willing to hold back from pursuing tough policies—including sanctions—that risk aggravating relations. In effect, Dhaka can't use its strategic significance as a shield, in the way that New Delhi can.

Who would be better for Palestine: Trump or Harris?

Ramisa Rob
is in-charge of Geopolitical Insights at The Daily Star.

RAMISA ROB

The Prime Minister of Israel, Benjamin Netanyahu, against whom there exists an arrest warrant from the International Criminal Court, delivered a controversial address to Congress, just days after incumbent Joe Biden dropped out of the high-stakes presidential race. Thousands and thousands of protesters gathered outside, and Netanyahu called them "Iran's useful idiots," as bipartisan—though mostly Republican lawmakers—clapped theatrically.

Joe Biden has been the face to blame for abetting the genocide of over 40,000 Gazans, and rightly so, as he's deferred to Netanyahu, providing his extremist government with billions of military aid and lethal weapons to annihilate a whole population. Ahead of the 2024 elections, Biden's role in Gaza genocide had birthed a sinister question: would Donald Trump have been better for Palestinians? Now that Vice President Harris is poised to replace Biden on the Democratic ticket, the question still remains: Will Donald Trump be better for Palestinians than Kamala Harris?

First, an undeniable fact must be addressed: the US political establishment itself is Zionist, and it is in no position to pivot from favouring Israel over Palestinian lives. Harris, as a presidential candidate in the US, cannot win by being "anti-Israel," but the conundrum she faces is that young voters will not tolerate further US-backed brutality in Gaza. Her first foreign policy challenge, in her newly launched presidential campaign was the way she dealt with Netanyahu's visit, as left-leaning Democrats insisted that she must clean up Biden's Gaza policy mess—which has actually harmed Democrats much more than Biden's debate performance. A recent Century Foundation poll, conducted before Biden dropped out, showed that nearly four in 10 voters (38 percent) said they were less likely to vote for Biden due to his handling of Israel's genocide in Gaza.

Harris did not attend Netanyahu's address, which she would normally preside over, but she met him privately, after which she, expectedly, harped on the harmful rhetoric, "Israel's right to defend itself." But she also expressed concern, more vocally than Biden, regarding innocent Palestinians in Gaza. "We cannot allow ourselves to be numb to the sufferings and I will not be silent," she said. It's far from enough, but she did carve a microscopic space for Palestinians in the conversation, which is a shift from Joe Biden, who has, for the most part, glossed over the large number of civilian casualties of Palestinians in Gaza, and even questioned them.

In an interview with the Nation, during the historic US student protests against the genocide in Gaza, Harris seemed to show sympathy with students, though restrained, stating that, "They are showing exactly what the human emotion should be, as a response to Gaza." Kamala Harris has irritated Israeli ministers, including the President Isaac Herzog who said in a recent interview, that "she has made quite a few problematic statements in the context of the war in Gaza," which he added, "might have been influenced by the more progressive camp in the Democratic Party." While Biden is more of an old-school Zionist in his personal views, Harris' own personal views are unclear. She has internally advocated for more pressure on Netanyahu to agree to a ceasefire. But she keeps showing double standards with her staunch support for Ukraine against Russian invasion, while reiterating that the Israeli persecution of Palestinians "is not a binary issue." Bernie Sanders was one of the very few US politicians, other than Rashida Tlaib—the only Palestinian American in Congress—to contextualise the Hamas attacks and lightly address the root of the conflict. He has been condemned by many, including Democrats for it. So, to expect Harris to act like Sanders or Tlaib, who was censured for her pro-Palestinian comments, and win the nomination and election, is utopian.

As for Donald Trump, he shares a close relationship with Netanyahu. When addressing Congress, Netanyahu thanked former President Trump for the historic "Abraham Accords," which sought to normalise diplomatic relations between Israel and other nations in the Middle East. Trump was coaxed to pull out of the Iran nuclear deal during his presidency, secured by Obama, and almost went head-to-head with Iran—a long-time dream that Netanyahu has had. The Abraham Accords only emboldened Netanyahu's plans to annex the West Bank, and greenlit illegal settlements on Palestinian Territories—which Biden tepidly sanctioned during the ongoing genocide. Trump's actions in Netanyahu's Israel were far from advancing the cause of "peace," but rather reflected a coordination between two corrupt politicians. Trump warmly hosted Netanyahu in Washington, and told reporters, "No President has done what I've done for Israel." He then went on to lambaste Harris for voicing her concerns for Palestinian civilians, saying, "I think her remarks were disrespectful."

Right after the October 7 Hamas attacks, Trump criticised Israel's security failure, condemning Biden, and then went on to say that he would expand a freeze on refugees that he enacted during his presidency to cover people from the Palestinian territory of Gaza. He has now vowed to set new restrictions on immigration crackdowns, saying, "If you want to abolish the state of Israel, you're disqualified."

Israeli Ministers like the extremist Ben Gvir have openly expressed they prefer Trump and Republicans, saying, "Instead of giving his full backing, Biden is busy with humanitarian aid. If Trump was in power, it would be different." And that should itself be the answer to the question on a lot of progressives' minds.

In an interview with Al Jazeera, Palestinians expressed their belief that Trump would exacerbate their suffering, and he's also made it clear in the presidential debate, that Israel needs to "finish the job." It's also remarkable though, that residents expressed scepticism regarding Harris' presidency due to her cozy history with pro-Israel lobbying groups. Fathmi Nimr, a Palestinian political analyst, told Al Jazeera that a "major shift" in US policy in the Middle East under Harris is unlikely. Some believed the only change would be that she could be tougher on Netanyahu, whom many accuse of prolonging the war to remain in power in a nation where he is copiously disliked.

The fact that the "will Trump be better" question is even being asked stems from a concept that's been going around for quite some time: Donald Trump is "anti-war,"and it's also become the new MAGA pitch. In January, Senator JD Vance—now Trump's running mate—had claimed that Trump's legacy was that he "started no wars." And it's working, as the anti-war left and just anti-war people who've been seeing thousands and thousands murdered have said the same on social media. But Trump's chaotic presidency and xenophobic foreign policy seems to have been memory-holed. Under Trump, the civilian deaths in Afghanistan skyrocketed. He widely supported the Saudi Arabian war against Yemen, started the trade war with China among many other inflammatory incidents he created himself. During the Black Lives Matter movement after the killing of George Floyd, as police fired tear gas onto the protesters, Trump deployed National Guard troops on the streets of Washington DC. If he had reacted with military force during the BLM movement, then would he have not done the same––if not worse––during the pro-Palestine student encampments that shook the nation this year?

One thing is for sure, Trump has never hidden behind the facade of "human rights," and maybe he deserves credit for that. But he will not be championing any kind of peace for Palestinians—whose lives reflect a slur to him. To think that he will is simply asinine. Progressives in the US, advocating for an end to the worst military campaign in modern history, need to unfortunately settle for a stable candidate who will not repress public pressure, but who has more chances of reacting to it. If pressured, Harris has a higher likelihood of deviating from the unilateralist and militarist US foreign policy, where the US weapons industry proliferates at the cost of the violence unleashed onto the rest of the world. There could be a starting point with Harris at least, whereas with Trump there definitely won't be.

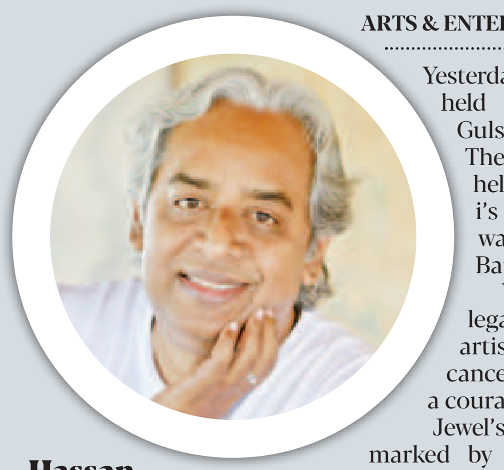
Hassan Abidur Reja Jewel
A beloved face in music lost

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT DESK



Hassan Abidur Reja Jewel, a revered figure in Bangladesh's music and television industry, passed away yesterday, leaving behind a rich legacy spanning over three decades. Known for his soulful voice and exceptional production skills, Jewel emerged as a prominent artiste in the early 1990s when band music was burgeoning in the country.

Yesterday, his janazah was held at Azad Mosque in Gulshan after Asr prayers. The second janazah was held at 6pm on Channel i's premises, and he was later laid to rest at Banani Graveyard.

We honour the life and legacy of this esteemed artiste, who succumbed to cancer at the age of 56 after a courageous 13-year battle.

Jewel's childhood was marked by frequent relocations across Bangladesh, shaping his diverse cultural exposure. Encouraged by his parents, he began singing at a young age, starting formal lessons in first grade and performing on stage by fourth grade. Despite his passion for music, Jewel ensured it wasn't his sole source of income, pursuing a career in television production to balance artistic pursuits with practical considerations.

His debut album was released in 1992, marking the beginning of a prolific career that saw 10 albums over 28 years. His collaborations with legendary guitarist Ayub Bachchu, who composed seven of his albums, left an indelible mark on Bangladeshi music. Jewel's influence extended beyond the studio; he also captivated audiences on stage, even though his later years were devoid of new releases. Yet, music remained an integral part of his life, a constant companion through highs and lows.

Among his numerous songs, Jewel held a special fondness for Amar Ache Ondhokar, penned by Sayed Awlad and composed by Bappa Mazumder, with musical arrangement by Ayub Bachchu. This track, the title song of his 1995 solo album, held a special place in his heart.

In 2015, with Bachchu's permission, Jewel reintroduced Amar Ache Ondhokar with a new piano arrangement, showcasing his deep voice in a fresh, stripped-down format. This rendition was shared on his YouTube channel with a lyrical video and the story behind its creation.

Before Ayub Bachchu's passing, Jewel reflected on the album's creation in an interview with the rock legend, recounting, "The album was set to release on Eid, but Boss (Ayub Bachchu) couldn't find time. So, I came up with an idea and got Boss off the hook for four days. We then checked into a hotel in Shanti Nagar. Boss, Tutul, and Fanti (the drummer) got to work with great enthusiasm. Boss would take a lyric, grab his guitar, and compose a tune. Fanti would handle the rhythm section, while Tutul recorded keyboard layers and music sequences."

The team completed 11 songs by the afternoon of the second day, leaving only the title track, composed by Bappa Mazumder. Upon hearing the demo of it, Bachchu approved, stating, "The melody and lyrics are great, Julu! It's perfect for you. Let's do it. Call Bappa." This collaboration resulted in one of Jewel's most cherished songs, blending Mazumder's composition with Bachchu's arrangement.

His notable productions include Ek Bikele (1994), Amar Ache Ondhokar (1995), Ekta Manush (1996), Beshi Kichu Noy (1998), Bedona Shudhui Bedona (1999), Firtee Pothe (2003), Dorja Khola Bari (2009), and Emon Keno Holo (2017). Among his 10 solo albums, Ek Bikele gained the most popularity, earning him the moniker 'Ek Bikeler Jewel'.

His passing has left a void in the industry, as expressed by fellow artistes and fans.

Singer Elita Karim posted, "Dearest Jewel bhai, may he rest in peace. May the Almighty grant him the highest honour in heaven. He was one of the finest human beings in the music industry, and I am so glad that I had the opportunity to actually say this to him a while ago."

Singer Konal reflected, "Jewel bhai, our industry's musical jewel, and a gem of a human being, left us for the heavens. I lost one of my mentors today."

Debashish Biswas, Khijir Hayat Khan, Rafiath Rashid Mithila, and Adnan Faruque Hillol, among others, also expressed their deep sorrows.

Jewel's departure marks the end of an era for Bangladeshi music, but his contributions and the memories he created will continue to resonate with his fans and loved ones.

Shweta Tiwari to star in Karan Johar produced web-series

Shweta Tiwari was once a household name, popularly known for her role as Prerna in the Indian television series Kasautii Zindagi Kay. The actress recently joined forces on a Karan Johar-produced web-series.

In a recent interview with an Indian newspaper, she talked more about the project, "I've signed with Dharma Productions for an upcoming series where I play a don-like character in a saree who smokes cigarettes (laughs). The role seemed challenging, which is why I'm excited about it."

Besides, she is set to reprise her cop role in Singham Again, which stars Ajay Devgn, Kareena Kapoor, Deepika Padukone, Ranveer Singh, and Arjun Kapoor.

Jimmy Kimmel not returning to host Oscar

Jimmy Kimmel, a four-time Oscar host, has turned down the offer to host the 2025 Oscars. He is tied with Whoopi Goldberg and Jack Lemmon for fourth in hosting duties, behind Johnny Carson (5), Billy Crystal (9), and Bob Hope (19).

People Magazine reports that Jimmy Kimmel has declined to host the 2025 Oscars, so he won't be on stage for the 97th Academy Awards. Kimmel previously hosted in 2017 and 2018; the ceremony had no host from 2019 to 2021.

The 97th Academy Awards will be broadcast live at 7pm (ET) on ABC on Sunday, March 2, from the Dolby Theatre at Ovation Hollywood.

One bullet in Shonir Akhra's Rayerbagh area on July 20, Jisan was hit by a bullet, which pierced through his eyebrow and exited through his skull. He died on the spot.

This, however, was not the end to the tragedy.

Unable to bear the pain of losing her husband, Mishti had stopped eating from the very day he was shot dead.

Nine days later, she died by suicide.

"She couldn't bear the thought of living without him," said Jisan's father Babul Sarder, a Bangladeshi working in South Sudan for the past nine years, after travelling from Rangpur to Dhaka following Mishti's burial in her family cemetery yesterday morning.

"She went into shock after my son was killed and was starving herself. She clutched onto his clothes and cried continuously."

Babul had always hoped his son would join him abroad for a better future.

But Jisan was adamant not to leave Mishti behind. Though this frustrated Babul, he ultimately accepted his son's decision.

Jisan was a hardworking young man and made around Tk 700 a day by supplying drinking water.

On the day of the clash, his mother pleaded him to stay home. Jisan, however, insisted on going to work, hoping to earn his daily income.

When he got caught up in the clash, he took shelter in a nearby shop. It was just when he peeked outside to check if the violence had stopped that he was fatally shot.

Babul was in South Sudan at the time and rushed back to the country when he heard of his son's passing.

"My son often wanted to buy a bike but I didn't allow it fearing what if something happened to him ... there would be no one to carry my coffin after I died, as he is my only son. I never imagined that I would be the one carrying my son's coffin instead.

"In Sudan, even the poorest people have AK-47s, but they don't kill innocent people like birds. But my son was killed like one," Babul cried.

"Nobody from the government or police even came to offer their condolences or apologise for such a tragedy in our lives but I saw our prime minister shedding tears over the metro rail, which was built with remittance from people like us.

"The metro rail stations can be repaired but can she give back my son and daughter-in-law?"

"I have left justice up to the Almighty," he added, his voice choked with the grief he must bear for the rest of his life.

the inquiry commission has been expanded. The commission can [probe] incidents that took place up to July 21. A notification in this regard has already been sent," Anisul said.

It was decided in the meeting that the ongoing curfew in four districts would be relaxed for 13 hours every day for four days from today, said Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan.

The curfew will be enforced from 8:00pm to 7:00am in Dhaka, Narayanganj, Gazipur, and Narsingdi, he said.

Apart from Asaduzzaman and Anisul, Industries Minister Nurul Majid Mahmud Humayun; Education Minister Mohibul Hassan Chowdhoury; State Minister for Information and Broadcasting Mohammad Ali Arafat; State Minister for Labour and Employment Md Nazrul Islam Chowdhury; and State Minister for Posts, Telecommunications, and Information Technology Zunaid Ahmed Palak also attended the meeting.

Secretaries of different ministries, the inspector general of police, director general of Rab, and top officials of law enforcement and intelligence agencies were also present.

Responding to a question, Asaduzzaman said law enforcers were arresting people based on evidence.

"We are not arresting any innocent person. We are arresting those who we have been able to identify with intelligence information, footage, and witnesses' accounts," he said.

"We are not making any mass arrests."

He said those involved in the violence have committed seditious acts and action must be taken against them in accordance with the law.

Education Minister Mohibul Hasan Chowdhury said they want to reopen educational institutions gradually after considering public safety and the risks.

"We have repeatedly said that public safety is most important when it comes to the question of reopening educational institutions ... We want to open the educational institutions step by step in consultation with all authorities," he said.

Primary schools will be opened after assessing security risks and then the decision will be made regarding secondary schools, he said.

State Minister Palak said the government will inform people about reopening social media platforms, including Facebook and TikTok, by 11:00am today.

"We wrote to TikTok, YouTube, and Facebook seeking explanations, verbally and in writing. TikTok responded. They said they intend to show up and respond verbally and in writing tomorrow [Wednesday]. As far as I know, Facebook and YouTube have not responded."

He said, "We have written to these organisations [TikTok, YouTube, and Facebook] to appear before the BTRC at 9:00am, 10:00am, and 11:00am tomorrow."

unaccounted for, state authorities said. Local Asianet TV put the death toll higher at 119.

Yesterday's landslides are the worst disaster in the state since 2018 when heavy floods killed almost 400 people.

"There are still people who are trapped under the ground and those who have been swept away," Kerala Chief Minister Pinarayi Vijayan told reporters. "The rescue operation will continue with all possible strength and means."

More than 3,000 people had been moved out of the area and accommodated in 45 relief camps in the district, he said, adding that hundreds of personnel, including army soldiers, using drones and sniffer dogs were searching for survivors amid heavy rains, reports Reuters.

Vijayan, a survivor who gave only one name, said he woke up in the middle of the night to feel the ground shake and see electric poles fall.

"A couple of neighbours and I ran to nearby houses where we heard cries for help and took some of the injured to safety," he told Asianet.

"My father, mother, sister and her daughter were in the house and as I went towards them the next landslide hit with a roaring sound," he said. "I clung to a window bar as I saw my mother and sister disappear under the mud, I couldn't do anything."

Jamaat, Shibir

The petitioners said Jamaat was a religion-based political party, and it did not believe in independence and sovereignty of Bangladesh.

Jamaat later filed an appeal with the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court challenging the HC verdict. The SC upheld the HC verdict declaring Jamaat's registration illegal.

The party secured the registration on November 24, 2008, after making many changes to its charter in line with the EC requirement.

Families of the Liberation War martyrs and war crimes trial campaigners have long been demanding Jamaat be tried as a party for committing crimes against humanity in 1971. Even the war crimes investigators found proof of committing crimes against humanity by the party and recommended charges be pressed against it.

Law Minister Anisul on many occasions had said the government would amend the International Crimes (Tribunals) Act-1973 to try parties. But the act is yet to be amended.

Controversial Islamist thinker Sayyid Abul A'la Maududi founded Jamaat in undivided India under the British colonial rule in 1941.

The government of independent Bangladesh had banned five communal outfits, including Jamaat, which not only opposed the nation's independence but also actively helped Pakistan occupation forces commit genocide and other crimes against humanity.

The banned parties were given the green light to do politics during the rule of late president Ziaur Rahman after the assassination of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman in 1975.

The international crimes tribunals in their judgments described the Jamaat's role in 1971.

Several top leaders of Jamaat have been executed over committing crimes against humanity during the Liberation War.

Some judgments also said Jamaat played a leading role in creating Pakistan occupation army's auxiliary forces like Al-Badr, Razakar, and Al Shams, and formation of peace committees that actively took part in atrocities against Bangalees.

Jamaat was banned twice before, in 1959 and 1964 in Pakistan, for its communal role.

In 1971, the party took stance against the nation's independence and massacred pro-liberation activists.

Jamaat represented in parliament after its candidates won seats in 1986, 1991, 1996, 2001 and 2008 national elections.

In 2001, BNP-Jamaat formed the four-party alliance government.

The AL, Jamaat, and several other political parties waged a joint movement in 1996 to press home the demand for holding general elections under a caretaker administration.

WHAT JAMAAT SAYS

Protesting the decision to ban the party, Jamaat Ameer Shafiqur Rahman in a statement yesterday said the government's decision is "illegal and unconstitutional".

"Jamaat-e-Islami is an established democratic political party, which has participated in all credible elections in Bangladesh. The party had representatives in parliament," he said.

The Jammat chief said people will not accept the government's decision.

SIX ORGS BANNED SO FAR

Previous governments through executive orders banned five organisations between 2003 and 2009. They are Shahadat-e-Al Hikma (banned in 2003), Jagroto Muslim Janata Bangladesh (2005), Jamaa'tul Mujahedin (2005), Harkatul Jihad Al Islami (2005), and Hijubut Tahrir (2009).

Purbo Banglar Communist Party was also banned for its terrorist and anti-social activities.

Police drives, arrests continue

Replying to a query, Biplob said law enforcers would be withdrawn from duty and prosecuted to the full extent of the law if there was any proof that they were demanding money from detainees or their families for their release.

Asked about video footage of police shooting unarmed citizens, he said, "Every incident has to be judged individually. For each case of police firing reported, the context under which it happened will be reviewed. We will ensure a fair investigation in each case."

Among those arrested in 29 districts in the 36 hours till 6:00pm yesterday, two are in Thakurgaon, five in Madaripur, six in Rangpur, three in Feni, four in Sylhet, four in Tangail, one in Moulvibazar, three in Habiganj, 20 in Rajshahi, 10 in Bogura, six in Gaibandha, nine in Narsingdi, 23 in Narayanganj, one in Khulna, 17 in Pabna, five in Mymensingh, four in Kishoreganj, two in Netrokona, five in Satkhira, one in Cox's Bazar, seven in Cumilla, two in Natore, 46 in Chattogram, two in Lalmonirhat, five in Nilphamari, eight in Noakhali, five in Laxmipur, three in Brahmanbaria, and six in Barishal.

MORE ON REMAND

A Dhaka court yesterday placed former Jubo Dal general secretary SM Jahangir and BNP's Vice-Chairman Barkatullah Bulu's son Omar Sharif Md Imran, alias Saniat on a five-day remand each in connection with a case filed over the vandalism of the Mirpur-10 Metro Station on July 19.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Farzana Shakila Sumu Chowdhury passed the order after DB inspector Shikder Mohitul Alam produced them before the court with a 10-day remand prayer.

The same court rejected the bail petition of BNP's International Affairs Secretary Nasir Uddin Ahmed Ashim and sent him to jail on completion of his three-day remand in the same case.

Besides, the court of Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Md Saifur Rahman placed Bangladesh Jatiyo Party (Manzu) Chairman Andaleeve Rahman Partho on a fresh three-day remand in a case filed over the attack on Setu Bhaban in Dhaka on July 18.

The same court sent Rezaul Hasanat David, chairman and CEO of Viyellatex Group, to jail on completion of his five-day remand in the same case.

On July 25, Partho and David were placed on a five-day remand each in the same case.

The same court yesterday placed Nazmus Shakib and Tauhid Ibn Badar, students of Titumir College, on a four-day remand each in the same case after they were produced before the court with a 10-day remand prayer.

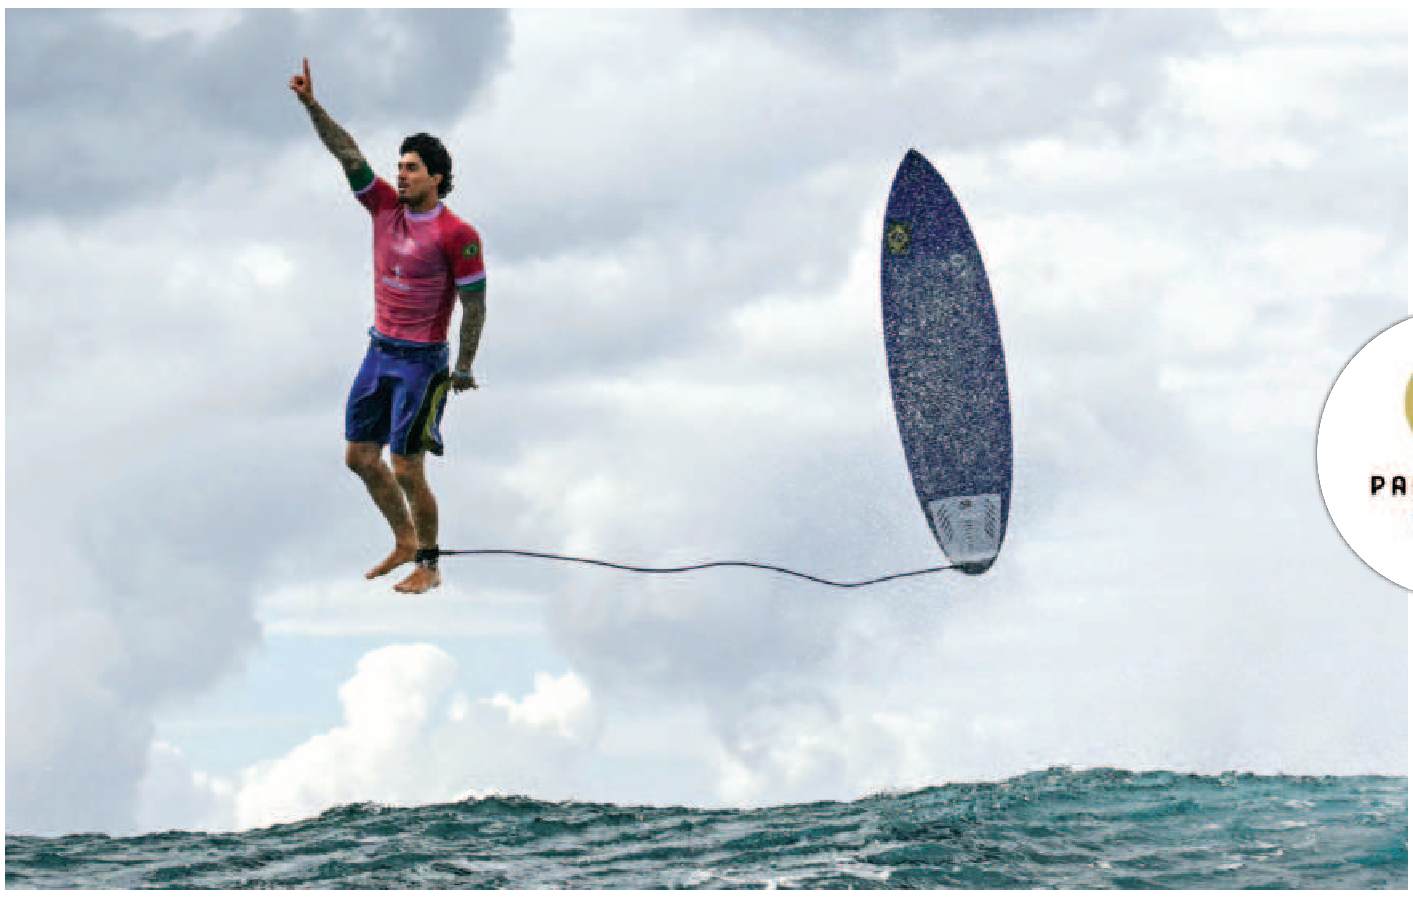
'A DEFINING IMAGE OF TRIUMPH'



AFP photographer Jerome Brouillet's perfectly-timed shot of Brazilian Olympic surfer Gabriel Medina earned the adulations it deserved, with TIME magazine describing it as "the defining image of triumph of the 2024 Summer Games". Even though Brouillet said he did not have a clear line of sight of the initial action, he still managed to catch Medina soaring ramrod-straight above the waves pointing one finger in the sky, his surfboard pointing skyward at his side. This picture of Medina kicking out of the wave after a ride that earned a record Olympics score in Tahiti became a global sensation for its sheer brilliance and significance, with this being used by scores of publications around the world and shared or liked millions of times online.

Covid looms: Several athletes test positive

REUTERS, Paris

Three years after the Tokyo Olympics were held amid strict precautions and with no fans because of the global Covid-19 pandemic, the virus has forced athletes to withdraw from events and has others donning masks once again at the Paris Games.

Several athletes have tested positive, including Australian swimmer Lani Pallister who was a medal hope in the women's 1,500 metres freestyle but had to withdraw from the event. Pallister has been instructed to isolate in her room.

British swimmer Adam Peaty tested positive a day after he narrowly missed out on 100 metres breaststroke gold, sharing silver with American Nic Fink. He, however, hopes to compete in relays later this week.

Meanwhile, multiple Australian women's water polo players tested positive for Covid in the days leading up to the opening ceremony, forcing them to isolate from other team members.

Men's triathlon postponed due to Seine pollution

REUTERS, Paris

The men's triathlon at the Paris Olympics did not go ahead as planned on Tuesday as pollution levels in the Seine remained too high, World Triathlon said in a statement, dealing a blow to organisers and leaving athletes facing more uncertainty.

The race was postponed to Wednesday at 10:45 am (2:45 pm Bangladesh time), immediately after the women's event.

Should levels of bacteria remain too high by Wednesday morning both the men's and women's races are likely to be postponed to Friday, the contingency day reserved for the events.

If by Friday the water quality is still not good enough the swim leg will be scrapped and athletes will compete in a duathlon instead.

O'Callaghan, Popovici poised for revered twin gold

AFP, Paris

Mollie O'Callaghan and David Popovici backed up from winning 200m freestyle gold with strong 100m heat swims Tuesday.

Australia's O'Callaghan upset defending champion Ariarne Titmus to clinch the 200m crown on Monday, while Romanian teenager Popovici won by a fingertip in a frenetic men's race.

They both returned barely 12 hours later, with Australian two-time world champion O'Callaghan fifth fastest through the heats, while 19-year-old Popovici -- who burst onto the scene by winning the 100m-200m freestyle double at the 2022 world championships -- was third best.

With reigning champion Emma McKeon failing to qualify at the Australian trials, O'Callaghan has a golden opportunity to secure the revered 100-200 double.

The men's 100m is also without a defending champion after Caeleb Dressel's failure to make the grade at the US trials, leaving it wide open.

'Now is what matters' for history-maker Bhaker

AGENCIES

Scripting a story of remarkable resilience, shooter Manu Bhaker became the first Indian female athlete to win multiple medals in a single edition of the Summer Games and the first Indian to achieve this feat in the post-independence era.

After breaking the country's 12-year Olympic shooting medal drought with a bronze in the women's 10m air pistol event on Sunday, Bhaker, alongside Sarabjot Singh, defeated their South Korean counterparts in the 10m Air Pistol mixed team event to bag another bronze.

In the gold medal match, Serbia's Zorana Arunovic and Damir Mikec staged a dramatic comeback to beat Turkey's Sevval Ilayda Tarhan and Yusuf Dikec 16-14.

Bhaker's debut at the Tokyo 2020 Games was marred by disappointment as she failed to reach the final in any of the three events she participated in.

"After Tokyo I was very disappointed... It took me a long time to overcome that. However, I came back stronger. So, what is now is what matters and the past should remain in past," Bhaker concluded.

Prior to Bhaker, British-Indian athlete Norman Pritchard had won two silver medals in the 200m sprint and 200m hurdles at the 1900 Olympics, before India's independence.

International Olympic Committee member Nita Ambani is hopeful the 22-year-old can take her tally to three medals from the Paris Games after taking part in the individual 25m pistol event too.

"The entire nation is keeping its fingers crossed for her hat-trick now!" said Ambani.

Swimmer Samiul hits new personal best

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladeshi swimmer Samiul Islam Rafi finished 69th among 79 participants in the 100m freestyle event of Paris Olympics yesterday, despite slightly improving on his personal best timing,

Samiul, who trained in Thailand ahead of the Games, took 53.10seconds to finish fifth among eight competitors in his heat at the La Defense Arena in Paris.

His previous best was 53.13 seconds, thereby the 19-year-old improved his timing by 0.03 seconds.

Jack Alexy of USA produced the fastest timing in the heats at 47.57 seconds while 16th and last qualifier, Sunwoo Hwang, timed 48.41 seconds.

Sakib takes five-for in practice game

SPORTS REPORTER

Pacer Tanzim Hasan Sakib starred for BCB Red as he claimed a five-wicket haul against BCB Green on the second day of three-day practice match at the Zahur Ahmed Chowdhury Stadium in Chattogram on Tuesday.

Sakib, who claimed three wickets on the opening day, took two more wickets to finish with 5-53 and helped his side dismiss BCB Green for 290 in their first innings after they had resumed on 220-5.

BCB Green's wicketkeeper-batter Jaker Ali Anik, who was unbeaten on 12 runs overnight, made 50 off 91 balls while Mahedi Hasan scored 19 runs. Both batters were dismissed by Sakib after the match started with nearly three hours' delay due to rain.

BCB Red batters then faced the wrath of Hasan Mahmud (3-24) and Mahedi's (2-25) bowling to be reduced to 92-6 at stumps.

Pritom Kumar and Nayeem Hasan made unbeaten 28 and 17 runs respectively and shared a 44-run stand for the seventh wicket to bring some respite after being 48-6 at one stage.

Earlier on Day One, Anamul Haque Bijoy made 90 runs while Yasir Ali and Mushfiqur Rahim scored fifties for BCB Green after being sent into bat first.

BCB reunites with Stonier

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) has reunited with U-19 World Cup-winning strength and conditioning coach Richard Stonier, roping him for two years in the same capacity ahead of the upcoming ICC U-19 World Cup, scheduled to be held in Namibia and Zimbabwe in 2026.

BCB is now back with all of their previous foreign coaching staff for the U-19 unit, with the board already appointing Naveed Nawaz as head coach. Nawaz had guided them during their U-19 World Cup triumph in South Africa in 2020.

"It is confirmed, Richard is returning, he will join on August 3," AEM Kawser, BCB's game development manager confirmed to The Daily Star yesterday.

Stonier, who previously worked for BCB between 2018-2022, also confirmed his arrival to Bangladesh.

"Hoping to arrive at the weekend. Leaving London as we speak for visa once again," said Stonier.

Kawser also informed that they also hired a performance analyst for the U-19 team, Sandip Kumar Ramal, who also had experience of working in the same capacity.

Both Richard and Sandip will join the U-19 group in Khulna, where they will have a selection camp until August 20.

"Sandip Kumar Ramal, a performance analyst from India, will also join us in the upcoming camp. He worked with us in the last U-19 World Cup as well," Kawasar said.

"There will be four selection games. They will go to Khulna on August 4. The camp will run till August 20 and they will return on the 21st," he concluded.

Lack of options sees Soumya cross over to red-ball zone

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) yesterday named a host of players for 'A' team's tour of Pakistan to play Pakistan A in two four-day matches and three one-day matches. Two separate squads were announced for the two four-day matches and another squad for the one-day matches on August 23, 25 and 27 respectively.

The A Team's longer-version matches will be followed by the national team's two-Test tour of Pakistan and it could be surmised that the first four-day match of the A team's tour is being prioritised to allow a few national team players to adjust to the conditions in Pakistan before the Test matches.

The Daily Star had previously reported that Mominul Haque and Mushfiqur Rahim, two veterans of the national team's Test squad, are to play the first four-dayer for A team. Along with those two, Mahmudul Hasan Joy, Zakir Hasan, Shahadat Hossain Dipu, Nayeem Hasan and Hasan Mahmud from the national team have been selected for that match, which will begin in Islamabad on August 10.

The national team squad for Pakistan Tests is yet to be announced but it is believed that at least six players from the first red-ball game will join the national team camp in Pakistan after the match.

Surprisingly, Soumya Sarkar and Tawhid Hridoy, who are considered white-ball players, have been named in the squad for the second four-day match of the A Team, scheduled to be played in Islamabad from August 17.

"They [Soumya and Hridoy] are basically for one-dayers and will play [four-day matches] if required. It's likely that the players for the second four-day game and the one-day players will go together. So the delegation of players will be 17 to 18 [members]. If there are injuries or otherwise, they are in the squad," BCB chief selector Gazi Ashraf Hossain Lipu told The Daily Star yesterday.

The selectors had issues selecting the 'A' team with quite a few players having just finished their BCB HP red-ball assignment in Australia. Thus, the likes of Soumya or Hridoy are not the priority for red-ball games but may play given that they are already named for the 'A' team's three-match one-day squad and will be travelling with the one-day squad together.

"There aren't too many players available and we have few players in Australia too. The likes of Soumya are not in the priority list for the four-day game even if they play there," Lipu informed.

Opener Anamul Haque, all-rounder Mosaddek Hossain, spinner Tanvir Islam and pacer Tanzim Sakib are in all the squads for both red-ball and white-ball assignments while all-rounder Mohammad Saifuddin, wicket-keeper batter Jaker Ali Anik, opener Mohammad Naim along with Soumya have made the squads for the second four-day and the one-day phase of the tour.

Leg-spinner Rishad Hossain and off-spinner Sheikh Mahedi were named in just the one-day squad. With a couple of players being carried over, following the announcement of the national team for Pakistan tour, the playing elevens of the 'A' team's second four-day match and one-day matches will find more solidity.

Jamaat, Shibir to be banned thru executive order

Says law minister a day after 14-party alliance recommended outlawing them

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government has announced that it will ban Jamaat-e-Islami and its student front Islami Chhatra Shibir by today for their alleged involvement in the recent "anti-state activities".

Law Minister Anisul Huq made the announcement yesterday, a day after the Awami League-led 14-party alliance unanimously recommended banning the two organisations.

Speaking to reporters at the Secretariat, the minister said, "The party will be banned through an executive order."

The recommendation for outlawing the two platforms came from a meeting of the 14-party alliance at the Gono Bhaban on Monday night. AL President Sheikh Hasina chaired the meeting.

The Election Commission on October 29, 2018, scrapped the registration of Jamaat, a longtime ally of the BNP, following a High Court verdict that declared Jamaat's registration illegal.

On August 1, 2013, the HC in a landmark verdict declared illegal the Jamaat's registration with the EC. The EC the same year suspended the registration.

Rezaul Haque Chandpuri, then secretary general of Bangladesh Tariqat Federation, along with 24 others filed a writ petition with the HC on January 25, 2009, seeking its order declaring Jamaat's registration illegal.

Judicial probe to cover deaths till July 21

13-hour curfew break from today in 4 dists

The judicial inquiry commission, led by a High Court judge, can probe all killings in violence centring the quota reform protest between July 16 and July 21, said the law minister.

The government is also planning to make the one-member commission a three-member body as the probe has become extensive, said Law Minister Anisul Huq after a meeting at the home ministry.

The government formed the one-member probe body, led by Justice Khandaker Diliruzzaman, on July 16 to unearth the reasons behind the deaths of six people and to identify those responsible for the deaths and violence.

The committee was given 30 working days.

Police drives, arrests continue

Another 354 held in Dhaka, elsewhere

STAR REPORT

At least 354 more people were arrested in the capital and elsewhere in the 36 hours till 6:00pm yesterday as the nationwide crackdown on alleged saboteurs as well as protesters and opposition parties continues.

Of them, 215 were arrested by police in 29 districts.

The Dhaka Metropolitan Police (DMP) produced the 139 people arrested in the capital before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's (CMM) Court.

The court sent most of them to jail and placed some on remand.

With the latest arrest, at least 10,488 people, including students and members of the BNP and Jamaat-Shibir, have been arrested in 672 cases filed in the capital and 51 districts over the last 13 days since July 18.

At least 10,488 people have been arrested in 672 cases filed in the capital and 51 districts over the last 13 days since July 18.

Several thousand named and several hundred thousand unnamed individuals have been accused in these cases.

The cases were filed, mostly by police, with different police stations over violence, vandalism, and arson, said DMP sources.

In the cases, police brought charges of gathering illegally, rioting, assaulting law enforcers, and damaging properties.

The country witnessed violence on an unprecedented scale after the peaceful demonstrations for quota reform turned deadly on July 15 when Chhatra League attacked the protesting students on different university campuses.

Biplob Kumar Sarker, joint commissioner (operations) of the DMP, stated at a briefing yesterday that block raids are to continue.

He also claimed that so far, 2,850 people have been arrested and some 264 cases have been filed with 50 police stations under the DMP in connection with the recent acts of sabotage and killings in the capital.

However, DMP sources had earlier said some 2,822 people were arrested in 243 cases till Monday.

Biplob also said that these cases would be investigated fairly and impartially.

Lift curfew, restore access to social media

Urges Amnesty in letter to PM, condemns crackdown on protesters

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Amnesty International in an open letter to Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina demanded immediate lifting of curfew and restoration of full access to social media platforms.

It also called upon the PM to ensure that shoot on sight curfew orders and internet shutdowns will not be used in the future to crack down on protesters or to repress any other fundamental rights.

In the open letter, Amnesty Secretary General Agnès Callamard expressed grave concern over the recent violent crackdowns on the quota reform protests and urged urgent and concrete action to end the violence and ensure justice and accountability for the death of "over 200 people" during the protests.

The rights organisation also demanded immediate and unconditional release of all the detainees or arrestees held solely for exercising their right to protest peacefully.

On July 28, the home minister stated that the death toll from the violence is 147, while unofficial estimates put the figure at 211, making it one of the deadliest crackdowns on protests in Bangladesh's history, it added.

42 bodies found in Khan Younis

Say Palestinian health officials as Israeli forces quit southern Gaza city ending incursion

AGENCIES

Thousands of Palestinians returned to their homes in the ruins of Gaza's main southern city Khan Younis yesterday, after Israeli forces ended a week-long incursion there which they said aimed to prevent Hamas from regrouping.

Palestinian health officials said rescue workers had so far recovered 42 bodies of Palestinians killed in the Israeli incursion into eastern Khan Younis. Gaza's Civil Emergency Service said more searches were underway with 200 people still reported missing.

- More searches underway as 200 people still missing
- Israel army hits Hezbollah targets in Lebanon
- Death toll in Gaza now 39,400

The Israeli military said its forces killed more than 150 Palestinian gunmen during the week-long raid, destroyed Hamas tunnels and seized weapons.

After the Israeli forces left, people streamed back to their homes on foot and with donkey carts carrying their belongings. Many found their houses damaged or destroyed.

Witnesses said army forces had bulldozed the main cemetery in Bani Suhaila, the town on the eastern outskirts of Khan Younis that was the main focus of the raid, as well as houses and roads nearby.

"I am coming back and I have faith in God. I don't know whether we will live or die, but it is all for the sake of the homeland," said Etimad Al-Masri, who had walked for at least five kilometers back to her home.

"Despite the suffering, we are patient and God's willing we will have victory."

Many residents said they had been displaced from their homes several times, reports Reuters.

Landslides kill 123 in Kerala

Dozens missing

AGENCIES

Landslides swept through tea estates and villages in southern India's Kerala yesterday, killing at least 123 people while they slept as unexpected heavy rain collapsed hillsides and triggered torrents of mud, water and tumbling boulders.

The hillsides gave way after midnight following torrential rainfall on Monday in the Wayanad district of Kerala, a state known as one of India's most popular tourist destinations. Most of the victims were tea estate workers and their families who lived in small houses or makeshift shelters.

Television images showed rescue workers scrambling through uprooted trees and flattened tin structures as boulders lay strewn across the hillsides and muddy water gushed through. Rescuers were being pulled across a stream, carrying stretchers and other equipment to rescue people.

Israel targets Hezbollah commander

AFP, Beirut

Israel struck Hezbollah's stronghold in southern Beirut on Tuesday in retaliation for rocket fire from Lebanon that killed 12 children over the weekend, saying it had targeted the commander responsible for the attack.

"The IDF [army] carried out a targeted strike in Beirut on the commander responsible for the murder of the children in Majdal Shams and the killing of numerous additional Israeli civilians," the military said in a statement, referring to the Druze Arab town in the annexed Golan Heights where the children were killed on Saturday.

Lebanon's Prime Minister condemned the Israeli strike on Hezbollah's stronghold in Beirut's southern suburbs.

Najib Mikati "condemned the blatant Israeli aggression on the southern suburbs of Beirut", the premier's office said in a statement, describing it as a "criminal act" in a "series of aggressive operations killing civilians in clear and explicit violation of international law."

A source close to the Iran-backed militant group confirmed that "a leading commander" was the target of the strike, which hit near the group's decision making body, the Shura Council.

The source added that two people were killed in the strike, but was unable to confirm if the commander was among them.

Minutes after the explosions rocked Beirut, Israeli Defence Minister Yoav Gallant posted on social media site X that "Hezbollah crossed the red line".
